The principles of the Democratic party have usually been the exponent of the political opinions of Capt. Martine, although he refuses to be controlled by party lines, and votes for the men whom he considers best qualified for office. He has never desired official honors, and with the exception of serving as School Director one term, has steadily declined holding office in Nebraska. While a resident of Coshocton County, Ohio, he served as Justice of the Peace and Assessor, and was continuously in office of some kind until entering the army. He prefers now to relegate its duties and responsibilities to other men. Both he and his excellent wife are members in good standing of the Catholic Church at Nebraska City.

LOUIS DAMMA. The subject of this narration became a resident of this county in December, 1864, and has signalized himself as a hard-working and enterprising citizen. This course has not been without its good results, for by it he has become the owner of one of the finest farms in McWilliams Precinct. This property is pleasantly located on section 31, and comprises 273 acres of improved land, with a set of good farm buildings. Mr. Damma located upon his land in the spring of 1868, with little means save his strong muscle and stout heart, and from that very modest beginning has arisen to an enviable position socially and financially.

Our subject was born April 1, 1843, in Franklin County, Mo., and is of German parentage. His father, Henry Damma, was born in Germany, and married a lady of his own nationality. After the birth of four children they emigrated to the United States, and soon after setting foot upon American soil made their way southwest across the Mississippi into Franklin County, Mo. Here the father engaged in farming, and died of the cholera early in the fifties, when about fifty-five years old. The mother had preceded her husband to the silent land, and thus Louis when a lad ten years of age was left an orphan.

After the death of his parents our subject was taken into the home of his brother, William Damma, who lived in Franklin County, Mo., and with whom he remained until a youth of seventeen. After the outbreak of the late Civil War he enlisted in the 4th Missouri Infantry, Company E, under command of Capt. Montwiler, doing mostly guard duty, and serving a period of eighteen months. Upon leaving the army he returned to his native county, and soon afterward came to Nebraska. In Otoe County he was married, Feb. 17, 1870, to Miss Dora Reimers, a native of Germany, and who came to the United States with her parents when a young woman. They first settled in St. Louis, thence came to this county, and afterward removed to Kansas, settling on a farm in Barton County, where the father, Henry Reimers, is yet living. The mother, Mrs. Mary Reimers, died in the spring of 1888, aged about fifty-five years.

To our subject and his excellent wife there have been born six children, namely: Anna, Alvina, Julius, Bertha, Amy and Louis. The eldest is seventeen years of age and the youngest seventeen months. They all continue under the home roof. Mr. D. votes the straight Republican ticket, and both he and his wife are members in good standing of the German Evangelical Church, of Osage Precinct. He has never sought office, and takes very little interest in political matters. His chief pride is in being a first-class farmer, and in this respect his career has been one of which he may be proud.

PAUL MASON CAMPBELL, probably the youngest man represented in this work, is at present mail clerk on the main line of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, being stationed between Pacific Junction and McCook, and having his home in Nebraska City. He was born Sept. 21, 1865, in Nebraska City, and is the youngest son of Hon. J. C. Campbell, M. D., a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume.

Our subject at an early age gave evidence of more than ordinary capabilities, being a lad fond of

*Yours truly
W. L. Davis*

*Yours Truly
Lewis Lewis*

his books and ambitious to excel. He was graduated from Nebraska College in the class of '83, taking special honors, and being the subject of much favorable comment at the time. He served as Notary Public in Nebraska City before reaching his majority. He intends in the near future taking up the study of law, which he has chosen for his life profession. He has set out upon a most promising career, one which will be watched with interest by hosts of friends. He is the scion of an excellent family, the members of which have distinguished themselves in many of the public walks of life with credit and fidelity. In the sketch of his brother, Ezra T. Campbell, M. D., on another page in this volume, is given a more extended history of the family and its antecedents, which forms a most interesting record.

LEWIS LEWIS, whose portrait is given on an adjoining page, is one of the earliest pioneers of Nebraska, is numbered among its most honored citizens, and has seen much of life in the Great West. He is a man very highly esteemed by the people around him, one who is a public-spirited citizen, always willing to lend a helping hand in the carrying out of every project tending to the good of the community. His excellent partner, one who has stood by him through the storms and sunshine of many years, is a lady who has proved herself in every way suitable to be the companion of a good man. They have a large family of handsome and intelligent children, of whom they have reason to be proud.

The property of Mr. Lewis embraces the southwest quarter of section 4, Otoe Precinct, where he has lived and labored since 1862; he first came to the precinct in April, 1855. He comes of excellent Pennsylvania stock, being the son of Enos and Elizabeth (Pinnell) Lewis, who were natives of Delaware County, that State, the father born on the very farm where the English Army was centered when Washington was at Valley Forge. Grandfather Lewis had purchased this from William Penn during the first settlement of Pennsylvania. They were Quakers in religion, and Enos Lewis traced his ancestry back to the early Colonial days, when his progenitors crossed the Atlantic from England and settled in Pennsylvania.

The father of our subject was a farmer by occupation, spent his entire life in his native county, and died there in 1833. The mother of our subject had been married first to a Mr. Burns, but of this union there were no children. Of her marriage with Enos Lewis there were born three sons and three daughters, the eldest of whom, Wayne, was killed by being thrown from a gig when one year old. The next son, Henry, is a resident of Cloud County, Kan.; he married Miss Isabelle Frost, and is the father of seven children, namely: Henry D., Ida M., Ernest, Alfred B., John W., Edith and Wilbur. Mary, Mrs. Jackson LaTier, is a resident of Taylor County, Iowa; Esther, Mrs. John W. White, resides in West Chester, Chester Co., Pa.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Booze, a widow, is a resident of Philadelphia, Pa., and the mother of three children—Henry, Albert and Lilly.

The subject of this sketch was the fifth child of his parents, and was born on the old homestead, the birthplace of his father, in Delaware County, Pa., Sept. 20, 1831. He was but two years of age at the time of his father's death, and resided with his mother two years, then went to live with his aunt, Mrs. Esther Garrett, of East Goshen Township, Chester Co., Pa. He continued with her until a lad of twelve years, but lived under the same roof until sixteen. His education during those years was carried on principally three months during the winter season, but later he entered Greenwood Dell Academy, where he studied one year, and afterward attended Unionville Academy for eighteen months. In the meantime he worked two and a half years on a farm.

In the spring of 1853 our subject set out for the West, and traveled extensively through Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. Later he returned to Philadelphia, Pa., but could not content himself in that region, and started once more for the West. In the fall of 1853 he went to Jackson County, Mo., and in May, 1854, started East, finally landing in Pennsylvania, in August. Mr. Lewis, no more satisfied than he had been before, after returning home, finally made one desperate effort, starting out the third time from his native State, and determined now to stay. This time he took in Louisville, Ky., St. Louis and Independence, Mo., and remained in this vicinity until the spring of 1854. Later, returning East, he visited Baltimore, New York City, and in the latter visited the Crystal Palace. He next journeyed to Philadelphia, where he suffered an attack of cholera, but fortunately recovered, and then went to Zanesville, Ohio. From there, a month later, he pushed on westward to Iowa, this time accompanied by his brother Henry. They stopped and worked in Rome, Henry Co., Iowa, until the spring of 1855, when our subject started on foot for this county, having for his companion Edward H. Bishop. They had intended to go to California, but changed their minds and stopped in Nebraska City.

Our subject, who had been born with the gift of prudence and economy, occupied himself on the Otoe ferry boat, which made regular trips across the Missouri. On the 11th of July, 1855, accompanied by a party, he started off on the enterprise of removing the Otoe Indians to their Blue River Reservation, and this accomplished returned to this county. In the fall of 1856 he took up a homestead claim, which he still owns, and has for a period of thirty-two years.

The marriage of Lewis Lewis and Miss Susan Wright was celebrated at the home of the bride in Otoe Precinct, this county, in September, 1862. Mrs. Lewis was born in 1840, and is a daughter of Michael and Rosina (Atler) Wright, who were natives of Germany, and came to the United States when their daughter Susan was a child four or five years of age. In the family there were only besides herself her four older brothers—George and John, Joseph now deceased, and Michael, also dead. They lived subsequently at Nauvoo and Alton, Ill., New Orleans, La., and St. Louis, Mo., and at Nauvoo Mrs. Lewis saw the destruction of the Mormon Temple by fire. Her two brothers came first to Nebraska, and she joined them in May, 1858. The mother died in Illinois; the father served as a soldier in the Mexican War, and subsequently visited California, and has never returned. To Mr. and Mrs. Lewis there have been born eleven children, eight of whom are living, viz: Mary E., Rosina, Anna, Ella, Lewis, Jr., John, Henry and George. Three children died in infancy. Mr. Lewis voted for the State Constitution in 1866, and in politics gives his support to the Democratic party.

ANDERSON L. DAVIS. The live-stock interests of Southern Nebraska constitute one of its richest sources of profit, and in this industry a large proportion of its enterprising and intelligent men are engaged. The subject of this sketch, whose portrait we give on a preceding page, for the last few years has made of this a specialty, feeding and shipping in large numbers, and to this devotes one of the finest farms in Nebraska, comprising 480 acres of valuable land, including 100 acres of timber. He usually keeps 200 head of cattle and several hundred hogs. In the city of Syracuse he superintends a fine trade in farm implements, having directed a portion of his capital in this important channel. He has been a resident of Nebraska a period of thirty-two years, having arrived here in its Territorial days, on the 3d of December, 1856.

Our subject first crossed the Mississippi when a youth of a little over twenty years of age. He was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1836, and is the son of L. A. and Mary L. Thompson (nee Chamberlin) Davis. His paternal grandfather, Jesse Davis, a native of New York State, was of Welsh ancestry, and a farmer by occupation. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812, and marched with his regiment to Buffalo during the destruction of that city by fire. L. A. Davis, also a native of the Empire State, joined his father in the ranks of the soldiery, being then but a youth, and also saw the burning of Buffalo. The mother of our subject was his second wife, he having married and become the father of five children before his union with Mrs. Thompson. After the death of his first wife and his marriage with the latter he left the Empire State with his little family, and settled in Trumbull County, Ohio, where his death took place about 1862. His wife, Mary L., had preceded him to the silent land some years.

The subject of this sketch was the only child of the second marriage of his father, and continued a resident of his native State until coming to Nebraska. He had been reared upon the farm, and after crossing the Mississippi was employed at farming near Nebraska City, this county. He left the Buckeye State in 1856, and, accompanied by his half-brother, Morris T. Thompson, proceeded by rail to Iowa City, thence by stage to Council Bluffs and Sidney, and from there on foot to a point opposite Nebraska City. The time being in December, the river was filled with loose ice, and they were ferried across in a skiff, the trip being a perilous one. Upon arriving at his destination young Davis secured a job at cutting cordwood through the winter, and in the spring secured employment on a farm. Soon afterward he pre-empted a tract of land in this county. This, however, he did not improve, but worked with his brother five years.

During this period occurred the panic of 1857, when a man could scarcely obtain fifteen cents for a day's work—in fact there was no money to be had at times—wheat was selling at thirty cents per bushel, and corn at eight cents. Mr. Davis, finally, in 1862, began freighting between Nebraska City and Denver, and in the fall of that year located on a ranch fifteen miles west of Camden on the Blue River. Here he passed two winters, then sold out and resumed freighting, making four trips across the plains, each time being accompanied by his brother. They spent the following winter in Colorado on the Platte River, and in the spring our subject sold his cattle with the intention of returning to Ohio, but on account of the Indians deemed it the better part of prudence to remain where he was.

In the spring of 1866 Mr. Davis set out with a train to Nebraska City, and thence made the desired trip to his native State, where he arrived on the 1st of July, after an absence of ten years. A six-months visit among his old friends satisfied him, and returning to Nebraska he commenced farming. His health, however, had become greatly impaired, so instead of following the plow he began dealing in live stock, which business he has since followed with the most satisfactory results. In 1876 he took up his residence in Syracuse, and since that time has given his principal attention to his stock operations and the trade in farm implements.

Mr. Davis was married quite late in life, in June, 1880, to Miss Meda, daughter of Henry and Mary Phelps. Her parents were natives of Iowa, and are now living in this county. Mrs. Davis was born in Iowa, May 4, 1857, acquired a common-school education, and remained with her parents until her marriage, residing during that time mostly in her native State. The result of her union with our subject is three bright children—Mary L., Arthur and Luella. The family residence is located in the northern part of the city, and its furnishings and surroundings are fully in keeping with the means and station of the proprietor.

A Democrat in principle, Mr. Davis is a reliable supporter of his party, and has served three years as County Commissioner. He is not, however, in the least ambitious for office, preferring to devote his time to his own concerns. Socially, he belongs to the Knights of Honor. He is a genuine, capable business man, prompt to meet his obligations, and straightforward in all his transactions.

STARR COZIER GREGORY. Among the worthy and honored citizens of Talmage, one whose life is in many regards an example of good to younger persons, is the gentleman whose life's history is here epitomized. He is one of the well-known and successful men of Talmage, and has been associated with its interests since the first business house was erected. There was at that time a demand for some competent person to make his headquarters at that place for the buying and shipping of stock, there being large numbers in the vicinity. This place our subject was destined to fill. Being the first to occupy the field he has made quite a reputation throughout the county and district, and is one of the most extensively engaged in his line of business. The distinction is his of having shipped the first carloads of cattle and hogs sent out from this place.

Recently our subject has been buying and shipping for LaFayette Higgins, of Auburn, in this State, but not until after he had been in business for himself for a period of about sixteen years. For the past four years he has been a resident of Talmage, and has won for himself many friends among his fellow-townsmen. As a business man his reputation is fully sustained without the tarnish resultant from dealings of a questionable nature.

Mr. Gregory is the owner of a fine property in Johnson County, and in this place has one of the pleasantest homes. It is a large, roomy house, planned and arranged with a view to comfort. He has also a large brick business house, the upper story of which is occupied by the G. A. R. hall and Roberts Lodge No. 104. After subscriptions for a large part of the expenses toward erecting a hall had been made to the order, Mr. Gregory put up his building, and leased the hall to the order for ninety-nine years.

The connection of our subject with this State began in the year 1867. His first property was 160 acres of land in Spring Creek Precinct, which was at the time simply raw, uncultivated prairie, but under the skillful management and continued efforts of our subject became one of the best farms in the district. It is now valued at $40 per acre. He was in the beginning in a thorough pioneer country, for no railroads then had laid their steel bands across the prairie, and there were no markets as at present, nothing nearer than Nebraska City, which was twenty-two miles distant. He is much gratified to see the splendid progress that has been made within the last decade principally, and justly proud of the privilege of having a part in helping to that end.

In coming to Nebraska the subject of our sketch came a comparatively poor man from DeKalb County, Ill. It was also the scene of his early life, he having been born in Genoa, of that county, on the 21st of August, 1842. His family were pioneers in Illinois and enjoyed an enviable reputation for those qualities that make a family respected and admired in the community. Previous to making their home in Illinois the parents of our subject had lived in New York State.

Mr. E. S. Gregory, father of Starr Cozier, was born about the year 1803, at Johnstown, in the Empire State, as were his parents before him. The family has a history in connection with that State that reaches back almost to the early settlements. He was brought up on a farm and also learned the trade of shoemaker. While yet a young man, he went to Maine, where he met and married his wife, whose maiden name was Jane Brown.

Mrs. Gregory, the mother of our subject, was born and brought up in the Pine Tree State, in the vicinity of Scarborough. After her marriage with the father of our subject they began life together at the bottom of the ladder, the husband plying his trade for about ten years, and then came West, settling in DeKalb County, as above mentioned. There brighter days began to dawn upon them, and the farm proved a perfect success, and served for their home during the remainder of life. Mr. Gregory died at a very advanced age, in January, 1887, beloved and respected by the community at large. He was one of the old-time Abolitionists, and was active in behalf of the party, feeling and expressing himself strongly in behalf of the cause. From the history of DeKalb County, page 481, we take the following, which may be of interest in this connection: "In 1840, his brother-in-law, Ezra Starr Gregory, cast the first, and that year, the only Abolition vote cast in the county, voting for James G. Birney, for President. Mr. Gregory was the pioneer of that grand political movement in DeKalb County, and his name should be honored as the first to come boldly to the front in an effort to remove the dreadful stain of slavery from our civilization. At the next election Mr. Gregory was joined by others of DeKalb County's worthy citizens, who wanted all men under our flag who should obey the laws of the country, to be as free as they were. These men were Jeremiah L. Brown, Abner Jackman, Jutus Preston, Gideon King, John Judd and Benjamin P. Brown, the brother of the subject of this sketch. At the next election these parties were joined by a host of others." (Biography of Jeremiah Libbey Brown.)

Mr. Gregory, our subject, is the first son and second child of three born to his parents, who lived to maturity. He had been very carefully brought up by his parents, and from earliest childhood was taught to abhor everything that verged upon the dishonest and dishonorable. He early began to store his mind with useful information, and development of a farm, and can now look with satisfaction upon the result of his labors, which have been crowned with success. He keeps good grades of cattle, horses and swine, and is numbered among the leading agriculturists of Otoe County.

Mr. Damma came to Southern Nebraska from Franklin County, Mo., in 1861, and entered 200 acres of land in Osage Precinct, the larger portion of which comprised all the elements of fertility. He made some improvements, but after a visit to the part of McWilliams Precinct where he now lives, concluded the latter to be more desirable, and accordingly to this transferred the scene of his operations. He has made all the improvements which have given to his homestead the reputation of being one of the most desirable in Southern Nebraska.

A native of Prussia, our subject was born Oct. 4, 1833, and was the eldest but one of a large family of children, the offspring of Henry and Catherine Damma, a further account of whom will be found in the sketch of Louis Damma, found on another page of this volume. He was a little lad of seven years when he emigrated with his parents to the United States, and upon disembarking from their long voyage across the Atlantic, their journey was still further lengthened out by a tedious ride, partly by rail and partly by horse-teams to the southwest, and across the Mississippi into Franklin County, Mo. There the father engaged in farming, and both parents spent the remainder of their lives.

Our subject developed into manhood in Missouri, and was married in Gasconade County, that State, to Miss Charlotte Pahde, who was of ancestry similiar to his own. Mrs. Damma was born in Franklin County, Mo., Aug. 26, 1842, and is the daughter of Frederick and Henrietta Pahde, who were natives of Prussia and are now in Nebraska. Mrs. D. was but a small child when her father emigrated from Prussia to Gasconade County, where she grew to womanhood, receiving careful home training and a common-school education. Of her union with our subject there have been born ten children, one of whom, Minnie, died when eighteen months old. The survivors are F. Louis, L. John, H. Moses, C. Henry, H. Mary, H. William, Anna

C., Lena C. and August W. The parents are members in good standing of the German Evangelical Church, and Mr. Damma, politically, uniformly votes the Republican ticket.

JACOB W. NELSON, perhaps the youngest business man of note in Nebraska City, is junior partner of the firm of Nelson Bros., who carry on a thriving trade in boots and shoes. They established in business in 1885, and have advanced with a success which has been phenomenal, and which could only be attained by the closest application to business and a straightforward manner of dealing with their fellow citizens. J. W. is especially noticeable as being a young man of excellent judgment and sound sense, with more than ordinary business capacities. Energetic and prompt to meet his obligations, he has already attained an enviable position in business circles, while he is also a favorite in society, and being of a fine personal appearance, is exceedingly popular among the young people of his circle.

Our subject was born on the other side of the Atlantic, in the city of Stockholm, Sweden, May 27, 1864, and when scarcely more than an infant was brought by his parents to the United States. He is the son of Nicholas P. and Mary (Kalsen) Nelson, who were also natives of Scandinavia, and of excellent families. The household circle consisted of four children, the eldest being Olie N., senior member of the firm; Jacob, our subject, and Emma and Eddie, who are now at home. The father is a shoemaker by occupation, and the parents are still living in this city. Mr. Nelson was reared to manhood in Nebraska City, where his parents settled at once upon coming to America. He was given a practical education, and trained in those habits of industry and honesty which form the basis of a true and upright character. He makes his home with his parents, and besides his interest in the store is a member of the Building and Loan Association, which has now established a good foothold, and promises to be of great benefit to those associated with it.

Nelson Bros. carry a large and finely assorted stock of goods, and number their patrons among the best people along the eastern line of the county. Mr. Nelson is a staunch supporter of Republican principles. Genial and companionable, he is a gentleman of excellent principles, and one with whom it is both pleasurable and profitable to converse. He keeps himself well informed, not only in regard to the details of his especial trade, but to all matters of general interest to the intelligent citizen.

CHARLES W. PIERCE. The life record of this gentleman is indissolubly linked with the early history of Nebraska City, the first settlement in Otoe County, as it was he who surveyed and platted the city, and his name often occurs in its annals in after years. In this connection a few items regarding its origin may not be out of place. Prior to 1854 Otoe County belonged exclusively to the Pawnee, Otoe and Omaha tribes of Indians, although occasional itinerant traders found their way to this point from St. Louis, then the great trading-post of the Northwest. As early as 1841, or some say not until 1844, Col. Stephen W. Kearney (afterward Major General) selected the present site of Nebraska City for a military station on account of its admirable strategical and commercial advantages, and in 1846, on the 22d of April, Company G, 22d United States Dragoons, under command of Capt. Allen, arrived here and proceeded to establish a post, to which they gave the name Ft. Kearney. A block house was at once erected between Main and Otoe streets, on Fifth street, and quarters for the officers, hospitals, etc., were built. In 1848 the fort was abandoned by the Government, and the property left in charge of Mr. Harden, and subsequently of Col. John Boulware, and in 1850, of Hiram P. Downs, who retained it until the Government withdrew all claims to the site upon which the fort was built in the spring of 1854. The American Fur Company made this one of its stations soon after the establishment of the military post, and continued to occupy it until the United States extinguished the Indian title to the land. The original settlers and claimants as squatters were Col. John Boulware, John

B. Boulware and Col. Hiram P. Downs, the Boulwares staking off a squatter's claim in the spring of 1853 to what afterward became the Kearney division of Nebraska City, and Col. Downs claiming two quarter-sections of land, 160 acres of which is now included within the corporate limits of Nebraska City, as soon as the land was abandoned by the United States.

When Mr. Pierce came here on the 3d of May, 1854, he found these gentlemen and their families the only inhabitants of the future city. Mr. Downs was then living in a log building erected by the soldiers in the rear of the block house, where the Morton House now stands. Mr. Pierce surveyed the claims referred to, and, furthermore, we are told in a recent history of the county, that "in April, 1854, Stephen F. Nuckolls, and in May of the same year Allen A. Bradford, crossed the river and made arrangements with Hiram Downs whereby they became with him joint owners in the claim which he had taken, and they immediately employed Charles W. Pierce to survey and stake off a city, the work being commenced in 1854." The first permanent habitation in the city, however, and indeed in the county, antedated the platting of the city two years, John B. Boulware having built a ferry house in 1852, on the river bank at the foot of Commercial street. Charles H. Cowles erected the first frame house on the town site near the corner of Fifth and Main streets, and the second one was built by our subject on Main street between Fourth and Fifth streets. The first hotel was built in the fall of 1854 by Mr. Downs. The first post-office, called Table Creek post-office, was established at Nebraska City as early as 1854, and Mr. Pierce was appointed Postmaster of Nebraska City.

Mr. Pierce is still an honored resident of the city in whose foundation he played so important a part thirty-four years ago. He is widely known and is highly respected, not only as a pioneer but as a man and a citizen. He is a native of New York City, born in that great metropolis Feb. 21, 1828, coming of good old New England stock. His father, Wilder Pierce, was, it is thought, a native of Massachusetts, as his father, Amasa Pierce, was born, reared and married in that State. He, the grandfather of our subject, moved from his native State to New York, and was one of the early pioneers of Cortland County, where he cleared a farm from the wilderness and made his residence until a few months before his death. He then went to Niagara County, and died at the home of his son. The father of our subject learned the trade of ship carpenter, and in the War of 1812 served in the United States Navy, and was with Commodore Lawrence when the latter was killed, and the vessel and crew were captured. In 1831 Mr. Pierce went on a cruise in the United States man-of-war "Hornet" in quest of piratical crafts, and was lost with the crew and vessel. The maiden name of his wife, the mother of our subject, was Catherine Ryder. She was born in the Mohawk Valley, N. Y., and spent her last years in New York City, dying in 1845.

The subject of this sketch was for the most part reared and educated by his paternal grandparents. He attended the public schools, and at the age of fifteen commenced the study of civil engineering. In 1849 he went to Dubuque, Iowa, and there engaged with a party of surveyors who were surveying Government land in that State. In December of that year he gave up his profession there and went to Kanesville, now Council Bluffs, which was then a hamlet of a few log buildings, and the two succeeding years he was engaged in superintending a ferry across the Missouri River at Belleville. In the spring of 1852 he went to Sidney, Iowa, but his health being poor he did but little while there. He remained there until May, 1854, and on the 3d of that month he came to the present site of Nebraska City. Charles W. Coles came with him to engage in mercantile business, and was the first merchant of the city. As before stated, Mr. Pierce had come here for the purpose of surveying and laying out the city, and before cold weather set in he had a part of the city platted, and ten or twelve families were settled here by that time, and these early settlers and about 600 Indians spent the winter here. In July, 1854, the Nebraska City post-office was established, and Mr. Pierce was made the first Postmaster. But there was no regular mail carrier for nearly a year, and the citizens used to employ some person to go to Sidney, Iowa, fifteen miles distant, for the mail once a week. In 1855 a mail carrier was appointed, who brought the mail twice a week, and soon three times a week, until the railway was built on the opposite side of the river, and then daily. In 1855 Mr. Pierce resigned his office and was appointed inspector of survey by the Government, which position he held until August, 1857. He then resumed surveying for the Government, and was a United States surveyor in Nebraska for seven years. When Otoe County was organized he was made County Surveyor, and was re-elected to that office several times, until at the end of twelve years he utterly refused to serve any longer. In 1854 Mr. Pierce took the census in the northern half of the Territory, and during the second session of the Territorial Legislature he was Sergeant-at-Arms of the Territorial Council. In April, 1855, he was deputized by the Indian agent to remove the Otoe Indians to their reservation. He made the survey in April, and during the summer removed his charges to their new home.

BARNARD BRADY. Within the confines of Belmont Precinct, and in the southwestern part of section 24, is located the farm of this gentleman, which embraces 160 acres of land, and has been brought to a good state of cultivation. One of its most attractive features is the handsome and substantial residence, while a good barn and all the other necessary out-buildings, with fruit and shade trees, form a most attractive background. Mr. Brady has been thorough and successful as an agriculturist, and is a man of good business capacities. As a citizen he is esteemed as one of the most valued members of his community.

Our subject was born at Port George in British America, Aug. 17, 1830, and is the son of Antwin and Mary (Riley) Brady, who were natives of Ireland, and the former a British soldier in the War of 1812. Later he went to Ireland, and there the subject of this sketch spent a portion of his boyhood. His parents died in Ireland, and Barnard then returned to British America with relatives, and came to this county in August of 1854, while Nebraska was a Territory. He took up a claim that same year opposite St. Joseph in Kansas, but the border war coming on he was forced to flee, and found refuge in Macon County, Mo., until the troubles were over.

Yours Truly
F. W. Robb

Mr. Brady in the spring of 1863 returned to this county during the progress of the Civil War, but in the meantime had served as a Confederate soldier in Company I, 4th Missouri Infantry. He located permanently on his present farm in September, 1870, and is now the owner of one of the most desirable estates in this part of the county.

Our subject was married, in May, 1870, to Mrs. Sarah Nestor, widow of George W. Nestor, and daughter of Dudley and Kerby Abbott. Mrs. Brady was born Oct. 9, 1843, in Missouri. Her parents were natives of Ohio, and their household consisted of fourteen children. Of her union with our subject there have been born five children, four of whom are living, namely: Thomas H., John D., Edward W. and Andrew J. The eldest is sixteen years of age and the youngest nine. Of the first marriage of Mrs. Brady there had been born two children, both daughters, Caroline and Martha, who are living in Oregon and married. Mr. Brady, politically, is a Democrat, and socially, in 1883 identified himself with the Masonic fraternity.

HON. FLEMING W. ROBB, ex-member of the Nebraska Legislature, and one of the early pioneers of this county, first crossed the Missouri on the 23d of June, 1856, at the old town site of Wyoming, and at once pre-empted the quarter of section 3, where he has now a well-developed farm, which yields in abundance the products of Southern Nebraska. Subsequently he added 120 acres to his first purchase, eighty acres of which he has since presented to his son, Montgomery Robb. He came to Nebraska with moderate means, but has now a good property, and socially, occupies a high position among the leading men of his community and county.

Prior to casting his lot with the pioneers of Nebraska Territory our subject had spent his years in Lycoming County, Pa., having been born near the town of Muncie, that county, Aug. 31, 1815. His father, William F. Robb, was a native of Carlisle, that State, and of excellent Scotch-Irish stock. When two years of age he removed with his father, Robert Robb, to Lycoming County, when that section of country was peopled principally by Indians and wild animals. Robert Robb settled upon a tract of land where he made some improvements, but was finally driven off by the Indians. He finally located in Muncie Township, where he spent the remainder of his life, and where his death took place at the home of his son William F.

The father of our subject became intimately acquainted with the privations and hardships of life in a new country, such as was Pennsylvania during his boyhood and youth, and developed into manhood in Lycoming County. He was there married in Muncie Township to Miss Mary Shoemaker, a native of Lycoming County, and of Dutch ancestry. Her family had lived for a time in Berks County, and were people well-to-do and highly respected. After marriage the elder Robb and his young wife located on a farm in Muncie Township, where they spent the remainder of their lives, doing good to all around them and building up for themselves and their children a comfortable homestead. Their sons and daughters were given a practical education and trained to habits of industry and principles of honor. The father in religious belief was a Presbyterian, while the mother held to the doctrines of the Lutheran Church.

Our subject was the fourth son and fifth child of his parents. Of the parental family only he and his brother Charles W., a prominent attorney of Pittsburgh, Pa., are living. Fleming W. was reared to manhood in his native county, where he learned the trade of a tanner, which he followed a number of years in Pennsylvania. In common with the young men of his time, his chief ambition was to have a pleasant and comfortable home of his own, and with this end in view he was married, June 23, 1846, to Miss Ellen W. Montgomery. This lady was born in Clinton Township, Lycoming Co., Pa., Feb. 28, 1826, and is the daughter of John and Mary (Hammond) Montgomery, who died in their native State, Pennsylvania, many years ago, the mother while a young woman and the father at the age of forty-eight years. Their family consisted of seven children, two of whom are living; the sister Elizabeth is the widow of Edward L. Lloyd, of Williamsport, Pa.

Mrs. Robb was only ten years of age at the time of her mother's death. She was carefully educated, first in the common schools, and then in the Female Seminary at Muncie, Pa., remaining with her father until her marriage. Of her union with our subject there have been born five children, three of whom are deceased, namely: Mary H., who died when eighteen months old; John, who died at the age of four years, and Lizzie L. The latter was reared to womanhood and became the wife of W. C. Carpenter, with whom she removed to the town of Ogden, in Utah Territory, and where she died Oct. 3, 1888, leaving one child, a daughter, Eleanor. Two of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Robb are married and living: Washington Hammond Montgomery Robb took to wife Miss Jessie Walbridge, and is farming in Wyoming Precinct on a part of the old homestead; Amelia B. married M. J. Fenn, and lives at Auburn, Nemaha Co., Neb. Mr. and Mrs. R. are members in good standing of the Episcopal Church; they were the first members here and established the church; Bishop Talbot preached the first sermon of the Episcopal Church in this township at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Robb. Our subject cast his first Presidential vote for Gen. Harrison in the year 1836, at Williamsport, Pa., also again in 1840, and since its organization has been a staunch supporter of the Republican party.

Mr. Robb has been prominent in public affairs almost since the time of coming to this county, being a man of more than ordinary intelligence and well informed. In the fall of 1876 he was elected by the Republicans to represent his district in the Nebraska Legislature, and did good service, especially as a member of the Committee of Education. He entertains a genuine interest in the welfare of his adopted county, and has built for himself a worthy record as an honest man and a good citizen.

EZRA S. HAWLEY, a pioneer of Nebraska of 1859, is among the foremost of the wide-awake business men of Nebraska City, to whose zeal and enterprise she is so largely indebted for her position as the leading metropolis of Otoe County. He is a native of New York State, born in the town of Deposit, Delaware County. His father, William Hawley, was born in Connecticut, April 26, 1789. He was reared in his native State, and when a young man went to the State of New York and settled in Delaware County, of which he became a pioneer. He bought a tract of timber land, cleared a farm, and was a resident there some time, and then moved to the town of Deposit, and kept a hotel there for a number of years. A few years before his death, which occurred Aug. 29, 1871, he moved to Elyria, Ohio, and there passed the remainder of his life. He was twice married. He was united to Esther Benedict June 12, 1812. She died Oct. 16, 1831. His second marriage was May 30, 1832, to Elizabeth (Broade) Childs. She was born in Pennsylvania, May 30, 1792, and died Dec. 22, 1862. There were four children by the first marriage. Our subject is the only child by the second marriage.

Mr. Hawley was but six years old when his parents moved to the village of Deposit, and there he received his education in the public school, and at the academy in the same town. When he was eighteen years old he entered upon his mercantile career as a clerk in a general store in Deposit. In 1857 he started West to seek a home on the broad prairies beyond the Mississippi, intending to settle in Kansas, which was then the scene of the great emigration from the East and South, and the battleground of the pro-slavery and anti-slavery factions. He traveled by rail to St. Louis, and from there by boat to Sibley, a few miles below Kansas City, where he met an old townsman, Wheeler Brown. They bought some cattle together and a wagon, and drove to Kansas City to get a supply of provisions, and then proceeded on their way to Kansas. In the afternoon of the third day of their journey it commenced to snow and blow, and they thus had their first experience of a Kansas blizzard. At night they reached a vacant shanty that had been erected by Hackaday and Hull, mail-carriers. The sides and roof of the building were covered with shakes, rived by hand, and there being no chimney, they built a fire on the ground in the middle of the shanty. They then rolled themselves in their blankets on the floor, and passed the night there.

The next morning, the 12th of April, they started again, and had only proceeded a mile when they came to the locality known as Palmyra. There our subject made a claim, and was soon after appointed Postmaster of the town. In May he and Mr. Brown went to Linn County, and made a claim there on land known as the Indian trust land, and soon after, when it came into the market, bought it at Government price. Mr. Hawley soon sold his land, however, and returned to Palmyra, only to find that in his absence someone had jumped his claim in that place. He then went to Kansas City, and was there appointed agent for the Missouri Express Company. Kansas City was then a small place of about 2,500 inhabitants, a frontier town, without any railway connection with the outside world, and with little promise of its present greatness. All the business at that time was done on the levee. The first brick building for business purposes that was built in the city away from the levee was erected in 1857, by Col. Titus J. Nicaragua, for a billiard hall and saloon. In the fall of 1857 the Missouri Express Company sold to the United States Express Company, and our subject was employed as their agent until June, 1858, when he was sent to St Joseph to establish an express line from that town to Omaha for that company. He remained in charge in St. Joseph until March, 1859, when he came to Nebraska City to take charge of the company's office here. Soon after he was appointed agent for the St Joseph and Hannibal steam packet company, and the Luckbaugh stage line. A short time after he formed a partnership with a Mr. Wooley, and engaged in the business of receiving and forwarding freight, Nebraska City then being the headquarters of the freighters, who took supplies to the different military posts, mining camps and towns further west. Their business assumed enormous proportions, and in 1865 the firm forwarded 250,000 bushels of corn and 13,000,000 pounds of merchandise and mining machinery. Corn at that time was worth $1.50 a bushel in Nebraska City, and $8.50 in the mountains. In 1864 the firm, in addition to their other business, concluded to try freighting, and consequently bought a lot of cattle and started two trains loaded with corn for Denver; one train of twenty-four wagons, with six pairs of oxen to a wagon, and the other with twelve wagons, with four mules to each wagon. In 1865 potatoes were very scarce in Denver, selling at fifty cents a pound, and our subject and his partner, concluding that it would be a good speculation to send some to that point, early in the spring of 1866 started a train loaded with the tubers. Before their train arrived, however, potatoes had been carried into the city from other sources, and the prices had consequently been greatly reduced. But the trainmaster had been instructed by Mr. Hawley not to sell for less than fifteen cents a pound, but to leave them with a commission dealer, and the latter concluded to take them at the price asked. In 1867 the Union Pacific Railway had extended its lines to the North Platte, and the occupation of the freighter was gone from that time forth. Mr. Hawley and his partner then turned their attention to mercantile pursuits, and opened a general store, having commenced the sale of farm implements in 1859, and they continued that also. Our subject soon bought his partner's interest in the business, and soon after discontinued all but the sale of farm implements, in which branch of business he is still engaged, selling farm implements great and small, including wagons and carriages, and doing an extensive business. In 1859 he sold the first harvesting-machine ever sold in Nebraska south of the Platte River, and probably the first ever sold in the State.

Mr. Hawley was married, in 1859, to Miss Henrietta Sheldon, and six children have been born to them, three of whom are living—Florence, Fanny and Henrietta. Jay Sheldon, their only son, died when thirteen years of age; Janie died in her eighth year, and Lizzie died in infancy.

Mr. and Mrs. Hawley are members of the Presbyterian Church, and are workers in the Sunday-school. In politics Mr. Hawley is one of the leading Democrats of the city, and he has always affiliated with that party. He has been prominently connected with various enterprises tending to develop the city and benefit the surrounding country. He was one of the incorporators of the Midland Railway Company, which was the nucleus of the various railways that now enter the city. He is a member and director in the Building and Loan Association, and is President of the Board of Trade; he is also President of the City Council. In 1872 he was elected County Commissioner, and served three years. When the State was admitted to the Union in 1867, Mr. Hawley was much interested in the location of the capital, favoring and working for Lincoln. In the fall of 1867 he attended the sale of lots in that city, and in company with his partner, J. M. Burke, erected the second business building ever built in Lincoln.

Coming to this portion of the country at an early day, and seeing much of the aboriginal owners of the land, becoming conversant with their manners and customs, Mr. Hawley has gained a clear idea of the Indian question, and can tell many interesting things concerning the red man. He relates that in 1860, the Indian agent, Maj. Dennison, lived in Nebraska City, and that the last boat that came up the river in the fall of 1859 had brought him $40,000 to pay to the Indians that were living on the reservation at Salt Creek. In March, 1860, five Indian chiefs, with about twenty-five braves, appeared in the city and complained that the money had not been paid to them. The citizens called upon the Major for an explanation. He coolly remarked that he made his report to the Government, and not to citizens. The following day the Indians captured Mr. Dennison, bound him with ropes, and took him to the court-house, where a council was held, consisting of five whites and five Indians. The Major finally consented to make a statement of what he had done with the money. It seems that he had made many charges against the Indians, of which the following is a sample: For a certain depredation of the Indians they were charged $1,500. One of the chiefs explained that the braves had been out hunting, and being unsuccessful, on their return had killed a cow belonging to a white settler, and that they expected and intended to pay for it whatever it might be worth, probably not more than $20. And there were many other such charges that took up the greater part of the money. The Indians, however, secured some, and returned to their reservation. There was quite a feeling among the citizens regarding the capture of the agent by the Indians; some declaring whatever he might have done the Indians ought not to have molested him, while others were moved to pity by the distress and sufferings endured by the Indians who had depended upon the money for support during the winter.

Mr. Hawley is a gentleman of pleasing address, of ripe culture, and of rare energy and stability of character, traits well fitting him for the responsibilities of the important offices that he holds. In him we have the rare example, worthy of being widely followed, of a business man without stain, a wealthy man without selfishness, a charitable man without ostentation.

BERMAN H. TANGEMAN, member of the firm of Tangeman & Sons, who operate the well-known flouring-mill on the Nemaha River, in the northwest part of McWilliams Precinct, has reason to be proud of this enterprise, with which he became connected in the spring of 1882. It is one of the leading institutions of its kind in the county, and is patronized by its best citizens far and near. The property is of more than ordinary interest and importance to our subject, the mill having been established by his father, John G. Tangeman.

The present building was erected in 1884, upon the site of the old mill which had been destroyed by fire. It has been fitted up with all the modern machinery, including five double-run of rollers, and operating by the patent process so much in favor in this latter day. There is a 60-horse power engine, driven by water, transported from the wheel to the mill by a cable in an even, unobstructed stream over a groove wheel nine feet in diameter. The entire machinery moves easily and without friction, and in a year's time puts out probably 15,000 barrels of flour, besides meal and other commodities. The firm of Tangeman & Sons are able to compete with the best manufacturers of flour in Southwestern Nebraska, and supply a considerable foreign demand, their patronage extending throughout this and adjoining States. A view of the mill with its surroundings is shown on the accompanying page.

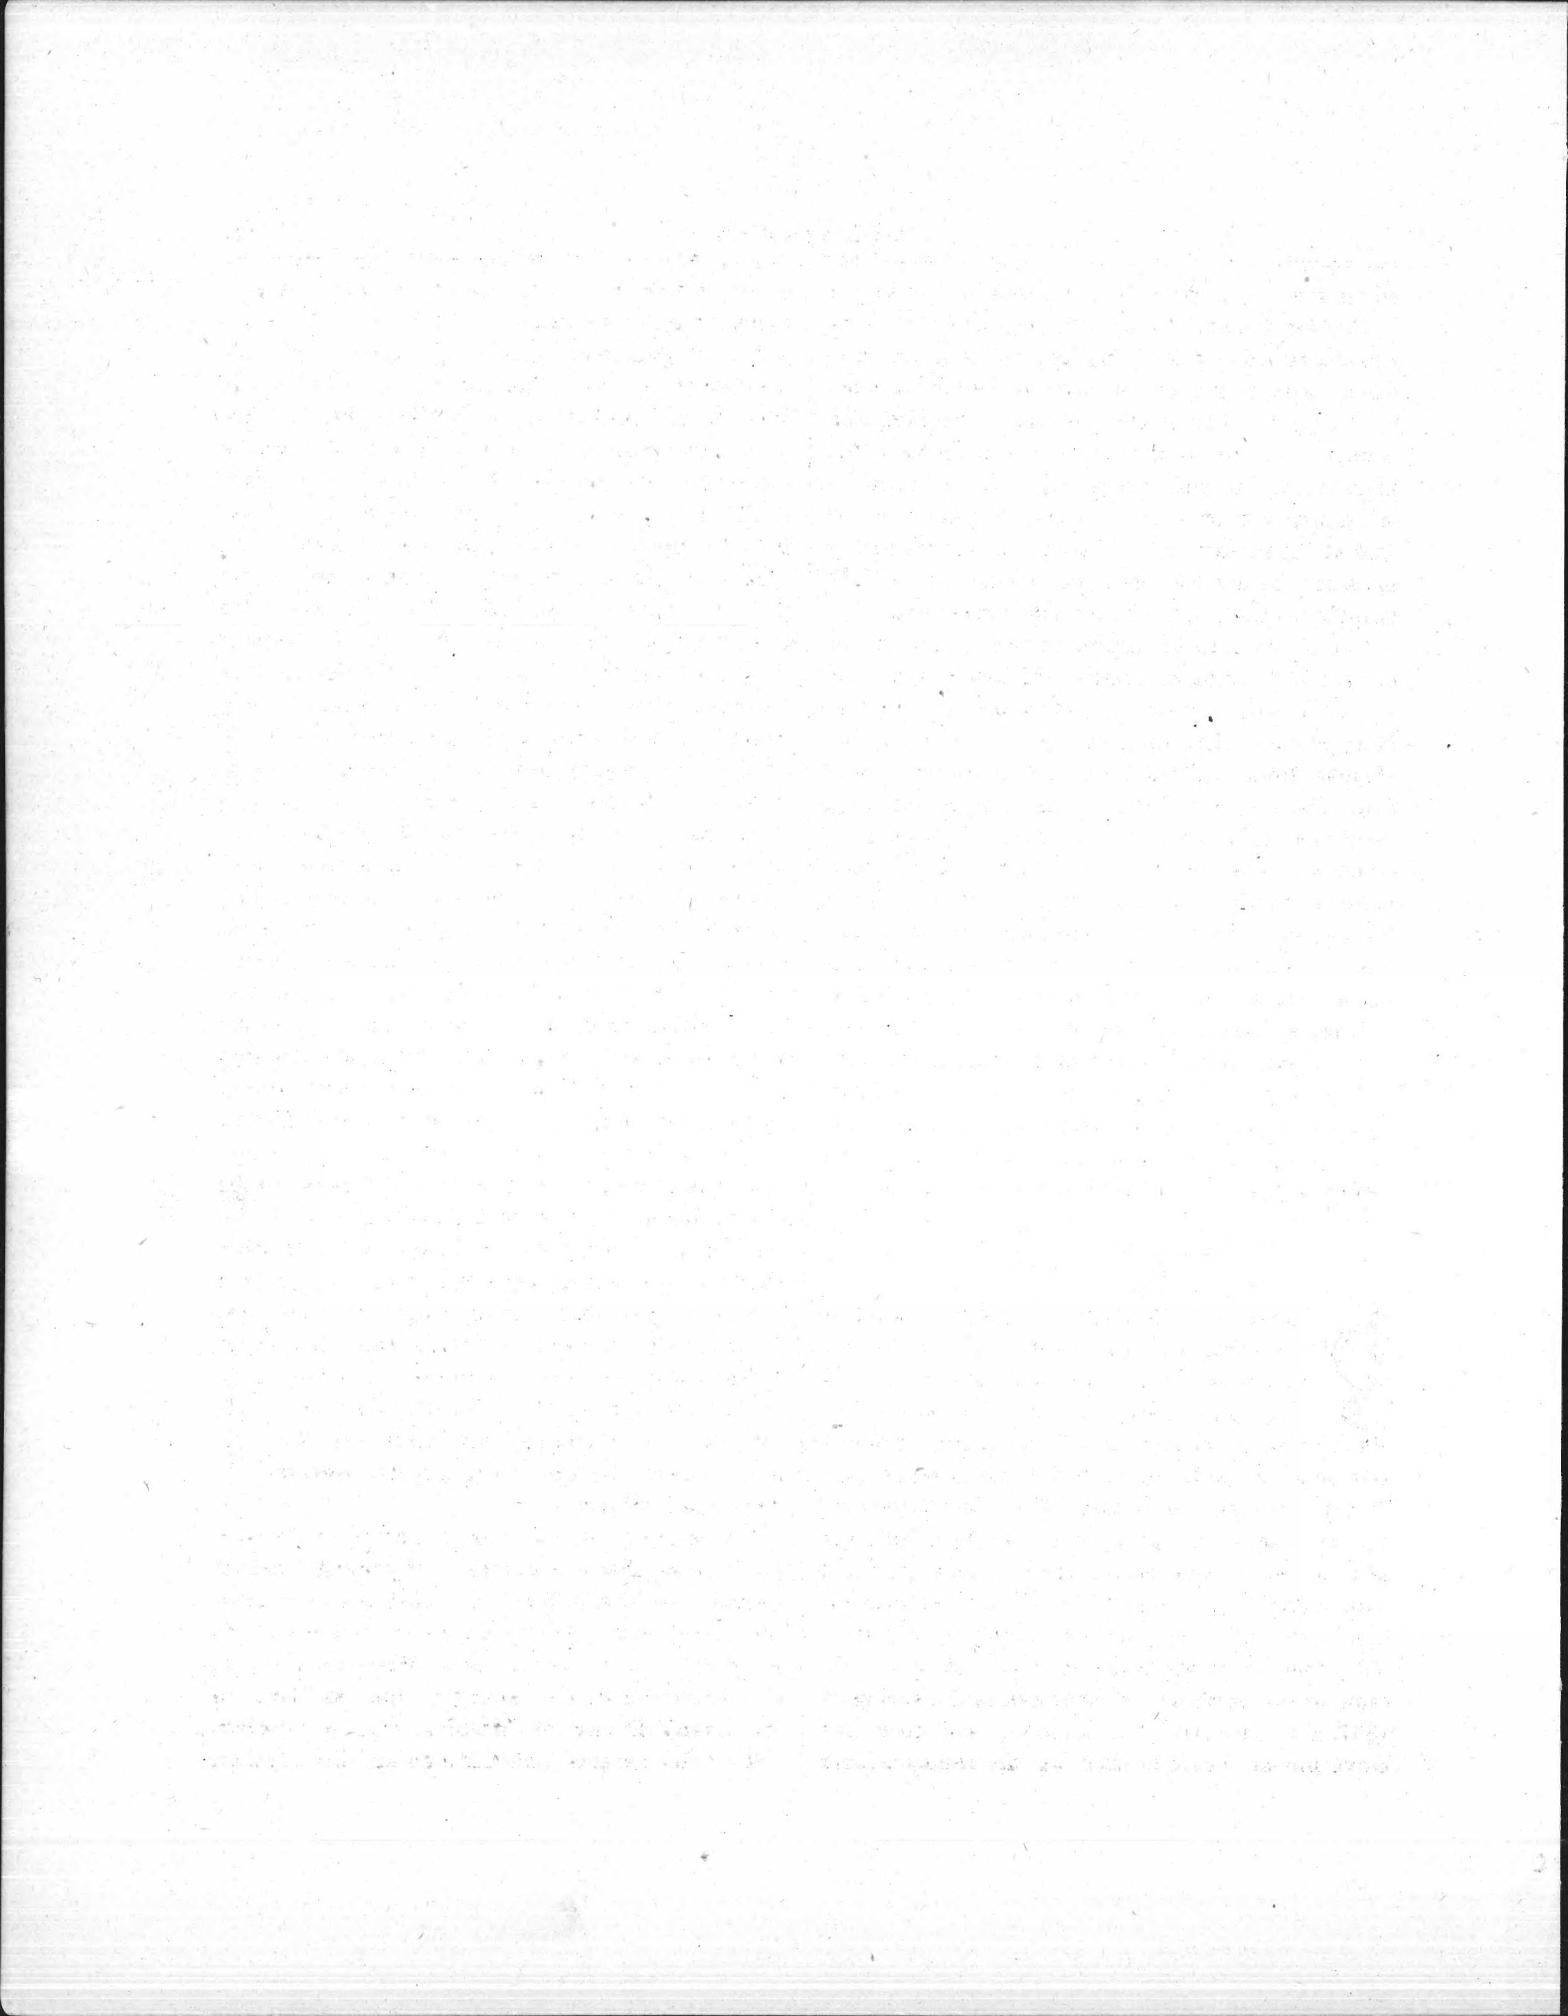

Our subject was the third child of his parents, whose family comprised six children, and was born in Clayton County, Iowa, July 4, 1853. He was reared and educated in his native township, and was a youth of sixteen years when the family came to Nebraska. They settled in Osage Precinct, this county, and the father in 1881 established the present mill business, where Herman H. acquired the practical knowledge which is serving him so well at the present time. Since the retirement of his father he has managed the business in an admirable manner, and without embarrassment.

RESIDENCE OF HENRY WIECKHORST, SEC. 7. WYOMING PRECINCT.

CENTRAL ROLLER MILLS, TANGEMAN & SONS, SEC. 21. Mc WILLIAMS PRECINCT, OTTOE CO., NEB.

One of the most important events in the life of our subject was his marriage, which occurred Dec. 11, 1881, the maiden of his choice being Miss Mary Hopp. Mrs. Tangeman is a native of Lee County, Iowa, and was born in Charleston Township, Dec. 11, 1861. Her father, Phillip Hopp, a very successful farmer, is a resident of Osage Precinct, where he has lived for many years. The parental family included nine children. Mrs. Tangeman received a fair education in the common schools, and remained with her parents until her marriage. She is now the mother of one child, a daughter, Leonora L., who was born April 6, 1887. Our subject, politically, is a sound Republican, and, with his excellent wife, a member of the German Evangelical Church, of Osage Precinct. He has never sought office, but at the solicitation of the people of his school district serves as Director.

HENRY WIECKHORST. The homestead of the subject of this sketch, who is one of the most prominent and well-known farmers and stock-raisers of Wyoming Precinct, is finely located on section 7, and embraces 160 acres of land, which has been brought to a highly productive condition. His entire landed estate embraces 480 acres, lying on three different sections, all in first-class condition and provided with suitable buildings. Mr. W. is a fine illustration of the self-made man, beginning in life without other resources than his own industry. He came to the Territory of Nebraska in the spring of 1857, and purchased 160 acres of land from the Government, where he took up his residence, and where he still lives. A view of the place is presented in this connection.

The neighbors of our subject were few and far between at the time of his settlement in this county, when there were little signs of life to be seen except Indians and wild animals. Not only did he come to a new portion of America, but America itself was new to him, as he had but recently crossed the Atlantic from Holstein, Germany, where he had spent his youth and early manhood, and where he was born Feb. 24, 1828. Thus he had more difficulties to contend with than the native-born American, having to learn a new language and become familiar with the habits of a strange people. Too much credit cannot be given him and others of his countrymen who crossed the Mississippi under like circumstances at that period.

The father of our subject was H. Wieckhorst, a well-to-do farmer of pure German ancestry, who spent his entire life in his native Holstein. He, however, only lived to be middle-aged, dying at the early age of forty-two years. He was married in early manhood to Miss Eldora Harderes, who survived her husband many years, and lived to the age of seventy. The parental household consisted of seven children, four of whom are now living. Of these our subject was the third child and third son of the family, and, together with his brothers and sisters, received a thorough education in his native tongue. After leaving school he went into the regular army, where he spent the years from 1849 to 1852, seeing very little of warfare. In the spring of 1857, after having employed himself at farming with indifferent results, and not being satisfied with his prospects in his native Germany, he resolved to emigrate to the United States. He embarked at Hamburg, and landed in New Orleans, whence he proceeded directly westward to Nebraska Territory.

Our subject came to this country a single man. Some years after his arrival in Wyoming Precinct he made the acquaintance of a most estimable lady, Mrs. Fredricka (Miller) Laas, to whom he was married Aug. 17, 1877. Mrs. Wieckhorst is also of German birth and parentage, and was born in the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg, in October, 1845. Her parents were Christin and Dora Miller, who were also natives of Germany, and are now deceased. Mrs. W., like her husband, received a good common-school education, and was first married in Nebraska to Mr. Fred Laas, with whom she came to America in the spring of 1871. Of that marriage there were no children.

Mr. and Mrs. Wieckhorst began their wedded life together on the farm which they now occupy, but which bears little resemblance to its original condition. It has taken years of time and thousands of dollars to develop the homestead and effect the improvements which are to-day observed with admiration by the passing traveler. Of their union there have been born three sons, the eldest of whom, Peter, died when four weeks old. Henry P. was born July 31, 1882, and Herman, Oct. 17, 1886. These are bright and intelligent boys, and are being well educated and carefully trained. Mr. Wieckhorst, politically, is a staunch supporter of Republican principles. He and his estimable wife were reared in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church, to which they still loyally adhere.

The Wieckhorst residence is one of the handsomest in Wyoming Precinct, and with its adjacent buildings occupies a gentle elevation, which commands a fine view of the surrounding country. In the rear is an apple orchard in bearing condition, and there is an abundance of the smaller fruits, which yield bounteously in their season. The dwelling, with its surroundings, completes the ideal picture of the country home of people blessed with cultivated tastes and abundant means.

ANDREW J. REYNOLDS. This gentleman is one of the much valued citizens of South Branch Precinct, where he owns a very fine farm comprising 200 acres on sections 29 and 32. He is prominent as one of the progressive and successful men in his line, and also as a temperance worker and in religious circles. His father, Thomas Reynolds, was born in Orange County, N. Y.; his mother, whose maiden name was Sarah Benedict, was born near Obed, N. Y. After their marriage Mr. Reynolds, Sr., continued farming in his native State. He took much interest in political affairs, and was an active worker in that arena; he was numbered among the Democratic party, but later in life became one of the Free-Soil party. Although frequently called upon, he never aspired to or would hold office. His life closed in 1856, his death occurring in Yates County, N. Y., after a life of seventy-four years. He had survived his wife about two years, her demise occurring in 1854, she being at the time fifty-seven years of age.

The grandfather of our subject was in the Revolutionary War, serving as a private under George Washington. He was wounded several times; one especially caused him considerable suffering; it was in the right side, and for some reason did not heal well and kept him in confinement longer than had been expected; but finally it healed, and he was enabled to serve until nearly the close of the war, when he was taken prisoner by the British and placed in a church, and was not further noticed until almost dead from starvation. He is reputed to have been the largest and stoutest man in the regiment, and also the best wrestler.

The family of which our subject is a member included twelve children, viz: Phoebe A., Ellen, Pattie J. (who died when twelve years of age), Joseph, William, Andrew J., Angeline (deceased), Sarah, Hannah, J. Brooks (who died when three years of age), Daniel and Thomas Benton. Daniel enlisted in the 19th New York Infantry, in 1861, and served for two years. In the battle of Antietam, under Gen. Banks, he was taken from the regiment and made foreman of bridge builders. While busily engaged they had all their clothing, tools and weapons taken from them, but managed to effect their escape; they were taken by surprise by a party of Confederates. Thomas B. volunteered at the same time as his brother, but being deaf was rejected. Later, when men were necessary and the need pressing, he was drafted and served under Gen. Gilmore. He was taken prisoner and sent to Andersonville, where he was confined seven months, and when released was in a semi-starved condition. Upon returning home fever sought to effect what prison had left undone, but he recovered, although his constitution could never again be what it was prior to the imprisonment.

The subject of our sketch was born in Yates

County, N. Y., near the town of Middlesex, on the 30th of November, 1828. Until he was twenty-one years of age he made his home with his parents, the years being filled with the engagements of school and home until he came to years of discretion, when he became his father's assistant. In beginning life for himself he, in 1858, concluded to go West; he stopped about twelve months in Cook County, Ill., and then went to Pike's Peak. The gold fever was at its height, and he intended to get his share if possible; he had crossed Missouri and was in this State when there was a stampede from the gold district back home. The reports from those returning were such as to decide him to remain in Nebraska; he staid in this county for one year, and then went on to the mountains, where he worked for about eighteen months. He was beaten out of his wages, and did not find life so agreeable as might have been expected, and therefore returned to South Branch, took up his present property of 160 acres, and settled upon it.

In the beginning of his new home Mr. Reynolds found everything to do. There was nothing here but the raw, uncultivated prairie, neither house, barn, fence nor field. Settlers were very few, his being the third homestead claim that was entered in the county, but with strong courage and determination to succeed he went to work; speedily his house was set up, barns and other farm buildings erected, and one by one the various improvements were made. About that time he purchased an additional forty acres, and this has shared with the original 160 in being brought to a well-nigh perfect condition for agricultural purposes. There are few if any farms in the county presenting a better appearance, or actually more productive than that of our subject.

On the 6th of April, 1853, in Yates County, N. Y., was celebrated the marriage of Miss Eleanor M. Bassett and Mr. Reynolds. His wife is the daughter of David Bassett, of New York, and the reader is referred to the sketch of that gentleman found in this volume for items of interest connected with her family. She was born in Allegany County, N. Y., on the 10th of April, 1830. She is a thoroughly educated and accomplished lady, and has taught school for about seven terms. They have adopted two children: Leonora Hughes, who has made her home in Denver, Col., and Edna Reynolds, who was born on the 7th of September, 1876, and still resides with our subject and his wife.

Mr. Reynolds has been Assessor for one year; he has also been on the School Board three years. He is, politically, a very strong Prohibitionist, and is very active in that cause. It is not, therefore, surprising to learn that he is an enthusiastic member of the I. O. G. T., and is affiliated with the lodge at Rockford. Both Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and were, perhaps, the principal instigators of the enterprise to build a church house. He deeded the land for the purpose, gave largely himself and solicited the greater part of the money required for the building, and helped in many other ways. For many years he has been one of the Class-Leaders, and also Superintendent of the Sunday-school; Mrs. Reynolds is a teacher in the Sunday-school. There are very few families more esteemed or highly respected than this, and the community is favored in having one so interested, earnest and active.

—•••••

EZRA T. CAMPBELL, M. D. The medical profession is most worthily represented in the subject of this sketch, who has been located in Nebraska City since March of 1888. He is well educated and of a good family, being the son of Hon. J. C. Campbell, M. D., a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Our subject was born in the city where he now resides, June 24, 1864, and is consequently just entering upon a career which bids fair to bring him success and honor. He completed his regular course of study in the High School and the Nebraska College at the age of sixteen years, and soon afterward began teaching, which he followed two years in Otoe County and one year in Nemaha County.

At an early age Dr. Campbell had resolved to enter the medical profession, and after being graduated from the college in Nebraska City in 1883, in 1884 he entered the National Medical College, or Medical Department of Columbia University, at Washington, D. C., where he studied until 1888.

Prior to this, having had ready access to his father's extensive library, he improved the opportunities to inform himself, and thus became well fitted for the duties which lay before him. He stood at the head of his class during the whole course, and after four years spent in the college at Washington, was graduated in the class of '88. He carried off the only prize in clinics. He had a fine opportunity of becoming acquainted with many of the eminent physicians of the day, and met many more in the National Medical Congress which was held at Washington in June, 1887. In that city also he had the good fortune to meet many prominent political men, and lost no opportunity to inform himself both in regard to his profession and the stirring National events which were then transpiring at the capital.

While in Washington Dr. Campbell was one of the attending physicians of the Woman's Dispensary. He is a close student and extensive reader, and keeps himself well posted concerning the new theories which are constantly being advanced in connection with the profession. He cast his first Presidential vote for Cleveland, and vigorously upholds the principles of his party, working actively in its support. In 1888 he was elected Vice President of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Nebraska City, and did especially good service during the campaign. Religiously, he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

The Campbells of Scotland have been celebrated in poetry and history, and the Campbells of Nebraska trace their ancestry back to that branch who, centuries ago, ranged themselves under the standard of McCallum More in the series of struggles which led to the expulsion of the Stuarts from the British throne. The precise date of the arrival of the first Campbell in America is not positively known, but it is believed a number of them came over in the three ships "George, Ann and John of Dublin," the vessels leaving Ireland May 20, 1729, and arriving on the American coast in August following.

The Campbells then settled in Pennsylvania, and were the compeers of other noted Scotch and Irish families, with whom they intermarried, and perpetuated the vigorous race of people which, to this day, commands universal admiration on account of both its physical and mental qualities. The Campbells, after adopting America as their country, were as eager in its defense and perpetuity as had been their ancestors before them in protecting their own native land from the ravages of the invader; and in the Revolutionary War they were numbered among those who fought most courageously in the struggle for Colonial independence. After laying down the implements of warfare, they entered fully as vigorously into the pursuits of agriculture and the learned professions—became preachers, writers, doctors, lawyers, lecturers, statesmen, legislators, congressmen—in fact, have represented all the honorable employments for which this country has become famous.

The history of this remarkable family it is hoped will still be preserved with that careful fidelity which has always made a record attracting the attention of the reflective mind, and has, at the same time, had associated with it the tinge of romance, making it deeply attractive to the story lover.

ALBERT L. YOUNG is the owner of a very valuable and highly productive farm of 200 acres on section 35, in North Branch Precinct, and is one of the capable citizens of the county. He was born in Onondaga County, N. Y., on the 7th of March, 1852, and is the son of Josiah H. and Mary (Cook) Young. The father of our subject resides at Berlin. When Albert was a little fellow six years of age his mother died, leaving a place in his life that could never be filled by another.

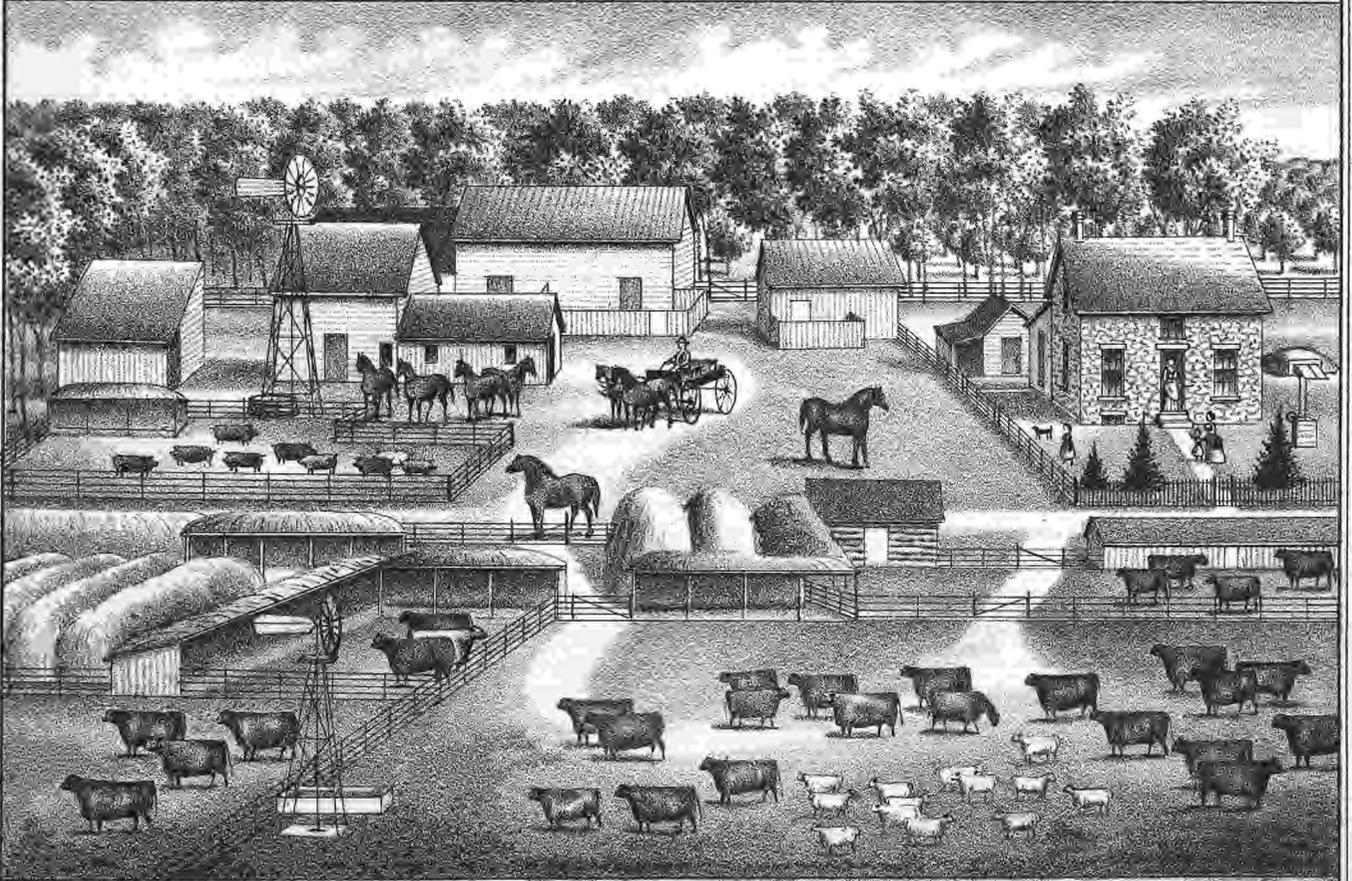

With the exception of about eighteen months in the years 1859-60, when our subject's father was on the Pacific Slope, during which period Albert lived with his grandparents and an uncle, he had remained with the family at home, and when, in 1872, his father came to Nebraska and settled on section 1, Syracuse Precinct, he accompanied him, and continued upon the farm as his father's helper for about four years.

In 1876 Mr. Young was united in marriage with Lou E. Annabel, the amiable daughter of Isaac and Anna (Crichton) Annabel. This lady was born in RESIDENCE OF JOHN PETERSON, SEC. 15. (NORTH) RUSSELL PRECINCT.

RESIDENCE OF ELIJAH LUFF, SEC. 33. (NORTH) RUSSELL PRECINCT.

Winona County, Minn., on the 16th of June, 1859. Her education was received in the district school. Mr. and Mrs. Young first settled upon the property where they now reside, the first purchase including 160 acres. This was speedily brought into shape and prepared for his purpose, well improved and supplied with a good residence and the needed out-buildings for farming purposes and stock-raising. The latter has been the chief occupation of our subject, and that which has enabled him to make the success in life that he has.

Isaac Annabel, the father of Mrs. Young, was born in Saratoga, N. Y., on the 5th of November, 1810, and was the son of Prince and Ruth (Howland) Annabel. The family is of French extraction, but for several generations have been citizens of New England. Mr. and Mrs. Annabel have four children living, viz: Lucy Jane, Lorenzo, George, and Lou E., the wife of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Young are the parents of three children—Nettie Bell, Guy Garfield and Ralph Annabel.

Mr. and Mrs. Young have made many friends in this district, and are much esteemed for their personal qualities and worth. They move in the best local society and are always accorded a cordial welcome. Our subject is thoroughly interested in all questions of political importance, and usually votes the Republican ticket, of which party he has always been a firm friend and ardent admirer.

ELIJAH LUFF. The reader is here introduced to a compendious biographical sketch of the largest land-owner and perhaps most prominent farmer of Russell Precinct. This gentleman operates 1,080 acres of land on sections 33, 19 and 4, and is chiefly engaged in the buying, feeding and raising of thoroughbred and high-grade stock. He is at the same time one of the early settlers of Otoe County, and has been energetic in the various enterprises and undertakings that have advanced its interests.

Mr. Luff is the son of William and Ann (Wallen) Luff. His father was born in Somersetshire, England, as was also his mother. Both come of good old English families, of what might perhaps there be called the upper middle classes, a distinction happily unknown and largely not understood in our free land. His parents died respectively in the years 1878 and 1880, the father being seventy, and the mother seventy-two years of age. They were the parents of seven children, who received the following names: Betsey, William, Joseph (deceased), George, Matilda, Elijah, and Sidney (deceased).

The native place of the subject of our sketch is in Somersetshire. He was born on Good Friday of the year 1834. Until he was twenty years of age he continued at home. He received no schooling as a child, and has felt the injury resulting therefrom all his life, and has labored hard to overcome the same.

In the year 1855 Mr. Luff sailed from Bristol on the good ship "Try," and landed at New York City after a dull and wearying journey of six weeks, experiencing for the greater part of the time bad weather, which was by no means helpful to the comfort or spirits of those who were invading Neptune's realms for the first time.

In beginning life in the New World, our subject went to Wayne County, Ohio, and worked for one summer at masonry; in the winter he found employment on the railroad. In the spring of 1856 he went by rail to Leavenworth, Kan., thence by steamer to Weston. From there he footed it to St. Joseph, a distance of thirty miles, his entire earthly belongings and property packed in an old carpet bag that he carried upon his back in primitive style. From St. Joseph he came to Nebraska City, and spent two years here, and in 1859 he went to Russell Precinct, going from there to Pike's Peak, but being unsuccessful in mining gold, returned after four months, and took up the remunerative, though sometimes dangerous, employment of freighting from Nebraska City west to Denver. He continued thus engaged during the greater part of the war period.

On the 1st of January, 1863, our subject made a change; leaving his freighting he homesteaded the present farm whereon stands his residence. It was then in nowise different to the prairie surrounding it, and he had all the work he could do to bring it to anything like a right condition. He had a fine practical knowledge, and is naturally a fine business manager. From time to time as he was able he bought land, adding piece by piece until the present noble estate is the result. All is in Russell Precinct. He has a large herd of cattle and feeds perhaps fifty more, but his chief pleasure on the farm is his horses, of which he has some twenty-five or thirty head, all of standard breed, and either pure blood or very high grade. He owns the well-known animals Compeer and Coleus.

Mr. and Mrs. Luff celebrated their union in wedlock in Russell, upon the 6th of November, 1863. The wife of our subject was prior to her marriage Miss Charlotte Mills. Her parents, William and Jane Mills, were born in Somersetshire, England. Her father was a very prosperous farmer in his native country, and died there in 1872, aged sixty-nine, having survived his wife almost twenty years, her demise occurring when she was forty-seven years of age. Mrs. Luff, who is also of English birth, came to this country from Bristol in the year 1863, and came into this State with the above-mentioned result. She is the eldest of three children; her brother George is now deceased, and her sister Harriet is now in Michigan. She is the mother of six children, viz: George, Albert, Annie, Thomas, Charles and Alice, all of whom are still with their parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Luff hold a very high position in society, and are much esteemed, both on account of the sterling qualities of their character and their social position. Their family is among the best in the county, and in all that means true home life they are in the front rank. As a citizen, man and friend, Mr. Luff is universally regarded by those who know him worthy of every regard. His political sympathies are with the Republican party, and have been since he came to understand the political institutions and principles of his adopted country.

---

CHRISTIAN BISCHOFF, the champion stock-raiser of Otoe County, owns and operates 400 acres of finely improved land, occupying a portion of sections 28 and 29 in Rock Creek Precinct. As one of the self-made men of Southern Nebraska he has built up for himself a good record, his career having been marked by great industry and perseverance, and the result of which he cannot fail to look upon with satisfaction. His homestead is noticeable for its handsome and substantial buildings, the dwelling being roomy and convenient, and the barns and outhouses finely adapted to the shelter of stock and the storing of grain. His land is well watered by Sand Creek, and the soil has responded bountifully to the labors of the agriculturist.

Mr. Bischoff ranks among the pioneer settlers of Nebraska Territory, coming within its limits as early as the spring of 1858. He then pre-empted 160 acres in Rock Creek Precinct, and began the labors which have been crowned with such flattering success. Prior to this he had been living in the vicinity of Mendota, Ill., where he was employed as a farm laborer eighteen months. To this point he had migrated from Kenosha, Wis., where he settled in the fall of 1854, upon his emigration to the United States.

Our subject, a native of the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, was born Sept. 9, 1834, and there he lived until a youth of nineteen years, receiving a thorough education, and upon leaving school was employed at farming. He was accompanied to the United States by his father, Christian Bischoff, Sr., the mother having died when our subject was a little lad four years of age. She in her girlhood was Miss Dorthia Detrich, and died at the birth of her ninth child, leaving four sons and three daughters. Two children had died before the decease of the mother. The survivors accompanied their father to America, and the latter located in Chicago, Ill., where his death took place three months later, when he was sixty-six years old. Both parents had been members of the Lutheran Church, and were people of honesty and integrity, and of good standing in their community.

After the death of their father the children worked out by the month. Christian came to Nebraska a single man, but not long afterward met his fate in the person of Mrs. Elizabeth (Neolch) Fuchs, to whom he was married in the spring of 1860. Mrs. Bischoff, also a native of the German Empire, was born in the Kingdom of Wurtemberg, May 7, 1832. She crossed the Atlantic with her brothers and sisters early in life, and was joined later by her father, John Neolch, who had been twice married in Germany, and where both wives died. The first was the mother of Mrs. B., and her maiden name was Godlieber Eslinger. The father was in good circumstances in Germany, and spent his last years with his daughter, Mrs. Bischoff, passing away at a ripe old age at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Seypher, in Holt County, Mo.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bischoff there have been born eight children, three of whom, Lizzie, Christ and an infant unnamed, are deceased. The survivors are: Johanna, the wife of William Eden, a well-to-do farmer of Rock Creek Precinct; Christian, Jr., Caroline, Henry and Anna at home with their parents. Mrs. B. by her first marriage is the mother of two children, Joseph and John, who are now married, and reside in Otoe County. Her husband, Joseph Fuchs, was a native of Germany, and died in Cass County, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. B. are active members of the Lutheran Church, and our subject, politically, is a warm adherent of the Republican party.

HON. J. C. CAMPBELL, M. D., the oldest practicing physician not only of this county but the State at large, is the subject of a history more than ordinarily interesting. He has been identified with the interests of Nebraska since its Territorial days, and figured prominently in governmental matters, and all the various enterprises tending to its development and prosperity. Although having nearly attained his fourscore years, he is remarkably well preserved, mentally and physically, standing among his compeers like the sturdy oak, scarcely touched by the storms and changes of three-quarters of a century. He is a man of fine physique, of noble and commanding presence, and Nature formed within him a heart fully in keeping with his stature. He counts among the people of Otoe County hosts of friends, who have watched a remarkable career with that admiration well worthy of its achievements.

Dr. Campbell was born near the city of Lexington, in Fayette County, Ky., Dec. 22, 1812, and is the only surviving member of his father's family.

The latter, Dr. John P. Campbell, was born in Rockbridge County, Va., and married Miss Isabella McDowell, a native of the same. He was finely educated, having been graduated from Hampden Sidney College, and at an early period in his life entered upon a successful career as a medical practitioner, which, however, he abandoned later on to enter the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. Although a slave-holder by inheritance, Providence had created him with a hatred for the peculiar institution, and for the purpose of freeing his slaves he changed his residence from Kentucky to Ohio. In the former State a law required a man who freed his colored people to give security for their support in years to come, so that they should not become a burden to the State.

The father of our subject upon his removal to Ohio located in Chillicothe. He had been born and reared as the son of a wealthy Kentuckian, but such were his conscientious scruples that in his later years he was willing to forego many of the luxuries by which he had been surrounded in order to labor in the Master's vineyard. His career, however, was cut short by his untimely death, when he was about forty-seven years of age.

Mrs. Campbell, the mother, after the death of her husband returned to Kentucky with her children, and there fell to her inheritance more slaves, but she, following in the footsteps of her lamented husband, returned with them to Ohio, setting them free also, and in Chillicothe lived with her children for several years. Finally she returned to her native State, where she spent the remainder of her life, passing away at the age of sixty-five years. She was the mother of six children, namely: James McD., Margaret M., Mary U., Jane L., John Calvin (our subject) and Edward H. All of these lived to mature years, but as we have said, all but our subject are now deceased.

The earliest recollections of our subject are mostly of Chillicothe, Ohio, to which he was taken by his parents first when scarcely more than an infant. He was quite young at the time of his father's death, and, much to his regret, has no recollection of one so closely allied to him, and who so nobly performed his part in life. John C. was given a good education in his youth, attending both the common and a private school, and at the age of seventeen entered the Miami State University of Ohio, where he took the classical course of four years, and from which institution he was graduated with honors about the time of reaching his majority.

The youngest brother of our subject had crossed the Mississippi, and was engaged in mercantile business at Burlington, Iowa, and thither John C. now repaired to join him, not even taking a vacation in which to revisit his home. He had always been bright and ambitious, and thoughtful beyond his years, and now began in earnest the more serious business of life. Soon after reaching the Hawkeye State he pre-empted a quarter-section of land in the vicinity of the embryo town of Burlington, and then made arrangements to pursue the study of medicine, under the instruction of Drs. Lowe and Hickock, in whose office he remained a number of years. He was thus prepared for entrance into the medical department of Kemper College at St Louis, and which is now the medical department of the State University. Two years later he was graduated from this institution, and returning to Iowa commenced the practice of his profession, where he remained three or four years, and built up a good patronage.

During his residence at this place Dr. Campbell was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Henderson, a lady of excellent family, and own cousin to the late Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana. This lady became the mother of one child, and died at Mt. Pleasant, in less than two years after her marriage. The child also soon followed its mother to the silent land. Upon his removal from this place Dr. Campbell established an office in New Purchase, now Agency City, six miles from Ottumwa, and in the spring of 1845 contracted a second marriage, with Miss Martha Rogers. This lady was born in Missouri, and is the daughter of Dr. Rogers, who was a native of Virginia, and his wife of Tennessee; they spent their last years in Missouri. Of this union there were born three sons—John James, Edward Hugh and William H. The two elder are leading business men of Montana, engaged in the drug trade; William H. is a clerk of the Morton House of Nebraska City.

In the fall of 1854 Dr. Campbell once more changed his residence, this time choosing Nebraska City, and of this he has since been a resident. Thus a pioneer of three Territories, viz: Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska, he has had the privilege of witnessing most remarkable changes, and during the vicissitudes of a long and useful career has been no unimportant factor in their development, especially of the latter.

From Agency City, Iowa, Dr. Campbell removed to Sidney, in Fremont County, Iowa, where he became especially interested in the establishment and maintenance of schools, and was elected and re-elected Superintendent of Public Instruction, discharging the duties of this responsible office in a most praiseworthy manner. As soon, however, as the purchase of lands from the Otoe Indians was consummated, he found his preferences greatly drawn toward this section of country, and resolved to identify himself with the people of Nebraska Territory. He was one of the very first to make settlement, and as early as 1855 was elected to the Territorial Legislature. The year following he declined to be a candidate, desiring to give his attention more closely to his profession, but in 1857 he was again persuaded to take upon himself the responsibilities of a Legislator. He then was given a period of rest until 1861, when he was elected to the Territorial Council. His cool and temperate judgment and wise foresight were especially useful at that period in the history of Nebraska, and there were few enterprises in which his opinion was not sought and his influence solicited in furthering the interest of the Territory struggling to become a State.

It is hardly necessary to state that Dr. Campbell was a leading member of the convention called for the purpose of drawing up a constitution for the proposed State of Nebraska. Among his coadjutors at that time were Judges Mason, Lake, Manderson, Wakeley, Woolworth, Butler, etc. The first document drawn up in this connection was rejected by the vote of the people, on account of the provision for the taxation of church property.

Mrs. Martha Campbell departed this life at her home in Nebraska City, in 1861. Our subject contracted a third matrimonial alliance in Nebraska City in the spring of 1862, with Miss Sarah P. Childs, who was born in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., in 1829. Her father, Capt. William Childs, was commander of a merchant vessel, a man of high character, remarkable intelligence, of English birth and ancestry, and closely allied to the Rothschilds of London. During a mutiny on board his ship he was foully murdered, and his remains cast into the sea. He had been married in Philadelphia, Pa., to Mrs. E. Brodt, and their home was in Philadelphia, Broome and Delaware Counties. Mrs. Campbell came to the West with her half-brother, E. S. Hawley. Of her marriage with our subject there were born one daughter and two sons—Henrietta E., Ezra T. and Paul M. Henrietta is the wife of Rev. G. Sumner Baskerville, a minister of the Presbyterian Church, and at present stationed in Tower City, Dak.; of Ezra T., a popular and prominent physician of Nebraska City, a sketch will be found elsewhere in this work; Paul M., who has a taste for the profession of law, of which he purposes soon to become a student, is at present in the United States Railroad Mail Service, from Pacific Junction, Iowa, to McCook, Neb. Mrs. Sarah P. Campbell died at the home of her daughter Henrietta E., in Dakota, Aug. 11, 1888, aged sixty-two years.

The earlier years of Dr. Campbell were particularly signalized by his interest in education, and those acquainted with the early history of Nebraska City will recollect that in the early days its public school system was far ahead of any in this or adjoining States. He had for his associate in this good work Dr. Parker, and once every week they visited every class of this city school, not excepting those of the colored pupils. Dr. Campbell for six years was a working member of the School Board, and even after his withdrawal did not lose the warm interest which he had always felt. As auxiliary to the school he has been the warm defender of religious institutions, and an almost lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church in different places. He assisted in the organization of the churches at Burlington, Mt. Pleasant and Sidney, Iowa, and later in that of Nebraska City. One remarkable fact in connection with these was that the same minister, Rev. Cole, was at different times stationed at the four places.

The career of a man who has lived so long and so well presents to the reflective mind a picture amply worthy its attention, and one that it is most pleasant to dwell upon. Dr. Campbell has labored faithfully, and learned well all through his life, improving the opportunities for the acquirement of knowledge, and for doing good to his fellowmen. He has thus built up for himself a monument more enduring than marble, and one on which his descendants may look with pride in after years. The hosts of friends whom he has gathered around him form a source of comfort and of honor to him during the years of his green old age, and trust that he may for years yet be enabled to shed around him that bright and healthy influence which has been one of the marked features of a most remarkable character.

CHARLES BREHM occupies a position among the general farmers and stock-raisers of McWilliams Precinct; his property and home are upon section 32, the farm comprising 160 acres in an excellent state of cultivation. His farm buildings are complete, substantially built, and of convenient arrangement. When he took up this property in 1874 there was nothing to distinguish this land from the virgin prairie around.

Prior to coming to Nebraska in 1873 Mr. Brehm had resided in Lee County, Iowa, having from the year 1869 successfully operated a farm in that county, settling there immediately upon coming from his native land. He was born in Bavaria, on the 28th of July, 1804. He is the son of Carl Brehm, and grew to manhood in his native place, was educated in its schools, and afterward learned the trade of a carpenter.

When twenty-one years of age the father of our subject enlisted in the German Army and went to fight under Napoleon in the French wars. He fought at the battle of Leipsic, and the night of the 1st of January, 1813, while crossing the River Rhine he was thrown into the stream, but rescued later by his comrades. He was soon after taken sick but soon recovered; this was the only occasion he could remember that he was ill. He died from old age, having attained seventy-five years.

The subject of our sketch is the youngest but two of eight children who lived to attain their majority. He served in the Bavarian regiment of the German Army for five years, was in the War of 1866, and participated in some of the minor engagements. Shortly after receiving his discharge he came to the United States and located in Franklin Township, Lee Co., Iowa, entered land and began farming.

In 1871 Mr. Brehm was united in marriage with Miss Christina Frank, in Lee County. This lady was born in Bavaria on the 21st of January, 1849. She came to America with her parents in 1855, and lived with them upon the farm which they took in Lee County. Both are now quite aged, and are residing in Franklin County of the same State. Her parents were members of the German Evangelical Church, and the wife of our subject was brought up in that religious faith. She was educated in the Iowa schools, and is thoroughly domesticated. She is the mother of eight children, whose names are as follows: Fred, Minnie, Charles, William, Phillip, Jr., Mary, Martha and Jacob.

Our subject and wife are members of the Evangelical Church. In politics our subject is independent. He has made the institutions of his adopted county a study, and has learned to understand and appreciate them fully.

WILLIAM REDFIELD. The main points in the history of the subject of our sketch, who is now a resident of the city of Syracuse, are as follows: He was born in LaHarpe, Hancock Co., Ill., Sept. 14, 1845, and is the son of William and Mary (Scott) Redfield. His parents were natives of Livingston County, N. Y., where they were reared and married. They moved to Kirtland, Ohio, where they lived until 1843, then moved to Illinois and settled among the pioneers of Hancock County. There the father improved a farm which now lies adjacent to the flourishing town of LaHarpe. Three years later, however, he pulled up stakes, and crossing the Mississippi located in Liberty, Mo. Not being pleased with this locality he, in the fall of that same year, went to Southwestern Iowa, settling on what is now known as the old Shesher farm. The country was wild and new, and Indians were plentiful. In 1848 the family moved to Silver Creek, Mills County, and the father improved three farms in that locality. In 1856 he changed his residence to Fremont County, Iowa, and opened three more farms. Then going into Page County he took up a tract of raw prairie, and there also opened up a farm, which became valuable, and of which he retained possession until his death, which occurred in 1878, while on a visit to the home of his nephew in Johnson County, Neb. The mother of our subject survived her husband only three years, her death taking place at Shenandoah, Iowa, in 1881. The household circle included seven children, of whom six are living. George Z. Redfield is a well-to-do farmer of Nemaha County, Neb.; Hiram and Frank are in business at Shenandoah, Iowa; Tryphena is the wife of D. W. Hall, of Creston, and Rebecca married Sylvester Whiting, of Otter Tail County, Minn., where she now lives, but when married they were residents of Mills County, Iowa.

William Redfield remained a member of the parental household until July, 1871. He had by the exercise of great perseverance acquired a common-school education, and developed into a youth of more than ordinary intelligence on the frontier. Now starting out for himself he made his way to Salt Lake City, Utah, and took charge of a store of general merchandise in the American Fork Mining District, forty miles from Salt Lake. He was thus occupied a period of five years, and until the camp was broken up. Then returning to Shenandoah, Iowa, he dealt in horses until 1876. He was variously occupied thereafter until 1885, when he took up his residence in Blue Springs, Gage Co., Neb., from there removed to Nebraska City, and thence to Syracuse. He still owns property in Shenandoah.

Our subject while a resident of Utah made the acquaintance of Miss Sarah E. Browning, and was married to this lady in Shenandoah, Iowa, Dec. 1, 1879. Mrs. Redfield was born and reared in Salt Lake City, and is the daughter of James A. and Sarah (McGera) Browning, the former of whom is an accountant and bookkeeper in Salt Lake City, in the employ of one of its leading firms. The mother died about 1882. Of this union there have been born five children, namely: Ethel, Frederick, Carl, Cleveland and Clyde. Mr. Redfield is a staunch Democrat, politically, and socially, a member of the Masonic fraternity. He was Master of the lodge at Tabor, Iowa, while attending college there.

L EONARD T. SPICKNALL. This gentleman, who represents the brickmaking industry in Talmage, and is in fact an enterprising and prosperous manufacturer of that most necessary article of building material, has in his yards all the modern appliances for the turning out of an almost perfect article, and manufactures over 600,000 per annum. He has been connected with this branch of industry at this place since 1882, and has enjoyed an enviable reputation and a large and extensive patronage throughout the entire surrounding district, supplying the brick for all of the buildings since erected in the town and neighborhood. Linked with this business he has another, in every way diverse if not diametrically opposite, but is no less successful on that account from a financial standpoint, viz: that of a restauranteur, carrying on the same in Talmage.

Previous to coming to this county in April, 1883, our subject had lived in Dearborn County, Ind., where he was born on the 17th of December, 1829. His father, Leonard Spicknall, was a native of Virginia, and came of one of the old and worthy Virginian families. He was a lifelong agriculturist. The father of our subject was first married to Amelia Roland, a Virginian lady, with whom he removed to Indiana after the birth of their first child. She died at the age of twenty-nine years, leaving five children. Subsequently the bereaved husband, who every day felt the pressing need of his little ones for some care other than his own, was married to Emma Horrom, a lady who was born in Vermont, but who had lived in Indiana almost all her life. The family circle came to include ten children, five of whom were sons, and eight of whom attained to years of maturity and are yet living, the subject of this sketch being the eldest. The parents lived in Dearborn County until the end of their days, which were not reached, however, until they had both passed the allotted threescore years and ten.

Our subject, on starting in life for himself, in 1852 went to Illinois, and passed four years in Grundy County, near Morris. Returning at the end of that time to his native place, he was there married to Mary Whitaker, the daughter of William and Hannah (Vozy) Whitaker, both of whom were natives of England. Their daughter Mary was born in Dearborn County, in the year 1841. She was reared and educated there upon her father's farm, which had been brought from an unimproved condition to one of the best and most fertile farms in the county. She has presented her husband with six children, all of whom are still at home. Their names are as follows: William B., Charles O., Jeanette G., Clara L., Olive L. and Evert A.

Mr. and Mrs. Spicknall and three of their children are devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which our subject is a Steward and also Trustee, and has for many years held the office of Class-Leader. He is deeply interested in the temperance cause, and is a local Prohibitionist. In general governmental questions he is numbered with the Republican party.

W ILLIAM RAY, senior member of the firm of Ray & Hicks, is engaged with his partner in general merchandising in Dunbar, and also has an interest in the City Hotel and livery stable at that point, besides owning a large mercantile house in Woodbine, Iowa. He was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, Nov. 1, 1840, and is the son of George Ray, now deceased.

The father of our subject emigrated from his native State of New York to Grant County in 1847, settling not far from the lead mines of Galena, Ill. In that region William received a common-school education, and in the spring of 1863 migrated across the Mississippi into Fayette County, Iowa. During the progress of the late Civil War he enlisted in Company F, 49th Wisconsin Infantry, serving one year, and doing mostly post duty.

Our subject upon being transformed from a soldier to a civilian returned to Fayette County, Iowa, where he lived until 1876. He then removed to the vicinity of Atlantic, and engaged in stock-raising three years. In the fall of 1879 he came to Nebraska, and locating in Holt County, carried on farming and stock-raising together with real-estate business until 1888. He still has a ranch in the vicinity of Stuart. In September of the last-named year our subject came to Dunbar, and in addition to the business already noted, ships large quantities of produce from this county to Omaha. He represents a large amount of real estate, owning besides the property already mentioned 1,920 acres of land in Holt and Brown Counties. His general merchandising transactions yield him a handsome income, as the firm enjoys an extensive patronage. They keep a full stock of everything in their line.

Mr. Ray, on the 4th of July, 1867, was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Bastedo, who was born in Wyoming County, Pa., Aug. 2, 1843. The parents of Mrs. Ray were George and Diadama Bastedo, the former of whom died in Missouri about 1867. To Mr. and Mrs. Ray there have been born four children—George E., Paul L., Mary E. and Beatrice. The eldest is twenty years of age and the youngest ten. Mr. and Mrs. Ray are members of the Presbyterian Church, and our subject is identified with the A. O. U. W. and the G. A. R. Politically, he votes the Democratic ticket, and entertains the interest felt by every intelligent citizen in the building up of its community, and its advancement socially, morally and financially. The mother of our subject, Mrs. Lucinda Ray, was a native of Ohio and is now deceased. The parental family included nine children, five of whom are living and four deceased.

CAPT. PATRICK RODDY, one of the most public-spirited men of Nebraska City Precinct, and a leading land-owner, has a fine farm of 160 acres on section 31, 320 acres in North Branch Precinct, also 160 in Russell Precinct, west of Unadilla, a part of which he secured as early as 1864. The homestead proper includes 160 acres, a very fine tract, under a high state of cultivation and supplied with good buildings. The balance is fairly productive, and is devoted to general farming and stock-raising.

Our subject was born in County Westmeath, Ireland, July 12, 1842, where he lived until a young man twenty years of age, then resolved to seek his fortunes in America. He first settled in Ontario, Canada, where he occupied himself at farming until 1863, then came to the States, and making his way westward engaged on a Missouri River boat. The second year he was promoted to a deck hand, and later became watchman; the third year was promoted to the position of mate, and later became Captain of the "Kate C. Nutt," continuing on the river until 1872. He was for a period of five years in the meantime connected with the Hannibal & St. Joseph Packet Company, and for a like period as Captain was connected with the Missouri River Transfer Company, of Omaha.

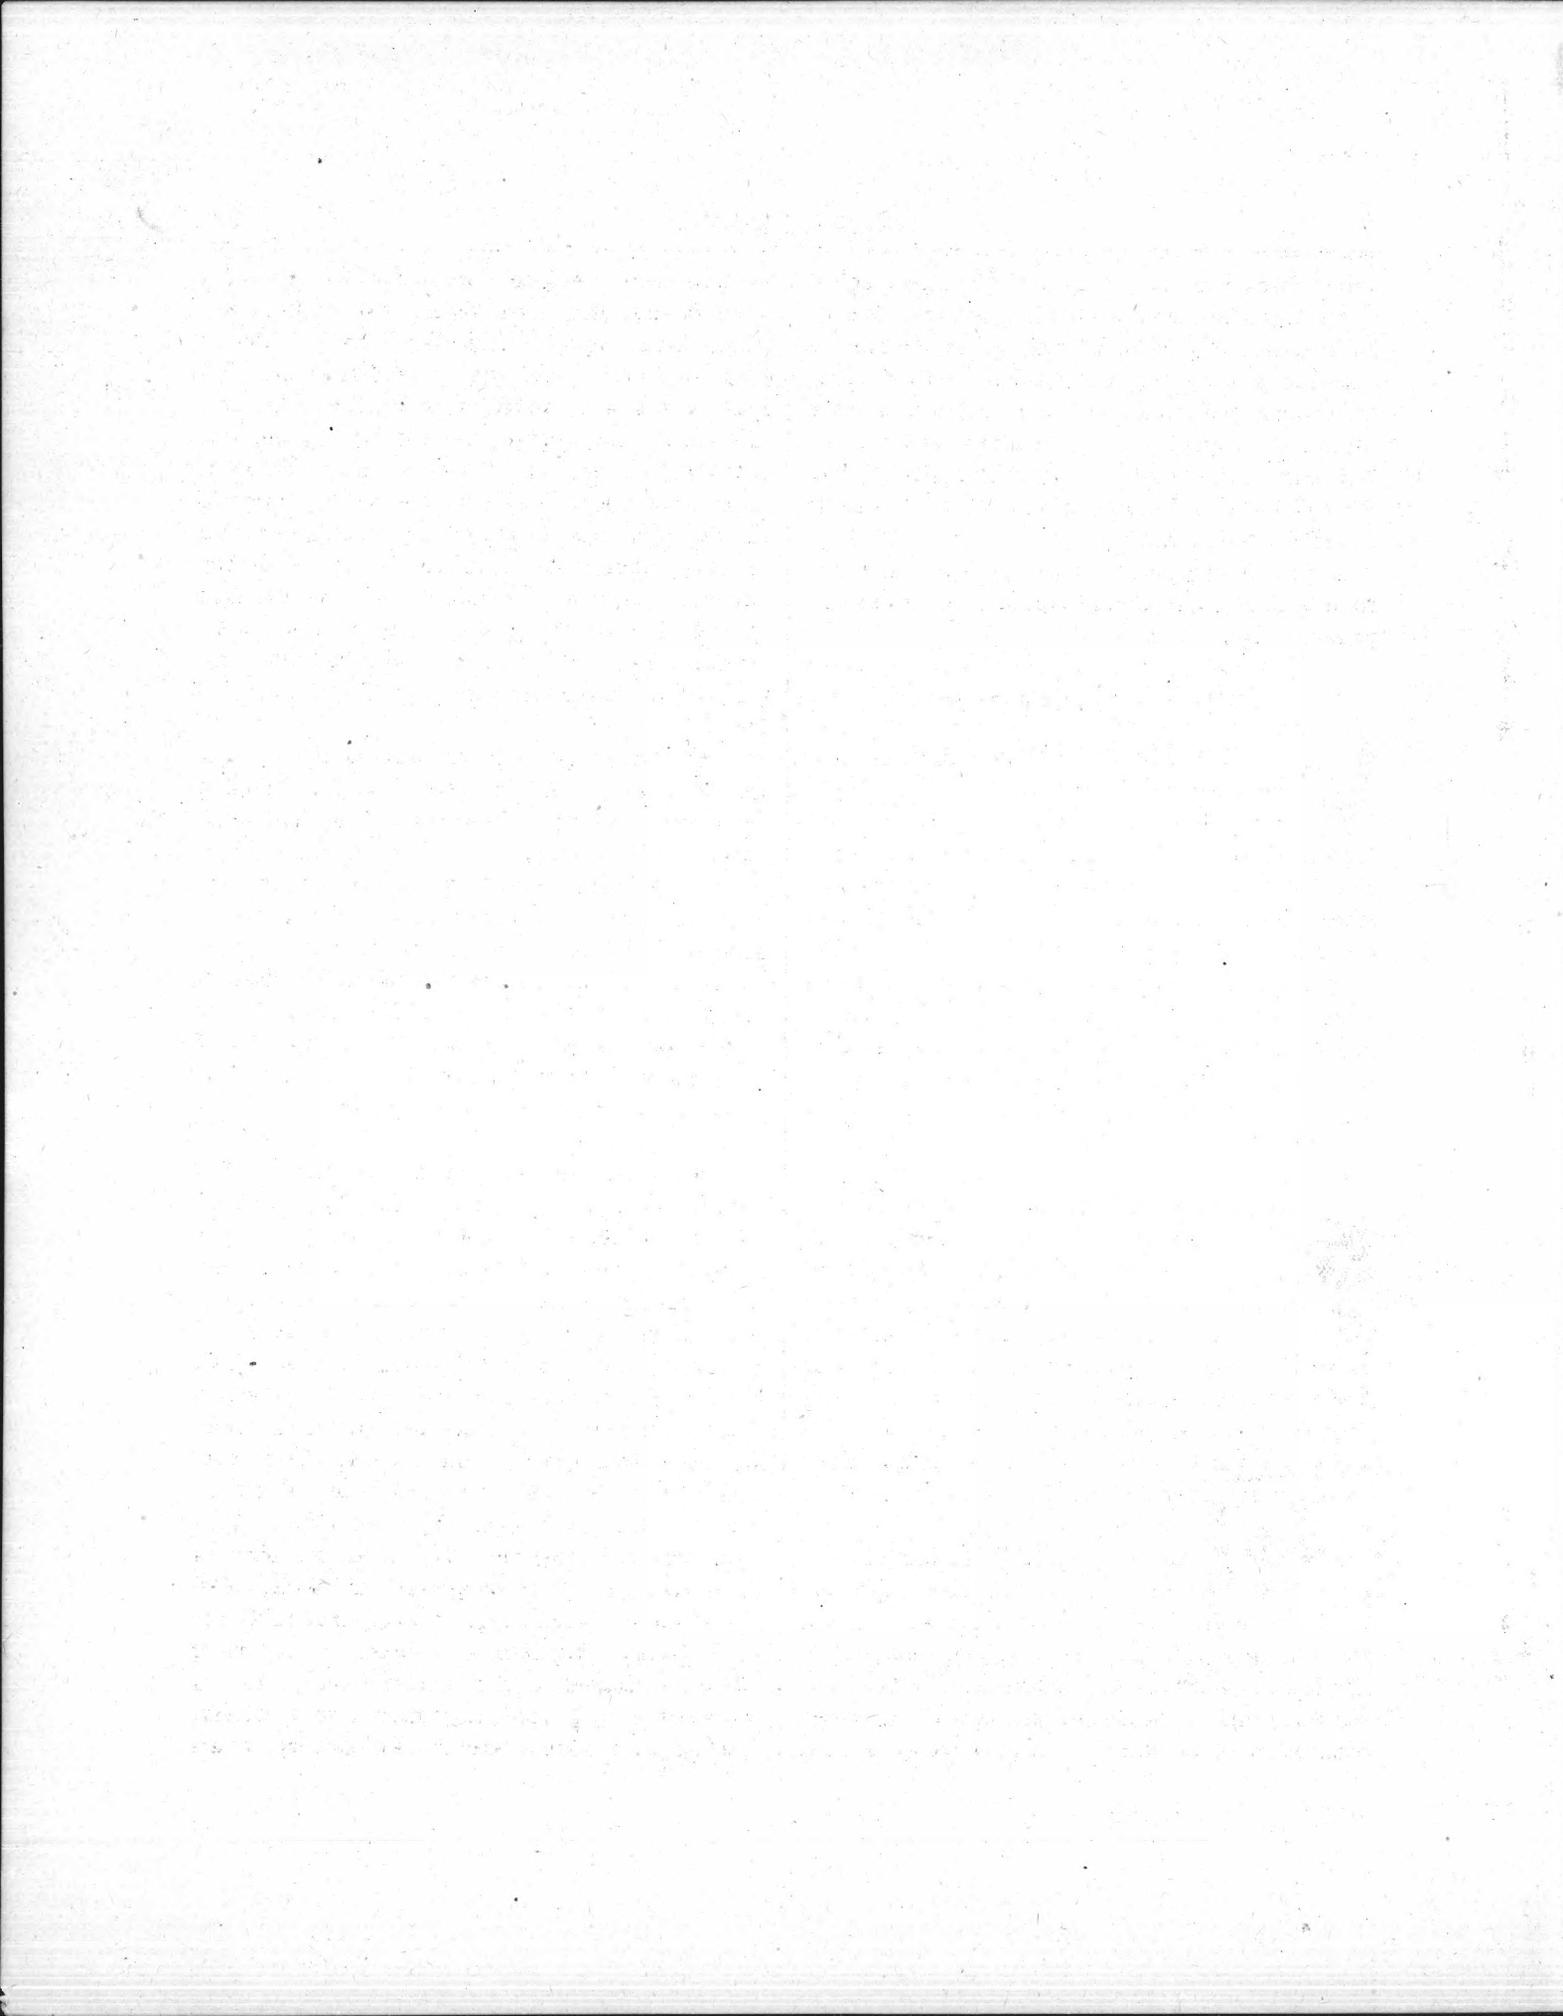

While in the city above mentioned our subject made the acquaintance of Miss Mary Henzie, to whom he was married Jan. 9, 1870. Mrs. Roddy is a native of the same country as her husband, and was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, March 17, 1848. She came alone to the United States when a young woman, and lived for a time in New York City. Later she migrated further west, taking up her residence in Omaha, where she met her future husband. Her parents were Daniel and Catherine (Delaney) Henzie; the former is deceased, and the latter resides in Queens County, Ireland. The Captain and his family located on their present farm June 20, 1872. The household circle includes six children, three sons and three daughters, namely: Maggie A., John, Thomas, Mary, Kate and James P. The eldest is eighteen years of age, and the youngest three, and all are at home with their parents. Mrs. Roddy and her youngest child in 1887 made a visit to the old home in Ireland. The Captain is an active Republican, sound on the tariff question, and a fervent advocate of the principles of his party. He has never been an office-seeker, although holding positions of trust and responsibility in his school district for a number of years. He is a man held in high esteem among his neighbors, and during the Presidential campaigns has been of eminent service to his party in this district as a stump speaker, of more than ordinary force, logical in his arguments, and one holding the attention of his audience. He has uniformly given his encouragement to the enterprises calculated to develop the county, and besides his connection with various other interests, is a stockholder and Director in the Nebraska City Street Railway Company. Capt. Roddy and family are members of the Catholic Church in Nebraska City.

RESIDENCE OF PATRIC RODDY, SEC. 31. NEBRASKA CITY PRECINCT.

RESIDENCE OF W<sup>M</sup>. KROPP, WYOMING STATION.

A fine lithographic view of the home and surroundings of Capt. Roddy appears on an accompanying page.

WILLIAM KROPP. Among the men who have assisted in the advancement of Wyoming Precinct as a farming community, the subject of this sketch holds no unimportant position, being one of its most prominent farmers and stock-raisers. He owns a valuable tract of land embracing 1,145 acres, 520 of which are embraced in the homestead, and this latter has been brought to a high state of cultivation, and is provided with a fine set of farm buildings, including a substantial dwelling, and the barns and other structures necessary for the proper shelter of stock and the storing of grain. A view of the farm is presented in this connection.

Mr. Kropp came to this county and Wyoming Precinct in December of 1863, although as early as the year 1857 he had taken a claim in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, Cass County, upon which he settled in the spring of 1858. This he sold five years later in order to change his residence to this county, and first purchased a quarter of section 23, in Wyoming Precinct. He was successful from the start, and added gradually to his possessions, being now numbered among the most extensive land-owners of the county.

A native of what was then the Kingdom of Hanover, Germany, our subject was born April 25, 1833, and is the descendant of an ancestry noted for health and strength both of body and mind. His father, Henry Kropp, also a native of Hanover, was one of its most prosperous farmers, to which occupation he was reared from his boyhood up. He married there Miss Lota Twick, who was also of a good family, and a native likewise of Hanover. They settled upon a farm near their childhood home, and there were born to them four sons and four daughters, of whom our subject was the second son and third child. Four daughters and two sons are yet living, and all are married. William, however, is the only one who makes his home in this State, the rest of the children being residents of Lake County, Ill. With the exception of one daughter, the wife of a minister of the Albright Church, they are engaged in agricultural pursuits. One son, Henry by name, was drowned while attempting to cross the Weeping Water, July 4, 1864.

In September of 1853 the parents of our subject left their home in Germany, and crossing the Atlantic, with their children took up their residence in Lake County, Ill. They are both now deceased. William was twenty years old at the time of emigrating to America. He had received a good education in his native tongue, and now set out on his own account, employing himself at whatever he could find to do, frequently working by the day. Upon the advice of Mr. E. Crover, one of the pioneers of Lake County, Ill., he resolved to push further westward, and coming to this county located a piece of land and prepared to settle. He only sojourned, however, for a brief time in this region, but returning to Lake County, Ill., staid there during the winter, and in the spring of 1858 secured to himself a wife and helpmate in the person of Miss Dorothea Stoll, who, like himself, was of German birth and ancestry, and born in the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, Feb. 2, 1834. The parents of Mrs. Kropp were Peter and Sophia (Huenemoeder) Stoll, also natives of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and the father a farmer by occupation. They also came of a hardy race of people, and the father was a farmer by occupation. They were married in Germany, and after the birth of three sons and four daughters, of whom Mrs. Kropp was the third daughter and fourth child, the whole family emigrated to America in August of 1854, and located at once in Lake County, Ill. A few years later, in 1858, they moved to Nebraska, locating again upon a farm in Cass County, where the death of both parents occurred some years ago.

Mrs. Kropp was reared and educated in her native Province, and was twenty years old upon emigrating to America. She continued a member of the parental household until her marriage, became thoroughly versed in all home duties, and was trained to habits of industry and economy. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Kropp started to Nebraska on their wedding tour, and soon afterward took up their residence on the new farm in Cass County. When they first moved upon it they immediately built a small frame dwelling, and after built a small addition, and that remained their home while they lived in Cass County. They worked together, hand in hand, with the mutual purpose of acquiring a competence and a home for themselves and their children. That they succeeded admirably is evident in noting their condition and surroundings to-day.

Of the family of nine children who were given our subject and his estimable wife, only four are living, namely: George W., who is operating the first store built at the station of Wyoming, and who is now Postmaster; John H., William F. and Louis, who are at home with their parents. The two youngest are students of the college in Nebraska City. One daughter, Minnie, died at the interesting age of twenty-seven years. Her death took place April 23, 1887. She was a sweet and intelligent young woman, and her death was a severe blow to the affectionate hearts of her parents. Bertie, a little daughter of nineteen months, died in Cass County, Neb., in the spring of 1862. Edward died in October, 1876, when four years old, and Ernest died at the age of seven, in June, 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Kropp are consistent members of the German Methodist Church, and our subject, politically, is a sound Republican.

THOMAS R. WHITTAKER. Along the lines of the great railroads which stretch out into every part of the fertile and growing West hamlets and villages have sprung up. Many of these have grown into prosperous and busy cities, while others are but quiet and ordinary trading places for the neighboring farmers. Among the latter is Delta, a small place in McWilliams Precinct, and to this place our subject, who is now Postmaster, came in 1882, and embarked in the mercantile business. At that time he opened a general store, and for a time conducted the only business house in the place. In connection with still handling all the goods usually found in a country store, Mr. Whittaker also deals in lumber and coal, and in these lines is very extensively engaged. He can be justly classed among the solid business men of the county, and although enjoying no schooling in any particular line of mercantile life, having been brought up on a farm, he has displayed no little business tact and genius, and although a young man, has assumed great responsibilities in the business world.

The biographical writers of this volume met comparatively few men actively engaged in business life who were natives of this county. Most of them came here after they had reaped the advantages of experience in the more serious duties of life, but we find in our subject a native of Otoe County, he having been born in Delaware Precinct, Sept. 4, 1859. He was educated in the public schools of that precinct and at the State Normal School, and such knowledge as he acquired in these excellent institutions was supplemented by a thorough course in Bryant's Commercial College at St. Joseph, Mo. In early life he had evinced a great liking for business transactions, and we see that he has enjoyed unusual success in this particular line. He is straightforward and upright in all his dealings, enjoys in an unusual degree the confidence and respect of the people throughout the community, and we predict for him a bright future.

The father of our subject, Reuben Whittaker, is one of the extensive and well-to-do farmers of Delaware Precinct. He was a pioneer of this section of the State, having come to this region over thirty-three years ago. His wife was Miss Jane Wilson, to whom he was united in marriage here. She is one of the leading ladies of the precinct in which she resides, and the family are not only well known, but highly respected.

Mr. Whittaker, our subject, was united in marriage with Miss Fannie Cooper, in Pottawatomie County, Kan. This lady was born in the latter-named county, in 1863. There she was reared, and received an excellent education in the common schools and at the State Normal School. She is a refined and intelligent lady, and prominent in the enterprises carried on by the ladies of her neighborhood. Her father is a well-to-do farmer of Pottawatomie County. She has become the mother of two children—Roy and Eugene.

Mr. Whittaker has become a leading member of the community where he resides, and has filled some of its most responsible official positions. He has served as Postmaster for four years, and is at present Postmaster of Delta, by recent appointment. He was also Justice of the Peace, and politically, is a sound Republican.

JOHAN WASHINGTON JAMES, one of the most successful general farmers of Wyoming Precinct, has been a resident here for a period of twenty-two years, occupying his present homestead, which is pleasantly located on sections 16 and 9, and now embraces 240 acres of thoroughly cultivated land. The buildings and other improvements are creditable to the industry and enterprise of the proprietor, and the homestead with its surroundings forms the ideal country place, where are enjoyed all the comforts of life and many of its luxuries.

Mr. James came to Nebraska in the spring of 1867, soon after it had been transformed from a Territory into a State. He at once selected the land from which he intended building up a homestead, and after providing a shelter for himself and family, proceeded with the cultivation of the soil, and endured in common with the people around him the difficulties and hardships of life in a new settlement. He had learned farming in all its details in Mercer County, Pa., where he was reared from a boy to manhood.

Our subject was cradled on the other side of the Atlantic, in County Donegal, Ireland, where his birth took place Nov. 1, 1847. He is of excellent Scotch-Irish ancestry, the latter being of those people who were driven from their native Scotland to the North of Ireland during the time of the religious persecution, when so many homes were made desolate. His father, William James, was a farmer by occupation, and a native of County Donegal, where he died in middle life. The mother, Mrs. Margret (Buchanan) James, was a native of the same county as her husband and son. After his death she and her children emigrated to America, locating in Butler County, and then a year later into Mercer County, Pa., where they lived for a number of years, then set out for the farther West. Some of the other members of the family had preceded them to this section, and joining them here, the mother took up her abode with her two sons, and here her death took place Oct. 15, 1884, when she was seventy-two years old.

Our subject was next to the youngest child of his parents, whose family consisted of seven sons and two daughters. He was not quite three years old when he went with his mother to Pennsylvania, and was reared to manhood in Mercer County, Pa. There also he made the acquaintance of his future wife, Miss Mary Luella Van Tine, to whom he was married Feb. 24, 1881. This lady was born in Wyoming Precinct, Dec. 22, 1862, and is the daughter of Abraham D. and Eliza J. (Snell) Van Tine, who were natives of Pennsylvania, and pioneers of Wyoming Precinct, to which they came as early as 1857, while Nebraska was a Territory, and where they still live. Mrs. James was reared and educated in this county, and lived at home with her parents until her marriage. Our subject, politically, is a sound Republican, entertaining decided views, although having no desire to hold office.

WILLIAM BISCHOF. Few sojourners in Nebraska City, taking note of its business interests, fail to observe the hardware establishment which is the outgrowth of the enterprise of the subject of this sketch. He came to this place in the fall of 1867, and in partnership with Anton Zimmerer purchased his stock, and they conducted the business together until the spring of 1883. Mr. Bischof then purchased the interest of his partner, and has since operated alone. He recognized as one of the leading men of the place, and has in the main been the architect of his own fortune, building up a good business from a very modest beginning.

The city of Nuremberg, Bavaria, was the native place of our subject, where his birth occurred March 14, 1835. In common with the children of Germany, he was placed in school at an early age, and prosecuted his studies until a youth of seventeen, completing them in the Polytechnic Institute at Nuremberg. He had been a lad bright and thoughtful beyond his years, and determined to become a man among men, and secure for himself and those who might be connected with him by the ties of nature a good home and a competence. Not being satisfied with his prospects upon his native soil, he determined to seek his fortunes on the other side of the Atlantic. Accordingly, in the month of June, 1852, he set sail from the city of Hamburg, and after a safe voyage of six weeks set foot upon American soil in the city of New York. Thence he proceeded southwestward to Atchison County, Mo., by rail to Cincinnati, and thence via the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, which was at that time the most convenient route to that point. He left the steamer at what was then called Woerlens Landing, where a few settlers had collected together, and at a time when the country around bore little evidence of civilization. The now flourishing city of St. Joseph, seventy-five miles south, was then an unpretentious village, but the most important point in that region, and the nearest depot for supplies. Kansas and Nebraska at that time were unorganized Territories, inhabited almost entirely by Indians. To this place our subject had been accompanied by his brother, and they, securing a tract of land, began to till the soil. They were thus occupied a period of four years, but not being satisfied with the results, William laid down the implements of agriculture, and repairing to Sioux City, Iowa, engaged there as a clerk in an establishment of general merchandise. This place also was in its first stages of settlement, having only been laid out as a town the year before, but had already six or eight stores.

After a residence of three years in Sioux City Mr. Bischof, in 1859, having with true German thrift and economy saved what he could of his earnings, concluded to become his own man and start in business for himself. Gathering together his personal effects he set out for the farther West, with the intention of starting a ranch and trading-post combined, which should furnish a place of entertainment for freighters who traveled with teams over the country, and to whom a resort of this description was indispensable.

Mr. Bischof selected his location at Cottonwood Springs, near McPherson, in Western Nebraska, at a period when the nearest house was ninety miles east, and nothing but wild Indians and buffaloes were to be seen perhaps for a period of days together. Game of all kinds was abundant, and Mr. Bischof frequently stood in the door of his house, which was built of cedar logs, and brought down with his rifle a buffalo or deer. Elks and antelopes were plentiful, and troops of Indians frequently cast at the new settler and his establishment glances not altogether friendly.

Mr. Bischof had transported a large stock of merchandise to this point, which he traded mostly to the Indians for buffalo skins and furs. A year later he moved to what was called Fremont's Slough, twenty-five miles further west, and remained there six years. At the expiration of this time, having a generous supply of solid capital, he decided to invest it within the bounds of civilization, and accordingly changed his residence to Nebraska City, where he has since lived. Many a man having had his experience, cut off as he was from intercourse with the more cultivated part of his fellowmen, would have deteriorated mentally, but Mr. Bischof through it all maintained his love of reading, and by the best means at hand kept himself posted upon the current events. Mail facilities during his residence on the frontier were necessarily uncertain, but occasionally he would secure a book, paper or periodical, and of these it is hardly necessary to say he made the best use. Upon coming to Nebraska City he had no difficulty in being admitted to the intelligent circle of men here, where he has done good service in the encouragement of the institutions and enterprises calculated to build up the community socially and financially. He has been President of the Board of Education, and a member of the City Council, was President of the Board of Trade two years, and is now Vice President of the Merchants' National Bank. He cast his first Presidential vote for John C. Fremont, and has since continued an earnest supporter of Republican principles. Socially, he belongs to the I. O. O. F., being a member of Frontier Lodge No. 3, in Nebraska City.

Our subject while living on the ranch was married in Nebraska City, Dec. 28, 1865, to Miss Kiny Zimmerer, a sister of his former partner, A. Zimmerer, and they became the parents of seven children, namely: William, Lulu, Otto, Eta, Arthur, Olga and Lillie. All of these are living and reside at Nebraska City, except William, who is at Seward, Neb. The mother of these children departed this life at her home in Nebraska City, in the summer of 1884. In the sketch of A. Zimmerer, found on another page in this volume, will be noted further mention of this family.

On the 7th of August, 1886, Mr. Bischof contracted a second marriage, with Miss Matilda Belha, a native of Bohemia, and who came to America alone when twenty-two years old. The parents of Mrs. Bischof are now residing in Bohemia. Of this union there is one child, a son, Frederick, born in May, 1887. The family residence is pleasantly situated in the northwestern part of the city, and opens its hospitable doors to many friends. It is tastefully finished and furnished, and forms an abode entirely suitable to the means and tastes of its proprietor. Mr. Bischof in 1870 invested a portion of his surplus capital in a fine brick block at the intersection of Seventh street and Center avenue, which is occupied mostly by his own business.

FREDERICK PAAP. The career of the self-made man is finely illustrated in the subject of this sketch, who began life in America dependent upon his own resources, without means, a stranger in a strange land. He is now one of the leading farmers and land-owners of Berlin Precinct, holding a clear title to 1,360 acres, which he has transformed from a tract of wild prairie to a highly productive condition. The homestead occupies the southwest corner of section 15, and presents one of the most attractive spots in the landscape of that region, being embellished with fine buildings, a commodious and convenient residence, a substantial barn, and the pens and sheds required for the shelter of stock, of which the proprietor makes a specialty. Within, the home is presided over by a lady well educated, refined and hospitable, who has done her share toward the building up of the reputation of the family, and assisted in drawing around them hosts of friends.

Our subject was born in the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg, Aug. 31, 1839, and is the son of Frederick, Sr., and Mary (Scholtz) Paap, who were natives of the same place as their son. The paternal grandfather, Dedloff Paap, was a cooper by trade, but served in the German Army during the war between France and Russia. On the mother's side, Grandfather John Scholtz inclined more to the peaceful pursuits of agriculture, being for a number of years overseer of a farm. Both spent their entire lives in their native Germany.

The father of our subject occupied himself as a gardener near his native town until 1857, then resolved to emigrate to America. He was accompanied by his wife and children in the voyage across the Atlantic, and for two years thereafter lived in Cleveland, Ohio. In the spring of 1859, coming to this county, he purchased eighty acres of land on section 15, in Berlin Precinct, for which he paid the sum of $70, all the money he had in the world. He commenced in true pioneer fashion the development of the farm, and was prospered in his labors, building up a good homestead, and surrounding himself with all the comforts of life. He doubled his original purchase, and there spent his last days, passing away Aug. 4, 1879, when sixty-nine years old. The mother is still living, making her home with her son William, in Berlin Precinct, and is now seventy-eight years of age. Their three children were named respectively: Frederick, our subject; William and Louisa. The two latter are residents of this precinct.

Mr. Paap attended the common schools of his native town until a lad of fourteen years, in the meantime learning the art of gardening of his father. After leaving the day school he pursued his studies at an evening school four years longer. He came with his father to the United States when a youth of eighteen years, in 1857, making the voyage on a sailing-vessel, the "St. John," embarking at Hamburg, and landing at New York six weeks and three days later. In the meantime they encountered several storms, and at one time the ship took fire, but fortunately this was arrested before very much damage was done.

Young Paap landed a stranger in a strange land, not being acquainted with a soul in America, and almost penniless. He made his way to Cleveland, Ohio, where for two years he employed himself at whatever he could find to do, sometimes by the month, and sometimes by the day. In 1859 he resolved to cross the Mississippi, made his way by rail to St. Louis, and thence by steamboat to this county, landing in Nebraska City. He was fortunate in securing employment on a farm, and worked the first year for Dave Martin, receiving at the close in payment for his services $150. This seemed quite a goodly sum, as he had landed in Nebraska with $5.

Our subject the second year of his residence in this county was employed at a hotel in Nebraska City. In 1862 he engaged in freighting to Denver, and later worked in John Bennett's mill near Nebraska City. The years 1863 and 1864 found him freighting again, and later he was employed in a wholesale establishment at Nebraska City. His journeyings across the plains were invested with the usual dangers and hardships of those times, as the Indians looked upon the whites with very unfriendly eyes, and the traveler at no time felt secure either as regarded life or property. Mr. Paap, however, possessed a cool and temperate judgment, which enabled him to keep out of difficulty both with the rough white element of that region and with the Indians. During the early part of 1865 he was one of the company of home guards organized for mutual protection.

The eighty acres of land which our subject occupies as his homestead proper was purchased by him in the spring of 1860, but he did not make any attempt at improvement upon it until after his marriage. Then, fortified by the assistance and sympathy of a good wife, he put up a modest dwelling, and in true pioneer style began the improvement of his property. In breaking the soil the wife frequently drove the oxen while Mr. Paap held the plow. After he had put in his first crop he began setting out fruit and shade trees, and has now fine groves and eleven acres planted with apple trees and choice fruits of the smaller varieties. In adding to his landed area he has paid all the way from $7 to $25 per acre, but for none of it would he to-day take less than $35 per acre. This he has divided into six farms, each being supplied with groves, orchards, houses and barns. For the building of his present fine residence he was obliged to haul all the material from Nebraska City. It is handsomely finished and furnished, and supplied with all modern conveniences.

Mr. Paap began at an early date his operations as a stock-raiser, and has been remarkably successful. He keeps none but good grades of animals, and his horses are especially fine, being draft animals of the Clydesdale stock. Of these he has seventeen head, besides a span of valuable mules. In his stock operations he utilizes 320 acres of his land, over which he has personal supervision, and rents the balance.

The marriage of Frederick Paap and Miss Caroline Sturm was celebrated at the home of the bride in Weeping Water, Feb. 2, 1864. Mrs. Paap was born in what was then the Province of Alsace, France, March 24, 1846, and received a careful education, becoming familiar with both the French and German languages. She came with her father's family to America when a young girl of thirteen years, in the spring of 1859. Her parents were Andrew and Madaline (Understock) Sturm, also natives of Alsace, and the father a prosperous farmer. The mother died in Germany in 1853. The family crossed the Atlantic on the sailing-vessel "Progress," and not long after landing in Nebraska, locating in Cass County, where the father purchased 320 acres of land. Upon this he settled with his family, effected good improvements, and there spent the remainder of his life, his death taking place in April, 1874, at the age of seventy-three years. The children of the paternal household, five in number, were named respectively: Magdalene, Andrew, Sarah, Caroline and Mary. The brother and sister of Mrs. Paap are residents of Nebraska. Her maternal grandfather served in the French Army during the war between France and Germany, in 1812. Grandfather Sturm during his early manhood was the owner of a fine property, but for thirty-six years afterward was bedridden from an incurable disease which consumed the most of it.

To Mr. and Mrs. Paap there have been born five children, namely: Omar, Alexander, Albert, Medora and Lydia, the latter twins. The eldest of these is twenty-four years of age, and the younger ones ten. They are being trained and educated in a manner befitting their station in life. Mr. and Mrs. P. are charter members of the German Methodist Episcopal Church at Berlin, and have always contributed liberally and cheerfully to its support. Mr. P. gave valuable assistance in erecting the church edifice, has been a Trustee for many years, and is Superintendent of the Sunday-school. Politically, he is a fervent supporter of Republican principles, and has done his party good service in this county, frequently being sent as a delegate to the State and County Conventions. He has also served on the Grand and Petit Juries. He is a man who keeps himself posted upon current events, one with whom it is interesting and profitable to converse.

NICHOLAS RUSH. Among the prominent citizens of South Branch, and one whose character is such as to commend itself to all, a successful farmer, and an army veteran, is the gentleman whose life story is herein presented in succinct form. He is the son of Antonius and Augusta Rush, and now makes his home on section 28, where he operates successfully along the line of general farming and stock-raising, giving chief attention to the former, eighty acres of fine agricultural land.

The father of our subject was born in Naples, Italy, and followed farming. His mother was born at Naples, and married under the sunny skies of that Southern European kingdom. They became the parents of six children, viz: Joseph, Pasco, Rosa, Caroline, Celestia and Nicholas. The latter was born in Naples on the 8th of May, 1837. His early life was spent in Italy. He continued upon the farm of his father until he was eighteen years of age. Then, in 1855, he went to France, where he studied as a musician, and from there to England in the practice of his chosen profession. In 1861, again taking his journey, he came to "the land of the free," landing in New York City. He traveled at first chiefly through the Southern States, and then went to Illinois.

Although but so recently come to the country and almost before he was fully able to grasp the meaning of the new institutions of the New World, or thoroughly to imbibe the principles of its independence, Mr. Rush saw that country in the throes of a civil war, and enlisted in the Union Corps, serving in Company S, 2d Illinois Artillery. He was mustered in at Springfield in June, 1864. He did not come out of the struggles unscathed. Injuries were first received from being thrown off his horse, which stunned him and left some injury of the head that has rendered him permanently deaf. This the thundering cannon so affected as to almost entirely destroy the hearing, and he must ever remain in the stillness and comparative solitude that such a condition necessitates. He was mustered out at Chicago in August, 1865, and continued in Illinois until 1866, when he came west to this county.

Life in the West has brightened for our subject, both in his farm and home, for upon coming he entered his present property of 160 acres, improved it, made it his own, and has taken good care of it from that time, until now it is one of the best cultivated farms in the district. His home has been made home to him in Nebraska, for here he was united in wedlock; first in Nebraska City, in the year 1873, to Miss Anna Wood, who died in 1875, aged twenty-five years. The second occasion occurred in Johnson County on the 17th of March, 1878. The lady of his choice was Miss Jane Powell, the daughter of Stephen and Isabella (Mapps) Powell, who were natives respectively of New York and Pennsylvania. They came to Johnson County in 1857. They were among the pioneers and founders of the county. Mr. Powell died in 1863, aged forty-seven years, and the mother is still living. They are the parents of seven children—William, Angeline, Jane, Thomas, John, Joseph and Elizabeth.

The wife of our subject was born in Joliet, Ill., Feb. 2, 1850. She was seven years of age when she came with her parents to this State, and has seen perhaps more than usually falls to the lot of man or woman in these days of advanced civilization in the West, of real frontier life. To Mr. and Mrs. Rush there have been given seven children, and their names are recorded as Mary M., Celestia E., Ida Sybel, Albert Wesley, Rosa A, Edith Pearl and Willis Logan.

Mr. Nicholas Rush is one of the substantial supporters and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Rockford, and one of the prime movers in its organization. His wife also is with him in this relation. She is a lady of education and cultivation, and is one who has found the art of making home something more than a mere stopping-place; a place to be desired, looked for and prized. The political sentiments of our subject are strictly harmonious with those of the Republican party, of which he has always been a firm friend.

E CLARENCE REED, of Syracuse Precinct, stands prominent among its prosperous farmers and stock-raisers, and operates one of the best farms in this section of country, pleasantly located on section 25. He came to Nebraska in the spring of 1865, where he completed the rudiments of an excellent education, and later entered the State University at Lincoln. Completing his course in this institution he was employed two winters thereafter as a teacher, but aside from this has been most of his life engaged in farming pursuits. In his labors as a tiller of the soil he has met with more than ordinary success, having secured one of the most comfortable of modern homes, and a competency for his old age.

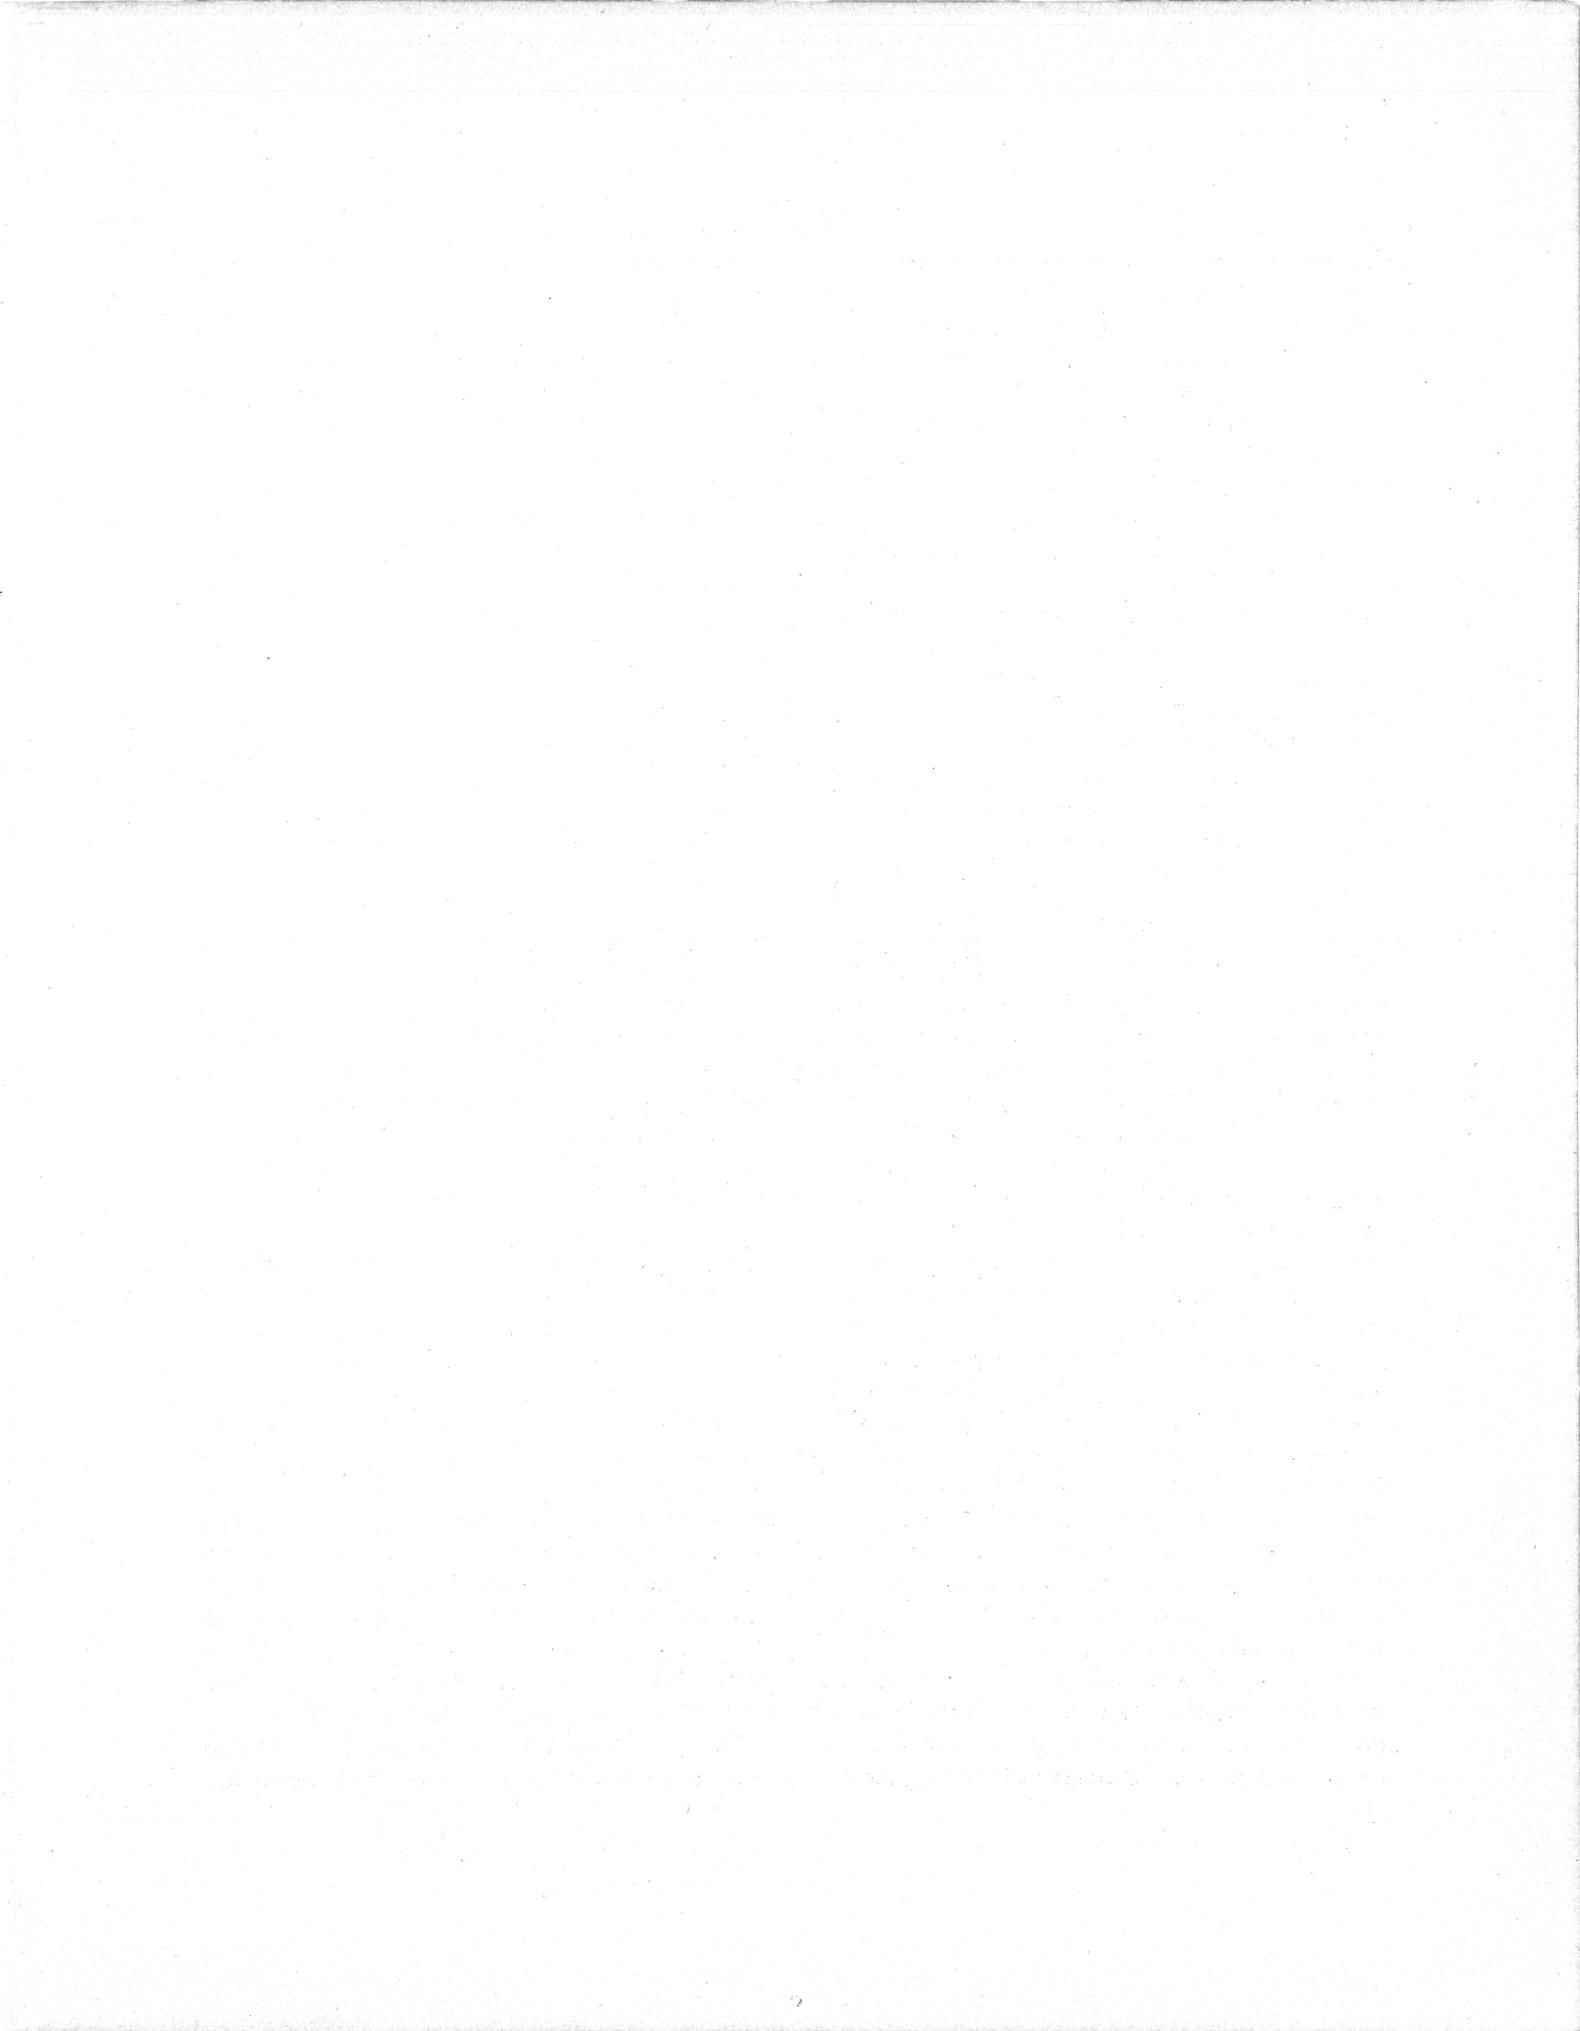

The main points in the family history of our subjects are substantially as follows: His father, Cyrus Reed, was born in the State of Pennsylvania, and was the son of an old Pennsylvania family, the parents of which spent their entire lives upon their native soil. Cyrus Reed grew to manhood in his native county, where he became familiar with the various employments of the farm, and remained a member of the parental household until attaining his majority. His business career began as a live-stock dealer, buying cattle in Illinois, and driving them to the Eastern markets before the days of railroads. He was highly successful, and became the owner of several valuable farms in Pickaway County, Ohio, which were located near the now important town of Circleville. During the war he lost considerable property.

In the spring of 1865 the father of our subject sold a portion of his Ohio property, and coming to Nebraska purchased 1,600 acres of land in Otoe County, nearly all of which was raw prairie. Upon this the family settled in a small house, and the father, imbuing a great admiration for the West, finally disposed of all his property in the Buckeye State, and turned his attention to stock-raising on his land in this county. He died at his home in McWilliams Precinct, Dec. 4, 1870, at the age of fifty-two years. He was a Republican in politics, and as a son of one of the earliest settlers in Pickaway County, Ohio, saw much of pioneer life, enduring many of its hardships and privations. He for a time engaged in general merchandising at Nebraska City, but his preferences were for farming and stock-raising.

Mrs. Anna (Lowe) Reed, the mother of our subject, was born in Ulster County, N. Y., and is the daughter of Jacob and Susan Lowe, who migrated to Pickaway County, Ohio, during the period of its early settlement. There Mr. Lowe carried on farming until his death. Mrs. Reed afterward made the journey from Ohio to Nebraska in a buggy when she was over sixty years old. She was married to Mr. Reed in 1855, and after coming to this county became the wife of Edwin Parsons, and is now living on a farm in Delaware Precinct. Of her first marriage there were born five children, namely: E. Clarence, our subject; Harry H., Josiah E., Cyrus A. and John W. All of these are living, and residents of Nebraska and Colorado respectively.

Our subject was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, July 29, 1857, and resided under the parental roof until reaching manhood. A few months after reaching his twenty-second year he was married, Dec. 25, 1879, to Miss Leona Dunbar, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride in Dunbar. Mrs. Reed was born Nov. 7, 1860, in Dunbar, and is the daughter of John and Anna (Watson) Dunbar, who were natives of Canada, and are now in Nebraska. They came to this county about 1856, settling in Delaware Precinct. Here Mrs. Reed was reared and educated, taking kindly to her books, and developed into a teacher, which profession she followed some time before her marriage and one term afterward. Mrs. Reed received her education at the Peru Normal School. Of her union with our subject there have been born two children: Anna Lavina, May 19, 1883, and Clarence Herbert, Feb. 17, 1887.

Chas. W. Sherfey

Mrs. Reed is a very estimable lady, and a member of the Seventh-Day Advent Church. Mr. Reed, politically, supports the principles of the Republican party, but is in favor of prohibition. He is well known throughout the county for his enterprise, being one of its most extensive farmers and stock-raisers, handling large numbers of cattle and hogs, and keeping good horses, these latter mostly for his own use.

PROF. CHARLES W. SHERFEY has been identified with the literary and industrial interests of Nebraska City from its infancy. He is at present engaged in horticultural pursuits, raising flowers, small fruits, and vegetables, and has the best appointed greenhouse in Otoe County. He is a native of Maryland, born July 6, 1829, a son of Solomon and Catherine (McNeil) Sherfey, natives respectively of Gettysburg, Pa., and of Loudoun County, Va. Jacob Sherfey, the grandfather of our subject, lived near Gettysburg, but it is not known on which side of the State line he was born. His father, Casper Sherfey, was born about the year 1735, in Saxe Coburg Gotha, Germany, sixty miles northwest of the city of Hanover. At the age of sixteen years he came to America, and at the age of twenty-three years, 1758, he married Magdalena Deardorff, a German lady, who was born in 1738. They resided in Frederick County, Md. To them were born fifteen children, six of whom died in childhood. The nine surviving children were five sons and four daughters. Their sons were: John, who removed to Jonesboro, Washington Co., Tenn.; Abraham, removed to Virginia; Benjamin, removed to Augusta County, Va.; Jacob lived at Gettysburg, Pa.; Joshua lived in Frederick County, Md., died in Parke County, Ind. Their daughters were: Rebecca, who married Joseph Carey; Mary, who married Nicholas Oustatt; Catherine, who married John Schriver; Elizabeth, who married Jacob Carroll, Casper's son; Jacob, married Catherine Bosserman, in 1794. He was born in Frederick County, Md., March 4, 1769, and died Aug. 5, 1842. His wife was born in York County, Pa., Aug. 12, 1773, and died Aug. 4, 1844. To them were born eleven children, two of whom died in childhood, namely, Maria, aged two years, and Daniel aged four. Eight sons and one daughter grew to mature years. David was born Jan. 13, 1797, died March 31, 1861; Solomon, born Jan. 26, 1799, married Feb. 6, 1827, died May 5, 1876. Next was Jacob. John was born Jan. 23, 1805, married March 21, 1837, died Feb. 12, 1871; Abram, born Aug. 10, 1807; Samuel, Jan. 17, 1810, married Dec. 29, 1836; Joseph, born June 30, 1812, married Feb. 6, 1840, died Oct. 4, 1850. Simeon, born Feb. 7, 1814, married March 3, 1836, died Oct. 3, 1850. Hannah Sherfey Farnsworth, born Dec. 2, 1817, married Sept. 29, 1848.

The father of our subject was reared in Pennsylvania, and in 1827 he went to Maryland and lived there until 1854. He married a Virginia lady, a daughter of John McNeil, who was, it is thought, born in Maryland, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His father, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Ireland and came to America when a young man with an older brother. His brother soon started to return to his native land, and was never heard from afterward. Mr. McNeil settled in this country permanently, married, and it is supposed, spent his last years in Perryville, Vermillion Co., Ind. The maternal grandfather of our subject married in Virginia, moved from there to Maryland, and thence to Vermillion County, Ind., in about 1835. He was numbered among the pioneers of that county, where he improved a farm and spent the remainder of his life. Mr. Sherfey removed from Maryland to Tippecanoe County, Ind., accompanied by his wife and four children, the removal being made with the old-fashioned covered wagon drawn by a pair of horses. They took with them their household goods, and as their route lay through a sparsely settled country, they often camped by the wayside. Mr. Sherfey became a pioneer of Tippecanoe County, engaging in the mercantile business there, and he also managed a flouring-mill. In the fall of 1837 he sold out there and moved to Burlington, Iowa. At that time Iowa formed a part of the Territory of Wisconsin, and during the winter of 1837-38 the Territorial Legislature met in Burlington. There were then but few white inhabitants in the Territory, and the greater part of the land was still owned by the Indians. He lived to see it one of the most populous and wealthy States in the Union, and as one of its pioneers he was instrumental in bringing about the great change. He established himself in the mercantile business, and he got his goods either from Cincinnati or St. Louis, Chicago then being a small, unimportant town, with no communication whatever with the West, except overland by teams. Mr. Sherfey resided in and near Burlington until his death in 1876, when that town lost one of its most honored pioneers, one who had done much to build up its mercantile interests. He was a man of marked intelligence, strict integrity, and much capability. His wife, a most estimable lady, died at the home of our subject in Nebraska City, Aug. 6, 1887, at the age of eighty-one. There were four children born to this worthy couple, all of whom are living, namely: Caroline A., widow of E. D. Rand, lives in Burlington, Iowa; Charles W.; John M., lives in Burlington; William E. lives in Council Grove, Kan.

Charles W. Sherfey was in his fifth year when he accompanied his parents to Indiana, and he was eight years old when the family moved to Burlington, Iowa. He there attended the early schools and gained the preliminaries of a liberal education. When he was twenty years old he went to Green Castle, Ind., to enroll his name among the students of Asbury University (now DePauw University), and was graduated from there with the first honors in the class of '54. He decided to fit himself for the legal profession, and with that end in view he entered the law department of Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass. After completing his course there in 1856, he returned to Burlington, and in 1857 came to the Territory of Nebraska, bringing with him a printing-press, and locating in Platts-mouth, he established the Platte Valley Times, and published that paper quite successfully for one year. Then came the great financial crisis, which made it very hard to run a paper with any profit in that city, so he came to Nebraska City, where he soon began the publication of a paper called The People's Press, the forerunner of the Nebraska Press of the present day. A short time before the office was burned in 1860, he had severed his connection with the paper, and abandoning the editorial profession, had adopted that of teacher, for which action he may be considered a public benefactor, as in those early days of the settlement of the State it was very difficult to get instructors for the schools who were themselves well educated. He taught in Nebraska City almost continuously until 1879, thus incalculably raising the standard of education here, and giving this community the benefit of his superior literary attainments for nearly twenty years. In 1863 Mr. Sherfey bought six lots in the northern part of the city and built a small frame house, into which he removed with his wife. He has since bought other lots and now owns forty-four in various parts of the city, and in 1877 he erected his present residence, a commodious, comfortable frame house, very pleasantly located on a rise of ground commanding a view of the city.

Prof. Sherfey was married in 1862 to Miss Irene, daughter of Wesley and Mary A. (Boaton) Spurlock, of whom see sketch. Mrs. Sherfey was born in Iowa, in February, 1843. The pleasant wedded life of our subject and his amiable wife has been blessed by the birth of four children; the eldest, Carrie A., died when seven and one-half years old; Charles E., Irene Belle, Eulalia. Mr. and Mrs. Sherfey are valued members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and whenever opportunity offers they are among the first to extend a helping hand to the needy or to sympathize with the sorrowing. Mr. Sherfey is an uncompromising Republican in his political views.

The portrait of Prof. Sherfey appears in connection with this personal sketch.

JONAS SUGDEN. Among the pioneers of 1866 who resolved upon the experiment of invading the Territory of Nebraska, was the subject of this sketch, who landed in Nebraska City in the winter of that year. The early years of his life were spent as a machinist, during which he became an expert as a blacksmith and general mechanic, but upon coming to the West he necessarily changed his occupation, taking up the pursuits of agriculture. For a time, however, before securing a tract of land, he followed freighting across the plains, in the meantime homesteading the northwest quarter of section 33, Syracuse Precinct, which is included in his present homestead.

Our subject, when taking possession of his property, fashioned a dug-out in which to shelter himself and family, and gradually began making improvements about him, although he was obliged to employ himself elsewhere in order to obtain the wherewithal for the sustenance of himself and family. As time passed on he found himself making headway, and the dug-out soon gave place to a comfortable frame residence, which later was flanked by a barn and the other out-buildings necessary to his comfort and convenience. He has steadily progressed since that time, and is now numbered among the well-to-do farmers of this region, who have been the architects of their own fortunes, and thus imbibed that spirit of self-reliance which enabled them to hew their pathway to success.

The subject of this sketch was born in Yorkshire, England, March 7, 1834, and is the son of William and Elizabeth (Sugden) Sugden, who, however, bore no relationship to each other before their marriage. The father was a farmer all his life, and the parents are still living, continuing residents upon their native soil. They are naturally well advanced in years, and come of a long-lived race. All of their children, ten in number, are also living and all in England, with the exception of our subject and one brother, who is a resident of Chase County, this State. The others were named respectively: John, Elizabeth, Mary, Robert, William, Ann, Judith and Paul.

Jonas Sugden, when a lad of twelve years, commenced his apprenticeship as a machinist in his native town of Kiefley, at which he served nearly five years, when the firm by whom he was employed went out of business. He then commenced working as a journeyman in Bradford and Birmingham, but about 1853 or 1854, when a young man grown, he sailed for America in company with his brother John. After landing in New York City they proceeded northwestward to Minnesota, but later returned southeastward to Pennsylvania, where our subject followed his trade for a time at Erie. Later he was employed at his trade in the city of Buffalo.

During the progress of the late Civil War Mr. Sugden was in the employ of the Pittsburgh & Erie Railroad Company, and identified himself with the Machinist and Blacksmith Union Brotherhood. On coming to Nebraska, in 1866, he followed freighting, as we have already stated. He had been married while a resident of Canada, in 1862, to Miss Jessie Bulchart, who is a native of Dundee, Scotland, and the daughter of Andrew and Jessie Bulchart, who spent their lives in Canada. Mrs. Sugden came to America with her parents when eleven years old, locating in Upper Canada, where she was married. Of this union there have been born ten children, who were named: Elizabeth, William, Jessie, Judith, Daisy, Rudolph, Thomas, Mary, John and Paul. Elizabeth became the wife of William H. Hill, and died in Chase County, this State, in 1886; Jessie died when nineteen years old.

Our subject and his wife have proprietorship in five farms in this county, comprising altogether 720 acres of land, besides a tree claim in Colorado. Mr. S. for many years devoted his attention chiefly to stock raising, buying, feeding and shipping. The farm residence is convenient and substantial, flanked by a good orchard covering an area of twenty acres, and including all the choice fruit trees which flourish upon the soil of Nebraska. In 1878 he established himself in the harness business at Syracuse, where he operated successfully for a period of fourteen years. He crossed the Mississippi poor in purse, even obliged to borrow money to get his family to their destination. His possessions to-day are the result of his own resolute industry. He has made it a point to live within his income, has been prompt in meeting his obligations, and thus gained for himself a solid foundation financially and in the opinion of his fellowmen. He was one of the pioneers of his neighborhood. His settlement here was rather the result of accident than intention, as he had started for California. In passing through Nebraska City he saw on exhibition specimens of potatoes, corn and other products grown in this State, and being informed that he could secure a homestead, and in due time produce the same, determined at once to make settlement. He has never repented of his decision, and declares that in all his travels he has found no section of country equal to Nebraska. A pleasant, genial and companionable man, he has made hosts of friends wherever it has been his lot to dwell, and none have been warmer or more sincere than those west of the Mississippi.

Mr. Sugden for a number of years was a supporter of Republican principles. During the campaign of 1884 he felt that he would be justified in changing his allegiance, and accordingly wheeled over into the ranks of the Democracy. He, however, meddles with public affairs very little, preferring to give his time and attention to his farming interests.

D J. SCHOMERUS is one of the leading boot and shoe dealers in Nebraska City. He has a commodious, well-appointed store in the Grand Pacific Block, carries a large and well-selected stock, and does an extensive business. He was born May 28, 1831, in Hanover, Germany, and is a son of Christian and Famkam Schomerus, both natives of Hanover. The father was a grocer, and spent his entire life in his native land, dying when but fifty years of age. The mother is now spending her declining years with our subject, and notwithstanding that she is in her ninety-seventh year, she is strong and vigorous, both physically and mentally. There were eight children born to her and her husband, seven of whom grew to maturity: John Herman, Henry M., John Conrad, Christian A., Johanna M., our subject and Fredericka. Henry died in Germany, but the remaining members of the family came to America. Herman located in St. Louis and died there; the others settled in Nebraska City. Johanna was first married to George Strechan; her second husband was Jacob Atkin, who is still living; she died in this city. Fredericka married Frederick Zuck, and lives in Otoe County.

The subject of this sketch obtained a good education in the schools of his native land, which he attended until he was sixteen years old. He then learned the trade of cotton weaver, and was engaged at that in the old country until 1858, when he came to America, where he hoped to be able to earn more money in payment for his labors, and so be able to establish a comfortable home. He landed at New Orleans, and thence proceeded by a steamer up the Mississippi River to St. Louis. He disembarked in that city a stranger in a strange land, without money and without friends, and laboring also under the further disadvantage of being unable to understand the language of the people. But with all these discouragements the heart of the sturdy young man beat high with hope and a firm resolve to make life a success in this to him unknown country. He was endowed with plenty of strength and muscle, and knew well how to use them, so that he did not have great difficulty in securing work, finding employment in Columbia, Ill., with a farmer, receiving as payment the sum of $9 a month and board. His next place of employment was at Alton, Ill., for a few weeks. He then took a job of splitting rails, and as this was entirely new work for him, he could only earn his board that winter. In the spring of 1859 he came to Nebraska City, and shortly after hired out to a German farmer who lived twelve miles southwest of the city, and he worked for that man until the fall of the year, for $12.50 a month. Wishing to become more conversant with the English language, he engaged with an American that fall, for $9 a month, and worked with him that winter. In the spring of 1860 he crossed the plains to Pike's Peak with ox-teams, and there he secured work in a sawmill until fall, at $25 a month and board. In the fall he returned to Omaha, and then came to Nebraska City to work on a farm in this vicinity. In the spring of 1861 he came to Nebraska City, and was employed in a livery stable for a few months prior to his enlistment in the 2d Nebraska Cavalry, with which regiment he went to the frontier, and did gallant service in suppressing the Indian outbreak. He was present at the battle of Whitstone Hill, and continued in the army until the fall of 1863, when he was honorably discharged with his regiment. He was then employed in a restaurant and confectionery store until the spring of 1864. He then went to St. Louis, where he hoped to obtain more profitable work, but being disappointed in that, he enlisted in Company I, 41st Missouri Infantry, and from that time did garrison duty until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged with his regiment, and once again came to Nebraska City. While he was in the army he had been prudent and economical, and had wisely saved his earnings, so that on his return here he had enough to buy a good breaking team, consisting of five yokes of oxen, and he then engaged in the profitable work of breaking prairie at $4 an acre. He followed that business two seasons, but in the fall of the year 1866 he abandoned that to form a partnership with George Burtz, in opening a confectionery store. In 1867 Mr. Schomerus left his partner in charge of their business, and went back to his old home in Germany, in very much more prosperous circumstances than when he left there ten years before. Having had a very pleasant visit among his old friends, he returned to his adopted country in the fall of that year, accompanied by his betrothed and a brother and his family. In the following year he bought his partner's interest in the business, which they had been conducting together, and carried it on alone for a few years. He then sold out and bought a farm nine miles northwest of the city. He did not move onto his farm, however, but continued his residence in the city, and in 1877 formed a partnership with John H. Minke, to engage in the boot and shoe trade. They were associated together for about five years, and then divided the stock, our subject retaining the old stand, and he is still carrying on a flourishing business.

Mr. Schomerus has been twice married. His first marriage, which took place in New York City in 1867, was to Miss M. E. Wilkan, also a native of Hanover. After a pleasant married life of ten years, she died Oct. 14, 1877. Mr. Schomerus was married to his present estimable wife, formerly Miss Anna Hobbe, of Oldenburg, Germany, Sept. 19, 1878. They are respected members of the Lutheran Church, and are foremost in its good works. They are kind and charitable toward the poor and unfortunate, who find in them true friends in the hour of need. Mr. Schomerus is a loyal citizen, as was proved by his course during the war and by his conduct since. He was a Republican until 1872, when he went with the liberal party, and he now affiliates with the Democrats.

— — — — —

FRANK C. RICHARDS, junior member of the firm of Dundas & Richards, publishers of the Talmage Tribune, conducts with his partner one of the best local papers in this county, and a journal which is duly valued by the people. It is a five-column folio, issued every Friday, and fulfills in a praiseworthy manner the object for which it is intended, as a dispenser of local news. It was established in March, 1882, under the editorial management of other parties, later became the property of the Talmage Publishing Company, and came under its present management in July, 1888. Mr. Richards has done his full share in placing it upon a sound basis, financially, and it is in the enjoyment of a healthy and steadily increasing circulation.

Mr. Richards began life in Grant County, Wis., Nov. 13, 1861, the home of his parents at that time being in the vicinity of Georgetown. The latter were John S. and Louisa (Daigh) Richards, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Illinois. They became residents of the Badger State at an early period in their lives, and there their marriage took place. The father engaged in farming, and after the birth of a part of their family the parents removed to Christian County, Ill., locating near Grove City, where they built up a good homestead and lived until coming to Nebraska in 1861.

The parents of our subject after crossing the Mississippi located first in Nemaha County, this State, and in the fall removed to a farm in Douglas Precinct, that county, where they still live. John Richards is a man of note in his community, a good citizen, and politically, a solid Republican. He is about sixty-three years of age. The mother, a most estimable lady, is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Their family includes eight children, all of whom are living, and are residents of Nebraska.

The paternal grandfather of our subject, also John Richards by name, was a farmer in the Old Dominion. He became imbued with the spirit of emigration, and some time in the forties left Virginia with his family and lived for a time in Ohio. Later he removed across the Mississippi to Iowa, and finally to Grant County, Wis., where he spent his last days, yielding up his life at a ripe old age. He had married in early manhood Miss Mary A. Cordell, who died in Greene County, Iowa, about 1884, at the home of her daughter, when about eighty-four years old. These excellent old people, who had been careful and conscientious in all their dealings with their fellowmen, were members for a long period of the Methodist Church.

On his mother's side the grandfather of our subject was John Daigh, a Virginian by birth and a farmer by occupation. He emigrated to Ohio during its pioneer days when a single man, and there married Miss Sarah Porter. Later they came west to Illinois, and settled among the earliest pioneers of Sangamon County, whence they removed to Christian County. There they resided until the discovery of the lead mines at Galena. Grandfather Daigh, however, with a desire to see something more of the world, again changed his residence, this time to Grant County, Wis., and located in the vicinity of Jamestown, about eighteen miles north of Galena, Ill. In 1867, however, he moved back with his family to Christian County, and in 1882, when quite aged, he and his estimable wife crossed the Mississippi into Nemaha County, this State, locating in Douglas Precinct, where his death took place Jan. 27, 1886, at the age of seventy-eight years. As the result of a temperate life and good habits he continued hale and hearty until the final summons came. Grandmother Daigh survived her husband but a few months, her death taking place in August following, when she was sixty-nine years old. She was a member of the Methodist Church.

Frank C. Richards, our subject, continued a member of the parental household until approaching manhood, pursuing his studies first in the common schools of Grove City, Ill. Later he became a student of the Normal School at Valparaiso, Ind. He came to Nebraska with his parents, and on the 4th of August, 1887, was married, in Douglas Precinct, Nemaha County, to Miss Harriet E. Bishop. This lady was born near Wyoming, this county, April 12, 1864, and is the daughter of Rev. James and Mary A. Bishop, the former of whom was a native of Virginia, and died at his home in Glen Rock in 1884, when past eighty years of age. Mrs. Bishop is still living, and makes her home on her farm at Glen Rock, being now about sixty years old.

Mrs. Richards removed with her parents from Otoe to Nemaha County when a little child, and was educated in the public schools. She is a cultivated and intelligent lady, and takes great interest in State and National affairs, coinciding with her husband in his Republican principles. Mr. Richards spent his boyhood and youth under the parental roof, and soon after leaving school began teaching in Douglas Precinct, Nemaha County. Later he embarked in the grain trade at Glen Rock, Neb., where he was occupied successfully a period of three years in the interests of the firm of Spear & Hulburd. Later he resumed teaching, and finally became Principal of the Johnson schools, of which he had charge two years. He took a warm interest in the educational affairs of that locality, and by the exercise of great perseverance succeeded in establishing the Teachers' Association and Institute. He was urged to accept the Presidency of this, but declined in favor of Prof. Charles Fordyce, an old and experienced teacher of many years' standing.

Mr. Richards, in 1884, identified himself with the Masonic fraternity, and is a charter member of Blue Lodge No. 124, of Auburn, also a member of the I. O. O. F. of that place, being connected with Mayflower Lodge No. 76. He has filled the various offices of the order and takes a warm interest in its success. He is rapidly becoming identified with the most important interests of Talmage, where he is recognized as a capable and efficient journalist, as well as a valued member of society.

CHARLES G. FISCHER is one of the worthy representatives of the German-American citizens of Nebraska City. He was born on the 21st of August, 1843, in Saxony, Germany, which was the native place of his father, Frederick Fischer, and also indeed of his family so far as it can be traced. His grandfather, Nicholas Fischer, was a small but successful farmer there, while the father of our subject learned and followed the trade of slate-roofing, and later also learned the trade of a tailor. In 1856, accompanied by his wife and five children, he came to America, by way of Hamburg to Hull, England, across that country by rail to Liverpool, and thence by steamer to New York. Leaving that city the little family of Mr. Fischer went to Cincinnati, where he followed tailoring until his death from cholera in 1866. His wife, whose maiden name was Caroline Lehmann, who was, we need hardly add, a native of Saxony, bore bravely the trouble that fell upon her household, and did her best to meet the case. She is still living in Cincinnati. Their family included eleven children, only five of whom, however, now survive. These are Mollie, Charles G., Mary, Clara and Otto.

The subject of our sketch was thirteen years of age when he came with his parents to this country. He had attended the schools of the Fatherland, and also joined the classes of the public schools of Cincinnati, continuing for about two years, when he went to learn the trade of a machinist in the shops of the Hamilton & Dayton Railroad. He remained there for four years and then worked in various shops until 1861.

On the 13th of June, 1861, the subject of our sketch enlisted in Company C, 28th Ohio Infantry, and continued in the service until 1863. Among the many engagements in which he took part were those of Fredericksburg, Harper's Ferry, on the Gallier River, Va., where he was wounded by a piece of a bursting shell, injuring him in the right arm, thus disabling him from further service. He was therefore honorably discharged in October, 1863, and returned to Cincinnati.

Our subject returned to his old trade and continued to follow it in Ohio until 1869, when he came to Nebraska City and engaged in a furniture store, where he worked until the 27th of July, 1871, when he entered into business for himself, continuing until July, 1875, when his business was destroyed by fire, then going to Colorado. After four months in the mountains he returned to Nebraska City, where he was shortly afterward appointed engineer of the City Fire Department, which he held for one year and a half.

In 1880 our subject opened his meat-market on Central avenue, which is still his place of business and the center of quite an extensive trade. He is well respected in the community, both as a citizen and business man. He is a worthy member of the William Baumer Post No. 24, G. A. R., and also the Schiller Lodge No. 23, K. of P., and Frontier Lodge No. 3, I. O. O. F.

On the 14th of April, 1864, Mr. Fischer was united in marriage with Barbara Swan, who was born in Bohemia, and came to America with her parents when about six months old. They have become the parents of five children, who bear the following names: Edward, Hart, Robert, Willie and Lulu.

FREDERICK W. SCHROEDER, who has become widely known as the proprietor of the Short System Roller Mill of Syracuse, which he purchased in 1887, is a native of Germany, and was born on the 3d of September, 1835. It was his misfortune to be left an orphan quite early in life. When seventeen years of age he commenced working in a mill, at which occupation he continued, employed for various persons until 1869, acquiring in the meantime the trade of a millwright.

Our subject emigrated to the United States in 1869, landing at New York, and proceeded at once to make his way as rapidly as possible toward the West, finally stopping in Nebraska City. He soon obtained work in a mill at Peru, and although, perhaps, in some few minor details the labor connected therewith was different from that to which he had been accustomed in his native country, he proved himself an able workman. The following year he took a homestead in Buda Precinct, Lancaster County, this State, which he proved up, and later ran a mill in Nebraska City for two years. When the mill was burned, at the end of that period, our subject rebuilt and continued business as before. In 1878 he built a mill at Roca, in Lancaster County. This mill had a capacity of forty barrels per diem. It was destroyed by fire on the 6th of July, 1887. The company in which the property was insured failed, and Mr. Schroeder consequently did not obtain the $3,000 which his policy called for.

The subject of our sketch finally came to Syracuse and purchased his present property, which was then idle and out of repair. He built a dam and has put the whole equipment into splendid working order, expending upon it $4,000. The mill manufactures some of the finest flour of the State, and has a capacity of thirty-five barrels daily. Mr. Schroeder is building up a lucrative patronage, and his customers appreciate his high sense of honor and general business integrity.

The interesting event of the marriage of our subject was celebrated on the 31st of July, 1868, a short time before he came to this country. The maiden name of the lady who then linked her life and interests with his was Anna Dorethea Damka. They became the parents of three sons: Fred W. C., Gustave H. and Fred William, all of whom, by a kindly Providence, are still spared to the father. Mrs. Schroeder departed this life on the 9th of January, 1887, sincerely mourned by her family and friends as one who had been in the highest degree faithful to the responsibilities and duties of life, a true wife and mother.

The subject of our sketch is a devout member and able supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is deeply interested in every department of its work. In politics he is a Prohibitionist, and in all points connected with the various issues at stake endeavors to advance the interests of his party.

The view of the homestead and mill property of Mr. Schroeder will be found on another page. The whole is very neat, pleasant and tasteful—a goodly sight to the eye. It not only adds beauty to the landscape, but value to that section of country.

JOHN O. FARMER is one of the most promising, enterprising and practical young farmers and stock-raisers of South Branch Precinct, and operates 160 acres of splendidly improved land on section 24. He is the son of Elias and Mary N. (Wolf) Farmer, who were natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Ohio. They were married in the latter State, and there continued to make their home until the husband and father died in the year 1862, after a severe sickness, the cause of death being black erysipelas. After this event the mother of our subject was married to Mr. William DeVolt, a gentleman of French family, residing at present in South Branch. Of her union with Mr. Farmer two children were born, our subject and Nathan M. After her marriage with Mr. DeVolt she gave birth to two other children—Elmer E. and Eva E.

The place of the nativity of our subject is Knox County, Ohio, the date of that interesting event Feb. 6, 1860. His father died when he was about two years of age, and he continued to live with his mother until he was ten years of age, and then started in life for himself. He began by working out upon a farm, by which he managed to support himself, and being allowed the privilege of attending school during winter, which he did until he was sixteen years of age, he succeeded in obtaining that indispensability of a successful life, a good practical education.

Mr. Farmer came to Nebraska when eighteen years of age, settling first in Omaha in 1878, and later in Nebraska City, and thence coming out to his present place, which was purchased by the two brothers; later he bought out his brother, and since that time continued it alone. He has made all the improvements on the place; the grove he set out carefully, the hedges and fences he has planted and trimmed, stretched and kept. The orchard he has been careful to select and put out and tend, the house and buildings are also largely his own work. These are substantial, commodious and convenient. The home is in point of fact a bright, cheery place, that can be appreciated no less by the visitor, to whom a cordial hospitality is always shown, than by the owner of the property.

On the 16th of October, 1884, at Tecumseh, Mr. Farmer and Emma A., daughter of Frederick and Caroline (Miers) Watermerer, were united in wedlock with happiest results. They are the parents of two children: Lola M., born Aug. 13, 1885, and Rosa E., Nov. 10, 1887. The parents of Mrs. Farmer were born in Germany, and upon coming to the United States settled first in Wisconsin, and later in Illinois. Her father was a professor of German and English, and was teaching in Cairo, Ill., when he died in 1874; her mother, who is still living and has reached the advanced age of sixty-seven years, makes her home with our subject. She is the mother of two children: Emil T., and Emma A., the wife of our subject, who was born on the 10th of March, 1862, at the Wisconsin home.

The subject of our sketch has served as Constable, and is also now the School Moderator of this district. Politically, he is Democratic, and takes a lively interest in politics. With his wife, he attends the Baptist Church, and in that, as in every other relation in life, both are held in much esteem. There is evidently a future before Mr. Farmer that will be worthy of his character, power and energy.

PETER SCHARP. Among the intelligent and thrifty German farmers of Wyoming Precinct none held a higher position among their fellow-citizens than the subject of this sketch, who departed this life after a long and painful illness, on the 17th of March, 1888. A native of Holstein, Germany, he was born Jan. 24, 1841, and emigrated to America with his parents in 1856. The latter were Timm and Mattie Scharp, who were also of German birth and parentage, and whose family consisted of six children. Soon after setting foot upon American soil they made their way directly to the West, settling in Wyoming Precinct, this county, where their son Peter grew to manhood and received a common-school education. The death of the father occurred about 1883. He was accidentally killed, having been thrown from a wagon which was struck by a runaway team. Mr. Scharp was hurled with much violence to the ground, and instantly expired. The mother is still living on the home farm with her son Timm.

Upon reaching manhood our subject started out for himself, and managed to secure 160 acres of land on section 21, upon which there had been no attempt at improvement. He began in earnest the cultivation of the soil, but feeling the need of a wife and helpmate was in due time united in marriage with Miss Johanna Guencel, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride in Wyoming Precinct, Oct. 29, 1868. The young people commenced the journey of life together in a manner suitable to their means and station, and labored with one mutual purpose in the building up of a home and the development of a farm. Their first dwelling was a small frame house, which, in 1883, was replaced by the present fine residence.

Mrs. Scharp was born in Gorlitz, Prussia, on the 14th of August, 1840, and is the daughter of Carl and Christiana (Frenzel) Guencel, who were natives of the same, and of pure German ancestry. They were reared and married in their native Province, the father in the meantime serving three years in the German Army. Later he established himself upon a farm, and spent his entire life upon his native soil, his death occurring in 1874, when he was sixty-five years old. Both parents were reared in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church, of which they became members at an early age. The mother is still living in Germany, being now seventy-eight years old.

Mrs. Scharp lived at home with her parents until the spring of 1868, and then came alone to the United States, joining her brother, Ernest Guencel, in Nebraska City, where she lived until her marriage with our subject. Of this union there have been born nine children, two of whom, Mattie and Timm, died at the ages of five and two respectively.

The survivors, Mary, Peter J., Hannah, Ernest, Emma, John and Carl, are all at home with their mother, and form a very intelligent and interesting little family, being given the training and education suited to their station in life.

The Scharp homestead comprises 160 acres of land, and in addition to this property Mr. Scharp owned 180 acres elsewhere, including forty acres of valuable timber. Mrs. Scharp since the death of her husband has managed her affairs in a very intelligent manner, and kept up the reputation of the estate in a most creditable style. The farm buildings are first-class in every particular, and Mr. Scharp as a stock-raiser had gained quite an enviable reputation. He was a Republican in politics, and with his wife and children a loyal adherent of the Lutheran faith of his forefathers. His name is held in kindly remembrance by all who knew him, as that of a man honorable in his dealings with his fellow-citizens and one who did good service in the building up of one of the most intelligent communities of the West.

JACOB DIENER came to the southwestern part of this county in the spring of 1877, and settled upon a tract of rented land which he cultivated for a period of five years. In the fall of 1881 he purchased his present farm of 160 acres on section 6, South Branch Precinct, and the year following took possession. It was then raw prairie, and the homestead which the traveler views to-day with admiring interest, with its buildings, groves, orchards, machinery and live stock, has been the result of the persevering industry of the present proprietor, the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this sketch. He has of late been giving his attention largely to fine draft horses and good breeds of swine. Of these he makes a specialty, and realizes therefrom a handsome income.

Next in importance to the life and character of an individual is that of those from whom he sprang. The father of our subject, John Diener, was a native of Rhenish Prussia, and married Miss Caroline Reim, who was born and reared in his own neighborhood. The paternal grandfather, Phillip Diener, a native of the same Province, spent his entire life there. His son John, upon reaching manhood and being married, settled upon a small farm of sixty acres, the soil of which he tilled until 1835, and not being satisfied with the result, embarked with his little family for America. Here he located first in Carlisle, Pa., and was employed on a railroad. Thence he went to Pottsville, in Schuylkill County, and for a time was employed in coal mining. Later he took up his residence in Northumberland County, where his death occurred in 1874, at the age of sixty-four years. The mother, still continuing a resident of Pennsylvania, died in 1883, at the advanced age of eighty years.

The seven children of the parental family were named respectively: Lena, Margaretta and Caroline, who are now deceased; Jacob, of our sketch; John, living near Syracuse, in this county, and Dorothy, a resident of Pennsylvania. Jacob, like his parents, was born in Rhenish Prussia, Aug. 29, 1823, and until a lad twelve years of age continued with them on the farm in his native Province. Like most of the children of Germany, he was given a good common-school education, and he remembers the incidents of preparation for the long voyage across the Atlantic, together with their stormy passage over. They set sail from Havre de Grace, France, encountering seven weeks of bad weather, and finally landed in the city of Baltimore.

Our subject proceeded with his parents to Carlisle, Pa., and for several years thereafter was engaged in coal mining, during which time he met with many hairbreadth escapes incident to this often dangerous occupation. He was a workman of more than ordinary intelligence and ability, finally operated by contract, and upon several occasions sunk the trial shaft, a difficult proceeding, requiring great judgment and skill. In the spring of 1877, however, becoming very tired of mining and of the constant battle with falling slate and inhalation of gas which often threatened to destroy him, he resolved to change his occupation to something more pleasant and less dangerous.

Putting his resolve into execution, Mr. Diener made his way across the Mississippi, and the first night spent in Otoe County was in the rapidly developing town of Syracuse. After locating upon the land which he rented in Hendricks, he sent for his family, and subsequently proceeded as we have already indicated. He was first married, Jan. 6, 1844, in Schuylkill County, Pa., to Miss Catherine Diehl, who was born in Germany, Sept. 5, 1825, and only survived her wedding five years, her death taking place in the winter of 1849. This lady was the daughter of Phillip and Catherine (Schound) Diehl, natives of Bavaria, and the father was a coal miner by occupation. Upon coming to America they settled in Schuylkill County, Pa., where the father died at the age of fifty years, in 1842. The mother is still living in Pennsylvania, being now eighty-eight years old. Their children were Lewis, Phillip, Frederick, Caroline, Charlotte, Louisa, Augustus and Lizzie. Philip and Jacob are deceased.

This union of our subject resulted in the birth of four children, all sons: Phillip Albert died when about three years of age; John Frederick is mail agent on the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad. He served during the Civil War, in the 7th Pennsylvania Cavalry, and in the battle at Dallas, Ga., was wounded and captured by the enemy. He experienced the terrors first of Atlanta and then Andersonville Prison, but his life was spared, and he returned home after being paroled and exchanged. He was mustered out in 1865, with his regiment in Georgia, and is now in Syracuse. Charles is a stationary engineer by profession, and a resident of Schuylkill County, Pa.

Phillip Diehl during the late war served as a Union soldier, and died at Hatteras Inlet. Caroline became the second wife of our subject in the fall of 1852. She was born Sept. 5, 1829, and was a child two years of age when she came with her parents to America. Of this union there have been born nine children, namely: Louis, Ernest A., Laura, Albert, Lizzie, Frederick, Henry, George and William. Louis and Ernest A. are farmers, one in Palmyra Precinct, this county, and the latter in Lincoln County; Laura is the wife of Harry Johnson, a well-to-do farmer of Lincoln County, and the mother of five children. The following are also in that county: Albert; Lizzie, the wife of Peter Lloyd; Frederick and George. The other children are at home with their parents.

Mr. Diener, politically, is a decided Republican, and in religious matters belongs to the German Lutheran Church. His estimable wife is a member of the German Reformed Church. They have one of the pleasantest homes in the county, and their hospitable doors are always open both to friend and stranger, to whom they extend that welcome which is always so grateful to the recipient, and by which means they have gathered around them hosts of warm friends.

WILLIAM M. THALER. The life of this gentleman is illustrative of the fact that thoroughness is the key to success. As a boy this marked his life, whether in school or on the play-ground; it was equally true of him as a young man starting in life, as a soldier, and in his business relations of later years. He is a representative citizen of Palmyra, and has the esteem of his fellows. He is the son of John M. and Margaret Thaler, both of whom were natives of Germany. The occupation of his father was that of a stonemason, and he was considered a skilled worker. In the year 1839, when he had reached the advanced age of sixty years, he started with his family for America, and settled in Springfield, there continuing to follow his trade. About the time he was eighty-two years of age the sands of the hourglass of his life had run out, and he departed this life at Springfield, in the year 1861. His wife lived to be eighty-four years of age; she died at the residence of our subject in the year 1883. The father of our subject was twice married. By his first union he became the father of one child, and by the second, that to which reference is made above, of twelve children. Our subject is one of the younger children; he and his brother Charley, who died at New York in 1839, were twins.

The native place of William Thaler is Honackon, Wurtemberg, Germany. He was born in the year 1836, but his residence in that county was of comparatively short duration, and his early recollections center around the Springfield home. His education was obtained in the Springfield schools, and was supplemented by a course of instruction in the Brooks Seminary. He was all that is meant by the expression a thorough boy, vivacious, bright, an intense lover of fun, and perhaps at times a little too exuberant for the comfort of some less youthful. There was, however, always present with him a certain sturdy sense of manly honor, and his record is not tarnished as it might have been had his home training been less careful and complete. Upon leaving school the question of trade or calling was placed before him, and he elected to become a stone-cutter. He served an apprenticeship of two and a half years, working on the stone block representing Illinois in the Washington Monument for about six weeks, toward the latter part of his apprenticeship. Difficulty with the boss caused him to leave, and he went to Logan County, Ill., and there engaged on a farm.

While in Logan County our subject met Miss Melinda Lanterman, who was born near Springfield, Ill., in 1834, to John and Elizabeth Lanterman. The father of this lady was a farmer, and prosperous in his occupation, his death occurring when she was about twenty years of age; she shortly afterward went to keep house for her brother, whose home was in Logan County. It was here the acquaintance was formed that resulted in their marriage on the 5th of March, 1857. They lived in Illinois until 1860, and then he came alone to this State, arriving in Nebraska City on the 5th of April, 1860, and his family came in March, 1861. The same day he went out to visit a cousin whose home was in the vicinity, and, upon being asked by his relative how he liked the Territory, replied: "I like it well enough to live and die in Otoe County." He has not yet changed his opinion.

His visit to Nebraska City over, Mr. Thaler returned to Springfield, Ill., where he cast his first Presidential ballot for Lincoln, whom he had served in youth as a chore boy. He remained in Illinois over winter, and in the spring of 1861 returned with his wife and child, and rented first a farm in Otoe County, which he held for two years. At the close of that period, his first impression of the county being strengthened, he purchased a farm, but did not improve it before the war.

At the risk of a retrogression, we mention an incident in connection with the first vote for President mentioned above, as indicating the principles that underlie the character of our subject. At the time Fremont was spoken of for the Presidency Mr. Thaler sympathized with the Fillmore party. A day or two afterward he received from his former employer and benefactor, Lincoln, a sharp letter. Seeing the folly of his conduct, he made a vow that if Lincoln ever ran for office again he would vote for him; consequently, in the fall of 1860, when in Nebraska City, he did not think it too much to return to Illinois to cast his vote. The day after his return home he called on Lincoln, who was well pleased to see him, and filled with strong emotion as he understood the purpose of the journey from Nebraska. With a look that will ever be remembered by our subject he said: "Well, William, you have come a long way to vote for me, will you come that far to defend the principles you are voting for?" The promise was given that he would do so, and has since been nobly fulfilled.

In 1861 Mrs. Thaler died at Nebraska City, leaving to the care of her husband a little daughter, Margaret, and, although the condition was unfavorable to the fulfillment of his promise to Lincoln, and his path in that direction thus rendered very difficult, he was so moved by McClellan's defeat, that, when the call came for 600,000 men, he started once more for Springfield, and enlisted in Company A, 73d Illinois Infantry, for three years, and served during the remainder of the war. Only about one week was allowed for drilling at Camp Butler, before they departed for the front. Everything else was learned under the rebel fire.

The first battle in which our subject participated was that at Perryville, fought on the 9th of October, 1862. The next was at Chickamauga. He was taken sick with typhoid fever at Nashville, and lay between life and death for a long time, in the summer of 1863, in the hospital at that place and Chattanooga. After the battle last mentioned he was again taken ill, and upon recovery served in the engagement at Nashville. He was at Greenville, Tenn., when Lincoln's assassination occurred. At that place he served on detached duty. On the Easter Sunday he and his comrades were having a splendid time in exercises similar to those of the old-fashioned singing school; all were feeling happy and jubilant, but the news reached them just at that time, and from the heights of pleasure they sank to the lowest depths of sorrow, to know that the President was no more. Receiving an honorable discharge at Nashville, on the 12th of June, 1865, Mr. Thaler returned to his home.

Arriving in Nebraska City on the 20th of August, 1865, after an absence of three years and four days, our subject found things more changed than he had anticipated. On the 1st of September he started freighting over the plains to Colorado and to Ft. Laramie, Wyo. He carried on this business under Government contract for two years, then, coming once more to Nebraska City, on the 11th of January, 1867, he went to his farm, started to improve it, and has since gone on with that good work.

The second marriage of our subject was celebrated on the 26th of November, 1868, and he then became the husband of Miss Permelia Ann Cassle, the daughter of John and Sarah (Thomas) Cassle. Her father was born in South Carolina and her mother in Ohio, but removed to Indiana, and finally came to Nebraska, in 1856, and settled near Nebraska City. They became the parents of nine children, eight of whom are living. Mrs. Thaler is the fourth child, and was born on the 1st of July, 1837, in Warren County, Ind. At the time the family removed to Nebraska she was nineteen years of age. This union has been consummated by the birth of four children, whose names are as follows: Bertha M., who died when about sixteen years of age; Florence A., Willie W., and Milton, who died when but an infant. By his former marriage Mr. Thaler had two children—Margaret A., and John M., who died in Quincy. Margaret is the wife of Ira Gordon, and resides at Wabash, Neb., and is the mother of three children.

In 1879 our subject sold his property and purchased a farm near Palmyra. In 1883 he went into his present business, which is that of a hardwareman and dealer in harness and saddlery. He built a brick corner block in 1883, in partnership with C. B. Coswell. This business venture has been most satisfactory in every regard, and he has prospered beyond his most sanguine expectations. He has also built a branch store at Hendricks, in which he has a half-interest, and has erected a good residence in the best part of the town.

Naturally Mr. Thaler is an enthusiastic member of the G. A. R., and has been the commander of the post. He is an earnest member of the Christian Church, his wife and daughter equally so of the Baptist communion. Our subject feels strongly in the matter of Prohibition, and heartily espouses that cause. He has received many indications of the esteem in which he and his are held in the town, and also of the confidence reposed in him by his fellow-citizens. At present he is serving upon the Village Board his third term, holding the office of President of the same.

LEMUEL E. SINSABAUGH, of Syracuse, was the first man to locate upon the present site of this city, coming here in August, 1871, and putting up the first building within its limits. He at once established a lumber-yard, and was accordingly the pioneer in this business. He is now engaged in the breeding of fine horses, being the owner of the celebrated Bashaw Stock Farm, where he has a fine stable of Cleveland Bays, the better class of road horses and Shetland ponies.

Bradford County, Pa., was the early tramping ground of our subject, where his birth took place Feb. 16, 1839. His parents were David and Susan (Peck) Sinsabaugh, and as they died when he was a small boy, he knows little of the history of his ancestors farther than that his grandparents were residents of Orange County, N. Y. Of the parental family there were eleven children, ten of whom grew to mature years. These were: Rachel, the wife of Huston Munn; William, Richard, Alpheus, Hector; Elsie, Mrs. Minard DeGross; Thomas M., Lemuel E.; Miranda, the wife of James L. Patterson, and Lois, Mrs. George T. Hunt. These are residents of Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Illinois and Nebraska.

Our subject was left an orphan when a lad of ten years, and resided with his brothers for some time afterward. When a boy in his teens he was employed as a farm laborer, and in 1858 entered a factory where were manufactured agricultural implements, at Athens, Pa. In 1860, going to Western, Pa., he engaged in lumbering, and the year following occurred the outbreak of the late Civil War. Soon after the first call for troops he entered the service as a member of Company H, 46th Pennsylvania Infantry, and operated with his comrades along the Shenandoah Valley under Gen. Banks, participating in all the battles of that campaign. On the 8th of August, 1862, the day preceding the battle at Cedar River, our subject was afflicted with a sunstroke, and during the conflict which followed was captured by the rebels, and confined at Libby Prison and Belle Isle until in January, 1863. He was then exchanged, and rejoining his regiment, participated in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, after which this division of the army was transferred to Chattanooga and to the command of Gen. Sherman. Mr. Sinsabaugh afterward fought at Lookout Mountain, Resaca and Dallas, receiving at the latter place a gunshot wound, which, in connection with the effects of sunstroke, so disabled him that he was relieved from active duty, and sent to the hospital at New Albany, Ind. Later, at Harrisburg, Pa., he received his honorable discharge, after having given a faithful service of three years to his country.

Upon leaving the army our subject returned to his old haunts in Bradford County, Pa., resuming his work, the manufacture of agricultural implements, until 1865. He then went into the oil regions, and was engaged in developing wells until the following year, when he returned to the factory. The summer of 1871 found him west of the Mississippi, and preparing to locate upon the present site of Syracuse, this county. He continued in the lumber business until 1878, and was succeeded by H. N. Carpenter. He now turned his attention to the raising of fancy poultry, and for this purpose erected a set of the finest buildings in the United States. His operations proved highly remunerative, his trade extending to every State in the Union, the Sandwich Islands and England. But, alas for human calculations, a conflagration, supposed to have been started by a firecracker, swept away, the labor of years, entailing a heavy loss of property upon which there was no insurance.

As soon as he could recover from his calamity, our subject invested his remaining capital in a stock of general merchandise, associating himself with a partner, and the firm of Page & Sinsabaugh continued in existence until the fall of 1884. Mr. S. then withdrew and established the Bashaw Stock Farm, and as a breeder of fine horses now occupies a position in the front ranks among the men of that line in Southern Nebraska. His stables are located near the city limits, where, in addition to his farm, he owns forty acres of land.

Miss Jennie Bloodgood, daughter of Hiram and Sarah Bloodgood, of New York, became the wife of our subject Sept. 12, 1865, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride in New York. Mrs. Sinsabaugh was born in Tioga County, N. Y., and departed this life at her home in Syracuse, Neb., May 13, 1873. Of this union there were born four children: Ida M., now the wife of Henry Vose, of Syracuse; Grace is at home with her father, Willie, and one deceased. Our subject, politically, votes the Republican ticket, and is one of the pioneer members of the Masonic fraternity in this region, being the first man initiated in Mt. Moriah Lodge No. 57, in Syracuse.

—•••••

JAMES M. RILEY, the well-known and prosperous liveryman of Syracuse, is a native of the Buckeye State, and was born in Muskingum County on the 16th of June, 1857. His father, John Riley, was a native of that State, and followed the occupation of farming, and in that calling enjoyed even more than usual success. The maiden name of his wife, the mother of our subject, was Christiania McDonald, a native of Virginia, who, throughout the years of her married life, manifested a spirit beautiful in its purity and Christian helpfulness. She was in every sense of the word a true wife and mother. Mr. Riley, Sr., continued to make his home in his native State until 1885, when, owing to the death of his wife and two daughters, each of whom fell a victim to that most fatal of all known diseases, consumption, he determined to seek a climate where the surviving members of his family might have an opportunity to escape the same fell destroyer. Accordingly he sold his farm and other property in Ohio and migrated to Kansas, where he purchased a section of land in Wabaunsee County, which he has improved and still operates as a stock farm. Of his family five children are still living, his son John M. being the eldest.

The education of our subject was obtained in the usual institution of his native county, and as he made good use of his school days and has not been neglectful of self-improvement since, he is a well-informed man and capable citizen. On leaving school he became his father's assistant upon the farm, and continued thus employed until 1877. At that time he went to Kansas, where he took a commercial course in a college at Lawrence, and throughout the three subsequent years represented L. K. Hill & Co., of Kalamazoo, Mich., as their salesman of plow attachments in the State of Kansas. Upon resigning this position he engaged in stock-raising, in which his success was even greater than it had been as a salesman.

The year 1885 is memorable in the history of our subject as that in which he was united in wedlock with Addie Daly, the estimable lady who has since that time been the companion of his life, and has enriched it by the matured intelligence, culture and inspiration of her womanhood. Mrs. Riley is the daughter of George W. Daly, of Kansas, who was born in the State of New York, but as a young man went to Kansas and taught school. While a resident there he met and married his wife, who was the daughter of one of the pioneers of Kansas. Mr. Daly is now agent for the Kansas Loan and Trust Company of Topeka, and very prosperous as a business man. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Riley has been the more firmly cemented and its happiness augmented by the birth of a daughter, to whom they have given the name Ethel.

Kansas continued to be the home of our subject some time after he was married, in fact, until he came to this State in the year 1886, at which time he settled in Syracuse, and embarked with his usual thoroughness and enterprise in his present business. The good fortune which attended his former occupation did not leave him when he came hither, and although in a new country where are many difficulties and obstacles unknown in older settled districts, these have never turned him from his purpose. He has industriously looked after his business, and has firmly established a reputation in the community.

Like his father before him, our subject is a staunch Republican, and when opportunity offers is always ready to manifest his faith by his deeds, hence is esteemed an extremely loyal and patriotic citizen.

ANDREW STOUT, one of the prosperous farmers of Otoe Precinct, owning forty acres of farming land on section 20, 160 acres being the north quarter of the south-east quarter of the same section, the entire north half of section 30, and ten acres on section 23, a total of 530 acres, his residence being upon the first named, is the son of Emley and Elvira (Denney) Stout. His father was born in the State of New Jersey, but was brought up in Ohio, whence he was taken by his parents when about six years of age. This was the native State of the mother of our subject.

It is believed from family tradition that the ancestry of Andrew Stout were subjects of the British Crown, and that the grandfather of Andrew was the first member of the family to come to this country, where he settled in New Jersey after the Revolutionary War. In the War of 1812 this gentleman served as a teamster for the army.

Mr. Emley Stout and Elvira Denney were married in Morgan County, Ill., near the city of Jacksonville, in the year 1835. They are now residing near Ashland, Cass Co., Ill., and are respectively seventy-nine and seventy years of age. Their family circle includes twelve children, ten of whom grew to mature years. Their names are as follows: Andrew, Caroline, Hannah, Theodore, Aaron and Cyrus (deceased), George W., Charles E.; Mary F. died when one year old; Mary E. died aged about thirty-three; Lucinda and William.

The subject of our sketch was born on the 1st of February, 1837, in Pike County, Ill. He grew up in Cass County from the time he was twelve years of age, previous to which he had lived in Morgan County from the time he was eighteen months old. Being the eldest son he was directed to farm work at a very early age, and while still a youth was able to take charge of almost any department of such work. This was the more necessary because his father was by no means a rich man, and needed all the help that could be given. For this reason perhaps more than any other the education of our subject was not given that attention that would have been desirable, and, under other circumstances, possible. What schooling he obtained he received during the winter months only, and upon the foundation then laid he has never ceased to continue to build.

After spending the first twenty-two years of his life under the home roof our subject started in life for himself by celebrating his marriage with Mary E., the estimable daughter of Nathan and Catharine (Epler) Blizzard. This lady was born in Clark County, Ind., and there lived until she was six years of age, when, with her parents, she went to Morgan County, Ill., which afterward continued to be her home until her marriage. The date of the latter event was Nov. 18, 1858. Both her parents are deceased.

The young couple spent the first year of their married life in Illinois, and then sold out their property and came to this State, arriving in the fall of 1859. Their first purchase was the northeast corner of section 30. By care and unremitting labor, judiciously carried on, success so far crowned the efforts of our subject that the adjoining quarter of the same section was purchased and incorporated with their previous possessions. Mr. Stout followed for many years general or mixed farming, finding it more profitable than a more special line of operations.

For six years Mr. Stout held the office of County Commissioner, and for two years he was Chairman of the board. While Mr. Stout was a member of the board many of the leading citizens of Nebraska City and the county requested the Board of Commissioners to submit to the voters the proposition to issue bonds to aid in the construction of the Midland Pacific Railroad. The proposition carried, the bonds were issued and the road built. Subsequent bonds were voted on and issued in aid of the construction of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad.

The political faith of our subject is that of the Democratic party, of which he has for many years continued a staunch advocate and friend. When running for the Commissioner's office he ran far ahead of his ticket. He has been prominent in the councils of his party in this county. In religious belief our subject and his wife are members of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a charter member of the church organization at Harmony, and one of the Trustees.

Charles E. Stout, the only son of our subject and wife, was born in Otoe Precinct, April 20, 1860. He has attended in addition to the usual institution of instruction the Nebraska City College, and also the State University at Lincoln. At present he is at home assisting his father in carrying on the farm.

Mr. Stout is a man of fine character, manliness and personal worth. He has a high sense of justice and honor, and commands the universal esteem of his fellows. Concerning him as a public officer J. J. Hostettler, his fellow Commissioner, remarked as follows: "Mr. Stout is an A No. 1 man. In matters pertaining to the public good I found him very active. While we got along very harmoniously, yet when Mr. Stout would take a stand on any point he would do it because he thought it was right, and his natural ability and long experience made him one of the very best Commissioners Otoe County has ever seen."

HIRAM HENDRICKS, of Hendricks Precinct, was the first white child born in the southwestern part of Otoe County. This event occurred on the 30th of December, 1859. Here he spent his boyhood and youth, and grew to a promising manhood. He is now numbered among the most enterprising young farmers of this section, and bids fair to reflect honor upon the name which has been familiar in this section of country for a period of over thirty years.

Our subject, although young in years, has seen much hard labor, having been reared as the son of a pioneer, and at an early age commenced to assist his father in the development of a homestead. In the sketch of his brother, George Hendricks, found elsewhere in this volume, is given the parental history. The first recollections of our subject are of the wild, uncultivated prairie and the primitive manner in which the people of that time were obliged to live. He spent his boyhood and youth on the farm, remaining with his parents until reaching his majority, and notwithstanding the many difficulties in the way of education, became master of the common branches, the study of which he diligently pursued, and from which he emerged with a goodly portion of practical knowledge. At the age of twenty-two years he purchased the eighty acres which he now owns and occupies from his mother, and began farming on his own account. He has made all the improvements which we see to-day, and which reflect great credit upon his industry and good judgment. He has a fine tract of native timber, and streams of living water running through the farm. He has planted an orchard of 150 apple trees and laid off the fields with beautiful hedge. He has added to his landed possessions by the purchase of forty acres on section 17.

One of the most interesting and important events in the life of our subject was his marriage, which occurred April 17, 1881, his bride being Miss Jennie Fishel. This lady was born in Iowa, Aug. 19, 1861, and is the daughter of Charles and Jessie (McPherson) Fishel, the former of whom is a native of Ohio, and the latter was born on the other side of the Atlantic, among the Scottish Highlands. Mr. Fishel, a farmer by occupation, removed from Ohio to Iowa, thence in 1876 to this county, locating on a tract of land in Hendricks Precinct, where he labored successfully, and where his death took place in 1878. The mother is still living, and resides on the old homestead. Their family consisted of eight children, six of whom are living, and mostly residing in Nebraska. Mrs. Hendricks was the second child, and continued under the home roof until her marriage, acquiring her education in the common schools. Of her union with our subject there have been born three children—Charles Edwin, Carrie Winnifred and Mary Elizabeth. Mr. Hendricks is a staunch Republican, politically, and both he and his amiable wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Solon, in which he has been Class-Leader and Superintendent of the Sunday-school. Like that of his father before him, his house has always been open for religious meetings and every other good purpose. His energy and public-spiritedness, his enterprise and intelligence, have commended him highly to the people of this county, who expect of him still further good things in the future.

DWIGHT WAIT. This gentleman is one of the enterprising young business men of Palmyra, and occupies the position of chief clerk in the hardware store of Mr. Thomas Bell. His father, Cyrus Wait, was born in Vermont, near Woodstock. Upon the father's side the family is of French origin, while upon the mother's the ancestry were Irish. Mr. Wait, Sr., was an enthusiastic worker in the great cause of religion, and almost as much so in that of abolition. He died at Woodstock, Ohio, in the year 1865, when only thirty-two years of age. After her bereavement Mrs. Wait lived with her sons. She made her home in Nebraska for two years and then returned to Indiana. She died there in the year 1886, having reached the age of seventy years. She was the mother of six children, viz: Cicero, Addison, Dwight, Hinda, Herbert and Fillmore.

The subject of our sketch was born on the 22d of February, 1849, at the town of Woodstock, and grew up there. He was seventeen years of age when his father died. In common with a large majority of those gentlemen who occupy our pulpits, Mr. Wait had not been able to accumulate a competency, so that as a young man his son Dwight had to begin and climb the ladder of life for himself. One thing was in his favor—his parents had been careful to give him a good English education, and had already given some tone and shape to his character.

The first employment of our subject was as a farm hand, and he continued thus engaged in his native State until he came to Nebraska. In company with his brother Cicero he landed in Nebraska City on the 1st of April, 1872, and soon obtained work under Dr. Converse, in the construction of the Midland Pacific Railroad. He was fortunate in having known this gentleman while a boy in Indiana. Taking his shovel he began to work with the other men and endeavored to do his best, and so well did he acquit himself that he was promoted to the position of foreman, and had the supervision of from four to twenty-five men. He continued in the employ of the Doctor for about six years, prospering financially and otherwise.

In 1878 our subject came to Palmyra and started business as a hardwareman, and built the store now occupied by Mr. Wells. His business grew in a most gratifying manner and he was very successful. In 1880 he was joined in matrimony to Miss Hannah Bell, who was born in England in the year 1858. (See sketch of Thomas Bell.) She was twelve years of age when she came to this country, and has since lived in Palmyra. Mr. Wait has built a two-story frame dwelling that is well located, and provides fully for the comfort of his family. His marriage has been blessed by the birth of four children, who bear the following names: Amy Elizabeth, Lydia, Carrie and Francis H.

The citizens of Palmyra show their appreciation of the business integrity of Mr. Wait and have continued to patronize him, and he has an extensive agricultural implement and harness trade of his own in addition to his engagement with Mr. Bell. In the I. O. O. F. our subject is much respected, and he is the Vice Grand of the Palmyra Lodge. For three years he has filled the office of Village Treasurer with credit to himself and satisfaction to the people. His political sentiments lead him to participate with the Republican party in the endeavor to bring to the people of the State a capable governing power, according to the principles they believe to be right. Mrs. Wait is a highly esteemed member of the Presbyterian Church, and in that relation, as also in every other, sustains a happy and enviable reputation.

MRS. PHOEBE OSBORN, widow of the late Lyman Osborn, who was a prominent and wealthy farmer of McWilliams Precinct, is now living quietly in a handsome home in the village of Talmage, where she is surrounded by all of the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. She is the owner of a large extent of land in Mc-Williams Precinct, besides land in Nemaha and Saline Counties, Neb., and Scott County, Iowa. She is a lady of more than ordinary business capacity, managing her farms and controlling her property in a skillful and profitable manner. She has been a resident of the State since Dec. 9, 1869, all of the time in Otoe County and most of the time in Nebraska City.

Mrs. Osborn came to this State from Scott County, Iowa, with her husband, and they settled on the farm in McWilliams Precinct, where Mr. Osborn died six months later, on the 13th of August, 1870. A native of Seneca County, N. Y., Mr. Osborn was born June 19, 1812, and in his native county was reared to manhood on a farm. He was married first in his native county, to Miss Lucretia Sloper, and later they emigrated to Iowa, locating in the vicinity of what was then the unpretentious village of Davenport, during its early settlement. This lady died some years later, leaving a family of six children, all of whom are living, married, and settled comfortably, being prosperous and intelligent citizens. They were named respectively: Sylvester; Erena, who is now a widow; Huldah, Josiah, Eli and Ellen.

After the death of his first wife Mr. Osborn returned to his native State, and was married the second time, April 3, 1851, to Miss Phœbe Calder, of Meigs County. Mrs. Osborn was born in Washington County, that State, Dec. 29, 1828, and is the eldest child of John and Elsa (Rathburn) Calder, who were natives of New York State. They went with their parents to Ohio in their youth, and were married in the latter State, settling there upon a farm in Meigs County, where they lived many years. In their old age they crossed the Mississippi and settled in Scott County, Iowa. The father died at Davenport on the 8th of May, 1877, at the age of seventy-four years, his birth having taken place in 1803. Both he and his excellent wife were members of the Christian Church for many years. The latter, after the death of her husband, came to this county, and died at her home in McWilliams Precinct, April 27, 1882. She was born in 1807.

Mrs. Osborn, our subject, was reared and educated in Ohio, and engaged in teaching some time before her marriage. She and her husband soon afterward took up their residence in Scott County, Iowa, where they became the parents of two sons. The elder, Lyman, Jr., married Miss Anna Puffer, of Scott County, Sept. 16, 1876, and they live on a farm in Nemaha County, this State; John is a resident of Talmage. Mrs. Osborn, like her parents, is connected with the Christian Church, and keeps herself well posted upon matters of general interest. She has abundant time for reading and recreation and social intercourse with the many friends whom she has gathered around her during the years of a well-spent life.

WILLIAM B. BUXTON. The farm of this gentleman, which is largely devoted to the culture of fruit, a nursery, and the raising of graded stock, occupies the southeast quarter of section 3, in Syracuse Precinct, which has been his home since the spring of 1882. It forms a very pleasing picture of rural life, with its comfortable buildings, and all the other appurtenances in keeping with the requirements of modern and progressive agriculture.

Our subject was born sixty-three years ago, in the State of Rhode Island, Dec. 4, 1825, and is the son of William and Phila Buxton, who were of English ancestry, and whose progenitors had been residents of the New England States for several generations. The descendants of the latter are now to be found scattered all over the Western Continent. The mother of our subject died when he was a lad ten years of age, leaving five children, namely: Mary Ann, now the wife of Arnold Gillson, of Woonsocket, R. I.; Francis, also of that State; Martha, the wife of Caleb Wilson, of Rockford, Ill.; William, of our sketch, and Horatio, of Riverhead, L. I.

After the death of his first wife the father of our subject was a second time married, to Miss Ruth Buffum. William B. soon afterward left home, and was employed on a farm in Connecticut for a period of seven years; then in the town of Stafford he commenced learning the trade of shoemaker, and later engaged in business for himself at Burrillville, in his native State, and a small manufacturing town. About 1856, repairing to the vicinity of Milford, Conn., he engaged in carriage painting, and there, Nov. 28, 1850, was married to Miss Mary L. Godding.

Mrs. Mary L. Buxton was born in Rutland County, Vt., March 1, 1825, and is the daughter of Russell and Abigail (Sherman) Godding, natives of New England. Mr. G. was a farmer by occupation, and spent his entire life in the Green Mountain State, his death occurring in Rutland County, April 11, 1833. The family at this time consisted of six children, two of whom died at an early age. Mary L., Mrs. Buxton, is the eldest living; Asa is engaged at farming in Syracuse, this county; Susan M. is the wife of George L. Alexander, of Syracuse; Loney married Rev. Walter Ely, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and they are living in Connecticut.

After the death of Mr. Godding the mother and children removed to Rhode Island, and the former in 1857 joined her children in Champaign County, Ill. Her death took place in Monticello, that State, Feb. 2, 1882, after she had attained the ripe age of seventy-nine years.

Mr. and Mrs. Buxton after their marriage continued residents of Massachusetts, and Mr. B. followed painting in the towns of Spencer and Millbury. In the spring of 1857, leaving his native New England, he emigrated to Illinois, and settled on a tract of land in Philo Township, Champaign County. This consisted of eighty acres, which he improved and brought to a good state of cultivation, and which he occupied with his family until the spring of 1882. His next removal was to this county, when he settled upon the farm which he now owns and occupies. He raises large quantities of all kinds of fruit, which find a ready market at Syracuse and Lincoln, and from the proceeds of which he enjoys a handsome income.

To our subject and his excellent wife there have been born five children, two of whom died in infancy. Mary A. became the wife of William Ennis, and died in Champaign County, Ill., in the spring of 1881; Lyman E. is farming in Cheyenne County, Kan., and Abbie G. lives at home. Mrs. Buxton has been a member in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church for over forty years, and our subject a period of twenty-five years. He cast his first Presidential vote for Pierce, but was not fully in accordance with his political views; for a period of thirty-four years he has continued a staunch supporter of Republican principles. He has no desire for the responsibilities of office, and has therefore avoided placing himself prominently before the public.

The parents of Mrs. Buxton were of Scotch and English ancestry, and she possessed in a marked degree the admirable characteristics of that nationality, being conscientious, kind-hearted, pleasant and hospitable, and presiding over her well-ordered household in a most praiseworthy manner. Many are the friends who gather under this inviting roof-tree, and no people are held in higher respect throughout Syracuse Precinct than William B. Buxton and his estimable wife.

GEN. ISAAC COE, perhaps the most prominent citizen of Nebraska City, was born in Middletown, Conn., on the 15th of May, 1816. His ancestors were natives of England, and wrote their names Coe. The parents and grandparents, both paternal and maternal, were residents of the above-mentioned town of Middletown, and followed agricultural pursuits. Our subject had four brothers and one sister; the latter was united in marriage with George H. Bliss, and died in the city of Chicago, Ill., in the year 1852, and had one daughter, who is still living. His brother, Lewis Coe, died in Muscatine, Iowa, in 1887, leaving one son and one daughter, who are still living in that place. The remaining three brothers are living in the State of Connecticut.

The subject of our sketch received in youth the educational advantages afforded by the common schools. In 1846 he was united in marriage with Sarah L. Bacon, the estimable daughter of Ebenezer Bacon, whose parents and grandparents, like those of our subject, were natives and residents of Middletown, and followed farming pursuits.

After their marriage Gen. and Mrs. Coe lived upon the farm near Middletown for six or seven years, and one child was born to them, Eloise, now Mrs. F. P. Ireland, who with her husband and one child, Sarah C., now reside in Nebraska City. Mr. Ireland is a practicing lawyer. Not enjoying sufficiently robust health to continue farming, our subject sold his property, and with his family removed to Butler County, Ala., and there engaged in business for a number of years. On selling his interests there he moved to Nebraska City, in 1858. There he invested his funds in Government land sales at the United States Land Office.

Not long after he had identified himself with Nebraska City our subject was elected by the officers of the several volunteer companies of the division south of Platteville in the Territory of Nebraska to the position of Brigadier General, and was in charge of the division for several years, the territory embraced in that district bordering seventy-five miles on the States of Iowa and Missouri and over 600 miles on Kansas, Colorado and Wyoming, as the present boundaries are defined. The term of service included the whole of the period embraced by the Civil War, and the excitement necessarily incidental thereto. Throughout, the personal liberties and effects of the citizens were guarded without exception, and the happy condition of things was very largely due to the wisdom, judgment, and other qualities of those in command of the forces. For the services thus rendered by the officers and forces at large there was made neither charge nor reward, nor was any compensation whatever given by the Territory, and that in order that no war debt might be incurred, with the result that the now State of Nebraska is upon a financially solid foundation and takes front rank among the States in that regard.

Subsequently our subject was engaged in freighting across the plains west of the Missouri River, and continued the same until the laying of the railroad and opening of the same for traffic precluded the necessity of any continuance in that line. In this he was associated with Levi Carter, a citizen of New Hampshire. They worked in partnership under the name of Coe & Carter. In addition thereto he invested money in developing the mineral resources of the various Western Territories, and derived therefrom a large interest from the original investment.

The firm of Coe & Carter assisted largely in the construction of the Union Pacific, Denver, Pacific & Oregon Short Line Railroads, and a number of other enterprises looking toward the development of the resources of the still wild portions of the district west of the Missouri River. They were also large stock-buyers, and introduced a number of enterprises in the line of stock interests in the various unsettled portions of the western territory, buying largely of land for the feeding of such stock, including also sufficient for the harvesting of hay, etc., for their sustenance.

The family of Gen. Coe consists of two children: Mrs. Ireland, and a son Frank E., who owns a ranch well stocked with cattle and horses in Idaho Territory. In politics the General is a staunch Democrat.

HON. PAUL SCHMINKE, Nebraska City. Sketches of the lives of the representative citizens of Otoe County, men who were its founders and have since taken a conspicuous part in the administration of its public affairs, are found within this volume, and the subject of this biographical notice occupies a prominent place among them. He was born in Hesse-Cassel, Germany, Aug. 16, 1835, and is a son of Peter and Dora (Doell) Schminke, natives of the same locality. His father learned the trade of painter in his younger days, and followed it in his native land until 1852, when he emigrated to this country with his wife and five children, setting sail from Bremen in March, and landing in New York in the following May. He proceeded with his family to Pennsylvania, and locating in Luzerne County, followed his trade as a painter there for one year. He then moved to Ohio, and was engaged as a painter in Washington County until 1874, when he came to Nebraska City, whither two of his sons had preceded him, and is now living here in retirement at the age of eighty-two years, honored and respected as one should be who has led a useful, upright life. His faithful wife, who crossed the seas with him to begin life anew in a strange country that they might better their condition and that of their children, died in this city. The record of the children born to this worthy couple is as follows: Justus gave up his life for his adopted country in the late Civil War, he being a member of the 7th Ohio Cavalry, having been killed in battle in East Tennessee; the Hon. Paul, our subject; Kate is the wife of E. River; John, who lives in Nebraska City, served in the same regiment with his brother Justus, and honorably bears the scars of many battles; and J. Conrad.

The subject of our sketch received a liberal education in the excellent schools of his native land, which he attended quite steadily until he was sixteen years old, when he came to America with his parents. He commenced life in this country by working in the coal mines of Pennsylvania at sixty-five cents a day. He was thus employed for one year, when he went with his parents to Ohio, where his father had a farm, and our subject and his brothers carried it on. During the time of his residence there he learned the trade of plasterer, and was actively and profitably engaged in it for some years in that State. In December, 1858, he was united in marriage to Miss Annie Kuhlmann, to whose encouragement and assistance he owes much for his high social position in this community. Mrs. Schminke was born near Bremen, Germany, and is a daughter of Deidrich and Margaret Kuhlmann, natives and lifelong residents of Germany.

In 1865 Mr. Schminke sought the Territory of Nebraska, having determined to cast in his lot with its pioneers, and in the young and growing town of Nebraska City build up for himself and wife a substantial home. Otoe County was at that time but sparsely settled, and there was no railway nearer than St. Joseph, Mo.; all transportation and travel was either by water or with teams overland. Being a good workman at his trade he had no difficulty in finding employment, and was engaged as a plasterer here for the ensuing ten years. He then formed a partnership with his brother, and built a steam flouring-mill, known as the "Star Mills," and since then has wholly abandoned his trade, devoting what time he had to spare from his official business to the mills.

Time and again has the wise counsel of our subject been sought in making the laws of his adopted State, and Otoe County may well be proud of his career in public life. None of her citizens, we venture to assert, can show a more useful or a cleaner record as a civic officer. A leading member of the Republican party (casting his first vote for Abraham Lincoln), he has always guarded and defended the dearest interests of the commonwealth of Nebraska with a single eye to her advancement. He has been a member of the council, and has been repeatedly a delegate to the county and State conventions of the Republican party. He was elected as State Representative in 1872, and was appointed one of the commissioners by the Legislature to locate and build the asylum for the blind. In 1876 he was re-elected to represent his district in the Legislature, and in 1886 he was elected to the State Senate. As Senator he served on various important committees; was Chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements, was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of Municipal Affairs, of Labor, was on the Committee of the Hospital of the Insane, and of the Asylum for Deaf and Blind Mutes. Mr. Schminke is a prominent social factor in this community, being a member of Schiller Lodge No. 23, K. of P.; of Frontier Lodge No. 3, I. O. O. F., and of Nichols Lodge No. 7, A. O. U. W. Our subject in 1877 was appointed Postmaster by President Hayes in Nebraska City, and held the office for nine years.

ORVILLE K. BROWN. Although one of the youngest farmers and stock-raisers of South Branch Precinct, this gentleman is by no means the least worthy of full representation in a volume of this description. Upon section 5 of that precinct he has 160 acres of fine land, devoted somewhat to agricultural pursuits, but chiefly for the purposes of stock-raising and horse-breeding. His father was John H. Brown, who was born in Marblehead, Mass., on the 28th of August, 1830. He was the son of Thomas Peter Brown, a Virginian of old and well-reputed family, who served through the War of 1812, and was otherwise prominent in the expression of his loyal patriotism. The mother of our subject prior to her marriage bore the name of Sarah A. Thomas, and was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, on the 7th of November, 1830.

Their marriage was celebrated in Adams County, Ill., on the 16th of October, 1853.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Sr., continued to live in Illinois, where they owned a farm of 360 acres, and until March of 1878 he was also engaged as a shipper of stock, but at that time he removed to DuPage County, Iowa, and after four years that were not altogether successful they removed to this State, settling in South Branch, Otoe County, in 1884, where they still reside. They are the parents of ten children, whose names are recorded as follows: Adeline, John F., Milvin, Wilbur and Franklin, all of whom are deceased; Thomas J., now in Arkansas; Orville K., Olive, Nettie and May.

The subject of our sketch was born in Hancock County, Ill., near the town of Augusta, on the 2d of January, 1861. His parents, although needing his help upon the farm, were careful that he should obtain the best education afforded by the common schools. He remained upon the home farm with his father until he was twenty-one years of age, and then began farming for himself in Iowa. This he continued until 1885. He then came to this county, and purchased his present place, which comprises 160 acres. His journey hither was performed by the aid of six teams, and was filled with the incidents usual to such an experience.

Although comparatively young Mr. Brown has had large experience in pioneer life, and has brought his farm from its native wildness and unfitness for agricultural pursuits to a very fine condition of cultivation. He has set out groves where will be found the trees most favorable to Nebraska climate, and also a very fine orchard, where may be found the choicest varieties of fruits that may be grown in the State, and every tree a good bearer, seeing that he had the opportunity from time to time to weed out the less desirable and replace them by better. One valuable acquisition is the stream of running water that passes through his farm. His chief attention is given to the raising of cattle and hogs, but he is also deeply interested in that of high-grade, thoroughbred draft horses of the Norman breed.

Life in all its opportunity and possibility is yet before our subject, and it were futile to attempt any prophetic utterance, and yet it is safe to say that while the principles that have been his in the past are continued in exercise, the years to come will not be without a record worthy of one whose character and reputation are such as his, and whose family history is of such high order. He is a firm Prohibitionist, and was selected to act as delegate to the State Convention when it was held at Omaha.

WILLIAM TASKER NICHOLSON stands in the front rank of citizens of Otoe County, and is one of the popular and influential men of his district. His admirably cultivated farm of 320 acres is situated on section 27 of Belmont Precinct, and there he is very successful in raising cattle of the Short-horn variety and high-grade Poland-China hogs, though he also raises large crops of grain. He was born in Yorkshire, England, on the 4th of February, 1831, to William and Jane (Tasker) Nicholson, natives of the same shire. The family came to the United States, and settled in this county in 1857, and took up the farm immediately adjoining that of our subject.

The father of our subject died about twenty-six years ago, as the result of a paralytic stroke caused by a fall on the ice by which he injured the spine. His wife survived until the year 1886, and then died while visiting in Chicago. She was brought back, and buried in Nebraska City Cemetery by the side of her husband.

When Mr. Nicholson first came to the county the land billowed away in beautifully rolling prairie mile after mile, without a sign of settlement or civilization, but his property is in nowise behind the phenomenal development of the State at large. His orchards cover six acres and his groves ten. All his improvements are substantial, good and valuable, and his property cannot possibly be of less value than $50 per acre.

On the 16th of September, 1854, the subject of our sketch was united in wedlock with Miss Ann Houndsley, daughter of John and Maria Houndsley, who were natives of England, where the mother died, and the father is still living. To Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson there have come nine children, seven of whom are living, viz: Emma, Mary J., Elizabeth A., Hettie, Sallie, William J. and Katie. Emma is the wife of George Hill, of Polk County, Neb., now residing in Oregon, and is the mother of six children, whose names are mentioned as follows: Alfred, William, Jessie, Herman, James and George; Mary J. is married to Marion J. Newman, of Greenwood, Neb., and they have two children, named Minnie and Ivia; Elizabeth is married to Mr. John Baker, of Republic County, Kan.; they have three children, who bear the names of Bertha, Roy and Harry Lee. Hettie is the wife of Isaac Crumley, of Colby, Kan.

In the office of Justice of the Peace Mr. Nicholson served most creditably to himself and with satisfaction to the people for several years, and was also Assessor for several terms. He has always been deeply interested in educational institutions and matters connected therewith, and was one to organize the school district, and raise the means necessary to have an efficient school established here. He has also been identified with the various projects, plans and enterprises that have been for the advancement, growth and development of the county.

Religiously, Mr. Nicholson is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and also his wife and those of their children who are still at home. They are there held in high regard, and are liberal supporters of the organization. Politically, our subject is a Republican.

CHARLES Z. SIDLES, who is well and favorably known as one of the enterprising and prosperous farmers of Palmyra Precinct, operates 320 acres of good land on section 22. He was born in Somerset County, Pa., in October, 1838, and was the fourth of nine children born to Daniel and Catherine (Zorn) Sidles, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. By occupation his father was a blacksmith, but became an extensive land-owner in Pennsylvania. In 1850 he removed to Stephenson County, Ill., and continued to work at his trade, and later lived a retired life in Dakota, Stephenson County, where he died in 1879, at the age of seventy years. His wife, the mother of our subject, is still living, and is seventy-four years of age, and is making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Springman, of Palmyra Precinct. The family record gives the names of the children of this family as follows: Emeline M., Henry, Charles Z., Frank A., Sarah, Julia, Rebecca, Mary and Daniel.

The education of our subject was limited to two terms, when he attended the usual institution in Stephenson County. He early began to help his father and to work upon the farm, which he continued until he came of age. He then took and operated a farm on shares in Stephenson County. He received the hand of Miss Sarah Lowery in marriage in that county on Oct. 25, 1860. This lady is the daughter of Godfred and Mary Ann Lowery, both born in Pennsylvania; they were the parents of five children, their daughter Sarah being the eldest. She received a good English education and a careful home training, that has borne fruit since she has had a home of her own. They are the parents of the following children: Emily Alice, Ellen, Jennie, Clara A., Laura A., Lillie and Willie.

The three eldest children of our subject were born before the war, which broke out while Mr. and Mrs. Sidles were residing upon their farm near Freeport. In 1864 Mr. Sidles enlisted for a term of three years, or during the war, as required. He became a member of Company E, 46th Illinois Infantry, and was mustered into service at Baton Rouge, was present at Vicksburg, from which place they went to Shreveport, La. During his term of service he was with his regiment in Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Alabama. He was at Mobile at the time of Lee's surrender, and was present at the blowing up of Ft. Fisher, and was mustered out of service at Baton Rouge, in July, 1866. Returning home Mr. Sidles sold out his interest in eighty acres of land in Stephenson County, the purchaser being his brother Frank. In 1878 he went to Livingston County, Ill., and became the owner of a farm of 120 acres, which he sold in 1884, and in the spring of that year came to this State.

Of the family of our subject Alice has become the wife of Samuel Tanner, and is the mother of one child, whose name is Charles; Ellen has become Mrs. Arthur Thompson, and she also has a son, bearing the name Charles; Clara is the wife of Clarence Frye, a florist at Lincoln, and Laura is married to Mr. Berry, of Lincoln. Mrs. Sidles is a member in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is held in high regard. The political sympathies of our subject lead him to affiliate with the Republican party, of which he is an ardent supporter.

JEROME B. PRATT. Among the pioneer settlers of this county the name of Jerome B. Pratt is among the best known and most honored. He is the son of Thomas and Alma (Woodard) Pratt; the father was a native of England, the mother of Vermont. His father was in the British Army and fought as a private in the War of 1812. After the war he settled in Genesee County, N. Y., where he met and married Miss Alma Woodard. He followed agriculture in the same county, and was very successful. In the fall of 1836 he removed with his wife and six children to Branch County, Mich., where he became owner of eighty acres of land, and continued to operate the same until 1872, when he died, being seventy-six years of age, and having survived his wife, who died aged sixty-nine years, in 1869. The names of their children were as follows: Jerome B., Nancy, an infant died unnamed, Ferrendee P., Ferdinand C. and Urseba A.

Our subject was born on the 30th of May, 1838, in Genesee County, N. Y., and was eight years old when he went with his parents to Michigan. His father took the second farm ever worked in the township of Algansee. He was very early initiated into farm labor of all kinds, and was but ten years of age when he began to use the ax, and became quite an expert before most lads think of leaving school.

In 1852 our subject prepared to enter the University of Michigan by attending an academy in Ann Arbor, but his health failing, he became unable to enter college. Coming West in 1856, Mr. Pratt crossed the Missouri River at Minersville, and on the 23d of April of the year 1862 engaged with the State Militia of Missouri for two years and seven months. He afterward served three months along the Platte, opening up the roads between the Missouri River and Denver, which was obstructed by the Indians, doing good service, and only being discharged on account of physical disability that was the result of exposure to which he had been subjected during his military service. Leaving the army, he returned to his squatter's claim, that lay to the east of the Pendleton farm in Otoe Precinct, and once more went to work for himself. Subsequently he traded his farm for his present home of 160 acres.

Mary E. Baker.

R. L. Baker,

On the 23d of April, 1868, our subject was united in wedlock with Miss Elizabeth Stevens, a native of Howard County, Ind., where she was born Feb. 7, 1843. She came to this State with her uncle, and made her home with David Watkins and family. They have become the parents of four children, viz.: Minnie A.; Emma, who died when eleven months old; Urseba and Spencer. Minnie is a resident of Nemaha, and is married to Mr. Grant Gates. The other two are at home.

Mr. Pratt is a believer in the Universalist doctrine, while his wife is a member of the Christian Church. They are much esteemed members of society; the political principles of Mr. Pratt are those that govern the Republican party, of which he has for many years been a stout defender and ardent supporter.

REUBEN F. BAKER. In this biographical sketch is presented an outline of the history of one of the prominent citizens of Belmont Precinct, one who stands in the front ranks of the successful farmers and stock-raisers of the county. His home farm lies on section 16 and is 320 acres in extent. His entire landed estate comprises 800 acres: 160 acres lying on section 9, 160 on section 17, and 160 on section 18. This land Mr. Baker has redeemed acre by acre from the wild waste of prairie presented to his eye during the period of his pioneership, and he has accomplished his Herculean task only by the exercise of the most incessant industry. After bringing his land to a thorough state of cultivation he turned his attention to the feeding and raising of stock, making a specialty of Short-horn cattle and Poland-China swine. The land is splendidly improved and beautified by groves and orchards of the present proprietor's own planting. The barn and all the other out-buildings are among the best in the county. The dwelling is pleasantly situated, and constitutes a home bright and comfortable in the extreme.

Mr. Baker was born in Shelby County, Ind., on the 24th of January, 1844. His father, John L. Baker, a native of Covington, Ky., was born in 1803. While quite a young man he crossed the river into Hamilton County, Ohio, and was employed afterward with an older brother, running a flatboat between Cincinnati and New Orleans for a number of years. Later he migrated to Shelby County, Ind., and finally settled upon a tract of land in Sangamon County, Ill., in a region which was then but a wild border country.

The mother of our subject was born in Shelby County, Ind., in the year 1803, and was the daughter of Ephraim Biggs, named after her mother, Rachel. Her parents were pioneers of Indiana, her grandfather having settled there long before it was actually opened for settlement. She became the mother of eight children, of whom our subject was the third. The latter, Reuben F., upon reaching manhood, was married, Sept. 13, 1856, to Miss Mary E., daughter of John and Mary K. (Patterson) Mahard, natives of Maryland. She was born in Maryland and educated in the city of Baltimore. With her parents she afterward lived in Cincinnati, Springfield and in Old Berlin, Ill. Mrs. Mahard is still living, making her home with her children in Missouri.

There have been given to Mr. and Mrs. Baker nine children, of whom seven are living, namely: John M., George L., Horatio S., Mary A., James P., Othello C. and Araminda. John, the eldest son, became the husband of Elizabeth Nicholson, and lives in Republic County, Kan.; they have two children, who bear the names Bertha and Roy. George was married to Ida Wright, of Osawatomie, Kan.; they reside in Belmont Precinct, and are the parents of three children—Reuben, Franklin and Grover. Mary A. is the wife of John Duncan, of Delaware Precinct, and they have one child, a daughter, Mary Lenora.

Mr. Baker settled on his present property in 1871. When it is remembered that he began life a poor boy, deprived of those aids and comforts usually looked for by children from parents and friends, it is both surprising and gratifying to note the successes which have attended his efforts, and to bear in mind that the same successes await those who will as honestly strive to attain them. Mr. and Mrs. B. with three of their children are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Dunbar, with which church our subject has been connected about thirty years. Mrs. Baker has been identified with this church since a maiden of seven years.

Our subject is a staunch member of the Democratic party, and has been its supporter since it was his right to use the ballot box. The family represents the most solid and reliable elements of this county and it is eminently fitting that the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Baker should embellish these pages.

DR. J. W. CHADDUCK, the leading and oldest dentist not only in Nebraska City, but in the State, was born in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., Feb. 4, 1831. His ancestors for several generations back were also natives of the Old Dominion. His grandfather, Charles Chadduck, was left an orphan at an early age and obliged to look out for himself. The patronymic was originally spelled in a different manner. The grandfather when a boy was engaged in taking tobacco to market, and one day the weighmaster in writing out the weigh bill appended to it the name "Charles Chadduck," and that spelling has since been in general use among his descendants.

Grandfather Chadduck in due time married, and became the father of Eli, the father of our subject. The latter obtained a good education, developed into a school teacher, and also carried on farming. He was a man of more than ordinary abilities, and achieved considerable fame as a local politician. He turned his attention later to civil engineering, becoming County Surveyor. He spent his entire life upon his native soil. He married Miss Catherine Botts, who, like her husband, was born in the James River Valley, and whose ancestors crossed the Atlantic in Colonial times. Both Eli Chadduck and his wife, Catherine, lived to be more than threescore years and ten. The latter after the death of her husband came to Nebraska, where she spent her last days.

Of the eight children comprising the parental household of our subject, three were sons and five were daughters. The two eldest, Mary C. and Susan V., are deceased; Emily J. and Laura E. are residents of Nebraska City; Caroline C. is the wife of James A. Matthews, of this county; George B. is the Treasurer of Holt County, Mo.; Charles T. follows the profession of a teacher in his native Virginia. James W., our subject, was the youngest born. He grew to manhood on the farm and pursued his early studies in the common school. He was married in his native county, June 12, 1855, to Miss Eliza M. Colvin, who was born in Culpeper County, Va., and whose acquaintance he made when she was a young lady of nineteen years.

Dr. Chadduck taught school about two years after his marriage, then removed to Holt County, Mo., where he entered upon the study of dentistry, a profession in which he had for several years been interested and which he had decided to make his life occupation. He found, however, that the American professional man as well as the laborer needs bread, and having no capital while pursuing his studies he worked as a carpenter and brickmaker, also at other pursuits to provide himself and family with the necessaries of life. Leaving Missouri in 1862 he took up his abode in Glenwood, Iowa, having then one child. Here he was enabled to devote himself to his profession, but the year following he changed his residence to Nebraska City, and opened the first dental office in the place. Since that time his interests have centered here. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a charter member of Lodge No. 12 in Nebraska City. He has passed the various chairs of his lodge and served as Master a number of years. He belongs to the Nebraska Dental Association, of which he is a charter member and of which he has been the presiding officer. He is also connected with the Missouri Valley Dental Association. A Democrat, politically, he has been quite prominent in politics, having been sent to the State Legislature twice and serving in the Senate one term. His estimable wife is a member in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JAMES HUNT. The traveler passing along the upper line of North Branch Precinct invariably has his attention attracted to the large property of this gentleman, which lies on section 7, and forms one of the finest homesteads in the locality. The farm is 518 acres in extent, and is neatly laid off into pasture and grain fields; the fences are kept in good shape, while the residence, with its adjoining buildings, is of modern style of architecture, and all amply adapted to the purposes for which they are intended. The important feature of the premises is the extreme good order prevailing at every point, and the air of thrift and enterprise which is suggestive of the supervision of one of the most progressive and intelligent farmers of the present day.

Next in importance to the man himself is the ancestry from which he sprang. Henry Hunt, the father of our subject, was a native of Yorkshire, England, and there married Miss Elizabeth Cleminson, who was born in the same locality. They emigrated to America after their marriage, in 1829, and settled on a tract of land in Cambria County, Pa., where the father built up a good homestead, and passed away in the month of October, 1850. The mother is still living in Pennsylvania, and is now seventy-eight years old. They were the parents of seven children: Timothy L.; Robert, who died when about fifty-seven years old; William H., John I. S.; Ruth, who died when thirty years old; Susannah and James (our subject). Of these five are living, and those besides James are residents mostly of Pennsylvania.

James Hunt was born at the parental homestead in Cambria County, Pa., Aug. 1, 1830, and continued a member of his father's household until twenty years of age. He received his education in the common schools, and when nineteen years old commenced an apprenticeship at the carpentry trade, which he followed in his native State about two and one-half years. In the spring of 1856, desiring to see something of the Great West, he crossed the Mississippi into Henry County, Iowa, but there unfortunately was taken ill with typhoid fever, and could neither proceed any further nor look around him in the Hawkeye State. This naturally induced a fit of homesickness, and soon after his recovery he returned to his mother's home.

The spring following, however, young Hunt returned to the West, making only a brief stay, however, and then went back to Pennsylvania and was married in 1859. He purchased a tract of land in Cambria County, and soon afterward began farming. In August, 1864, during the progress of the Civil War he enlisted in Company C, 51st Pennsylvania Infantry, being mustered in at Carlisle, and was, together with his regiment, assigned to the command of Gen. W. H. Bolton. He experienced some hairbreadth escapes at the battle of Petersburg, but aside from that returned home unharmed at the close of the war. Mr. Hunt now resumed his residence in Cambria County, where he continued to carry on agriculture until the spring of 1882. Then, crossing the Father of Waters once more, he came to this State, and was located for one year in Johnson County. In the fall of 1887 he purchased the land which he now owns and occupies. Upon this he has made most of the improvements which we behold to-day. His property lies on sections 7, 17 and 18, and in addition to the thorough cultivation of the soil he has planted fruit and shade trees, and divided many of his fields with beautiful hedge fences.

On the 16th of May, 1859, occurred one of the most important events in the life of our subject, namely, his marriage with Miss Christiana B. Keefer. This lady is the daughter of Ernest and Mary M. (Baird) Keefer, both of whom were natives of Germany, and upon emigrating to the United States settled at once in Cambria County, Pa. The father was a coal miner, and being a very industrious and prudent man, accumulated a good property. He died about 1868, at the homestead which he had built up in the Keystone State. The mother is still living, and has now arrived at the advanced age of eighty years. Their children, five in number, were named respectively: John, Christiana B., Maggie, William and Hannah. Those surviving are residents of Pennsylvania and Nebraska.

Mrs. Hunt was born in the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, in February, 1841, and was a little girl four years of age when she came with her parents to America. She received a common-school education, and was carefully trained by an excellent mother in all housewifely duties. Of her union with our subject there have been born nine children, namely: Henry E., Harvey M., Mary E., Elizabeth C., Sanford R., Thomas S., Bertha A., Laura E. and Mabel. Henry married Miss Myrtie Holland, and lives on a farm in South Branch Precinct. The other children are at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are members in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Rockford, and Mr. H., politically, votes the straight Republican ticket. He has been a member of the School Board two terms, and is one of the most highly respected men of his community, one whose word is considered as good as his bond. The Hunt family is one of the most highly respected in this part of the county, and the homestead, a view of which appears on another page, comprises a prominent feature in its landscape.

CAPT. LOGAN ENYART stands conspicuously among the prominent men of Otoe County as one largely identified with its business and agricultural interests, a man public-spirited and liberal, one who has seen much of life, who distinguished himself in the army during the war, who suffered the loss of an eye in fighting for the principles he believed to be right, but who in the battle of life has evidently come out with flying colors. He is widely and favorably known throughout Nebraska, as much for his genial and hospitable disposition and broad and extended views of life as for his practical business talents, his perseverance and his energy.

In the vicinity of Nebraska City, where he makes his home, Capt. Enyart has been foremost among its leading enterprises, few of which have been carried to a successful issue independently of his countenance and encouragement. He is President of the Farmers' Bank, one of the wealthiest institutions of the State, an extensive land-owner in Otoe County, having the warrantee deed to a number of farms, and largely interested in live stock. His homestead proper is located on section 33 in Belmont Precinct, and comprises a fine tract of land in a highly cultivated condition, with modern farm buildings, fruit and shade trees, and all the appurtenances of a modern country estate. He has no family except his amiable and excellent wife, a lady highly respected in her community, and well fitted to be the companion of such a man as her husband.

The Enyart family is of French descent, and was first represented in the United States probably during Colonial days. Its men were of stalwart frame and noble constitution, traits which our subject has inherited in a remarkable degree. In fact, he may be called a man of iron nerves, and his high courage was amply displayed during war times, when, although he suffered great loss of property, he never permitted himself to sink under his misfortunes, but rallied from the shock, commenced again the battle of life, and became again wealthy.

A native of Monroe County, Ky., Capt. Enyart was born June 20, 1831, and is the son of Hezekiah W. and Mary (Kidwell) Enyart, who were both natives of Virginia. The paternal grandfather, John Enyart, was born in the city of Paris, France, where he was reared to manhood and married. His last years were spent in Virginia. The father of our subject left Kentucky in 1833, and removed with his family to Clay County, Mo., where they lived two years, and then changed their residence to Davis County, that State. The father was principally interested in live stock and farming, and died very suddenly, at the age of seventy-six years, upon the day of Lee's surrender, April 9, 1865. The mother survived her husband a number of years, her death taking place in Missouri, in the year 1882, at the old homestead, when she was seventy-five years old. The nine children of the parental family were named respectively: Logan, Louisa; Permelia, who died when twenty-five years old; Milton, Amanda; Josephine, who died at the age of twenty years; Albert, Hezekiah, and Mary Ann, who died when thirty-three years old. The survivors are mostly residents of Missouri, California, Colorado and Nebraska.

The first recollections of the Captain are of his childhood home in Davis County, Mo., where he commenced going to school in a little log cabin three months each year. His education being completed in two winters, it may therefore be called quite limited, and what he has learned he has had to learn himself. By a course of reading and observation he has always kept himself fully posted upon matters of general interest. He was reared a farmer's boy, and taught those habits of industry and principles of honor which have been the secret of his success in life. The people of that day labored early and late, and many a time young Enyart worked by the light of the stars in his Missouri home, and being willing, active and muscular, accomplished an astonishing amount.

Our subject when twenty-three years of age was married, but not long afterward enlisted in the Confederate Army under Gov. Jackson (first call for soldiers to enlist in Missouri), becoming a member of Company G, 1st Missouri Cavalry. He was at once elected Captain of his company, and this fact indicates his popularity, as he entered the ranks without any military experience. He, however, possessed the natural abilities which secured him the confidence of his superior officers and the respect of his comrades, and that he seems to have held until the last gun was fired, and his subsequent course indicated how correct they were in their judgment. He led his company in his first engagement at Blue Mills, Mo., and was later at Lexington, where he distinguished himself and led his troops to victory. Later he was at the onset in the vicinity of Springfield, covering Price's retreat for ten days and ten nights. He fought at Pea Ridge under Gens. Van Dorn and Price, where he was twice wounded in one engagement, being struck first in the left shoulder and the second time in the forehead, but, notwithstanding, he kept upon his feet by his extraordinary will power, and never deserted his post until the conflict was ended.

Later Capt. Enyart was transferred to Corinth, Miss., from the West, where he fought with Gen. Beauregard in all the engagements around Corinth in the spring of 1862; at Iuka, Miss., in the fall of 1862, and later under Gen. Price. In the second battle of Corinth, under Gen. Van Dorn, while still fighting, he witnessed the defeat of the army under that General, and also at Champion Hills fought in that desperately bloody battle. Capt. Enyart in this latter engagement received a very close call, a musket ball fracturing his nose and putting out his left eye. Although suffering untold agony for days, he never entered a hospital. We next find him at the siege of Vicksburg, where the entire army was captured, and our subject was an eye witness of the surrender of Gen. Pemberton's army to Grant and of the explosion which destroyed the Confederate boats. He was soon paroled, however, and was among the first to be exchanged at Demopolis, Ala. He was transferred to the army of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, at Dalton, Ga., and was with this renowned warrior in the famous retreat from Dalton to Atlanta, when every inch of ground for 110 miles was disputed with Sherman. In this retreat the most noted places at which fighting occurred were Lone Mountain, Kenesaw Mountain, New Hope Church, Peach Tree Creek, and wound up with the siege of Atlanta.

Later Capt. Enyart fought at Jonesboro, and subsequently joining the army of Gen. Hood, went back through Georgia and Tennessee, fighting at Altona, and Tilton, Ga. At the latter place the Confederates captured the 18th Iowa Regiment. Afterward they engaged in battle with the Union forces at Huntsville, Ala., Columbia and Franklin, Tenn., where blood flowed like a river, and at the latter place Capt. Enyart was again captured, Nov. 30, 1864, and taken to Johnson's Island, in the State of Ohio, where he was confined a prisoner seven months and eleven days, until June 17, 1865, when he took the oath of allegiance to the Union, the war being over, and was released in disgust with mankind, and started for the West.

Capt. Enyart during this memorable period traveled over all the Southern States with the exception of Virginia, North Carolina and Maryland. He is pardonably proud of the fact that he was never in a hospital, and notwithstanding his wounds and extraordinary suffering attendant upon the loss of his eye, never quit the army, but fought to the last, and was the Sir Simon Captain of his State, and certainly is amply entitled the balance of his life to the rank of Captain. In the year 1865 he made his way without a dollar in his pocket across the Mississippi to Nebraska, then a Territory. In his native State of Missouri before the war he was the owner of 1,000 acres of good land, with buildings, live stock, and all the other valuable appurtenances of a well-developed country estate. His stock was driven off and confiscated, his buildings burned and his land left waste. In Nebraska the first thing he did was to buy a yoke of oxen and a wagon on credit, which, be it said to his honor, he had no trouble in obtaining, and loading his wagon with freight for Denver, he hired a man as driver, and on the first round trip made enough to pay for his team and his expenses, and had $50 left.

In the spring of 1866 Capt. Enyart engaged several more teams, and forming a partnership with J. W. Potter and Mont. Tremble, started with a train of thirteen wagons loaded with corn, for which they paid thirty-five cents per bushel, to Ft. Sanders. They sold this at six and a half cents per pound, and then secured a contract from the Government to remove Ft. Hollock to Ft. Sanders. This employed them a whole season, and yielded them handsome proceeds. In his travels he has been in California, Oregon (in the days of gold-hunting), also over nearly all the territory down as far as Mexico, Arizona and Utah.

Capt. Enyart now returned to Nebraska City, purchased a tract of land in Belmont Precinct, and began farming, together with raising and buying stock. It must not be supposed that these labors and journeyings were effected in an easy manner, on the contrary, Capt. Enyart endured the severest hardships, going through a wild and savage country, battling with its storms, and at intervals almost impassable roads, being obliged to accept poor fare at times, and surrounded by all the other difficulties of frontier life.

In the year 1871 Capt. Enyart turned his attention to the cattle business in Colorado, establishing his ranch fifteen miles west of Ft. Benton, on the Arkansas River. Later, as time passed on, he acquired a cattle ranch in New Mexico, and land in other sections of the Southwest and Otoe County, Neb. He supplies stock to feeders, and in the latter part of 1888 brought up 1,300 head of cattle from his ranch in Colorado to Nebraska. In the meantime, during these years, he has given due attention to the building up of his homestead, and in his domestic life is surrounded by comfort and luxury.

The marriage of Capt. Logan Enyart and Miss Lucy Ann Childs was celebrated at the home of the bride, in Jackson County, Mo., in 1855. Mrs. Enyart was born in Clark County, Ky., but was reared in Jackson County, Mo., to which her parents removed at an early day. She is the daughter of Christopher and Rachel Childs, who were natives of Kentucky, and whose household consisted of nine children. The parents and children are now all dead but three.

The Captain and Mrs. Enyart were separated during the entire period of the Civil War, our subject never being able to visit his home until after the conflict was ended, and Mrs. E. could not go to him. Upon his retirement from the service she joined him in Nebraska City, and has stood by his side now for a period of thirty-three years, one of the most faithful wives and helpmates which a man could desire. The Captain generously acknowledges that his success in life is largely due to the good judgment and wise counsels of this excellent lady. She has stimulated him to every worthy effort, and been his encourager both in storm and sunshine. She is a lady held in high esteem by all who know her.

Capt. Enyart, although born and reared a Southerner, has been largely instrumental in extinguishing the old prejudices inseparable from the vicissitudes of the war, and the fact that he has been a prominent and popular Democratic politician in a Republican county and State speaks well for the inherent traits of his character. After filling other positions of trust and responsibility, he was elected in the year 1872 to represent Otoe County in the Nebraska Legislature, and so faithfully did he discharge the duties of his office that he was re-elected in 1874. He has been an important factor in the councils of the Democratic party in this section, frequently representing it as a delegate to the various State conventions.

The Farmers' Bank, of Nebraska City, in which our subject is a Director, and of which he is President, was incorporated June 1, 1884, and in September, the same year, it opened for business, and is considered one of the solid institutions of the State. Its stockholders are estimated at a sum approaching $1,000,000, and it is hardly necessary to state that they are among the wealthiest and most substantial men of the county. Capt. Enyart in 1856 identified himself with the Masonic fraternity, in Missouri Lodge No. 65, now being a member of Nebraska City Lodge No. 12. This is the only organization of any society he ever belonged to.

GEORGE A. STRONG. Among the farming community of South Branch Precinct the subject of this sketch occupies a good position socially and financially. He has one of the most attractive homesteads in this region, finely located on section 28, and embracing 160 acres of land. He has acquitted himself as an enterprising farmer and good business man, one largely devoted to the interests of his home and his family, living quietly and unostentatiously, and preferring the comforts of his own fireside to mingling with the busy world. Although by no means advanced in years, he served in the Union Army during the late war, and preserves a vivid recollection of many of the experiences of that terrible time, in which he endured in common with his brother soldiers the hardships and privations of army life. He belonged to the home guards.

The parents of our subject, David B. and Betsey (Kagie) Strong, were natives respectively of New York and Pennsylvania, whence they removed in their youth with their parents to Trumbull County, Ohio, where they were married. The mother died many years ago. Both David B. Strong and his father, the paternal grandfather of our subject, are still living. The parental household included three sons and one daughter; the latter, Mary H., died when about thirteen years old. The other sons, John A. and Henry A. are living in Ohio and Wisconsin.

George A. Strong was born in Trumbull County,

Ohio, May 12, 1846, and soon after the death of his mother, which occurred when he was seven years old, began life for himself. He worked on a farm until the spring of 1862, and then, although but a youth of sixteen years, enlisted in a regiment called the Trumbull Guards, being mustered in at Gallipolis, and at the close of the war was mustered out at the same place. He had participated in several skirmishes.

After the close of the war young Strong began an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade, at which he worked three years in the Buckeye State. In the spring of 1868 he resolved to seek the farther West, and came to this county, homesteading the quarter-section of land from which he has transformed a valuable and productive farm. He has put up most of the buildings which he now occupies, and for the last nine or ten years has operated a blacksmith-shop on his farm, which has not only been the source of a great convenience to himself, but his neighbors also. His fields are divided by beautiful hedge fences, and he has planted fruit and shade trees, having an apple orchard of 200 trees, besides the smaller fruits.

Mr. Strong after coming to the West was married in the town of Syracuse, this county, Sept. 12, 1877, to Miss Sopha, daughter of T. J. and E. J. (James) Edwards, who were natives respectively of Kentucky and Ohio. They removed with their parents to Missouri and were married in that State, where the father for a time followed his trade of mason. In 1873 they came to this county, lived for a time in Nebraska City, and then on a farm in Fremont County, Iowa. Finally returning to Syracuse, they lived there a short time, then changed their residence to Johnson County, where they still make their home. Of their children, twelve in number, seven are living, namely: Amelia, Susan, John, Sopha, Thomas, Josephine and Frank. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Strong are residents mostly of Nebraska.

The wife of our subject was born in De Kalb County, Mo., July 28, 1856, received a good education, and taught school four terms before her marriage. She is a very intelligent lady and a favorite in the social circles of her neighborhood. Of her union with our subject there have been born five children, viz: M. Luella, Fred C., Susie B., J. Alta and E. Ruth. They are all at home with their parents. Mr. Strong is a Republican, "dyed in the wool," and an uncompromising Harrison and Morton man. He has been a member of the School Board of his district for the past three years, and Road Supervisor six years.

WILHELM WILHELMY. Throughout the Northwest perhaps few business men are better known than the gentleman whose biography is here presented. He is the senior partner of the firm of Wilhelmy & Overton, the popular and reliable hardware firm of Nebraska City. Our subject was born near the city of Bremen, in Germany, to Christian and Mary (Arnds) Wilhelmy, July 26, 1835.

The parents of our subject came to this country with their only child in the year 1839, and for one year made their home in Buffalo, but at the end of that time removed to the western part of Ohio, when it was all new and undeveloped country. At the time of his death in 1862 the father was engaged in the hotel business at New Bremen, Ohio. His mother is still living, and makes her home with our subject, and has now reached the advanced age of seventy-nine years. Their family circle included in all three children, the two younger being born in this country. Of these Minnie died when eighteen months old, and Frederick F., who was spared to them, has grown up, entered into the affairs of life with an earnest purpose, and is a member of the firm of Rector, Wilhelmy & Co., wholesale hardwaremen of Omaha.

The first recollections of our subject gather around Buffalo, N. Y., but the days of his boyhood were passed in Western Ohio, where at the time when everything was in a formative condition and pioneer life was the regular order of things, he as a youth had every opportunity to show what was in him. The schools were supported by voluntary contributions given chiefly by the German settlers of the district, and there he received initiation into the mysteries of education.

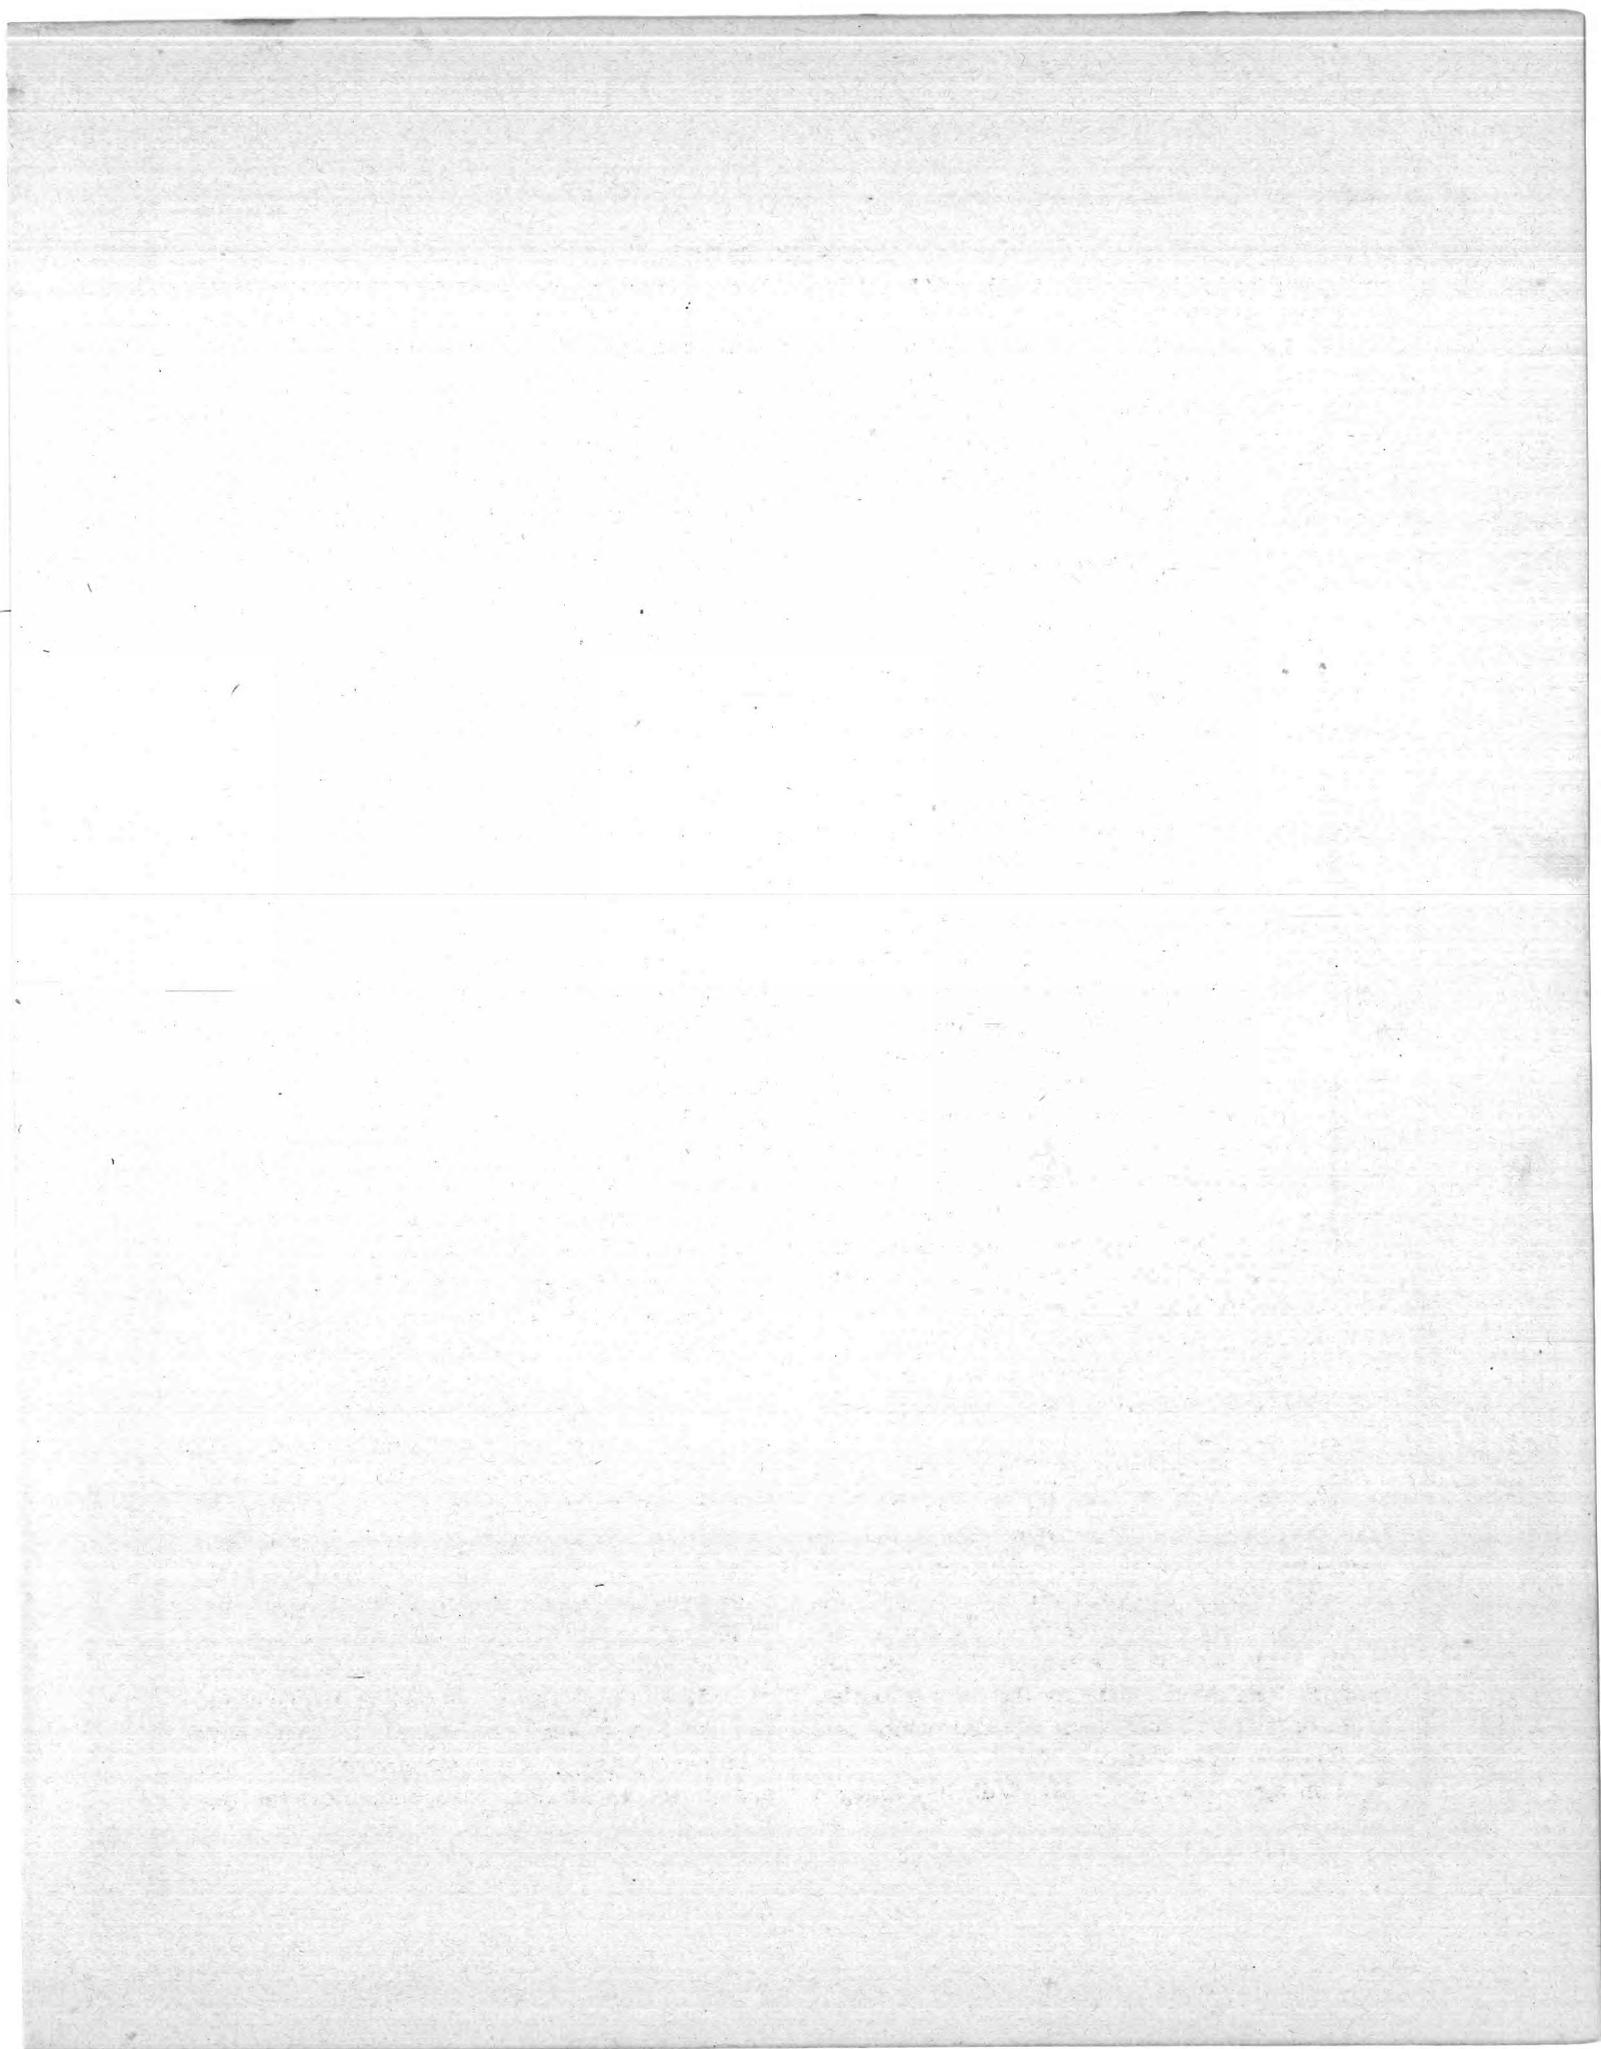

At the age of twenty-one Mr. Wilhelmy engaged as a clerk in a general store which was located close to the Indiana and Ohio State line. Until this time he had been brought into contact with hardly any but the German settlers, but now acquired the English language, in order to successfully carry on the business he had entered into. From clerking he embarked in hotel-keeping, taking charge of his father's hotel, which he continued after the death of that parent.

In 1864 our subject was united in wedlock with Miss Margaret Koop, who is a native of Ohio, and the daughter of John F. and Matta (Willembroke) Koop. Her parents were among the number who had emigrated to Western Ohio and purchased their homestead direct from the Government, settling in the year 1833. They are still living, and are eighty-eight and seventy-eight years of age respectively. They were the parents of ten children. Of these their daughter Margaret was the second child and only daughter.

The subject of our sketch came to Nebraska in the spring of 1869, and at once engaged in the agricultural implement business, being one of the first in that line in Nebraska City. With an ever-increasing agricultural population around him he did well from the beginning, and it was not long before he was enabled to complete satisfactory arrangements for his family to join him. With his brother he continued engaged in the business until 1875, when he sold out his interests to his brother, and engaged with Rheindthard Ballard & Co., as traveling salesman, selling threshers, engines and other implements. In this he continued for about nine years, and during that time did business in almost every part of the North and Northwest. At the end of that time the two senior members of the firm died, and our subject was retained by those who had charge of affairs, and for two years continued engaged in settling up the business of the firm, making a total of eleven years he served this firm.

In 1886, in company with a Mr. Draper, Mr. Wilhelmy bought out the Simson hardware business, which is still run by him. Mr. Draper in the spring of 1887 sold his business interests to Mr. Overton, and the firm's name was changed to that above mentioned. The business has grown rapidly and is on a most satisfactory basis, and enjoys the reputation of being strictly honest in its representations, prompt and faithful in its engagements. It is one of the best houses in the State, and is known favorably to quite a large section of country.

RESIDENCE OF ASA GODDING, SEC. 29. SYRACUSE PRECINCT.

RESIDENCE OF M. H. SHOEMAKER, SEC. 2. WYOMING PRECINCT.

The family circle of Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelmy comprises five children, viz.: Willie, who died in Ohio when a babe; Eddie, who was born in McGregor County, Iowa; Minnie, born in Nebraska City; and Leon and Lillie, twins. Eddie is engaged in business with his uncle at Omaha; the other surviving members of the family are at home. The residence of our subject is one of the finest in the city, and is situated in the western part thereof. It is thoroughly in keeping with his position in the business world, of which he is certainly one of the representative men.

Religiously, the subject of our sketch and his family are members of the Lutheran Church. In politics Mr. Wilhelmy is a Democrat, but has at no time sought to take a prominent part in such matters. He is one of the prominent members of the order of the Royal Arcanum, and holds the position of Grand Regent in the same. There, as in every other circle, he is accorded the unfeigned esteem and regard of those who know him, and these sentiments extend also to his wife and family.

ASA GODDING. In March of 1882 the gentleman a sketch of whose life is here briefly presented purchased 160 acres of land on section 29 of Syracuse Precinct, and settled upon it. This commenced his history as connected with this county. The above property, which he still occupies, is situated on the southwest quarter of the section, and was homesteaded by Jacob Sollenberger, who sold to Charles Adams, and from the latter it was obtained by our subject. The old homestead claim shanty still stands, and was occupied for one year by Mr. Godding during the building of his present residence, which is one of the most commodious and pleasant in the county.

September 29, 1826, witnessed the birth of our subject to Russell and Abigail (Sherman) Godding, in Rutland County, Vt. When he was but six years of age his father died, and thus he has been deprived of all the help and care that otherwise would have been received, and which is of inestimable value to a young man in starting in life, and on through the first few years at least of his experience.

Not long after the death of the head of the family, a removal was made to Rhode Island, where the mother did everything possible to keep her family together, and, as she was able, to give them the opportunity of making their way successfully in the world. At the tender age of nine years her son Asa was put to work in a woolen factory. There he continued for a number of years, learning the trade first of spinner, and afterward of wool finisher. His connection with this trade continued until 1856, at which time he emigrated to Illinois and purchased land in what is now Philo Township, Champaign County, where he was one of the pioneers.

At the time our subject located in the Prairie State there were hardly any settlers in his neighborhood, and he was prominently identified with the organization of Philo Township, and the first school district. At that time he was operating a half-section of land, but subsequently sold 160 acres. In 1874 he rented his farming property, and engaged in mercantile pursuits at Philo, becoming partner in the firm of Van Vleck & Godding. They were largely interested in grain, owning and operating an extensive flouring-mill in connection with the elevator which they built, and continued financially successful to an unexpected degree for about five years.

In 1879 Mr. Godding withdrew from the firm and removed to St. Louis. He there embarked in the manufacture of vinegar, pickles, and articles of a kindred nature. There also he built up an extensive business, continuing for nearly three years, returning at the end of that period to Monticello, Ill., and coming to this State in 1882.

While resident at Urbana, Ill., in the year 1866, our subject was united in marriage with Sarah A. Driver, of Urbana, who was born in 1840, in North Carolina. After a happy married life of ten years Mrs. Godding died at Philo, in 1876, leaving no children.

Upon the 1st of January, 1882, our subject re-entered the married state, becoming the husband of Delia J. Heislar, daughter of George and Rebecca Heislar, of Champaign County, Ill. This lady was born in Fredericktown, Ohio, on the 6th of November, 1846. Her mother, Mrs. Heislar, died in August, 1849, leaving four children, viz.: Daniel; Mary R., now Mrs. Perry Silver; Delia J. and Theodore. Of the second marriage there is one child living, Delmont, now a resident of Hutchinson, Kan.

Mr. and Mrs. Godding have become the parents of one child living. A son, George H., born June 2, 1885, died nine days after his birth; they have a daughter, Grace A., born Sept. 23, 1882; and an adopted son, who bears the name Joseph V., who has made his home with them since he was three years of age.

Among the stanch Republicans of the county must certainly be named our subject, who has sustained since his ability to take part in political matters a reputation in that regard. While in Philo Township he served as Collector for two years, at a time when wolf scalps were accepted as payment for taxes. Mrs. Godding is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is greatly esteemed therein. Their home, a view of which appears on another page, bears fair comparison with those of the other intelligent people of Syracuse Precinct and vicinity.

MATHEW H. SHOEMAKER. The farming and stock-raising interests of Wyoming Precinct recognize in the subject of this sketch one of their most energetic and successful representatives. Since the spring of 1882 he has operated successfully 160 acres of fertile land on section 2, bringing about a great improvement in its original condition, and erecting thereon some of the finest buildings in this part of the county. A view of his homestead is presented in this volume.

Mr. Shoemaker has been especially fortunate in his live-stock operations, and has also given much attention to the planting of trees on his farm, having a fine apple orchard and the smaller fruits in abundance. Besides the home farm, he has a fine tract of land 240 acres in extent in Liberty Precinct, Cass County, which fortunately lies adjacent to the homestead. He has been kept busy in the improvement of his 400 acres, which when coming into his possession was raw prairie upon which there had been no attempt at improvement. He was a resident of Cass County for a period of fifteen years before taking possession in the spring of 1882 of the homestead which he now occupies.

Mr. Shoemaker first set foot in Nebraska in the year 1857, and is consequently one of its pioneers. He has seen it transformed from a Territory into a State, and commenced at the foot of the ladder to build up the homestead and secure a competency. That he has been in a large measure successful is indicated in his present surroundings. He comes of substantial stock, being the son of Samuel G. and Mary (Pott) Shoemaker, who were both natives of Pennsylvania, and the father, like our subject, was born in Lycoming County. After marriage the parents settled in Muncie Creek Township, under the roof where the father was born, and later his son, Mathew H., our subject, the birth of the latter taking place March 31, 1833. In 1857, twenty-four years after the birth of their son Mathew, retiring from active labor, the parents moved to the village of Muncie, where the father passed from the scenes of earth in the year 1871, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. He was born in the year 1789. The mother survived her husband a few years, her death occurring in the year 1880, and her age being eighty-three. They were married on the 22d of May, 1817, their married life therefore had reached a period of nearly fifty-six years. They had a family of six sons and two daughters, of whom four sons and both daughters are still living. Our subject is the only one residing in the State of Nebraska. Jasper and Robert F. live in Pennsylvania, where also Mary Melissa, who is still single, resides; William P. lives in Bourbon County, Kan., near Ft. Scott; and Catherine, wife of Noah Mackey, lives in Missouri, not far from St. Louis.

This branch of the Shoemaker family were of Dutch ancestry, and people usually of wealth and standing, who exercised a decided influence in the affairs of the community where they lived. They were principally agriculturists by occupation, men prompt to meet their obligations, and whose word was considered as good as their bond. The mother of our subject also came from an excellent family, and the town of Pottsville, Pa., was named in honor of her grandfather, by whom it was founded. The Shoemakers originally, in religious matters, held to the doctrines of the Lutheran Church, but later we find them with the Episcopalians. Henry Shoemaker, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was also a native of Lycoming County, Pa., where he was reared to manhood, and married Miss Susan Dudder, of Dutch ancestry. They continued their residence in Lycoming County the balance of their lives, living to be ripe in years, and were also connected with the Lutheran Church.

Mathew H. Shoemaker was the sixth child of a family of six sons and two daughters, all of whom received careful home training, and a practical education in the common schools. Of these six are living. In April, 1860, Mr. Shoemaker and three of his neighbors, viz: Daniel B. Robb, Thomas Lindsey and Amos Weaver, clubbed together and got an outfit consisting of a wagon and three yoke of cattle, and provisions for six months, and started over the plains for Pike's Peak, where, after a pleasant trip of forty days, they arrived. Denver was then but a hamlet, and the first thing that attracted their attention on arriving there was to witness the hanging of a man by the citizens, for murder. This gave Mr. S. a fair idea of the character of the people and their methods of administering the laws as they made them for the evil doers. He remained in Colorado for two years, and the whole party spent their time diligently employed in different occupations. During his stay in Colorado he was very successful.

Our subject continued a resident of his native State until a young man twenty-four years old, when he crossed the Mississippi and resolved to cast his lot with the pioneer element of Nebraska. Some years afterward he made the acquaintance of a most estimable young lady of Wyoming Precinct, Miss Alice E. Olds, to whom he was married Nov. 16, 1874. Mrs. Shoemaker was born in Symcoe, Lower Canada, Oct. 12, 1857, and came to the States with her parents when quite a young child, they settling in this county, where she was reared to womanhood. She is a very estimable lady, and by her marriage with our subject has become the mother of six children, three of whom are deceased, namely: Kate, Mary E. and Clara. The survivors are Edward, Artie and Jessie, who are at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Shoemaker attend the Episcopal Church at Wyoming. Our subject was a member of the Republican party a number of years, but his warm interest in the temperance work led him in 1888 to identify himself with the Prohibitionists.

THOMAS D. SABIN occupies a prominent place among the farmers of this county, and resides on section 9 of Syracuse Precinct, his home being about one-half mile from the town of that name. He is a native of the Buckeye State, and was born on the 8th of September, 1839, in Knox County. His parents were David and Nancy (Baird) Sabin; the father was a native of Washington County, Pa., the mother of Perry County, Ohio. The latter is deceased.

The grandfather of our subject, David Sabin, was born in Vermont, which is as far as our subject has been enabled to trace his ancestry. He removed from Vermont and settled in Washington County about the time of his marriage, where he lived for many years and brought up his family, then going to Ohio, where he spent the remainder of his days in Licking County.

The father of our subject grew to manhood in Pennsylvania, and was about eighteen years of age when he took his place with his father among the pioneer settlers of Licking County. In that place he lived until the year 1856, when he migrated to Illinois and settled upon the farm near Bloomington, where he continued to follow agricultural pursuits until 1872, when he removed to Piper City, where he still resides, and although he has reached the advanced age of eighty years, enjoys the use of his faculties and fairly good health. He has been a successful man and a leading citizen; has been able to educate his children and give them a start in life.

The mother of our subject was born in Perry County, Ohio, in the year 1812, and died upon the 14th of February, 1871. Her married life extended over a period of forty years, which, from commencement to close, witnessed the same affectionate devotion and faithfulness to the obligations resting upon her as a wife and mother; she filled a place in the hearts of her family that can never be otherwise occupied. She was the mother of ten children, only five of whom, however, attained to years of discretion, viz: Daniel E., who resides at Albion; Mary J., now Mrs. Fowler, who resides near Piper City, Ill.; Thomas D., our subject; Jemima W., of Chicago, and Eliza, who was married to Mr. David Hall, and died at her home at Danvers, Ill.

The subject of our sketch attained to years of manhood before leaving his native State. In 1856 with his parents he removed to Illinois and began life for himself. In 1864 he went to McLean County, Ill., and engaged in farming. The same year he was united in marriage with Eliza V. Wood, the estimable daughter of William and Mary (Campbell) Wood, who were natives of Frederick County, Va., but removed to Clinton, Ohio, where their daughter Eliza was born on the 10th of January, 1836. Their home in Clinton County was only made by cutting their way, foot by foot, in the dense forests of that district, and thus redeeming, piece by piece, the land for cultivation. Their residence in Ohio continued until 1853, when they removed to Knox County, Ill., where the mother died in 1861. The family removed to McLean County. The father died in the year 1869, at his home in Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. Wood were the parents of eight children, seven of whom attained their majority. These are: Mary L., who became the wife of Joseph Strickle; William R., of Colorado; James H., who died at Denison, Tex.; Robert M., of Nebraska; John F., of Bloomington; Eliza V., the wife of our subject, and Dakin D., who resides in Nebraska, and is engaged in farming.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sabin settled on a farm in McLean County and began life in earnest. Our subject gave his attention to the improvement and cultivation of his land, in the endeavor to bring his farm to as near a perfect state of cultivation as possible. He put up some first-class farm buildings, and gave attention generally to stock-farming, also to the buying and shipping of stock. In this he continued until 1883, when he came to Nebraska and purchased his present property, which comprises 240 acres of land, and is well provided with the various appliances and buildings needed. They have but one child, a daughter, Cora, born Feb. 8, 1871, who has displayed a character and disposition most happy. The position of our subject and wife religiously is in the Christian Church, of which they are highly esteemed members and active workers. In matters of political import Mr. Sabin usually votes the Republican ticket, supporting it in any effort that is made when he conscientiously can; but he is not confined within the circumscribed limits of party fence-building, and is guided in this as in everything else by the high principles that have characterized the decisions of his life, and is swayed by the condition of the situation to be met, the needs of the constituents, and the power of the candidate to meet those needs, so that he might be called independent. He is a man who stands high in the community in every regard.

WILLIAM J. DOUGALL. The name of this gentleman is familiar to a large proportion of the residents of Palmyra Precinct, he being numbered among its leading men. His career has been creditable in the extreme, and one which his children may look upon with pride. During the late Civil War he did good service as a soldier in the Union Army, and upon returning to private life has been one of the most useful members of an intelligent and prosperous community. Genial, companionable and conscientious, he is popular among his fellow-citizens, and his personal appearance alone would commend him as a man of more than ordinary capabilities. He is of commanding presence, with fine features, and a remarkably intelligent eye—a man who would be singled out among a thousand.

Mr. Dougall has the greater part of his life been engaged in farming pursuits, and his property in Palmyra Precinct embraces eighty acres on section 14, and forty acres on section 10, besides the home farm on section 15. To the latter he has given especial attention, having gathered around himself and his family those conveniences and comforts naturally suggested to the kindly husband and father and the self-respecting citizen. He is in the prime of life, having been born Sept. 1, 1842, at the farm of his father in Princeton Township, Schenectady Co., N. Y. His parents were John D. and Jennie (Walker) Dougall. The father, a native of Scotland, was born about seven miles from the city of Edinburgh, and was given a fine education, attending school during his youthful days until coming to the United States. After taking up his residence in Schenectady County, N. Y., he engaged in teaching and farming combined, and in the Empire State made the acquaintance of his future wife.

The mother of our subject was born in the above-named county, and was there married to John Dougall. Their union resulted in the birth of five children, namely: Thomas, George, William J. (our subject), Peter and Margaret. The latter was taken from the home circle under the most distressing circumstances, she being burned to death when a child. All of the others grew to mature years, and three are now living. The parents, a brother and a sister, died during the Civil War.

Mr. Dougall spent his boyhood and youth on the farm, pursuing his first studies in the district school. At the age of sixteen years he became a student of Jonesville Academy. Not long after the first call for troops to assist in putting down the Rebellion, he enlisted in Company E, 44th New York Infantry, which was styled the "Ellsworth Avengers." His regiment was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and young Dougall participated in many of the important battles which followed, namely: Big Bethel, Little Bethel, Yorktown, Williamsburg, and was in the seven-days fight at the second battle of Bull Run. At Antietam he was promoted to Sergeant, and afterward severely wounded in the left leg. He was conveyed to the hospital at Harrisburg, Pa., where he lay a short time, and was finally obliged to accept his honorable discharge on account of disability. He had, however, given a faithful service of one year, and felt that he had performed his duty.

During the attack of Lee upon the city of Gettysburg there were 2,200 disabled and discharged soldiers waiting at Camp Distribution, not yet having been assigned to their respective regiments. Observing that the Union troops were in need of their aid, they at once took up arms, and as if by magic, submitted to the orders of the War Department. Our subject at the time assumed command of a squad of men, and through the united efforts of the brave recruits, the plans of the rebel General were materially changed if not absolutely defeated. Mr. Dougall re-enlisted with the 99th Pennsylvania Infantry, and six days later was again found in the thickest of the fight at the battles of Fredericksburg, Kelly's Ford, and the first and second battles of the Wilderness. At the latter he was struck by two balls at about the same time, and about four rods away seventeen color-bearers fell. Corporal Dougall, notwithstanding his wounds, seized one of the falling banners, and was about bearing it on to victory, when a musket ball struck his breastplate, and although not penetrating it, dealt him such a blow that he reeled, and was in the act of falling when another ball struck him in the left heel. He was carried to the rear. At the battle of Spottsylvania Court House, when every inch of ground was disputed, the troops first advancing, then retreating, Sergt. Dougall while nearing the third line of the rebel breastworks, cleared them, and seizing the rebel colors, started for his own lines, but before he could reach them fell, severely wounded in the head. The cry went up from his comrades that "brave Dougall was no more." The latter lay unconscious on the ground nearly all day, while thousands of bullets flew thick around him, and when the ground was strewn with the dead and wounded of both armies. At night he crawled into his regiment's ranks.

Sergt. Dougall later recovering from his wounds, was given a thirty-days furlough and returned home. At the expiration of this time he rejoined his regiment and participated in the series of battles along the Chickahominy, prior to laying siege to Petersburg. Here he was promoted to Corporal, and was again wounded several times. During his army service he participated in thirty-two general engagements, besides unnumbered skirmishes and all the other vicissitudes of war, the wearisome marches, hardships and privations, insufficient food, and the various other experiences incident to life in the army. He was present at the final grand review in Washington, and received his honorable discharge in Philadelphia, Pa., after a service of four years and thirteen days.

Our subject, April 9, 1866, crossed the Mississippi, and coming to this county homesteaded 160 acres of land in Palmyra Precinct. In November following he was united in marriage with Miss Emma, adopted daughter of Homer Chamberlain. This lady was born in 1848, in Canada. They began their wedded life together under the modest roof provided by our subject on the new farm, which they have since developed into a comfortable and well-ordered homestead. Their union has been blessed by the birth of five children, the eldest of whom, Minnie B., died when an interesting young girl of fifteen years. The others, Homer J., William E., Elizabeth A. and Joseph G., are all at home.

Mr. Dougall voted for the adoption of a State Constitution in 1866, and has been an ardent supporter of Republican principles. He has served as Justice of the Peace four years, Road Supervisor twelve years, and Constable for a period of fifteen years. Both he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the United Brethren Church, attending with the Mt. Zion congregation in Palmyra. Socially, Mr. B. is Adjutant in the G. A. R., in which he has also served as Officer of the Day, and as a delegate to the National Encampment.

MASON H. WILES, whose highly productive and splendidly kept farm is situated upon section 14 of Delaware Precinct, was born in Sandusky County, Ohio, on the 15th of February, 1847. He is the son of Mason S. and Helen Wiles, natives of New York State. His father removed to Ohio when a young man, and there followed his trade, that of a carpenter. In 1861 he removed with his family to Eaton County, Mich., where he pursued carpentering, while his sons attended to the farm. In the fall of 1869 they migrated to Bates County, Mo., and the following spring settled in Peru, Nemaha County, this State.

The subject of our sketch was early initiated into the various duties of farm life, and in the common school of the district received such instruction as would serve as a basis of operations in business or other engagements to which he might give his attention in after years. He accompanied his parents as they migrated from one place to another, finding such employment upon the farm as was both congenial and helpful.

Finally, leaving home and beginning life for himself, Mr. Wiles settled about six miles west of Peru, where he lived until 1879, engaged in farming. He came to this county in the spring of 1882, and lived for three years near Nebraska City, moving to his present farm in 1885. He owns 160 acres of land amply adapted for agricultural pursuits. He has labored industriously to bring it to its present condition, and is usually rewarded with abundant harvests. In the stock department of his farm he raises chiefly cattle and hogs, and upon an average has each season no less than eighty head of graded cattle.

In no other country in the world are there so many of the masses of the people owning their own homes. This is an indication that, deep-rooted in the heart of the American citizen, is the desire for a fireside of his own, and that he finds the atmosphere of the domestic circle eminently congenial. A country has therein one of its strongest and stoutest bulwarks. Napoleon the Great is said to have remarked that if he had a nation of mothers he could conquer the world. Our subject, in common with American citizens generally, having the same desire for the home relation, sought and obtained the hand of Lenora A. Kent in marriage, that event being celebrated on the 22d of January, 1880. Their union has been fruitful in the birth of three children, who bear the names of Wyman S., Hiram L. and Frank S.

Mr. Wiles is of a retiring disposition, and consequently is not prominent in political affairs. He is, however, a loyal and true citizen, careful to do his duty, usually voting with the Republican party, but reserving to himself the right of the free citizen to support such candidates for office as he may deem most worthy and efficient.

The homestead views of this volume form one of its most attractive features, and the Wiles residence, with its surroundings herein given, aid greatly in perfecting the illustrative department, as indicative of the tastes and industry of an intelligent community.

THOMAS WEATHERHOGG is a resident on section 3, Palmyra Precinct. A native of Lincolnshire, England, he was born in 1829, and is the son of John and Hannah (Coats) Weatherhogg, of whose children six are living, namely: Charles, Jane, Thomas, William, Henry and George.

The father of our subject was a farmer by occupation, and the boyhood of Thomas was spent in his native county, where he became familiar with the employments of rural life. Upon leaving home he was in the employ of one man on a farm for a period of nine years. He was married, in 1853, to Miss Mary, daughter of Thomas and Mary Halford, who was born in 1828. Mr. H. was also a farmer by occupation, and the parental family consisted of three children—William, Rachel and Mary.

Mr. and Mrs. Weatherhogg lived in England about four years after their marriage, and became the parents of one child. In 1857 they started for America, and after a prosperous voyage landed in New York City, whence they proceeded soon afterward to the vicinity of Mendota, Ill. There our subject engaged in farming. Later, with his brothers, Charles, William and Henry, he started to Pike's Peak, in 1863, and there experienced the truth of the maxim that "all is not gold that glitters." After one year spent in fruitlessly prospecting, he turned his attention to something more tangible, and paying an exorbitant price for a team of oxen, began freighting. Later he returned to Illinois, and remained there until coming to Nebraska in the fall of 1865.

Mrs. Weatherhogg is deceased. Their only child, a daughter Anna, became the wife of George Hailey, and is now living at Long Pine, in Brown County, Ill. Mr. H. is a farmer by occupation, and they have one child, a daughter Lilly.

Upon coming to Nebraska Mr. Weatherhogg settled upon 160 acres of land in Palmyra Precinct, and put up a small house, paying for the lumber at the rate of $40 per thousand. Here he lived by himself, his daughter Anna having taken up her abode with his brother Charles, where she lived until eighteen years of age. She then came home to her father. Our subject in 1869 contracted a second marriage, with Mrs. Harriet (Smith) Longstreet, widow of the late Henry Longstreet. Mrs. Weatherhogg was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., and went with her parents to Michigan. There she was first married and lived until after the war, when she came to Nebraska with relatives and took up a tract of land in Palmyra Precinct. Of this union there have been born four children, all sons—Frank, John, George and Frederick.

Mr. Weatherhogg, politically, is independent, and has never had any aspiration for office. He has fought the grasshopper plague successfully, and has now a comfortable homestead in the midst of fruit and shade trees, including an apple orchard and a quantity of grape vines, and has a grove of cottonwood, ash and honey locust trees. His fields are laid off with neatly trimmed hedge fences, and his home forms an exceedingly pleasant picture of country life.

ROBERT T. MCPHERSON may be placed among the substantial, well-to-do citizens of Russell Precinct, and operates successfully from a financial standpoint eighty acres of excellent farming land on section 6. Joseph McPherson, the father of our subject, was born in Scotland. He came to this country a young man and began farming in Pennsylvania, and he was the owner of 200 acres in that State and there died in 1856. The maiden name of his wife, the mother of our subject, whom he met and married in the State of his adoption, was Miss Anna Barr, who was born and brought up in Pennsylvania. The maternal side of the family represents a French ancestry. Grandfather Barr was in the War of 1812, and was one of the children born in this country, although of French parents. The mother of our subject is still living, and is sixty years of age. She was the mother of six children, of whom the following three survive: Hugh, who resides in Pennsylvania; John and Robert T. Elizabeth, Mary and Jane are deceased.

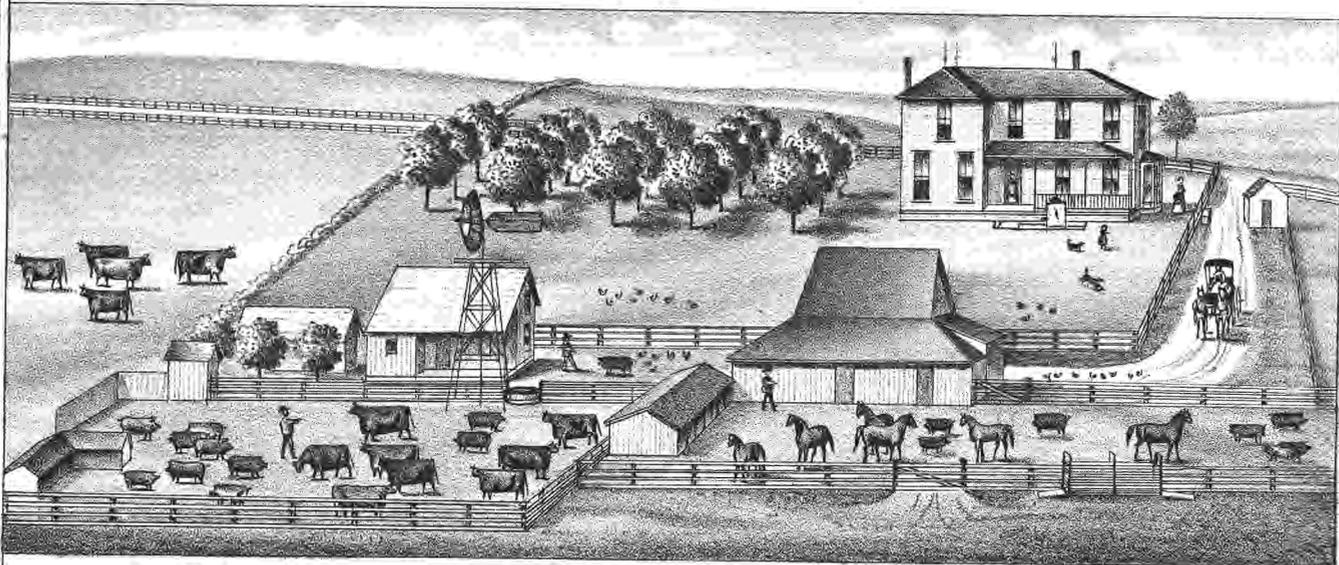

The subject of our sketch was born in Indiana County, Pa., on the 28th of August, 1851. He made his home with his parents until fourteen years of age, and then went to Illinois, and worked out upon a farm by the month for about six years. He managed to pick up while at home and during the winters of his absence a fairly good practical education, through the instrumentality of the common schools. In the year 1871 he started overland and came to Cass County, in this State. He remained there one year, and then came to Russell Precinct, in this county, where he was enabled to purchase eighty acres of land, his present property, which he has improved in a most commendable manner.

DIETRICH SCHINDLER. The agricultural interests of Otoe Precinct are no better represented than by the subject of this sketch, who owns a large and well-managed farm in this locality, pleasantly situated on section 22, and comprising 360 acres of as rich and fertile farming land as is to be found in Eastern Nebraska. Mr. Schindler is a native of Switzerland, having been born in the Canton of Glarus, July 10, 1843. His father, Jacob Schindler, and his grandfather, Joachim Schindler, were also natives of the same canton, and the latter spent his entire life there. The father of our subject learned the trade of locksmith in his native land, and pursued it there until 1857, when he set sail from Havre de Grace in the month of February in an American-bound vessel, accompanied by three of his five children. They landed at New Orleans sixty days later, and there took passage on a steamer up the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, and landed at Otoe City, now Minersville, Otoe County, and from there Mr. Schindler started out to seek a location. He soon bought a claim in Otoe Precinct, section 22, where our subject now resides. He soon completed his purchase with the Government, and moved into the log cabin that stood on the place nearly finished. He had ten acres broken, and planted that with corn and potatoes, and continued to live there until 1859, when he rented the land and went to Arkansas, where he bought a tract of land in Dallas County, and there the family were reunited by his wife and other two children joining them. He was prosperously engaged in farming there until his death in 1864, which was brought about in this way. It was during the war, and the country was infested by guerrillas, who, while he was on his way to Little Rock to see Gen. Steele, waylaid and killed him, and at the same time the greater part of his stock and personal property was killed or destroyed by the bushwhackers. Soon after his death the family returned to Otoe Precinct, and settled on the land that he had purchased from the Government. The mother of our subject was a resident of the precinct until her death. The record of the children born to her and her husband is as follows: Ursula, wife of Henry Vallman; Emilie died soon after the return of the family from Arkansas; Dietrich; Annie E., wife of Jacob Baltensperger; Edward died in Arkansas.

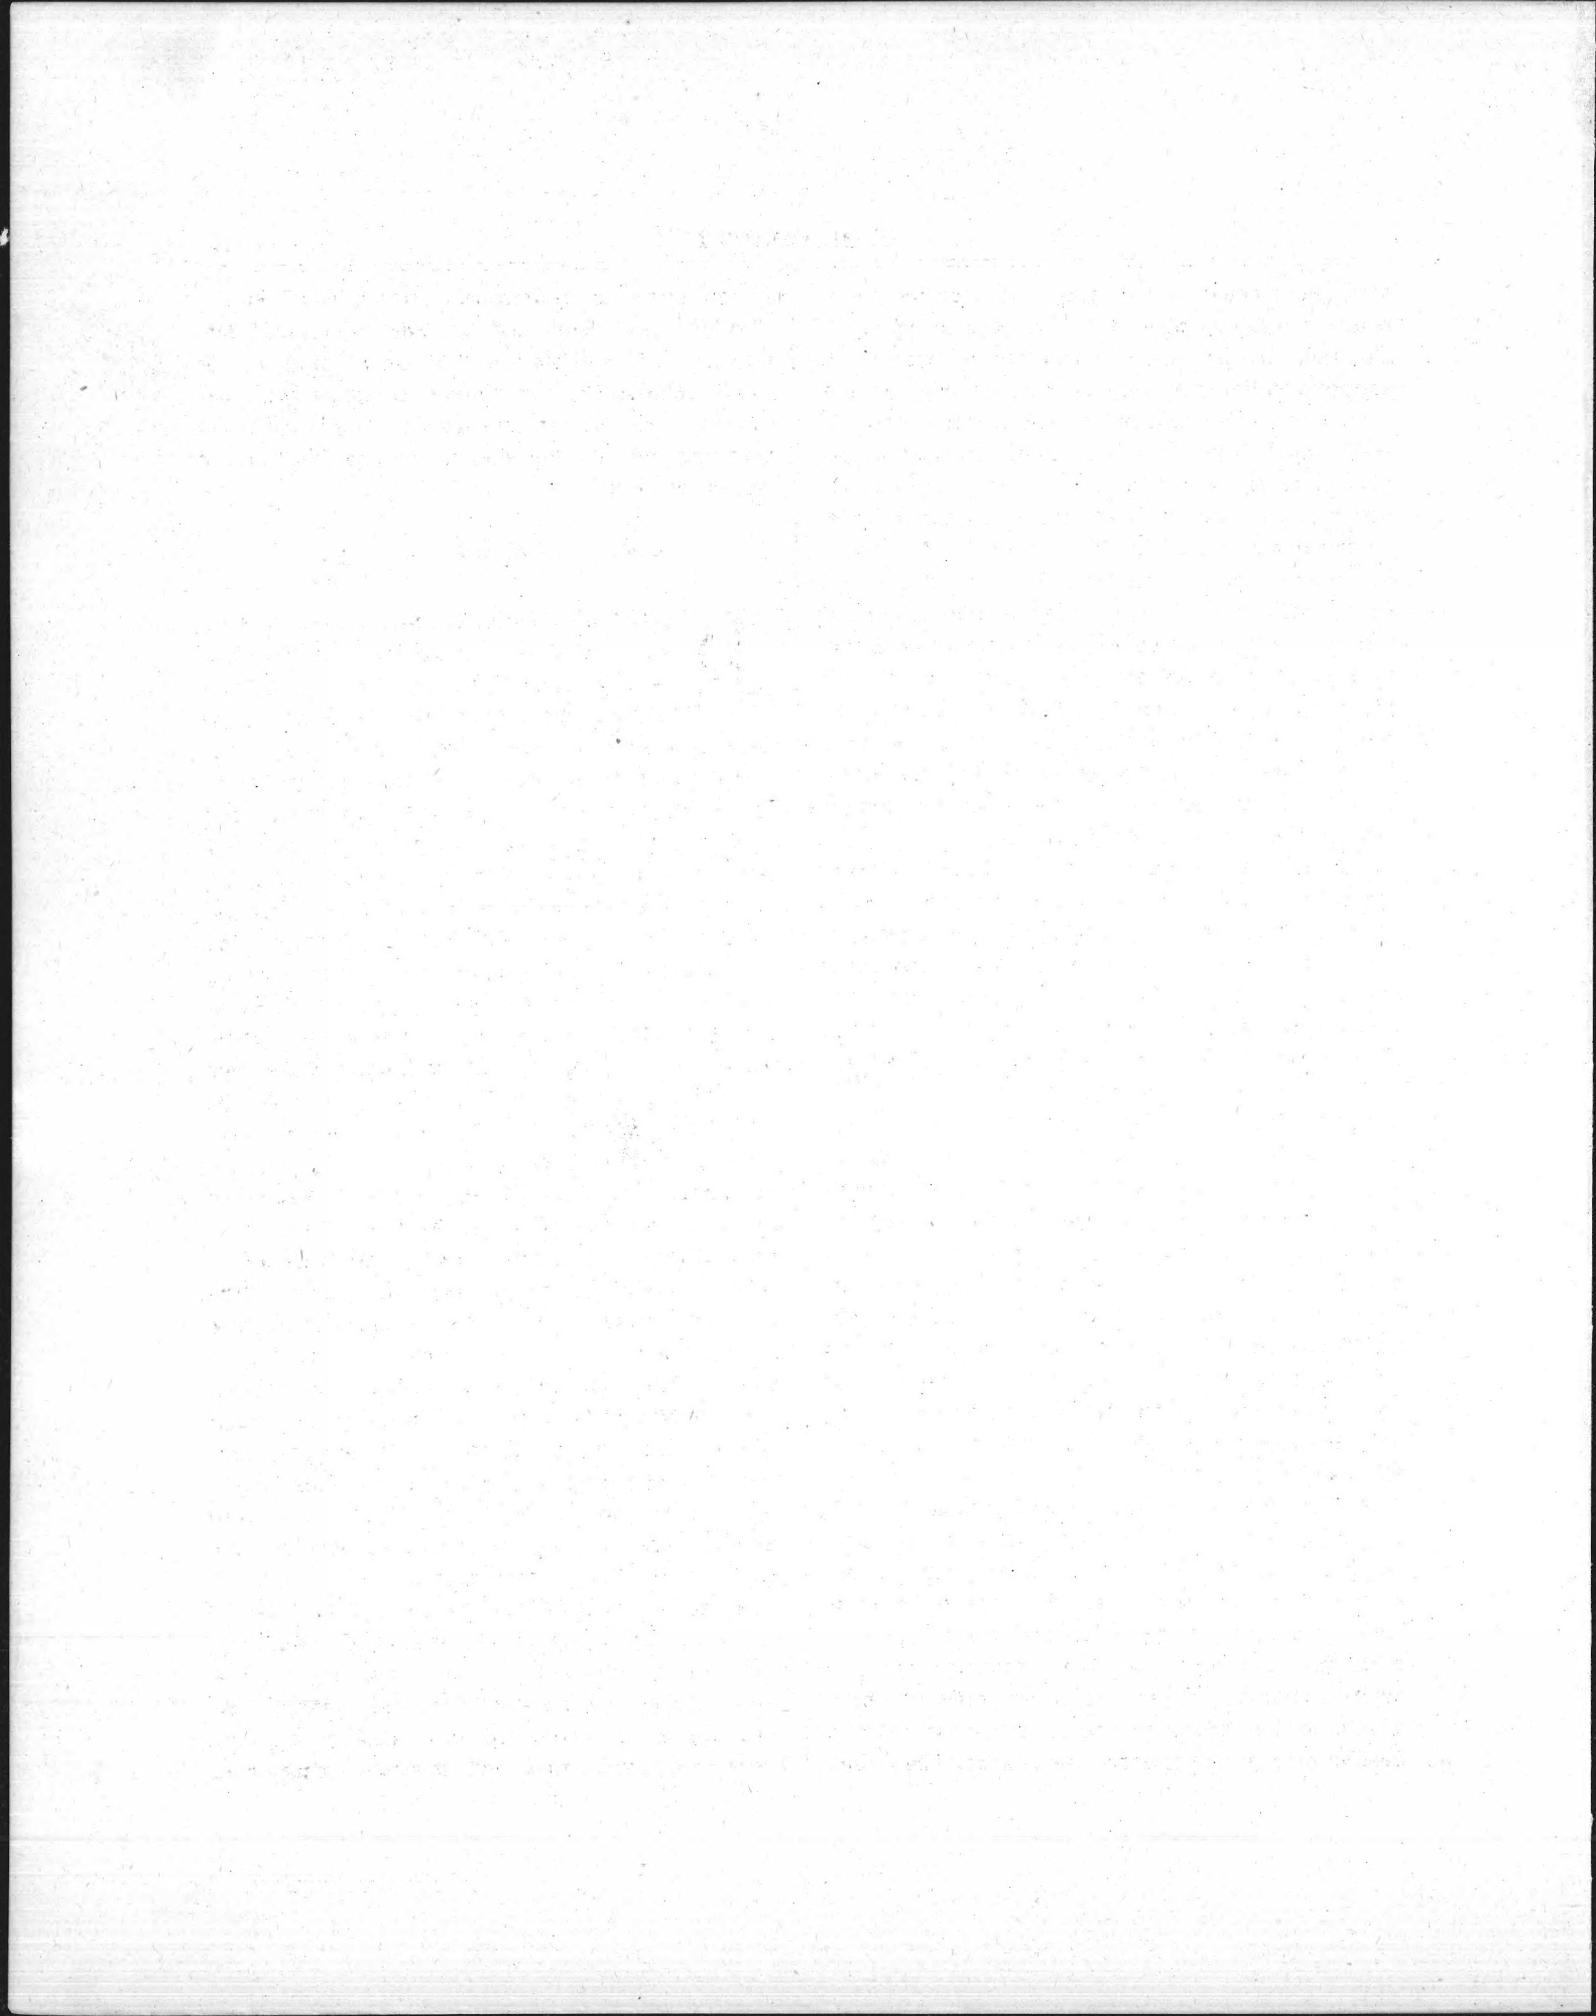

The subject of this sketch gained a good, practical education in the Swiss schools, which he attended quite regularly as long as he lived in his native land. He was fourteen years old when he accompanied his father to this country, and he remembers well the incidents of the long voyage, and of his subsequent pioneer life here on the farm where he now resides, over which deer, wolves and prairie chickens used to roam, and occasionally wild turkeys. He went to Arkansas with his father, and lived with him until 1862, when he was drafted into the Confederate Army, and was obliged to serve in its ranks as a member of Company G, 21st Arkansas Infantry, doing duty in Mississippi for one year. While at Vicksburg he obtained a furlough, and after his return home communications were cut off by Gen. Grant, and our subject was detailed to superintend the sulphur works at the Hot Springs until the Federals took Little Rock. He then went into the Union camp at that place, and gladly took the oath of allegiance to the United States Government. After that he went to Cairo, Ill., where he worked at the baker's trade for six months, when he returned to the old homestead, and in the summer of that year teamed for the freighters over the plains, and in the fall engaged with Col. Shoop, of the 3d Colorado Militia, who was then on the frontier to suppress Indian troubles, as teamster, and he continued with the command on the frontier until the following February, and he then returned to the old homestead to resume the calling of farmer, to which he had been devoted under his father when he first came to live in this country. Ever since he has been actively engaged in agricultural pursuits, and to reward his persistent labors has as fine a farm as any in the county, well supplied with substantial buildings for every purpose, and in 1885 he erected a good frame house, in which he and his family live surrounded by every comfort that heart could desire. Mr. Schindler has paid special attention to raising stock, and derives from that branch of agriculture a good annual income.

RESIDENCE OF DIETRICH SCHINDLER, SEC. 22. OTTOE PRECINCT.

RESIDENCE OF DIETRICH MISEGADIS, SEC. 16. ROCK CREEK PRECINCT.

Our subject was married, Nov. 25, 1867, to Mary Anna Tschanz, a native of the Canton of Berne, Switzerland. She came to America with the family of her father, John Tschanz, who settled twenty miles east of St. Joseph, Mo. Nine children were born of the marriage of our subject and his wife, namely: Rosa, Edward, Jacob, Lewis, Henry H., Albert H., Clarence, Emily and Madeline.

On the 29th of February, 1888, this happy household sustained an irreparable loss in the death of the wife and mother, who had been faithful in all the duties of life, and had been devoted to the interests of her family. She has left behind her a memory that will be fondly cherished by her relatives, friends and neighbors. Dec. 3, 1888, Mr. Schindler married a second time, the lady of his choice being Miss Lizette Wissler, daughter of Jacob and Eliza (Rufenacht) Wissler, from the Canton of Berne, Switzerland, but now of Humboldt, Richardson Co., Neb.

Mr. Schindler is one of the best citizens. He is a man of more than ordinary enterprise, practical sagacity, and decision of character. His public-spiritedness and liberality are well known, as he is always among the foremost to encourage and promote any scheme for the advancement of the precinct or county. Otoe Precinct is partly indebted to him for her excellent schools, as he has taken a deep interest in educational matters, and has served several terms as Moderator. He was Road Supervisor for eight years, and in 1884 was a candidate for the State Legislature, but on account of his wife's sickness he was obliged to retire from the canvass. He has always been a Republican, and by voice and vote has worked for the interests of his chosen party.

DIEDRICH MISEGADIS, a large landowner and stock-raiser of Rock Creek Precinct, has his home farm on section 16, and this embraces 160 acres. On section 9 he owns 160 acres in one body and fifty acres in another, and on section 17 he has eighty acres. The whole of this is in a good state of cultivation and yields the proprietor a comfortable income. A view of the homestead is given on another page.

Our subject became a resident of this county on the 27th of October, 1873, and his labors as an agriculturist have been crowned with success. Prior to that date he had been a resident of Grant and LaFayette Counties, Wis., a period of thirteen years, having emigrated to the Badger State from his native Hanover, in Germany, in the fall of 1860. He was then a young man of twenty-five years, having been born on the 12th of May, 1835. His father, Frederick Misegadis, was a native of the same Province, which at the time of his birth was a kingdom by itself, and where for a period of eleven years he worked on the farm and drove the four-horse team of King Frederick. There also he was married to Miss Adeheida Lofrutian, a native of the same section of country. The mother died after the birth of five children, when a young woman. The father lived to be seventy-eight years old, spending his entire life on his native soil. They were Lutheran in religion, and most excellent people, honest and industrious, and respected by all who knew them.

The fourth child of his parents and their second son, our subject had two brothers and two sisters, two of whom are now in Wisconsin, one in Otoe County, Neb., and a sister in the old country. He remained in his native Province until twenty-five years of age, still unmarried, this interesting event taking place in Dodge County, Wis. The maiden of his choice was Miss Augusta Chanfish, a native of Prussia, and who was born April 28, 1847. Her father, Ferdinand Chanfish, died when she was quite young, and she came with her mother and stepfather, William Blancke, to America when a little girl eight years of age. They settled in Watertown, Wis., where she lived until her marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. Misegadis became the parents of ten children, the eldest of whom, Frederick, died at the age of four years. The survivors are all at home with their parents, and form an interesting group, of which the latter may well be proud. They are named respectively: William F., E. W. Emma, Ida A., Lizzie M., Edwin H., George D., Christina A., Louis R. and Alva A. The eldest was twenty-one years of age Oct. 29, 1888, and the youngest one year old at that date. They are all members and regular attendants with their parents of the Lutheran Church. Mr. M., politically, is a conscientious Democrat, and has held the minor offices of his precinct.

HON. JAMES FITCHIE, of Nebraska City, occupies a prominent position among the intelligent and cultured citizens of this county, who, as pioneers, have witnessed and assisted in its development. He is thoroughly conversant with its history—indeed, is regarded as an authority on the subject—and he has written many interesting articles concerning its early settlement. He was at one time conspicuously identified with the civic life of the county; was early appointed Justice of the Peace, and by his vigorous and impartial administration of the affairs of his office during the four years that he was an incumbent thereof, he contributed greatly to the peaceful settlement of the county and to its general prosperity by assisting in the maintenance of law and order, winning the commendations of his fellow-citizens. In 1869 he was a member of the State Legislature, and his record at the capitol stamped him as an honorable and enlightened legislator.

Our subject is a native of Ireland, but descended from a good old Scotch family, who had settled in County Down many years previous to the birth of our subject, which occurred May 3, 1810, in that county. Thomas Fitchie, his father, was a native and lifelong resident of the same locality, where he carried on farming for many years. The maiden name of the mother of our subject was Elizabeth Hays, and she was likewise of Scotch ancestry and a native of County Down, where she always made her home. There were nine children born to the parents of our subject, eight of whom grew up, namely: John, Samuel, William, Margaret, James, Jennie, Mary and Thomas. John, Samuel and our subject were the only three who came to America. John settled in Newburg, N. Y., and Samuel in Brooklyn, that State.

James Fitchie, of whom we write, was reared and married in his native county, Miss Eliza Douglas becoming his wife Oct. 29, 1833. She was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1812, a daughter of Samuel and Alice (Wood) Douglas, natives of Ireland, and of Scotch ancestry. James Fitchie learned the carpenter and joiner's trade, and followed it in Ireland until 1834, when, with his wife he set sail from Belfast for America, coming by the way of Liverpool to New York, where he landed on our National holiday. He first located in Newburg, and worked as a carpenter there until 1837. From there he went to Pittsburgh, Pa., going by the way of Philadelphia to Harrisburg, which was then the western terminus of the railway in that State, and thence to his destination. He worked at his trade for awhile, and then engaged in the grocery business, continuing his residence in Pittsburgh until 1852. In that year he cast in his lot with the pioneers of Iowa, still keeping ahead of the railway, as Central Illinois was then its western terminus.

Mr. Fitchie was employed at carpentering in Muscatine until 1855, when he concluded to explore Nebraska for the purpose of securing a home in that part of Uncle Sam's domain. Accordingly, in the spring of that year, he started in company with a neighbor, Mr. Hays, equipped with a pair of oxen and a wagon, and crossed the river above Omaha, proceeding thence to Tekamah, Burt County, where he took up a claim. The "city" consisted of one log house covered with bark, and two tents, and his claim was one mile distant from its present site. He spent but two nights on his land, and then returned to Omaha, which was at that time but an insignificant village, with the post-office in a sod house, and the other buildings of pretty much the same rude description. Mr. Fitchie stopped at that place about a week, and then came to Nebraska City to spend a few days before retracing his steps to Muscatine. He walked nearly the entire distance, and slept two nights on the open prairie.

After settling his affairs in Iowa, Mr. Fitchie started with a team, accompanied by his family, to take up his abode on the wild prairies of Nebraska. He arrived with his wife and children in Nebraska City on the 10th day of October, 1855, and moved into a vacant log cabin in that part of the town now known as Kearney. There were then probably about 100 families in the city, and but one store to supply all their wants. He had shipped his chest of carpentry tools by the river, but they did not arrive until the following spring. So here he was, a stranger in a strange land, without money or the means of obtaining it. But he was not one to sit down and mourn over what could not be helped without stirring himself actively to find a remedy. He immediately went to a store and bought some tools on time, and was thus enabled to obtain plenty of work. After a few weeks he made a claim on Camp Creek, nine miles south of the city, built a house, partly with sod and partly with logs, and in midwinter moved into it with his family. There were no settlers west of him at that time, and no other than log houses anywhere in the vicinity. The land was nearly all owned by the Government, and for sale at $1.25 an acre. Deer were plentiful and roamed at will over the broad prairies. There was a gristmill two miles distant from where he had located; it was worked by water power, but it took so long to grind the grist that one would get very hungry waiting its slow movements.

In the fall of that year Mr. Fitchie ingeniously contrived a grater, and picking the corn before it was hard, grated it to make bread. Having cows, milk was plentiful, and mush and milk was the principal food of the family for a time. A few months after coming to Nebraska City Mr. F. bought a house and lot in that part of the city now called Kearney, paying $100 for both. He made a few repairs, and in a short time the boom came and he sold his little property for the snug sum of $775, taking stock in part payment, and he was thus enabled to settle on his land and improve a farm. He resided on it until 1877, and by that time it had greatly increased in value, and he sold it for a sum far above the original cost. Since that time he and his wife have made their home in Nebraska City with their son-in-law, Hon. William Campbell.

Mr. and Mrs. Fitchie have six children living: Martha D., widow of John K. Gilman, resides in Nebraska City; Margaret C., widow of S. B. Davis, in California; Samuel D. resides in Weeping Water; Elizabeth A. is the wife of Jeremiah Gilman, and Jennie, the wife of William Campbell; Thomas resides in Nebraska City. William N., their fourth child, died at the age of eighteen years; Ella I., the eighth child, died in infancy; John T., the ninth child, died at the age of thirty-three.

October 29, 1883, marked the golden milestone of the wedded life of our subject and his wife, who for fifty years have walked hand in hand through sunshine and shadow, and in sharing each other's joys and griefs have grown nearer and dearer to each other. On the occasion of the golden wedding, commemorative of that other wedding day that lay back in the past half century, when they united their fresh young lives for better or for worse, a large concourse of friends gathered to congratulate them, and showed the warm place they occupied in many hearts by the expression of kind and loving wishes and the presentation of many valuable gifts.

Mr. Fitchie identified himself with the Democratic party when he was a young man, and continued to advocate the policy of that party until 1860, when he voted for Lincoln, as his views in regard to the course to be pursued relative to suppressing the Rebellion coincided with those of the leaders of the Republican party, and he has been a staunch supporter of that party since that time. At the age of fifty-three years, when the Indian outbreak occurred in Nebraska, Mr. Fitchie, shouldering his musket and buckling on his armor, went out to defend his county and the firesides of the pioneers in the western part of this State. He furnished his own horse, served four months, and accepted his pay in an honorable discharge. As will be observed, he was one of the old pioneers, and from an article which he wrote for the Nebraska City Press in connection with the early reminiscences of Otoe County, we clip the following:

"For want of better timber they made a 'Squire of your humble servant, and it was fortunate for both myself and the solemnity of the ceremony, that the first pair I married were so Dutchy they scarcely knew what I said, and it would have been hard to tell who was the worse frightened, they or I. The fees were an item in those days. I have heard of editors being compelled to take pumpkins and saw logs on subscription, but I suppose there are few men who have taken cottonwood rails as a fee for performing the marriage ceremony. Let me tell of one in particular who requested that I should wait for my fee until he could make and haul some posts, and to-day this man is worth over a cool $100,000, a credit to himself and an honor to old Otoe County, as showing what a thoroughly hard-working man can do in this great country of ours."

FREDERICK ZUCK. The German element of Rock Creek Precinct, here as elsewhere, has aided largely in the growth and prosperity of the community. The subject of this sketch is one of its most successful farmers, and a native of the Fatherland, born in one of the Rhine Provinces, Nov. 6, 1840. He owns a good farm of eighty acres on section 36, and in addition to general agriculture, is interested in live stock, making a specialty of the popular Jersey-Red swine.

Mr. Zuck settled upon his present farm sixteen years ago, in the spring of 1873. He took the land in its wild and uncultivated state, and has transformed it into one of the most desirable homesteads of his precinct. He has labored early and late, through sunshine and storm, battled against difficulties and hardships, and is now enjoying the fruit of his labors. He came to Nebraska in October, 1867, landing in this county on the 30th day of the month, locating first in Nebraska City. The Territory had become a State two months previously. He has watched the growth and prosperity of the people around him, and in the building up of one of the best farms in his precinct has largely contributed to the position which it occupies among the intelligent communities of this section.

Mr. Zuck crossed the Atlantic when a young man of twenty-five years, and took up his residence first in Perry County, Ind., whence he removed to Rock Island, Ill., and from the Prairie State came to Nebraska. In his native Empire he had served three years in the German Army, and when at home had been engaged with his father in agricultural pursuits. He had little capital aside from his strong hands when coming to the West, and these have served him well.

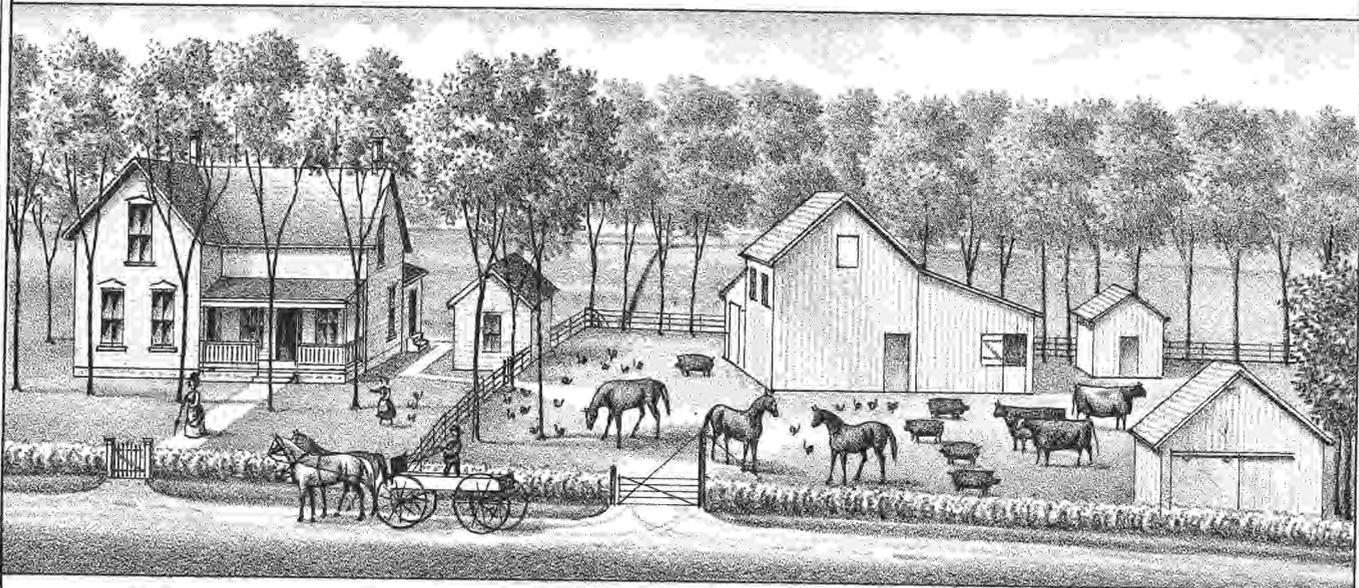

Mr. Zuck was married in Nebraska City, March 28, 1873, to Miss Fredricka Schomeius, who was born in Hanover, Germany, July 6, 1836, and is the sister of D. J. Schomeius, a prosperous boot and shoe merchant of Nebraska City, and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume.

The wife of our subject came to America with her mother in 1871, and lived in Nebraska City until her marriage. Of their union there is one child only, a daughter, Mary E., who was born Dec. 20, 1873. Mr. and Mrs. Z. are members in good standing of the German Lutheran Church, and our subject, politically, votes the Democratic ticket.

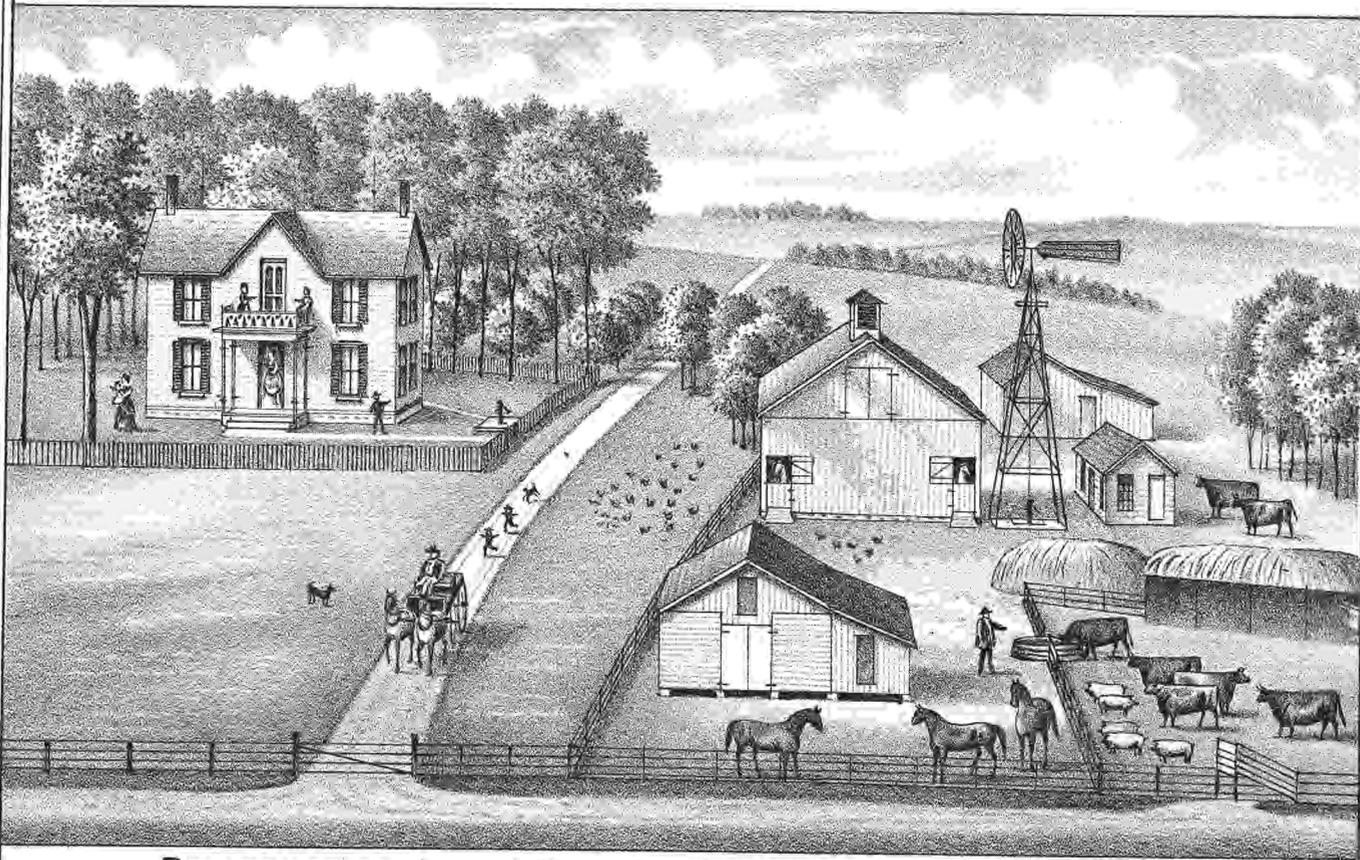

A view of Mr. Zuck's homestead is presented in connection with this brief personal sketch of its proprietor.

JAMES CARLIN has carried on farming successfully in Rock Creek Precinct since the spring of 1871, when he purchased on section 16, 160 acres of school land from the State. It was in its wild and uncultivated state, and for two years Mr. C. employed himself at teaming before settling upon his purchase. In 1872 he put up a dwelling, and gradually added the other buildings necessary for the successful prosecution of his calling, the comfort of his family, the storage of grain and the shelter of stock. He was prospered in his labors, and in due time pur-

RESIDENCE OF FRIEDRICK ZUCK, SEC. 36. ROCK CREEK PRECINCT.

RESIDENCE OF JAMES CARLIN, SEC. 16. ROCK CREEK PRECINCT.

1910-1911

The first part of the year was spent in the field, collecting specimens and making observations on the habits of the various species of birds and mammals. The weather was generally favorable, though there were some periods of heavy rain and high winds. The birds were very active, and many nests were found. The mammals were also very numerous, and many specimens were secured. The following table shows the number of specimens collected in each month:

| Month | Birds | Mammals |
|-------|-------|---------|
| Jan   | 15    | 10      |
| Feb   | 20    | 15      |
| Mar   | 25    | 20      |
| Apr   | 30    | 25      |
| May   | 35    | 30      |
| Jun   | 40    | 35      |
| Jul   | 45    | 40      |
| Aug   | 50    | 45      |
| Sep   | 55    | 50      |
| Oct   | 60    | 55      |
| Nov   | 65    | 60      |
| Dec   | 70    | 65      |

The second part of the year was spent in the laboratory, preparing the specimens and making studies on the anatomy and physiology of the various species. The weather was generally favorable, though there were some periods of heavy rain and high winds. The birds were very active, and many nests were found. The mammals were also very numerous, and many specimens were secured. The following table shows the number of specimens collected in each month:

| Month | Birds | Mammals |
|-------|-------|---------|
| Jan   | 15    | 10      |
| Feb   | 20    | 15      |
| Mar   | 25    | 20      |
| Apr   | 30    | 25      |
| May   | 35    | 30      |
| Jun   | 40    | 35      |
| Jul   | 45    | 40      |
| Aug   | 50    | 45      |
| Sep   | 55    | 50      |
| Oct   | 60    | 55      |
| Nov   | 65    | 60      |
| Dec   | 70    | 65      |

The third part of the year was spent in the field, collecting specimens and making observations on the habits of the various species of birds and mammals. The weather was generally favorable, though there were some periods of heavy rain and high winds. The birds were very active, and many nests were found. The mammals were also very numerous, and many specimens were secured. The following table shows the number of specimens collected in each month:

| Month | Birds | Mammals |
|-------|-------|---------|
| Jan   | 15    | 10      |
| Feb   | 20    | 15      |
| Mar   | 25    | 20      |
| Apr   | 30    | 25      |
| May   | 35    | 30      |
| Jun   | 40    | 35      |
| Jul   | 45    | 40      |
| Aug   | 50    | 45      |
| Sep   | 55    | 50      |
| Oct   | 60    | 55      |
| Nov   | 65    | 60      |
| Dec   | 70    | 65      |

chased eighty acres more on another section of the same precinct, and which he has also brought to a good state of cultivation.

The farm of our subject is well stocked with cattle and horses, and from this and the raising of the crops which flourish best in Southern Nebraska he enjoys a good income. Prior to his arrival in this State he had been a resident of Scott County, Iowa, to which he removed with his parents when a child. The latter were James and Mary (Dougherty) Carlin, who were natives of Counties Donegal and Tyrone, Ireland; they were married after coming to America, and settled in Philadelphia, Pa. There James, Jr., was born Nov. 15, 1840. The father was a weaver by occupation, and after coming to this country followed that trade. The parents were married in Philadelphia, where were born their seven sons and three daughters, of whom our subject was the second son and third child. From the Keystone State they moved to Illinois, where the father conducted a small store of general merchandise, and where the family lived about three years. They next changed their residence to Scott County, Iowa, settling upon a tract of land three miles from the city of Davenport, where the mother died when about fifty years of age. The father survived his partner a number of years, his death taking place in September of 1877, at the age of seventy. Both were members of the Catholic Church.

Our subject was reared to manhood in Scott County, Iowa, and was there married, Oct. 7, 1862, to Miss Bridget Moran. This lady was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada, in November, 1843, and came to the States with her parents, Michael and Mary (Egan) Moran. They located in the vicinity of Oswego, N. Y., where they lived a number of years. About 1855 they changed their residence to Rock Island, Ill., and later crossed the Mississippi into Davenport, Iowa. There the mother died in 1879 when little past middle life. The father is yet living there, being now about seventy-five years old. They also were members of the Catholic Church.

Mrs. Carlin was one of the elder children of her parents, and lived with them until her marriage, acquiring a common-school education. The household circle of our subject and his wife has been completed by the birth of eleven children. They are named respectively: Mary, Anna, Elizabeth, Agnes, Maggie, James, Jr., John, Michael, Hugh and Leona. William died when an infant. Mrs. Carlin is a very capable and intelligent lady, one who has many friends in her neighborhood and community. Kind and hospitable, she makes her home pleasant for her own family and an attractive resort for all who may take shelter beneath their roof. Both Mr. and Mrs. C. are members of the Catholic Church, and our subject, politically, is a staunch Democrat. Mr. Carlin owned a farm in Rock Island County, Ill., where he farmed three years before coming to Nebraska, at which time he sold it.

A view of his farm property is shown in this connection.

PETER SIBERT and his estimable wife, Mrs. Sarah (Neal) Sibert, have for many years been favorably known among the people of Palmyra Precinct, where they are spending the evening of life, sheltered in a comfortable home and enjoying the esteem and confidence of hosts of friends. Although quite well advanced in years, they are remarkably well preserved, very intelligent, kind and hospitable, and possess all the elements of character which endear them alike to young and old. Their property includes a good farm of 160 acres, lying on sections 28 and 29. Although making little pretension to elegance or style, they have everything around them comfortable, and their home possesses the added charm of contentment, which is the mainspring of happiness in all the relations of life.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Sibert were the children of humble homes in their youth, and both were endowed by a kind Providence with those elements of character which enabled them to rise above their early surroundings and educate themselves by a course of reading and communication with intelligent minds. The early home of Mr. S. was in Washington County, Pa., where he was born Sept. 17, 1817, and where he grew to manhood on a farm. He was twenty-two years of age when the free-school system was agitated among the voters of the Keystone State, and he was one of those who most urgently labored and voted for its adoption.

Our subject began life on his own account as an apprentice to the blacksmith trade, which he followed a number of years. In 1848 he was married in his native county to Miss Hannah Fleek, and they became the parents of four children, namely: Mary, George, Jacob, and one who died in infancy. In the fall of 1840 Mr. Sibert, leaving his native State, emigrated to Wyandot County, Ohio, and for a period of eight years thereafter followed his trade at Little Sandusky. He was prospered in his labors, and accumulated a good property, including 160 acres of farm land and real estate in the village.

Our subject, however, was anxious to remove still further westward, and in 1848 left Ohio for Knox County, Ill. He invested a part of the proceeds of his Ohio property in 160 acres of land, but now began casting his eyes beyond the Mississippi. Selling out again he moved to Marion County, Iowa, where he became the owner of a farm of forty acres, and leaving there in the spring of 1860, he came to this county and secured the homestead which he now owns and occupies.

Mrs. Hannah Sibert departed this life at her home in Palmyra Precinct, on the 10th of August, 1859. Our subject in the year 1860 married for his second wife Mrs. Sarah (Neal) Horseman, the widow of Isah Horseman, and daughter of William and Mary (Agerhardt) Neal. Her parents were natives of Pennsylvania, and the father was a cooper by trade. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812, and spent his last years in Pennsylvania. The mother died in Ohio. The family consisted of thirteen children, namely: Susannah, Sarah, Elias, Joseph, Henry, William, Ellen, Mary A., Margaret, Jane Eliza; James A., who died young, and two infants who died unnamed.

The wife of our subject was trained to habits of industry and economy, and at an early age became familiar with household duties. She remained with her parents until twenty-two years of age, and was then married to Isah Horseman, a native of Ohio. They became the parents of eight children, the eldest of whom, William, died in the army during the late Civil War; David and Joseph served each respectively three and one years in the army, and are now in Omaha and California; Plena, John, Samuel and Martha are all living. Melissa B. died when four years old. Mr. and Mrs. Horseman began their wedded life together in Ohio, and Mr. H. died on the journey from Kansas to Iowa in 1859.

Of the union of our subject and his present wife there has been born one child only, a daughter, Emma Jane, who married John Stewart, a farmer of Palmyra Precinct, and has become the mother of three children—Nancy B., Sarah E. and Benjamin.

Mr. and Mrs. Sibert upon coming to this State in the spring of 1860 looked upon Nebraska City when it was simply a trading-post. They were the only family in what is now Palmyra Precinct, and took up their residence in a little log cabin. In June of the following year Mr. Sibert built a larger dwelling, also of logs, and this was frequently the rendezvous for traders and other travelers to and from Denver and Nebraska City. Our subject and his wife have had a ripe experience in pioneer life, and have watched with warm interest the development of Nebraska Territory into one of the most important States of the Union. They labored together with one mutual purpose, the building up of a home for themselves and their family, and are now enjoying the rich reward of well-spent lives. The log house where they spent so many happy years is still standing, and although their circumstances have greatly improved since the time they first occupied that humble dwelling, they look upon it as one of the old landmarks which they would regret to see destroyed.

Mrs. Sibert is a lady of more than ordinary intelligence, and has not suffered care or trouble to dampen the natural cheerfulness of her disposition. Her plump figure and pleasant face are suggestive of what she might have been when a maiden of sweet sixteen. The loss of her first husband left her alone with a large family of children, who were entirely dependent upon her for support. To this duty she bent her energies with all the natural strength of her character, doing for them as well as she could, and it is safe to say that they rise up and call her blessed.

Mr. Sibert has been a pioneer, as we have seen, in Ohio, Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska. He has lived to see the public school system of his native State become one of the most admirable of any in the Union. He voted for Harrison in the time of "Tippecanoe and Tyler too." It is hardly necessary to say that he is a staunch supporter of Republican principles. Notwithstanding the long and varied experiences of his life, he is a hale, hearty and well-preserved old gentleman, bright and quick mentally, and one with whom it is pleasurable and profitable to converse. In speaking of the time when he officiated as "mine host" in the old log house, he says that the guests were often so numerous he was obliged to pack them on the floor like sardines in a box. They accommodated themselves to the situation philosophically, however, and it is hardly necessary to say, often engaged in great hilarity, in which they were joined by their whole-hearted host and hostess. The parents of our subject, Isaac and Fanny (Robison) Sibert, were natives respectively of Maryland and England, and the father served as a soldier in the War of 1812. The mother emigrated to America with her parents when a young girl, they settling in Maryland, where she was afterward married. Isaac Sibert learned the trade of shoemaker, and after marriage the parents removed to Washington County, Pa., where the father died when a comparatively young man, in 1828 at the age of thirty-nine years. The mother survived her husband only a few months, and passed away, in 1829, in Washington County, Pa. The parental household included five children, namely: Nancy, Isaac, Hannah, Joseph, and Peter, our subject. Grandfather Sibert was born in Germany, and emigrated to the United States early in life, settling in Maryland, where it is supposed he remained until his death.

—•••••—

LOUIS B. SMOYER, a leading farmer of Otoe County, homesteaded his first land in 1865, this being located on the southwest quarter of section 2, in Syracuse Precinct. A native of Lehigh County, Pa., he was born Feb. 23, 1842, and is the son of Jacob and Anna (Biery) Smoyer, who were also natives of the Keystone State. The paternal great-grandfather of our subject, Abraham Smoyer by name, was a native of Baden, Germany, whence he emigrated to the United States early in life, and settled in Pennsylvania. He was accompanied by his brother, and from these two are supposed to have descended the Smoyer families of the United States.

Great-grandfather Smoyer reared a large family, and his son Abraham retained possession of the old homestead, where he passed his entire life. Jacob, son of the latter, was born there and reared to manhood, where he married, and continued to reside on the old homestead until 1852. Thence he removed to Ohio, and from the Buckeye State in 1861 to Jackson County, Mich., where he carried on farming, and where his death occurred July 4, 1875. The mother died while a resident of Trumbull County, Ohio, April 10, 1854. Their family consisted of eight children, all living, namely: Emeline, the wife of A. C. Geiger; Martha, Mrs. Schuester; Louis B., our subject; Kate, Mrs. Alfred Troxel; Amanda, Mrs. Pells; Mary A., Sylvanus and James.

Our subject was eleven years old when the family removed to Ohio, where he pursued his studies in the district school. He accompanied the family to Michigan in 1861, and soon after the outbreak of the Civil War enlisted in a regiment of cavalry, but on account of his age was not permitted to serve. He then began farming, which he pursued in the Wolverine State until the summer of 1865. Then coming to Nebraska he homesteaded 160 acres of land in Syracuse Precinct, and in due time had brought the soil to a good state of cultivation, erected the buildings necessary for his comfort and convenience, and laid the basis of a future competency. Mr. Smoyer, after taking up his residence in this county was married, Oct. 17, 1866, to Miss Adelaide V. Sawtelle, who was born in Branch County, Mich., July 12, 1842. Her parents were Zera T. and Eliza A. (Cornell) Sawtelle, who were natives of New York State, whence they emigrated to Michigan during its pioneer days. The father followed farming, and, with his excellent wife, is still living, their residence being in the vicinity of Battle Creek. Their family consisted of three daughters, there being besides Mrs. Smoyer, Abigail V., a twin sister, who married Caleb Manchester, and died in October, 1881, and Etta, the wife of Zera Masters, of Otoe County.

To Mr. and Mrs. Smoyer there have been born seven children, namely: George E., Jesse S., Etta V., Cora M., Gertie P. and Gracie P. (twins) and Nellie A. Mr. Smoyer, politically, votes the straight Republican ticket, and has steadily declined becoming an office-holder. Socially, he belongs to the Knights of Honor.

JOSEPH BEETEM is one of the prominent and representative citizens of Palmyra Precinct, where he is farming eighty acres of fine land on section 36. For the family history of this gentleman the reader is referred to the sketch of J. T. Beetem, which will be found upon another page of this volume.

The subject of our sketch was born in Shullsburg, Wis., on the 14th of August, 1844. When he was about six months old his parents took up their residence in Dubuque County, Iowa; when nine years of age they once more made a change, and he became a resident of Allamakee County. He continued with his parents until he was about nineteen, and then entered the arena and began life for himself. The first year he rented a farm, and was so successful that he was enabled to buy eighty acres, upon which he continued for five years, in that time making many improvements and bringing it to a high state of cultivation.

In 1872 our subject sold the above-mentioned farm and moved to Hancock County, Iowa, where he became the owner of 160 acres of wild, unimproved prairie. This he brought into good condition and put upon it various valuable improvements, when he again sold out, and went to the northern part of the county, purchasing 120 acres of prairie land, and repeated the process so far as it was possible of improvement. He continued there for seven years, but met with failure after failure in his crops, which resulted disastrously.

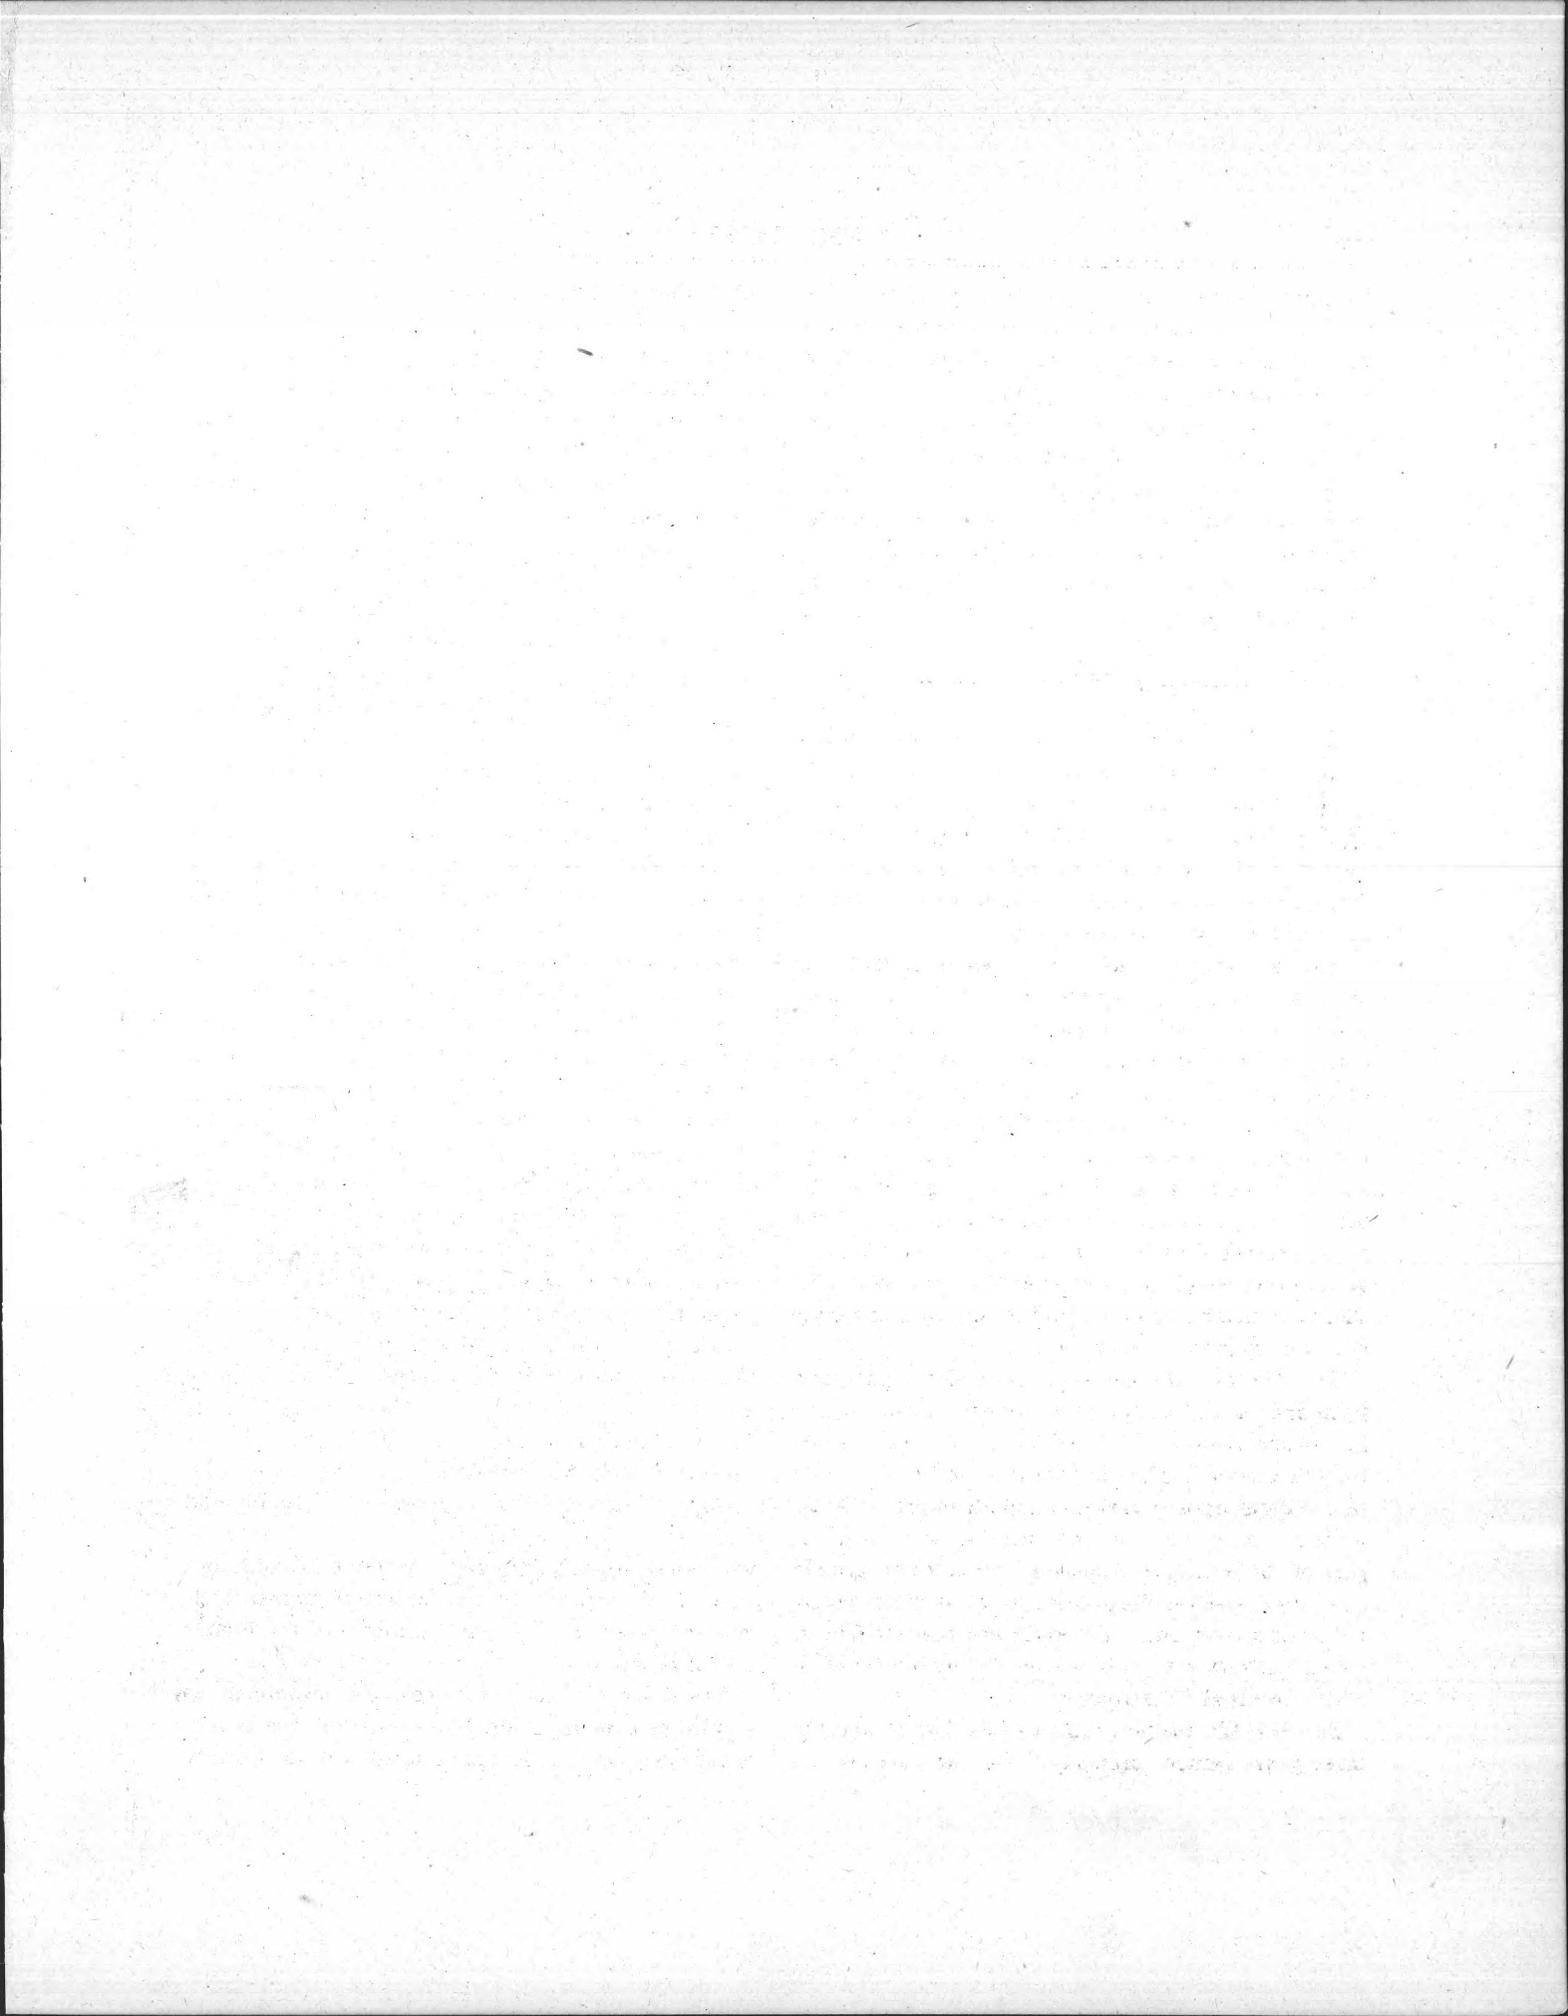

In 1877 Mr. Beetem came to this county and for three years rented property. He then moved to South Russell, where he made his home for about a year, then in 1881 bought his present place of eighty acres. His Iowa experience again took shape, and he had all the work of improving his land, from the turning of the first furrow to the erection and finishing of his buildings. To-day his farm is one of the best cultivated and most valuable, other things being equal, within a large district.

In Allamakee County, Iowa, on the 24th of January, 1864, the subject of our sketch became the husband of Miss Hester Greenup, the estimable daughter of the Rev. S. H. and Elizabeth (Hoyt) Greenup. Her father was born in Kentucky, her mother in New York. Her father was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and served in that capacity in the State of Iowa for twenty-five years. He is still engaged in the work of his profession, and holds a charge in Morrison County, Minn. Both parents are now sixty-seven years of age. They are the parents of eleven children, to whom have been given the following names: Hester A., Julia E., Edwin (deceased), Jason S., Wilbur F., Allen, Albert, Lucy (deceased), Frank, Edward, and also Elizabeth who is deceased. Edwin, who was in the war fighting in the 12th Iowa Infantry, died at Memphis, Tenn., in 1863.

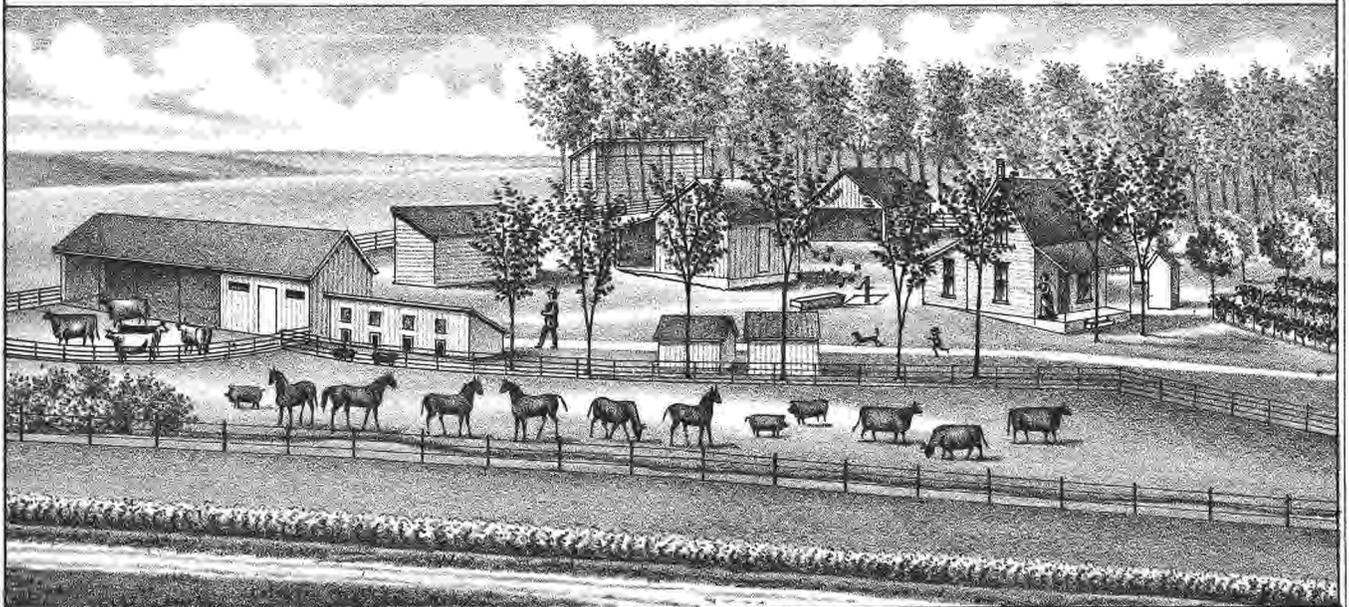

It will be noticed that Mrs. Beetem is the eldest child of her parents. She was born in Peoria, Ill., on the 23d of September, 1843. She attended the classes of both the common and High schools, and after passing a very successful examination and being graduated from the latter institution, was engaged in teaching for about five years, revealing the possession of talents of more than ordinary value. She is the mother of ten children, of whom three are dead. The names given to her children are as follows: Mary Elizabeth, Sarah E., George S. (deceased), Louisa M., Caroline A., Joseph, Jr. (deceased), Charles, Jennie (deceased), Johnnie and Benjamin. Mary is happily married to John Jose, who is successfully engaged in farming in Colorado; they are the parents of two children, named William and Joseph. The other members of the family are all at home.

The subject of our sketch has been prominent as a politician; he is an active member of the Democratic party and has served as delegate to the County

RESIDENCE OF JOS. L. WEBB, SEC 35 (NORTH) PALMYRA PRECINCT.

RESIDENCE OF HERMANN F. HELMERS, SEC. 17. ROCK CREEK PRECINCT.

Convention. For three years he has held the office of Supervisor of Roads, and is at present School Treasurer. He is a man of sterling worth and enjoys the confidence of the people. For twenty-four consecutive seasons Mr. Beetem was engaged in threshing, which is not a usual record. Nine seasons he was thus engaged in Missouri, fourteen in Iowa and one in Nebraska.

HERMAN F. HELMERS. The snug 80-acre farm, owned and occupied by the subject of this sketch, is finely located on section 17, Rock Creek Precinct. Mr. Helmers has been residing here since the fall of 1875, and has in the meantime given his time and attention strictly to the improvement of his property. The results indicate with what industry he has labored, and should be a source of abundant satisfaction to him. A view, illustrating his homestead, is presented in connection with this brief sketch of its owner.

Mr. Helmers came to this locality from Chariton County, Mo., of which he had been a resident four years. Prior to this he had lived in the States of Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa, and his earliest home had been on the other side of the Atlantic, in the little Kingdom of Hanover, Germany. There he was born Sept. 4, 1843, being the son of John Frederick and Mary (Alfke) Helmers, who were also of German birth and ancestry, and the former of whom spent his entire life on his native soil, dying when fifty-six years old. He was a mason by trade, and after his death his widow and children, Sept. 3, 1882, joined our subject in America, and have since resided in the vicinity of Berlin, this county. The mother is now sixty-seven years old.

Our subject was the second child of the family, which consisted of two sons and two daughters, all of whom are living and in this county. Herman F. was the first member of the family to cross the Atlantic, a journey which he never regretted, and it was through his means that his mother was persuaded to come with her family. He first settled in Wisconsin in the fall of 1865. He also had learned the trades of a mason and plasterer, which he followed until coming to Nebraska ten years later. He was married, near the town of Syracuse, to Miss Sophia Beckefeld, also a native of Hanover, and born April 20, 1855. She came to America when nineteen years of age with our subject, and by her marriage with him became the mother of six children, only two of whom are living, Alfred and Oscar, who are eight and six years of age, and occupied at home. Mrs. Sophia Helmers departed this life at the birth of her last child in Rock Creek Precinct, Nov. 11, 1882. She was a lady greatly beloved by her husband and friends, a kind and affectionate wife and mother, a good neighbor, and a devoted member of the Lutheran Church.

Our subject in the fall of 1885 contracted a second marriage, with Miss Dora Bueckman, who was born in Hanover, in 1847, and came alone to the United States when thirty-three years of age, two years before her marriage. Of this union there is one child, a son William. Mr. and Mrs. Helmers are members in good standing of the Lutheran Church, and our subject, politically, is a straight Republican.

JOSEPH L. WEBB, now operating a farm of 130 acres on section 35 of Palmyra Precinct, must be mentioned among the list of honored pioneers of Nebraska. He is the son of William and Mary Webb, who were born in New Jersey. The great-grandfather of our subject lived near May's Landing. He was one of the honored and prosperous citizens of his time, and of some pretensions to affluence. He had seven fine, stalwart sons, all of whom, with the exception of the grandfather of our subject, sought their fortunes in other States. The name of this gentleman was Frederick Webb. Upon the marriage of his son William arrangements were made for the young couple to settle at Bridgeton, in New Jersey, and there they made their home upon a farm. There were born to them eleven children, seven of whom grew up to years of maturity. Our subject is the youngest of this family, and was born on the 27th of February, 1833, near Morriston, Burlington Co., N. J. Upon the migration of William Webb and his family to Greene County, Ohio, our subject was about ten years of age.

Educational advantages in Ohio at that time were not so good even as those of more eastern localities, but such as they were he was privileged to enjoy. The memory is easily revived of the old log school-house that manifested all the signs so common in the days of the pioneers, but from these school-houses have come the men who have made America, and have brought it upon its way as a people and Government, until it occupies the first seat in the Hall of Nations. At nineteen years of age he went to Indianapolis and worked in a peg and last manufactory. From that he went back to Ohio and staid one year, and then went to Iowa, locating in Lee County for about twelve months. From there he drove across the plains in company with Elias Adsit and his family. They continued their journeying until they arrived at Nebraska City, in May, 1857. In beginning life in this State our subject and Mr. Adsit took land and farmed together. There he remained prosperously engaged.

Our subject was married, in the year 1861, to Miss Amanda White, the estimable daughter of George and Elizabeth (Nesmith) White. Her parents were from New Hampshire, but had become pioneers of Indiana. She was born in Jeffersonville, of that State, on the 9th of February, 1836. She was the youngest of seven children, three of whom came to mature years. She received an excellent education, which, with the careful home training received, has fitted her for almost any position she might be called upon to occupy. She came with her mother to Nebraska City in 1859, and was shortly after engaged in teaching in a private school. She was also a teacher of music on the piano, and was the first to follow that profession in that place. Her father, who was a well-educated man, and for many years a teacher in Pennsylvania, died in the year 1852, when she was about sixteen years of age. Her mother died in Seward County, of this State, at the advanced age of eighty years.

Our subject took up his homestead in Palmyra Precinct in 1863, and was among the first homesteaders in the United States. In 1880 he removed to his present home, and by the erection of his commodious and comfortable dwelling, with its pleasant surroundings, supplemented by the financial success that has come to him, he has been able to make his family a very fine home. Five children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Webb, whose names are as follows: Mary, Cora, Josephine, Freddy and Clara. Cora, Josephine and Clara are engaged in teaching.

Mr. Webb is a representative American citizen. In political matters he is one free from the confining bonds of party policy, and votes independently, although at one time he was a Whig, and later a strong Republican. He is a stanch friend of the temperance cause, and an active worker therein. Both Mr. and Mrs. Webb are earnest and consistent members of the Baptist Church, he being one of the Trustees. He has taken a continued and growing interest in Sunday-school work, and for many years held the office of Sunday-school Superintendent. In religious circles and throughout the entire community he is eminently respected and esteemed. This is also true of Mrs. Webb and the daughters.

A view of Mr. Webb's homestead is presented on an adjoining page.

JOHAN HERMANN ARENDS, one of the wealthy men of Rock Creek Precinct, is a leading land-owner and agriculturist, being proprietor of nearly a section of land finely improved and well stocked. His homestead, a view of which we present in this volume, lies on section 32, and is a place creditable to the intelligence and industry of the proprietor. The buildings are convenient and substantial, the dwelling tasteful and commodious, the barns and out-buildings admirably adapted to the general requirements of farm life.

Mr. Arends crossed the Mississippi as early as 1859, while Nebraska was a Territory, and located in this county, where he has since lived. A native of Madison County, Ill., he was born Aug. 26, 1855, and is the son of Reka and Talk Mary (Tetten) Arends, who were natives of Hanover, Germany, where they were reared, educated and married.

The father served the allotted time in the regular army, but after the birth of six children, not being satisfied with his prospects or his condition in the Fatherland, resolved to emigrate to the United States. They made the voyage across the Atlantic early in the fifties, locating in Madison County, Ill., where our subject and his sister Catrenia were born. A few years later the family all came to Nebraska, there being now nine children in the household circle. The elder Arends pre-empted a quarter of section 30, Rock Creek Precinct, but less than two years later traded it for the same amount on section 32. Their neighbors at this time were few and far between, and the family were first sheltered in a log cabin. The father immediately set himself to work to cultivate the soil and build up a homestead, and was prospered in his labors. His death occurred on the 19th of September, 1874, when he was sixty-four years of age. He was an honest and industrious man, and a lifelong member of the German Lutheran Church. The circumstances of his death were peculiarly sad, it having been occasioned by his falling from a wagon-load of lumber, and he was instantly killed. This was during the erection of the First Lutheran Church in Rock Creek Precinct, the building material of which Mr. Arends was hauling from Nebraska City. He was a man greatly respected by all who knew him, and his death cast a gloom over the community. The mother is yet living, and makes her home with her son, our subject, being now seventy-one years old. She is still active in mind and body, and also a member of the German Lutheran Church.

Our subject was a child four years of age when he came with his parents to Nebraska, and acquired his education in the pioneer schools of this county. He was at an early period in his life taught those habits of industry and economy which have proved the secret of his success. Upon reaching manhood he was married in Rock Creek Precinct, Nov. 4, 1880, to Miss Lizzie Kastens, who was born in Hanover, Germany, March 15, 1862. Her parents were Chris and Dora (Mesegadus) Kastens, also natives of Hanover, who came to the United States while their daughter Lizzie was an infant. They settled first in Wisconsin, but about 1875 moved from there to Nebraska, settling in Rock Creek Precinct, where they now live upon a good farm, and surrounded by all the comforts of life. Mrs. Arends received a common-school education, and lived with her parents until her marriage. She is now the mother of four children—Mary T., Dora S., Leta M. and Reka F. They are all at home with their parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Arends were brought up in the doctrines of the German Lutheran Church, to which they still loyally adhere, and are numbered among its most cheerful and liberal supporters. Mr. A., politically, is a staunch Republican, and has held the various minor offices of his precinct.

RG. BEETEM, the genial and popular landlord of the Hendricks Hotel in the little city of this name, is numbered among its leading men, as one taking a prominent and active part in all worthy public enterprises. He commenced at the foot of the ladder in life, and has worked his way up to a good position socially and financially. He put up the house which he now controls in 1888, and in its management has been ably assisted by one of the most excellent of women, Mrs. Beetem being an entertaining, intelligent hostess, who makes friends of all who have the good fortune to sojourn within her hospitable doors.

The subject of our sketch is the son of John D. and Mary (Burnum) Beetem, who were natives of Kentucky. In the sketch of his brother, John Beetem, found elsewhere in this volume, will be noted a more extended history of the parents. Our subject was born in Alamahee County, Iowa, near the then humble village of Lansing, on the 11th of June, 1855. He was reared as a farmer's boy, and attended the common school until fourteen years of age. Death then entered the family circle, removing the father and head of the household, and our subject was thrown mostly upon his own resources. In company with his brother John T., in June, 1870, he started overland to Nebraska, and they spent the following six months in Hendricks Precinct, this county. On their journey hither they came through a stretch of country where wild game was plentiful, and saw numbers of elk and deer, who had hardly learned to be afraid of the rifle of the white man.

At the expiration of the time spoken of our subject returned to his old home in Lansing, where he remained three weeks, when he took up his residence in Hancock County, where he was employed on a farm about five years. Then returning to Lansing, he began operating an elevator, but not having recovered from the Western fever, one day took the train for Syracuse, this county, and soon afterward we find him again in Hendricks Precinct. Here he began farming, at which he continued for a period of ten years, at the end of which time he put up the Hendricks Hotel, which he has since conducted.

Our subject was married in Hendricks Precinct, April 2, 1883, to Miss Mary Flinn, a native of Sangamon County, Ill. Mrs. Beetem was born March 24, 1864, and was the sixth in a family of sixteen children, the offspring of Charles and Ann (Keegan) Flinn, who were natives of Ireland, and came to America in 1866, locating shortly after their arrival in this county. Mr. K. has been very prosperous in his adopted country, and is now the owner of 280 acres of fine land, comprising a good farm with the necessary improvements, and located in Hendricks Precinct.

Mr. and Mrs. Beetem became the parents of two children, Mary A. and John C. The latter died when one week old. Our subject and his estimable wife are members of the Catholic Church at Palmyra, and Mr. B. politically, is one of the most reliable adherents of the Democratic party.

JOHAN R. STEELE, one of the old citizens of Otoe County, and in fact, also of the State, is widely known and greatly respected, and carries on a successful business at Talmage, where he is connected with fire and life insurance, working for the Commercial Union, North British, Mercantile, the German of Freeport, and the German of Peoria Companies, and with the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York City. His connection with insurance dates from 1882, when Talmage Village was chartered. He has identified himself with almost every enterprise that is calculated to be a permanent benefit to the place, and has earned a reputation accordingly.

Mr. Steele was the first Postmaster of the town, and held the position for three years. He is now the Treasurer of the Building and Loan Association of Talmage, which has done good work since its organization in February, 1883. Its influence has been felt even beyond the city, and is one of the institutions that has helped to make the town what it is. Three years also he was Director of Public Schools, an office that he filled most creditably.

Before coming to this county Mr. Steele was successful as a farmer in Four Mile Precinct, and he now owns a fine property of forty acres near the town limits of Talmage, and also an addition, embracing eighteen lots, part of which has been sold and improved. He helped in the erection of the first building in Talmage, and has with much pride and pleasure watched the rapid progress recently made in the extension and welfare generally of the place.

With the exception of the years 1868, 1869 and 1870, Mr. Steele has been a resident of Nebraska since 1855. Prior to coming to Talmage his home was in Nebraska City and in the vicinity of that place for twenty-five years. There also he was engaged in the pursuit of agriculture, and being a thoroughly practical man, saw much prosperity therein. During the three years of his absence above mentioned he was farming in Nodaway County, Mo., but was not sufficiently enamoured of that district to remain longer.

The subject of our sketch was a resident of Fremont County, Iowa, from the year 1849 until he came to this State, and was one of the first settlers and pioneers of that district. He passed through the then not unusual experiences inseparably connected with such a new order of things, and helped in the development of that recently opened district.

Virginia is the native State of our subject, and was his home until he went to Fremont County, Iowa. He was born in Tazewell County, Va., on the 13th of June, 1841. The great-grandfather of our subject was the first member of this family to settle in America, coming from his German home and settling in Wythe County, Va. There was born to him a son, David Steele, whose son William R. is the father of our subject.

David Steele was a prosperous and extensive Virginia farmer, and married a lady a native of that State, who presented him with nine children. After their children had almost all grown up he removed to Kentucky, and there died in the year 1863, at an advanced age. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Peery, survived him, and afterward went to Missouri, where she died at the home of one of her children, having passed the allotted three-score years and ten.

There were born to Mr. and Mrs. David Steele nine children, the father of our subject being one of the older children. He grew to years of manhood in Tazewell County, Va., and was married to Nancy Peery, who was born of Virginia parentage, in Tazewell County, and was there educated and brought up. The family of which she was a member was one of the oldest and most respected in Virginia, and was of Scottish extraction. W. Peery became prominent in both religious and political circles. He was for many years a minister of the Methodist Church, and in addition held many offices of political connection, receiving on several different occasions marked expressions of confidence and esteem from his fellow-citizens. He departed this life at the age of ninety-four years. Mr. Peery is still remembered as the writer of many religious and other songs, and various literary efforts on a number of subjects. His son John was the father of Mrs. Nancy (Peery) Steele.

After his marriage the father of our subject began farming, but never accumulated a very large competency. In 1849, he, with eight other heads of families, accompanied by their wives and children, left their homes in Tazewell County and started for the Golden State, taking passage at Kenoa, on the Ohio River, and went west to the Mississippi, thence up the latter river, intending to leave the boat and go by land from St. Joseph, Mo., but after the boat got on its way to St. Joseph, the dread disease cholera attacked those aboard, and before they got to St. Joseph six of the original nine promoters of the enterprise had sickened and died, the father of our subject being one of the number.

The above-mentioned disaster frustrated the intentions of the little party, and left the families in almost destitute circumstances. Mrs. Steele with her children, and in company with another family, then went to Fremont County, Iowa, settling in the wilds of that comparatively unknown district. The family was poor, the children small, and the circumstances and surroundings the very reverse of favorable. Nevertheless, mother love was sufficient to supply spirit, nerve and strength enough to provide for and take care of the five little ones for several years. In the year 1854 Mrs. Steele married her second husband, John W. Bounds. They settled in Four Mile Precinct, where they continued to live for several years, and there she died at the age of seventy-seven years. Mr. Bounds had died about two years previously while on a visit to Missouri.

The subject of our sketch was the first son and second child of five children born to his parents. He was eight years of age when the disastrous river voyage was undertaken. One year after landing in Iowa it was his misfortune to meet with an accident that left him a cripple for life. From the age of nine years until he was sixteen he was unable to do without his crutches and do anything to earn his living. When sixteen years of age, in spite of having had but few educational advantages, he had through the long years of his sickness become quite a bookworm, and by that means had become quite a student and a well-educated man. He is a splendid business man, and has a large circle of friends, more especially among the business men of the county.

The marriage of our subject was celebrated in Four Mile Precinct, this county, the lady of his choice being Miss Jane Biggs, who was born in Weston, Tenn., on the 29th of April, 1844. She is the daughter of Allen and Polly (Flatford) Biggs. Her mother died in Tennessee in the year 1856, and her father, who is a native of Tennessee and a farmer by occupation, is still living, and makes his home in Delta, this county, at the age of sixty-eight years.

There have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Steele eleven children, five of whom are yet living, and whose names are as follows: William A., Frank P., Lucy B., Stully and Gladys. The deceased children bore the subjoined names: Douglas, Nancy A., Mary, John R., Roscoe and Dora. The surviving members of this family are still at home with their parents.

Mr. Steele is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and well received among his fellow-members of Eureka Lodge No. 8, of Talmage. He is recognized as one of the leaders of the Prohibition party, and has the distinguished honor of being the father of the party in this city. He is a liberal contributor to many Prohibition newspapers in a literary way, and the articles from his pen, terse, logical, trenchant and finished, are proof of his abilities in that direction. His fellow-townsmen manifested their confidence and esteem by nominating Mr. Steele for the State Legislature from this county on the Prohibition ticket.

MAGNUS TAYLOR JOHNSON. In the fall of 1857 the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this biography established himself in a modest way in his present business. In time this expanded to important proportions, and Mr. Johnson has now for many years been general agent for the lines of steamers from America to all points of the world. His natural intelligence and faculty of observation have proved qualities amply adapted to his branch of the business, of which he has made a success. By prompt attention to the details thereof, and his courteous manner of dealing with the general public, he has become widely and favorably known, especially among the circles where he has been the most largely called to operate. He is a man now of wealth and prominence, and one amply worthy of representation in a work of this kind, which comprises a record of those who by their enterprise have been important factors in the building up of Nebraska City.

The parents of our subject, Anderson and Ellen Johnson, were natives of Scandinavia, and are now deceased. Their family consisted of four children, of whom our subject came to America. Magnus

T. was born in the district of Christianstadt, Aug. 31, 1829, and attended school quite regularly near the home of his childhood until a lad fourteen years of age. He was then sent by his parents to the city of Berlin, Germany, where he prosecuted his studies in the High School until 1851, being then a young man twenty-two years of age, the master of fine acquirements, and having become familiar with several languages.

Before the close of his last term in the High School young Johnson, who had signalized himself as a youth of more than ordinary intelligence, was solicited by a Scandinavian colony to accompany them to America as interpreter, to which he consented, expecting to return to his own country when his mission had ended. After landing in the city of Quebec, however, he determined to explore a portion of the West, and coming over into the States, proceeded first to Chicago, and from there to Knox County, Ill., with teams. He stopped for a short time in the then little hamlet of Knoxville, and later went to Oquawka on the east bank of the Mississippi River, and in Henderson County. At this point Mr. Johnson engaged as clerk in a store, where he staid one year. He then went to Monmouth, in Warren County, and opened a clothing store, being engaged in this business there until 1856. Having in the meantime sold a considerable proportion of his goods on credit, he was in consequence a heavy loser, and was obliged on this account to close up his business, disposing of the remains of it for almost nothing.

Notwithstanding this experience, however, Mr. Johnson still believed there were opportunities in America not to be found in his own country, and he determined here to abide. The winter of 1856-57 we find him in Nebraska City, to which he had come via the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, landing with a capital of $70 in his pocket. He at once procured employment, carrying chain for a surveyor, at which he was employed during that summer. In the spring of 1858 he established the business at which he is still engaged, and which has been, especially during late years, the source of a handsome income.

The marriage of Magnus Taylor Johnson and Miss Charlotte Waterfall was celebrated at the home of the bride in Nebraska City, Oct. 12, 1858. Mrs. Johnson was born in Hampshire, England, Aug. 11, 1837, and came to America with her parents. Her father was a watchmaker by occupation, and the parents settled first in Cleveland, Ohio. The mother spent the last years of her life in St. Joseph; the father died in Illinois. Their family consisted of five children.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson commenced the journey of life together in a modest home in accordance with their means, and have now for a period of over thirty years been residents of Nebraska City. They have watched with lively interest the growth and development of one of the most flourishing commonwealths of the West, and Mr. Johnson, in the building up of one of its most important industries, has thus contributed his quota to the advancement of his adopted city. They have now a handsome and comfortable home, and enjoy the friendship of a large number of the best people around them. Their union has been blessed by the birth of six children, namely: Frederick, Henry, Crena, Charles, Nellie and Monas. The eldest of these is twenty-nine years of age and the youngest is eight. Mr. Johnson, politically, votes the Republican ticket, and in religious matters he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the Episcopal Church.

In the spring of 1869 Mr. Johnson opened a hotel on Central avenue, where he officiated as "mine host" for a period of eight years. The house under his management became extremely popular, and was the favorite resort for travelers throughout this region.

COL. S. N. STEWART, the well-known inventor and builder of the Pontoon bridge, which has proved such a boom to Nebraska City, is worthy of more than a passing mention in this work. At the organization of the Pontoon Bridge Company, he was unanimously selected as its President, and still holds the position. He is a native of Ohio, having been born at Marietta, April 27, 1845, and there spent the early years of his life. His father was a wholesale boot and shoe merchant, and the family moved across the Mississippi to Iowa in 1859, when our subject was a lad of fourteen years.

Young Stewart continued a resident of the Hawkeye State until the outbreak of the Rebellion, and at the early age of sixteen years enlisted as a private in Company E, 18th Iowa Infantry, which was assigned to duty on the frontier. He went in as a private, and by the faithful discharge of his duties was in due time promoted to the rank of Captain. Later his strong Abolition sentiments induced him to resign his captaincy in the 18th Iowa for a First Lieutenantcy in a colored regiment—this being the 62d Regiment United States Infantry, serving on the Rio Grande. In the conflict at Palmetto Ranch, in Texas, on account of his gallant services, he was breveted Lieutenant Colonel. This was the last battle of the war, and Lieut. Stewart was the last man wounded, May 13, 1866, on the Union side in the late Rebellion.

After the war was ended our subject devoted himself to invention, and in 1876 crossed the Atlantic and remained in Europe for a period of five years, during which time he secured letters patent for his River Motor, disposing of the Austrian and Russian patents to a company in Vienna. In the meantime he traveled extensively in most of the countries of Europe, making the acquaintance of various notable personages, princes and potentates. Upon returning to the United States in 1881, he settled in Philadelphia, and has devoted himself entirely to his inventions for the past six or seven years. About half of this time, however, he has spent abroad. The Deep Sea Sounder, described in the Engineering News of 1883, is his invention, and is now largely in use in the English navy. The Current Motor, described in the same periodical, is also his invention.

The Pontoon bridge, however, is perhaps one of the most popular and useful inventions of Col. Stewart. He came to Nebraska in the spring of 1888, and at once arranged to put in one of these across the Missouri River. It has given universal satisfaction, and is considered a great advantage to the city. Although Col. Stewart has become widely and favorably known among the business men of this place, he still calls Philadelphia his home. His wife was formerly Miss Nannie Wilson, the only daughter of Hon. John S. Wilson, the well-known philanthropist of Adams County, Ohio, and whose latest benefaction was $50,000 donated for the purpose of founding an orphan asylum in Adams County. To Mr and Mrs. Stewart there have been born three children—Lulu, Noble and Donald. Col. Stewart makes his Western headquarters at Nebraska City, in whose future he has great faith. He is a liberal-minded and public-spirited citizen, and his generosity in assisting to build the street car line will long be remembered by its people.

LEWIS B. RICHARD. Among the agriculturists of Palmyra Precinct few are more thoroughly practical, enterprising and truly successful than Mr. Richard, who operates 160 acres on section 31. He is the son of Phillip and Sarah (Buebanan) Richard, who were natives respectively of Lycoming and Union Counties, Pa., where their parents settled and continued to reside after their marriage. There the father died in the year 1849, when our subject was about seven years of age, he himself being in the prime of life, and but thirty-five years old. This left his wife with the care of six children, viz: Elizabeth, Mary, Edward, Louis B., Albert and John Jacob. Edward served in the army, and fell at the post of duty. Albert served for two and John for five years with the army.

The subject of our sketch was born on the 30th of June, 1842, at Williamsport, Pa. He enjoyed the advantages of a common-school education, in spite of the fact that he began to work out at the early age of eight years. In 1868, in company with his mother he went to Stephenson County, Ill., and there remained for about two years. There subsequently he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ellen Snyder. This lady is the daughter of Benjamin and Mary Snyder (the reader is referred to the sketch of Mr. Snyder, which appears in this volume.) Her mother died while she was quite small, and her father died in 1886, aged eighty years. This is a step they have never had occasion to regret, and their home is one of the bright and cheery places that are at the foundation of the prosperity of the nation. Their union has been happily consummated by the birth of three children, William, Luella and Jessie, of whom they are justly proud.

The first few years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Richard lived in Stephenson County, where he operated a farm. The same year that Lincoln was located he paid his first visit to Nebraska, and took a great fancy to the country. The second time that he came to this State was in 1879, and then he was accompanied by his wife and two children, and located on the northwest quarter of section 31, which he purchased almost immediately on arrival.

Mr. Richard has not been prominent in civic affairs, but has served one term as Director of Schools. In politics he is strictly independent, being swayed only by principles, and voting only for men of principle. He is a pronounced temperance man, and a worker in that cause. With his wife, he is numbered among the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in good standing, and there, as elsewhere in the community, they are held in high regard. The property of our subject is thoroughly improved, his residence is a pretentious, pleasant and comfortable dwelling, and his farm buildings are as good as any that can be found in the county. He has recently erected a very fine frame barn, standing 46x50 feet, and designed to meet every requirement incidental to the farm.

JOHN J. CASPERS. The subject of this narrative represents a large amount of property in Rock Creek Precinct, his landed estate embracing 480 acres on section 32, and a like amount in LaFayette Precinct, Nemaha County. The most of this is in a productive condition, and yields to the proprietor a handsome income. The homestead is located on section 32, occupying one of the finest situations in the county, and affording an extended view of the surrounding country. Everything that taste and means could suggest has been done to render it attractive, and the inmates are surrounded by all of the comforts and many of the luxuries of life.

RESIDENCE OF REUBEN CHURCH, SEC. 13. OTOE PRECINCT, OTOE COUNTY, NEBRASKA.

Mr. Caspers came to Nebraska while it was a Territory in the fall of 1856, and pre-empted 120 acres of land in Nemaha County. He took up his residence in Rock Creek Precinct, this county, in 1872. The distinguishing trait of his character has been a resolute perseverance that has kept him steadily at work, and which has enabled him to accomplish the fine results which are apparent to-day in his surroundings and his possessions.

Our subject was born in what was then the Kingdom of Hanover, Germany, Feb. 10, 1831, and is the offspring of a good family, his father being John Caspers, Sr., who carried on agriculture successfully upon his native soil and there spent his entire life, dying at the ripe old age of eighty years. He had married in early manhood Miss Hilka Zimmermann, a native of the same Province as her husband, and who died several years before his decease, also well advanced in years. They were people greatly respected in their community, members in good standing of the Lutheran Church, and the parents of seven children. Only one brother of our subject emigrated to America, and is now a resident of Nemaha County, Neb.

Mr. Caspers received a good practical education in his native tongue, and worked with his father on the farm until reaching manhood. He was then married to Miss Margaret Barans, who was also born in Hanover, Oct. 10, 1827. Her parents, Lawrence and Ricksta (Johnson) Barans, were also natives of Hanover, and the father a farmer by occupation. They died not far from the place of their birth, when quite aged. Their daughter Margaret remained with them until her marriage.

To Mr. and Mrs. Caspers there have been born nine children, with five of whom they have been called to part, namely: Maggie (1st), Thomas, Maggie (2d), and two infants unnamed. John, their eldest son living, married Miss Mattie Hillis, and is farming in Benton Precinct, Nemaha County; Lawrence married Miss Mary Hillis, and they are living on a farm in Rock Creek Precinct; Benjamin married Miss Ida Pracht, and lives on a farm in LaFayette Precinct, Nemaha County; Ellen is at home with her parents. Both parents and children are members of the Lutheran Church, and Mr. Caspers, in politics, is a fervent supporter of Democratic principles. Mr. Caspers upon reaching the United States located in Madison County, Ill., where he lived two years, and thence came to Nebraska. A view of Mr. Caspers' place is shown on another page.

REUBEN CHURCH. Both physically and mentally considered, the subject of this sketch would at once attract the attention of any intelligent individual, and within the confines of Otoe Precinct there are none held more generally in respect on account of sterling worth of character combined with more than ordinary capabilities. Of noble stature and commanding presence, he also has a mind in keeping with the physical qualities bestowed upon him by a kindly Providence. Presiding over his domestic affairs his wife, Mrs. Lydia Church, is a lady in every way suited to her position as the companion of such a man as her husband, and one who in her younger years must have been a lady of uncommon beauty. She still retains a large measure of her youthful attractiveness, and is the mother of a blooming family, which the parents may be pardoned for looking upon with great pride.

Mr. Church owns and operates 245 acres of valuable land lying upon sections 13 and 18. Upon this he has labored for the last twenty years, and has very nearly brought it to perfection, the soil being in a highly productive condition, and the farm buildings, live stock and machinery of first-class description. The residence, a tasteful and commodious frame structure, is flanked by good barns and outhouses, an ample orchard, shade and fruit trees, and the usual appliances of the well-regulated country estate. The farm is largely devoted to the raising of fine stock, Mr. Church making a specialty of the celebrated Clydesdale horses. In this line he exhibits some of the handsomest specimens of the equine race to be found in Southeastern Nebraska.

Our subject is the offspring of a good family, being the elder of two children born to Charles and Sally (Dutton) Church, who were both natives of Rutland County, Vt., born near the town of that name. The paternal great-grandfather carried a musket in the Revolutionary War, while Grandfather Church served in the War of 1812. The family is of English ancestry, and the first representatives it is supposed settled in the Green Mountain State during the Colonial days. The parents of our subject were married in New York State, and settled on a farm in St. Lawrence County, where they lived until 1835. Thence they removed to Ohio, and thereafter for a time lived in the vicinity of the Black River, in Lorain County. The father, however, in 1848, not yet satisfied with his surroundings, pushed on still further westward with his family, locating first in DeKalb County, Ill. Later he crossed the Mississippi into Iowa, and settled upon a farm in Hancock County, where he was greatly prospered in his labors as an agriculturist and accumulated a fine property. He lived to the advanced age of eighty-four years, and died at the homestead in Iowa, Dec. 25, 1884.

Mrs Sally (Dutton) Church, the mother of our subject, had died when a young woman only twenty-three years of age, during the residence of the family in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., leaving two children: Reuben, of our sketch, and his sister Polly. The latter is now the wife of Henry Cunningham, of Boone County, Ill., and they are the parents of one child. Charles Church after the death of his first wife was married again, in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., to Miss Calista Smith, and to them were born eleven children. The step-mother and her children are still living in the Hawkeye State.

Reuben Church was born in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., Nov. 26, 1826, and was a lad of eight years when his father removed to Ohio. He was educated in the common schools, and remained a member of his father's household until reaching his majority. In the fall of 1850 he started out for himself, making his way first to Chippewa County, Wis., where he was employed in the lumber regions for a period of four years. During this time he received a salary of $26 per month the year around, saved what he could of his earnings, and thus laid the foundation of a future prosperity.

Up to this time Mr. Church, although now nearly twenty-nine years of age, had wisely refrained from taking upon himself the responsibilities which too many men and women thoughtlessly assume, but he now judged it proper to begin the establishment of a home and domestic ties of his own. He had in the meanwhile formed the acquaintance of Miss Lydia Little, one of the most attractive and estimable young ladies of the Prairie State, as sensible as she was beautiful, and who fully appreciated the manly qualities of her stalwart suitor. Returning to DeKalb County, Ill., our subject was united in marriage with this lady at her home in Belvidere, March 27, 1855, amid the congratulations and best wishes of many friends, who voted them the handsomest pair seen in that region for many a day.

A few months after their marriage our subject and his young wife moved to Iowa, and Mr. Church purchased 160 acres of land in Avery Township, Hancock County. He entered earnestly upon the cultivation and improvement of his purchase and was greatly prospered. While at the same time prosecuting his labors as an agriculturist he became prominent in the affairs of Hancock County, his evident talents having obtained ready recognition among the people in that section of the Hawkeye State. He was instrumental in the organization of the county in 1858, and was elected its first Treasurer. He was twice re-elected to this office, serving a term of six years, and for four years of this time was also the County Recorder, holding both offices, as was frequently done in the new counties. For a number of years he officiated as Justice of the Peace. He was the Postmaster at Upper Grove in the same county during the administration of three Presidents, Buchanan, Lincoln and Johnson, resigning the office upon his removal from the State.

Although having little to complain of in his experience as an Iowa farmer and citizen, the reports reaching Mr. Church from the Territory of Nebraska induced him to change his location. He certainly has had little reason to regret this change and neither have the people around him. Since that time he has been a resident of Otoe Precinct, this county. He has studiously avoided mixing in public affairs since coming to Nebraska, preferring to give his attention to his farm and his family, although he keeps himself well posted upon current events and continues a warm supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He has acquitted himself in an admirable manner, both as an agriculturist and a citizen. No man stands higher in the community, which he has been no unimportant factor in bringing to its present position, representing the intelligence and the enterprise of Southern Nebraska. The Church homestead is regarded with unalloyed admiration by every traveler passing through this section of the country, and a view of this, which we present in connection with this sketch, serves not only to embellish the ALBUM of Otoe County, but illustrates the labors and successes of one of its most prominent and valued citizens.

Of the eight children born to Reuben and Lydia (Little) Church the record is as follows: The eldest daughter, Sarah E., is the wife of Edgar Clayton, a well-to-do and highly respected farmer of Otoe Precinct; Reuben D., a youth of great promise, is a student in the State University at Lincoln, expecting to be graduated in the class of '89; Frances, a young lady of fine attainments, and a graduate of the Peru Normal School, is a popular teacher at Exeter, Neb., having charge of the grammar department; Ella, the third child, died Jan. 18, 1888, at the age of twenty-six years; Andrew died when a babe of fifteen months; Anna, also a graduate of the Peru Normal School, is a teacher in the grammar department of the graded school at Stromsburg; John and Katie I., also pupils of the Peru Normal School, give promise of distinguishing themselves in a manner similar to that of the elder children. Together they form a bright and interesting group, and will in due time take their places in the community as the most worthy representatives of one of the leading families of the "Water Valley."

GEORGE W. EISER, of Nebraska City, has been successfully operating a meat market for the past twenty years, during which time he has built up a prosperous trade. A native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, he was born Jan. 31, 1845, and is the son of George G. Eiser, who with his wife was also of German birth and parentage, and both died in their native land. There were two brothers beside our subject, Casper, who died in Peoria County, Ill., and John M., who still resides there.

Our subject remained a resident of his native province until sixteen years of age, in the meantime attending school until fourteen. He then commenced learning the trade of tanner, which he followed until 1862, in which year he came to the United States. He set sail from the port of Bremen and landed in New York City, whence he proceeded directly to Peoria, Ill., where he arrived with a capital of $1.50 in his pocket. He secured employment with a butcher at $10 per month and remained one and one-half years. He became familiar with this trade also and finally started for Nebraska, landing in Omaha, where he worked a few months and then migrated to North Platte, where he stayed six months. Thence he returned to Omaha, from there drifted back to Peoria, remaining until 1868. We next find him in Minonk, Woodford Co., Ill., with a capital of $150, opening a meat shop on his own account. He soon commenced buying and shipping cattle, and in a comparatively short time accumulated $12,000. He soon parted with this, however, and in 1870 concluded to seek his fortunes again in the farther West. He started out with a team of horses and wagon and traversed the State of Missouri, thence went to Solomon, Kan., and later turned his steps toward Nebraska, locating not long afterward in Nebraska City.

A few weeks later Mr. E. purchased a meat market and has been in business continuously since that time. In 1874 he returned to his old home in Germany and was married to Miss Lena Spengler, like himself a native of Hesse-Darmstadt. The newly married pair shortly afterward set out for the United States. They are now the parents of six children, Geo. W., Hattie, John M., Carl, Carrie and Amelia. Mr. Eiser, politically, supports Democratic principles. In 1882 he was elected Alderman of the second ward and re-elected in 1887. Socially, he belongs to Western Star Lodge No. 2, A. F. & A. M., Eureka Lodge No. 3, K. of P., Nuckolls Lodge No. 7, A. O. U. W., and Camp No. 331, Modern Woodmen.

FRANCIS E. BROWN, Attorney-at-Law of Syracuse, located here in 1878. He was born in Livingston County, N. Y., July 1, 1847, and is the son of Francis and Harriet Brown. He was reared to manhood in his native State and received his education in the common schools. In 1859 he went to Darlington, Wis., where he remained until 1864. The Civil War being then in progress he enlisted in Co. E., 142d Illinois Infantry, in which he served until the close of the struggle.

In 1866 young Brown commenced the study of medicine in the office of Drs. Hoyte and Johnson, in Hudson, N. Y., where he remained one year. Next in Mount Morris he read law with the firm of Wisner & Gamble, and was admitted to the bar at Rochester in 1871. He commenced practice at Mount Morris with Judge Norton, but subsequently removed to Newark, in Wayne County. In 1878 he started westward and not long afterward located in Syracuse, this county.

Mr. Brown was married in 1883 to Hattie W., daughter of Geo. Hartley of Syracuse, and they have two children, Duane and Vida. Politically he is an active Republican, and has frequently held the local offices. He was one time made the candidate of his party for State Senator, but was defeated by sixteen votes. Socially, he belongs to the Masonic Fraternity and is an Adjutant-General in the G. A. R. under Commander-in-Chief Vandervoort.

DR. W. C. CLARY, familiarly known as a competent veterinary surgeon of Nebraska City, was born in what was then Sangamon County, Ill., but is now Menard County, at Clary's Grove, Feb. 26, 1823. He was the seventh child and sixth son in a family of fourteen children, the offspring of John and Rhoda (Armstrong) Clary, the former a native of Lincoln County, Ky., and the latter of Tennessee. They were married in the latter State and removed to the Territory of Illinois in the fall of 1817, settling in Sangamon County, and the father thereafter voted on the slavery question and the adoption of the State Constitution.

John Clary made the first entry of land in the Springfield district, carried on farming, took an active part in politics and served as Justice of the Peace and County Commissioner. He and his father in the spring of 1819 settled at what was afterward known as Clary's Grove, when there were no white residents within five miles. Our subject received his education in the primitive schools, the first building in that vicinity devoted to this purpose being a log house on his father's farm. He waded through slough and snow across the prairie in the pursuance of his studies, and from his boyhood up entertained a remarkable liking for animals. He grew up strong and healthy, and when attaining manhood was married Aug. 19, 1847, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Green) Watkins, who was born and reared not far from the early home of her husband.

Our subject came to Nebraska with his family in 1858, employing ten days in making a trip which can now be accomplished in nineteen hours. They located on a claim in Nemaha County, and endured the common lot of pioneers. Our subject improved a farm, which he left in 1877 for Nebraska City, where he entered upon the practice of his profession, in which during all these years he had been perfecting himself. He has signalized himself as a liberal and public citizen.

To Dr. and Mrs. Elizabeth Clary there were born nine children, namely: Robert M., George, Andrew J., who died in Illinois; Mary F., John L., also died in Illinois; William M.; Henry L., an infant, and Anna S. The present wife of our subject was formerly Miss Angeline G., daughter of James and Elizabeth (Wheeler) Hayes, to whom he was married April 30, 1871. This lady was born in Atchison County, Mo., and lived there until eleven years old. Thence she removed with her mother to Iowa, the father having gone to California, where he died. She lived in Iowa until her marriage. Of this union there are five children, the eldest of whom, Cora E., is a successful teacher; Martha E., Charles C., Lula E. and Ralph F. are at home with their parents.

The Dr. in 1874 lost $6,000 by going security for a friend, which left him bankrupt. He endeavors however, to make the best of circumstances. Politically he affiliates with the Democratic party. During the Mexican War he enlisted June 16, 1846, in the 4th Illinois Infantry and served about six months, being discharged for disability. During the late Civil War he also participated in the conflict for union and freedom.

JOSIAH ROBERTS, a resident of Syracuse Precinct, settled here in February, 1883. He was born in Clinton County, Ohio, Feb. 14, 1830, and is the son of James and Mary (Antrim) Roberts, who were natives of Tennessee and of Welsh and English parentage respectively. The paternal grandfather, John Roberts, settled first in Tennessee, whence he removed to Ohio, where he spent his last day. He married Miss Phebe Myers, who was of German extraction. The maternal grandparents were natives of England.

The parents of our subject were married in Tennessee whence they removed to Ohio, settling in Clinton County during its pioneer days. Later they were residents of Logan County. James Roberts served under Gen. Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812. Both he and his wife died in Logan County, Ohio, leaving a family of fourteen children, all of whom grew to mature years and of whom our subject was the ninth in order of birth. He was but two years old when the family took up their residence in Logan County, where he lived until eighteen years of age, and in the meantime commenced work at the blacksmith trade.

From Ohio, in 1851, Josiah Roberts removed to Knox County, Ill., and from there later to Fremont County, Iowa. Still later we find him at Fort Kearney, Nebraska, where he operated a blacksmith-shop in the employ of the Government eighteen months. He next migrated to Atchison County, Mo., where, in 1854, he was married to Elizabeth H. Wilson. Mrs. Roberts was born in Indiana. After marriage they came to Nebraska and our subject pre-empted land in Nemaha County upon which he made some improvements, then returned to Fremont County, Iowa, where he followed farming and blacksmithing until 1862,

The next removal of Mr. Roberts was to Mills County, Iowa, and at Glenwood he conducted a blacksmith-shop until after the war. He then settled on a farm in that county where he prosecuted agriculture until 1883, the year of his removal to this State, when he settled where he now lives. He owns 320 acres of good land here, besides two tracts, 320 and 160 acres respectively, in Russell Precinct. He makes a specialty of stock-raising, keeping about 150 head of cattle. His success has been largely due to the increasing value of his land. In Iowa he owned a whole section. He paid for his present farm $8,000, for the 320 acres in Russell precinct $5,000, and for the 160 acres $2,500.

Mr. and Mrs. Roberts have ten children living, namely; Lucinda, James N., Isaac M., Jasper M., Emmett, Bartley, Fanny, Edward, Luke and Alvira. Mr. Roberts, politically, is Independent, supporting such men as he believes are qualified for office. His estimable wife is a member of the Christian Church.

HON. SAMUEL HOWARD CALHOUN, a prominent resident of this county, was born in Boston, Mass., May 27, 1836. His father, Charles Calhoun, was also a native of Boston, and his paternal grandfather, Andrew Calhoun, was born in Ireland. The latter came to America when a young man, locating first in Boston, and from there removed to New Hampshire, where he purchased land and engaged in farming. He spent his last days in the city of Concord. He was a Presbyterian in his belief, and in this faith reared his children. Of these there were nine who grew to mature years. Their mother in her girlhood was Martha Chamberlain. Charles Calhoun, the father of our subject, was reared in his native city, and took to mercantile pursuits, which he carried on in Boston. About 1830 he was elected Secretary of the Massachusetts State Senate, and, with the exception of two years, when the Know Nothing party was in power, served continuously nearly thirty years. He accumulated property and became owner of a country seat at Woburn, where he spent a part of each year. In 1866 he came to Nebraska, and died at the home of his son, our subject, in September, 1869.

The father of our subject, politically, was an old line Whig. He married Miss Almira Stevens, who was born in Burlington, Mass., and who survived her husband until February, 1874, having also spent her last days with her son, Samuel H. There were in the family, besides the latter two daughters, Martha, who died at the age of twenty years, and Mary, who died when twelve years old. Samuel H. attended the city schools during his boyhood, and later was graduated from the Latin School of Boston, under Prof. Francis Gardner. He next entered Williams College, and was graduated in the class of '57.

In the fall of the year above mentioned Mr. Calhoun came to Kansas to accept a position in the office of an uncle, who was Surveyor-General, with headquarters at Lecompton. The year following the office was removed to Nebraska City, and in the month of August, that year, our subject made his advent in this place. There was no railroad nearer than Jefferson City, and transportation was effected by water and stage. The town comprised an outfitting point for freighters going with Government stores to Utah. When the gold excitement broke out the Pike's Peak emigrants came this way, business was lively and money plenty. Nebraska was a Territory, much of the land belonging to the Government, and unsurveyed. Indians of various tribes frequented this locality.

Mr. Calhoun remained in the office of the Surveyor-General until the beginning of the year 1860. In the meantime he had been reading law, and in December of that year was admitted to the bar. He commenced practice in Nebraska City, continuing until 1886, when he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the district of Nebraska, comprising this Territory and Dakota, with headquarters at Omaha. Politically, he has always been a Democrat, and prominent in the party here. He served several terms as Mayor of Nebraska City, and Prosecuting Attorney for Otoe County.

He represented the county in the State Senate, and has been a delegate to the various conventions. In 1875 he participated in the revision of the State Constitution, being Chairman of the committee appointed therefor. He was married, in 1864, to Miss Matilda McMechan, and they have four children—John C., Annie, S. Howard and Alexander. Mrs. Howard was born at Glasgow, Mo., and is the daughter of John and Matilda McMechan, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume.

HON. J. STERLING MORTON. This is one of the names inseparably associated with the early history of Otoe County. Coming to Nebraska when it was a wilderness, he located on a tract of unbroken prairie, adjacent to which Nebraska City afterward grew, and his career has been marked more by the desire to establish a home, in the truest significance of the word, than the acquisition of wealth or political fame. Arbor Lodge forms one of the rarest spots in the landscape of this county—the ideal country home blessed by happiness and content, a home of culture and refinement, but from which one of the lights went out on the 29th of June, 1881, when the wife and mother, to whose efforts had been largely due the building up of this home, departed hence. There were left four children—Joy, Paul, Mark and Carl.

A native of the town of Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., Mr. Morton was born April 22, 1832. The first representative of the family of whom there has been preserved any authentic record was Richard Morton, a Scotchman by birth, a Puritan in religion, and a blacksmith by trade. He removed at an early day from Hartford, Conn., to Hadley, Mass., and thence to Hatfield, about 1668. One of his immediate descendants was Abner Morton, the paternal grandfather of our subject, who was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1799. After his marriage he settled in St. Albans, Vt., and became the father of a son, Julius Dewen, the father of our subject.

Julius Dewen Morton was a man of marked ability, and made for himself an honorable record, both as a business man and a citizen, and at the time of his death was President of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, of Detroit. He married Emeline Sterling, Sept. 30, 1830, and they removed from New York State to Michigan when their son J. Sterling was but a lad. He subsequently attended school at Albion, was then admitted to the State University at Ann Arbor, and finally entered Union College, N. Y., then under charge of Dr. Eliphalet Nott, from whom he received his diploma in 1854. Prior to this he had shown strong predilections toward journalism, being a frequent contributor to the Detroit Press, and other papers of reputation.

On the 30th of October, 1854, occurred the marriage of J. Sterling Morton with Miss Caroline Ion French, of Detroit, with whom he had attended school from childhood, and to whom he had been betrothed at the age of sixteen. On the wedding day, accompanied by his wife, he started for Nebraska, and a few weeks later became owner of five town shares and seventy lots included in the present site of Nebraska City. He also became editor of the Nebraska City News, and was engaged in editorial work at intervals until 1877. In the meantime, the year after his arrival, he was elected to the Territorial Legislature, and was made a candidate the second term, but defeated by eighteen votes, in consequence of his opposition to the chartering of "wildcat" banks. He was reinstated as a member in 1857, and took an active part in the adjournment of the Legislature to Florence, a struggle as bitter perhaps as any in which Nebraska has been interested.

Mr. Sterling succeeded Thomas B. Cuming as Secretary of the Territory, in the spring of 1858, and a few months later, following the resignation of Gov. Richardson, became acting Governor. In the fall of 1860 he was nominated by the Democracy as a delegate to Congress, and was elected by a majority of fourteen votes. Secession coming on, and his party being in the minority, his seat was contested, and the question finally decided in favor of his opponent. He was at this time but twenty-nine years old, and on account of his more than ordinary capabilities there were enlisted in his behalf the strongest intellects on the Democratic side of the House. An able argument was made by Pendleton, sustained by speeches from Richardson, of Illinois; Vallandigham, Voorhees and John J. Crittenden, the last mentioned having moved and successfully insisted upon the passage of a resolution granting the defeated contestant mileage and pay for the time he was in Washington.

Upon returning home Mr. Morton took no active part in politics until the spring of 1866, when he received the gubernatorial nomination, contesting with David Butler the honor of being the first Governor of Nebraska as a State. In consequence of alleged irregularities in Rock Bluff Precinct, Cass County, by which about 160 ballots were thrown out, Butler was declared elected. Later, without a caucus being held, Mr. Morton received the entire strength of his party for United States Senator, but since that time he has withdrawn from political life, declining all nominations. He was appointed to represent Nebraska at the Paris Exposition, and was one of the Commissioners at the National Centennial in 1876. He has served as President of the State Board of Agriculture and Horticulture, and is the originator of "Arbor Day," a festival adopted by many of the Western States.

CHARLES M. HUBNER, editor of the Daily and Weekly News, Nebraska City, is one of the leading journalists of Otoe County. He has traveled much in the United States, is a man of varied information, is fluent in conversation, and wields a ready pen. He was born in Louisville, Ky., Sept. 24, 1855, and is a son of Dr. George Alfred Hubner, a learned physician, a native of Mulhausen, Alsace, which at the time of his birth was a Province of France. His father, grandfather of our subject, belonged to one of the old Alsacian families of that place, and was a lifelong resident there.

Dr. Hubner was reared in his native town, and attended school quite regularly until he had attained manhood. He then commenced the study of medicine, going to Germany to take a course in one of the noted medical schools of that Empire. He afterward pursued his studies in one of the famous hospitals of Paris, and was graduated from there at the conclusion of seven years' study and practice, having attained high rank, and was thus well fitted for a career in which he gained considerable eminence as a physician of more than ordinary skill and learning. He traveled in different parts of Europe, and in about 1840 set his face toward America. After his arrival here he located in New Orleans, and practiced there for a time. He then bought a plantation in the Ouachita parish, and also became quite an extensive slave-owner, and for a number of years he spent only his winters in New Orleans, and the rest of the year on his plantation. He died in New Orleans in 1858, and a valued citizen was lost to that State, as he was a man enterprising and liberal, with shrewd business talents, and of well-balanced mind. His amiable wife, who was a fitting companion for such a man, now makes her home in Columbus, Ohio. Her maiden name was Ann Merton, and she was a native of Wales. Her father, William Merton, was also a native of that country, and he was a manufacturer of cloth. He came to America in 1839, located in Franklin County, Ohio, being quite an early settler there, and took a Government contract to build a bridge in that county, of which he was a resident until his death.

Charles Hubner, of whom we write, may be said to have grown up with Nebraska City, as he was brought here when an infant, on account of ill-health, and in this fine climate grew to a vigorous manhood, receiving his education in the city schools. When he was fourteen years of age he commenced life for himself as a printer's devil in the Nebraska City News office, and in the course of time thoroughly mastered every detail of the art preservative. He then started out to see something of the world, and worked at his trade in several different cities in the United States. In 1879 Mr. Hubner took charge of the city department of the Lincoln Globe, and in 1881, in company with J. R. Dietrich, started a paper at Red Oak, Iowa, the paper being called the Weekly Democrat. The name may have been significant of the fact that the paper did not have a very strong hold on life, as after a few months its publication ceased, the venture not proving a success. Our subject, however, rose superior to this failure, and returning to Nebraska City in 1882, took charge of the News, with which he has been connected ever since, and by his energy and ability he has made it one of the best, newsiest, and most reliable papers in this section of the country, with a large circulation. On the 27th of February, 1887, the paper became the property of a stock company which was then formed, of which he is a member, his associates being E. D. Marnell and Thomas Morton. This company publishes the Nebraska City Daily and Weekly News, besides doing a large business in job printing.

Politically, Mr. Hubner is a Democrat; socially, he is a member of the Western Star Lodge No. 2, A. F. & A. M., and a thirty-second degree member of Alpha Consistory, A. & A. S. R.

ALLEX. S. McCARTNEY, of Belmont Township, has a farm of 400 acres on section 18, with a fine brick residence, a good barn and all the other outbuildings required for the successful prosecution of agriculture. He makes a specialty of stock-raising, keeping Poland-China swine, and good grades of Short-horn cattle. The land is in a good state of cultivation and the whole premises indicate comfort and plenty.

Our subject was born in County Antrim, Ireland, April 21, 1835, and is the son of James McCartney, a native of the same locality, and who is now deceased. The family emigrated to the United States in 1838, and sojourned for a time in New York City. Afterward they lived in Orange and Oneida Counties, N. Y., until 1845, when they changed their residence to Guernsey County, Ohio.

where Alex. S. completed his education in Madison College. For five years thereafter he taught school in Guernsey County.

Mr. McCartney came to Kansas in 1856, settling in Johnson County, and as a soldier under Gen. Jim Lane and John Brown participated in the border troubles. He returned to Ohio in 1858, and thence in 1863 came to Nebraska with five car loads of sheep. He visited the State in 1864, bringing four car loads of sheep, Spanish Merinos, and very valuable, and the year following superintended the transportation of a car load of horses to Iowa and Nebraska.

Our subject located on his present farm in June, 1866, at the time when it had undergone very little improvement. He worked diligently early and late for a number of years, and is now enjoying the reward of perseverance and industry. He was married to Miss Mary P., daughter of Thomas Milligan, and of this union there have been born eight children, six of whom are living, namely; Thomas B., Maggie, Martha A., Andrew, William and Robert. The two daughters are attending college in Tarkio, Mo. Mr. McCartney, politically, is identified with the prohibition party and was one of four men and three women who attended the first Prohibition convention in the county. During the late war he proffered his services as a soldier of the Union army but was rejected by the examining surgeon. In religious matters he is a member of the United Presbyterian Church,

RUFUS A. LITTLEFIELD, engaged in the practice of dentistry at Syracuse, was born in East Bridgewater, Plymouth Co., Mass., Dec. 17, 1850. His parents were Rufus A. and Abigail R. (Whitman) Littlefield. He was reared on a farm and received his education in the common schools, and made his home under the parental roof until twenty-seven years of age.

At this period of his life Mr. Littlefield went into the State of New Hampshire at Enfield, Grafton County, engaging in the manufacture of shoes. This place was located on the west shore of Mascoma Lake, and on the east side was a settlement of Shakers. Our subject sojourned here until the fall of 1880, when he returned home, and the year following came to Nebraska, joining his brother George H., who had previously settled here and become a prominent physician of Syracuse. In May, 1881, our subject commenced the study of dentistry in Tecumseh with Charles H. Philpot, D. D. S., as preceptor, with whom he remained nearly three years. He practiced his profession in that place until December, 1884, when his office and dwelling were destroyed by fire. After this calamity he removed to Syracuse, of which he has since been a resident.

Dr. Littlefield was married, Oct. 24, 1884, to Miss Anna E. B. Emmons, daughter of James A. and Nancy Emmons, who was born in Brownville, this State. Her parents were among the first settlers of that region. The Doctor and his wife have two bright children, both sons—Rufus A. and James A. Politically, he is a Republican, religiously, a Congregationalist, and socially, a K. of P.

AUGUST CLAIR, the successful manager of the Planters' Stock Company of Delta, established in April, 1888, and now in a prosperous condition, and also the owner of a well-improved farm of eighty acres near Delta Station, and in these connections widely and favorably known throughout Otoe County, is the youngest of three children born to his parents. This interesting event occurred on the 18th of December, 1848, in Burgoyne, France. There he spent the first nine years of his life, coming with his parents to the United States in 1857. Their home was made in Nemaha County, this State, upon a pre-emption claim in Glenn Rock Precinct, where the father spent the remainder of his days, and also his mother, who survived him about twenty-three years; both had reached a very advanced age.

Miss Emily Carlin and the subject of our sketch celebrated their union in marriage in the above county, in September, 1879. His wife was born in France, which she left with her parents when she was about eleven years of age, and subsequently spent two years in Ohio, and then came to this State, growing to womanhood in Nemaha County; her parents are yet living upon a very productive and well-cultivated farm in Otoe County. Of this marriage there have been born four children, two of whom are deceased, viz: Julie and Nora. The two surviving children bear the same names, and are still with their parents.

Mr. Clair came to this place from Nemaha County in 1882. Prior to that date, until the year 1858, he had successfully operated a farm in Glenn Rock Precinct, comprising 160 acres, which had been originally entered by the father. He is energetic in business, and by no means short-sighted. He is one of the promoters, if not indeed the chief, of the organization of the Planters' Stock Company, which he now represents as grain buyer, and was instrumental in the erection of the splendid elevator at Delta, which is their property, and has a capacity of 6,000 bushels, with an annual shipment of about 200,000.

Our subject was reared and has continued his allegiance as a Catholic, while his wife, for similar reasons, is a member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Clair is a firm supporter of the Democratic party, and is also an affiliate of the Knights of Pythias.

CHARLES JAMES. There came from Mercer County, Pa., in the spring of 1867, one who has since been numbered among the most successful and enterprising men of this county, the subject of this sketch. Nebraska had then but recently been transformed from a Territory into a State, and Mr. James, taking up 160 acres of the first school land that was put up on the market, applied himself at once to its improvement and cultivation, and in his labors met with most gratifying success. He is now notable as a land-owner and stock-raiser, and has his homestead on section 16, in Wyoming Precinct, embracing a tract of 160 acres. On section 8 he has 160 acres, which, like the other, has been brought to a good state of cultivation, and is considered one of the finest tracts of land in the precinct. The home farm is supplied with first-class buildings, including a comfortable residence and a fine large barn, the latter occupying an area of 32x64 feet, and underneath is a warm stone basement for the shelter of stock.

Our subject was born in County Donegal, Ireland, in 1845, and is consequently in the prime of life. He was one of a large family of children, the offspring of William and Margaret (Buchanan) James, the former of whom, a farmer by occupation, was of Irish birth and ancestry, and died when his son Charles was a little lad five years of age. The widow with her seven children emigrated to America in 1850, and settled in Mercer County, Pa., where she took up a tract of land, and where our subject developed into manhood. He was employed for a number of years in the oil regions of the Keystone State, which he left in 1867 to seek his fortune across the Mississippi. Upon first coming to Nebraska he employed himself at farming six years in Otoe County, then returned to Pennsylvania, and was married, in Venango County, to Miss Maria S. Strawbridge, Aug. 23, 1863. This lady was born in the latter county in 1845, where she was reared to womanhood and received her education in the common schools. Her parents, Benjamin and Alvira (Sheffield) Strawbridge, were natives of Pennsylvania and Rhode Island, and the father was a farmer by occupation. They spent their last years in Venango County, Pa., dying at an advanced age. Their family included three sons and six daughters, all of whom are living.

Mr. and Mrs. James soon after their marriage returned to Nebraska, and took up their abode in an humble dwelling on the land which our subject had secured from the State, and here they have since made their home. The household circle was completed by the birth of four children, one of whom, a son, George W., died when seven weeks old. The survivors are Mary E., Charles S. and Hattie F. The eldest is thirteen years of age and the youngest eight, and all are at home with their parents. Mr. James, politically, is a sound Republican, and both he and his estimable wife hold a good position in the social circles of their community, enjoying the friendship of its best people.

WILLIAM SCHACHT. The name which stands at the head of this sketch is a familiar one to a large majority of the people of Osage Precinct, of which he was one of the very first settlers, and is now one of its most extensive land-owners. His broad fields, embracing an area of 1,200 acres, includes some of the finest farming land along the southern line of the county. Situated in a beautiful and level valley, its soil, under careful cultivation, yields abundantly the richest products of Nebraska. The farm buildings of Mr. Schacht invariably attract the attention of the traveler through this region, as comprising all that is convenient for use and handsome in architecture. The dwelling, a fine and imposing structure, is commodious and well arranged, and, within, presided over by a lady of great amiability and good taste, illustrates the modern idea of the complete home. The family move in the highest social circles of Osage Precinct, and have everything about them to make life pleasant and desirable.

The subject of this sketch was born in the Prussian Province of Westphalia, March 25, 1832, and is the son of Christof and Wilhelmina (Brine) Schacht, who were also natives of Prussia, and of pure German ancestry. The father was born in 1797, and was an extensive farmer and land-owner in his native Province. When a youth of eighteen years he entered the German Army, and fought under Frederick William III. against the first Napoleon. He continued in the army until the close of the war, then returned to the occupations of rural life, to which he had been familiar from his boyhood. He spent his entire life upon his native soil, dying at the advanced age of eighty-five years, in the winter of 1882. The mother had preceded her husband to the silent land fourteen years, her death having taken place in 1868, when she was fifty-five years old.

The ten children of the parental family all lived to mature years. They were named respectively: Francis, August, William, our subject, Charlotte, Katherine, Herman, Wilhelmina, Henry, Louis and Frederick. Of these six are now living, making their homes mostly in Nebraska.

William staid with his father until a youth of sixteen years, and then determined to seek his fortune on another continent. Embarking on the "Edmund," at the port of Bremen, he was tossed about on the waves of the Atlantic for a period of ten weeks and three days, finally landing in the city of New Orleans. Thence he went up the river by steamer to St. Louis, and from there to Franklin County, Mo., where he was engaged one and one-half years at his uncle's in farming.

We next find our subject in Macoupin County, Ill., where he was engaged in farming four years. Thence he returned to Missouri, and was in the employ of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company two years. The spring of 1857 finds him first in Nebraska City, where he was occupied in draying three years. Next he rented a tract of land near the city, upon which he farmed two years. In the fall of 1859, when the first land sale was opened in Nebraska, he purchased 160 acres of land in Osage Precinct, and settled in a log house, in April, 1862, being one of the earliest pioneers of that place.

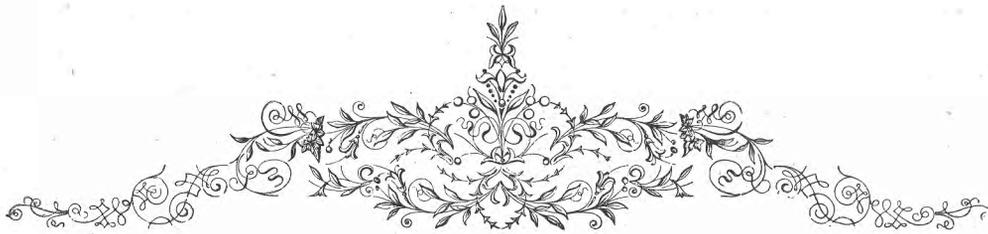

The neighbors of Mr. Schacht were at this time few and far between. As soon as possible he provided a shelter for his family, and set about the improvement of his property. It is hardly necessary to recapitulate the story of the early settler and the difficulties which beset him on either hand, the far-away market, the lack of railroad facilities, the indifferent machinery for farm purposes, and the numberless other difficulties with which he had to contend. Our subject, however, had inherited too largely of the traits of his substantial German ancestry to permit him to give way to discouragements. He fought his way successfully, and in due time found himself surrounded by the results of his labor, in the shape of a good area of cultivated soil, convenient and comfortable farm buildings, and all other accessories of the progressive agriculturist. In due time he added to his real estate, purchasing at different periods 160 acres in Johnson County, 520 acres in McWilliams Precinct, Otoe County, and enough in Osage Precinct to make up the sum of 1240 acres. The most of this is now under a state of cultivation, and represents a value approaching $100,000. In 1884 he helped start the Bank of Talmage, of which he is now a stockholder. When we consider that the proprietor began at first principles, having no capital save his courageous heart and willing hands, it must be admitted that he has done well.

To Miss Caroline Bock, of Missouri, our subject was married, at Nebraska City, on the 14th of April, 1859. Mrs. Schacht, like her husband, is also a native of Prussia, and was born Oct. 18, 1836. Her parents were Christof and Caroline (Krappig) Bock, also of German birth and parentage, and the father a farmer in good circumstances. He died in his native Germany in 1843, when but forty-three years old. The mother subsequently came to America, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. Hofman, in Leavenworth, Kan., Feb. 22, 1879, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. The parental family included four children—Minnie, Dora, Caroline and Hannah.

The mother of Mrs. Schacht, when the latter was a young girl eighteen years of age, came with her family to America, settling in Gascouade County, Mo., where Miss Caroline made the acquaintance of her future husband. Of their union there have been born ten children, two of whom, Johanna and Henry, died when fifteen years and several hours old respectively. The others are Charlotte, Minnie, Emma, Herman, Caroline, William, Matilda and Christof. Charlotte is the wife of Charles Brandt, a traveling salesman for an agricultural implement firm of Omaha; they reside at Nebraska City. They have two children—Martha and Otto. Minnie married Henry Armknecht, and they are living on a farm in Arapahoe County, Col.; they have three children—Bertha, Martha and Ellen. The younger children of our subject continue under the home roof. Herman is an especially bright boy, and was for a time a student in the Business College at Burlington, Iowa.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Schacht are members in good standing of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Osage. Mr. S. was one of the charter members, assisting in its organization, and has been uniformly a most liberal and cheerful contributor to its support. Politically, he votes the straight Republican ticket, has been a member of the School Board in his district for a period of eighteen years, and Road Supervisor for several years. He is a man whose influence has been most sensibly felt in this region, and one the very force of whose example has worked good to the entire precinct.

CASS COUNTY, NEBRASKA.

Yours Truly
James M. Patterson

BIOGRAPHICAL.

HON. JAMES M. PATTERSON, Cashier of the Bank of Cass County, is one of Plattsburgh's most influential and highly respected citizens, and as such it gives us much pleasure to record a sketch of his life on the pages of this volume. He was born in Cross Creek Township, Washington Co., Pa., Sept 28, 1836, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and his name and lineage are closely interwoven in the annals of the Keystone State from an early date in its colonial history. His father, James Patterson, was born in the same township as himself, April 24, 1798, and his grandfather, the Hon. Thomas Patterson, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., Oct. 1, 1764. The father of Thomas, who was named William, was born in the same county in 1733, and his father, James Patterson, the great-great-grandfather of our subject, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1708, of Scotch-Irish parentage. He came to America when a young man, in 1728, settled in Lancaster County, Pa., and eventually married there. He was a farmer, and followed that occupation in that county until his death. He and his wife reared a family of ten children. The great-grandfather of our subject was reared and married in his native county, and moved from there to Washington County about 1779. He crossed the Alleghany Mountains with pack horses, accompanied by his family, and settled on a tract of heavily timbered land in the midst of the primeval forest that covered that part of the country, which was then considered in the "Far West." He made the journey to Philadelphia on horseback to secure a patent to his land from the State, the patent that he obtained bearing the signature of Benjamin Franklin. He cleared and highly improved a good farm from the wilderness there, whereon he made his home until death called him to a better life, June 29, 1818, and his body now rests in Cross Creek Cemetery. In 1794 he erected a substantial stone house that is still standing, and is occupied by his great-grandson, Robert M. Patterson.

The grandfather of our subject was reared in his native county, and when a youth of fifteen accompanied his parents to their new home in the wilderness in Washington County. He was married, in Westmoreland County, Oct. 6, 1795, to Miss Elizabeth Findley. Her father, great-grandfather of our subject, the Hon. William Findley, was for many years a prominent Member of Congress from Pennsylvania. The grandfather of our subject, Thomas Patterson, settled in Washington County, and erected saw and flouring mills on Cross Creek, which are still owned by his descendants. The locality became known as Patterson's Mills, and his death occurred there in November, 1841. Politically, he was a Democrat, and one of the leaders of his party. He served four terms in Congress, and won an honorable record as a statesman. He held a commission in the State Militia, and was known as Gen. Patterson. His wife died Jan. 8, 1837. Twelve children had been born to them, of whom three died in infancy, and seven sons and two daughters grew to maturity.

The father of our subject passed the early years of his life in the home of his birth, and when a young man engaged in milling, but later he turned his attention to the mercantile business at Patterson's Mills, where he was Postmaster, also, for a number of years. The last few years of his life he lived retired, enjoying a handsome competence, and died Aug. 17, 1861. The maiden name of his wife was Eliza Walker, and she was born in Cross Creek Township, Feb. 22, 1802. Her father, Alexander Walker, grandfather of James M., was born in Bedford County, Pa., and there began life as a farmer. He subsequently moved to Washington County, where he bought a tract of land, and there he carried on agricultural pursuits until his death. The mother of our subject died at Patterson Mills, Dec. 9, 1886, having rounded out the venerable age of eighty-four years. There were eleven children born to her and her husband, nine of whom grew to maturity, as follows: Elizabeth, Mary A., Thomas M., Alexander W., Jane, Ambrose, James M., David F. and Emily A.

James M. Patterson, the subject of this sketch, received his education in the public schools, and when quite young commenced clerking in his father's store, and later, in company with his brother Thomas M., succeeded to his father's business. In 1860 he sold out, and in March, 1861, came to Nebraska, then a Territory, and located at Rock Bluff. That place was then a small but flourishing town, nearly as large as Plattsburgh at that time. In company with his brother Ambrose he established himself in the mercantile business there, and they carried it on together for three years. At the expiration of that time they sold out, and the subject of this sketch returned to Pennsylvania to buy sheep, purchasing 1,000, and shipping them by rail to the western terminus of the railway at Ottumwa, Iowa. From there he drove them to Cass County to graze on the large tracts of wild prairie.

Three years later he sold the sheep, and again engaged in the mercantile business at Rock Bluff, in company with his cousin, James A. Walker, under the firm name of Patterson & Walker, continuing until 1873, when they disposed of their stock and business at a good profit. In 1874 Mr. Patterson came to Plattsburgh to take up his residence. He soon became influential in public affairs, and in 1877 was elected City Treasurer. His administration of that office was marked by a faithful devotion to its responsibilities, and it added to his reputation as a financier of more than ordinary ability, and it was indeed so satisfactory that he held it for five consecutive years. In the fall of 1877 he was elected County Treasurer, and was re-elected in the fall of 1879, his experience amply qualifying him for that important office. When the Bank of Cass County was organized, in 1881, its Directors gladly availed themselves of his valuable services as a financier, and elected him to be cashier, which position he still holds. His invariable courtesy and kindly manners make him popular with the patrons of the bank, as well as generally liked by many others in the community. He is influential in politics, standing high in the Democratic party, with which he has always affiliated. In 1884 he was candidate of his party for Presidential Elector, and in 1888 was candidate for State Treasurer. In him this county has found an able representative of her interests in the halls of legislation. In 1862, in Territorial days, and again in 1870 he was elected a member of the House, and served on a number of important committees, and in 1882 he was elected to the Senate, and represented his constituency with ability and honor.

Mr. Patterson was married, Aug. 17, 1858, to Ellen H. Campbell, a native of Cross Creek Township, Washington Co., Pa., where she was born Oct. 31, 1838. Her father, Samuel Campbell, was born in Belmont County, Ohio, and his father, David Campbell, was born in Washington County, Pa. He was a farmer, and spent his last years in Washington County. His wife, Mrs. Patterson's grandmother, whose maiden name was Ann Rea, a daughter of William Rea, was a native of that county, and there spent her last years. Samuel Campbell is a farmer, and is still a resident of Washington County, his home being in Independence Township. The maiden name of his wife was Jane McGugin, and she was a native of Washington County, Pa. Her parents, who were the grandparents of Mrs. Patterson, were David and Jane (Vincent) McGugin, natives and lifelong residents of Pennsylvania, the former dying at the age of eighty-seven years. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson's married life has been blessed to them by the birth of ten children, two of whom are deceased: Kate Florence, who was born in Pennsylvania, and died in the second year of her age; and Ella, who was born in Rock Bluff, and died in Plattsburgh at the age of ten years. The names of the other children are Jennie C., James, Thomas M., Samuel, Eliza W., Edith, Charles A. and Rea. Jennie married the Hon. R. B. Windham; James married Grace A. Anderson, and he is assistant cashier in the bank; Thomas M. married Nettie Myers, and is book-keeper in the bank. The other children are single and at home. James, although only a little over his majority, was elected City Treasurer of Plattsburgh in the spring of 1888, which position he still holds, and fills to the entire satisfaction of his constituency.

On an adjoining page we print an admirable portrait of this honored citizen of Cass County. Standing as he does in the front ranks of her best citizens, it is fitting that it should appear as a frontispiece to the biographies of her leading people.

FREDERIC F. REXFORD, a stalwart and sturdy representative of the pioneer agriculturists who came to Cass County while it was yet in its infancy, and have watched with especial interest its rapid growth, is an influential and leading citizen of Centre Precinct, where he settled in 1866, on his present homestead. He is well and favorably known throughout the county as a man of unusual ability, great energy, and of unswerving integrity. He fought valiantly in the late war for the defence of his Nation's honor, and of his war record he has reason to be proud, for few men served longer, took part in more severe engagements, endured more hardships, or exhibited more personal bravery. He was born in Chateaugay, Franklin Co., N. Y., Sept. 14, 1839, and lived there until seven years of age, then moved to Malone in the same county, where he grew to man's estate, receiving a good common-school education. His father, Isaac Rexford, was born Oct. 28, 1807, in Vermont, and there passed his early life, and there learned the cooper's trade. He married Miss Louisa, daughter of Frederic Fuller, who was a blacksmith of Keeseville, Essex Co., N. Y. After marriage they moved to Canada, where Mr. Rexford worked at his trade for awhile, then returned to New York and located in Franklin County. Mr. Rexford also served two years during the late Rebellion, but was finally discharged on account of disability. He afterward moved to Dayton, Ohio, where he spent his last years, dying there in November, 1886. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and a worthy man and citizen. His widow is still living, and makes her home with our subject.

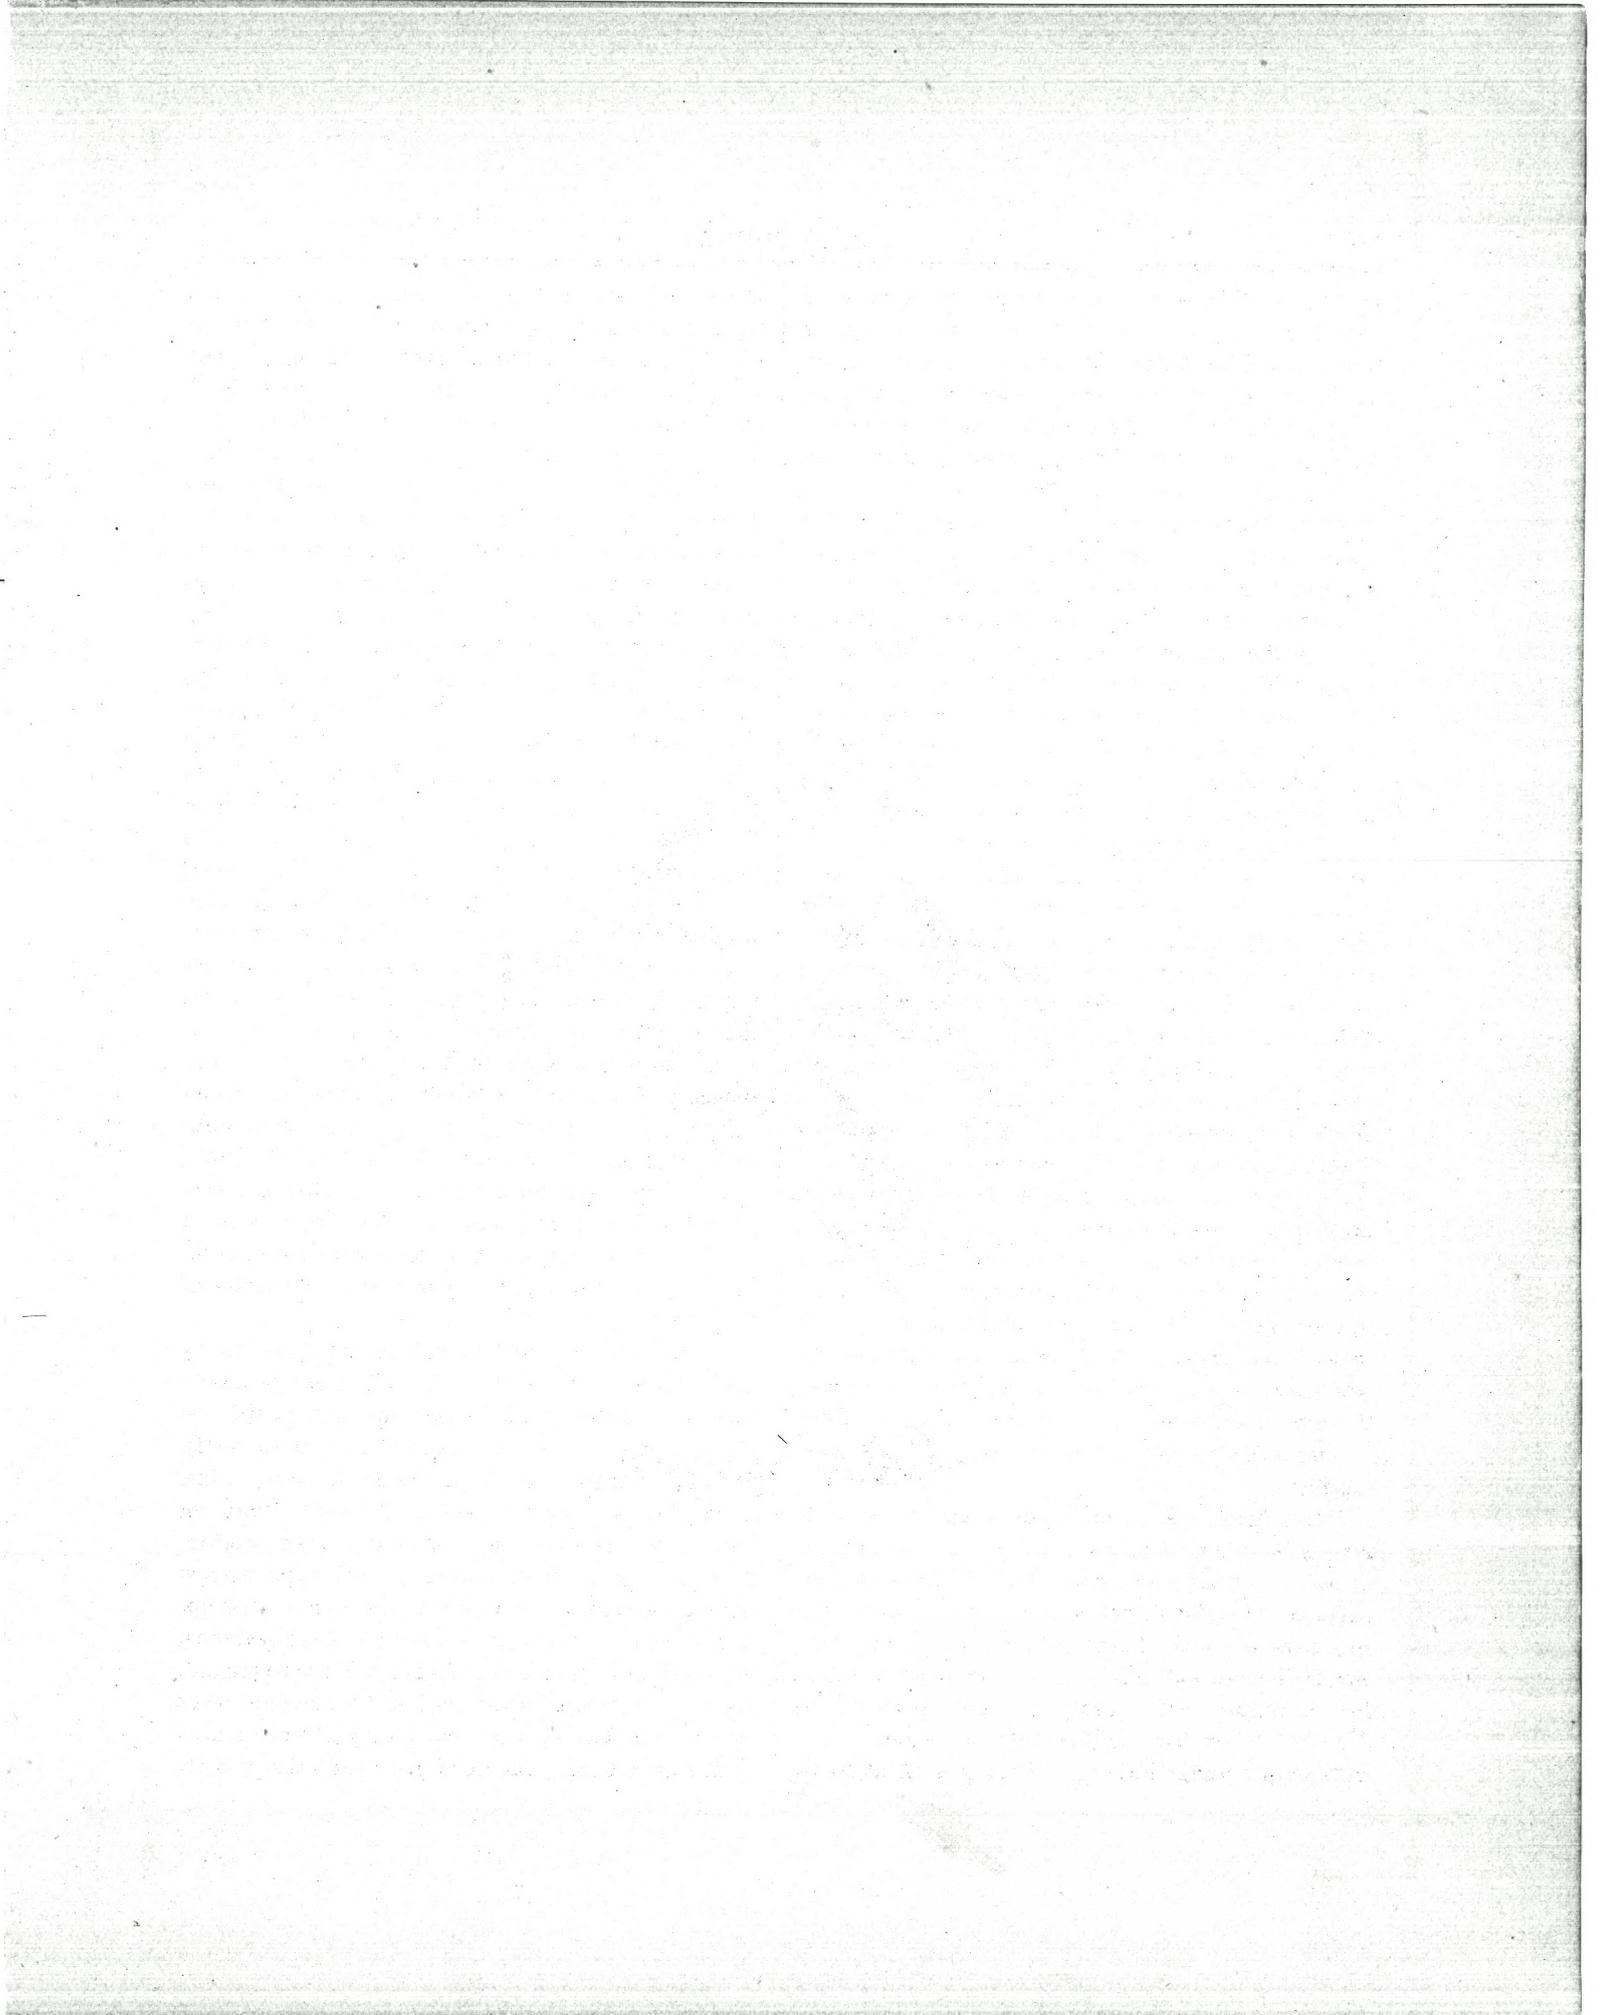

F. F. Rexford, of whom we write, moved from his native county to Ohio, and soon after the breaking out of the late civil strife enlisted, Aug. 16, 1861, in Company A, 2d Ohio Cavalry. After sufficient drill the company was sent to St. Louis, Mo., and was at Camp Benton Barracks a week, then went to St. Joseph and Ft. Leavenworth, thence to Kansas City, and had its first engagement at a town (Independence) twenty miles east, where the first man in the company was killed; then proceeded to Ft. Scott, Kan., and had that place as headquarters. In the summer of 1862 the company made different raids in Missouri, Arkansas and Indian Territory, having a number of small engagements, and in the fall of 1862 was ordered back to Columbus, Ohio. There the members were remounted and re-equipped, and sent into the Army of the Ohio, under command of Gen. Burnside. In April they were ordered to Kentucky, having Somerset as headquarters, and in the middle of June five companies made a raid into Eastern Tennessee over the Cumberland Mountains, our subject being among the number. They had a hard time to get back, having to fight their way through, losing most of their horses, some of the soldiers being two weeks without horses, and in a starving and ragged condition. While they were away the balance of the division went for Morgan, and helped to capture him at the Ohio River. They then went into camp at Crab Orchard, Ky., where they were again refitted, and sent with Burnside to East Tennessee to keep possession of it, and there took an active part in the siege of Knoxville. They staid there until January, when provisions and provender for the horses gave out. They were in a good many engagements in the valley during the fall and winter, and our subject lost his tent mate, many of his company being killed or dying from exposure. In January his company veteranized, and was sent home on a thirty-days furlough. The sufferings of the men had been so great that they were willing to do anything for a few days at home. The soldiers afterward met at Cleveland, and were transported to Cincinnati, and from there ordered to the Potomac. They went to Annapolis, Md., and staid there until ordered to Washington, where they were again re-equipped. On May 1 the company of which our subject was a member was ordered to the front to take part in the Wilderness campaign, being in the thick of those hardly fought engagements, forcing Lee back to Richmond. The army then crossed the river on pontoons, moved on to the south side of Petersburg, then up on to the Weldon Railway. A raid was organized, and our subject and his comrades were sent into Virginia, destroying rebel railways and supplies for eighty miles. They had more or less engagements all of the time, captured many trains, tore up rails, and burned trains. On their return the enemy got in front of the cavalry, and harassed and divided the company, so that they were forced to cut their way through, some riding hard for three days and nights on circuitous routes, finally bringing up in Union quarters.

Our subject was disabled, not being able to wear his boots for two months, but not a day of rest did he have, and for two weeks did not unsaddle but once, and then for fifteen minutes only. After getting back to Sandy Point on the James River, they left their worn out horses there, and took transports for Baltimore, with hardly enough clothes to be decent. They had neither hats nor shoes, many with simply underclothing. They got off at Baltimore, and lay on the pavement the rest of the night. The sanitary commission clothed them as best they could, and proceeding to Washington, our subject's regiment arrived there just in time to head off Gen. Early, who was within four miles of the city. The rebels retreated up the Shenandoah, and Mr. Rexford was one of the number who was despatched in pursuit. The Army of the Shenandoah was then formed, Sheridan taking command. Gen. Custer commanded the 3d Division of cavalry, to which our subject belonged, and in that valley they were in many hard battles, namely: Winchester, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, and so on up the valley, drawing the enemy clear up beyond Danville. They went into winter quarters near Winchester, staying there until the latter part of February, 1865. They were then ordered up the valley to join Grant at the south side of Petersburg. The regiment was engaged in the battle of Five Forks, where it lost very heavily. Our subject was also present at the surrender of Lee at Appomattox. The war closing his regiment was ordered to Washington to take part in the grand review, and was thence ordered to Missouri, going to the Ohio River by railway, and then on transports to St. Louis, thence to Raleigh and Springfield, where the members did duty in fort, guarding ammunition until September 1. They were then sent to St. Louis, where they were mustered out, and thence transported to Columbus, Ohio, and discharged after a continuous service of four years and one month, with but two furloughs, one of five days and one of thirty days.

In the spring of 1866 our subject concluded to try his fortunes in the Great West. The broad prairie land of Nebraska, with its rich soil and genial climate, seemed a great inducement to him to settle. He then bought the farm which he now owns, a part of it lying on section 25, and a part on section 36, his residence being on the former section. The land was in its normal condition, not a furrow having been turned, and not a tree of any description in sight. Nothing daunted by its appearance, Mr. Rexford immediately began its improvement. He put up a small house, set out five acres of forest trees, planted an orchard and plenty of small fruits, which have borne much and good fruit the past fifteen years. The land is under good cultivation, and surrounded by either fence or hedge. He does an extensive business in general farming, raising grain, horses, hogs and cattle. Besides attending to that business, which is as much as any farmer usually has time for, our subject is interested in the manufacture of sorghum, having been working up the enterprise for several years. He is now using an evaporator and crusher sent him from Buffalo, which is one of the most complete machines of the kind, and is putting in steam power. He has already given much time and thought, and invested a good deal of money in his efforts to place the business on a paying basis, and he now thinks he sees his way to a profitable end. Our subject has also discovered a fine bank of potter's clay on his farm, and is now trying to utilize that in some manner. His ability and judgment are recognized by all, and he is as anxious to benefit his town and his townspeople as himself, and works for their interests as unselfishly as his own. Having held the various precinct offices he has materially advanced the cause of good government within its limits.

Robt. B. Livingston

Mr. Rexford was united in marriage to Miss Susan Torrence, in Percival, Iowa, March 16, 1868. (For her parental history see sketch of Sylvester Torrence.) Of this union four children have been born, of whom three are still living, namely: Willis, Ada and Charles. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rexford are valued members of the Congregational Church and of the Sunday-school, he having been Deacon for more than twenty years. He is also a prominent member of the G. A. R., LaFayette Post No. 61, of Weeping Water.

GEN. ROBERT RAMSEY LIVINGSTON, M. D., was born in Montreal, Canada, Aug. 10, 1827, and his father, also named Robert Ramsey Livingston, was a native of Scotland. Gen. Livingston was reared in his native city, and received his preliminary education in the Royal Grammar School, which was then under the charge of Alexander Skakel, LL. D. He afterward pursued the study of medicine at Magill University, in the same city, from which institution he was graduated with honors. Subsequently he attended medical lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City. A few years later he became interested in the copper mines of Lake Superior, and was appointed Secretary of a company formed for working those mines, spending a part of his time at the mines, and a part at the office of the company in Boston. In 1857 mining, in common with many other branches of industry, suffered a collapse, and our subject resumed his profession as a physician. In 1859 Dr. Livingston came to Plattsmouth, then a small town, and here opened an office and established himself in his profession in this city.

In 1861, during the absence of the proprietor, Dr. Livingston assumed the charge of the Plattsmouth Herald. While he was filling the editor's chair the Civil War broke out, and he, with patriotic zeal and ardor, took a prominent and active part in sustaining the Union cause. At the time of the arrival of the news of the firing on the "Star of the West," the weekly issue of the Herald was in the press; work on it was at once suspended, and the Doctor immediately had a large number of posters struck off, calling on all loyal men of Cass County to meet that evening in the hall over the printing-office. The call was promptly responded to, and a full company of infantry was organized that night, Dr. Livingston's name heading the list of privates. He was immediately and unanimously elected Captain of the company. To him is due the credit of having raised and organized the first military company in the Territory of Nebraska for the suppression of the Rebellion. This was before there had been any call for troops, but he held his company in readiness, and June 11, 1861, it was mustered into service as Company A of the 1st Nebraska Infantry, and was sent South. In December of that year Capt. Livingston was promoted to the rank of Major, and in June, 1862, another promotion gave him the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. A few months afterward he was made Colonel of his regiment. He was a brave and gallant officer, and took an active part in the battles of Ft. Henry,

Ft. Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth and many others. In the summer of 1863 Col. Livingston was appointed commanding officer of the post at St. Louis, and a few months later received the appointment of commanding officer of the District of St. Louis. He served with distinction in Arkansas, and received the thanks of the Legislature of that State for ridding it of the roving bands of guerrillas and bushwhackers that infested that region. The following is a copy of the resolution of thanks passed at that time by the Arkansas House of Representatives:

"WHEREAS, Col. R. R. Livingston, Commandant of the Northeastern Division of the State of Arkansas, has manifested on all proper occasions an earnest and patriotic desire to ameliorate the suffering condition of the numerous loyal refugees that have been driven from their comfortable homes and fire-sides by the ruthless, wanton and traitorous bands;

"Therefore, Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, that, in consideration of the sterling worth exhibited in the chivalric and generous character of Col. R. R. Livingston, 1st Nebraska Regiment, Commandant of the Northeastern Division of Arkansas, we feel it to be our duty to, and hereby do express in our own behalf, and in behalf of those who have been relieved by many repeated acts of disinterested humanity, the thanks of this Legislature, and sincerely hope that he will be preserved to humanity, to whom he has rendered such valuable service."

In the latter part of the year 1863 the regiment commanded by Col. Livingston veteranized, and while at home on furlough he was assigned to duty on the northwestern frontier, to take care of hostile Indians. With his command he soon rid the territory of the savages, and restored peace and quiet to the settlers. In the spring of 1865 our subject was breveted Brigadier General. In July of that year his regiment was mustered out of service, and Gen. Livingston laid down the sword for the scalpel, and resumed his professional duties in Plattsmouth. In 1869 he was appointed Surveyor General of Iowa and Nebraska by President Grant, serving in that capacity two years. Meanwhile he became interested in the building of the Burlington & Missouri River Railway in Nebraska, and in 1870 he was appointed surgeon of that road, and held that position until his death, which occurred Sept. 28, 1888, at his home in Plattsmouth. He was a public-spirited citizen, and materially aided the improvement and growth of the State, much credit having been due him for organizing the Nebraska State Medical Society, of which he was the first President one year, and Corresponding Secretary several years. He was also devoted to the best interests of his adopted city, and actively promoted various beneficial schemes for its advancement during the several terms that he officiated as Mayor. He was, from the time of its organization to his death, a member of the State Board of Fish Commissioners, having been President of the same for a time, and at the time of his death was Chairman of the city Board of Health.

Gen. Livingston was a thoroughly busy man, and, in addition to attending to his public and private business, he served for a number of years as President of the faculty of the Omaha Medical College, and gave lectures on the principles and practice of surgery in that institution, and also in the State University at Lincoln. Socially, he was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, and was Master of Plattsmouth Lodge No. 6, A. F. & A. M., for four years, and High Priest of Nebraska Chapter three years, and Grand High Priest of the R. A. M. of the State eighteen months. At the time of the organization of the Mt. Zion Commandery No. 5, K. T., in 1873, he was made Eminent Commander, and served acceptably for several years. Politically, Gen. Livingston was a Republican until 1872, when he supported Horace Greeley, and after that time he affiliated with the Democratic party. A portrait of Gen. Livingston, M. D., is shown in this volume.

Theodore P. and Robert Livingston, physicians, Plattsmouth, Cass Co., Neb., are worthy successors to the practice of their father, the late Gen. R. R. Livingston. The former was born at Dingman's Ferry, Pike Co., Pa., Feb. 6, 1864, and the latter in Plattsmouth, Neb., Sept. 23, 1866. They are both graduates of the Omaha Medical College, Theodore having received his diploma in March, 1885, and Robert his March 22, 1888. They are bright, talented young men, and have a promising future before them, their practice gradually increasing in this city, where they are well known, and are rapidly gaining the confidence of their patrons.

JOHN T. MARSHALL is a man of more than average enterprise and force of character, and well represents the agricultural interests of Cass County, owning and managing a farm on section 25, Weeping Water Precinct, on which he has one of the finest residences in the southern part of Cass County. Mr. Marshall devotes his time mostly to raising stock, paying especial attention to raising thoroughbred horses of the Hambletonian race.

Our subject was born in England, Dec. 8, 1857, and is a son of John Marshall. (For parental history see sketch of William Marshall.) He lived in his native land until fourteen years of age, working the last two years at the shoemaker's trade, which he learned of his father. At the age mentioned he accompanied his parents to this country, coming directly to Nebraska as soon as they landed. His father took up the land now included in the farm of our subject, and he and his family lived here one summer. They then moved into the city of Weeping Water, where Mr. Marshall, Sr., went into business, at first manufacturing and repairing boots and shoes, continuing thus engaged until 1876, when he and his son, our subject, opened a store under the firm name of John Marshall & Son. The store is still standing, being the first, and is still the only exclusive boot and shoe store in Weeping Water. The firm continued business under its original name for five years, and built up a large trade in that time. John Marshall then sold out to his son William, and the firm name was changed to Marshall Bros. The father still continues to work for the firm in the repairing department. Three years later our subject, wishing to devote his time more exclusively to agriculture, sold his interest to his brother Arthur U., and the business is still carried on under the old style, Marshall Bros., although there has been another change, their brother Charles being admitted into partnership, William and Arthur retaining the management of affairs. The farm on which our subject lives was when his father took it up wild prairie land owned by the railway company, and he paid $10 an acre for it. It now presents a very different appearance with its many valuable improvements, and indeed is considered one of the best farms in the precinct. There is a good grove of forest trees, an orchard of choice fruit trees already in bearing order, and a variety of small fruits, our subject raising all that he needs. There is a good hedge around the farm, and a substantial set of buildings is provided for every possible use, even the stock being housed, Mr. Marshall not liking to have his animals suffer when he is comfortable, reminding one of the saying, "a merciful man is merciful to his beast." He has expended $1,500 on his buildings alone. Mr. Marshall devotes his farm principally to raising horses, cattle and hogs, and carries on a very lucrative business in that line. He is raising a high class of thoroughbred horses, and has a fine Hambletonian mare and stallion.

The marriage of our subject with Miss L. Medella Smith was solemnized in the month of May, 1880. In the years that have followed two children have been born to them—Clara C. and T. Walter. The elder stays with her grandparents during the school year. Mrs. Marshall is a twin daughter of C. P. Smith, formerly of Plattsmouth, but now a resident of Lincoln. He is a native of the State of Vermont, as was his wife, whose maiden name was Callista Feleh. He went to Mississippi to teach before the war, and there his daughter, of whom we write, was born. Soon after the war he moved to Nebraska, and is now living in retirement in Lincoln. His wife is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Lincoln.

Mr. Marshall is a man whose character is above reproach, and his generosity and liberality are well known, every appeal from the suffering and needy sounding a responsive chord in his large, warm heart. He is faithful in his discharge of his duties as a citizen and as a man, and while a resident of the village of Weeping Water his fellow-citizens honored him by entrusting to him the office of Trustee, which position he held for three years. He is prominently identified with the K. of P., the I. O. O. F., and the Masonic fraternity, serving three years as Secretary of the latter, and he has held the offices in the Odd Fellows' Lodge up to Representative to the Grand Lodge and District Deputy. He and his wife are among the most active members of the Congregational Church at Weeping Water, and in the Sunday-school. Mrs. Marshall, socially, is a Daughter of Rebecca, a lodge connected with the I. O. O. F., located at Weeping Water. Mr. Marshall is also manufacturing boots and shoes at the village of Avoca in connection with his farming.

EDGAR A. STOPHER. As an enterprising and wide-awake business man of Cass County, and one who, through his own efforts, has established himself among the prominent and wealthy men of his community, we take great pleasure in placing a brief sketch of the varied life experience of this gentleman before the public. He is a native of Iowa, born in Princeton, Feb. 27, 1842. His father, Samuel Stopher, was of German descent, and was born in Lancaster County, Pa., but removed from there with his parents when quite young to the Western Reserve in Ohio. He afterward learned the carpenter's trade, in Portage County, and subsequently removed to Kalamazoo, Mich., where he married Miss Wealthy French, a native of New York. In 1838, accompanied by his family, Mr. Stopher went to Scott County, Iowa, traveling with teams, there being no railroads, and not even a stage route across Illinois, and located seven miles below the mouth of the Wapoo River. He was one of the first settlers of that State, and entering 160 acres of land from the Government, improved a fine farm. In 1860, being seized with the mining fever, he went to the Rocky Mountains and engaged in mining and hotel-keeping, then for a year freighted on the plains. In 1863 he enlisted for one year in the 2d Nebraska Cavalry to fight against the Indians. When his time had expired he returned to Iowa, and engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own farm. In 1874 Mr. Stopher disposed of that farm, and coming to Nebraska, bought eighty acres of land, where he resided until his death, in 1881. His widow is still living on the home farm, in Nebraska, at the age of sixty-nine years. She is a woman of rare Christian character, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. To her and her husband were born three children—Edward and Ellen, both of whom are dead, and Edgar A.

The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm, and his schooling consisted of an attendance of three months each winter in the district schools of Iowa until he was eighteen years of age. Educational advantages were not as good then as at present, and he can remember when the first High School of his native State was established at Mt. Vernon. In 1860 he went with his father to the Rocky Mountains, and engaged in mining. He also had several claims, but was not successful in his ventures. He continued there two years, and then went back to the farm in Iowa with his mother and sister. In the fall of 1863 he went to Omaha, where he enlisted in the same company with his father, Company K, 2d Nebraska Cavalry, and was sent, under command of Gen. Sully, into Dakota, skirmishing and scouting. At the battle of White Stone Hill they routed the Indians, and his father escaped death only by the fleetness of his horse. He served his time, and was mustered out of service at Omaha, in December, 1863, and honorably discharged. Mr. Stopher then engaged in rafting on the Mississippi River, and continued until June, when he returned to the home farm. Sept. 20, 1864, he was drafted into the army, and mustered in as a private, in Company C, 14th Iowa Volunteer Infantry, at Davenport. He did garrison duty for awhile, and was twice sent to Louisville, Ky., serving until the end of the war, when he was honorably discharged at Davenport, in July, 1865.

Our subject then farmed in Iowa until 1868, when he again came to Nebraska. He came by rail to Pacific Junction, then walked to Cass County, and took up a homestead claim of eighty acres on section 30, Stove Creek Precinct. Having secured his land, Mr. Stopher returned to Iowa for his family, and in the fall came back with them across the country with teams, and settled on his land. It was unbroken, but by incessant toil and skill he has evolved a fine farm from the wild prairie, on which he has erected a handsome residence, a commodious barn, and other necessary farm buildings. He has set out groves of trees, an orchard, built windmills, and made more thorough improvements than are to be found on many Western farms. As his means have allowed he has purchased other land, until his home farm comprises 320 acres, and he has besides two farms in Tipton Precinct, Cass Co., Neb., one of 120 acres and another of 160 acres. Besides carrying on farming on an extensive scale, Mr. Stopher deals largely in stock, buying and feeding cattle, and shipping them to Omaha, where he always finds a ready market. He also raises hogs of a fine breed, having as many as 200 at the present time. On his home farm may be seen many fine cattle of the Durham stock, and also a large number of horses of fine grades.

The marriage of Mr. Stopher and Miss Hannah Hogan was solemnized in Princeton, Iowa, Jan. 17, 1867. Her parents, Hiram and Susan (Reynolds) Hogan, were born respectively in Cambridge, Washington Co., N. Y., in 1800, and in Haybridge, Adams Co., Vt., in 1807, being of Irish and Scotch origin. Both her paternal and maternal grandfathers served in the Revolutionary War seven years, her grandfather Hogan having been cut down with a sabre and left for dead, but subsequently recovered. Mr. and Mrs. Hogan were married in the State of New York, but shortly afterward removed to Indiana, where he worked at carpentering one year. In 1845 they removed to Canada, and he worked at his trade there for several years. In 1865 he emigrated with his family to Scott County, Iowa, where he remained until the spring of 1871. Desiring then to establish himself in a permanent home he came to Nebraska and pre-empted a claim of eighty acres in Cass County, which he proved up and converted into a fine farm, remaining here until his death, in September, 1878. Mrs. Hogan died during their residence in Canada, July 16, 1851. To them had been born eight children, as follows: Janet, Solomon, Melancton S., Leonard, Harvey and Levi, all deceased; Hannah and Ozial. The wife of our subject was born in Ontario County, N. Y., Aug. 25, 1840. She received a good education, and taught school with success previous to her marriage. Of her union with Mr. Stopher seven children have been born, namely: Edward, Frank, Belle, Hattie, Walter, John and Minnie. Belle is attending school at Mr. Stopher is well and favorably known throughout the county, being one of its most influential and prominent citizens. He has a fine physique, is tall and well formed, has a commanding figure, and with an intellect equally well developed, he is a worthy representative of the highest class of manhood, and a man of whom his fellow-citizens are justly proud. Mrs. Stopher is a refined, well-educated matron, having all the attributes of a noble woman, and presides with much grace over the hospitable home of herself and husband. Our subject takes a warm interest in educational matters, and has served for twelve years on the School Board. He is a member of the G. A. R., Kenesaw Post No. 123, at Elmwood, being a charter member, and is at present Commander. He is likewise a member of the A. O. U. W. at Elmwood. In politics he is a straight Republican, fearlessly expressing his opinions at all times, and has been a delegate to county and State conventions. Religiously, Mrs. Stopher is a communicant at the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Crete, Neb., and Frank is on a ranch in Lamar, Wyo.

PETER COON was one of the very earliest settlers of Centre Precinct, as when he settled here in 1867, he and his brother were the only residents of this part of the county for awhile. Our subject early identified himself with the agricultural interests of Cass County, and is now a prosperous grain and stock raiser, with a fine farm on section 20, township 11, range 11. When he first became the possessor of this place it was in a state of nature, forming part of an extensive, wild prairie, and on this prairie, where since have sprung up valuable farms, he broke the first furrow and set out the first tree.

Peter Coon, Sr., the father of our subject, was born in New York, either in Columbia or Dutchess County. He received a good practical education in his native State, and was there married to Miss Elizabeth Wheeler, and there, in their home in Columbia County, a family of nine children, all of whom grew to maturity, was born to them. In 1837 Mr. Coon disposed of his farming interests in New York, and moved with his family to Luzerne County, Pa., and there lived on a farm until his death in 1843, when scarcely past the prime of life, at the age of forty-five years, five months and eleven days, he having been born in 1798. His widow survived him and married again, living until about 1878, in Nebraska.

The subject of this sketch was born in Columbia County, N. Y., Aug. 31, 1833, and lived in the place of his birth until he was four years of age, when his parents moved to Pennsylvania. He acquired a sound education in the common schools, and at the age of twenty-two left home and made his way to LaSalle County, Ill., and was there engaged in farming for twelve years. April 6, 1865, he enlisted in defense of his country, and served until the close of the war as a member of Company C. 104th Illinois Infantry. He was in the Army of the Cumberland under Gen. Sherman, and was honorably discharged July 12, 1865. In 1867 Mr. Coon concluded to invest the money that he had made in farming in Illinois in Nebraska land, and came here with his family for that purpose. He lived for a year in Weeping Water, and in the meantime looked about for a suitable location, and finally selected a tract of eighty acres of land now included in the present homestead. He also owned an 80-acre farm a mile to the east, and a farm in Clay County, but he has since sold them to use the funds in other ways. His present farm was at the time that he took possession uncultivated prairie, but by hard labor and wise management he has improved it into one of the best places for miles around. It is ornamented by a beautiful grove of five acres of forest trees, and a good orchard, and he has built a fine house, that would grace any Eastern village, it being a model of taste and convenience, 22x28 feet in demensions, two stories in height and an L. It was one of the first good houses erected in this locality. The farm is highly cultivated, and our subject raises a large amount of grain and a good deal of stock of high grades.

Mr. Coon in early manhood, while still living in Pennsylvania, took unto himself a wife in the person of Phœbe A. Bennett, their union being consummated in December, 1854. To them the following children have been born: Sarah Alice, Mary Rosella, George Edwin, Katie Belle, Henry Everton, Frederick Eugene. Sarah Alice married Aaron Jenkins, of Cass County, and they have two children, Walter and Charles; Mary married Charles Bouton, and now lives in Cheyenne County; they have one child, Lloyd E. The remainder of the children are at home, and have been given good educational advantages. Mrs. Coon was born in New York, May 27, 1833, and lived there until about fifteen years of age, when she accompanied her parents, Hezekiah and Sally (Flint) Bennett, to Pennsylvania. Her father was a shoemaker by trade, and he died in his Pennsylvania home. His widow is still living in Dundaff, Susquehanna County. She reared a family of six children. Mrs. Coon has been a faithful wife and a loving mother. She looks well to the ways of her household, and to her co-operation our subject is undoubtedly greatly indebted for his prosperity.

Mr. Coon is a man of sterling common sense and a good capacity for business. He has always been deeply interested in the welfare of his adopted county and township, and has done what he could to further their advancement. He has not taken part in public affairs, excepting as a member of a local school board. He is a firm believer in the policy of the Republican party, and always casts his vote in its favor.

ELIAS SAGE. Adjacent to the city of Platts-mouth is one of the pleasantest homes in the northeastern part of this county, situated on a rise of ground overlooking a goodly portion of the surrounding country and especially of the town. This has been the abiding-place of the subject of this sketch for the last nineteen years, who became a resident of Nebraska in the fall of 1858. A native of the Empire State, he was born in Lewis County, April 17, 1820, and is the son of Harvey Sage, who, it is believed, was born near Copenhagen, N. Y., in 1794.

Our subject was named after his paternal grandfather, Elias Sage, Sr., a native of Sandisfield, Mass.,

and born in 1759. The latter was the son of Samuel Sage, who was the son of Nathaniel Sage, the latter born in Connecticut, in 1707, and a son of John Sage. The last-named gentleman was the son of David Sage, a native of Wales, who crossed the Atlantic about 1652, thirty years after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. He settled in Middletown, Conn., where he spent the remainder of his days, and the stone marking his grave is still standing in Riverside Cemetery, on the banks of the Connecticut River.

This David Sage was married in February, 1664, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of John Kirby. His great-great-grandson, Elias, the grandfather of our subject, left New England probably when a young man, and settled in New York State during the pioneer days of Lewis County. His occupation as an agriculturist was interrupted by the War of 1812, during which he shouldered his musket and hastened to the defense of his country. After the British had been again driven from American soil he resumed farming in Lewis County, and there spent the remainder of his days.

Harvey Sage, the father of our subject, served by the side of his honored sire in the War of 1812 when quite a youth, and for his services was given a land warrant, which Elias purchased after his removal to Nebraska. He was reared a farmer like his forefathers, and upon reaching manhood purchased land in the vicinity of Denmark, Lewis Co., N. Y., upon which he operated until 1844. That year, leaving the Empire State, he emigrated to the vicinity of Fulton, Whiteside Co., Ill., making the journey overland with teams. He purchased a farm four miles northeast of the town of Fulton, when the small village of Chicago, 170 miles distant, was the nearest market for grain. The round trip occupied about ten days, and the present flourishing city of the West contained only a few thousand souls. In 1856 Harvey Sage sold out his farm property and retired from active labor, taking up his abode at a snug home in Pekin, Ill., where he resided with his children until his death, which occurred Jan. 7, 1882.

The mother of our subject was in her girlhood Miss Elizabeth Hager, and was born in Schoharie County, N. Y., where she spent her childhood and youth. She passed away at the home of her husband at the farm near Fulton, Ill., about 1848. The parental family consisted of five children, who are recorded as follows: Warren was born June 14, 1814, and came to Plattsmouth, Neb., from Illinois about 1865, where he engaged in farming, and died about 1872; Bernard was born April 5, 1816, and died at Ypsilanti, Mich., about 1884; Henry was born March 22, 1818, and resides in Auburn, this State; Sarah Maria became the wife of Orvilla Cutler, and died at Carthage, N. Y., some years ago.

Our subject was the youngest son of his parents, and was reared to man's estate in his native county. He acquired his education in the common schools, and began teaching when nineteen years old, following this profession during the winter season, while in summer he was occupied on the farm. In May, 1843, he made his way to Whiteside County, Ill., and purchased a quarter-section of land near the town of Fulton. There had been brought to a very good state of cultivation about 100 acres of this land, and upon it were log buildings which he was enabled to utilize for a few years until he could substitute better. He still continued teaching and farming alternately, and continued a resident of that county until the fall of 1858. Then, selling out, he removed to Pekin and changed his occupation to that of milling.

Subsequently, desiring to see the country west of the Mississippi, Mr. Sage made his way to Nebraska Territory via the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers to St. Louis, thence by steamer to St. Mary's, and landed in Plattsmouth twenty-one days after starting from St. Louis. Plattsmouth was then a hamlet of perhaps 100 souls, with two stores. The settlements in the Territory were confined principally to the neighborhood of the river, the land a few miles back being still owned by the Government and occupied by Indians. Deer were plentiful, and a few miles west, in the southwestern part of the Territory, buffaloes were frequently seen roaming over the country.

Mr. Sage first rented a tract of land near the present city limits, upon which he operated one year, and in 1860 started out with a company to cross the plains, and twenty-eight days later, on the 1st of May, they arrived upon the present site of Denver, Col., there being then little indication of the present important and flourishing city. Mr. Sage, in company with others, went into the mountains and prospected for a time, but not finding gold, returned to Plattsmouth in September following, and has since been a resident of this city.

Our subject, while having his residence within the city, improved a tract of school land three miles out, and was principally occupied at this for four years. The outbreak of the Rebellion then furnished unlooked-for employment, as in October, 1862, he enlisted in Company H. 2d Nebraska Cavalry, and repaired to the frontier in quest of Indians, and served fourteen months and twenty days in the West and Northwest. At the expiration of his term of enlistment he received his honorable discharge and returned home.

After resuming the peaceful pursuits of a civilian our subject put up a house on his farm, but otherwise turned his attention in a different direction, and became agent for the Haines Harvester, in the interest of which he traveled over a large part of Nebraska and Western Iowa. He was thus employed until the fall of 1883, but in the meantime, in March, 1870, purchased his present home, which comprises a tract of land twenty-nine acres in extent, and which is mostly devoted to the raising of small fruits, which find a ready market at Omaha. His land joins the corporation and is consequently quite valuable.

While a resident of New York Mr. Sage was married, Oct. 14, 1841, to Miss Eliza A. Wright, who was born in Vermont, and died at Fulton, Ill., Sept. 8, 1853. Of this union there were born three children, who are still living: Eugene H. is a resident of Maywood, Frontier County, this State; Harvey W. is occupied at the tinning business in Plattsmouth, and Amelia, the wife of E. T. Duke, lives at Omaha. Mr. Sage contracted a second marriage, April 21, 1855, with Mrs. Carrie Potter. She is the daughter of William Chambers. This lady was born in Troy, N. Y., May 9, 1828. Her father was a native of the city of Troy, and the paternal grandfather, Leonard Chambers, was a native of Ireland, whence he emigrated to America early in life, settling in Troy, N. Y., where he spent his last days.

William Chambers was reared in his native State,

New York, and married Miss Elizabeth Sage, who was born in Connecticut, and traced her forefathers direct to David Sage, who was prominent in the early history of New England. Both parents died in New York State. The present wife of our subject was first married in Jefferson County, N. Y., in 1851, to Samuel E. Potter. The latter was born in Steuben County, and was the son of John S. and Lydia M. Potter. He died in Champion, that county, March 25, 1853. Of this marriage there was born one child, a daughter, Nellie, who became the wife of J. S. Burnett, and they are now residents of Maywood, Frontier County, this State. In politics Mr. Sage is a good Republican.

HON. FRANCIS M. RICHEY, formerly a prominent resident of Union County, Iowa, is now one of the leading citizens of the city of Plattsmouth, where he is extensively engaged in the lumber business, and he is also at the head of public affairs as Mayor of this municipality. He was born in Franklin County, Ohio, ten miles west of Columbus, the State capital, May 11, 1841. On his father's side of the house he is derived from an honorable Irish ancestry, his grandfather, John Richey, having been born in Eastern Pennsylvania. His parents came to America in Colonial times, and fought with the Colonists in their struggle for independence during the Revolutionary War. He subsequently settled in Erie County, Pa., but he afterward moved from there to Muskingum County, Ohio, where he spent his last years.

His son, Welsh Richey, the father of our subject, was born in Erie County, Pa., and was there reared. He removed from his native State to Ohio, and first lived in Muskingum County, and later made his home in Franklin County. He erected a woolen-mill and operated a carding-machine, but that venture proved a financial failure, and he lost all his property. He then returned to Muskingum County with his family, and resided there until 1854. He was an ambitious man, and hoping to improve his fortunes, in that year he started westward to locate in Iowa, the removal being made overland with teams. He became a prominent pioneer of Union County, where he pre-empted a tract of Government land in April, 1855, lying three miles from the present site of Afton, the greater part of the land in that part of the country being owned by the United States, and for sale at the price of $1.25 an acre. The first house was built in Afton the spring that he bought his land, there not being many white settlers in that vicinity, but there were 2,000 Indians making their home there. Deer and other wild game roamed at will over the wild, uncultivated prairies. There being no railways west of the Mississippi at that time, all the stock, hogs and cattle had to be driven to Burlington for shipment. Mr. Richey commenced to improve his farm, first erecting a log cabin to shelter his family. In 1857 death crossed the threshold of that humble abode, and the father and husband was no more. The mother of our subject was his fourth wife, and to them were born three children. Her maiden name was Sarah McClurg, and she was a native of Pennsylvania. She survived her husband many years, dying in Afton in 1880.

The subject of this sketch was thirteen years old when he accompanied his parents to Iowa, and he remembers well the incidents of the journey and of pioneer life after settlement. He had attended the public schools in his native place in Ohio, and after the removal to Iowa he became a pupil in the primitive pioneer schools of that period. After his father's death he assisted his elder brother in the improvement of the old homestead, and continued to reside with his mother until he was twenty-one. He then started out in the world to see what he could make of life on his own account. He secured a situation with the Western Stage Company to drive a stage from Afton to Chariton, a distance of sixty miles. He continued thus engaged for a year, and then commenced teaming from Eddyville (then the western terminus of the railway) to Afton. In the spring of 1863 he came to the Territory of Nebraska, and starting from Plattsmouth with a load of freight, drove across the plains to Denver and returned to his starting point, making the round trip in seventy days. He then went back to Afton and resumed his business of freighting. He was widely and favorably known throughout that part of the State where he had made his home since boy-hood, his frank and genial manners making him popular with all classes of men, and his keenness, promptitude, and decision of character, securing their respect, so that when he was proposed for the responsible office of Sheriff of Union County, in 1868, he received the hearty support of his fellow-citizens, and was elected; and so well were his constituents satisfied with his able and vigorous management of the duties devolving upon him that he was three times re-elected, serving four terms. In 1879 he settled on a farm in Dodge Township, Union County, and engaged in agricultural pursuits for a few years. In 1880 he was again called from his seclusion to enter public life, his fellow-citizens having elected him to represent Union County in the State Legislature. His course as a member of that honorable body marked him as a wise and sensible legislator, who had the best interests of his country at heart. Among the more important committees on which he served we may mention the Railway Committee and that of Compensation for Public Officers. In 1882 Mr. Richey settled up his affairs in Iowa preparatory to taking up his residence in this State. Ever since then he has been engaged in the lumber business in the city of Plattsmouth, and has built up an extensive and flourishing trade. His large business interests have brought him in contact with many people, and he is well known throughout the county, and none know him but to respect and esteem him, alike for his social and manly qualities.

Mr. Richey was married, in 1865, to Miss Paulina Dickinson, a native of Will County, Ill. Seven children were born to them—May, Lou, Frank, Charles, Fannie, Emma and Bertha. In September, 1885, the pleasant household of our subject sustained a sad loss in the death of the beloved wife and mother, a lady of rare merit, whose admirable traits of character had gained her many warm friends in this city.

Mr. Richey has always been a staunch Republican in his political sentiments, having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. During his residence here he has been a conspicuous figure in the public life of the city, his fellow-citizens gladly availing themselves of his sagacity, knowledge of affairs and wide experience, to assist them in the government of the municipality. Twice he has been elected to the important office of Mayor, first in 1885 and again in 1888, so that he is the present incumbent of the mayoralty. All agree that under his able administration the city has never been better governed, was never more prosperous, or never had more encouraging prospects for future development. Our subject is prominently identified with the I. O. O. F., having joined the order in Afton, in 1873.

GARRY TREAT, well known throughout Cass County as one of its early settlers, is a representative farmer and prominent citizen of Centre Precinct, living just outside the city limits of Weeping Water, where he settled in June, 1860. He is well informed on all matters pertaining to the township, and from him we learn the source of its poetic name. The legend runs as follows: A beautiful Indian maiden was captured, heart and body, by the brave chief of a hostile tribe. The Pawnees, to which tribe she belonged, hurried in pursuit, and a battle took place on the banks of the stream, in which all the braves of that tribe were killed. The tears shed by the maids and widows, thus bereft of lovers and husbands, caused the stream to break forth, which was named Nehrawka, meaning in our language Weeping Water.

Garry Treat, Sr., father of our subject, was born June 19, 1799, in Orange, Conn., where he was reared and educated. He was married in Tallmadge, Summit Co., Ohio, to Mary T. Woodruff. She was also a native of Connecticut, where her birth occurred in 1805. The farming country of the undeveloped West seemed to offer especial advantages to the father of our subject, and he accordingly changed his location to Tallmadge, Ohio, where he was married as above stated, and where he died in April, 1847, while yet in the prime of life. His widow and her family of little ones continued to live on the farm several years.

In the spring of 1860 Garry Treat, Jr., the subject of our sketch, following in the footsteps of his father, pushed on farther West to look for a new and better location. With a horse and carriage, and a little dog for company, he left the Ohio homestead, and after traveling one month came to Weeping Water, then a small hamlet of less than half a dozen log houses. The whole population consisted of the families of Messrs. Reed, Wolcott, Taylor, and two other men who have since gone to their long rest. Mr. Treat took up 240 acres of unimproved land on section 35, township 11, range 11, on which were a small log house and a well of water. He at once commenced the improvement of his land.

After securing his land Mr. Treat went to Tabor, Iowa, where he enlisted in defense of the Union in August, 1863, becoming a member of Company B, 29th Iowa Infantry. He served in the Western Department, and took an active part in several engagements. At the battle of Spoonville, Kan., he was wounded in the leg, which soon swelled to twice its original size, and being overlooked by the surgeons of the Union Army, he was captured by the rebels, and held several days on the field near Jenkins' Ferry. He was then taken to a rebel prison in Princeton, Ark., and for a month was in the rebel hospital there; thence with 100 other prisoners he was removed to Camden, and confined in a common prison, a building that had formerly been used as an auction prison for slaves. There he remained five months, barely subsisting on the maggoty pork, stale meat, and crusts of moldy bread doled out to him. From there he was taken to Tyler, Tex., and was kept in a small stockade for four months with 3,000 other prisoners. Mr. Treat was paroled after an imprisonment aggregating ten months of suffering, Feb. 15, 1864, and ten days later was delivered at the mouth of the Red River to Union officials. The moment that his eyes beheld the stars and stripes on that occasion will ever be remembered as the happiest one of his life. Our subject next went to New Orleans as a paroled prisoner, and three or four weeks later, his time having nearly expired, he was given a furlough and sent up the river to St. Louis, whence he proceeded to Clinton, Iowa, where he received an honorable discharge June 5, 1865.

Before returning to his home Mr. Treat visited Tabor, Iowa, to fulfill a previous engagement, that of marriage with Miss Catherine Hanley, a successful teacher in some of the public schools in the neighborhood. She is a native of Hector, N. Y., and came to Iowa with her brother. Her parents, Aaron H. and Caroline (Smith) Hanley, lived and died in the Empire State, holding an honorable position among the farmers of their community. Our subject brought his bride to his homestead in Centre Precinct, which is just outside of the city limits, in precinct 3, and commenced the development of his farm in earnest. He has made all the improvements himself, turning the first furrow, setting out trees, planting an orchard, shrubbery, and many small fruits. In 1870 Mr. Treat built a substantial stone house which is a model of neatness and taste, and will be a monument of his industry and prosperity for years to come. In all of his labors he has had the cordial assistance of Mrs. Treat, who has been a devoted wife and faithful mother. To them have been born two children—Charles H. and Anna May. The former is a machinist in Syracuse, N. Y., and the latter is attending the academy at Weeping Water. Our subject has always taken an active interest in the advancement of the city, and helped forward all commendable enterprises for its benefit, having proved himself so true a benefactor that he is often spoken of as one of the real city fathers. He has steadily avoided all public office, though he has served acceptably to all as Supervisor of the precinct. In politics he is a Republican, and supports the principles of that party. Mr. Treat is an esteemed member of the Congregational Church, while Mrs. Treat communes at the Baptist Church, of which she became a member in early life.

JACOB RUSTERHOLZ, an honored citizen of Cass County, is connected with its stock-raising and farming interests as one of the most intelligent and progressive agriculturists of Stove Creek Precinct, and his farm on section 20 is one of the most highly improved and best managed estates in this locality.

Our subject was born Aug. 15, 1836, on the shores of Lake Zurich, Switzerland, which was also the birthplace of his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth (Gunthardt) Rusterholz. His father was a mason and also a small farmer, and was a lifelong resident of his native place, dying there in 1881, at the age of seventy-two. His wife died in 1849, at the age of thirty-nine years. They had five children, of whom our subject, the second child in order of birth, was the only one who ever came to the United States.

Our subject was reared amid the beautiful scenes of his birthplace, and received a liberal education in the schools of that vicinity, gaining a good knowledge of both the French and German languages. After leaving school he went to work in a cloth mill to learn how to manufacture cloth, and in 1861, after he had become thoroughly conversant with every detail of cloth-making, he opened a manufacturing establishment of his own in his native land. He married, in 1862, Miss Saline Ryffel, a native of Switzerland, and established a pleasant home. For a few years everything went well, he was prosperous in his business and happy in his domestic relations, and had prospects of a brilliant future before him. Suddenly all was changed by the shadow of death falling over his peaceful home in 1865, when his beloved wife was taken from him. She left a son Jacob, who is still living in Switzerland, where he is engaged as a butcher. After that sad affliction his native land became distasteful to him, and on account of failing health he sold his business, wound up his affairs, and started to travel to seek distraction. He sailed from Antwerp in the steamer "Queen," and fourteen days later landed in New York. He journeyed extensively over the country, and finally coming to Nebraska in 1868, decided to invest his capital in the rich farming lands of this State and turn his attention to agricultural pursuits, hoping thus far from the scenes of his early days to soften the memories connected with them, and in this salubrious climate re-establish his health. He spent the first year in Nebraska City, and in the spring of 1869 he took up his present homestead, then comprising but eighty acres, and cast in his lot with the few settlers who had preceded him in Stove Creek Precinct, and thus became a pioneer of the place. He has proved to be both a practical and skillful farmer, and has met with unqualified success, having brought his land to a good state of cultivation, and provided it with a neat and substantial set of buildings, and the appliances for carrying on agriculture successfully, so that it is as a whole one of the best equipped and most valuable farms in the precinct. He has fenced it and planted groves, and an orchard of 100 trees, and it is well supplied with running water from Stove Creek. He has added forty acres of land, adjacent to his homestead, to his original purchase, and also has that improved. He does general farming, and has some fine stock of good grades, including fifteen horses of good blood.

Our subject was married a second time in 1876, in Stove Creek Precinct, to Miss Sophia Seiker, a native of Germany. By her death in 1883 he was a second time bereaved of a good wife.

Mr. Rusterholz is a man of fine mental capacity, and is well informed on all topics of general interest. His straightforward, manly character and unblemished reputation have won for him a high place in the regard of his fellow-citizens. In religion he adheres to the German Reformed Church; in politics he is an earnest Republican.

AARON JENKINS, stock dealer, is one of the foremost citizens of Manley Village, Centre Township, where he owns some valuable property. He is erecting a commodious residence here for his own use. He is the proprietor of the only hotel here, which he has put in charge of another man, and devotes his time mainly to dealing in stock, in which he is quite extensively engaged.

The subject of this sketch was born in Ohio, Feb. 6, 1844, coming of good New England stock. His father, Calvin Jenkins, was born in Massachusetts about 1810, and there made his home the first few years of his life. He then accompanied his parents to Ohio, who at that early date must have been pioneers of that State. He remained an inmate of the parental household until he attained manhood. He married Martha Barnes, and to them were born five children, of whom all lived to maturity, two afterward dying in the army—Charles and Chauncey. Those living are: Aaron, Edmund and Albert, now in Ohio. Mr. Jenkins has been a farmer all his life, and is now enjoying the fruit of his labors on his well-ordered farm in Ohio. His estimable wife, mother of our subject, died in 1853, and he married again. His first wife was a native of Connecticut, and with her parents went to the Western Reserve in Ohio, where she married.

Our subject received an excellent education, and after leaving school engaged in various occupations, and finally began to deal in stock. Leaving his early home in Ohio he went to McHenry County, Ill., and was there three years prior to coming to Nebraska. Before leaving his birthplace he had, when a youth of eighteen, enlisted, Aug. 12, 1862, in Company K, 105th Ohio Infantry, and went forth to fight for the stars and stripes, serving in the Army of the Cumberland. He took part in many active engagements, and at the battle of Perryville he was wounded in the left thigh, and was laid up for six months in a hospital at Louisville, Ky. Returning to his regiment he was with it all through the march to the sea, and continued under Sherman until his honorable discharge at Washington, in June, 1865, he having won a good record for bravery on the battle-field. In 1870 our subject left Illinois and came to Nebraska to try farming on this rich soil. He first settled in Clay County, taking up a homestead on the wild prairie, and immediately set about its improvement, putting out a grove and orchard, and also building a house. He lived there twelve years, busily engaged in cultivating the land, and then sold his property at a good profit, and came to this place to take up his residence. This village had just been laid out, and Mr. H. W. Gleason kept the only store in town, and he and Mr. Williams, who kept a lumber-yard, were the only business men. Mr. Jenkins soon erected a hotel, of which he is still the owner. It is a good-sized, conveniently arranged house, two stories in height, 26x28 feet in dimensions, and a one-story L, 24x26 feet, making it a good, roomy hotel, the first in the village, and the only one now. Mr. Jenkins managed his hotel himself for some time, until his duties as "mine host" conflicted with his increasing business as a stock dealer, and he now hires another man to look after the house.

Our subject was married, Dec. 24, 1875, to Miss Alice Coon, and to them have been born two children, Walter T. and Charles F., both of whom are receiving the benefit of good educations. His wife was born in Illinois, Aug. 8, 1858, and when a child came to Nebraska with her parents, Peter and Phæbe (Bennett) Coon, of whom see sketch on another page.

Mr. Jenkins having been reared in Trumbull and Ashtabula Counties, the Western Reserve of Ohio, settled mostly by New England people, inherited those sturdy traits of character for which his ancestry are noted, and his success in life was therefore assured almost from the start, as they marked him as a man of practical ability, common sense, and good habits. His fellow-citizens have shown their confidence in his judgment and integrity by frequently soliciting him to hold office, and electing him to responsible positions, but he would never qualify. However, he does his duty at the polls, where he supports the Republican party.

THOMAS RANKIN. The Rankin family is favorably known throughout Rock Bluff Precinct, and represents a good farm property on section 16. It originated in Ireland, Thomas Rankin, Sr., the paternal grandfather of our subject, having been born in County Derry, where he was reared to manhood and married. Later, in company with his brothers, William and Samuel, and their families, he came to the United States. Thomas and Samuel located in Washington County, Pa., and William in Fayette County. They engaged in agricultural pursuits and spent the remainder of their lives in the counties where they first settled.

James Rankin, the father of our subject, was born in County Derry, Ireland, and at about the age of twelve came to America with his parents, and married in Washington County, Pa. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary War from the beginning to the close, entering the ranks when a youth of eighteen years. In 1788, as he was crossing the Alleghany Mountains, en route to Philadelphia after a load of salt, he stopped at a hotel on the mountains to stay over night, and there met Samuel Stephens and his family, who were en route for Western Pennsylvania for the purpose of locating on a farm there. This chance acquaintanceship ripened into a mutual friendship, which was further cemented by the fact that Mr. Stephens became the neighbor of the grandfather Rankin, and James Rankin in 1790 married Miss Martha, the eldest daughter of Mr. Stephens.

The parents of our subject after their marriage located on a tract of wild land in the woods, where the father carried on agriculture, and where there were born to them a family of nine children, Thomas of our sketch being the sixth child. He first opened his eyes to the light July 11, 1804, and lived upon the homestead until a man of thirty-five years. In the meantime the father died, about 1812, at the age of fifty years, after suffering greatly from impaired health brought on by the hardships which he endured in the army. The mother survived her husband a long period, dying about 1863, at the advanced age of ninety-three.

Thomas Rankin was married, in Washington County, Oct. 27, 1840, to Miss Catherine, daughter of Joseph and Catherine (Hopkins) Wright. Enoch Wright, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Rankin, served in the army during the Indian War in Pennsylvania, about 1814. He married Miss Rachel James, and Joseph Wright, the father of Mrs. Rankin, was their only child. Joseph was subsequently educated at Jefferson College, and became a Methodist preacher. His death took place at his home in Washington County, Pa., about 1852.

Mr. Rankin, our subject, left the Keystone State in the year 1871, and then determined to seek his fortunes on the other side of the Mississippi. Disposing of his property interests at the old home, he came to this county and purchased the land which he now owns and occupies; it comprises in this township 400 acres, and he also later became owner of 160 acres in Pottawatomie County, Iowa, and a ranch near Broken Bow, in Blaine County, this State. His homestead embraces 400 acres of valuable land under a high state of cultivation, and is situated on sections 21 and 15. He has comfortable buildings, a goodly assortment of live stock, and the farm machinery necessary for the carrying on of agriculture after modern methods.

To Mr. and Mrs. Rankin there have been born twelve children, all of whom lived to mature years. They were named respectively: Lucinda E. is the wife of Jesse Merrill; they live in Buchanan County, Iowa. Rachel C., wife of Rev. James Imbrie, of the United Presbyterian Church; they reside in Armstrong County, Pa. Martha B., wife of R. R. Yerson, of Broken Bow, Neb.; Mary L., wife of W. F. Rankin; they reside on the ranch in Blaine County, Neb. D. Millie, wife of Robert Montgomery; they reside in Butler County, Pa. James S., who died Nov. 13, 1878; Joseph A., single; Thomas S., who died in 1876; Sarah A., single; Enoch W., single; Anna F., single, and Charity J., who died in 1880. The eldest son, James S., during the late Civil War enlisted in Company G, 140th Pennsylvania Infantry, and served three years, during which time his health was greatly injured on account of privation and hardships. On his return from the army he was graduated from Westminster College, and after leaving the army devoted the remainder of his life to preaching the Gospel as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died at his brother's in Rock Bluff Precinct, Nov. 13, 1878. He was married, in September, 1867, to Miss Nancy J. Jones, of Washington County, Pa., and they became the parents of three children—Lilly, Jessie and Joseph. The mother of these died in August, 1873, five years before the decease of her husband. Since his death Lilly and Jessie have made their home with their grandparents, our subject and his wife. Little Joseph died soon after the death of his mother. James Rankin participated in many of the important battles of the war, and was captured by the rebels at Gettysburg. He was incarcerated in Belle Isle Prison a period of three months, during which time he lost fifty pounds of flesh. The history of that rebel bastille is too well known to need repetition here.

Our subject and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the United Presbyterian Church, attending services at Murray. In the church Mr. Rankin has been a Ruling Elder a period of nearly forty years. He cast his first Presidential vote for Jackson, and afterward became a Whig, then a Republican, and voted for Lincoln and Grant, for many years supporting the principles of that party. He has always had a warm interest in the temperance movement, which led him to identify himself with the Prohibitionists about 1872, with whom he now votes and labors. During the agitation of the slavery question he was a strong Abolitionist.

E BERGER. The family history of this substantial and well-to-do resident of Rock Bluff Precinct is substantially as follows: He was born in 1815, and is the son of John Berger, whose parents, Jacob and Catherine Berger, were natives of Germany, where they were reared and married. They emigrated to the United States at an early date, about 1770 it is believed, and located in Pennsylvania, where their son John was born about 1775.

The grandparents left the Keystone State a few years later, settling in Pittsylvania County, Va., where, engaged in agricultural pursuits, they spent the remainder of their days. John Berger was married in the Old Dominion to Miss Margaret, daughter of Jacob Hedrick, the latter of whom was also a native of Germany, and whose daughter Margaret was born on the ocean during the voyage of her parents to America. John Berger lived in Virginia until 1830, then removed with his family to Henry County, Ind., settling in the midst of a heavy timber tract, from which he proceeded to build up a farm. The first dwelling was a hewn log house, in the building of which our subject took an active part. They dressed the logs with their broadaxes, rived boards for the shingles, and split the lath out of the timber, all by hand of course, as there was nothing else, not even a plane or turning lathe. The dwelling, 18x36 feet in area, was one and one-half stories in height, and when completed made a very pretentious residence for those days.

Under this primitive roof-tree the parents of our subject spent the remainder of their days, the father dying in 1855 and the mother the year following, at the ages of ninety-one and seventy-eight respectively. There had been born to them a family of eleven children, ten of whom lived to mature years, and all natives of Virginia. Enos was married, in Indiana, to Miss Elizabeth Wallace, May 18, 1839. This lady was the daughter of Joshua and Sophia (Scott) Wallace, then residents of Fayette County. The young people began housekeeping in Wayne County, where our subject had contracted for the building of a part of the White River Canal, and they lived there until the contract was annulled by the State.

In the year 1843 Mr. Berger crossed the Mississippi with his little family, and made his way to Andrew County, Mo., where they lived on a farm until 1848, Mr. Berger in the meantime occupying himself mostly at stone cutting and masonry. He got out the stone work of the court-house at Savannah, and performed other important work in the construction of some of the best buildings of that region. Upon leaving Missouri the family took up their residence in Warren County, Iowa, whence they removed in the fall of 1849 to the present site of Winterset, in Madison County. The following summer Mr. Berger put up the first house in that embryo town. That same summer this was selected as the county seat. Mr. Berger was appointed Postmaster about that time, serving two years, and was then elected Treasurer and Recorder of the county, which joint offices he held until leaving the Hawkeye State in 1856.

In January, 1857, Mr. Berger erected a sawmill in the vicinity of the present town of Rock Bluff, and made preparations to remove his family to this county, in which they took up their residence in July following. Mr. B. and his eldest son, James W., worked in the mill, and put up their house at a time when the greater part of Rock Bluff Precinct was an uncultivated prairie. The first dwelling of the family was a small plank house, into which they removed about 1865. In 1868 they completed the commodious brick residence which the family now occupy, and which is noticeable among the other fine buildings of that region. In due time there were added a frame barn, fences and orchard, forest trees and the smaller fruits, and all the other things which conduce to make country life pleasant and desirable. The Berger residence at the time of its completion was considered the best farm house in the county.

To our subject and his estimable wife there were born seven children, namely: Josephine A., Mary E., James W., George T., M. Francenia, John P. and Luella M. Miss Josephine, the eldest daughter of our subject, is the wife of A. S. Alley, an attorney of Wilber, this State; Mary, Mrs. G. L. Seybolt, is a resident of Jan Jose, Cal.; her husband was special postal agent and detective several years ago, until the incoming of the Democratic administration, when he was removed. He now operates a fruit farm. M. Francenia married A. R. Johnson, President of the Cable Railway Company of Omaha, and who also has a large fruit farm in California; James, who is still living at the home farm, was married, Nov. 26, 1874, to Miss Susan C., daughter of John and Jemima (Thoruhill) Johnson, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. The family is favorably and widely known along the eastern line of this county, having been no unimportant factor in its growth and development.

Mr. Berger and his son James were formerly members of Rock Bluff Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., which lodge surrendered its charter later and disbanded. George belongs to the Masonic fraternity at Wilber. The father and sons are solid Republicans, politically. Mr. Berger voted for William Henry Harrison in 1836 and 1840, and for his grandson in 1888.

ZURAY S. VOSBURGH. The subject of this sketch was born near the city of Scranton, Pa., over forty-six years ago, on the 5th of May, 1842. He came to Nebraska in 1878, and is the proprietor of one of the best farms of Center Precinct, comprising 160 acres of land on section 9. Soon after coming here he took up a tract of uncultivated prairie, and by years of unflagging toil and the outlay of hundreds of dollars has built up a homestead which is now one of the noticeable features in the landscape of this region. He has a grove of forest trees which comprises the finest windbreak in this county, and which, it is said, cannot be beaten even in the State of Illinois, famous for these institutions. His hedge was planted by surveyed lines, and the farm is all enclosed by this system of fencing. The residence is a neat and substantial structure, and with its adjacent buildings, and the abundance of fruit and shade trees, fulfills the modern idea of the complete home. The land is remarkably fertile.

In addition to the ordinary barns and stables, there is an exceptionally fine corn-crib 24x32 feet, with a foundation of solid masonry. Every acre of the farm can be utilized, there being no waste land. The past year (1888) Mr. Vosburgh harvested 4,200 bushels of corn from less than eighty acres, while his wheat and oat crops were in proportion. The ten years' labor of our subject on this farm in its results should be amply satisfactory, and is the best indication of the ability, energy and good judgment which have been exercised in connection therewith.

Our subject spent his boyhood and youth in the Keystone State, remaining at home on the farm until eighteen years of age. He then conceived the idea that he would like to enter the legal profession, and accordingly repaired to Wilkesbarre, and entered upon the study of law under the instruction of Charles Denison. Not long afterward, however, he abandoned this, and became a traveling salesman for the firm of Spaulding & Place, of Gloversville, N. Y. Subsequently we find him at Scranton City, Pa., as clerk of the Wyoming House, where he continued a period of eight years, never being absent from his post a day. After the outbreak of the Rebellion, Mr. Vosburgh entered the Commissary Department with the sharpshooters of the 203d Pennsylvania Regiment, and was in the army a period of eighteen months, being mustered out at the close of the war.

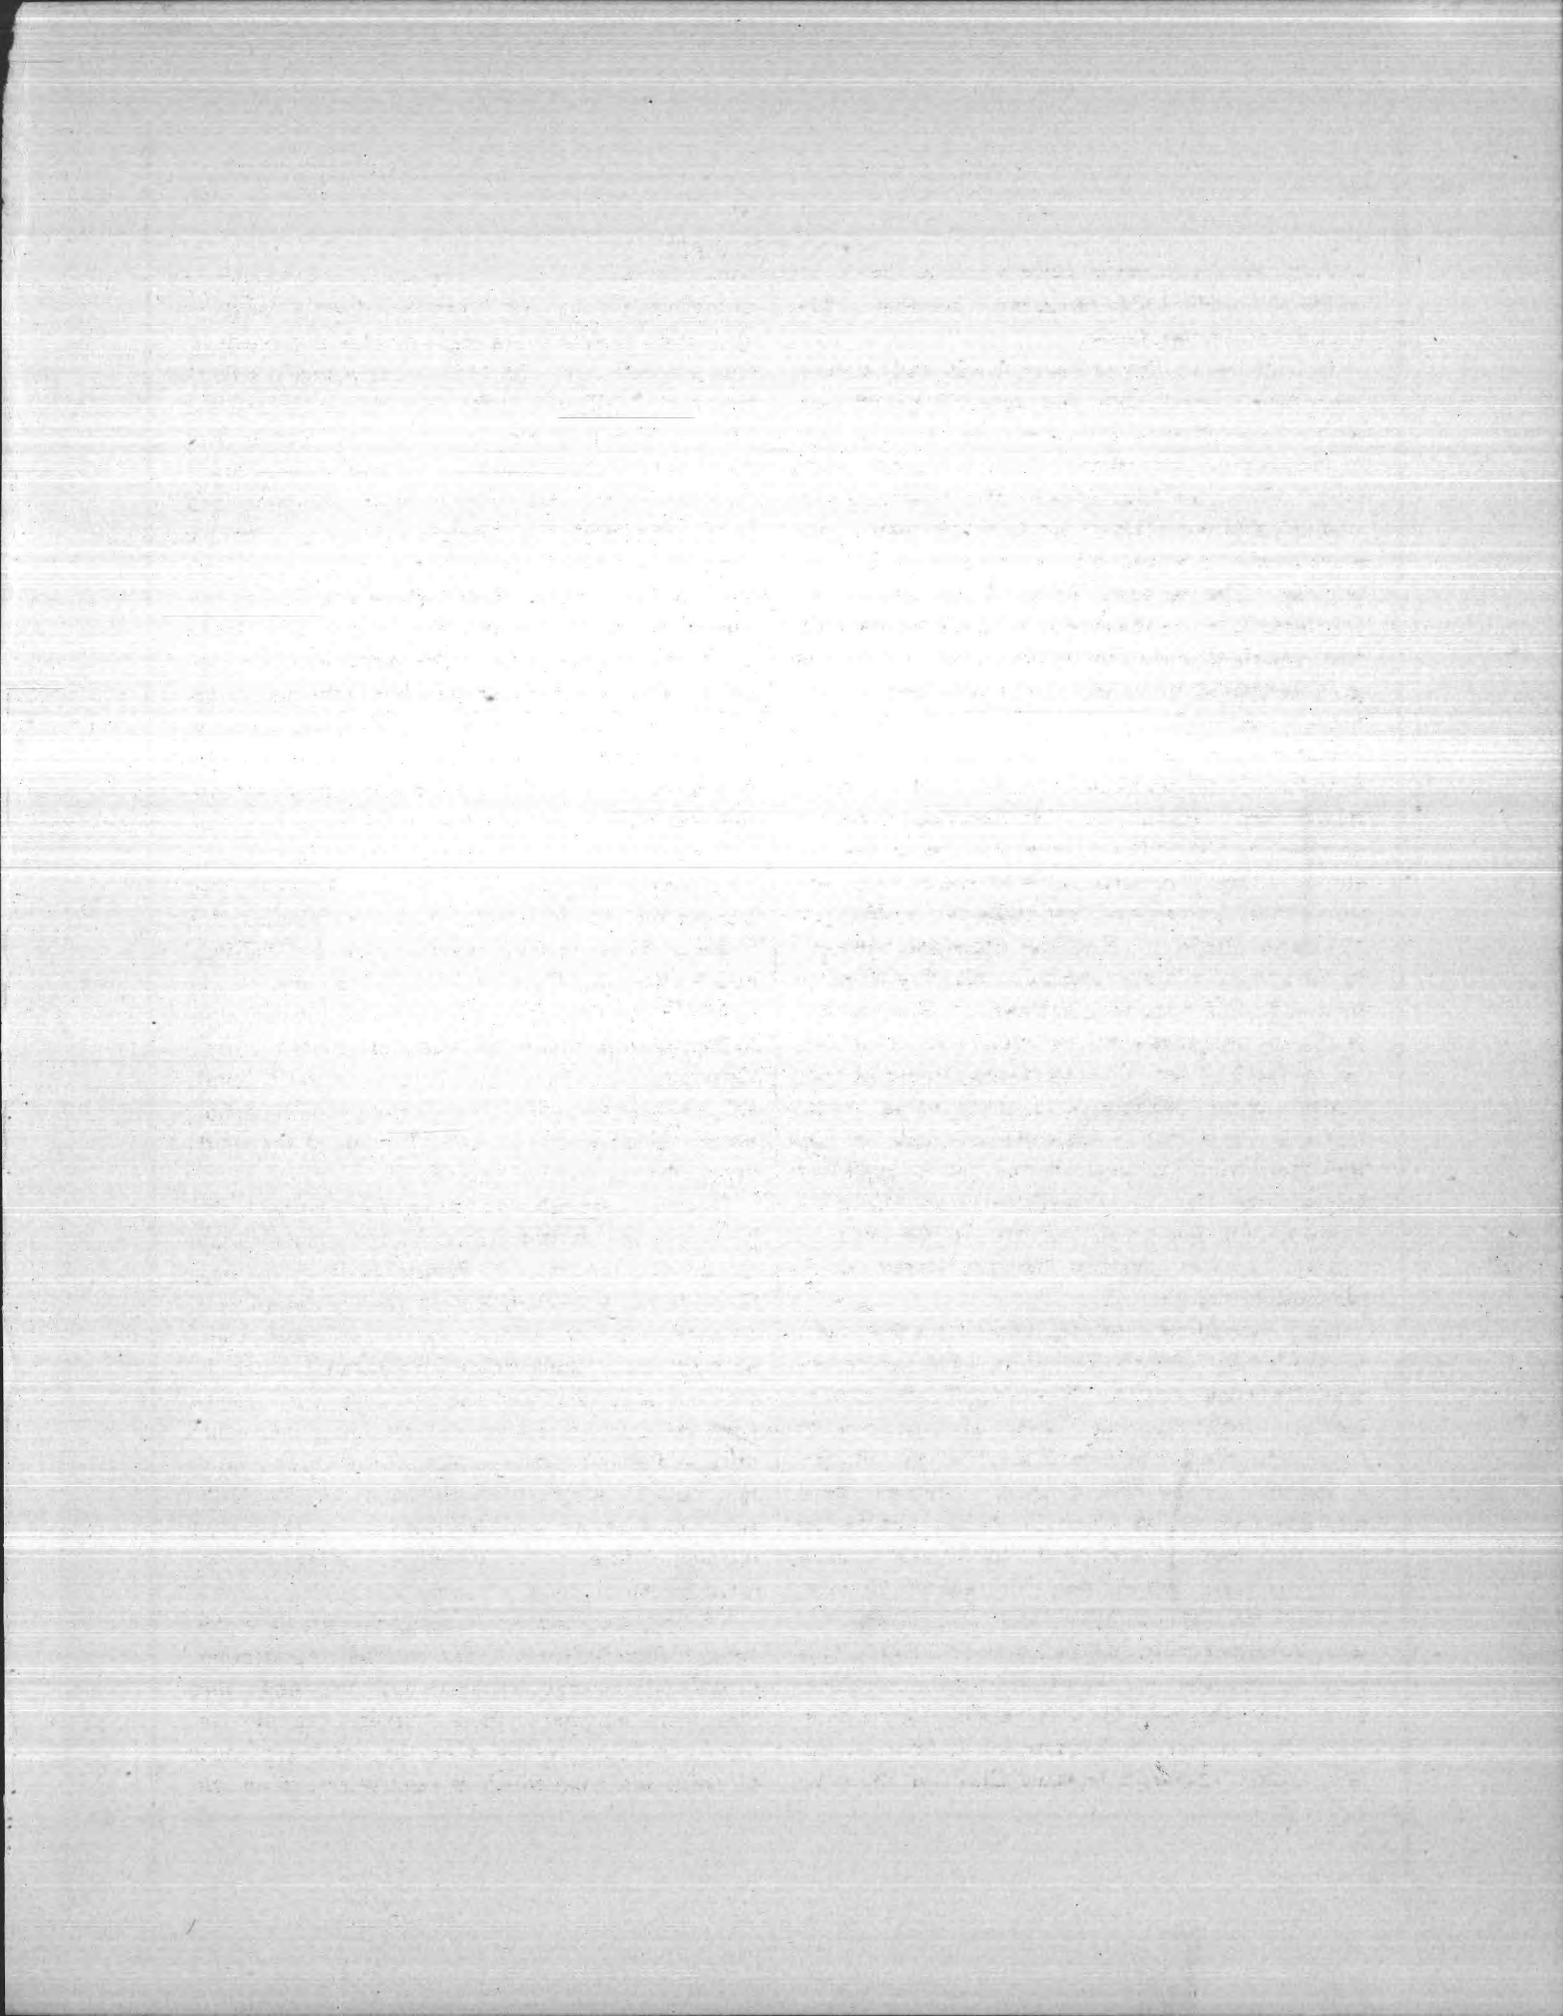

Our subject now returning home for a few days, visited briefly with his friends, then once more became the employe of the Wyoming House, remaining there until the spring of 1868. He then resolved to seek the West, and started for Chicago, Ill., arriving there on the 15th of April. Thence he went into Lee County, to which his father had in the meantime removed, and lived with him there on a farm one year. He was married in LaSalle County, Ill., Feb. 22, 1871, to Miss Emma Briggs, who was born in Luzerne County, Pa., May 10, 1850. This lady became the mother of two children, Clyde and Frank, who make their home with their father. Clyde is attending the High School at Plattsmouth. Mrs. Emma Vosburgh departed this life at the home of the family Feb. 5, 1879, after an illness of ten days, aged twenty-eight years, eight months and five days. Our subject, June 20, 1881, contracted a second matrimonial alliance, with Mrs. Mary A. (Short) Elster. This lady was born Aug. 17, 1842, in England, and is the daughter of Edward and Mary (Booth) Short, who were born in England, and lived there until their daughter Mary was twelve years old. They then emigrated to America, settling in Ann Arbor, Mich., where the father followed his trade of tailor, and where Miss Mary completed her education. She made her home with her parents until her marriage, but in the meantime, while on a visit to an aunt in Whiteside County, Ill., formed the acquaintance of Mr. F. Elster, with whom she came to Nebraska in the winter of 1870, the year after their marriage, which occurred Jan. 5, 1869. Of their union there were born two children—Nellie May and William B. The daughter became the wife of Dr. O. Waters, of Gretna, this State. The son makes his home with our subject, and is attending Weeping Water Academy.

Mrs. Elster during her widowhood made her home in Plattsmouth, where she was married the second time, June 20, 1881. Her father, Edward Short, and his estimable wife, are still living in Ann Arbor, Mich. The parental household included four children, who are now in Nebraska.

Charles Vosburgh, the father of our subject, was born near the Hudson River, N. Y., whence he removed with his father to Pennsylvania when a boy. Grandfather Vosburgh took up land in the midst of a heavy timber tract which he cleared, and where he built up a comfortable homestead. Later he sold out, and purchased another farm. He retired from this later, although still retaining ownership of it, and is now the proprietor of a hotel at Abington, Pa. He married in early manhood Miss Millicent Van Luvener, and they became the parents of thirteen children, all of whom are living, and located mostly in Pennsylvania.

The wife and mother departed this life June 29, 1886, in Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather, Cornelius Vosburgh, was also a native of the Empire State, and married a Miss Pulver. He also removed to Pennsylvania, where he lived a number of years, and from which he removed when an old man to Earlville, Ill., where his death took place when he was seventy-eight years old. Grandmother Vosburgh later made her home with our subject in Illinois, and died at the advanced age of ninety-one years.

Faithfully,
Jaeulll Chapman

Mr. Vosburgh stands well among the men of his community, where his well-known qualities as a thorough and skillful farmer are thoroughly recognized, and where his sterling worth of character is fully appreciated. He has been too busy to give any time to office-seeking, although he is a reader and keeps himself posted upon current events. He gives his uniform support to the Republican party, and in religious matters to the Congregational Church. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity.

JUDGE SAMUEL M. CHAPMAN. This gentleman occupies a prominent position among the citizens of Cass County, and was born in Blairsville, Indiana Co., Pa., Oct. 28, 1839. His father, Joseph Chapman, was born in Derry Township, Westmoreland Co., Pa., in the year 1799, and was brought up to agricultural pursuits. There being few schools of any kind, and none after the order of the present common schools, he was self-educated, and was so diligent as to be enabled to master even the higher branches of mathematics, including trigonometry and geometry. He was in fact a prodigy in the science of mathematics. His migration to Indiana County was made in the year 1836, when he established a tannery at Blairsville, continuing the same until 1843, when he sold the business, and went to the then Territory of Iowa, making his home about six miles west of Burlington in Des Moines County, and gave his attention to agriculture. He purchased a large tract of land at Kossuth, Des Moines County, and engaged in general farming until his death, which occurred in September, 1861. He was in politics an enthusiastic Whig, and stumped the State of Pennsylvania in the interests of Gen. Harrison in the year 1840, and subsequently became a Republican at the birth of that party. The maiden name of the mother of Judge Chapman was Eliza Pollock. Her father, Thomas Pollock, a descendant of one of the good old Colonial families, was born in Ligonier Valley, Westmoreland Co., Pa., on the 25th of November, 1782, and his father, James Pollock, was born in Coleraine, the North of Ireland, in the year 1728. James Pollock came to America with several brothers in 1750, and settled in Columbia County, Pa. Going to Westmoreland County about thirteen years later he was there married to Mary Heron, of that place. He was the first Justice of the Peace in that section of the country, and took his commission with him when he went to Ligonier Valley. He died there in the year 1812, sincerely mourned by the community where he was well known.

The grandfather of our subject was reared to farming pursuits, and from the time he was able to manage it had been proprietor of a farm. His first wife, the grandmother of our subject, was Rachel Hendricks, a sister of Gen. William Hendricks, of Indiana, and daughter of Abraham Hendricks. She died in Westmoreland County in the year 1807. Later he was married to Susan, daughter of the Rev. Joseph W. Henderson, of Indiana County. He was a loyal citizen, and active in the interests of the people. He was one of the Commissioners of Westmoreland County, and served for several terms as Representative in the State Legislature. For quite a number of years he was Associate Justice of the Common Pleas Court, and in every instance showed himself worthy of the confidence of the people. He was a man of deep religious convictions and consistent life, and held membership in the Presbyterian Church, in which he served in an official capacity for a number of years.

To Joseph and Eliza Chapman were born eight children—Thomas P., James P., John W., Jane, Samuel M., Joseph M., Mary H. and Washington H. The eldest son, Thomas P., resided in Saunders County, Neb., where he died in the year 1875, at which time he was a member of the State Legislature; James P. died in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1862; Washington H. died in infancy; John W. died in Council Bluffs in June, 1886; Jane is the wife of the Rev. A. H. Barelay, and resides in Colorado; Samuel M. and Joseph M. are twins; the latter is engaged in banking and general mercantile business at Weston, Saunders Co., Neb. Mary H. is the wife of Daniel Matson, and resides at Kossuth, Iowa.

The subject of this sketch was about three years of age when he was first ushered into pioneer life in Iowa Territory, and from his early days was accustomed to very few if any of the conveniences that are by many looked upon as the indispensables of life. His early education was obtained in the log school-house, that even as it is mentioned again takes form in the mind, standing out clearly with its rough-hewn benches, rude desk, unplastered walls and puncheon floor. As soon as he was sufficiently prepared to do so he entered the Yellow Springs College at Kossuth, Iowa, and was still pursuing his studies when the late war broke out. He enlisted at the very first call for troops, and became a member of Company E of the 1st Iowa Infantry. The regiment was organized at Keokuk, and was there prepared for the front.

The 1st Iowa Volunteers were sent first to Hannibal, Mo., and opened the railroad from that place to Macon, Mo.; from there they went on a forced march to Booneville, where they joined Gen. Lyon, who was Commander of the Department of Missouri, and on the 5th of July, 1861, they started for Springfield, in the same State. Not long after they arrived a portion of the regiment, including Company E, went down to the White River, where they met the enemy, and engaged them at Forsyth. The conflict was continued a few days later at Dug Springs; from there they returned to Springfield. Shortly after this they fought the battle of Wilson's Creek, where the brave and gallant Lyon fell.

After the above-mentioned battle the regiment retreated to Rolla and thence to St. Louis, where, his time having expired, our subject was honorably discharged. He re-enlisted on the 14th of August of the same year, a few days after receiving his discharge. This time he was attached to Company K, of the 14th Iowa Infantry, and participated in all the battles in which that regiment was engaged during its service. It will be remembered as one of the most dashing and intrepid bodies of men in the service, always ready for service, and knowing no fear and daunted by no danger. The most important battles, perhaps, in which the regiment engaged were those of Ft. Henry, Ft. Donelson, Shiloh, and both battles of Corinth. They also served under Gen. Banks' command in the Meridian raid and Red River expedition, and in the latter were under fire fifty-two days. In this connection they fought at the battles at Ft. De Russey and Pleasant Hill, which were followed by the engagements at Yellow Bayou and Chicot Lake. From the latter place the regiment went to Memphis, where it was under Gen. A. J. Smith, and participated in the battles of Forsyth and Tupelo, Miss. Shortly afterward they went to Missouri to look after Price, who was committing serious depredations in that State. Then followed the conflict at Iron Mountain, after which they went, via Rolla, Jefferson City and Sedalia, to St. Louis, and from that city to Davenport, Iowa, where he received an honorable discharge Dec. 8, 1864.

On the 1st of January following our subject landed in Plattsburgh, Neb., and at once began reading law with the Hon. T. M. Marquett, and was admitted to the bar in open court, Judge Elmer S. Dundy presiding, in 1876, almost immediately after which a partnership was formed with the Hon. Samuel Maxwell, now one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of Nebraska, their partnership continuing until Mr. Maxwell was elected to the above-mentioned office in 1873. Our subject continued in practice until in November, 1886, when he was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Judge Mitchell, one of the District Judges of the Second District, and was re-elected in 1887 for the full term.

The marriage of Judge Chapman with Miss S. E. Putnam, of Ludlow, Vt., was celebrated in October, 1869. They became the parents of four children, viz: Harriet Elizabeth; Emeline, who died in infancy; Thomas P. and Sarah. On the 11th of February, 1880, Mr. Chapman was left a widower. In June, 1883, a second marriage was contracted, the name of the lady being Agnes D. Samson, who is the daughter of David and Margaret Samson (see sketch elsewhere in this volume). Of this union two children were born—Samuel Maxwell and Helen Hope.

Judge Chapman has always taken considerable interest in public affairs, and cast his first Presidential ballot in favor of Abraham Lincoln, from which time he has been a staunch Republican. He was elected to the State Senate in 1875, and re-elected with a largely increased majority in 1877. He has frequently been called upon to serve on various committees of importance. He was Chairman of the Judiciary Committee through both terms of office. His service was most acceptable to his constituents, who recognized his constant interest in their welfare. Among the fraternities, as elsewhere, the stable character, high principle, clear intellect and untiring energy of Judge Chapman are recognized and acknowledged. He is a member of the Plattsmouth Lodge No. 7, of the I. O. O. F.; Plattsmouth Lodge No. 6, of the A. F. & A. M.; Nebraska Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., and Mt. Zion Commandery No. 5, of Knights Templars.

The portrait of this able jurist and well-known citizen of Cass County adorns a page of this volume—a fitting tribute to the worth of the man, as well as an indication of his deserved prominence in the community.

ROBERT TROOP is a member of the firm of Egenberger & Troop, who conduct one of the best appointed and best managed groceries in Plattsmouth, and although they have been established but little more than a year they already command a good paying trade, which extends even beyond the city limits.

Mr. Troop was born in Ireland, Feb. 23, 1843, and his father, likewise named Robert, was also a native of that country, and was of Scotch ancestry. He received a good education in his younger days, and then learned the trade of a machinist, serving an apprenticeship of five years. He did not continue to follow that trade, however, after his term of service expired, accepting instead the stewardship of one of the large estates in his native island. In the year 1844 he emigrated to America with his family, and located at Davenport, Iowa, which was then but a village. Iowa was then a Territory, the settlements being confined to the region adjacent to the Mississippi River, and the greater part of the land was owned by the Government, and for sale at $1.25 an acre. Mr. Troop continued to reside in Davenport from 1844 until his death, Feb. 3, 1873, and during that time witnessed its growth from an insignificant town to a large and important city of 20,000 inhabitants. He was for some time engaged as an accountant in a bank, and he subsequently became a salesman in a lumber-yard. He was a man whose integrity and many good traits of character commanded the respect of those with whom he was associated, and his kindly disposition won their regard. The maiden name of his good wife was Jane Agnew, and she was also a native of Ireland. They had quite a family of children, eight of whom grew to maturity: Eliza married Murt Connor, and lives in Coal Valley, Ill.; William, James, John, Samuel and James are all deceased; Thomas lives in Cass County, Neb.; and Mary lives in Plattsmouth.

Our subject was but a year old when his parents came to the United States, so he can recollect no other home than this, his adopted country, and when the great Civil War broke out, and our flag was threatened with dishonor and these United States with disunion, he patriotically sprang to their defense, and fought with the zeal and bravery of a native-born citizen. Amid the pioneer influences of his early home his character was molded in strength and vigor. He received a very good rudimentary education in the early, primitive schools of Davenport, which has since been supplemented by observation, experience and reading. At the youthful age of twelve years he began to depend upon his own resources for a living, and found employment as a cabin boy and assistant cook on a Mississippi River boat. He followed boating on the river in different capacities until August, 1862. In that month he enlisted in Company E, 20th Iowa Infantry, and went to the front to assist in fighting the battles of his adopted country. Among the more important battles in which he took an active part were those of Prairie Grove and the siege and capture of Vicksburg. He was taken prisoner at Morganzie Bend, La., in November, 1863, and was confined in the rebel prison at Tyler, Tex., until September, 1864. He was then exchanged and joined his regiment, and fought with it at Ft. Blakely, and also at the fort at the mouth of Mobile Bay. After that he and his comrades were stationed at Mobile until their discharge, in July, 1865. Our subject returned to Davenport at the close of his military career, and there engaged as mate of a steamer owned by Smith & Howlett. He continued in their employ sixteen months, and then turned his footsteps toward Nebraska. Here he found employment in the construction department of the Union Pacific Railway the ensuing two years. He then returned to Davenport to take charge of the street car stables. At the end of two years he left that place to take a similar one in Milwaukee. He had charge of the street car barns there until the spring of 1876, when he again took up his residence in Nebraska. He bought a farm in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, Cass County, and managed it with good results until the fall of 1887. He then formed a partnership with J. V. Egenberger to engage in the grocery business. They have been much prospered in this venture, their credit stands high in financial circles, and they bid fair to place themselves among the foremost representatives of the mercantile interests of Cass County.

Mr. Troop and Miss Lou Moore were united in marriage Dec. 18, 1870. She is a native of Missouri, and a daughter of George Moore. Mr. Troop bears a high reputation for honest dealings, and the cheerfulness, cordiality and urbanity that distinguish his manners gain the good-will and liking of all who come in contact with him. He is prominently identified with the G. A. R., as a member of McConihie Post No. 45, and he also belongs to Cass Camp No. 32, U. W. To the many friends whom they have gathered around them he and his wife often extend the generous hospitality of a home made attractive by its coziness, and the true courtesy of the host and hostess. Politically, he is a Republican.

CORNELIUS VOSBURGH is a successful, well-to-do farmer, who occupies a place of prominence among the agriculturists of Centre Precinct, where he has a highly productive farm on section 9, admirably adapted to the cultivation of grain, in which he is extensively engaged.

Our subject was born in Lackawanna Township, Luzerne Co., Pa., Oct. 30, 1834. His father, Charles Vosburgh, was a native of New York, born near the Hudson River, in the town of Hudson, Nov. 10, 1809. In early manhood he removed to Luzerne County, Pa., and was there united in marriage to Miss Milicent Van Luvener, and with her he lived in happy wedlock for the unusual length of fifty-two years. Of their union thirteen children were born, all of whom are still living. The mother of our subject passed away on the 29th of January, 1886, thus closing a life well rounded in years, well spent, and full of all things that go to make a good woman. The father of our subject is now passing his declining years in Lackawanna, where he is well known and honored, and is there tranquilly awaiting life's great end. His father, Cornelius Vosburgh, was born on the 19th of March, 1786, and spent the early part of his life at Hudson. From New York he went to Pennsylvania, and from there removed to Illinois, where his death occurred March 24, 1864, at the age of seventy-eight years and five days. He was a farmer and blacksmith, and followed those pursuits nearly all his life. His wife was born Sept. 23, 1786, and died Nov. 29, 1877, her life being prolonged to the advanced age of ninety-one years, two months and six days. The following children were born to her and her husband: Seymour V., Phoebe, Charles (father of our subject), Eliza, Samuel, William, Samuel, Fidelia, Clarissa, Pamela and James.

Cornelius Vosburgh remained with his father until he had attained manhood, then started forth to see something of the world, turning his footsteps westward, and in 1855 we find him located in Rock Creek Township. But after trying farming there a year, he retraced his steps toward his Eastern home, going as far as DeKalb County, Ill., where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until the year of the Chicago fire, 1871, when he again came westward, and in Floyd County, Iowa, followed his calling for awhile. But California held strong attractions for him, and he was soon on the way to the Pacific Coast. He spent a few years in the Golden State and in Washington Territory prospecting, but not liking that region for a farming country, in 1876 we again find him in DeKalb County, Ill., where he resided until October, 1881, when he came to make his home in this State, settling on land that he had previously purchased, whereon he still abides. From the wild prairie, by incessant and well-directed labor, he has built up a comfortable home, and has a farm under good tillage, has set out a good grove of trees, an orchard of apple trees of four acres, and all kinds of small fruits; he has also planted pear-trees, but has had no success with them. He is continually making improvements, and his place already compares favorably with other farms owned by men who have been here much longer.

Cornelius Vosburgh and Cornelia C. Howlet were united in marriage May 23, 1859, and their wedded life has been blessed to them by the birth of four children, three of whom are still living—Alfred H., George W. and Gertrude J. George married Miss Barbara Angel, and they have one child—Lewis Edward; Gertrude married Charles B. Andrews, son of D. D. Andrews, of whom see sketch on another page of this work. Mrs. Vosburgh was born in Lee County, Ill., Jan. 29, 1842, and the first eight years of her life were passed in her native place. She then went to Syracuse, N. Y., and staid with an uncle until she was sixteen years of age, and in 1855 returned to Illinois. She is a daughter of H. G. and Amanda M. (Canfield) Howlet, natives of Syracuse, N. Y., where they lived until after their marriage and the birth of three children, when they moved to Niles, Mich., and thence to where Chicago now stands in the year 1835, and were thus numbered among its early pioneers. There were then only three houses there, and a butcher shop. Mr. Howlet owned the land on which the old Board of Trade building afterward stood. He subsequently sold his property there, and took up his residence in Dixon, Ill., and later removed to a place three miles northwest of Paw Paw Village. He was one of the Deputy Sheriffs who helped to break up the "Dick Allen Prairie Banditti," he arresting Allen himself. He was in other ways prominent in public affairs, was Justice of the Peace, and held various other offices. He died Jan. 7, 1888, his wife having preceded him many years, dying in the year 1852. They were the parents of nine children, five of whom lived to maturity. Parley Howlet, the grandfather of Mrs.

Vosburgh, was a native of Vermont. He moved from there to New York, and died on his large farm near Syracuse. The maiden name of his wife was Phebe Dodge.

Mr. Vosburgh is thoroughly respected for those characteristics that mark the true man and the honorable citizen. He has avoided public office, excepting to act as Roadmaster, preferring the quiet of his cheerful fireside to the cares of public life. Yet in every other way he is ready to do aught that will promote the welfare of the township. He has ever stood by the Republican party since its formation, and has not lost an opportunity to cast his vote in its favor since he attained his majority.

HIMENUS ADAMS, son of the well-known George W. Adams, of Avoca, has charge of his father's farm in this precinct, and is evidently, in point of industry, enterprise and intelligence, a "chip of the old block." Of the Adams family of this county a sketch will be found elsewhere in this work, having for its subject the father, George W. The Adams farm is devoted mainly to the raising of fine stock, a specialty being thoroughbred horses and Short-horn cattle. The farm is beautifully located on section 3, and comprises 520 broad acres with substantial and convenient buildings, the whole fulfilling the popular idea of the model country estate. Of this our subject has had the charge for the last five years, and in the management of its various interests is evidently proving himself a success.

Mr. Adams was born at the farm which he now occupies, Sept. 15, 1862, and was reared amid the quiet pursuits of country life, acquiring a practical education in the district school and remaining at home until his marriage. This interesting event in his life occurred Dec. 5, 1883, at the home of the bride, Miss Louise Gruber, in Liberty Precinct. Mrs. Adams was born in that precinct, March 19, 1863, and is the daughter of the well-known Peter Gruber, one of the most prominent farmers in the southeastern portion of this county. Mr. G. is a native of Germany, born and reared in one of the Rhine Provinces, where also he was married to Miss Jacobina Opp, a native of the same locality. After the birth of three children they emigrated to the United States, settling first in the city of St. Louis, Mo. A few years later they came to this county, and Mr. Gruber secured land in Liberty Precinct during its early settlement. True to the instincts of his substantial German ancestry, he labored diligently, and is now the owner of a fine property, including a large and valuable farm of over 600 acres, which, with its buildings, live stock and machinery, forms one of the attractive points of interest along the southern line of the county.

Mrs. Adams was reared under the parental roof-tree, where she lived until her marriage, and is a lady in every way fitted for her position in life as the wife of a prominent and enterprising citizen. The young people have started out with the fairest prospects, and enjoy the good wishes of hosts of friends.

JOHN V. EGENBERGER. This gentleman is the senior member of the well-known firm of Egenberger & Troop, grocers, of Plattsmouth. He was born in the village of Waldhausen, which lies about five miles from Buchen, the capital of Grossherzogthum Baden, Germany, on the 24th of October, 1854. His family had been residents of that village for several generations, and seldom had any member of the family gone far from it to live. He is the son of John V. and Halena Egenberger. His father was a farmer, and reared his son to agricultural pursuits. He died in the year 1869, when about forty-five years of age.

The mother of our subject previous to her marriage bore the name of Helen Guthmann and is the sister of F. R. Guthmann (see sketch of that gentleman elsewhere in this volume). She came to America in September, 1872, and now resides in Plattsmouth. She is the mother of ten children, six of whom are living. These are: Mary, the wife of Henry Weckbeck; Veronica, the wife of William Weber; Louisa, who is married to Hammond Spies; Fred and Ludwig, single, all of whom are residents of Plattsmouth.

The subject of our sketch attended the schools of his native village until the spring of 1872, when, with his parents and relatives, he came to this country, and with them made his home in Plattsmouth. He commenced life in the New World by working on a farm in Cass County, and after the first year spent twelve months in Lancaster County, where he was engaged as a clerk in the store of his uncle, J. V. Weckbeck. There he remained for nine years, after which he was in a hardware store for two years, and then engaged in mercantile pursuits in his own interest. In 1887 he formed a partnership with Robert Troop, and began his present business, which has succeeded far beyond their expectations.

On the 16th of September, 1876, our subject was united in wedlock with Miss Mary Halschuh. She was born in Plattsmouth to John and Mary E. Halschuh, in June, 1859. Her parents were natives of Hesse-Darmstadt, in the village of Erbuch, and came to this country in the year 1853. There have come to Mr. and Mrs. Egenberger five little ones, to whom they gave the names here appended: Eddie, Albert, Freddie, Annie and Mena.

The subject of our sketch is a thoroughly capable business man and a much respected citizen, understanding and appreciating the principles of government and the institutions of liberty of the country. He is a member of the Board of Trade, and holds a leading position among the business men of Plattsmouth. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and meets with Trio Lodge No. 81, and is also identified with the Liederkrantz.

THEODORE JOHN, a well-to-do general farmer and stock-raiser of Stove Creek Precinct, has a farm which in all its appointments ranks among the best in this locality, and is one of which the owner may well be proud. Eighty acres of his land, forming the original homestead, with its substantial house, barns and other buildings, are located on the northeast quarter of section 20, and the remaining 160 acres of his land are on the opposite side of the street on section 21, the farm comprising in all 240 acres of improved land. It has good fences of hedge and wire, beautiful groves planted by his own hands, three acres of orchard, containing 200 trees, and well supplied with water, Stove Creek running through it, and it is admirably adapted for a stock farm, to which purpose he devotes it largely, raising well-graded cattle, hogs and horses, having eight of the latter. Our subject is a veteran of the late Civil War, wherein he fought with valor for the country of his adoption, and has as fine a military record as any soldier, his experiences as an officer in the German Army, in the Fatherland, doubtless proving beneficial to him on Southern battle-fields.

Mr. John was born in Prussia, Aug. 16, 1831, to Benhart and Johanna (Huss) John, also natives of Germany. His father was a farmer of some means, and owned a farm of 240 acres in his native country, of which he was a lifelong resident, his death occurring there in 1842. His widow departed this life in 1860. To that estimable couple were born five children, as follows: Theodore, Oswald, Herman (deceased), Ollo and Augusta.

Their son Theodore, of whom we write, passed his boyhood in the place of his nativity, spending most of the time, as soon as old enough, in school, until he was fourteen years old. After his education was completed he went into a brewery, and there worked until he was eighteen, when he entered the German Army, serving in the cavalry as orderly under the King. He entered as a private, and served in that capacity three years, and was then promoted to be Sergeant, and was a commissioned officer the remainder of the twelve years that he was in the army. His life there finally proved too irksome, and longing for greater freedom, he retired from the service, and went back to his old employment in the brewery. In 1860 he set out for the United States, sailing from Hamburg in the steamer "Bavaria," and after a rapid passage of eight days landed at New York. He went from there to Albany, where he found work in a brewery. In 1861 he went to LaCrosse, and was for a time engaged in the same work. The same summer he went to Clinton County, Ill., and was employed on a farm there until the fall of 1861. At that time he enlisted in the 3d Missouri Cavalry, and after staying in camp three months under Gov. Stewart, was mustered out. In January he re-enlisted, and became a member of the 12th Illinois Cavalry, Company B, and was mustered in at Chicago, and in the spring of 1862 his regiment was sent to Virginia to join the Army of the Potomac. It took an active part in several skirmishes, and in the following battles: Culpeper, Shaftsbury (three days), battles of Gettysburg, Pamunkey, etc. In Richmond the Union soldiers burned the stores of the rebel army, and otherwise created great havoc inside the fortifications, the regiment in which our subject was engaged taking an active part in that siege. It was then ordered back to West Point, and thence to Chicago to recruit, it being but twenty-five strong after the hard fighting through which it had passed. Three months later it was ordered from that city to New Orleans, and after being transported to that city, was sent on the raid up the Red River. After that our subject and his fellow-soldiers were sent back to Memphis, and in the spring of 1865 he was honorably discharged in Springfield, Ill., after having served his adopted country three years and six months, in the front ranks of his regiment all the time, but was never wounded, and his vigorous constitution repelled all sickness.

After the close of the war Mr. John went to Clinton County, Iowa, and worked on a farm for six months, and then his system for the first time began to give way to the effects of his hardships on Southern battle-fields, and he was ill until the next spring (1866), when he sought the healthful climate of Nebraska to restore his physique to its wonted vigor, coming by steamer to Nebraska City. He there entered into business as a freighter, teaming goods or supplies with six yokes of bulls to Fts. Laramie and Smith, making four trips in the next two years. In the fall of 1867 he went back to Nebraska City, and in the spring of 1868 came to Cass County, having decided to try farming, and took up his present homestead of eighty acres on section 20. This part of the county was comparatively unsettled at that time, there being but two or three settlers ahead of him, and he had to start from the very beginning and evolve his farm from the wild, uncultivated prairie. We have seen how he has prospered since then, and has added to his original purchase in spite of the discouragement.

ments offered by grasshopper raids, in which that insect made way with his entire crops one or two seasons, and the destructive powers of high winds and drouths.

Mr. John was married in St. Louis, in March, 1868, to Miss Ro-a Fullemer, a native of Germany, and she has made his home pleasant and attractive to her family, and also to their many friends. The household circle is completed by the three children who have been born of their marriage—Minnie, Annie and Willie.

Our subject is possessed of sagacity, forethought and energy, so combined with those useful qualities of prudence, thrift and steadiness of purpose, that he cannot fail to accomplish what he attempts, and thus his success was assured from the start. He and his wife are among the leading members of the Catholic Church of Elmwood, and were active assistants in building it. In his political opinions Mr. John is strongly Republican.

JOHN JOHNSON, of English ancestry, and who is numbered among the well-to-do residents of Rock Bluff Precinct, is the subject of an interesting history. His parents, William and Jane (Talifairo) Johnson, were natives respectively of England and Virginia. The paternal grandfather, John Johnson, Sr., also of English birth and ancestry, spent his entire life upon the soil of his native country. His son William emigrated to the United States when a young man and settled in the Old Dominion, where he was married to Miss Talifairo.

The maternal grandfather of our subject met his death while serving as a soldier in the Revolutionary War under the immediate command of Gen. George Washington. It was while he was at home on a furlough that he was killed at a mill near his home by the Tories. William Johnson after his marriage, leaving the Old Dominion, migrated to Alabama, when his son John was a mere child, he having been born in Buckingham County, Va., Dec. 15, 1813. They located among the pioneers of Montgomery County, Ala., during its early settlement, where our subject lived until about 1840; then turning his steps westward, he crossed the Mississippi, and located in Montgomery County, Mo., where he engaged in farming, and was married six years later, Jan. 27, 1846, to Miss Jemima C. Thornhill. This lady was the daughter of Thomas L. and Lucy (Strange) Thornhill. Her paternal grandfather, William Strange, married Miss Sarah Lee, and both were natives of Virginia. The father of Mrs. Johnson was own cousin to Jefferson Davis, and her mother also was own cousin to the first wife (the daughter of ex-President Taylor) of the President of the Confederacy. To John and Jemima Johnson there was born a family of eighteen children, fifteen sons and three daughters. Of these five are living, namely: William T., Thomas R., Austin; Catherine S., now Mrs. J. M. Berger, a resident of Rock Bluff Township, and Andrew J.

Mr. Johnson left Missouri in January, 1865, coming to Nebraska Territory, and locating in Rock Bluff Precinct on the land, from which he made a good farm, and where he now lives. He is the proprietor of 400 broad acres, comprising the homestead, on sections 1 and 2, and has also 160 acres on section 16 and fifty acres of timber south of the city, besides ten acres of timber on the Island below Plattsmouth. The home farm is well improved, with good buildings, and the land is in a high state of cultivation, as is also the land on section 16.

Mr. Johnson, politically, has been a lifelong Democrat. During the war, and while a resident of Missouri, his horses, wagon, and a yoke of cattle were stolen by thieves, who sold the property. There was then an organized band of these marauders, who made it their business to drive away stock and carry off everything which they could secure, including meat, groceries, and everything that could be turned into money or that they could make use of in any way. One night after Mr. Johnson had slaughtered thirty hogs, the thieves came and stole all the backbones with the exception of five, and upon those they put poison. This was discovered by the fact that they left the cellar door open, and the cats who got in and ate of the meat died of the poison which was intended to kill the family. Mr. Johnson soon after left the country with his family, also leaving undisturbed the pois-

[The text in this block is extremely faint and illegible due to the quality of the scan. It appears to be a dense block of text, possibly a letter or a report, covering most of the page.]

Yours Very Truly
O. W. Ballou

oned meat in the cellar. Having been a resident of Alabama, he remained neutral, and subsequently he was compelled to leave Missouri for safety.

Andrew J. Johnson, the son of our subject, remains at home with his parents, their solace and support, and like his father before him, has developed into a capable and intelligent man, one who, on account of his sterling worth of character, occupies a good position in his community, is carrying on the farm in the able and judicious manner in which it was educted and has been built up, comprising one of the most valuable estates in the county.

OTIS H. BALLOU, a distinguished citizen of Plattsburgh, and one of the most brilliant and successful lawyers of the Nebraska bar, is a man of rare discernment and culture, and since taking up his residence in this city has exerted a beneficial influence in promoting its prosperity and development. He is closely identified with the business interests of Cass County, and is manager of the Plattsburgh street railway, which he was instrumental in organizing.

Mr. Ballou was born in Greenfield, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Oct. 25, 1842. His father, Moses Ballou, was born on the same farm, of sturdy New England parentage. Otis Ballou, grandfather of our subject, was born at Smithfield, R. I., and there grew to manhood and married at the youthful age of nineteen years. After marriage he started with his young wife with an ox-team for the wilds of New York, and became a pioneer of Greenfield, Saratoga County. He bought a tract of timber land, erected thereon a substantial frame house, and at once set about clearing a farm. Schenectady, twenty-five miles distant, was the nearest market for some years, the way to it lying over a rough road, through the woods much of the distance. He and his wife spent the remainder of their married lives there, dying on the homestead which they had there erected.

The father of our subject was reared and married in that pioneer home, and he became a prominent paper manufacturer, owning and managing two mills in the town of Jamesville, N. Y. He subsequently disposed of his property in that town, and moving to Union Village, Washington County, built a paper-mill, which he operated with signal success until 1865. In that year he sold out his business, and in 1870 left his native State to take up his residence in Omaha. He lived there one year, and then came to Valley Station, and buying a tract of land of the Platte Valley Company, engaged in farming and stock-raising until his death, Feb. 16, 1882. The maiden name of his wife was Fanny Peacock, and she was also a native of Greenfield. Her father, Henry Peacock, was likewise born in that town, of which his parents were early pioneers. There were but two children in the family of the parents of our subject, himself and his brother Everett G., a real-estate dealer in Omaha.

Otis Ballou received his early education in the district schools, and subsequently took a good course of study in the academy at Jonesville, N. Y. After leaving school he taught one term in Saratoga County. When he was twenty-one years of age he began his career as a man of business by opening a wholesale paper store in Philadelphia. In that venture he was entirely successful during the three years that he carried it on. On account of impaired health he was obliged to dispose of his business, and received a $2,000 bonus for it. He then turned his attention to the more healthful employment of raising fruit, going to Burlington, N. J., where he bought a fruit farm, which he operated until 1871, when he came to Omaha. During his residence in New Jersey he had studied law with the firm of Earl & White, and after removing to Omaha he continued to prosecute his studies. He was admitted to the bar in 1873, and the following year opened an office in Omaha, and in the years that followed built up a good practice. In 1881 he became interested in the lumber business, but was not successful in that undertaking, losing the capital that he had invested during the year that he carried it on. After that he and his brother formed a partnership to conduct the real-estate business. The time and place for their embarkation in that business proved very propitious, as it was in season to take advantage of the great "boom" that soon struck that city and caused a rapid rise in the value of property, and stimulated business to an unprecedented extent. The brothers made money very fast by their shrewd investments, and were soon counted among the wealthy citizens of Omaha. In 1884 Mr. Ballou resumed the practice of law in connection with his other business, and continued practicing and selling real estate until 1887, when he came to Plattsmouth. Here he bought 1,200 acres of land, a part of which was included in the corporation of the city, and the remainder joining it. Subsequently he laid out two additions to the city from a part of the investment, which already have been considerably improved. He at once commenced the erection of his present home, which was completed in the summer of 1888. This is the finest residence in Cass County and probably the finest country seat in the State. It is of a strikingly beautiful style of architecture, and the rare taste displayed in its ornamentation and furnishings, together with its surroundings, makes it a lovely dwelling-place.

Mr. Ballou was married, March 25, 1868, to Miss Isabel Glasgow, a native of Philadelphia. Her parents, William and Mary Glasgow, both natives of Pennsylvania, were of Scotch ancestry. Mr. and Mrs. Ballou have two children living, Robert and Isabel. William, their first-born, died at the age of two and one-half years. Fanny and Arthur were twins; the former died at the age of four years, and the latter died in infancy.

Mr. Ballou has always been a staunch Republican, and a leader and counselor in the party. He has been a delegate to State and County Conventions many times, and in 1887 was one of the candidates of his party for the position of District Judge for the Third Judicial District of Nebraska. There was, however, a non-partisan ticket put into the field by the Democratic party, and an exciting contest followed, which resulted in the defeat of the entire Republican ticket. The contest brought forth the following tribute to our subject from Judge Cobb of the Supreme Bench, which we copy verbatim, as it expresses so well his character and ability, and is an echo of the estimate in which he is held by those familiar with him: Omaha Republican, Nov. 5, 1887—Query: "Judge Cobb, what is your opinion of the qualifications of Mr. Ballou for the position of District Judge?" Judge Cobb: "My personal opinion is this: Mr. Ballou stands very nearly at the top of the profession in this State, and I think if he were elected to the position of District Judge in Omaha, he would by his conduct and knowledge of the law meet the approbation of the bar as well as the citizens at large. I have heard him in many cases before the Supreme Court, and he invariably handled them with a very high degree of judgment, and evinced in the plainest manner close research and careful study in their preparation. His work was never faulty nor neglected, and always compared favorably with the best efforts of the attorneys of the State. Mr. Ballou is an active Republican; he has been actively identified with the party's interest, and is as enthusiastic in the success of those principles he so earnestly espouses. I think that the material for Judges can be selected from no more trustworthy source than from the Republican party. I have been a party man all my life, and sincerely believe in it. The fact that a man has been an active Republican during his life is no good or valid reason why he cannot do justice upon the bench to his most implacable enemy. To characterize Mr. Ballou as unqualified is unjust and unfair; he is perfectly capable and would make a good and fair Judge."

It gives us pleasure to print on another page the portrait of Mr. Ballou, than whom no other citizen of Cass County more deserves the honor.

ABRAM M. ROCKWELL, one of the prominent farmers of Centre Precinct, owning a fine farm of 160 acres on section 26, township 11, range 11 north, of the city of Weeping Water, is also one of Nebraska's pioneers. He was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1849, coming of good stock and a family that had long been residents of the State. Jonah Rockwell, his grandfather, was a native and lifelong resident of New York.

Seth B. Rockwell, the father of our subject, was also born in Saratoga County, Feb. 14, 1808, being the date of his birth in that beautiful locality. He married Miss Elizabeth Tabor, and to them came five children, all of whom grew to maturity, and four of them are living in this precinct. Mr. Rockwell continued to reside in his native State until 1854, when he moved with his family to Illinois. In the fall of the year of 1868 he came still further West, and passed the remainder of his days in the home of our subject, dying here in 1883. His wife had preceded him in death two or three years before. They were people of sober, blameless lives, who were justly held in respect and esteem.

Our subject was a child of five years when his parents took him to their new home in Illinois, and he grew to a stalwart manhood, his parents carefully training him in habits of industry, and instilling into his mind principles of honesty and virtue. He completed his education in that State, and in 1868 came with his parents to Dodge County, and took up land, but continued to make his home with his father and mother until his marriage, and then they lived with him. They staid in Dodge County nine years, and in 1877 came to the place where our subject now lives. This they bought when it was wild prairie land, and have put on it every improvement of which it can boast, and they are many and valuable. Our subject has a good orchard, comprising three acres of choice fruit trees, besides small fruits. A good house was erected and substantial out-buildings the first year of possession. The farm is well stocked, and is cultivated to a high degree, rendering it very productive, and our subject raises a large quantity of grain.

Our subject has a pleasant home, his wife being a good housewife, who knows well how to make everything comfortable and cozy. Mr. and Mrs. Rockwell were united in marriage Sept. 11, 1881, and three children, Walter Calvin, William O., and Abram M., deceased, have blessed their wedded life. Mrs. Rockwell was formerly Miss Mary Maple, of Centre Precinct, where she had lived for some years prior to her marriage. She was born Feb. 22, 1862, in Iowa, and is a daughter of William and Martha A. (Jenkins) Maple. They were natives of Ohio, who became pioneers of Iowa, and subsequently of Nebraska. Mrs. Rockwell lived with her parents until her marriage, and they are now living in Elmwood Precinct, where her father is engaged in farming.

Mr. Rockwell is worthy of respect and esteem, inasmuch as his conduct in life is guided by principles of right and true piety, and by all his townspeople he is spoken of as a man of ability and integrity of purpose. His busy life gives him no time to mingle in public life or to attend to politics, but on election days he is always found at the polls, supporting the ticket of the good old Democratic party by voice and vote. He is an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and does what he can to extend its influence.

EDWARD WILLIAMS, one of the prominent and leading farmers of Tipton Precinct, settled on his present homestead in 1869, where he arrived after a tedious and wearisome journey overland with teams, and settled down to the improvement of his eighty acres of raw land. He built a sod house in which they lived nine months. In the spring of 1870 he built a small frame house, hauling the lumber from Plattsmouth; he broke some prairie land and raised a few potatoes the first year, one of which weighed a pound. He set out trees from time to time until he now has a grove of eight or ten acres and a small orchard. He began raising strawberries for market, but has now quit, it not proving sufficiently remunerative. The entire farm is divided into 15-acre lots by cross fences of wire; the entire tract is well watered by a branch of Camp Creek, and is in all respects a well-located and admirably conducted homestead.

In 1884 the present beautiful residence was built, 14x26 feet, two stories high, with a wing 14x16 feet, with porch and cellar, and is surrounded by a neat picket fence, new barn, and other convenient out-buildings. His attention is devoted to gardening, general farming, Short-horn, graded Jersey and Angus cattle, and thoroughbred Poland-China hogs. The cattle and hogs show the care that has been given them by their owner, and most certainly do him full credit.

Mr. Williams was born near New Diggings, LaFayette Co., Wis., Oct. 12, 1845, and was one of a family of six children: Melvina, Mary and William are older, and Lucy and Emma are younger than our subject. The sister Melvina and brother William are dead. The father died when our subject was a child. After his death our subject went to live with Mr. W. Thompson, where he remained several years. When he began to work out by the month all his wages went to help support his mother and her family. He continued working until eighteen years of age, when, Dec. 29, 1863, he enlisted in the 46th Illinois Infantry, Company D, and was mustered into service at Camp Butler, under Capt. Miller, Col. Jones Regimental Commander. He participated in the skirmish at Benton, Miss., May 13, 1864, and the engagement at Jackson, Miss., July 6 and 7; in the skirmish at Spanish Fort, Ala., March 28, 1865; in the charge on and capture of Ft. Blakeslee, April 9; at Mobile, April 12, and many other minor engagements and skirmishes. He was mustered out and honorably discharged from the service at Baton Rouge, La., June 20, 1866, when he returned North and rented various farms until 1869, when we find him located at his present homestead in Tipton Precinct.

The subject of this sketch and Miss Caroline E. Krieger were married at Cadiz, Green Co., Wis., Jan. 3, 1869. This lady is the daughter of Albert and Mary Magdalene (Humell) Krieger. Jesse Williams, the father of our subject, was a miner, and was engaged in mining at Galena, Ill., where he continued working up to a year or two before his death, when he removed to McConnell's Grove, near Freeport, on the Pecatonica River, where his decease occurred when he was forty years of age.

Our subject's mother was married the second time, to Mr. David D. Young. Mr. Young served in the 46th Illinois Infantry during the late Civil War, from which he was honorably discharged at the expiration of his three years' term of service, this being the same regiment of which our subject was a member. The mother died in 1871, aged fifty-seven years. The father of the wife of our subject came to America when he was seventeen years old, settling in Pennsylvania. He was a blacksmith, and continued his trade in Philadelphia after his marriage. He was a fine musician, highly educated in the art, and was unusually expert in handling the violin, and was a member of one of the leading bands of Germany. In 1859 he removed with his family to Milwaukee, Wis., where he farmed for two years. In 1861 he removed to Stephenson County, Ill., where he bought and improved fifty acres of land. He lived on this farm for seven years, when he removed to Nebraska, where he bought a tract of land, which he held only three months when he sold it, and went back to McConnell's Grove, Ill., where he rented land and lived until 1880, when he died, aged fifty-seven years.

The lady's mother is living with one of her daughters in Freeport, Ill., and is now seventy-two years old. She has been married three times; four children were born to her as the result of the first marriage, they being Arnold, Ellis, Sarah and Mary. Arnold and Ellis were in the late Civil War; Arnold died of the typhoid fever at Winchester, Va.; Ellis was wounded but recovered, and is now living in Pennsylvania. Two children, twins, were born as the result of the second marriage, Moses and Aaron Heise. They were both in the army. Moses died four weeks after he enlisted, from the black measles; Aaron served to the close of the war, and was honorably discharged. The wife of our subject, Caroline, was born in Clearfield County, Pa., Dec. 19, 1855. When she was four years old the family removed to Wisconsin, and from there to Illinois when she was six years old, where they lived until she was married to our subject. She was the eldest of three children of her mother's third and last marriage, her sister Sophia J. and brother Joseph being younger.

During the period in which our subject was in the army he lost his health by exposure and the vicissitudes of war, and returned home with his constitution broken and health shattered, so much so that at this time he finds himself the large portion of the time unable to look after the operations of the farm. At such times the work is not neglected, for in the person of his estimable wife he finds a good manager and a veritable helpmate. When he is unable to work she takes the burden from his shoulders, and if need be will go out into the field and help assist in stacking the grain, breaking ground, and participating in any other necessary labor to make their farm a success, and it is only due to her to say that the competency and comfort which they now enjoy are largely due to her ability and willingness to assume the management of the place when needed. During her leisure hours she has acquired great skill in making wax flowers and other wax-work, and she has lovely specimens in her parlor, which is the most costly furnished room in the precinct, many of the articles contained there being the direct result of her exquisite taste and skill.

Two children have been born to this couple, William J. and James A.; both died with the dread disease diphtheria. Both husband and wife are conscientious members of the United Brethren Church. Mr. Williams is a straight Republican in politics.

TYSON. The subject of this personal narrative was an early settler of Stove Creek Precinct, and has contributed his full quota toward its development and progress. He is a native of Canada, born in Ontario, April 27, 1821. His father, John Tyson, was born in Germany, near Hamburg, where he grew to man's estate. He learned the cooper's trade there, and was also a sailor, having charge of a private vessel for several years. He subsequently emigrated to America and settled in Canada, where he married Malinda Waldron, a native of Chittenden County, Vt. He afterward moved to Prescott, on the St. Lawrence River, but after sojourning there a few years he moved across the river into New York State. Six years later he moved to Genesee County, where he worked at coopering until 1842. Mr. Tyson then moved with his family to Hancock County, Ill., where he engaged at his trade. Another removal found him in St. Louis, where he remained but a short time before returning to Illinois, when he settled in DeKalb County, and continued his former occupation. Besides working at his trade Mr. Tyson was a local preacher in the Universalist denomination for some years, and preached occasionally until his death, which occurred in DeKalb County in 1862, at the venerable age of ninety years. His wife survived him, dying in 1873, at eighty-six years of age. They had a family of six children, as follows: William H., a soldier of the Mexican War, who, after being discharged from the army, returned as far as St. Louis, and there fell a victim of cholera; Abiathar; Sarah, deceased; Harriet, of Columbus, Neb.; Silas and Louisa, deceased. Abiathar Waldron, the maternal grandfather of our subject, at the time of the Revolution, being too young to enlist, went into the army as a servant, but was mustered into the ranks. After the war he went to Vermont, and in 1798 married a daughter of Mr. Evarts, and settled on a farm in Williston. He subsequently sold his land there and moved to Quebec, Canada, becoming one of the pioneer farmers of that section of the country. When the Canadian Rebellion broke out in 1838, he sold his Canadian possessions, and moved to St. Lawrence County, N. Y. In 1840 he bought a farm there, on which he lived until his death in April, 1841. Mrs. Waldron survived her husband, dying in 1846.

Abiathar Tyson, of this sketch, can remember moving with his parents from Canada to the States, first locating in St. Lawrence County, and then in Erie County, N. Y.; when twenty-one years of age he moved to Illinois and followed the cooper's trade, and also worked at carpentering somewhat. He afterward removed to DeKalb County, Ill., in 1848, but the cholera breaking out soon after, he took a trip back to New York, and remained there a year. Our subject then returned to DeKalb County, Ill., and worked at coopering there until his marriage, June 22, 1857, to Miss Ellen W. Boughen, daughter of James and Maria (Worf) Boughen. Her maternal grandfather, William Worf, was a farmer in England, and her paternal grandfather, James Boughen, was a huckster in the same country. James Boughen, Jr., the father of Mrs. Tyson, was born in England, and there spent his entire life. When young he worked out as a gentleman's servant, but after marriage engaged in milling until his accidental death by scalding in 1849, while at work in a brewery. His widow afterward emigrated to the United States, and located first in New York State, then moved to Illinois, but is at the present time living in Clay County, Kan., at the advanced age of seventy-one. She is the mother of four children, namely: Ellen, Charles (deceased), and Ambrose and John, of Clay County, Kan. Ambrose enlisted in an Illinois regiment in 1864, and served until the close of the war. Ellen, the wife of our subject, was born in Walton, Norfolk County, England, Dec. 23, 1838, and came to America with her mother when fifteen years old. She sailed from Liverpool on the sailing-vessel "Van Gerard," and after a voyage of seven weeks disembarked in New York City. She remained with her mother until her marriage with our subject, in Belvidere, Boone Co., Ill.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Tyson remained in Illinois until the fall of 1865, when they came with two teams to Nebraska, crossing the Mississippi River at Ft. Madison, Iowa, and the Missouri River at Nebraska City. Five weeks after leaving home they reached Nemaha County, thence came to Cass County, and took up a homestead claim of 160 acres in Stove Creek Precinct, section 10, township 10, range 10. It was raw prairie land, and our subject broke it with oxen. He raised a small crop the first year, and hauled the lumber to build his house, having to ford a stream with it. He continued improving his land, set out trees and orchards, but the grasshopper raid came soon after, and for four successive years Mr. Tyson lost his crops. He had a hard struggle then, having to subsist one year on buckwheat and had to mortgage his farm to live. A few years of good harvests after that enabled him to retrieve his losses, and soon placed him in an independent position. He has since then built a fine house, a large barn, and other buildings on his farm, and bought forty acres of land in Elmwood, on which he has erected a commodious dwelling, where he now lives and carries on farming on a small scale, having given up the management of his homestead farm to one of his sons.

To our subject and his wife the following family has been born: Lester R. is a mailagent from Council Bluffs to Ogden; William Henry, deceased; Horace manages the homestead farm; Louis A. is a farmer in Stove Creek Precinct; Florilla is the wife of J. Breedon, a farmer of Dundee County, Neb., and they have one child; Arvilla, at home; Moroni is at school at Council Bluffs; Delbert is at home; Hattie, deceased; Ellen M., at home; Edith and an infant both deceased.

Mr. Tyson, politically, votes the straight Republican ticket, and has served as Constable four years and on the School Board several terms. Religiously, he and his estimable wife worship with the Latter-Day Saints, who hold their meetings in the district school-house. They are both kind, hospitable people, who, by their genial, pleasant ways have endeared themselves to their entire neighborhood. Mr. Tyson has amassed a comfortable property, but is still expecting more, a dowry settlement of an estate that was given to some of his ancestors by Col. Dondow in 1666. They emigrated from England to New York, and were granted a tract of land on the Harlem River by the common syndicate that controlled it, and the heirs are now trying to prove their claims.

—•••••

WILLIAM WESTLAKE. By a happy dispensation of Providence men are led into a thousand channels, some delighting in the pursuit of agriculture, others inclining to a professional life, while others are born with mechanical genius, and so on we might enumerate a long category. All these worked out properly are important in completing the sum of human acquirements and happiness. The subject of this sketch, a success in his line, is not only a skillful farmer, but a stock-raiser of no little importance in Southern Nebraska. In carrying on his operations he utilizes a fine tract of land in Avoca Precinct, pleasantly located on sections 18 and 19, and 400 acres in extent.

As an especial lover of the equine race Mr. Westlake has in his stables and fields some of the finest specimens of horseflesh to be found in Cass County. At the head is "Bonnie Boy," an animal registered No. 2,965, sired in France in 1882, and imported by Mr. Perry, of River View, Ill. He was purchased by Mr. Westlake in February, 1883, and weighs about 2,000 pounds. In color he is that of almost indescribable brown, which is universally admired. The next two animals most valuable in the estimation of their owner were purchased by him of William L. Elwood, of DeKalb County, Ill., in 1887. They are named respectively "Soubise" and "Houri," the former No. 5,795 (5280), and the latter No. 5,878 (8224). Soubise was foaled in France in 1884. He is a dark gray stallion of magnificent proportions, and was imported a few months prior to his purchase by Mr. Westlake. He weighs 1,900 pounds, and is of proportionate value. "Hourii" is a fine black horse, foaled also in France, in 1885, imported the year following, and purchased by our subject in 1887. He weighs 1,800 pounds, and is much admired.

Mr. Westlake has obtained a fine reputation as a breeder throughout Nebraska and the States adjoining. He has exhibited at both the State and local fairs, and frequently carries off the blue ribbons. His experience in this business is quite extended, he having given to it much attention since coming to the young State of Nebraska in the June of 1867. He at that time settled in Avoca Precinct, of which he has since been a resident, and is the owner of one of the finest farms within its limits. His land is all improved and embellished with a handsome and substantial set of frame buildings. The village of Avoca is two miles distant, and forms his post-office and the nearest station of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, four miles from Weeping Water.

The Westlake farm, when purchased by its present proprietor, was a tract of raw prairie, of which he first secured only eighty acres. He is now a land-owner to the extent of 400 acres, which comprises an exceedingly valuable property, and upon which he has expended years of labor and thousands of dollars. Adjacent to the buildings is a spring of never-failing water, which can only be appreciated at its full value by those who have suffered the inconvenience of drouth in a somewhat capricious climate. In addition to the breeding of horses Mr. Westlake has also a herd of fine cattle and swine.

A native of Devonshire, England, Mr. Westlake was born Oct. 30, 1836, and came with his parents to America when a little lad ten years of age. They settled in Canada, where he was reared to man's estate with a limited education. He was married in the Dominion, Nov. 11, 1858, to Miss Ann Graham, who was born in Simcoe County, Canada, about 1838. Her parents were natives of Ireland. Her father died when she was a little child one year old, and the mother died Jan. 1, 1881. Like her husband her school days were brief in duration, and she early became acquainted with the cares and responsibilities of life. These experiences, however, usually result in a self-reliant and independent disposition, and are in many cases of more value than college learning.

To Mr. and Mrs. Westlake there were born six children, of whom the record is as follows: The eldest son, William H., married Miss Mary E. McKay, and they are living on a farm in Avoca Precinct; John and Samuel are at home with their parents; Hannah is the wife of George Hebner, and they are also residents of Avoca Precinct; George and Frederick continue under the home roof. Mr. W., politically, is independent, aiming to support the men whom he considers best qualified for office, and carefully refrains from taking upon himself the cares and responsibilities incident to a public position. The stock-raising interests of Cass County, and in fact Southern Nebraska, have found in him one of their most useful and efficient factors.

JOSHUA W. BULLIS occupies a prominent position in the farming community of Weeping Water Precinct, where he is quite extensively engaged in raising grain and stock. His farm, embracing the northwest quarter and forty acres of the southwest quarter of section 9, contains 200 acres of as fertile and productive land as is to be found under the sunny skies of Nebraska.

Our subject was born in Canada, Nov. 20, 1853, received his education in the excellent schools of his native town, and lived there until he was twenty years of age. His father, Joshua Bullis, is likewise a Canadian by birth, and he is still living there at an advanced age, he having been born in 1809. He has always lived on the same farm, although he has now practically retired from work, having won a comfortable competence by hard labor in earlier life, so that he can now pass his declining years in ease. He has been a prominent man in his day, having served in public capacities, and he is still an influential member of the Methodist Episcopal Church with his family. He married Mary Andrews, of Leeds, England, who crossed the waters to Canada when a young lady, with her mother. She died in 1860, when our subject was seven years old. Her father, Capt. William Andrews, was a soldier and officer in the English service most of his life. At the age mentioned Joshua Bullis left his father's home, and crossing the border to the "States," made his way to Wisconsin, where he began life as a clerk in a store in Menasha. Seven years later he came to Nebraska, in June, 1879. He first located in Elmwood Precinct, and was there engaged in farming for several years. At one time he owned an improved farm on section 10, which he afterward disposed of, and bought another on section 13, which was also well improved. He subsequently disposed of that also, at an advance on the original cost, and coming to Weeping Water, was actively engaged in the mercantile business for two years. He was very successful in that venture, but thought that a stirring, out-of-door life would agree with his health better, and would also suit his tastes. Therefore he bought his present farm in 1885. In the three short years that have elapsed since that time, by his energetic and well-directed toil he has brought about a great change, converting the tract of wild prairie land into a well-cultivated farm, replete with all the improvements of a model farm. He has it all neatly fenced and under good tillage, and has erected a substantial dwelling and other necessary buildings. In this, the third year of his occupancy, he has raised 4,000 bushels of corn, 700 bushels of oats, 500 bushels of barley, 200 bushels of wheat, besides potatoes and other vegetables, and he has put up ten tons of hay and a like amount of millet. He raises fine stock, and has twenty head of cattle on his place all of the time.

Mr. Bullis and Miss Mary I. Chapman, of Menasha, Wis., united their fortunes Oct. 9, 1878, and together they have built up one of the coziest homes in all Weeping Water Precinct. Mrs. Bullis was born in Sheboygan, Wis., a daughter of John Chapman, a woolen manufacturer of Menasha. He died in January, 1885. His widow, a woman of great business tact and ability, is still living, and manages the mill at Watertown, Wis.

Our subject is a man of more than ordinary ability, and although still young, has, by his own exertions, gained a competency. His fellow-citizens have confidence in him, and would gladly entrust some responsible office to his care, but he is too busy with his own private affairs to mingle in public life, and has refused to be nominated to any position. He is a Republican in his political views, and his party has no more staunch supporter in this precinct.

EMIL SCHRIDER. The neat homestead occupying 160 acres on sections 4 and 5, Avoca Precinct, is owned and operated by the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this sketch, and who is still in the enjoyment of single blessedness. With the exception of this he has performed his duties creditably as a member of the community, and it is supposed that in the thorough and skillful cultivation of his land he has found himself too busy to take upon himself the further responsibilities of a family.

In the Duchy of Sleswick-Holstein, which has furnished so many of the best citizens of America, was located the boyhood home of our subject, and where his birth took place July 16, 1846. He was there reared and educated, and for a period of eleven months during his early manhood belonged to the standing army of Denmark. He lived in his native country until twenty-four years of age, then, not satisfied with his surroundings or his prospects, started for America, taking passage on the ship "Sembrio," and landing ten days later in the city of New York. His destination was the Far West, and he accordingly proceeded straight toward the Mississippi, landing in this county, and settling at once in Avoca Precinct. He purchased 160 acres of land on sections 4 and 5, which constitutes his home farm, while he has 160 acres on section 8, in Weeping Water Precinct. He has always made it a rule to live within his income, and avoid placing an incumbrance upon his property. His land is mostly under a state of cultivation, and each year is adding something to its value. Upon becoming a naturalized citizen he identified himself with the Republican party, and is a man of prominence in his precinct, holding many of the local offices, and generally respected in his community.

The parents of our subject were Claus and Anna (Johanson) Schrider; the father lives in his native

Yours Truly
Jno. Black M.D.

Germany, and the mother died in 1887. They were honest and industrious people, and the father was employed as a mechanic mostly in connection with an iron manufactory. The parental household included six children, five of whom are living, three in this country, and two in Germany.

JOHAN BLACK, M. D., is among the foremost men of enterprise and ability who have been instrumental in raising Plattsburgh from a small town to its present condition as a wealthy and important metropolis, with great commercial interests, and the center of a rich agricultural region. His influence has indeed extended far beyond the limits of this municipality, as he, with other men of high standing, has given the financial interests of Cass County a great impetus, he having been instrumental in the establishment of no less than three banks within its borders.

The Doctor was born in Northumberland County, England, Nov. 14, 1821, and is a son of William and Cicely (Lilley) Black, both natives of that county. The father of our subject was reared and married in the home of his birth, and having been reared to the life of a farmer, followed that pursuit there for some years. In 1838 he came to America, accompanied by his wife and seven children. They landed in New York after an exceedingly long voyage of sixty-seven days, and Ohio being their destination, they proceeded on their journey by the modes of travel common in those days, almost before the era of railways, and at length found themselves in the wilds of Knox County, in the Buckeye State. They lived there until 1852, when Mr. Black and his family, once again taking up the westward route, traveling with teams, taking a part of their household goods, cooking and camping by the wayside wherever night overtook them, at length arrived in DeKalb County, Mo. Several families were with them, and the six weeks consumed in traveling passed away very pleasantly. Mr. Black bought a tract of wild land one-half mile from the village of Maysville, and there improved an excellent farm, which he made his home until his death, in January, 1862. His wife survived him some years, dying at the home of her son in Maysville, in 1873. They were the parents of seven children, all born in England, as follows: Isabelle, John, Robert, Elizabeth, Alexander, William and Margaret, and all of whom came to the United States.

Our subject was reared in his native county until he was sixteen. He attended the parish school and assisted on his father's farm, and at the age mentioned accompanied his parents to this country, and has since known no other home. He was ambitious to improve his education, and commenced attendance at the district schools of Knox County, Ohio. He advanced rapidly in his studies, and subsequently pursued a good course at Fredericktown Academy, in the same county. He entered upon the study of medicine in that town at the age of twenty-two years, and afterward became a student at Cleveland, attending lectures at the Cleveland Medical College, from which he was graduated with honor in the spring of 1847, being finely prepared for his profession. He opened an office in Claridon, Ohio, and in the few years that he remained there secured an excellent practice. During his residence there he was united in marriage with Miss Martha Wiley, June 29, 1848, being the date of their wedding. She was born in Knox County, Ohio, Dec. 13, 1825. Hugh Wiley, her father, was born in Pennsylvania, and his father, John Wiley, who was a farmer, spent his last years in Franklin County, that State. Mrs. Black's father was reared and married in Pennsylvania, and Elizabeth Morrow, who was born and reared in Chambersburg, Pa., and was a daughter of Wilson Morrow, became his wife. They moved to Ohio about 1824, the removal across the mountains being made with teams. They located in Knox County, and were pioneers there. He bought a tract of timber land, on which was a log cabin, in which the family found shelter for a few months, and then Mr. Wiley replaced it by a more commodious hewed log house, the same in which Mrs. Black was born. The surrounding country was in a very wild condition, deer, bears and wolves being plentiful for some years after the family first settled there. The nearest markets for grain were the lake ports, seventy miles distant. Mrs. Black's mother, having no stove, did her cooking by the fireplace for some years. She was an expert both in spinning and weaving wool and flax, and her skillful hands supplied her husband and children with clothing. Mrs. Black's father cleared a farm, on which he resided until shortly before his death, when he sold it, and purchasing another place near by, made his home on it until his death, in 1855.

In 1854 Dr. Black moved to Missouri with his family, going via rail to Rock Island, Ill., then the western terminus of the railway, thence down the Mississippi to Burlington, where they took the stage to Mt. Pleasant, the end of the stage route; there the Doctor hired a hack to take them to Centreville, and from there they proceeded to the end of their journey in a two-horse wagon. Our subject established himself in Maysville, Mo., and practiced medicine there until 1863. In that year he came to Nebraska and opened an office in Plattsmouth, where he was actively engaged in his profession for some years. He soon became identified with the financial interests of the city and county, and was active in obtaining the establishment of the Bank of Cass County, of which institution he was President until he sold out his share of stock. He then assisted in founding the Citizens' Bank, and was its President for three years. To his influence, also, does the Commercial Bank at Weeping Water owe its existence. One of the enterprises of our subject was the erection of a fine large block in this city, known as the Union Block. He has abandoned the practice of his profession, having won a good reputation for skill and learning, and is now living in retirement in the enjoyment of an ample income, for he has acquired an extensive property by judicious investment. He and his family occupy a prominent position in the society of this community, and are held in highest estimation by a large circle of friends, who often share with them the hospitalities of a refined and cultured home. Dr. and Mrs. Black have six children, namely: Erasmus W., Junius N.; Josephine A., wife of P. E. Rufner, of Plattsmouth; Oella D., wife of E. A. Kirkpatrick, of Cass County; Robert W. and Martha Celestia, who lives at home with her parents. Mrs. Black, a lady who is admired and esteemed for her many amiable qualities, is a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church, and quietly lends her influence to promote its good works. Politically, Dr. Black has always been identified with the Democratic party.

We present herewith the portrait of this well-known, wide-awake and enterprising citizen of Plattsmouth, one who has done much to raise the city from its former condition as a small village, and to whom she owes in no small degree her present prosperity.

HARRY C. RITCHIE has been identified with the commercial interests of Plattsmouth since 1884, buying a home here and establishing himself in his present business as a member of the firm of J. W. Jennings & Co. He has since formed a partnership with L. E. Skinner, and they make abstract business a specialty, although they do an extensive real-estate, loan and insurance business besides.

Mr. Ritchie was born in Madison, Jefferson Co., Ind., Oct. 30, 1849. His father, John Ritchie, was a native of the same county, while his grandfather, Silas Ritchie, is supposed to have been a native of Virginia. The paternal great-grandfather of our subject was born in the North of Ireland, and coming to America, landed in Virginia, and there made his home the rest of his days, being actively engaged as a farmer. The grandfather of our subject was reared and married in his Virginian home, and moved from there about 1820 to Indiana, becoming an early settler of that State. He bought a tract of timber land, a part of which is now included in the town of Madison, and was a resident there until his death.

The father of our subject was reared to manhood in his native State, and was there married to Melvina Kyle. Three children were born of their marriage—Harry C., Genevieve and Lucy M. Mr. Ritchie engaged in the mercantile business with his father for a time, and later engaged in the manufacture of brick, and also superintended a large pork packing house in Indiana. He is still a resident of his native State, but has retired from business, having accumulated considerable property.

Harry Ritchie was reared and educated in Madison, and at the age of eighteen entered the mercantile world as a clerk in a dry-goods store, remaining in the same establishment three years. He desired, however, to try life beyond the Mississippi, and went to St. Joseph, Mo., where he secured a lucrative position as clerk in a wholesale dry-goods house. He remained with that firm until 1875, when he went to Hamburg, Iowa, to establish himself in business as proprietor of a general store. He managed his interests there very well for some years, but in 1879 he closed out his business and returned to St. Joseph, where he again entered the employ of a wholesale house, and, as a drummer, traveled over Kansas and Nebraska. He won golden opinions from his employers, as he made large and profitable sales, his geniality, frankness, and ready conversational powers, making him popular with all with whom he had dealings. In 1884 he came to Plattsmouth and bought a home, wishing to settle down quietly in a pleasant locality with his family. As before mentioned, he became a member of the firm of J. W. Jennings & Co. He became associated with his present partner in 1886, and they are conducting a good business.

Mr. Ritchie was married, July 17, 1879, to Miss Josephine M. Fegan. She was born in Fairfield, Iowa, a daughter of James and Mary Fegan, natives of Pennsylvania. Two children, Jennie M. and Mary L., complete the household circle.

Although Mr. Ritchie has been a resident of this city but a few years, he shows the interest of an old settler in its development, and encourages the various schemes for its improvement. He and his estimable wife have attained social prominence in this community, where they are cordially liked by all who have had the pleasure of meeting them. Mr. Ritchie is an ardent Republican in his political views.

CAPT. J. M. CREMER, an old veteran of the Union Army during the Civil War, has for years been recognized as one of the most prominent and public-spirited citizens of Tipton Precinct. He was shot six times while in the service of his country, the first and second grazing his scalp, the third entering his neck, and the fourth, a ball, struck him in the left breast, and went clear through his body nine inches; the fifth struck his left forearm, mutilating it, and breaking the bone so that it was useless. The sixth shot struck him in the left breast bone, and three-fourth inches below the fourth wound, and lodged within his ribs, where it at present lies, although it keeps changing about, and at times gives the Captain much pain.

Capt. Cremer is the offspring of a substantial old family, and the son of David Cremer, who was born in Somerset County, Pa., in 1798. The latter married Miss Elizabeth Stull, also a native of Somerset County, and born the same year as her husband. The paternal grandfather, Adam Cremer, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., and served through the Revolutionary War as a non-commissioned officer. Afterward he established a blacksmith-shop in connection with a farm in his native county, and was quite prominent in public affairs, officiating as Justice of the Peace, and occupying other local offices. He lived to the advanced age of eighty-six years. The great-grandfather, Adam Cremer, Sr., was a native of Germany, and upon emigrating to America settled in Virginia, where he carried on farming. Upon the outbreak of the Revolutionary War he shouldered his musket and rushed to the defense of the Colonists. He spent his last years in Virginia.

On the mother's side John Stull, the grandfather of our subject, also a native of Pennsylvania, took part in the War of 1812. He had in the meantime, in 1800, emigrated to Ohio, and in the Buckeye State spent the closing years of his life. He was a son of one of the earliest settlers of Pennsylvania, who was of German descent. He married a lady of Swedish ancestry, who was the daughter of a Capt. Allbright, and she lived to be one hundred and thirteen years old.

The father of our subject was reared in his native State, and in his young manhood was a member of the Pennsylvania Home Guards. He was there married, and in 1833 emigrated to Tuscarawas County, Ohio, where he purchased from the Government a tract of timber land. He cleared two farms in the Buckeye State, but in 1852, pushing farther westward, purchased eighty acres in Kankakee County, Ill., and from the wilderness built up a good homestead, where he spent the remainder of his life, passing away in 1866. He was a Whig, politically, a man of decided views, and a good citizen. The mother survived her husband until 1874, and died at the old home in Illinois. Both were active members of the Church of the United Brethren a period of forty years or more, in which the father was a chief pillar, and officiated as Class Steward.

To the parents of our subject there were born twelve children, namely: Margaret, Hannah, Sarah and Jobanna, all deceased; J. M., our subject; Iseca, Jesse, Silas and Rachel (deceased); David, Joseph and Elizabeth, residents respectively of Nebraska and Indiana. Jesse during the Civil War enlisted as a Union soldier, in 1861, in the 64th Illinois Infantry, which was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, and was with Sherman at the siege of Atlanta. On the 22d of July, 1864, he was shot dead while in the performance of his duty.

Capt. Cremer was born in Turkeyfoot Township, Somerset Co., Pa., April 27, 1825, and grew up on a farm. When a little lad eight years of age, his parents removed to Ohio, and he remained with them until a youth of seventeen. He then began an apprenticeship at the tanner's trade at Canal Dover, Ohio, remaining there two years, when on account of failing health he returned to the farm. He worked with his father two years thereafter, and then began learning the carpenter's trade. A year later he returned to his old home in Pennsylvania to visit friends and settle up his grandfather's estate. Upon going back to Ohio he employed himself as a carpenter, and was married in Canal Dover, Oct. 12, 1848, to Miss Martha, daughter of John and Hannah (Riggle) Gamble.

The parents of Mrs. Cremer were natives of Ohio. The paternal grandfather, William Gamble, was born in Ireland, and settled in Ohio upon emigrating to the United States, where he spent his last days. Grandfather Riggle was a native of Virginia, of German descent, a blacksmith by trade, and lived to be very old. John Gamble, in 1851, removed to Illinois, settling near Pontiac in Livingston County, where his death took place at the age of forty years, in 1852. The mother also died that year, at the age of forty-three. Their children comprised seven sons and four daughters, the eldest of whom, Elizabeth, died when quite small; Martha J., Mrs. Cremer, was the second child; Adam and William W., are deceased; Harvey and John are residents of Wisconsin; Asbury died in 1852. The others are Robert, of Champaign, Ill.; Cook, of Wyoming Territory; Louisa is living in Wisconsin, and Ellen S., who died when three years old; Adam, Harvey, John, Robert and Cook all served as soldiers in the Union Army. Adam died at LaGrange, Tenn., in 1863.

Mrs. Cremer was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, Jan. 10, 1829, and remained a resident of her native State until the fall of 1851. The family then journeyed overland with teams to what was then Will, but is now Kankakee County, Ill., and settled near the present town of Momence, when there were only two houses between them and Chicago. Father Gamble purchased 240 acres of prairie land, but for two years thereafter occupied himself mostly at his trade of carpenter. Subsequently he paid his whole attention to farming. In 1860 he moved to Coles County, Mo., and was one of the earliest settlers of that region. He purchased 320 acres of land, but there being too many rebels about, went back to Illinois, and this time located near Fairfield, in Wayne County, where he purchased a farm of 120 acres.

The year following, 1861, our subject entered the service of the Government, and assisted in recruiting the 18th, 40th and 63d Illinois Regiments. This effected, he raised a company for the 87th Illinois Infantry, and himself became a member of Company D, in that regiment, enlisting as a private in August, 1862, at Shawneetown. He thereafter participated in many of the important battles of the war, being at Uniontown and Caseyville, Ky., Island No. 10, Ft. Pillow, Hernando, Tenn., Coldwater, Young's Point, Milliken's Bend, Grand Gulf, Port Gibson, Jackson, Miss., and Champion Hills. At Champion Hills 1,600 men of his division were killed outright. Later they met the enemy at Black River, and the Captain participated in the siege and capture of Vicksburg. He was with the corps which made the famous charge on the 22d of May, 1863. July 4 was another memorable day, and later our subject with his regiment was transferred to the Department of the Gulf, after which he was promoted to the rank of Captain of Company I. Soon afterward he went to New Orleans to recruit, remaining there until September 9, when they were transferred to the command of Gen. Banks. Subsequently occurred the battles of Franklin, New Iberia, Vermilion, and other hand-to-hand engagements with the Confederates.

In February, 1864, the company of Capt. Cremer was made a part of the Red River expedition, and fought in a number of battles. Among these was that at Wilson's Hill, where our subject was under fire four hours, and where he received his most serious wounds above spoken of. He was left on the field three days and three nights, supposed to have been mortally wounded. Upon being discovered he was loaded into an ambulance, hauled forty miles to the Red River, then taken on a boat 640 miles to New Orleans, and placed in the St. James' Hospital. The sufferings which he thereafter endured can better be imagined than described, in fact he was in a condition which it would hardly be proper to mention here. Nothing but his splendid constitution enabled him to survive. When wounded he weighed 214 pounds, and fourteen days later had been reduced to 151 pounds.

Capt. Cremer remained in the hospital until June 10, 1864, and then received a passport to return home. He was given transportation across the Gulf to New York, was provided with an artificial arm, and arrived at his home in Wayne County, Ill., July 14, 1864. In August following Gov. Yates forwarded to him his honorable discharge. During his absence the wife of Capt. Cremer, in addition to her natural anxiety concerning her husband, had had her own conflicts with the rebels of Southern Illinois, who came very near making away with everything they could destroy, so that the Captain and his wife were in effect quite destitute, with the exception of twenty acres of land. In December of that year they removed to Kankakee County, on a farm, and with the help of his boys the Captain soon recovered his losses, remaining there until 1870.

During the above-mentioned year Capt. Cremer operated as a contractor with the Plymouth, Kankakee & Pacific Railroad Company, and for two years thereafter was fortunate in making considerable money. He finally rented a large ranch in Lake County, Ind., and embarked in the cattle business, which he continued until 1878, operating largely with full-blooded Hereford stock. In the fall of 1878 he ventured west of the Mississippi into Cass County, this State, and purchased 400 acres of land, intending to establish a Hereford stock farm, but afterward changed his mind and went to general farming.

The journey to Nebraska was made overland with teams, the Captain bringing with him sixteen head of horses, and taking up his abode on a tract of raw prairie purchased from the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company. As soon as possible he put up a house with lumber shipped from Chicago, and set out some trees. In 1882 he began planting the grove which is now the object of admiration by the traveler through this section of the county. Later he established an orchard of 450 apple trees and 300 peach trees, and in all set out probably 45,000 trees, his grove alone covering an area of ten acres.

In 1882 the Captain sold off a quarter-section of his land, and to the balance has given his close attention, effecting first-class improvements, putting up a neat and substantial residence with a barn and out-buildings, corn-cribs, hog houses, etc. His fences are largely of hedge, and the land has been brought to a good state of cultivation. The household circle was completed by the birth of ten children, namely: Elizabeth E., Isasa L., John W., Sarah M., Clarissa A., Franklin W., Ulysses S. Grant; Lilly M., who died in 1888, when twenty-two years old; Emma H. and Lettie J. The eldest daughter is the wife of Claus Ohm, and they live on a farm in Stove Creek Precinct; I. L. is married and farming in Tipton Precinct; John W. is engaged in the agricultural implement trade in Kankakee, Ill.; Sarah M., Mrs. Wallace Hess, is the wife of a well-to-do farmer of Kankakee, Ill.; Clarissa, Mrs. Joseph D. Skiles, lives on a farm in Butler County, this State; Franklin W. continues on the home farm; he was united to Miss Mary J. McCarter, Dec. 25, 1887. She died Oct. 21, 1888, leaving one child, named Thomas J., who is living with his grandparents McCarter, of Frontier County, Neb. U. S. Grant is married and farming in Tipton Precinct; Lilly M. became the wife of R. D. Shay, and died in Tipton Precinct, Oct. 26, 1888, leaving one child, Cora L., who makes her home with her grandparents. The other children of our subject remain under the parental roof.

It is hardly necessary to say that Capt. Cremer is a Republican, "dyed in the wool." Few men have attained to more prominence in county affairs than he. He served twenty-two terms as a jurymen, has been sent times without number as a delegate to the various conventions of his party, officiated as Sheriff two years, and Justice of the Peace two terms, and has otherwise been connected with the important interests of Cass County. Socially, he belongs to Kenesaw Post No. 123, in which he is Senior Commander. Both he and his estimable wife have been active members of the United Brethren Church a period of forty-five years, in which the Captain has made himself useful as elsewhere, officiating not only as Class-Leader, Steward and Secretary, but also as a minister in the pulpit. He is at present the local preacher of this church in Stove Creek Circuit. He realizes the importance of religious instruction to the young, and has given no little time to Sunday-school work, officiated as Superintendent, and otherwise furthered the cause as he has had opportunity. It will thus be seen that he has built up a good record as a useful and self-sacrificing citizen, and he is amply worthy of representation in a work designed to commemorate the life of the pioneers of Cass County.

HENRY RAUSCH. There are few sections in Cass County, as elsewhere, in which we do not find the persevering and thrifty German farmer. The subject of this sketch is one of the most worthy representatives of this class of citizens who have been closely identified with the development of the Great West. He owns a good farm of 160 acres, comprising the northeast quarter of section 8 in Tipton Precinct, and in addition to general agriculture makes a specialty of the raising of swine, producing each year of these animals of unusual fine quality. His operations are carried on in a thorough and skillful manner, and his promptness in meeting his obligations has placed him in a good position in his community.

Before proceeding further in noting the career of Mr. Rausch we will revert to those from whom he drew his origin. His father, Conrad Rausch, was born in Eisenach, Saxony, in the town of Farnroda. In early manhood he was married, the lady being a native of his own Province, and settled down to his trade of blacksmith in the village of Farnroda, near the well-known village of Eisenach. He also carried on farming in connection with blacksmithing, and there spent the remainder of his days, dying in February, 1866, at the age of sixty-eight years. He had served for a time in the German Army against the great Napoleon. The mother also died in her native land, about 1864. Their children, four in number, were named respectively: Henry, our subject; Ansophine, Lizzie and Christine, the three latter all deceased.

The subject of this sketch, like his parents before him, is a native of Saxony, born under the little roof-tree in Farnroda, June 24, 1820. He was placed in school at the tender age of five years and continued his studies until a lad of fourteen. He then began an apprenticeship at the stonemason's trade, serving three years, then worked as a journeyman until 1843. He had in the meantime traveled all over, not only the German Empire but many of the other outlying countries of Europe. He finally decided to seek his fortunes in the Western Hemisphere, and on the 20th of December, 1843, embarked from Bremerhaven on the sailing-vessel "Emma," and after a voyage of sixty days landed in New York City on the 14th of February. He at once went to work for a farmer for his board, where he worked three months. He then went into the city of New York, where he worked at his trade until August, and then went to Waterbury, Conn., where he sojourned until October. We next find him in Virginia on the James River Canal at stone cutting, where he staid one year. We next find him in Campbell County, Va., in company with John Robinson, burning lime, where he staid eighteen months.

While a resident of the Old Dominion Mr. Rausch met his fate in Appomattox County, in the person of Mrs. Mary J. (Lee) Wilson, to whom he was married in November, 1850. This lady is a second cousin of Gen. Robert E. Lee, and was born in November, 1819, in Appomattox County, where she was reared to womanhood. The young people settled down together on a farm, where Mr. Rausch in connection with his trade also prosecuted agriculture in a small way, and was thus occupied until after the outbreak of the Rebellion. In March, 1862, he enlisted in the Confederate service, 44th Virginia Infantry, under the command of Gen. Lee, but not long afterward was transferred to the artillery and assisted in the defense of Richmond. Another six months found him a member of the engineer corps, laying out roads and building bridges. After the surrender at Appomattox Court House Mr. Rausch received his honorable discharge, and returned to his farm, resuming the labors of a civilian in the Old Dominion until the fall of 1865. He then changed his residence to Culpeper County, in Old Virginia, where he and his family lived three years, and Mr. R. occupied himself mostly at his trade.

Mr. Rausch had for some time previous to this had his eye on the country west of the Mississippi, and in February, 1868, perfected his arrangements for the removal hither. Making his way to the southwestern corner of this county he homesteaded eighty acres of land in Tipton Precinct, of which he still retains possession. It was then an unbroken prairie, upon which no improvement had been attempted. After putting up a shelter for his family, they in the meantime living in their wagon, he commenced breaking the sod with the oxen which had conveyed them hither. After the first season's crops were put in he began making such improvements as he could with the material at hand, having to haul his lumber from Nebraska City. He also began setting out trees, both fruit and forest, and has now a fine grove and a small apple orchard.

The land of Mr. Rausch is amply watered by Camp Creek, and the whole has now been brought to a good state of cultivation. He afterward added eighty acres to his first purchase, and in 1871 constructed a dam across Rock Creek for the purpose of a mill dam. He has a neat and substantial residence, with a barn 24x64 feet in area, hay-scales, and all the other farm machinery necessary for the successful prosecution of his calling. His swine are of the full-blooded Poland-China and Jersey; he also has graded cattle, with about eleven or twelve head of handsome and powerful Percheron horses.

To Mr. and Mrs. Rausch there were born six children, three of whom, the two eldest and the youngest, Herman, Emma and Kendall R., are deceased, the first-named dying in infancy. Conrad is at home with his father; Cornelia is the wife of Mr. J. W. Butts, a plumber by trade; Norah completed her studies in the High School at Lynchburg, and is prosecuting her trade of milliner in Lynchburg, Va. Mrs. Mary J. Rausch died at the homestead in Tipton Precinct, in March, 1883. Mr. Rausch, politically, is a solid Democrat, and in religious matters belongs to the Lutheran Protestant Church. Socially, he is a member of the E. A. U., at Lincoln.

HENRY BEHRNS. The intelligent traveler is always gratified in noticing the evidences of thrift and enterprise in a new country, and involuntarily regards with admiration the labors of a man who has by his industry and perseverance placed himself in a good position financially, and who as a natural result is looked upon by his neighbors as a leader in the community. These thoughts involuntarily occur in noting the career of the subject of this sketch. He represents a fine property in Avoca Precinct, a property including 395 acres of valuable land, which, with the high culture to which it has been subjected, and the fine farm buildings with which it is embellished, forms one of the most desirable estates along the southern limits of Cass County. The Behrns farm is pleasantly located on section 22, and stock-raising forms the leading enterprise now engrossing the attention of the proprietor.

This farm has for its owner a more than ordinary value and interest, having been land purchased by his father as early as 1862, five years before the transformation of Nebraska from a Territory into a State. Six years later Henry assumed its management, and has considerably increased its acreage.

He possesses all the thrift and prudence of his substantial German ancestry, a nationality which has figured largely in the development of the Great West. He has been willing to labor and to wait for results, and a looker-on cannot see any reason why he should not be satisfied with his possessions or his surroundings.

Our subject, who is a native of the Empire of Germany, was born Oct. 10, 1845, and is the eldest son and child of James and Sophia (Gottjohn) Behrns, who were born and reared not far from their own home. Their household includes two sons and two daughters, and the father on his native soil followed the occupation of a brickmaker. Being a man ambitious for the welfare of his family, he determined to seek his fortune on the other side of the Atlantic. In the year 1862 the parents and all the children came to America, and from New York City proceeded directly westward beyond the Mississippi, taking up their home at once in Avoca Precinct, this county. The father secured by pre-emption eighty-five acres on section 22, and proceeded to build up a homestead, laboring early and late a number of years, and until his sons were enabled to relieve him of further care. He and his estimable wife still continue at the homestead, now retired from active labor, the father seventy-two years old and the mother seventy-seven. They were trained in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church, to which they still loyally adhere.

Mr. Behrns received his early education in the excellent schools of his native land, and was about seventeen years of age when emigrating to the United States with his father's family. He attained his majority in Avoca Precinct, but found his bride over the line eastward, being married in Liberty Precinct, Oct. 29, 1868, to Miss Mary Sturm. This lady, also a native of Germany, was born in the Province of Alsace, June 8, 1850, and came to the United States with her father, Andrew Sturm, in her girlhood. The mother had died in her native Germany when her daughter Mary was but a child. Mr. Sturm secured a tract of good land in Liberty Precinct, this county, and surrounded himself with all the comforts of life, building up a good farm, where he spent his last days and where his death took place in April, 1874, when he was seventy-four years old. He also was in religion a Lutheran.

Mrs. Behrns was the youngest of the five children born to her parents, and remained with her father until her marriage. Of her union with our subject there have been born five children, namely: Henry J., Mary, Minnie, Joseph and Sophia. They are all at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Behrns, like their ancestors, are Lutherans in religion, while our subject, politically, gives his support to the Republican party.

JOHAN MAGNEY, one of the earliest pioneers of this State, resides on a well-improved farm of 160 acres on section 36, in Mt. Pleasant Precinct. He was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, Jan. 25, 1835, where he lived until he was eleven years of age, then removed with the family to Scioto County, same State. His education was received in the subscription and later in the public schools of his native county, attending the latter in the primitive log school-house, of which so much has been said and written, which, although often rough on the exterior and plainly furnished inside, has produced many of the brightest scholars the world has ever known. To the rudimentary knowledge thus obtained he has added the education acquired by years of experience and observation, and now, by a careful perusal of the prints of the day, he is a well-informed man.

The attention of the gentleman has been given especially to farming all his life, but in his early years of pioneership he would work as carpenter and joiner when occasion offered, which enabled him to inaugurate the present system of improvement exhibited on his home farm. He was married in Ohio to Mary E. Searl, on the 8th of January, 1857. This lady is a native of Ohio and was born in Scioto County, July 22, 1837. She is a daughter of Wyatt and Mercy (White) Searl. Her paternal ancestors are supposed to have been of Swedish origin; her grandfather White was reputed to have been a soldier in the War of 1812. Her parents had the following-named family: Jane, now the wife of Frederick Dow, of Otoe County, Neb.; Mary E., the wife of our subject; Celia, the wife of Joseph Kronk, and resides in Scioto County, Ohio; Josie, the wife of William Curtis, resides in Wayne County, Mich.; Matthias resides in Gosper County, Neb.; Caroline, the wife of Henry Pepper, resides in Lincoln County, Kan.; Madora, the wife of Charles Flick, resides in Omaha; Albert resides in Gosper County, Neb.; the deceased members of the family were Mildred, Fernando, Oscar and Royal.

RESIDENCE OF FRANK DOBNEY, SEC. 25. TIPTON PRECINCT, CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF JOHN MAGNEY, SEC. 36. Mc PLEASANT PRECT. CASS CO.

In the autumn of 1865 our subject with his wife and three children left Ohio for Cass County, Neb., traveling the entire distance with a team and covered wagon, camping out where night overtook them. They were en route for seven weeks. For fifteen months after their arrival in the State they lived at Eight Mile Grove, Cass County. In the spring of 1867 he settled on his present farm, and has devoted his entire time and energy from that time to the present to the improvement of his home, and the success that has attended his efforts has been almost phenomenal.

Our subject is the son of John and Catherine (Garden) Magney. They were both natives of France, and emigrated to America and settled in Hamilton County, Ohio, at an early date. Of all the children born to them, the following only survive: Jane, now the wife of Charles Mougly, resides in Scioto County; John Eli resides in the same county; Matilda, now the wife of Louis Jaques, resides in Dearborn County, Ind.; Peter is in Ohio. The deceased members of the family are Ezra, Phylissa and Charles. To Mr. and Mrs. Magney a family of six children has been born, named as follows: The son George is in Omaha, engaged in the practice of law; Wesley; Pernet M.; Elizabeth, the wife of Creed Harris, who resides in Cass County; and Reno A. A son, Cortes, is dead.

The subject of our sketch is a truly self-made man. Coming to the West at an early day, having but slender resources and nothing to depend on but his own efforts and exertions, he has succeeded in accumulating a splendid property, represented by the 160 acres of highly cultivated land, with his handsome residence and its elegant surroundings. In his wife he has found a most earnest counselor and thorough helpmate. She has borne her share of the privations and toils always experienced by the wife of a pioneer with much bravery and fortitude. In addition to her household cares she has devoted much time to the rearing and education of her children, until she now can refer to them with feelings of the greatest pride, and they certainly do her justice. Herself and husband are members of the United Brethren Church, and both take a lively interest in all matters pertaining to the religious, educational and social advancement of their friends and neighbors. In politics Mr. Magney is a Democrat, has served on the School Board of the district in which he lives several times, and in all things is a friend of progress.

A view of the Magney homestead is presented on an accompanying page.

FRANK DOBNEY. The farming and stock-raising interests of Tipton Precinct find a most energetic and successful representative in the person of the subject of this sketch, who states that he "came to Nebraska with nothing but an old plug team." He is now the Supervisor of Tipton, and is numbered among the leading farmers of Southern Nebraska. He is the owner of 320 acres of finely improved land, with a handsome new residence, substantial barns and out-buildings, shown elsewhere, a goodly assortment of live stock, and all the other appurtenances which the progressive agriculturist naturally gathers around him. He makes a specialty of stock feeding, having about 150 head of cattle each year, besides horses and swine.

In connection with his farm buildings Mr. Dobney has a new Perkins-Geared mill, with a 16-foot wheel, six-horse power, feed grinder, besides water tanks in all his yards, which not only supply this indispensable article to the farm animals wherever needed, but by this means water is also conveyed to the house by a force pump. Not far from the buildings is a fine apple orchard of 600 trees, and there is upon the farm the regulation grove and windbrake, covering probably six acres of ground. The farm machinery is of the latest improved pattern, and the cattle are given their rations by means of a patent feeder. The farm is mostly enclosed with hedge and wire fencing. As a stock-raiser Mr. Dobney is especially a success, this industry appearing to be one to which he is naturally adapted. He ships annually about seven carloads of graded cattle directly to the market at Omaha, and 200 head of hogs. His horses are mostly of the Norman breed, of which he usually keeps from seventeen to twenty head, making a display of equines scarcely equaled, and certainly not excelled, along the southern line of the county. Mr. Dobney is conceded to be the heaviest stock-breeder in this region.

Next in importance to the subject of a biographical record is the source from which he drew his origin. The Dobney family is of English descent, and the parents of our subject, Richard and Elizabeth (Bell) Dobney, were natives of Staffordshire, whence they emigrated to America in 1854. The paternal grandfather, William Dobney, spent his entire life in his native England, prosecuting agriculture, and lived to the advanced age of ninety-three years. On the mother's side Grandfather Bell, also a well-to-do English farmer, died at the age of over eighty years.

The father of our subject, like most of his ancestors, was reared to farming pursuits, which he followed before emigrating to America. Soon after landing he made his way to Northeastern Ohio, settling on a tract of land near the city of Cleveland, where he lived one year. Then, pushing further westward, he rented a farm in Adams County, Ill., near Quincy, where he sojourned for a period of eight years. Thence, in the spring of 1863, he crossed the Mississippi, and purchased land in the vicinity of Tabor, Mills Co., Iowa. There he improved a farm of 120 acres, and labored successfully as a tiller of the soil, adding to his real estate until he is now the owner of 280 acres, all improved, provided with good buildings, and forming a comfortable modern homestead. The dwelling is noticeable as being more than ordinarily fine for a farm house, and was erected at a cost of $5,000. He also is largely interested in the buying and feeding of cattle, having all the necessary conveniences. The elder Dobney also owns 320 acres near Superior, Nuckolls Co., Neb. He is now sixty-one years old, and his estimable partner is sixty-four. They are active members of the Congregational Church, and people highly respected in their community. The father during the progress of the late Civil War proffered his services as a soldier of the Union Army, but on account of a defective leg was pronounced ineligible.

To the parents of our subject there were born five children, namely: Frank, our subject; Mary E. and Sarah, residents of Iowa; John, who died when young, and George, who is living with his parents. Frank was born in Lincolnshire, England, July 19, 1849, and was a lad five years of age when he accompanied his parents to America. They embarked on a sailing-vessel at Liverpool, and after a voyage of six weeks and three days landed in New York City. Thence they proceeded at once to Ohio, where they lived one year, and then to Adams County, Ill., where the father purchased a tract of land, and pursued his occupation of farming.

Our subject, in common with his brothers and sisters, studied his first lessons in the district schools, and was fourteen years old when the family, leaving the Prairie State, migrated to Mills County, Iowa. He assisted his father in the various employments around the homestead until twenty-two years of age. In 1870 he started out for himself for the young State of Nebraska, making the journey overland with a team. Crossing the Missouri at Plattsmouth, he made his way southwestward to the vicinity of Weeping Water, and in that precinct purchased eighty acres of land from the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, contracting to pay therefor $11 per acre. He was without capital, and ran in debt for the whole of it.

Mr. Dobney began the improvement of his purchase by breaking a portion of the prairie land, but remained here only a short time that year. The first year of his residence he harvested good crops, but the two years following the grasshoppers ate him out. He, however, held on to his little farm, although he naturally fell behind in his payments. He was given a continuance, and in due time found himself upon his feet. For six years his crops were remarkably bounteous, and in due time he discovered that the stock business would probably be fully as profitable, if not easier, than the tilling of the soil. He commenced the feeding of cattle with excellent results, and in 1877 added to his real estate by the purchase of another eighty acres. He brought his quarter-section of land to a good state of cultivation, provided it with neat and substantial buildings, the regulation grove and orchard, and the smaller fruits in their season. He sold this property in the fall of 1882 at $40 per acre, which all must admit was at a very reasonable profit. Later he invested a part of his capital in his present homestead in Tipton Precinct, making the purchase on the 25th of December of the above year. This then was but a raw prairie, and he repeated the experiment of constructing a farm. He has now all but forty acres under cultivation, has put up a residence and made other improvements. A few years will serve to make this one of the most complete homesteads in this part of the county.

The wife of our subject, in her girlhood Miss Ellen Stoepforth, was born in England, Feb. 8, 1851, and they were married in Plattsmouth, Neb., Oct. 15, 1875. Mrs. Dobney was reared to womanhood in her native land, and came to America with her parents in 1874. The latter, William and Eliza Stoepforth, are now residents of Cass County, Neb. The six children born of this marriage were named respectively: Alice, George, Richard, Frederick, Frank and Charles. They are all at home with their parents, and form a very interesting and intelligent group, the eldest being thirteen years of age, and the youngest two.

Mr. Dobney grew up, as it were, under the wing of the Republican party, of whose principles he is an earnest supporter. He has been quite prominent in the political affairs of Cass County, being sent as a delegate for a number of years to the County and State Conventions, and was a delegate to the Congressional Convention in the fall of 1888. He has represented his precinct in the County Board of Supervisors for the past eight years, a record which does him much credit. He has been nearly since the time of his first residence here a member of the School Board of his district, and is also at present holding the office of Constable. Socially, he belongs to Lodge No. 160. I. O. O. F., at Elmwood, and is also a Knight of Pythias. It will thus be seen that he is eminently worthy of mention in a work of this kind, and his whole career has been one to which his children may revert with pride in years to come.

WILLIAM JAMES. The history of this gentleman, who was one of the first settlers of Stove Creek Precinct, is a forcible illustration of what may be accomplished by perseverance and resolution, under the most adverse circumstances and financial discouragements. His farm of eighty acres of land lies on section 26, township 10, range 10, and his homestead, with its fine yard of ornamental trees and shrubbery, forms an attractive feature of the landscape. He was born at Highbridge, Somerset County, England, March 1, 1837. His grandfather, Joseph James, spent his early life in England, but later emigrated to Canada, and built a brewery in Toronto, where he succeeded well financially, remaining there until his death.

John James, father of our subject, was born and still lives in Highbridge, England, at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. He learned the cooper's trade, and at one time owned a small piece of property there, which he disposed of before it had increased in value by the rise of the price of real estate in that town. He married Miss Anna Tidball, who died in 1839, when only twenty-two years of age, leaving three children, namely: William, Henry and Frederic, of whom the latter two are deceased.

William, of our sketch, was early deprived of a mother's care, and when only eight years of age went into service for a gentleman farmer, for whom he worked eight years. He had no schooling excepting such as he received by attending Sunday-school twice every Sunday. He subsequently worked for another farmer a year, then decided to seek his fortune in America. Accordingly, in 1855, he sailed from Bristol on the ship "Osprey," disembarking in New York City after a voyage of five weeks. He then proceeded to Marcellus, Onondaga

Co., N. Y., where he lived two years, working at various occupations, and attended school a part of the time. In 1857 Mr. James moved still farther West, and located near Henry, in Marshall County, Ill., where he worked on a farm for several years. In 1863, having accumulated sufficient property to warrant him in taking a life companion, our subject was married, and, purchasing a farm of eighty acres, commenced to work for himself and bride. He toiled hard, and had the cheerful assistance of his good wife in all his labors, but for three successive seasons his crops were a failure. Determining to try his luck in a better farming country, Mr. James moved with his family, in 1870, to this State. He came overland with three teams and a wagon, performing the journey in three weeks. He crossed the Missouri River at Nebraska City, thence came to Stove Creek Precinct, where he had previously bought his present homestead. Scarcely any improvements had been made, and not a tree was to be found on the place. With willing hands and courageous heart he set to work to establish a home, first putting up a small house, the lumber for which he had to bring from an island in the Platte River. Again was our subject unfortunate in his business labors, and for three continuous years his crops were gathered by the grasshoppers, and he had to mortgage his place to tide him through the hard times, it taking him six or seven years to regain his losses. Since that time, however, fortune has smiled upon him, and prosperity greeted him at every turn. In 1880 he built a new barn, and four years later erected his present dwelling, a commodious and convenient house, neatly and tastily arranged and furnished. He has now a large grove of forest trees, a fine orchard, and has his front yard ornamented with cedar trees, taken from Government land on an island in the Platte River, which are kept neatly trimmed. Besides general farming and stock-raising, Mr. James pays special attention to horse-raising, having eight head of fine grade, one of which is one and one-half Clyde and three-fourths Norman breed.

The maiden name of Mrs. James, to whom Mr. J. was married in Marshall County, Ill., May 29, 1864, was Sarah J. Smith. She was born in Durham, England, and came to America with her parents when a young child. To her and her husband have been born seven children, namely: John F., William H. (deceased), Frederic W., Etta May and Eddie L. (twins), Charles L. and Sydney R., all of whom are at home. Mr. James is a man having the universal respect and esteem of his fellow-townsmen. He is well informed on all general subjects, and takes much interest in township affairs, and has served for several years as a member of the School Board. He is a Democrat in his political views, and an earnest worker for that party. He has served as a member of the petit jury. Mr. James is a charter member of the Baptist Church, of Wabash, Cass County, and assisted in building it.

HENRY UMLAND, one of the most prosperous German farmers of Tipton Precinct, has by his industry and perseverance built up from a modest beginning a fine property, and is now in the enjoyment of the good things of life. Of German birth and ancestry, he first opened his eyes to the light in Prussia, Oct. 1, 1827, and was left an orphan when a little lad eight years of age. He made his home with his stepmother five years thereafter, then started out in life on his own account. He had only three years' schooling. He began learning the carpenter's trade at the age of thirteen, at which he worked until twenty years of age. About this time he entered the Prussian Army with others to guard against the invasion of the French in the Duchies of Holstein, Baden, etc. When his services were no longer needed in this direction he returned to civil life and resumed work at his trade.

Young Umland, however, was ambitious of being and accomplishing something further than it seemed possible he could do on his native soil. He kept his eyes open to what was going on around him in the world, and from reading and hearsay had gained something of what an enterprising young man might accomplish in the United States. Accordingly in the spring of 1851 he took passage on a sailing-vessel, and after a tedious voyage of ninety days landed in New York City.

From the metropolis our subject proceeded directly westward, first to Chicago, Ill., thence to Milwaukee, Wis.; finding nothing desirable in the latter place he returned to the Garden City and entered the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. That same fall he migrated southwestward to St. Louis, Mo., where he employed himself in farming and carpentering, and finally purchased land across the river in St. Clair County, Ill. Upon this he farmed a few years, then sold out and turned his attention for a time once more to his trade, operating as a contractor until his removal to this State.

Our subject was married, in St. Clair County, Ill., Sept. 20, 1855, to Miss Anna, daughter of Rudolph and Margaret (Huber) Herder. The parents of Mrs. Umland were natives of Switzerland, and the father a farmer by occupation. They emigrated to America in 1854, settling in St. Clair County, Ill., where the father died in 1856 at the age of fifty-nine years. The mother only survived her husband seven years, her death taking place also in St. Clair County, when she was sixty-two years old. The four children of the parental family were named respectively: Jacob and Rudolph, who died young; Abraham, a resident of Lancaster County, Neb., and Anna, the wife of our subject.

Mrs. Umland was born in the Canton of Zurich, Switzerland, Aug. 25, 1833, near the foot of the Alps. She lived there until a young lady of twenty-one years old, her childhood days being passed amid the most beautiful scenery in the world. In setting sail for America she embarked with her parents at Havre, France, on the sailing-vessel "Hortensia," which five weeks later landed them in the city of New Orleans. Thence they made their way to St. Clair County, Ill.

The parents of our subject were natives of Prussia, and the father a gardener by occupation. He was an honest, hard-working man, and spent his entire life in his native country, dying in 1835 at the age of sixty-two years. The mother had passed away eight years before, in 1827. The family included three children: Hannah, who died when small; Ernestina, a resident of Wisconsin, and Henry, of our sketch.

To Mr. and Mrs. Umland there have been born three sons and three daughters, namely: Eliza, Jacob, Rudolph, William, Annie and Sophia. The five younger children are living at home with their parents, and are being carefully trained and educated. Eliza is the wife of Allen Crabtree, a well-to-do farmer of Tipton Precinct, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Our subject and his wife are members in good standing of the German Evangelical Church, and Mr. Umland is a very strong Republican.

The Umland estate includes in all 500 acres of land, mostly on section 19. Mr. Umland had originally twenty more, which he sold some time since. The home farm embraces eighty acres on section 30, and to it there has been given very careful cultivation, so that it is in a highly productive condition. The buildings are neat and substantial, and include a very attractive residence, which with its surroundings fulfills the modern idea of a country home. A stream of living water runs through the farm, and there are groves, orchards, and trees of the smaller fruits. Mr. Umland makes a specialty of stock-raising, keeping usually fourteen head of horses besides the teams operating on the farm, and has full-blooded Durham and graded cattle.

JOHN W. McDERMED. The subject of this sketch, one of the younger citizens of Avoca Precinct, presents an example of enterprise and industry which it would be well for many others to follow. He is the son of an excellent family, and has succeeded to the homestead which was land taken up from the Government and improved by his father. This property consists of 160 acres, which was secured by the elder McDermid when in a state of comparative wildness. It is pleasantly located on section 20, and remains the home of the mother and part of the family, whose interests are carefully looked after by the subject of this sketch. Alfred McDermid departed this life Sept. 2, 1885, at the age of fifty-seven years.

Our subject was born in Peoria County, Ill., Oct. 9, 1857. He was a lad of nine years when his father came with the family to Nebraska in the fall of 1866. They located first in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, this county, where the father began operating on rented land, and by patient industry and close economy saved sufficient money so that he was enabled to make a purchase in 1870. His life thereafter was that of a peaceable and law-abiding citizen, a man careful and conscientious in his dealings with his neighbors, indulgent and liberal with his family, and in all respects a praiseworthy citizen.

Alfred McDermed was born in Maysville, Ky., of a respectable family of Scotch ancestry, and leaving the blue grass regions settled in Illinois when a single man. He employed himself in the Prairie State as a farm laborer, and in due time was married in Peoria County to Miss Elizabeth McFarland. The mother of our subject was a native of Ireland, and was born May 1, 1830. She lived in the "land of the shamrock" until a young girl of fourteen years, when she came to America with her sister. Her father came with his family to the United States later, and they lived for a time in the city of Philadelphia, Pa. Later the parents removed to Illinois, after which Elizabeth joined them, where she grew to womanhood and lived with them until her marriage.

To Mr. and Mrs. McDermed there were born eight children. The eldest daughter, Maggie, is the wife of J. W. Sperry, a well-to-do citizen of Avoca Precinct, and whose biography appears elsewhere in this volume; Orlester married Miss Ida Davis, of this county, and is engaged at labor in Weeping Water; John W., of our sketch, was the third child and is still unmarried; Hester died when about twenty-two years old; Mattie is the wife of Joseph Malcolm, a miller by trade, and they live in Ashland, Saunders County; George is a skillful barber, and is operating successfully at Union, this County; Mary L. died in September, 1886, aged twenty years; Frank remains at home. Mrs. McDermed is a very estimable lady, and was ever the faithful and efficient helpmate of her husband in his best labors and ambitions. She is held in the most tender respect by all her children, and universally spoken well of by her neighbors.

John W. McDermed has been familiar with farming pursuits from his boyhood up, and is managing the homestead successfully and with excellent results. Like his father before him, politically, he is a staunch Democrat, as are all the sons. The parents formerly belonged to the Methodist Church, but there being no society of that denomination in this part of the county they identified themselves with the Baptists. The family occupy a good position socially in their community, and the homestead is numbered among the other well-regulated estates of Cass County.

JULIUS SACKS is operating successfully on a good farm located on the northeast corner of section 18 in Tipton Precinct. He may most properly be ranked among the early pioneers, having been one of the first to take up a homestead in this region. Although of German birth and parentage, and having only six months' schooling in America, he speaks the English language fluently, and is at once recognized as a man more than ordinarily intelligent. He is held in high esteem by the people of his neighborhood, and gives his aid and influence to those enterprises calculated for the educational and moral advancement of the community.

Our subject is the son of Carl G. and Christiana Sacks, who like him were born in the Prussian Province of Saxony, and spent their entire lives in the Fatherland. Carl Sacks was a finely educated man and a teacher by profession. He followed this from the age of twenty years until he was fifty, then purchased 100 acres of land, and thereafter occupied himself in agricultural pursuits until his death, which took place in September, 1882, after he had arrived at the advanced age of eighty-one years. The mother had preceded her husband to the silent land twenty-seven years, her death taking place in 1855. Both were members of the Lutheran Church.

To the parents of our subject there were born ten children, eight of whom lived to mature years. They were named respectively: Emily, Pauline; Ida, who died when twenty-two years old; Gustave, who died at the age of thirty; Antonia, Albert, Carl, Francis, Emma and Julius.

It will thus be seen that our subject was the youngest of the parental family. His brother Albert entered the army upon reaching manhood, during the war between France and Germany, serving until the close of the struggle. Julius was placed in school at the early age of five years and gave his attention quite closely to his studies until a youth of fourteen. He remained a member of the parental household until twenty years of age, then, having learned much from reading and hearsay of the opportunities for the enterprising young man in America, he determined to come hither. Accordingly, bidding adieu to his old friends and associations, he embarked at Hamburg on the steamer "Germania," and after being tossed about the Atlantic two weeks, landed in New York City. His destination, however, was the Western country, and he soon placed himself this side of the Mississippi, working on a farm in Stevens Creek Precinct, Lancaster County, this State.

After a sojourn there of one year, during which he had attended a district school six months, Mr. Sacks pre-empted his present homestead in order to hold it, not being of the required age to settle on it. He commenced finally its improvement by putting up a sod house with a board roof, the latter material being hauled from Nebraska City. He then set about breaking the prairie, and after getting in his first crops began planting trees, both of fruit and forest, and has now two acres in a good orchard and that indispensable institution,—a wind-break.

The crops of 1874 were destroyed by grasshoppers; those of 1875 by hail; and in 1876 the farmers of Southern Nebraska suffered from drouth. Since that time crops have been uniformly good and Mr. Sacks has had little reason to complain. In the spring of 1871 he purchased forty acres adjoining, which, like the balance, is now improved, laid off with substantial fencing, and yields bountifully the rich crops of this region. The land is watered by the south branch of Camp Creek. Our subject in addition to general farming makes a specialty of fine stock, Clydesdale and Norman horses, Durham cattle and Poland swine.

Mr. Sacks was married in the city of Lincoln, July 22, 1874, to Miss Caroline Drees. This lady was born in April, 1856, in what was then the Kingdom of Hanover, Germany, and came to America with her parents in 1868. Of this union there have been born five children, namely: Albert, who died when sixteen months old; Julius, Jr., deceased; Stevens, Julius, Jr., (2d) and Walter. The eldest of these is ten years old and the youngest six.

Mr. Sacks has become thoroughly identified with American institutions, and in meeting him and conversing with him there is little to indicate that he is otherwise than a native-born American. He keeps himself well posted in regard to current events, and is entirely in sympathy with the Republican party, with which he became identified on coming to this country. A self-made man in every respect, his has been a career marked with industry, perseverance, and all the qualities which go to make up a complete manhood and a worthy citizenship.

WILLIAM EIKENBARY, who is one of the sturdy pioneers of 1856, landed here May 15, and cast his lot with the early settlers of Cass County when it was taking its first onward steps toward the important position it now occupies as one of the leading and most influential counties of the State. He is a native of Indiana, born in Union County, Feb. 26, 1833. He is of German descent, his paternal grandfather, William Eikenbary, a German, having married a lady of the same nationality as himself. After residing in Germany several years, they emigrated to America, and settled in Virginia, thence went to Indiana, and there spent the remainder of their lives. They had a large family of children, consisting of fourteen sons and one daughter.

Samuel Eikenbary, father of our subject, was one of the younger sons, and was born during the residence of his parents in Virginia. He was reared on his father's farm in Indiana, and after attaining his majority was married in Union County to Martha Crawford. She was of Scotch ancestry, and was born in Indiana. Her parents were early settlers of Union County, where they carried on farming, and both died, respected and honored, at a ripe old age. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Eikenbary settled on a farm in Union County at the time of their marriage, and continued to live there until after the birth of five of their children. In 1837 they removed to Des Moines County, Iowa, and established themselves on a farm eleven miles west of Burlington, and there the remaining four of their children were born. In the fall of 1856 they pushed on still farther west, and coming to Nebraska located two miles south of Plattsmouth, where the father of our subject pre-empted a homestead and lived until his death, in 1869, at the age of threescore and six years. His wife survived him, dying in 1871, at the age of sixty-five years. Religiously, they were associated with the Dunkards until their removal to Nebraska, when they became communicants of the Christian Church, and died in that faith. They were worthy people, held in high respect by the community for their many good qualities. In politics he was a firm Republican, and had the courage of his opinions.

The subject of this personal narrative was only four years old when he went with his parents to Iowa, therefore his earliest recollections are of his home in that State. He received an excellent education, attending school in the town in which his father settled, and later at Mt. Pleasant, in the same State. He was still a single man when he came with his parents to Nebraska in 1856, and the ensuing year he took up a claim of 160 acres on section 1, Liberty Precinct. When he had proved up on his homestead, he and his brother Henry went to farming near the city, remaining thus engaged until 1871, when our subject sold out his interest there to his brother, and took possession of his homestead. At the same time he bought 160 acres on section 2, and a tract of eighty acres in Liberty Precinct; his farm thus aggregates 400 acres. Scarcely any improvements had been made on any of his property, but by judicious labor, skill in management, and perseverance, he has now one of the best farms in point of improvement in Liberty Precinct. Mr. Eikenbary has erected a commodious house on section 2, which is a model of comfort and convenience, and with the fine barn and out-buildings, adds materially to the attractiveness of the place and to its value from a financial point of view. Our subject pays special attention to stock breeding and raising, having horses and cattle of a superior grade. At the head of his herd of fine Durham cattle, which he has raised for seventeen years, is a fine specimen of that breed, the registered bull "Ashland." His horses are thoroughbred English draft horses, coming from the best imported stock of that breed, to the raising of which he has paid especial attention for the last four years.

The marriage of Mr. Eikenbary to Miss Mary E. McCord was celebrated in Rock Bluff Precinct in 1861. She was born in Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, in 1840, and came with her parents to Nebraska in the spring of 1857. They, Donaldson and Anna (Pascall) McCord, on coming to this State settled in Rock Bluff Precinct, where they improved a farm, moving thence to Nodaway County, Mo., where they both died in the sunset of life. Their daughter Mary was reared in Keokuk County, Iowa, and remained with her parents until the time of her marriage with our subject. She was a woman of energy, intelligence and ability, and proved herself a most companionable, devoted wife and tender mother, and her death, in 1876, was mourned by the whole community, by whom she was esteemed and loved. She was the mother of five children, namely: Albert R., who is attending the Commercial College at Lincoln; Cora M., the wife of T. W. Swan, a farmer of Liberty Precinct; Maggie and Mollie (twins), and Francis J. are at home. They are a bright, active, capable family of children, with promises of a bright future before them.

Mr. Eikenbary was a second time married, Aug. 29, 1883, the maiden name of his wife being Fannie P. Davis. She was born in Liberty Precinct, Jan. 25, 1863, and was reared and educated there, and for some time previous to her marriage taught school with much success. Her parents, William and Sarah J. (Simmons) Davis, came from Missouri to this county and located on a farm in Liberty Precinct, which they have improved and still occupy. In politics Mr. E. is a steadfast adherent of the principles formulated by the Republican party, and has served his district several years as School Officer. He has been very successful in his life work, and is one of the most prosperous and influential citizens of Cass County, where he is highly esteemed for his unswerving integrity, force of character, and excellent business capacity. Both he and his wife are eminently hospitable, and not only entertain their friends most delightfully, but extend such a cordial welcome to the stranger who comes within their gates that it is ever appreciated and gratefully acknowledged.

WILLIAM O. TODD is the editor and proprietor of the Union Ledger, which he established in Union Village, Nov. 3, 1888. This paper starts out as a five-column folio sheet, which will soon be enlarged to meet the demands of the reading public. Although it has so recently entered upon life, it has obtained a vigorous hold upon it, and has already secured a fair and profitable circulation. As a well-edited paper it will undoubtedly advance the interests of Cass County, and more especially of this village, and it has a promising future before it.

Mr. Todd was born Sept. 11, 1863, in Des Moines County, Iowa. His father, Alvin Todd, was a native of Ohio. He was in early life a mechanic, and later became a farmer. In 1837 he accompanied his parents from his native State to Iowa, and they located near where the city of Burlington now is, it being at that time an insignificant hamlet. He grew up and was educated in Des Moines County, and was there married to Phoebe Penny, a native of Pennsylvania. In her childhood she had accompanied her parents from the place of her birth to their new home in Des Moines County, Iowa, and there she was reared to womanhood. After marriage Alvin Todd gave his attention to farming for several years, and later established a cooper shop at Fairfield, Iowa. From there he moved to a place in Des Moines County, and afterward lived in Monmouth, Ill., for two years. He then returned with his family to Des Moines County, and made his home there until 1880, when he and his family removed to Mills County, Iowa, where he followed farming until he and his wife came to Cass County in 1882, and he has since been an honored resident of this county, owning and managing a fine farm near Ashland. He and his wife are Baptist in religion, and he is a Prohibitionist in politics. Since their residence here they have won respect and esteem from all who have the pleasure of their acquaintance for their unblemished characters and strictly upright conduct.

Their son William, of whom we write, was the fourth in order of birth of the eight children born to them. He was well educated in the schools of Iowa, chiefly in Des Moines County, but is very properly considered a self-made young man, as he has thus early in life made his own way to the honorable position that he occupies as a member of one of the most useful of the professions. He is also in part self-educated, as he has picked up a great deal of valuable information by careful study whenever opportunity offered since leaving school, at a time when most young men consider their education completed. He came with his parents to this State in 1882, and for three years was clerk in a drug-store in Ashland, and later in a hardware store. He subsequently learned the trade of printing in the same town, and became thoroughly conversant with the art in all its details. He first ventured into journalism as the editor of the Ashland Herald, which paper he established himself, and ran successfully for one year. He has also worked on the State Journal and other papers, so that he does not solicit the patronage of the public as an inexperienced editor. He is a bright, quick-witted young man, whose ambition and enterprise will undoubtedly win his success.

Mr. Todd was married in Ashland, Jan. 6, 1887, to Miss Kate Borland. She was born near Iowa City, Iowa, in 1870, March 5, and is a daughter of William and Mary (Mugett) Borland. Her father is deceased, his death having occurred in Essex, Page Co., Iowa, in 1879, when he was in the very prime of life, being scarcely forty years of age. He was a native of Vermont, and when a young man went to Iowa, and in the town of Comanche, Clinton County, was married. During the remainder of his life he was engaged in farming. After his death his wife married again, and lives with her second husband, Dwight Davis, at Chatsworth, Ill. Mrs. Todd was reared in Iowa, and being a bright, apt scholar, received a good education, and was well fitted for the profession of teacher, which she adopted on leaving, and taught a private school successfully at home. Her and her husband's home is one of true refinement, and it has been blessed by the birth of a little daughter, Laura Marie. Mr. and Mrs. Todd are Baptists in their religious views, and politically, he is an ardent Prohibitionist, although he conducts his paper as a strictly independent organ, and impartially opens his columns to all parties.

JON. S. M. KIRKPATRICK, late a member of the State Legislature, and one of the most prominent men of Cass County, has for years been intimately connected with the most important interests of Southern Nebraska. He came within its precincts when it was but a Territory, making a claim on the 18th of June, 1855, the first land pre-empted on section 18, in Liberty Precinct, and was the very first settler in the valley of the Weeping Water at this point. He came here when around him was an unbroken waste, before the county could boast of but one log house and a cabin, of sufficient importance to be designated as a village, and when the flourishing city of Plattsmouth was the site of a few little huts, put up by adventurous but impecunious people, who were struggling to delve from the soil enough to keep soul and body together. Indians still roamed over the country, and wild animals also. The outlook was anything but promising, but the subject of this sketch was a man of more than ordinary determination. He had come to stay, and was not to be driven from his purpose by any ordinary circumstances. He clung steadfastly to his resolution to continue and "grow up with the country," at a time when white settlers were frequently making a stampede from the depredations of the Indians, although to tell the truth Mr. Kirkpatrick says that there was a great deal more smoke than fire during those times, and many of the people were unnecessarily alarmed.

Our subject secured his land before the Government survey had been completed. It included one of the finest mill sites along the Weeping Water, which he utilized as soon as possible, erecting a sawmill, from which he began dressing lumber in September, the same year of his arrival. It is hardly necessary to state that the equipments of that mill were somewhat inferior to those of the present time. The year following, however, Mr. K. introduced some new improvements, including a set of burrs, with which he intended to grind wheat, but afterward transferred the property to other parties, before beginning operations as a flour miller. This was the first mill building erected on the Weeping Water, in fact the first mill of any kind built in the county. For some years it accommodated the people for miles around.

At the time of the settlement of Mr. Kirkpatrick there were only about 180 voters in the county. He was readily recognized as a man of more than ordinary ability, and was soon selected to represent the county in the Territorial Legislature at Omaha, being a member of the Senate, and re-elected three times by the Republicans of his district. He was in the Constitutional Conventions of 1871 and 1875, in the latter of which were adopted the existing laws of Nebraska. Prior to this he had represented the people of Cass County in the Territorial Legislature, and afterward was Speaker of the House. Since 1874 he has withdrawn from politics, although often being solicited to return to the field. During his public life it was conceded, even by his enemies, that in his day he was one of the most able parliamentarians of the State.

The public duties of Mr. Kirkpatrick brought him into contact with many eminent men, while his own habit of observation resulted in yielding him a large fund of useful information. He is intimately acquainted, not only with the history of Nebraska, but the general development of the Great West, which has been a subject uppermost in his mind for a long period. A close student and an extensive reader, and a man of decided views, he is one also whose opinions are generally respected, and who has borne no unimportant part in the building up of Cass County, and introducing those measures best calculated for its advancement. The village of Nehawka was platted on his land, and to it he has extended his fostering care. It is evidently destined in the near future to be a business point of no small importance.

The farm of Mr. Kirkpatrick embraces about 300 acres of finely improved land, and upon it are the buildings naturally suggested by the means and requirements of its proprietor—a substantial dwelling with pleasant surroundings, an abundance of fruit and shade trees, which, together with the live stock and farm machinery, fulfill the modern idea of the well-regulated rural estate.

A native of Adams County, Ohio, Mr. Kirkpatrick was born Aug. 31, 1815, and is the scion of an excellent family, being the son of Absalom Kirkpatrick, who was the son of Andrew, the son of William. The latter was the first representative of the family in the United States, crossing from Londonderry, in the North of Ireland, probably during the Colonial days, and settling in Maryland. They were of Scotch ancestry, and like the forefathers of hundreds of other people in this country, were driven from their native land during the religious wars of three centuries ago. William Kirkpatrick must have made his home in Maryland the remainder of his life. His son Andrew enlisted in the Revolutionary War, and participated in the battle of Brandywine, at which he had a brother killed, and also in other important engagements. He married a lady of Welsh descent, Miss Elizabeth Bowen, who was born on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. They subsequently moved to Virginia, and later to Ohio, locating a few miles east of the present city of Cincinnati, where they spent the remainder of their lives, dying when quite aged.

Absalom Kirkpatrick, the father of our subject, was one of the seven sons of Andrew and Elizabeth Kirkpatrick, which completed their family, they having no daughters. The sons all lived to man's estate, were married and became the fathers of families. Absalom, with four other brothers, was subjected to the general call for soldiers in the War of 1812, in which, however, they were not called upon to engage in any active battles, probably being held in the Reserve Corps. Absalom must have attained his majority in the Old Dominion, as he was not married until the removal to Ohio. He was there wedded to Miss Elizabeth Van Pelt, who was born in St. John's, Nova Scotia, where her father had settled about the time of the beginning of the Revolutionary War. Prior to this he had lived on Staten Island. Upon removing from Nova Scotia to the States they settled first on the Nola-chucky, a branch of the Tennessee River, in Tennessee, whence they removed to Ohio, where the father, Tunis Van Pelt, died soon afterward.

Absalom Kirkpatrick and his wife began their wedded life together on a farm in Ohio, where they lived until after the birth of all their children. They then changed their residence to Montgomery County, Ind., where they spent the remainder of their days, not far from the town of Crawfordsville. The father died in 1855, at the age of sixty-eight years. He was a man of strong character and fine intelligence, and was prominent in public affairs. The mother after the death of her husband made her home with her son A. F., at the old homestead, and passed away in 1863, at the advanced age of eighty years. She was in all respects the suitable companion of her husband, being a lady of more than ordinary intelligence, high minded, with cultivated tastes, and was a beautiful singer.

The subject of this sketch was the fourth child and second son of his parents, whose family included five sons and three daughters. Of this large family only two sons are surviving, S. M. and his brother C. Q., of Lafayette, Ind. Our subject lived in Ohio until a lad of fourteen years, where he began the rudiments of a practical education. He removed with his parents to Indiana, and from his youth up has been a lover of books, and by this means added to his store of knowledge when he could no longer attend school. He has always entertained an especial interest in matters of history, and there are few men of the present day possessing a more complete store of general information.

The marriage of Hon. S. M. Kirkpatrick and Miss Elizabeth C. McMillin was celebrated at the home of the bride in Crawfordsville, Ind., Oct. 11, 1836. Mrs. K. was born in 1816, in Campbell County, Tenn., and brought up in Tazewell County, Va., and accompanied her mother to Indiana when fifteen years old, in the fall of 1830. Later she spent one and one-half years in Louisa County, Iowa, where Mr. K. was engaged in merchandising, and where Mrs. Kirkpatrick died, together with their only child, in September, 1839.

Mr. Kirkpatrick contracted a second marriage, in Thornton, Ind., April 1, 1841, with Miss Elizabeth Craig. This lady was born in Adams County, Ohio, May 6, 1823, and is the daughter of Robert Craig, a native of County Down, Ireland. Robert Craig, the father of Mrs. K., was of Scotch ancestry, and her mother, Sarah Kerr, the daughter of Paul Kerr and Jane Weir, who were married on the Atlantic Ocean while coming to America. Many of their descendants became prominent people, and are now scattered in various parts of the Union. One cousin has for forty years been a resident of Canton, China, belonging to the American Foreign Mission.

Mr. Craig emigrated to the United States when a child, and was reared by an uncle in Pennsylvania. There also he was married, later moved to Ohio, and thence to Indiana. He died in Boone County, that State, when a very old man, aged ninety-three years. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was well reared and educated, and is a very intelligent lady, possessing all the womanly virtues. Of her union with our subject there have been born ten children, two of whom are deceased: Sarah V., who died when three years old, and Julia F., who died in infancy. The survivors are recorded as follows: Edwin A. married Miss Oella D. Black, daughter of Dr. John Black, of Plattsmouth, and is engaged in the grain trade at Nehawka; John M. married Miss Cornelia F. Goodrich, and is carrying on farming extensively in Wheeler County, this State, where he owns a large amount of land; Elizzie H. is the wife of Orlando Tefft, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume; Lee C. is residing at the home of his parents; William W. married Miss Maggie Gaffney, and is farming in Wheeler County; Robert C., Mary S. and Kate L. are at home with their parents. Mary is a student of Lincoln University.

VALENTINE HAY, a well-to-do farmer and stock-raiser, operating 160 acres of land on section 1 of Stove Creek Precinct, is one of the prosperous and reliable citizens of the community, and a successful agriculturist. He was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, July 28, 1814. His parents, Andrew and Mary (Barrer) Hay, were born in Germany, and spent their entire lives there.

His father was a blacksmith and farmer, and lost his life by accident while working at his former occupation, in the year 1836, when fifty-three years of age. His mother survived until 1870, dying at the ripe old age of eighty-one years. Both were members of the Catholic Church, and lived consistent Christian lives. They were the parents of eleven children, namely: Anthon, and Peter, dead; Valentine; Mary, dead; Catherine; Andrew, dead; Barbara, George, Theresa, Mary and John. Valentine Hay, an uncle of our subject, was Colonel in Napoleon Bonapart's army for seven years.

The subject of our sketch was educated in his native country, and at the age of twelve years was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith's trade. Eight years later he began as journeyman blacksmith, traveling the first year in Germany, and the three ensuing years in France and Switzerland. In 1840 he emigrated to the United States, sailing from Havre de Grace on the ship "Louis Phillippe," and after a voyage of twenty-one days landed at New York City. Engaging in blacksmithing there, he continued until 1847, when he started a smithy of his own in Sodus, Wayne County, that State, where he remained until 1855. Mr. Hay then bought a farm of sixty acres and worked on it two years. In 1857 he bought seventy acres of land situated nine miles from Milwaukee, Wis., and there staid two years, engaged in farming and blacksmithing. Moving from there to Pekin, Ill., our subject built a shop and worked at his trade two years, then bought a farm in Tazewell County, the same State, where he remained until 1872. Desiring to try farming in a country peculiarly adapted to it, our subject came to Nebraska with a team (his wife coming by rail), crossed the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, then kept on to Weeping Water, where he rented land for two years. He had previously bought 160 acres of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, in Stove Creek Precinct, and in 1874 he moved onto it. It was in its primitive condition, but with the help of his sons, he has eliminated a fine productive farm from the raw prairie, set out six acres of forest trees, fenced the land, and built a good house, barn and other out-buildings, hauling the lumber from Nebraska City. He carries on general farming and stock-raising, having a herd of fine Polled-Angus cattle, hogs of the Poland-China breed, and several head of magnificent Norman horses.

The marriage of our subject with Miss Saloma Foulstick took place in Lyons, N. Y., June 22, 1846. Mrs. Hay was born in Alsace, Germany, Nov. 9, 1826, and came to America with her parents when three years of age. Her death occurred at the home-stead in Stove Creek Precinct, Aug. 24, 1888. To her and her husband were born ten children, namely: W. H., Mary, D. E., George A., C. V., P. E., J. T., Lucy, E. B. and L. A. The eldest son of our subject, William H. Hay, was born in Wayne County, N. Y., Jan. 31, 1847, and was ten years old when his parents moved to Wisconsin. He attended school in New York and afterward in Wisconsin. He then went with his parents to Illinois, where he managed the farm while his father worked at blacksmithing. After the war broke out William enlisted regularly ever year, but each time was rejected on account of his small stature. When finally accepted he enlisted in the 11th Illinois Cavalry, but was transferred to the 5th Illinois Cavalry, was mustered into service at Peoria, and sent to Camp Butler under A. J. Smith, and was then ordered to Memphis. It being near the close of the war he was out skirmishing most of the time. He took part in a raid into Arkansas, and was then on detached duty until honorably discharged in July, 1865. He has since then remained with his father and been his mainstay, he having set out the groves and orchard, and lent great assistance in all the improvements that have been made. The personal property on the place he owns in partnership with him. He is a broom manufacturer by trade, has a machine, and turns out his own brooms. He is highly esteemed for his ability, industry and genuine worth, and is a prominent and influential citizen, and is now serving his fourth year as School Treasurer. He is a member of the G. A. R., and Past Senior Vice Commander of LaFayette Post No. 61, at Weeping Water. In politics he is a strong Republican, and has been delegate to State and County Conventions. He was never married.

Mr. George A. Hay, a merchandise clerk of Wabash, Neb., married Miss Eliza Cowel; they have five children, namely: Adele, Nellie, Hurbert, Leo and an infant. C. V. Hay, who clerks for E. Day, in Weeping Water, married Miss Maud Church; they have one child, an infant. P. E. Hay, a farmer in Weeping Water Precinct, married Mary Philpott; they have two children, Frank and Joe. Lucy Hay married Ernest Zimmerman, a druggist of Morton, Ill.; they have three children—Ernest, Dora and an infant. J. T. Hay is a grocer in Broken Bow, Neb.; E. B. Hay is a farmer in Weeping Water Precinct. The others are at home.

Our subject is an industrious man who satisfactorily performs the duties falling on him as a law-abiding citizen. In political views he coincides with the principles promulgated by the Republican party, and firmly upholds them by voice and vote. He has served as Road Supervisor, and takes a general interest in precinct affairs. He is a devout member of the German Evangelical Church, where his wife was also a communicant, and generously assists in supporting it.

JACOB VALLERY, SR., is a prominent and influential citizen of Cass County, and it is with great pleasure that we present a review of his life to the patrons of this work. He is extensively engaged in stock-raising, and in other agricultural pursuits in Plattsmouth Township, where he has a large and valuable farm of 1,000 acres.

Mr. Vallery was born in Bavaria, Germany, in a place known as Rhine Falls, Aug. 8, 1813. He was well educated in the German and English branches under the compulsory educational laws of his native land. After leaving school he was apprenticed to a tailor, and engaged in that trade in his native country until he came to the United States in 1833 for the laudable purpose to make more of his life than he could have done in the Fatherland. He located in Pike County, Ohio, and in 1840 was there married to Mary Vallery. She has indeed been to him a true helpmate, and of their happy wedded life eight children have been born, seven of whom survive, and the following is recorded of them: John R. died Nov. 17, 1888; he was a resident of this county. Christina is the widow of Peter Rummell; Mary is the widow of Charles Guthman; Charlotte, who was the wife of Philip Tritch, died in March, 1875; Louisa is the widow of Lewis Baher, her husband dying June 28, 1882; she has since married, Dec. 8, 1888, Solomon Pitcher; her husband is County Clerk at Sharon, Neb. Jacob W., Peter F. and Conrad are the remaining children. Conrad, Dec. 15, 1888, married Louisa Nieman, of Plattsmouth.

After marriage Mr. Vallery continued to reside in Pike County for several years, and for a long time was engaged in the mercantile business in Picketon and Waverly. He was prominent in public life, his well-known ability, integrity and honorable character gaining him the full confidence of the people. He was elected Sheriff of Pike County, and served until 1844. He was re-elected to that responsible position in 1846, and held the office until 1850. In 1852 he was again elected to the same position, and served for two years. He was appointed Deputy United States Marshal in the Southern District of Ohio under President Buchanan's administration, and was incumbent of that office for four years. In the meantime he was County Assessor for several terms, and also held minor offices. In 1856 he came to Cass County, Neb., and bought some land, and then returned to his home in Ohio. He also bought some land here in 1857. Notwithstanding the wildness of the surrounding country and the thoroughly uncivilized aspect of its environments, Mr. Vallery shrewdly foresaw its ultimate destiny as a great and wealthy State, and determined to cast in his lot with its early pioneers. With that end in view he came here with his family in 1865, to locate permanently, and settled on his present farm, which was then an unbroken prairie. In the years that have followed he has contributed his full share in developing the great agricultural resources of Cass County, and has added much to its material prosperity. He built a house for the shelter of his family that season and began to break the sod. He has replaced that humble dwelling in which he and his family passed the first few years of their life here by a most substantial structure in the shape of a fine large brick house, and he has also built a good barn and other needed farm buildings. He has 1,000 acres in the home farm, all of which is neatly fenced and under excellent tillage, excepting about 300 acres which he devotes to pasturage, as he pays much attention to raising fine stock of good grades, horses, hogs and Short-horn cattle, taking particular care to have only such as he considers the best. He has a good orchard of about 300 trees and also a fine vineyard.

Since taking up his residence in this part of the country Mr. Vallery has taken a conspicuous part in the management of public affairs. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of Nebraska, and has held several responsible county offices. His official career, both in this State and in Ohio, has been marked by the faithful and wise discharge of the duties and responsibilities resting upon him, with the sole view of furthering the interests of his adopted country. In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat, and has been influential in party councils. He has served as a delegate to National Conventions for perhaps forty consecutive years. He was present at the one which nominated McClellan for the Presidency, and he helped to nominate Grover Cleveland, and also to elect him. Mr. Vallery and his amiable wife are devoted members of the German Lutheran Church, in which faith they were reared.

JACOB VALLERY, JR., of Plattsmouth Precinct, represents a valuable homestead of 320 acres, pleasantly located on section 21, of which he took possession in the spring of 1880. He has been a prominent man in this county, to which he came several years before Nebraska was admitted into the Union as a State, and as early as 1856 served three terms as County Commissioner. He has also served six terms as Assessor of Plattsmouth Precinct, and has frequently held other positions of trust and responsibility. His family history is substantially as follows:

Our subject is the son of Peter and Charlotte (Acker) Vallery, and the paternal grandparents were Valentine and Elizabeth (Kroehler) Vallery. These were all natives of the little Kingdom of Bavaria, where the grandparents spent their entire lives. They traced their ancestry to Italy.

The subject of this sketch was born June 12, 1824, in the Kingdom of Bavaria, and came to the United States with his parents in the year 1833, with the three other surviving children of the family. They settled in Pike County, Ohio, where the father engaged in farming on new land, and where he lived a period of twenty-two years, his death taking place in April, 1855. The mother remained a resident of the Buckeye State nearly ten years after the death of her husband, then in February, 1865, joined her son in Nebraska, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jacob Vallery, in Platts-mouth Precinct, Dec. 19, 1882, aged ninety years.

Two of the children born to Peter Vallery and his wife, namely: Peter (1st) and Elizabeth, died in their native Germany. Those coming to America were: Conrad, Mary, Jacob and Peter (2d). Jacob, like his brothers and sisters, was reared in Pike County, Ohio, where he lived until the fall of 1855, then turning his face toward the farther West, he crossed the Mississippi and located in Glenwood, Iowa, where he engaged in general merchandising. In the fall of that same year, going to St. Louis, he purchased a stock of goods, which he shipped to Glenwood, then returning to Pike County, Ohio, secured unto himself a wife and helpmate, being married, Oct. 9, 1885, to Miss Magdalena Feucht.

Mrs. Vallery is the daughter of Frederick and Julia A. (Sohn) Feucht, who, like their daughter, were also natives of Germany, born in the Kingdom of Wurtemberg, and where they spent their entire lives. Mr. and Mrs. Vallery after their marriage proceeded at once to Iowa, but a few weeks later our subject removed his stock of goods to Platts-mouth, and carried on business until the summer of 1856. He then sold his store and purchased a flouring-mill, which he operated for a few years. Then resuming merchandising, he thus occupied himself until the year 1877. His career has been steadily onward and that of a self-made man, as he had no capital to begin with except his persevering disposition and natural energy of character.

His large farm with its improvements indicates in an admirable manner the success with which he has labored.

To Mr. and Mrs. Vallery there were born twelve children, the record of whom is as follows: Charlotte E. became the wife of F. E. White, of Platts-mouth; and Anna J. married Prof. W. W. Drummond; they all live in Platts-mouth. Louisa M. died when about thirteen and a half years old; George W. lives in Wyoming Territory; Ida M., Mrs. D. T. Higginson, is residing in Elmhurst, Ill.; John F. lives in Denver, Col.; Katie, Amelia, Charles A., Maggie, Louis and Tillie are at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Vallery are members in good standing of the German Presbyterian Church, and our subject, socially, is identified with the Masonic fraternity, belonging to the lodge at Platts-mouth. Politically, he gives his support to the Democratic party.

— — — — —

SILAS E. CLEMMONS is a son of one of the early pioneers of Cass County, who came to Nebraska Territory in the fall of 1854, and located on a tract of wild land three miles west of the present city of Rock Bluff. This was prior to the treaty with the Indians, which gave to white men the right to locate claims of 160 acres of land. His father, who secured his first land from a warrant as a soldier of the Mexican War, took possession of his property and hired a man to settle on another half-section adjoining. He thus secured by pre-emption 320 acres as soon as it came into market, and as soon as possible began in earnest the struggle with the primitive soil. Our subject was then a lad nine years of age, having been born April 18, 1845, in Ohio. He remembers distinctly the first humble dwelling occupied by the family in Nebraska, and which was a cabin of round logs with clapboard roof and a puncheon floor, and a chimney built outside of sticks and clay.

This cabin was occupied by the pioneers perhaps a year, when a more pretentious dwelling was constructed of hewn logs and divided into two rooms, making quite a stylish residence for those days. Amid these surroundings Silas E. Clemmons was reared to manhood, and there the parents spent the remainder of their days, each dying when about seventy-seven years of age. During the first years of their settlement in Nebraska there were few white people within the Territory, but Indians were plentiful, and upon one occasion 500 of them camped near the house. They offered no violence however, and no annoyance except to steal and beg. Timber wolves and wildcats were abundant. Father Clemmons, as he was affectionately called by the people around, became one of the most prominent men in this community, and was greatly respected and beloved, as was also his estimable wife, who for many years was an exemplary member of the Christian Church.

To John and Rutherford (Peterson) Clemmons, the parents of our subject, there were born thirteen children, twelve of whom lived to mature years. Of these Silas E. was the twelfth in order of birth, and eight of the family are still living. The paternal grandfather, John Clemmons, Sr., died at the home of his son John, Jr., and there being no burying-ground in that vicinity, his remains were laid to rest in a quiet spot on the home farm, which has since been used and kept up as a public cemetery. John, Jr., and his estimable wife were laid by the side of Grandfather Clemmons, whom it is believed was the first white citizen of Cass County to receive sepulture within its borders.

Our subject thus spent his boyhood and youth amid the wild scenes of pioneer life on the frontier, and when reaching man's estate began to make preparations for the establishment of a home of his own. One of the most important steps to this end was his marriage with Miss Caroline Gapen, which was celebrated at the home of the bride in Rock Bluff Township, May 3, 1870. This lady is the daughter of John and Matilda (Garlo) Gapen, and was born June 12, 1843, in Virginia. The parents of Mrs. Clemmons were natives of Pennsylvania and are now dead. Their household consisted of thirteen children.

To Mr. and Mrs. Clemmons there have been born two children, one of whom died unnamed in infancy. Their only child and daughter, Cora A., was born on the 7th of March, 1872, and is now at home. Mr. Clemmons before his marriage purchased eighty acres of land on section 27, upon which he settled. He has the whole enclosed with good fencing, has erected a comfortable set of frame buildings, and has brought the land to a productive condition, a part being devoted to general farming and quite a large area to pasturage. He keeps good grades of cattle and swine and the horses necessary for the farm work. Belonging to one of the best and most substantial families of the county, he occupies a good position socially as well as on account of his sterling worth of character. Like his father before him, he is an uncompromising Democrat politically, a man decided in his views and one whose opinions are generally respected.

HENRY ROELOFSZ is recognized among the people in the southwestern part of this county as one of its most enterprising merchants, and he is one of the very first settlers of Tipton Precinct. He was the second man to take up land within its borders, and wisely retains possession of a goodly amount, being now the owner of 360 acres, the operations of which he superintends in connection with his mercantile business.

Of Holland-Dutch ancestry and parentage, our subject was born near the famous city of Amsterdam, June 18, 1844. Of his parents, Peter and Emley (Phillips) Roelofs, a sketch will be found elsewhere in this volume. The father was a man of consequence in his native town, which was the same as that in which his son Henry was born, and the owner of a castle surrounded by the traditional moat and the other relics of feudal days, many of which are still remembered by our subject.

In the fall of 1859 the Roelofs family, parents and children, emigrated to the United States, Henry being then a lad fifteen years of age. They embarked at Liverpool on a sailing-vessel, and after a voyage of six weeks landed in New York City. Thence they proceeded directly westward to Iowa, and the father later took up land in Marion County, which in due time he transformed into a good homestead, and which was familiarly known as the Crab Apple Farm.

They sojourned there a period of five years. In the summer of 1862 the family met its first great affliction in the death of the mother, and the household was broken up.

Mr. R., after the death of his mother, started out for himself, working on a farm by the month. He had only attended school about six months after coming to America. After occupying himself as we have stated for three months he purchased a yoke of oxen and employed himself in teaming four months. He then changed his occupation and began his initial experience in mercantile business by engaging as clerk in a dry-goods store in Pella, Iowa, where he was employed until the spring of 1864.

Young Roelofsz, a lad thoughtful and ambitious beyond his years, desirous of seeing something more of the Western country, started out in the spring of the year mentioned, a youth of twenty, with three others, for the Pacific Slope. Their outfit consisted of a four-horse team and the various accoutrements they would require on an overland journey. After reaching Ft. Laramie they "fell out," and our subject engaged to drive a team of oxen for other parties through to Virginia City, Mont. After much labor he finally landed safely at his destination, and subsequently employed himself in the hotels there and at various other occupations until the spring of 1867. He had in the meantime learned the baker's trade, and his western expedition had resulted quite satisfactorily financially.

In the fall of the year mentioned Mr. Roelofsz returned to Marion County, Iowa, where he spent the winter following, and in the spring of 1868, a youth of twenty-four years, started out once more overland with a team, but this time for the young State of Nebraska. Coming to Tipton Precinct, this county, he pre-empted eighty acres of land on section 14, and kept bachelor's hall one year. In the meantime he had begun to make provision for the maintenance of a wife and helpmate, and the marriage of himself and Miss Nancy E. Grove was celebrated April 24, 1869. Mrs. Roelofsz was born in Mahaska County, Iowa, in 1851, and is the daughter of James and Nancy (Price) Grove, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter born in Virginia, near the Blue Ridge Mountains. The Grove family is of German descent, and the father of Mrs. R. was a farmer and teamster combined, and while pursuing this latter occupation frequently drove six horses.

The Grove family subsequently changed their residence from Pennsylvania to Illinois, and located in Champaign County. Here the father engaged in farming and teaming as before, but later removed to Tazewell County, Ill., settling near the present flourishing city of Peoria. Still not satisfied with his surroundings, he pushed on westward across the Mississippi, and took up his residence among the pioneers of Mahaska County, Iowa. He was one of the first settlers of that region, and securing 160 acres of Government land, battled with the elements of a new soil in the Hawkeye State until the spring of 1869, when he started on another pilgrimage, coming this time overland with teams to this county. He has since been a resident of Tipton Precinct, where he has a good homestead of eighty acres. A man of more than ordinary activity and industry, he has effected all the improvements which we see around him to-day, and with his aged partner, is passing his declining years in ease and comfort. Father Grove is seventy-two years of age, and his estimable wife has just rounded up her threescore years and ten. Both are members of the German Baptist Church. Their children were named respectively: Dicie H., John H., Ollie C., Maria, James E., Susan and Nancy E. J.

Mr. and Mrs. Roelofsz began their wedded life at the homestead which they now occupy, in a style corresponding to their means and surroundings, which were widely different from those of to-day. Mr. R. has made good improvements, setting out forest and fruit trees, having in groves and his orchard about six acres. The present residence was completed in the spring of 1878. The barns and out-buildings compare favorably with those of the intelligent men around him. In 1882 he added 200 acres to his first purchase, this latter lying on section 11, and also in a good state of cultivation. Later he purchased eighty acres on section 24. This also is improved and is operated by a renter.

Our subject, in the spring of 1880, established a store of general merchandise at Sun Light in connection with the post-office. He put up the building and still owns the property; he carried there a stock of about $1,000. In the spring of 1887 he moved his goods to the young and enterprising little town of Eagle, where he also owns his building and lot, besides his residence and three other lots. He also has a lumber office and lot on Main street. He has increased his stock considerably, and enjoys a good patronage from the people of this section.

Among the prominent men of the Republican party of this locality Mr. Roelofsz occupies no unimportant position. He is frequently chosen as a delegate to the various conventions, and is an earnest worker for the principles in which he believes. Both he and his estimable wife are members of the Congregational Church. Mr. R. is no sectarian, but believes in the general establishment of churches, and assists others besides his own. He is usually connected with the School Board of his district, and was Postmaster at Sun Light for a period of seven years.

The household circle of Mr. and Mrs. Roelofsz was completed by the birth of six children, who were named respectively: Minnie M., James P., Cora, Nettie B., Amanda and Ettie. The eldest daughter, a bright and interesting young lady, officiates as clerk in her father's store. The others make their home with their parents, the younger ones attending school. Mr. R. received very little schooling in his youthful days, but has been a reader and an observer, and has thus secured a useful fund of information. There are few men with whom it is more pleasurable or profitable to converse.

JOSEPH W. COX. Emerson justly says that "all history is only the biography of men." The troubles, trials and labors of one individual are but a specimen of the efforts of many who have to fight the battle of life and go down to their graves unchronicled. In listening to the life story of this honored resident of Avoca Precinct, the truth of this statement appears most forcible, as teaching the discouraged hope under the most untoward circumstances, and how perseverance under the greatest difficulties eventually conquers.

Mr. Cox came to the Territory of Nebraska as early as 1867, and began life as a farmer on rented land, which he operated a few years, and was then eaten out by grasshoppers. He then again worked as a renter until he could secure land of his own, first selecting 160 acres, upon which he operated a term of years, and began to gain a substantial footing. Later he added eighty acres to his possessions, and has one of the finest farms along the southern line of the county, 240 acres in extent, and located on sections 5 and 6. During his operations of nineteen years upon this farm he has labored early and late for its improvement and cultivation, with results which should be amply satisfactory. He has planted fruit and shade trees, put up substantial buildings, and has a fine apple orchard and a goodly assortment of live stock. His ideas of progress have led him to secure the latest improved farm machinery, and his land under careful and judicious management is the source of a handsome income.

A native of the Buckeye State, our subject was born in Bristol Township, Trumbull County, Sept. 14, 1838. There he spent his boyhood and youth, becoming familiar with farm pursuits and acquiring a practical education in the common schools. He lived there until coming to Nebraska. He is the son of Japheth Cox, a native of the same county in Ohio and born in Bristol Township, where he spent his entire life on the farm of his father, John Cox. The latter settled there in 1805, three years after Ohio had been admitted into the Union as a State.

John Cox, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was a native of York County, Pa., and of English and German ancestry, who were first represented in this country during the Colonial times, when John Cox, Sr., crossed the Atlantic and settled in North Carolina, removing thence to York County, Pa., at an early period in its history. He located in York County, and it will be seen that the name has been familiar in that section of Pennsylvania for several generations.

Grandfather John Cox was reared to manhood in his native county, where he began life as a farmer, and in early manhood, laying aside for a brief time the implements of agriculture, shouldered the musket and did good service as a soldier in the War of 1812. Prior to the close of this conflict he returned to his farm and his family. He married Miss Catherine Bower, of York County, who was also born and reared there, and was of German ancestry. They took up their residence in Bristol Township, Trumbull Co., Ohio, in 1805, and constructed a homestead from the unbroken wilderness, John Cox felling the timber around his cabin home, and his good wife assisting him after the manner of the pioneer women of those times. They remained in Trumbull County, Ohio, until they were gathered to their fathers. Grandfather Cox in 1857, at the advanced age of eighty-five years, came to his death by being burned, his clothes taking fire one night when he had arisen from his bed to procure medicine for a slight ailment. Although so old he was still hale and hearty, the result of a temperate life and correct habits. His aged partner survived him two years, dying at the age of eighty-seven. She was a very bright and intelligent old lady, beloved and admired by all who knew her.

Japheth Cox, the father of our subject, was one of the younger members of a family of ten children, all of whom lived to mature years, were married and reared families of their own. Japheth attained to man's estate with well-developed muscles and a healthy mind, and continued at the old homestead, caring for his parents until his death, which occurred in February, 1855. Although the child of a long-lived pair, he was cut down in his prime, being only forty-one years old. He was a skillful farmer and a capable business man, popular among his neighbors, and in all respects a worthy citizen.

Mrs. Angeline (Webster) Cox, the mother of our subject, was born in March, 1815, in New York, and came from old New England stock, being the daughter of Joseph Webster, who married a Miss Ackley, the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier of considerable consequence on account of his sturdy patriotism and fidelity to duty. The Ackleys were of English descent. Joseph Webster and his wife spent their last days in Trumbull County, Ohio. They were natives of Connecticut, whence they emigrated to Chautauqua County, N. Y., at an early day, and from the Empire State changed their residence to Ohio.

Mrs. Cox at the death of her husband was left with four children, whom she kept together until they had nearly reached years of maturity. She was then married to E. D. Hickley, who died twenty years later, in 1886, at their home in Ohio, and was seventy-six years old. Mrs. Hickley is still living, making her home with one of her younger sons, Emery F., in Trumbull County, Ohio, and is now seventy-four years old.

The subject of this sketch was the eldest of the four children born to his parents, all sons, and was about sixteen years old at the time of his father's death. It naturally fell to his portion to become the support and assistance of his widowed mother, and for some years he discharged these duties in a manner reflecting great credit upon himself. At the age of twenty-four years, desirous of establishing domestic ties of his own, he was united in marriage with Miss Ellen L. Gleason, at the home of the bride, in Ashtabula County, Ohio, April 16, 1862.

Mrs. Cox was born in Berkshire, Mass., Nov. 16, 1838, and is, like her husband, the offspring of substantial New England ancestry, who made their way to the young State of Ohio when a large portion of its territory was a wilderness. Her parents, John and Alvira (Hunter) Gleason, were natives respectively of Connecticut and Massachusetts. The Gleasons came originally from Scotland, whence the family was driven to the North of Ireland in the general hegira of that period consequent upon religious persecution. They were a people unusually intelligent and enterprising as citizens, reliable, honest and industrious, and wherever they settled formed the bone and sinew of their community.

John Gleason, the father of Mrs. Cox, was a carpenter by trade, and leaving his native State when a young man, he went to Massachusetts, where he found his bride. In 1854 they migrated from the Bay State to Ohio, locating in Ashtabula County, where his death took place in 1879, at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. The wife and mother survived her husband until 1882, being then seventy-four years old. Both were for many years members in good standing of the Congregational Church. The father of John Gleason did good service as a soldier in the Revolutionary War.

The wife of our subject was carefully reared by her excellent parents, and was quite young when they made the removal from her native State to Ohio. She is the mother now of three children, all sons—Hardwood J., Richard R. and Frank A. The eldest is a young man of good education, and has followed the profession of a teacher considerably. Mr. Cox has never entertained any desire for official honors, although he keeps himself well posted upon the various questions of the day, and uniformly gives his support to the Republican party. He has served as Assessor in his precinct, and is a man liberal and public-spirited, always to be found on the side of those enterprises calculated to advance the interests of his community. The family comprises a portion of the best element of Cass County, and the homestead is one of the most attractive features in its landscape. In addition to its fertile soil there is a fine rock quarry, the stone from which is utilized not only by the proprietor, but by the people around to excellent advantage.

WILLIAM E. LATTA is familiarly known throughout Rock Bluff Precinct and vicinity as one of its pioneers, and was engaged in general merchandising at Mutray until recently. He had the monopoly of trade, being the sole merchant of the village, is a man remarkably upright in his transactions, and as a natural result enjoyed the esteem and confidence of the community. He sold his store to Mr. John Edmonds, and gave possession Feb. 1, 1889.

The Latta family is of Scotch ancestry, and formed one of the colony of those who were driven from their native soil to the North of Ireland on account of religious persecution. William Latta, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was born in the latter country, and when a mere boy emigrated with his parents to the United States, they locating in Crawford County, Pa. He was there reared to man's estate, married a lady of that region, Miss Jane McConnaha, and reared a fine family of sons and daughters. Among their sons was Robert, the father of our subject, who was born in Crawford County, Pa., about 1821. Robert Latta was reared to manhood in Crawford County, and after his marriage settled in the vicinity of Cincinnati, Ohio, about 1853, where occurred the birth of our subject, William E., July 22, 1854.

The parents of our subject sojourned in the Queen City until about 1858, then started for the West, and crossing the Mississippi went down into the southwestern corner of Iowa, and settled in Page County. From there they removed to Mills County in the same State, and thence in 1861 to the Territory of Nebraska, locating not long afterward on 160 acres of new land on section 27 in Rock Bluff Precinct. There the mother, Mrs. Letitia Latta, died Feb. 17, 1870. In the year 1871, Robert Latta rented his farm, and afterward proceeded to Chicago and engaged at his trade of carpenter, which he had learned during his early manhood. He only lived a short time afterward, dying in April of that same year. The parental household included seven children, six of whom are living. Calista married Sidney Miner, and they are residing on their farm in Rock Bluff Precinct, George A. is a resident of Webster County, Neb.; William E., of our sketch, was the third child; Lizzie died when a little child two years of age; James resides in Lincoln, Neb.; Samuel and Elbert are residents of Cass County. In the year 1875 our subject purchased the interests of the heirs in the home farm, and resided upon it until the spring of 1888. Then, leaving it in the hands of a tenant he invested a part of his capital in a stock of merchandise, and established himself in business at Murray. He had a good trade among the people surrounding him, and being courteous and accommodating, was popular among his fellow-citizens. The business was first established in 1884 by his brother Samuel, and his uncle, Samuel G. Latta, of whom he purchased stock and property.

The marriage of William E. Latta and Miss Sarah Current was celebrated at the home of the bride in Liberty Precinct, Cass Co., Neb., Oct. 1, 1873. Mrs. Latta is the daughter of James A. and Caroline (Colburn) Current, who are natives of Virginia and Indiana respectively, and are now living in Elmwood, this county. Of this union there have been born three children—Letta O., James Oscar and Robert Bruce. The latter died Feb. 18, 1885, when twenty-two months old. Mr. Latta, politically, is an earnest Republican, and his estimable wife is a member in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CONRAD H. VALLERY was one of the first white children born in Cass County, his birth having taken place in Plattsmouth Precinct, April 26, 1858, his parents having been early settlers of this part of Nebraska. He was reared amid the pioneer scenes of the early years of the settlement of the State, and in due time took his place among those who were developing and sustaining its wonderful agricultural resources. He is now the proud possessor of one of the best tilled and most productive farms to be found in his native town.

The parents of Conrad Vallery, Theobalt and Wilhelmina (Mutz) Vallery, were born in Germany, and coming to the United States when young located in Pike County, Ohio. They remained residents of that county until 1855, and in that year sought a new home in the wilds of the Territory of Nebraska, and thus became pioneers of Cass County. They continued living here until death, the father dying Oct. 29, 1864, in the prime of life, being but forty-two years of age, and the mother following him a few years later, her death occurring Oct. 22, 1877, at the age of fifty-eight. Mr. Vallery was identified with the agricultural interests of Cass County during his few years' residence here, and but for his untimely death would probably have placed himself among the leading farmers of his neighborhood, by whom he was greatly respected for his many good qualities. The following is the record of the eight children born to himself and wife: Mary married Harry Wright, and is living in the Black Hills; Jacob R. is living in this county; Catherine, who married Hiram Adams, died April 16, 1875, aged twenty-five years and eleven months, leaving one child; Henry lives in Saunders County, Neb.; Christina married George Sigler, and lives in Custer County, Neb.; Peter is in the Black Hills; our subject and Theobalt.

The subject of this sketch was married, Oct. 29, 1877, to Miss Frances Sprague, daughter of Howard and Catherine (Spicer) Sprague. This marriage has been blessed to them by the birth of five children, all of whom are living, namely: Myrtle B., Alfa M., Jessie H., Albert W. and Blanche. Mrs. Vallery's parents were natives of New York and Pennsylvania respectively. The father is now living in Montana. The mother died when Mrs. Vallery was a little girl, and she then went to live with her elder sister, Martha Barr, in Montana. Her sister's family soon after returned to Cass County, where they still live, and where Mrs. V. was married. The mother died in Iowa where Mrs. Vallery was born.

Mr. Vallery has a farm of 120 acres of exceedingly fertile land, which, by his own skill and labor, he has improved into a valuable piece of property. Our subject having been born during the first decade of the settlement of Nebraska, its pioneer days had not passed away during the years of his boyhood, and he has a distinct remembrance of the times and scenes of those days, and converses very interestingly upon them. He has a vivid recollection of the Indians, who were then numerous in this part of the country, coming out in war paint and frightening the white settlers from their homes to flee to the town of Plattsmouth for protection. He remembers well when deer, antelopes and other wild animals roamed over the wild, sparsely settled country. He says that in those primitive days, when the necessaries of life were hard to obtain and the luxuries were unattainable, the people living so far from the great centers of civilization cheerfully wore the coarsest and plainest clothing. The men and boys wore coarse cotton jeans, and the boys would go barefooted excepting in the winter season, when they wore shoes of the coarsest material. The incongruities of bare feet and paper collars were often observed as features of the Sunday costumes of the youngsters in pioneer days. The girls of that period wore on Sundays dresses made of coarse brown drilling. Our subject has witnessed the evolution of society in this part of the country from its primitive condition to its present high status, and he is contributing to the material welfare of Cass County. His honorable course thus far in life has won for him the respect and friendship of his neighbors. Politically, he affiliates with the Democrats, being an earnest supporter of that party.

JOHAN E. ANDRUS. The subject of this sketch, and one of the substantial citizens of Tipton Precinct, was born near Canton, Bradford Co., Pa., Nov. 20, 1847. His mother died when he was five years old, and he then went to live with his sister, Hulda L. Wilhelm, on the farm until he was nine years old. Leaving her he went to live with a gentleman by the name of Aaron Barns, and remained with him until he was twelve years old, and then went to Bradford, in Pennsylvania, and made his home with an uncle until he was seventeen years old. Then he began life for himself by working for others. He began by chopping wood for his board and going to school. The next spring, in April, he began working for Dwight Freeman, where he remained for three years. In the spring of 1859 he went to Marengo, Iowa Co., Iowa, where he worked on a farm, but at the expiration of three years he determined to try his luck in this State and secure a home of his own. He started by rail to Plattsmouth in the fall of 1870. He went on to Tipton Precinct, where he remained over winter with his sister. In the spring he purchased a claim of eighty acres of land, his present place of residence, for which he paid $600. There were no improvements on this claim, but he set to work at once with a will to make his claim second to none in value in the county; a glance over his well-improved acres will attest his success in this undertaking. He has three acres of grove and an orchard of 200 fine trees. He has the advantage of running water on his place, a branch of the Nemaha River. He has paid his whole attention to his farm, improving it in every possible direction, so that it is now in a very high state of cultivation, and is a continual compliment to the energy and skill of its owner. In 1874 he rented his place and went back to Iowa, where he worked during the year 1875, then came back, and in November, 1884, purchased 160 acres in Red Willow County, which he has sold. He improved his farm in 1887 by putting up a nice new house, barns and other necessary buildings.

There is a new grove of ash timber which has sprung up spontaneously on the place of our subject. He takes great pride in his fine herd of graded Short-horn cattle and Poland-China hogs, which is certainly testified by their appearance, which shows the care lavished upon them, and he has also seven head of graded horses.

Our subject was married in Pilot Township, Iowa County, Jan. 28, 1873, to Miss Exona Harbour, who was born in Ohio. They are blessed with three children: Charles, who is deceased; Norah D., nine years old, and Arthur W., four months old. In the largeness of their hearts they have taken a child from the Home of the Friendless, at Lincoln, and named him Charles Andrus; he is five years old. Our subject was a member of the School Board for five years, has been Superintendent of the Sunday-school at Union and Eagle for nine years. He takes a lively interest in politics and is an active Republican. He is a gentleman who believes in farming a little land and farming it well. He owns only eighty acres at present, provided with all the modern improved implements for properly cultivating and caring for the various crops to the best advantage. He is a man who deserves and has the respect and confidence of all his neighbors, and strict and unswerving integrity marks all his transactions. A view of his neat and well-kept home appears on another page.

JACOB J. BAHR. Few men along the southern line of Cass County are more widely or favorably known than the subject of this sketch. During his nine years' residence in Tipton Precinct he has been closely identified with its growth and prosperity. He represents real estate to the amount of 320 acres of improved land. It is acknowledged by every intelligent individual that a good wife exercises a vast influence in the building up of a home and its general appearance. Mrs. Bahr in this respect has been the most efficient helpmate of her husband, and being a lady of fine tastes, and believing with St. Paul that "cleanliness is next to godliness," there are few more pleasant places as a resort for both friends and neighbors than the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bahr, while the stranger is treated with the courtesy inseparable from good breeding.

Our subject was born in what was then the Province of Lorraine, France, near the city of Salzburg, April 30, 1830, and in that beautiful stretch of country of which his parents, Jacob and Sophia (Young) Bahr, were also natives. The paternal grandfather, Jacob Bahr, Sr., a native of the same Province, was of German ancestry, and a farmer by occupation. He was a man highly respected in his community, active and industrious, of the strictest integrity, and lived to the advanced age of ninety years. Grandfather Nicholas Young, also a native of Lorraine, was a well-to-do farmer, and emigrated to America in 1831, locating on a tract of land not far from that of the Bahr family, in Jefferson County, N. Y. He there spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1849, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. His estimable wife, Mrs. Caroline (Martsloff) Young, a native of Salzburg, died in 1860, aged ninety-three years.

The father of our subject carried on farming in a modest way until 1831, and when his son Jacob J. was an infant of a few months, resolved to seek his fortunes in the United States. Gathering together his family and personal effects he embarked on the long voyage, and arrived safely upon American soil, locating not long afterward upon a farm in the vicinity of Lora, Jefferson Co., N. Y. He was successful in his labors as a tiller of the soil, and moved from there to Fayette County, Iowa, but only lived six months after going to Iowa, where he died in 1849, at the advanced age of seventy-three years. He had been a man of large and ripe experience, and during his sojourn in his native country served as a soldier in the French Army under Napoleon Bonaparte, being present at the surrender of his army at the close of his last disastrous campaign. His superior officers would gladly have promoted him, but on account of the responsibilities in connection therewith he declined the proffered honor. He was under fire in many a hard-fought battle and upon one occasion was saved from being killed by the ball passing through his knapsack. He was thrown down by the concussion, but escaped uninjured. It was not long after the close of the war that Jacob Bahr, the father of our subject, decided to cross the Atlantic. In the meantime he had engaged quite extensively in the distillation of oils from various herbs, having his own apparatus. The family after coming to the United States sojourned in Jefferson County, N. Y., and the father carried on farming and stock-raising, building up a good homestead from a tract of indifferently cultivated land, and instituting many good improvements. In the course of years his children all left home to start out for themselves, and the father was finally persuaded to join his son, our subject, in Iowa, selling out his property interests in the Empire State. He died in Iowa in the fall of 1849, after he had reached his fourscore years and two. The mother had died in 1842 at the age of forty-four years.

The six children of the parental family of our subject were named respectively: Caroline, who died when about forty-four years old; Sophia, Catherine, Jacob J., our subject; Julia and Frederick. The latter, during the late Civil War, enlisted in the 92d New York Infantry, which was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, was captured by the rebels, and finally sent home on parole. He is now living in Minnesota. The other surviving children are located in various States.

Jacob J. Bahr, our subject, was reared to man's estate in Jefferson County, N. Y., pursuing his first studies in the district school, and later attending the seminary at Grosvenor. He completed his studies when about eighteen years old, and then began learning the carpenter trade, serving his apprenticeship and later operating as a journeyman. At the age of twenty-two he started out for himself by purchasing a tract of land in New York State, the improvement of which he carried on in connection with his trade, and remained a resident of the Empire State until the spring of 1865.

Mr. Bahr now decided to see what lay beyond the Mississippi, and migrated to Fayette County, Iowa. For two years afterward he worked at his trade in Fayette, but in the meantime secured 380 acres of raw land in that county. He moved upon this and began farming and stock-raising, laboring there for a period of fifteen years and effecting good improvements. He was, however, not quite satisfied with his condition in the Hawkeye State, and in the spring of 1880 disposed of his interest there and came to this county, locating on section 17, which was then a wild and uncultivated tract. The first few years of his residence here he experienced the hardships and difficulties common to pioneer life, but happily possessed unbounded perseverance, and being blessed with good health, has come out of it all with flying colors. It is difficult to believe that the beautiful farm, with its appurtenances, is the work of nine years.

Mr. Bahr completed his present residence in 1880, and has set out three acres of forest trees and 300 apple trees, besides erecting the barn and other out-buildings necessary for the storage of grain and the shelter of stock. The land is supplied with running water—a branch of Camp Creek. The farm is devoted largely to the raising of fine stock, including cattle, horses and swine. Three teams are required to operate it, and besides these Mr. Bahr has ten fine horses. His sons labor on the farm while he works considerably as a carpenter and builder. His mechanical skill has been of good service in the construction of his homestead, saving him hundreds of dollars, while at the same time he has placed around him the various little conveniences which have so much to do with the happiness and comfort of a home.

The marriage of our subject with Miss Lucy A. Timmerman was celebrated June 9, 1859, at the home of the bride in Lora, N. Y. This lady is the daughter of Lawrence and Polly (Conley) Timmerman, and comes of a family thoroughly Americanized, her paternal grandfather, Henry Timmerman, having served in the Revolutionary War. He died in New York State about 1834. Grandfather Solomon Conley was a native of Canada, whence he removed early in life to New York State, settling in Jefferson County, where he spent the remainder of his days. Grandmother Margaret (Sheldon) Timmerman was a native of Herkimer County, N. Y., and died in 1831. The maternal grandmother, Elizabeth (Howe) Conley, was of English descent, and a native of Brockville, Province of Ontario, Canada. She was left an orphan at an early age, and was reared by Shakers. She also spent her last days in Jefferson County, N. Y.

The father of Mrs. Bahr was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., in 1791, and when a youth of nineteen years enlisted in the American Army, serving all through the War of 1812. He had lived in Jefferson County from a lad of seven years, at which time his parents changed their residence to that county. They were among the earliest settlers there, locating in the forest when there were no signs of a white man, but lying around were various Indian relics, arrow heads and other implements of savage warfare. The father cleared a farm from the wilderness, and after bringing the land to a state of cultivation made a speciality of stock-raising. He passed away in October, 1883, at a ripe old age.

The mother of Mrs. Bahr was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada, in 1801; she died in May, 1875, some years prior to the decease of her husband. They were good people in the strictest sense of the word, and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The seven children of the household were named respectively: Mary A.; Abigail, who died when about fifty-nine years old; Caroline, Jane and Frederick; Lucy A. and Melissa M.

Mrs. Lucy A. Bahr was born in Jefferson County, N. Y., July 30, 1833, and received a good education, completing her studies in the High School at Evans' Mills. She remained a member of her father's household until her marriage. Of this union there have been born seven children: Eva M. is the wife of Mory Alexander, a well-to-do farmer of Lincoln County, this State; they have two children—Frankie and Freddie. William A. is farming in Tipton Precinct, this county; Polly S. married Mr. William Schcorp, a grain buyer of Eagle; Ada M., Mrs. J. D. Freeman, lives with her husband on a farm in Banner County, Neb.; they have one child, Orval V. Fred J., Orson K. and Thomas J. are at home with their parents.

Mr. and Mrs. B. are members in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, attending services at Eagle, and contributing liberally and cheerfully to the upbuilding of the Master's cause. Mr. Bahr was originally a Whig, and later affiliated with the Republicans, identified himself for a long time with the Greenbackers, but finally wheeled back into the ranks of the old Republican party, which he thinks is about the only place of political safety. He has been quite prominent in local affairs, officiated as Justice of the Peace, Postmaster and Supervisor, and is usually connected with the School Board of his district. Socially, he belongs to the Masonic fraternity, being a member of the lodge at Greenwood. A man upright and correct in his business methods, hospitable and kind in his intercourse with his neighbors, he is held in high esteem, and amply worthy of representation in a work designed to commemorate the early settlers and prominent citizens of Cass County.

JAMES G. ROMINE. The main points in the history of this highly respected resident of South Bend Precinct, whose portrait is presented on the opposite page, are substantially as follows: The second son of John and Maria (Romine) Romine, he was born in Rappahannock County, Va., April 30, 1825, and was one of a family of ten children, six sons and four daughters, of whom three brothers, one elder and two younger than our subject, are deceased. The others are residents mostly of Virginia.

Mr. Romine remained with his father on the farm until twenty-five years of age, then entered the employ of one Crittendon as an overseer of slaves, and with whom he remained two years, at a salary of $150 per annum. At the expiration of this time he returned to his father, with whom he remained until the spring of 1852. He now decided upon a change of location, and securing transportation for his trunk he started, in company with others, on foot, over the Blue Ridge and Alleghany Mountains to Wheeling, before the days of railroads, and at that point embarked on the steamboat "Reindeer," bound down the Ohio River to Cairo, thence up the Mississippi and Missouri to St. Joseph, Mo., where they arrived in the latter part of May.

From that point Mr. Romine proceeded to Savannah, about seventeen miles from St. Joseph, and engaged to work with a farmer by the name of Kleiser, an old Virginian, with whom he sojourned one month for the consideration of $12. Mr. R. then formed a partnership with one G. D. Connelly, whose acquaintance he had formed on the way up the river from St. Louis, and who was engaged in the leather business. Purchasing a tannery in Andrew County, Mo., they started in business, also selling boots and shoes, and continued together about eighteen months at that point. Then selling out they proceeded to the vicinity of Sciola, Montgomery Co., Iowa, where they engaged in farming and stock-raising, and also carried on a grocery and provision store about two years, and until the fall of 1856.

Our subject and his partner now sold out again, and still in company came to this county and engaged in farming and stock-raising near the then unimportant town of Rock Bluff. In the latter part of November, 1856, they crossed the Missouri River at Plattsmouth with the last of their cattle, meeting with great difficulty both in getting themselves and their animals over the river, and landing about one mile below the regular landing place, the river being full of mush ice and exceedingly difficult to cross. Messrs. Romine and Connelly had already purchased of one Abraham Towner a claim of 320 acres of land for $2,000, and which lay just south of Rock Bluff. This they afterward secured by pre-empting each a quarter-section, and paying the Government therefor $1.25 per acre. The winter which followed was exceedingly severe, with deep snows, and in consequence the greater portion of their stock perished. In 1859 the partnership was dissolved, and each engaged in business for himself.

In the spring of 1861 Mr. Romine began freighting from the Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains, making his headquarters at Nebraska City, and was thus engaged until the fall of 1865. In the meantime he had resumed partnership with his old friend Mr. Connelly, which now continued until they were "cleaned out" by the Indians in the vicinity of Julesburg, with a loss of about $27,000, which claim will probably be paid by the Government during the present year (1889). The savages made their raid about Jan. 7, 1865, running off a portion of the stock, and in the meantime Mr. Romine and his men engaged in quite a skirmish with them. The night before the overland stage had arrived, and reported that they had been attacked by Indians about two miles east. There was a train of about fifty wagons owned by Keith & Cook, whose men were all well armed, and on the arrival of the coach all hands prepared for an attack at early dawn. Mr. Romine immediately sent two men to the post at Ft. Sedgwick, informing the commanding officer of the alarming reports, and received the following reply: "We have heard enough of these d—d Indian scares, and don't believe anything of it." By the time the messengers returned day was dawning. Four men volunteered their services, and taking some of the best horses went to the point where the coach was attacked, where they found several hundred Indians, who killed two of the brave volunteers outright, and mortally wounded the third, who died soon after returning to the post. By daylight Romine and company discovered Indians all around them, and started off another messenger to Ft. Sedgwick, two miles west.

The commanding officer at this post called out the troops, and attacking the Indians, followed them some three miles, the latter making a grand display just out of range of shots until they decoyed the troops into the bluffs, then turning on them, forced them to retreat, with a loss of twenty-three soldiers and citizens, the principal fight occurring very near the ranch. The wagonmaster of the train spoken of went into the fight, leaving orders that the teams be got in readiness to move at once. A portion of them being ready when the stampede occurred, the men took the ready teams and struck for the fort, leaving a portion of their train to the mercy of the Indians. Mr. Romine and four men remained at the ranch. The Indians took possession of the stage station and a large amount of provisions. The commanding officer at the post rallied his men and opened fire with two mountain howitzers, and succeeded in driving the savages off for that day.

The Indians troubled the ranchmen more or less for several days, but the latter finally succeeded in getting to the fort, where they remained about one month, then returned to Nebraska City. The Indians drove off all the stock of Romine & Co. on the south side of the river, about 150 head, and near the last of February set fire to the ranch. That morning a squad of soldiers volunteered to go out as scouts, and about fifteen of Mr. Romine's men, with himself, repaired to the ranch after some hay. They had placed sentinels around, and hearing a brisk firing up the road west, Mr. R. being posted as a picket, while the men were loading the hay, espied a band of Indians coming from the southwest, with the evident intention to cut off the retreat to the post. Both horses, men and footmen now made preparations for flight with their horses and ponies, leaving the oxen with the wagons partially loaded. By means of a flanking party from the post, they managed to save the men on foot from death or capture. The Indians then took possession of the ranch, taking away with them whatever they desired, driving off the stock and setting fire to what was left.

In the retreat there was one Lieutenant and six men who were cut off from the rest, and sought the ranch for protection, where the seven men there, by careful work and watching, managed to save their scalps, Mr. Romine among the rest. After the Indians had taken the provisions from the stage station they tried to burn the ranch, hay, and other material by firing the grass. In the spring of 1865 Messrs. Romine and Connelly, with some of their men and effects, returned to Nebraska City, and recruiting a few teams, resumed freighting until in 1867, when the completion of the Union Pacific Railroad destroyed the business. Mr. Romine then began buying grain and shipping it from Nebraska City, and was thus occupied until 1871. Mr. Romine then established himself at Plattsmouth, still continuing in the grain trade, and following the line of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad until it was completed to Ashland. He was the first man shipping a load from that point, this being a carload of corn. In the fall of 1870 he erected a warehouse on the line of this road at Ashland, in partnership with S. P. Decker, and which was the first grain warehouse put up in the town. They operated together until 1874, when Mr. R. disposed of his interests in the business to his partner, who is still operating at Ashland, and has become very wealthy.

Our subject now commenced feeding cattle, but in the winter of 1874-75 resumed business as a grain dealer, also adding swine, in company with Mr. Mable, of Ashland, with whom he remained one year. In the fall of 1876 he moved to the farm which he now occupies, one mile and a half south of the town of South Bend. He put up his residence and some of the other buildings soon afterward. There being a fine spring upon the place, Mr. Romine conceived the idea of starting a fish pond, built a dam, and secured a quantity of brook trout shipped from Wisconsin. He was successful in this enterprise from the start, and in the year 1879, finding in Sarpy County a splendid location for this business, purchased a tract of 160 acres of land about three miles from his other farm, and on the north side of the Platte River.

In partnership with Ransom Decker, Mr. Romine established ponds on a portion of this land, which they jointly owned, stocking these also with brook trout, and in the meantime also established a drug business at South Bend. Three years later they sold their fish interest to the State of Nebraska, together with fifty-two acres of land containing the ponds. This enterprise, now known as the Nebraska State Fishery, is considered one of the best in the United States. The ponds are now supplied with German carp by the Government. The first of these Mr. Romine brought from St. Louis about 1881, together with spawn of the California salmon to the amount of about 1,000,000, which were hatched and distributed in streams and lakes throughout the State. The salmon, however, proved of little or no value. The carp and trout seem to have been a success.

In 1882 Mr. Romine visited Washington City as Superintendent of the State Fishery, and secured about 5,000 young German carp, which were planted in the State ponds. Soon afterward, returning to his farm, he turned his attention largely to stock-raising, and for three or four years was highly successful. The hog cholera then made its appearance, during which he suffered a loss of about $1,500.

He then returned to his farm in this county, and resumed the culture of the German carp in the home ponds, which he enlarged to cover about six acres, and now has probably about 5,000, which vary in size from spring hatchings to eight-pound fish, the oldest being three years, and all doing well.

After giving the particulars of his life to the biographer, Mr. Romine says to the rising generation: "Now, having lived a bachelor life, and enduring all the hardships of such a miserable existence for more than forty years, and being now, sixty-three years old, and seeing my folly perhaps too late, I advise all young men to seek the companionship of some worthy member of the gentler sex, and strive to live according to the design of the Creator, and not wholly for self." Mr. Romine is at present living alone on his farm in South Bend Precinct, where he is often visited by his old friends, and expresses himself as always willing to form new ones. He is genial and companionable, and a man possessing a large fund of general information, the result of an ample experience and of keeping his eyes open to what has been going on around him in the world.

WILLIAM MURPHY, deceased, formerly a resident of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, was a gentleman held in the highest respect by all who knew him. He was born on Staten Island, N. Y., in 1849, and was the son of John and Johanna (Demsey) Murphy, who were natives of Ireland. The latter, when William was a small boy, emigrated to the vicinity of Madison, Wis., where the father engaged in farming, and where his death took place when his son, the subject of this sketch, was in the sixteenth year of his age. The mother died in 1886.

Mr. Murphy received a fair education, and being a youth of more than ordinary intelligence and forethought, he made good books his companions, and thus became well informed upon matters of general interest. He was reared to farming pursuits, and until a man nearly thirty years of age continued a resident of the Hawkeye State. At this period of his life he was married at Storm Lake, Iowa, July 13, 1879, to Miss Ellen Nagle. Mrs. Murphy was a native of the State of Maine, and born April 24, 1856. Her parents, Richard and Maggie (Golden) Nagle, were natives of Ireland, and are still living, being residents of Storm Lake, Iowa.

Richard Nagle emigrated to America when a lad of about fourteen years, settling first in the Pine Tree State, where he made his own living by the honest labor of his hands, and being dependent upon his own resources attained to a vigorous and healthful manhood. The parents were married in Maine, and lived there until after the birth of one child. In due time the household circle included five sons and four daughters. The survivors, of whom Mrs. Murphy is the eldest, are located as follows: James, David and Maggie are residents of Rock Valley, Iowa; Richard, Mary, Patrick and Garrett live at Storm Lake.

Mrs. Murphy was an infant of eight months when her parents emigrated to the wilds of Madison County, Wis., and she was there reared to womanhood, received a common-school education, and was trained by a careful mother to all useful housewifely duties. Of her union with our subject there were born two daughters: Maggie J., April 25, 1880, and Mary E., March 26, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy located in Mt. Pleasant Precinct soon after their marriage, where Mr. Murphy engaged in farming. His sudden death from heart disease occurred at Weeping Water, Aug. 9, 1882. Although not a long-time resident of this county he had made many friends, being recognized as a man of worth, intelligence and of the strictest integrity. In the home circle he was kind and indulgent. He was a devout member of the Catholic Church, and, politically, voted the straight Democratic ticket.

The Murphy homestead is finely situated on section 2, and comprises 160 acres of land, with buildings comfortable and convenient, and which compare favorably with those of the other intelligent people of this section. Mrs. Murphy, since the death of her husband, has managed the farm with good judgment and ability, and is spoken of highly by her neighbors. She also is a member in good standing of the Catholic Church.

The mother of Mr. Murphy was the second wife of his father, her first husband having been William Ford, by whom she had two children: Margaret, the wife of Martin Omalia, residing near Madison, Wis., and one deceased. Of her marriage with John Murphy there were born six children: Hannah, the wife of Patrick Downey, of Wisconsin; John, who died when forty-five years old; Cornelius, a resident of Seward County, this State; Mary, Mrs. Hart, living near Madison, Wis.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Whalen, of Seward County, and William, deceased.

FRANCIS A. CREMER. Cass County has within its limits numerous enterprising young men who have come in "to lengthen her cords and strengthen her stakes," and prominent among them is the subject of our sketch, who is a farmer, leasing and operating a tract of 160 acres of well-selected land in South Bend Precinct. He is the only child of John and Sarah Cremer, and was born in Kankakee County, Ill., at Grant Park. He was a boy of ten years of age when his father died. At the age of eighteen his mother died.

After the death of his father our subject and his mother moved to the house of his uncle, Joseph Cremer, where he lived until his uncle, with the entire family, including our subject, moved to Nebraska in 1876, settling in Cass County. Mr. Cremer and Miss Sarah Lee were married in 1882. This lady is the daughter of John W. and Emma J. (White) Lee; both parents were born in Maryland. Grandfather Frederick Lee was also a native of Maryland. Grandfather Dudley was a private in the Revolutionary War. The parents of Mrs. Cremer moved to Washington County, Iowa, in 1852. She is the second eldest in a family of eleven children. The other members of the family are named as follows: Martha A., Guavara, LeRoy, William, Victor, Charles, Kingsley, Webb, Harry and Etta. Her parents moved to Maryland in 1860, and still reside there.

The parents of our subject were exceedingly fond of their only child, and the father up to the time of his death, which occurred in Illinois when he was sixty years old, had anticipated a brilliant future for his boy; but death intervening, a change was necessary, and he was not able to obtain the position in life which doubtless would have been his had his father lived. Mr. and Mrs. Cremer are the parents of two children—Etta E. and an infant, John Wesley, now deceased. His neighbors have called upon him to serve them in an official capacity, having elected him Constable, in which position he has served for one term. He is an active member of the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a Prelate. Both himself and wife are members of the Calahan Methodist Episcopal Church, in which society they take an important and leading part in all works of charity and benevolence.

The politics of our subject are Republican to the heart's core. He takes a lively interest in his party, and attracts considerable attention as a local politician. He is ambitious and aspiring, shrewd and intelligent, and it would be a matter of surprise if, at some time in the not far distant future, he does not reach a highly honorable position in the councils of his party. His wife is one of the fair daughters of Maryland, that home of beauty, and a lady of intelligence. She is kind, hospitable and entertaining, and endeavors to make the stranger in their home feel at ease, extending to them a hearty welcome.

WILLIAM M. ROWLAND, a practical farmer of Avoca Precinct, is pleasantly located on section 30, where he owns a finely improved tract of land, nearly a quarter-section in length, and situated about one mile north of the village. Although not a long time resident of this section of country, coming here in the spring of 1886, he has fully identified himself with the interests of his community, and is numbered among its enterprising and public-spirited, liberal citizens. He has effected considerable improvement in his property since taking possession, and his homestead is numbered among those noticeable for the air of comfort and plenty which surrounds them.

Prior to his arrival in Nebraska Mr. Rowland had been a resident of Page County, Iowa, for a period of sixteen years, and in the meantime had improved two farms in Fremont Township. He was uniformly successful in his labors in the Hawkeye State, but Nebraska seemed to him the more desirable country. A native of Guernsey County, Ohio, he was born Dec. 14, 1838, and is the son of a very respectable family, his father being John Rowland, who married Miss Mary Blazer, a native of Ohio. They continued residents of the Buckeye State until after the birth of most of their family, then migrated to Washington County, Iowa, where the subject of this sketch spent his boyhood days. There also he acquired a practical education and attained his majority. The parents died in Iowa in middle life.

Our subject was the eldest son and second child of his parents, and is the only survivor of five children. He grew up a practical mechanic, having learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked considerably until the outbreak of the Rebellion. He was among the first to enter the Union Army, enlisting in the fall of 1861 in Company K, 13th Iowa Infantry, under command of Capt. Woodford and Col. Crocker. They were assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, and Mr. Rowland endured the vicissitudes and hardships of life in the army a period of three years. He participated with his comrades at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, was at the siege and capture of Vicksburg, and through all the Atlanta campaign. He was wounded the same time that McPherson fell, but only slightly, and was one among the nine remaining men of his company who reported after the battle, the others being either captured or killed.

At the expiration of his term of enlistment Mr. Rowland received his honorable discharge at Chattanooga, Tenn., and not long afterward returned to his old haunts in Iowa. He took up the business of farming, and was married, July 31, 1866, to Miss Sarah Shearer. This lady was born March 29, 1835, in Ohio, and emigrated to Iowa with her parents, Valentine and Mary (Kellenberger) Shearer, about 1845. They located in Jefferson County, but a few years later left the Hawkeye State, and coming to Nebraska, located on land in Weeping Water Precinct. The father built up a good farm, and lived to the ripe old age of eighty years, dying at the homestead in 1866. The mother is still living, making her home with her son, Valentine Shearer, Jr., and is now ninety-three years old.

Mrs. Rowland received her education in the common schools and lived at home with her parents until her marriage. Of her union with our subject there were born five children, one of whom, an infant, died unnamed. The survivors are George S., John O., Mary M. and Calvin. The eldest of these is twenty-one years old and the youngest eleven. They are all at home with their parents, and form an interesting and intelligent family. Mr. Rowland since becoming a voter has been a supporter of Republican principles. He was the Assessor of his township while a resident of Iowa, and is a man of sound practical sense and good principles, who is held in esteem by his neighbors, and whose opinions are generally respected.

WILLIAM B. SHRYOCK. In every town there are a few active and energetic men who have been instrumental in placing it upon its feet and attracting to it an industrious and intelligent class of people. One of the most prominent and influential of these is the subject of this sketch, a dealer in drugs and medicines, and the successor of Dr. J. A. Hassemeier, who established the business in 1878 and withdrew from it in 1882. Mr. Shryock carries a full stock of all the merchandise included in this branch of trade, besides books, stationery and jewelry, and enjoys a generous patronage from the intelligent people of this region. His upright business methods and generally reliable qualities as a man and a citizen have commended him to the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

A native of Winchester, Va., our subject was born Sept. 7, 1851, and is the eldest of five living children, the offspring of Thomas and Rachel (Meyers) Shryock, the latter also a native of the Old Dominion. The parents were married in their native State in 1850, and came to the West in 1864. The father is now officiating as Postmaster of Louisville. The maternal grandparents were Stephen and Joanna G. Meyers. After marriage the parents of our subject lived in the city of Baltimore, Md., a number of years, where the father was engaged as a cabinet-maker and also dealt in furniture.

The paternal grandparents of our subject were Frederick S. and Anna E. (Sheppard) Shryock, and Thomas was their third son. He remained a resident of his native State until reaching manhood, in the meantime learning his trade of cabinet-maker. To him and his excellent wife there were born eight children, five of whom are living, namely: William B., the subject of this sketch; Louisa A., Mrs. E. D. Siever; Edith F., Mary L. and Susan. The last three are at home with their parents. Three died in infancy. The family came to the West in 1864, settling at Plattsmouth, where they lived a period of twenty years, then changed their residence to Louisville in 1885, where the father, in October of that year, entered upon his duties as Postmaster, being the successor of Mrs. Alma C. Glover, and a supporter of Mr. Cleveland's administration.

William B. Shryock spent his boyhood years mostly in the city of Baltimore, but completed his education in the schools of Plattsmouth, this county. He commenced his apprenticeship at the printer's trade in the office of the Plattsmouth Herald, which was then under the management of H. D. Hathaway, with whom he remained a period of seven years. Subsequently he traveled considerably over the Western country through most of the States and Territories. After returning to Plattsmouth he became quite prominent in local affairs, and in 1880 was appointed Deputy County Treasurer, a position which he held until 1882. He had before this served two years, from 1876 to 1878, as Deputy County Treasurer. He then took a business trip to Leadville, Col., and in the spring of that year was married to Mrs. C. V. Irwin, an amiable and accomplished lady, by whom he became the father of two interesting children, a son and daughter — Albert W. and Lillian J. They occupy a snug home in the southern part of the town, and enjoy the friendship of the best people.

Mr. Shryock, politically, is a staunch Democrat, and has served as City Treasurer since his residence in Louisville. He was a member of the School Board four years and of the City Council five years. He is Secretary of the Cass County Central Committee, and a member of the State Democratic Central Committee. He is a man highly respected in business circles, being President of the Nebraska State Pharmaceutical Association, and otherwise identified with the prominent druggists of this section of country. Socially, he belongs to Platts-mouth Lodge, I. O. O. F., and in Masonry is a member of Platts-mouth Lodge No. 6, also Mt. Zion Commandery No. 5, K. T.

JOHN McCONNAHA, M. D., is one of those men endowed by nature with refined and cultivated tastes, and having an ardent love for the quiet of country life. Consequently we find him, although a practicing physician, in the possession of a good farm lying on section 20, in Rock Bluff Precinct, of which he has been a resident for many years. He comes of excellent ancestry, the main points of his family history being as follows:

Robert McConnaha, the father of our subject, was a native of Pennsylvania, and the son of Robert McConnaha, Sr., who was born among the Scottish Highlands. The name in the early days was spelled McConaughey. The paternal great-grandfather, whose name cannot be recalled by our subject, served with his five brothers under King William in the war between the Protestants and Catholics of Scotland and England, and probably spent his last years in Scotland. His son, Robert, Sr., emigrated to the United States soon after the independence of the Colonists had been established, and located on a farm in Crawford County, Pa., which is still owned by his son, Robert, Jr. There the latter and his son John, our subject, were born. Grandfather McConnaha married Miss Margaret Story, and they became the parents of eight children, seven of whom lived to mature years and were married. But three of these now survive. Robert, the father of our subject, chose for his life companion Miss Margaret Lackey, a native of his own county, and the daughter of Robert and Mary (Kelley) Lackey.

To the parents of our subject there were born three children—John, Mary and Margaret. Mary became the wife of R. E. Countryman, a resident of Rock Bluff Precinct, this county; Margaret was married to G. C. Edson, of this township, and she died in 1873, leaving three children; John, of our sketch was reared in his native county, and after leaving the district school attended college in New Wilmington. After being graduated with honors he taught one term of school near Georgetown, Pa., and thus earned money enough to bring him to Nebraska. Of this he became a resident in November, 1859, while it was still a Territory, landing this side of the Missouri River with a capital of ten cents.

Our subject possessed all the courage of his substantial Scotch ancestry, and was not dismayed by the circumstances surrounding him as long as he possessed his health and strength. He at once secured employment with Mr. Joseph P. Moore, at $13 per month, and was occupied at farming until the spring following. He then joined a wagon train being fitted out to cross the plains with provisions for the various posts of the frontier, and in this wild sort of life spent the time until December, 1861. In the spring of 1862 he returned to his native State to settle up the business of his uncle, William Story, and, this accomplished, came back to this county. On the 25th of September, 1862, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Latta, and journeyed to Pennsylvania on a wedding tour, remaining in the Keystone State until the year 1866. The Doctor and his wife then returned to this county for permanent settlement.

The household circle of Dr. and Mrs. McConnaha was completed by the birth of ten children, namely: Elmer; Jennie and Jessie (twins), who died when twenty-two months old; Ernest, Mabel, Robert; Evert, who died at the age of ten years; Lulu, Mary and Earl. The parents of Mrs. McConnaha, John and Mary (McConnaha) Latta, were also natives of Crawford County, Pa., and the parents of seven children. The Doctor during his excursions across the plains deteriorated somewhat in his medical knowledge, and consequently afterward took a course of lectures in Oakland, Cal. After these were completed he entered upon the regular practice of his profession in this township. He enjoys a fine patronage throughout Rock Bluff Precinct and the country adjoining, and has been remarkably successful. He has also frequently been called into Iowa for consultation in important cases. He has not only made money, but hosts of friends. He purchased his present farm of 160 acres in 1869. It is pleasantly located on section 20, and bears all the evidences of thrift and judicious management.

Mrs. McConnaha and two of her children are members in good standing of the United Brethren Church, while the Doctor is partial to the Presbyterian doctrines in which he was reared. Politically, he is a sound Republican, maintaining the principles handed down to him from his sturdy Scotch ancestry.

EDMUND E. WILLIAMS. The agricultural and business interests of Cass County are worthily represented by the subject of this biography, who was one of the earliest settlers of Southern Nebraska, and who is now the owner of a beautiful and valuable farm property lying on section 6 of Weeping Water Precinct. Coming to Nebraska in the April of 1860, seven years before it had been transformed from a Territory into a State, Mr. Williams has been a privileged witness of its remarkable growth and development, and has contributed no small share in bringing it to the position of one of the most important commonwealths west of the Mississippi. A view of his place is shown on another page of this work.

Mr. Williams first made his stopping place on Nebraska soil near the site of the present city of Lincoln, which was then unmarked by a single building, and settled on a tract of land in the basin of Salt Creek. His principal mail station and trading-post was Wallingford, a ranch located upon the present site of Ashland, and his neighbors were few and far between. His first shelter was a dugout, and after staying here a few months he proceeded to Denver, Col., spending there the following year at the time of the gold excitement, and engaged mostly in freighting. In the spring of 1861, returning to Nebraska, he began freighting with teams from Nebraska City to Denver and other points, a business which he followed successfully for a period of six years, employing three months in making the round trip. He thus made four trips a year, two with oxen and two with mules.

The plains at that period were little more than a barren desert, for which our subject would not have paid ten cents per acre for all he could see. After a time there was visible a ranch here and there, but it was not until about 1864 that the country began to settle up. With Edmund E. there came his two brothers, Charles and George Williams, but the two latter were so disgusted with the outlook that they soon sought their old haunts in Iowa. Edmund E., however, resolved not to be beaten, persevered in his resolution to carry out what was meant in the advice of Horace Greeley, "Go West, young man, go West," and having come here determined to stay. Although the first few years formed a period of many hardships and much toil, in looking upon his surroundings to-day it would seem that he must have reason to feel satisfied with the result.

In the April of 1869 Mr. Williams homesteaded eighty acres of wild land on section 6, in Weeping Water Precinct, which is included in his present homestead, and after his freighting business had been abandoned he entered industriously upon its cultivation. Beginning from first principles he broke the sod and put in his first crops before fencing. Soon afterward he began the planting of trees, both forest and fruit, and one by one erected the buildings necessary for his convenience and comfort. The residence is a substantial two-story frame structure, which was completed in 1879. The year following he put up the first large barn, which was then the best structure of its kind within a radius of ten miles, and is still capable of many years' service. He has always kept good live stock, and gradually gathered the machinery necessary for the thorough cultivation of the soil. A fine windmill pumps water from a living spring, which is conveyed wherever needed, and all about the premises are the numberless little contrivances which have so much to do with the comfort and enjoyment of the modern farmer and his family.

Mr. Williams avers that he has been "too busy to dabble in politics," although he has kept himself fully informed as to the course of National events, and uniformly casts his vote with the "grand old Republican party." He has, however, consented to serve as an officer of the School Board, being Treasurer in his school district a period of nine years, and holding other unsalaried positions of trust. With his estimable wife and his son he is a member in good standing of the Free-Will Baptist Church, in which he has officiated as Deacon a number of years.

The subject of this sketch was born in Hancock County, Ohio, Aug. 5, 1839, and when a lad of thirteen years his parents removed to Jackson County, Iowa. There the father died three years later, in 1855. Edmund E. being the second eldest son assumed charge of the homestead until his younger brothers were old enough to take his place. In the meantime his mother was married a second time, and lived in Iowa until 1860. She is now in California.

Mr. Williams after abandoning his freighting enterprise was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary (Davidson) West, Jan. 18, 1865, in Iowa. Mrs. Williams was born in Washington County, Ohio, Nov. 11, 1837, and is the daughter of Lucius and Catharine West, the former born in New York and the latter in Ohio. Leaving the Buckeye State about 1852 they emigrated to Iowa, settling in Jackson County, where the father carried on farming a few seasons, then going to California remained on the Pacific Slope until his death about 1880. The mother died in Ohio, in 1850. To Mr. and Mrs. Williams there have been born eight children, six of whom are living, namely: Thomas A., Willard, Nellie, Wesley, Emma and Eddie. The deceased children were two little sons, Charley and Ray, who each died about the age of one and one-half years. The survivors are all at home with their parents, and are being given first-class educational advantages. The eldest, Thomas A., has already been graduated from the Lincoln State University as B. S. Mr. Williams was enabled to acquire only a limited education, and is determined that his children shall not be called upon to undergo the disadvantages with which he has battled on a like account.

Thomas Williams, the father of our subject, was born in Virginia, in 1810, and there lived until reaching manhood. He then emigrated to Ohio, and settled among the earliest pioneers of Hancock County. Taking up a tract of timber land he constructed a home in the wilderness. He sold his first purchase a few years later and performed as before upon another piece of wild land, then, finally selling out, left the Buckeye State altogether, and moved to Iowa with his family. Settling there in Jackson County he battled again with the elements of a new soil, and died at this latter homestead about 1850.

The mother of our subject, Mrs. Margaret (Shurley) Williams, was born, reared, and married to Mr. Williams in Ohio. Her union with the father of our subject resulted in the birth of eight children, all of whom lived to mature years, and seven are still living. The deceased son, Charley, died at Pittsburg Landing, just after the battle at that place.

At the time of the Indian outbreak of 1863 Mr. Williams, in pursuance of his freighting business, was encamped about sixty miles southeast of Denver with a herd of nearly 600 head of work cattle for Majors & Russell, of Nebraska City, having with him three men. The outbreak occurred only three miles from them, and two of the men at another camp were killed. Mr. Williams with his men succeeded in "rounding up" his cattle, and started on the forced march toward Denver, reaching there by 2 o'clock next morning. At sunrise the next morning he was back with sixty cavalry men and four guns. They started on the trail of the savages, ran a portion of them across the Platte River, and discovered their encampment opposite Rising Sun Ranch. Crossing in the darkness seven miles below they came up to within three-fourths of a mile of them, and lying in Sand Gulch until dawn, commenced work, cleaning them out and recovering eighty head of horses and mules, together with all except eighty head of their cattle which the redskins had taken. In this skirmish seven men were killed, five soldiers and two herders, and a number of others wounded. Mr. Williams during his freighting experience often met with the Indians, frequently engaging in skirmishes with them. "Old Bob Williams'" ranch, about 400 miles west of Nebraska City, was the scene of one of his liveliest encounters. The Indians had made a raid on a train of nine emigrant wagons, killing all of the people with the exception of one man, this being done only two hours before our subject and his men overtook them. Mr. Williams and his men formed a corral of the wagons, putting their cattle therein, and thus made a breastwork, from which they fired at the Indians, and after a long and hard-fought battle and killing many, finally drove them away. His adventures during his travels on the frontier would make a good sized volume, highly interesting to peruse.

DR. ANSON L. ROOT. Prominent among the medical fraternity and business men of Cass County stands the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch. He has been a resident of, and practitioner in Weeping Water since 1873, and in that time has built up an extensive practice, and won hosts of friends among all classes of people. He is a native of Trumbull County, Ohio, born Feb. 5, 1831. His father, Dr. Anson Root, was the son of a physician, with whom he read medicine, afterward attending lectures, and then practicing in Ohio and Indiana the forty years before his death. The maiden name of his wife, the mother of our subject, was Sally Brooks, who was the daughter of an officer in the Continental Army during the Revolution. To her and her husband were born thirteen children, six of whom grew to maturity. One of them gave his life to his country, having died while in service during the late Rebellion. The subject of our sketch went South to nurse and care for him, but found on his arrival that he had died nine days previously.

Dr. Root, of whom we write, remained at home until twenty-one years of age, receiving a good education in his native town, and studying medicine with his father, thus having superior advantages over most boys in those days. The death of his father occurred when our subject was seventeen years of age, and he afterward read medicine with Dr. Bradley, of Johnstown, Ohio, for a period of two years, taking also a course of lectures at Cincinnati, and in 1851 commenced the practice of medicine. He first located in Ohio, then established himself in Indiana, but desiring still newer country for practice, went to Galien, Berrien Co., Mich., thence to Newaygo, in the same

State, where he remained several years, having settled there before the war, and staying there until coming to Nebraska. He had an extensive practice there, and now has many applications for pension certificates from that State. Associated with him in his profession while in Newaygo was his nephew, Dr. H. D. Root, now of Lincoln, Neb., and the amount of business done by them may be inferred from the fact that besides the cash practice in the office they averaged a book practice of $4,200 a year, this showing the large territory over which they must have ridden.

In March, 1873, Dr. Root came to Nebraska, and settled at Eight Mile Grove, where he was soon appointed Postmaster by Postmaster-General James, and held that office until forced to resign on account of sickness. His official duties, in connection with his professional ones, were too great for his physical strength, his medical practice having grown rapidly. He had the majority of cases of sickness in the settled country southwest of his place, but was obliged for a time to give up all work. At the end of eight years the Doctor came to Weeping Water, and lived on a farm four miles west of the city limits for a year. He then bought out the two drug-stores at South Bend, and consolidating them, took in as partner C. L. Bates, who the following year disposed of his interest to the son-in-law of our subject, Edward Parish. They moved the store to Weeping Water, and it is now doing a successful business under the firm name of Root & Parish. Besides this store, Dr. Root is the owner of another store and lot on I street, Weeping Water, and of two building lots and two residences, and also of land in Julesburg, Col. The drug building and two residences in the city are owned jointly by Dr. Root and his son-in-law, Edward Parish. The Doctor has been very successful in all his undertakings, and has ample wealth for his remaining years, which we sincerely hope may be many, and is gradually giving up his practice to younger and stronger hands, attending only to a few of his old patrons who hesitate to place themselves under the care of a strange doctor. His reputation as a skillful physician is well known throughout the State, and is recognized by his professional brethren everywhere, and he is a valued member of the State Medical Association. During his busy career he has seen many of the hard sides of a practitioner's life, but he can look back upon his past with genuine satisfaction, feeling that he has well earned the right to a few years of freedom from care and hard labor.

The maiden name of Dr. Root's wife was Elizabeth Robe, and she is a native of Ohio. She became acquainted with the Doctor when quite a young lady, in Indiana, while nursing him through a fit of sickness, and they became mutually attached. The friendship thus formed ripened into love, and a most happy marriage was the result. To them were born five children, four of whom are still living: Byron A., Russell D., Ella, Dora P. and Ida. Byron has charge of a farm comprising 1,200 acres of land in Cheyenne County (recently changed to Deuel County), Neb., and also owns 320 acres there; he married Miss Eliza Alton, of Michigan, who died in Nebraska, in February, 1887, leaving one child, Benjamin. Russell is a successful physician in Big Springs, Deuel Co., Neb.; he married Miss Ella Cone, and to them have been born five children—Allie, Loren, Albert, Madge and Ida F. Ella, formerly a teacher of much note, married Rev. Charles Cary; she died at Eight Mile Grove, leaving a daughter, a bright, interesting child, now twelve years old, and who is living with a sister of Dr. Root, Mrs. Peck, of Weeping Water Precinct. Dora is the wife of George Shirley, of Deuel County; they are the parents of one child, Ralph. Ida is the wife of Edward Parish, the partner of our subject.

HON. JAMES W. THOMAS, M. D. This gentleman, who is widely known throughout Cass County, bears the distinction of being the oldest practicing physician and surgeon of Weeping Water, being the first to locate here of those now remaining. He took up his abode within its precincts in December, 1867, within a year after Nebraska had been admitted into the Union as a State. It is hardly necessary to state that during his long residence, which has been marked by an honorable and upright course, he has drawn around him hosts of friends and is numbered among the most prominent and reliable men of the county.

Belmont County, Ohio, was the early tramping ground of our subject, and where his birth took place Aug. 6, 1842. Five years later his parents removed to Monroe County, where they lived until the outbreak of the Rebellion, and in the meantime young Thomas completed his education in the High School at Woodsfield, the county seat. He enlisted as a Union soldier when a youth of nineteen years, in Company I, 77th Ohio Infantry, on the 25th of November, 1861, entering the ranks as a private. His regiment was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, and was under the command of both Gens. Grant and Sherman, participating in many of the important battles of the war. Young Thomas during the fierce conflict at Shiloh was shot twice, one ball nearly paralyzing his left arm, and this he still carries in his shoulder. The other wound was in the right hip. He also received two saber cuts, one on his head and one in the left hip, the former leaving a scar four inches long. He was confined in the Fourth Street Hospital, St. Louis, where by careful nursing he managed to recover enough to return home with his father, who came after him.

Gov. Todd, of Ohio, about that time issued an order for all paroled and convalescent soldiers to report at Camp Chase, and our subject accordingly repaired thither, reaching camp on the 6th of August. On the 16th of September following he received an honorable discharge, and returned home. Although quite feeble he taught school that winter and every winter succeeding, until entering upon the practice of his profession, with the exception of the time when he attended medical lectures. He began reading medicine under the instruction of Dr. William Martin, one of the most promising physicians and surgeons of Harrietsville, Ohio. He remained with him three years, in the meantime employing his winters in teaching and taking lectures at Miami College, Cincinnati. On coming to Nebraska he entered upon the practice of his profession at Weeping Water, which then bore little indication of its present importance, the town property being not even laid out, although the ground had been platted by E. L. Reed. The year following a few more buildings were added to the six or seven originally occupying the present town site, and Dr. Thomas enjoyed a monopoly of the business, being the only physician here for a period of seven or eight years. The profession then received an additional representative in the person of Dr. Gibbon, and later came Dr. Butler.

During this time our subject rode long distances, and when needing counsel he was obliged to seek it at Plattsmouth or Nebraska City. He has always paid especial attention to surgery, in which he is particularly skillful. He enjoys the reputation of a faithful and conscientious practitioner, and although practically retired from active service is frequently called upon by his old patrons, who dislike to trust their cases to strangers' hands. He has a finely equipped office on I street, and a good residence on Eldora avenue. Since withdrawing from his regular practice Dr. Thomas has become considerably interested in the loaning of money, operating largely as an agent for an Eastern capitalist.

The people of this county were not slow in recognizing the more than ordinary abilities of Dr. Thomas, and he has always been prominent in the councils of his fellow-citizens in regard to the matters affecting the general welfare of the community. In 1884 he was elected by the Republicans of the Seventh District to represent them in the Nineteenth Legislative Assembly, and in the pursuance of the duties of this office was connected with many of the important committees, including that of Ways and Means, Schools, and other subjects requiring unremitting attention. In his school district he has been a Director for a number of years, has also officiated as Treasurer, and was a member of the Village Board eight years. Socially, he belongs to the I. O. O. F. and the G. A. R. During the campaign of 1880 he was Chairman of the Republican County Committee, later, in 1888, operated efficiently at various points as a stump speaker.

For the last twenty years the question of removing the county seat to Weeping Water has been agitated, and Dr. Thomas has always favored the scheme, believing that for the capital of the county this is the proper place in point of location, surroundings, and the character of the people. He is one of those men who seldom relinquish an idea and who has in his whole career illustrated the results of perseverance. Whether this trait of character applied in this channel will result as favorably as it has in connection with his private interests remains to be seen.

Miss Rachel McVea, a native of Washington County, Ohio, became the wife of our subject Nov. 9, 1864. This lady was born July 6, 1844, and was the daughter of Samuel and Mary (Martin) McVea, who were natives of Ohio, and the father a farmer by occupation. The latter moved to Kansas about 1871, where he died. The mother had preceded her husband to the silent land, her death taking place about 1856, in Ohio. They were the parents of six children, four of whom are living.

Four children completed the household circle of our subject and his estimable wife, all of whom are living. The wife and mother departed the life at her home in Weeping Water, March 21, 1884. She was an affectionate wife, loving mother and kind neighbor, and in her death the community lost one of its most valued members. The children are named respectively: Marion U., William M., Leola and Winnifred. The three youngest are at home with their father, where they are subjected to careful training, and are being given an education in keeping with their means and station in life. The eldest son married Miss Edna Upton, a resident of Dana, Kan., and is the father of one child, a son James.

The father of our subject was Abram Thomas, a native of Pennsylvania, and born Nov. 9, 1814. When but a boy he removed with his father's family to Ohio, they settling among the pioneers of Guernsey County. Upon reaching man's estate he was married to Miss Phœbe Linder, and they became the parents of eight children, seven sons and one daughter, who are all living and all making their homes in the West. Abram Thomas cleared a farm in the wilderness of Monroe County, Ohio, upon which he lived until 1866, then turning his face westward to Nebraska Territory, crossed the Mississippi, and coming into this county, settled on what was known as Livingston Ranch, a few miles west of Plattsmouth. This property he purchased, but only lived there a short time after the death of the wife and mother, which occurred in the fall of 1867. Subsequently he removed to Hillsdale, Iowa, where he is now engaged in mercantile business, although having attained to the advanced age of seventy-four years. He is the owner of a good property embracing three farms, and has therefore sufficient of this world's goods for his declining years. The paternal grandfather, Thomas Thomas, cleared quite an extent of land in the Buckeye State during the pioneer days, and there spent his last years.

SYLVESTER TORRENCE. Over seventy-nine years ago the subject of this sketch began life, March 2, 1810, six miles from the town of Penn Yan, in Yates County, N. Y. Forty years later he started out to explore the West, and in the fall of 1857 found himself the other side of the Mississippi, and on the soil of Nebraska Territory. Later he took up his residence in this county, and is now living retired from active labor at a pleasant home in Weeping Water. He has a good farm on section 27 in the same precinct, and has been the owner of other land which he has given to one of his sons.

Mr. Torrence spent the first forty years of his life in his native State, engaged mostly in agricultural pursuits. He received careful home training, and a practical education in the district schools. Upon leaving the county which gave him birth he migrated to Lake County, Ill., settled upon a tract of new land, and farmed in that locality about three years. Thence he removed to Marquette County, in the northern part of Wisconsin, which had but recently been transformed from a Territory into a State, and while Indians were still plentiful in that region.

Mr. Torrence took up new land in Marquette County, upon which he operated five years, and then sold out to good advantage. He now determined to find out what lay on the other side of the Father of Waters, and starting out on the 26th of April, 1857, arrived in Nebraska City, Otoe County, later. It being a hard matter to find employment, he returned to Iowa, and was occupied the following summer as a farm laborer. In the fall of 1857

we find him again in Nebraska City, but he soon traced his steps eastward again as far as South Bend, Iowa, where he took up a tract of new land, improved another farm, and put up good buildings. He was not destined to be contented, however, until he had given Nebraska another trial, so coming to this county once more, in the spring of 1871, he purchased a tract of wild land on section 27, in Centre Precinct. Upon this there was not even a bush to be seen, and not a furrow had been turned toward its cultivation. He sheltered himself for a time with his son, and as soon as possible gathered together the necessary implements, and began again the construction of a homestead. He was content to remain and labor a series of years. He in the meantime effected a vast change in the condition of the property, putting out a large grove of forest trees, a good apple orchard and the smaller fruits, besides erecting the buildings necessary for the successful prosecution of agriculture. As far as anything can be created from nothing by mortal man, Mr. Torrence brought into existence a valuable farm from it. In the fall of 1888, feeling that he had performed his duty among the active labors of life, he moved into Weeping Water, and is now living in the ease and comfort which he has so justly earned by years of early industry.

Our subject was married in his native State, Jan. 12, 1836, to Miss Jane Smith, and they have now lived together for a period of fifty-three years. Four of the six children born to them are still living. One son, George, a promising young man, enlisted as a soldier in the Union Army during the late war, received a fatal wound at the battle of Resaca, and died there in 1863. Another child died when nineteen years old. Their eldest daughter, Eugenia, became the wife of Charles Thorngate, of New York, who departed this life at his home in Nebraska about 1884; they were the parents of four children—Ida, Ella, Jennie and Ethel. They are all living with their mother in Weeping Water. Barnum S. married Miss Harriet Smith, and they have five children, namely: Louise, James, Roy, Laura and Berenice; they are residents of this county. Susan, Mrs. Rexford, is the mother of four children—Herbert (now deceased), Willis, Ada and Charles; she lives in Centre Preinct. Oscar married Miss Marcia Speer, is a resident of Centre Precinct, and the father of five children—William, George, Eugenia, Walter and Bessie.

Mrs. Jane (Smith) Torrence was born in New Jersey, Feb. 20, 1810, being consequently ten days older than her husband. When she was a little girl of seven years her parents removed to Ontario County, N. Y., where she was reared to womanhood and married to our subject. Her father, John Smith, was also a native of New Jersey, and married Miss Catherine Benson, of the same State. He was a boy during the progress of the Revolutionary War, and remembers many of the incidents in connection therewith, which transpired during that period of his life, especially the first anniversary of July 4. He spent his last years in New York, dying about 1845. He had been occupied most of his life as a farmer. The parental household included nine children.

William Torrence, the father of our subject, was born in Massachusetts in 1773, and when approaching manhood migrated to Ontario County, N. Y. He occupied himself in agricultural pursuits, and was married to Miss Salome Danes. They settled in Ontario County, N. Y., where they spent the remainder of their days, and became the parents of nine children, all of whom lived to mature years. William Torrence was drafted into the army during the War of 1812, and repaired with his regiment to the front, but whether he engaged in any active fighting the records do not indicate. He only lived a few years thereafter, his death taking place in 1818, when he was comparatively a young man. The wife and mother survived her husband a period of fifty-six years, remaining a widow, and died at her home in New York, in February, 1874. Mr. Torrence cast his first Presidential vote for a Whig candidate, being first a member of the old Whig party, but upon its disbandment identified himself with the Republicans, the principles of which party he has uniformly supported. He has been a member in good standing of the Congregational Church for a period of more than forty years. Many and great have been the changes which he has witnessed in the land of his birth, and especially in the Great West. He has done his part in developing a portion of its territory, and has acquitted himself as a peaceable and law-abiding citizen, a kind and indulgent father and husband, and a hospitable neighbor. There will be quite a number to perpetuate his name, he being the grandfather of seventeen children, and the great-grandfather of four.

HORACE W. GLEASON, Postmaster of Manley Village, is looked upon as the father of the place, he having ably promoted every public enterprise undertaken for its advancement. He was the pioneer merchant of the village, as well as the first grain dealer, and still carries the best and largest assortment of goods to be found in any general and grocery store in this vicinity. He came to Nebraska in 1883, and settled in Manley, which was then a place of no importance, being merely a side track on the Missouri Pacific Railroad, with a few shanties for the workmen. He was then acting in the capacity of manager of Spear & Hurlburt's grain business, and he attended to the elevator here for four years. He soon established himself in business on his own account, and was nearly the first merchant here, only one before him, who staid only a few weeks, so that our subject was practically the pioneer merchant of Manley. He established his first store near where the elevator now is, and as the demands of his trade increased, and his need of a more commodious building was apparent, he erected his present store, with residence above it, and moved into it in 1884, it then being one of the two largest buildings in the village, the hotel being the other one, the inhabitants for the most part still being housed in rude shanties. With increased facilities for doing business, Mr. Gleason enlarged his stock, and has since built up an extensive trade. He was appointed Postmaster in January, 1884, he being the second Postmaster here, and the only one in fact to hold the office any length of time, his predecessor having been an incumbent but a short time. He and his family have a charming home, as he built and added to a pleasant cottage house, a few rods north of his store, in 1887, and the same year moved into it.

Our subject derives his ability and force of character in a great degree from a sturdy New England ancestry. His father, H. N. Gleason, was born in Hartford County, Conn., April 17, 1800, and was a resident of that State until about twenty-five years of age. Then, after first marrying Miss Sarah L. Root, he moved to Chautauqua County, N. Y., of which he became a prominent pioneer, being an early settler of the town of Sherman, when it was a little settlement in the depths of the great wilderness, with only five persons. He was one of the leading citizens of the town for forty years, and lived to see it change from dense forest to a fine farming community, well settled. He was a leader in the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife was also a valued member. A man of his high standing and character, he was not permitted by his admiring fellow-townsmen to live in retirement, but his counsel was needed in public affairs, and he nearly always held some office or offices. He improved a fine farm, and became comfortably well off, and he and his wife continued to live in Sherman until death called them hence, he dying at the age of seventy-two, and she at the age of sixty. They were the parents of seven children, all of whom died unmarried, excepting our subject.

Horace Gleason was born in Sherman, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., Feb. 5, 1829, and there lived until 1857, and in the meantime was the recipient of a good education, which was completed by an excellent course of study at the Westville Academy. After leaving school he continued on the home place until his marriage with Miss Anna Whitehill, in February, 1855. She was born June 23, 1830, in Erie County, Pa., of which her father, James Whitehill, was a pioneer. She lived at home until the time of her marriage. In the winter of 1857 our subject moved with his family to Missouri, and made that his home until coming here. There the shadow of a great grief fell upon him in the loss of his devoted wife, and the children who had been born to them, with the exception of an infant son named Hubert W., who is now ten years of age, and has made his home with his aunt, Mrs. E. W. Butt, of Hiawatha, Kan. Through the trying times of their life in that State, during the Rebellion, she had assisted and encouraged him as only a true woman and a loving companion could, as she was possessed of an elevated character and a positive nature. Mrs. G. departed this life Feb. 28, 1879, the children having preceded her to the better land.

The present wife of our subject was formerly Mrs. Whitely, who was living in Pennsylvania at the time of their marriage. She is a native of Tioga County, N. Y., and a daughter of William Breese. This union has resulted in the birth of one child, a son Eugene H., a bright child of one and a half years.

Mr. Gleason enjoys the reputation of being a first-class business man, systematic in his methods, prompt and fair in his dealings, and of good financial ability and standing. His public spirit and liberality are too well known to need comment; he has ever been active in furthering the interests of the village, and no scheme for its improvement is completed without his counsel and aid. He is prominent in church, in society, and in business circles. He was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church, and still clings to that faith, but with true religious zeal, there being no church of that denomination here, he has identified himself with the Methodist Church, helped to organize a society in this town, and with his family worships at that sanctuary. He takes an active interest in the Sunday-school, and is the present Superintendent. Mr. Gleason is a member of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he is a stalwart Republican.

DR. NOAH R. HOBBS, physician and surgeon, of Elmwood, who is one of the most prominent and widely known citizens in the western part of Cass County, came to Nebraska with his parents in 1860, when he was but eight years old, and is essentially and in all respects a true native of the State. He was born in Livingston County, Mo., Feb. 16, 1852, and lived on the farm with his parents during his youth, attending the common schools of the neighborhood, fitting himself for college and ultimately for the profession he adopted for a life calling.

After a two-years course of study at Naomi Institute at Rock Bluff, our subject went to Missouri Valley, Iowa, and began the study of medicine under the tutelage of E. J. Chapman, M. D., where he remained three years. In the fall of 1873 he went to Chicago, and entered the Rush Medical College for a thorough professional training. During the summer he studied with his preceptor, Dr. Chapman, attending college in the winter, until he was graduated with full honors from Rush Medical College, in the class of '75-76, February 16. In August, 1875, he located in Elmwood, the field chosen for his professional labors. By close attention to business, strictly upright dealings and fair treatment to all, he has acquired a large and lucrative practice in three counties, Lancaster, Cass and Otoe. In the autumn of 1876 he bought 200 acres of excellently located and well-watered land adjoining sections 15 and 16, which was partly improved. He has also made further great improvements, setting out groves, planting orchards, building new houses and other improvements. He superintends the operation of the farm himself, looking after all details.

The Doctor is largely interested in real estate in Lincoln, and has laid out an addition of twenty acres to the town of Elmwood, reserving a block of lots for his own use. He is one of the five public-spirited citizens who gave the undivided half of 160 acres to the Missouri Pacific Railway to locate their railway through Elmwood. The other four men who joined him in that enterprise were C. D. Clapp, John Clements, John Hart and Cyrus Alton. They were successful in their undertaking, the route was changed, and the road completed through Elmwood in 1886, thus crowning their united efforts with deserved success, and bringing prosperity to the entire community.

Our subject is the second born in a family of eight children, John being older, and Joseph, Kate, Flora, Emma, Gilbert and William, being younger. His brother John served in the army against the Indians, and was also in the volunteer service and passed through the late Civil War, at the close of which he was honorably discharged. His father, William L., was a farmer in Indiana, and removed to Missouri with his parents, who were among the pioneers of that State, where they bought and improved land. In 1860 he moved to near Plattsmouth, Neb., where he owned a large tract of land, which he improved and leased to a number of tenants, living on a farm himself until he was elected to the office of County Treasurer, which he held for four years, during which period he made his home in Plattsmouth.

In the spring of 1876 Mr. Hobbs removed to Wyoming Territory, having sold all his property in Plattsmouth, making his home in Rapids City, where he was one of the first settlers. Here he began mining and prospecting, and has continued in that business ever since, and is now secretary for a stock and mining company in Wyoming. He is now the owner of several mines and a large ranch devoted to stock-raising near Lusk, in Wyoming Territory. He was born in Indiana and is now sixty-two years of age. His wife was Catherine Foreman, who was born in Virginia and is now sixty years of age.

Grandfather Noah R. Hobbs was born in Virginia. During his later years he lived with our subject in Elmwood, and was eighty-one years old when he died. His wife, Grandmother Hobbs, is now living with our subject in Elmwood. Grandfather Joseph Foreman was born in Virginia, and moved to Missouri in 1850, where he remained until his death.

Dr. Hobbs was married in Lincoln, Neb., to Miss Anna E. Stacey, May 28, 1878. This lady was born in New York, in Onondaga County, and she attended the Normal School at Peru. One child, Grace, has been born to them. His wife is an accomplished and lovable lady; the Doctor is proud of her and adores her. She studies his interests in all respects, and without doubt his success in life may be attributed largely to her.

Our subject is truly a representative man among his fellows; educated, refined and ambitious, he possesses all the elements necessary to make an eminently successful career; thoroughly posted in all that pertains to his chosen profession, and possessing a business ability of no common order, he ranks first among men. Professionally, he is Medical Examiner of the New York Life Insurance Company, Local Surgeon for the Missouri Pacific Railway, at Elmwood, County Physician at Elmwood, also Surgeon for the A. O. U. W. He is a leading member of the I. O. O. F., of Elmwood Lodge, is high in the councils of Elmwood Lodge, Knights of Pythias, as well as those of the A. O. U. W., of Elmwood, and is also an active and influential member of the City Council. In politics he is a strong Republican, representing his district in the conventions of that party.

W. H. Schildknecht M.D.

WH. SCHILDKNECHT, M. D., a practicing physician of good standing in the city of Plattsmouth, Neb., was born twelve miles from Dayton, Montgomery Co., Ohio, May 28, 1836. His father, John Schildknecht, was a native of Maryland, while the paternal grandfather was born in Germany, whence he emigrated with his family to America, and locating in Maryland, resided there until his death.

The father of our subject was reared to manhood in Maryland, where he lived until about 1835, and then changed his residence to the Buckeye State, taking with him his family, and making the journey overland with teams. He purchased an improved farm, upon which he operated a period of fifteen years, selling out in 1850, and removing to Henry County, Ind. There also he purchased land and labored a number of years, making it his home until his death, which occurred in the spring of 1883. He had married, in Maryland, Miss Susan Durr, who was a native of that State, and who died in Ohio about 1858. The parental family included four children.

The subject of this sketch pursued his early studies in the district school, and commenced reading medicine at the age of eighteen, under the instruction of Dr. Brewster, a well-known physician of Dayton, Ohio, and began the practice of his profession in Henry County, Ind., where he continued until the spring of 1861. In the spring of that year he resolved to cast his lot among the people of Nebraska Territory, and, making his way hither, established himself in the city of Plattsmouth, of which he has since been a resident. He is now the oldest established physician in the place, and one of the oldest in the State. He has been uniformly successful, enjoying in a marked degree the esteem and confidence of his patrons, and accumulating a comfortable property.

Dr. Schildknecht, while a resident of Henry County, Ind., was united in marriage with Miss Mary Adams, in the spring of 1856. This lady was born in North Carolina, and was the daughter of William and Rachel Adams, natives of that State. She became the mother of three children, and departed this life at her home in Plattsmouth, Feb. 12, 1865. Their eldest daughter, Annie, is the wife of Stephen Smith, a resident of Andrew County, Mo.; Elizabeth married Frank Davis, and lives in Beaver City, this State; Etta is at home with her father.

The Doctor contracted a second matrimonial alliance in October, 1873, with Mrs. Jennie (McCormack) Fox, who was born in the State of Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Fox there was born one child, a son, William Kelley Fox, who is now residing in Plattsmouth. Mrs. S. is a very estimable lady, and is a member in good standing of the Christian Church. The family occupy a snug home on the corner of Main and Seventh streets in the city, and the Doctor has his office in the same place. Socially, he is identified with the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Plattsmouth Lodge No. 6, A. F. & A. M. Politically, he is a staunch Republican.

The portrait of this old resident of Plattsmouth, and well-known physician, which we present herewith, will be viewed with pleasure, especially by the large number to whom his kind and skillful ministrations have brought restored health.

GEORGE TRAVER. Among the well-to-do and successful farmers of Cass County, who have accumulated a competency through their own efforts, economy and energy, is the gentleman of whom we write. He resides on the north-east half of section 13, Greenwood Precinct, where he has a highly improved farm of 240 acres, which he devotes to the business of general farming and dairying. He is a son of William Traver, who was born in Defiance, N. J., where he followed the occupation of a "bloomer" in one of the many iron furnaces in that State. During the War of 1812 he was a drummer boy, and recalls many of the adventures and dangers of that time, which he describes in a very graphic manner. When he was twenty-one years old he married Miss Sarah Oliver, who died at the ripe old age of ninety-one years, in Falls City, Neb. The father of our subject died in 1876, aged seventy-two years, leaving a family of three children: Caroline, Jane, and George, our subject. Caroline was born at Fullerville, Jefferson Co., N. Y., in 1821; George was born in the same place May 3, 1836. When he was three years old his maternal grandfather removed to Michigan, and took our subject with him, where he settled on a farm.

When Mr. Traver had reached the age of seventeen years he had earned sufficient money to purchase an outfit, which he did, and started for California, embarking at a port in New Jersey on board the "Georgé Law," and sailed for Aspinwall. He arrived there in due time. Leaving the vessel he took passage on the railroad, then completed, a distance of twelve miles. The fare on this road was $1 per mile; reaching the end of the railroad, on the banks of the Chagres River, he purchased a boat, and proceeded up the river for a distance of eight miles, and landed at Cruyua Nov. 1, 1852, where he secured a pack mule, and joining a train he went on to Panama, where he staid for seventeen days, working in a hotel at $4 per day, $3 of which he paid for board.

When the steamer was ready to sail our subject had secured his passage, and the "Uncle Sam" sailed for San Francisco, where they landed on the 3d of December, 1852. He proceeded up the Sacramento River to the city of that name, on the steamer "New World." He secured employment on a farm with an old friend whom he found, for $30 per month. He remained here but a short time when he went down to Petaluma City, in Sonoma County, where he contracted to work for a farmer for three years. At the expiration of four months of this time the firm was discovered to be insolvent, when he left their service. He then engaged with the Pacific Dairy and Cheese Factory, where he worked for three years, beginning on a salary of $50 per month, which was advanced to $100, which sum he was receiving at the time he left their employment. He engaged in the same business on his own account, and followed it successfully for three years. He rented cows at $2 per month per cow, and hired two men and an Indian to assist him. He made cheese twice a day, the capacity of his factory being 100 pounds per day. He marketed his product in San Francisco at thirty cents per pound.

Mr. Traver purchased a section of land under the "Rabolie" title, which proved valueless. The "Meranda" title overshadowed that under which he bought, and he consequently lost what he had paid. He operated the factory for two years after this, when he gave it up, and went to Grand Island, and engaged in the stock business. He took the Indian, "Hell-go-Rocky," who had been with him in the dairy, and employed him as a herder. He left the cattle in charge of the Indian, and went back to Sacramento, where he entered the Monongahela House as steward, receiving a salary of $15 per week. Here he remained for five weeks, when the rainy season began, and fearing that Grand Island would be flooded, he returned there to look after his cattle interests. When he arrived there he found the water rising rapidly; he rescued his cattle, and started for the foothills and the Beckwith Valley. Upon the subsidence of the flood, Grand Island was found to be destroyed.

While in the Beckwith Valley our subject's funds became exhausted, and he secured employment in a quartz mill at Virginia City, receiving a salary of $8 per day. After he had been working here but a short time he was attacked with erysipelas. It required all the money he had saved to pay his doctor bill, and when he recovered he had $14.75 left. He walked back, and went to work in the valley with a Dr. Weber, in the dairy business, which he followed for three years. Virginia City, Nev., was the market for their product, which brought them fifty cents per pound for butter and thirty-five cents for cheese. Severing his business relations with Dr. Weber, he closed up his affairs and returned to the States, landing in Fullerville, N. Y., where he remained but a few days when he went to Kankakee, Ill., arriving there in March, 1862. Shortly after his arrival in Kankakee he returned to California the second time, and landed in the Beckwith Valley in April of the same year. There he engaged in business for three years, when he came back a second time to the States, visiting his mother in Wisconsin, from which place he went to Red Oak, Iowa.

During his stay in Red Oak our subject was married to Miss Maggie W. Lownes, May 9, 1867. She is a daughter of Isaac C. Lownes, a carpenter and builder, and a resident of Red Oak, Iowa. This lady's father was born Sept. 13, 1810, and died March 14, 1870, at the residence of his daughter, the wife of our subject, in Philadelphia, Pa. Her mother was Ann Elizabeth (Williamson) Lownes. She died March 16, 1853, leaving a family of seven children, named: Maggie W., Robert W., Isaac C., Jr., Elizabeth K., Elenor F., Thomas W. and David.

Mr. Traver settled in Montgomery County, Iowa, where he operated farms varying from eighty to 200 acres. Leaving Iowa he came to Nebraska on the 19th of April, 1880, where he settled on section 2, and engaged in farming and dairying on eighty acres, which he sold in 1885, and then purchased 160 on section 13, where he now has his home. Mr. and Mrs. Traver are the parents of a large number of children, the surviving members of whom are all at home. Their names are as follows: Lee A., Charles P., William J., Edward P. and Elizabeth E. The deceased children were named: Warren O., Ines J., Herbert and Lucie A.

This gentleman takes a great pride in his California experiences, and says, that in all his wanderings he has never found a country that can compare in natural advantages with the State of Nebraska. He has improved his farm in a very substantial manner, the various barns and other buildings are conveniently located, and are in good condition and admirably adapted to the purposes for which they were built. His residence is a new house, and is as neatly and tastefully designed as any in the precinct, and contains all available improved domestic appliances. He has a splendid orchard, which contains the best varieties of fruit adapted to the soil and climate.

Our subject believes in feeding the grain raised on the farm to the best advantage, and his idea is to feed it to stock for the general market. In pursuance of this plan he has a large number of cattle and hogs. The prosperity which has come to him in his farming life certainly justifies the correctness of his position. Both himself and wife are advanced thinkers, and are extremely liberal in their views; they are well informed on all general subjects of the day; she is a lady of good culture and refinement, and is the light of the home circle. The children are bright and intelligent in every respect. Mr. Traver has served his friends and neighbors as School Treasurer for eight years, and has been Supervisor of the town, the duties of which he discharged acceptably to his friends, and with credit to himself. He has been Assessor, was School Director for four years, and Judge of Election at different times. He is an earnest and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His politics are unswervingly Prohibitionist.

JAMES O. McCLAIN is one of the thriving, energetic farmers who have contributed so largely to the present prosperous condition of the young State of Nebraska. He has by his industry and application brought to a high state of cultivation a valuable farm located on section 30, Eight Mile Grove Precinct. He is a native of Illinois, where he was born May 14, 1854. At the early age of ten years he lost his father by death, and when fifteen years old he assumed the entire responsibility of the home farm, contributing materially to the support of his mother and the remaining children of the family.

The present splendid free public school system of that State had not then been introduced, hence the educational opportunities of our subject were very meagre and limited in extent, and he did not have the advantages possessed by the rising generation of to-day, but being naturally studious and observing, he is now one of the best informed men in the precinct, having a general practical knowledge, which can only come from experience. All his life has been devoted to the business of farming, which he has made very successful.

Our subject was married to Miss Elizabeth Sykes, April 11, 1876. The lady was born in Adams County, Ill., Oct. 28, 1851. She is a daughter of James and Mary Sykes. Her father was a native of England, and emigrated to America with his parents when about two years old. He is now living in Pike County, Ill., at the advanced age of seventy years. Her mother was a native of New Jersey, and died April 1, 1872. Her parents reared a family of eleven children, five of whom are living, named: Hannah; Elizabeth, wife of our subject; Joseph, Emma and Frank. Hannah is the wife of Wilson Cunningham, and resides in Greenwood; Joseph resides in Colorado; Emma is the wife of Mark Huffman, and resides in Adams County, Ill.; Frank also resides in that county. Mr. and Mrs. McClain are the parents of five children, one of whom is deceased. Those living are named: Clyde, born Nov. 11, 1879; Harry O., Dec. 25, 1881; Fred, April 26, 1884; Hattie, March 18, 1886; and Ralph C. was born April 11, 1878, and died Jan. 4, 1879.

Mr. McClain is a son of David H. and Mary E. McClain. Both parents were natives of Tennessee. His father's family were early settlers in Adams County, Ill., having located there about 1840. His paternal ancestors were Scotch, and his maternal grandfather was a Mr. Lane, a native of Tennessee. Our subject is the third son in his family. He came to Nebraska and settled in Cass County, in the fall of 1876, purchasing the quarter-section of land on which he now resides. At the time he acquired the land it was in an absolutely wild condition; all of the substantial improvements and conveniences now on the place have been put there by the efforts of our subject. The years in which he has been the owner of this property have been devoted to hard and persistent labor, to such an extent as to make it one of the best cultivated and most productive farms in the neighborhood. He has prospered in his undertakings, and he has added to his original purchase at different times, until he is now the owner of 320 acres of good land.

Taking into consideration the fact that when our subject came to Nebraska he possessed but little means, having but slender resources, aside from strong hands and a willing heart, backed by a determination to win, he may be considered in all respects a truly self-made man, and has richly earned the prosperity and comfort he now enjoys. In the accumulation of this splendid property his wife has borne no unimportant part; all her efforts and life in Nebraska have been devoted to her husband's interests, and the acquirement of a home. The stranger visiting their home is most hospitably received and cared for. The house is large, roomy and nicely furnished, a fit reward for the wife and mother's devotion. The barns, sheds and other out-buildings are conveniently located, and admirably designed for the purposes for which they were intended. Our subject and his wife are both members of the Baptist Church. He has persistently refused political preferment, accepting only a place on the School Board where he felt his services would be of permanent value. In politics he is a Republican, large-hearted and public-spirited. He is an earnest supporter of any measure tending to the general good and welfare of the community in which he lives.

JAMES CHRISTENSON. Here and there, in the farming region of Nebraska, may be found neat, well-tilled and well-stocked farms, with fine groves of trees, good bearing orchards, commodious dwellings, with large barns and the necessary buildings, which have been brought to their present productive condition under the supervision of skilled agriculturists, who came here from a foreign country—men who have left their native soil, and, coming to the United States, have in a few years, by their industry, thrift, and good business principles, placed themselves among the representative farmers of this county. On such a farm is the subject of our sketch, who resides on section 24, Stove Creek Precinct.

Mr. Christenson is a native of Denmark, born in Jutland, March 3, 1854. His father, Christian Anderson, was a native of the same place, and there spent his entire life, dying in 1871, at the age of sixty years. He owned an extensive farm, and was always engaged in agricultural pursuits, accumulating a good property. He was well educated, and a prominent man, who took much interest in public affairs, serving as collector and secretary for many years. The maiden name of his wife, the mother of our subject, was Mary Ann Walsted, who was also born in Jutland, and died there in 1864, at the age of forty-eight years. She was a member of the Lutheran Church. Her father, Nelse Walsted, fought with the French in the war against the English, from 1808 until 1812. To her and her husband were born nine children, six of whom grew to maturity, namely: Andrew, who served about two years against the Germans, having enlisted in 1864; Hannah, deceased; Mona; Nelse, deceased; Christian and James.

The subject of our sketch received good educational advantages, and at the age of fourteen years was confirmed. He remained at home until sixteen years of age, assisting his father when he concluded to try life in the New World. Accordingly, in company with a brother and a sister, he left Copenhagen in the steamer "Racing," and after a voyage of eighteen days landed in New York City. He then went by rail to Council Bluffs, thence to Ashland, which was the terminus of the railroad. The following two years our subject was engaged in herding cattle. He then leased a farm near Greenwood, Neb., for three years, and succeeded well. From 1875 until the spring of 1877 Mr. Christenson worked out, and then bought the farm which he now occupies. It contains eighty acres, a part of which was improved at the time he purchased it. He has spent much time and money on the remainder, has set out forest trees and an orchard of seventy-five fruit trees, and erected a windmill and tank. In 1884 our subject built his present residence, a convenient house, well adapted to his needs, and his barns and other buildings. He raises hay and the usual cereal products of the country, feeding out most of it to the cattle and hogs, of which he has large numbers. His fine graded horses are of much value, and he takes pride in caring for them.

August 28, 1879, Mr. Christenson was united in marriage to Miss Susan Branscom, a native of Tennessee, born in Jonesboro, Greene County, Aug. 13, 1859. She received a fine education, and previous to her marriage taught school in North Carolina. Her parents, Reuben and Hannah (Coggins) Branscom, were natives of Virginia and Tennessee respectively. Her paternal grandfather, Edmund Branscom, who was born in Ireland, emigrated to America, and located on a farm in Virginia, where he remained several years, afterward removing to his present residence in Washington County, Tenn. Reuben Branscom, her father, came to Tennessee with his parents when a young man. He married and established himself on a farm there, but subsequently sold that property, and, removing to North Carolina, remained there nine years, engaged in farming and milling. In 1878 he emigrated with his family to Nebraska, and the ensuing years worked at carpentering in Syracuse. In 1866 he took up a homestead claim of 160 acres in Frontier County, where he now resides. He has bought more land since then, and is now busily at work improving the farm. He is fifty years of age, and his wife fifty-five years old. Joshua Coggins, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Christenson, was of Irish descent, and formerly owned a plantation in Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Branscom were the parents of eight children, namely: Margaret (deceased), Susan, Sarah, Hannah, Ida, Lucius, Edmond and Alice.

Our subject and his wife have a pleasant, well-kept home, which has been brightened by the birth of three children—Mary, Maud and Andrew. Both Mr. and Mrs. Christenson are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and contribute largely toward its support. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and a strong advocate of the principles promulgated by that party.

STEPHEN W. ORTON. The Empire State parted with one of her most worthy sons when the subject of this sketch, withdrawing from her borders, turned his steps toward the newly-made State of Nebraska. He arrived in this county in July, 1867, and soon thereafter took up a tract of wild land on section 28, in Elmwood Precinct. After several years spent in farming he decided to retire from its arduous labors, and accordingly invested a portion of his capital in the drug business, changed his residence to Weeping Water, and is now one of the leading men in this branch of trade in the southern part of the county. He possesses first-class business talent, has acquitted himself uniformly as a liberal-minded and public-spirited citizen and forms no unimportant factor among the leading interests of Cass County.

Our subject was born in Washington County, N. Y., June 2, 1844, and five years later his parents removed to Fulton County, where they spent the remainder of their lives, our subject being orphaned by their death when a lad of fifteen years. He was ambitious to obtain an education, and managed to pursue his studies in the Hudson River Institute at Claverack three years, employing himself in the meantime also as a teacher in order to augment his income, and at the expiration of this time the progress of the Civil War arrested his plans, and he was induced to enlist as a Union soldier in Company F, 13th New York Artillery. His regiment was assigned first to the 18th Army Corps, and subsequently to the 24th Corps, in the Army of the Potomac and the Army of the James, and he participated in many active engagements, being at the siege of Suffolk in March and April, in 1863, and overhauling guerrillas in South-eastern Virginia. In the spring of 1864 he served under Gen. Butler in the several engagements in front of Richmond, and later joined Grant's army in time to be present at the battle of Cold Harbor. After this he went with the 18th Corps, under command of Gen. Baldy Smith, to Petersburg, and thereafter remained with the Army of the Potomac until the close of the war. In the meantime he participated in the various engagements which followed during that campaign. He was at the front in the fight at Petersburg most of the time, and was wounded later at the taking of Ft. Harrison. In consequence of this he was confined in the hospital at Portsmouth, Va., a period of six weeks, after which he rejoined his comrades. He was with the Ft. Fisher expedition, and remained in South-eastern Virginia until the final surrender. His command was then sent to Norfolk, Va., after the war, and Mr. Orton became a member of the police force, with which he remained until receiving his honorable discharge, Sept. 4, 1865.

Upon leaving the army Mr. Orton returned to his old haunts in Fulton County, N. Y., where he employed himself as a teacher and otherwise until April, 1867, and then started for the West. He stopped in Bureau County, Ill., until July of that year, then pushed on further westward, crossed the Missouri River at Omaha, July 28, and later made his way to Elmwood Precinct, this county, and selected his claim. He then entered the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, for which he worked a few months, then engaged on a farm in the vicinity of Bellevue until March, 1869.

Mr. Orton now located on his own land, which was a raw prairie, being sheltered for a time in a plank house. When he assumed ownership of this property there had been only three men before him to take up land in Elmwood Precinct. The only settlers here were McCaig brothers, John Gyger, Carter Aiken and his father. Our subject experienced the usual hardships and difficulties of life in a new settlement, with a far-away market and trading-post. He had come to stay, however, and persevered in this resolution, and after a few seasons began to realize the reward of his labors. After fencing his land and erecting the buildings most needed he put out fifteen acres of forest trees, with a fine apple orchard and trees of the smaller fruits, and gradually gathered around himself and family those conveniences which would insure their comfort and welfare. In due time he found himself possessor of one of the most valuable farms in the precinct, which during these years has been settled up with a class of enterprising and intelligent people. After his land had been subjected to a thorough course of culture he turned his attention largely to stock-raising, and was very successful. In looking upon his possessions to-day it must be remembered that he came to this region without means, and with no resources but his own indomitable will and his strong hands. He now represents one of the finest estates in the county.

Mr. Orton, in the fall of 1881, leaving his farm moved to Weeping Water, and engaged in the drug business with Dr. J. W. Thomas. They started out with a fine stock, and operated together five years. Mr. Orton then purchased the interest of his partner, and has since controlled the business. He has a good trade, which is steadily increasing. He was a school teacher for twenty-one years of his life, and after coming to this county followed this profession in Elmwood for a period of nine years.

He has watched over the educational interests of the county with fatherly care, and given his influence toward the enterprises calculated generally for the best good of his community.

Mr. Orton, politically, is a staunch Republican. He has served as School Director in District No. 44 for some time, and was Assessor of Elmwood Precinct for a period of four years, and has officiated in the same office in Weeping Water Precinct two years. For two years also he officiated as Chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Cass County, and has had no small influence among the councils of his party in this section.

Miss Sarah Burrows became the wife of our subject Dec. 31, 1868, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride in Bellevue, Neb. This lady was born in the Province of Ontario, Canada, Feb. 17, 1847, and when an infant of six months was taken by her parents to Kalamazoo County, Mich. She was there reared to womanhood, and the family, in the spring of 1867, came to the new State of Nebraska, settling in the vicinity of Bellevue, where Mrs. Orton lived until her marriage. Her parents, Zachariah and Hannah M. (Woodard) Burrows, were natives respectively of Norfolk County, England, and New York. Mr. Burrows was born in 1817, and emigrated to America in 1836, settling in Canada, where he lived until 1847. He then removed to Kalamazoo, Mich., and sojourned there a period of twenty years. He spent his last days in the vicinity of Plattsmouth, Neb., passing away in November, 1871, at the age of fifty-four years. Mrs. Burrows later was married to T. W. Warrant, of Ashland, Wis., where she is now living.

Luther M. Orton, the father of our subject, was born at Luzerne, Warren Co., N. Y., March 31, 1820, and lived there until a young man of twenty years. In 1839 he was married to Miss Sarah A. Ward, and the year following they removed to Fair Haven, Vt., where they resided until 1844, and thence migrated to New York State, settling in Washington County. From there, in 1850, they changed their residence to Fulton County, where the death of the father took place Jan. 18, 1859. During his early manhood Mr. Orton had been engaged in the lumber business considerably, while he always operated more or less as a farmer. The parental family included six children, four of whom lived to mature years. The others are residents of New York and Michigan. Mr. O. and his estimable wife were both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which the father officiated as Class-Leader from the earliest recollection of his son Stephen W. The mother was an invalid for many years, but survived her husband some time, and passed away at her home in New York, July 21, 1865.

Samuel Orton, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was, it is supposed, a native of Wales. He spent the last years of his life in Warren County, N. Y., dying in 1853, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. He was a farmer by occupation, and the father of ten children.

To Mr. and Mrs. Orton there were born three children, one of whom, a daughter, Allie, died Feb. 26, 1886, at the age of thirteen years. The survivors are: Mary A., who was born Jan. 29, 1871, and Chauncey, July 9, 1880. These children are being given good educational advantages. When Mr. Orton came to Weeping Water it had just begun to assume the semblance of a village. He has been a useful factor in its growth and development, and is a man in whom his fellow-citizens repose entire confidence. Socially, he belongs to the G. A. R., holding the post of Quartermaster; he is also connected with the I. O. O. F. as a Past Grand, and in the A. F. & A. M. is Senior Warden. He is also a Knight of Pythias, P. C., and has represented the fraternity in the Grand Lodge.

LINWOOD E. SKINNER, of the firm of Skinner & Ritchie, is, with his partner, doing a good business in loans and abstracts of titles, making of the latter a specialty. They also are the agents for some of the best fire insurance companies. He has already a thorough business experience, although still a young man, having been born Jan. 12, 1860. His native place was Susquehanna County, Pa., his childhood home being in the town of Jackson. His father, Nelson Skinner, was also a native of the Keystone State. He was engaged for a number of years in mercantile pursuits in Susquehanna County, but died when his son, our subject, was but a year old.

Mrs. Louisa (Bryant) Skinner, the mother of Linwood E., also a native of Susquehanna County, Pa., was born in Jackson Township, and was the daughter of David Bryant, a native of Vermont, who left New England and settled in Susquehanna County, Pa., in the early times. He purchased largely of timber land in different parts of the county, and felling the forest trees opened up a good farm, where he carried on agriculture successfully and attained to the ripe old age of eighty-four years, passing away at the homestead which he had built up, and where from his sterling worth of character he had gathered around him hosts of friends.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Skinner with her only child went to live with her parents, with whom she remained until her second marriage, with A. J. Price, of that county. They continued residents of Pennsylvania until the spring of 1880, then bidding adieu to the associations of years, crossed the Mississippi and settled in Juniata, Neb., and in 1881 moved to Plattsmouth, where they still reside. They have two children—Abbie and Roland M. Linwood E. pursued his early studies in his native county, and later spent a year in a school at Scranton, Pa. Afterward he was placed in school in Boston, Mass., and upon completing his studies was employed as clerk in a store of general merchandise in his native county and other places about four years.

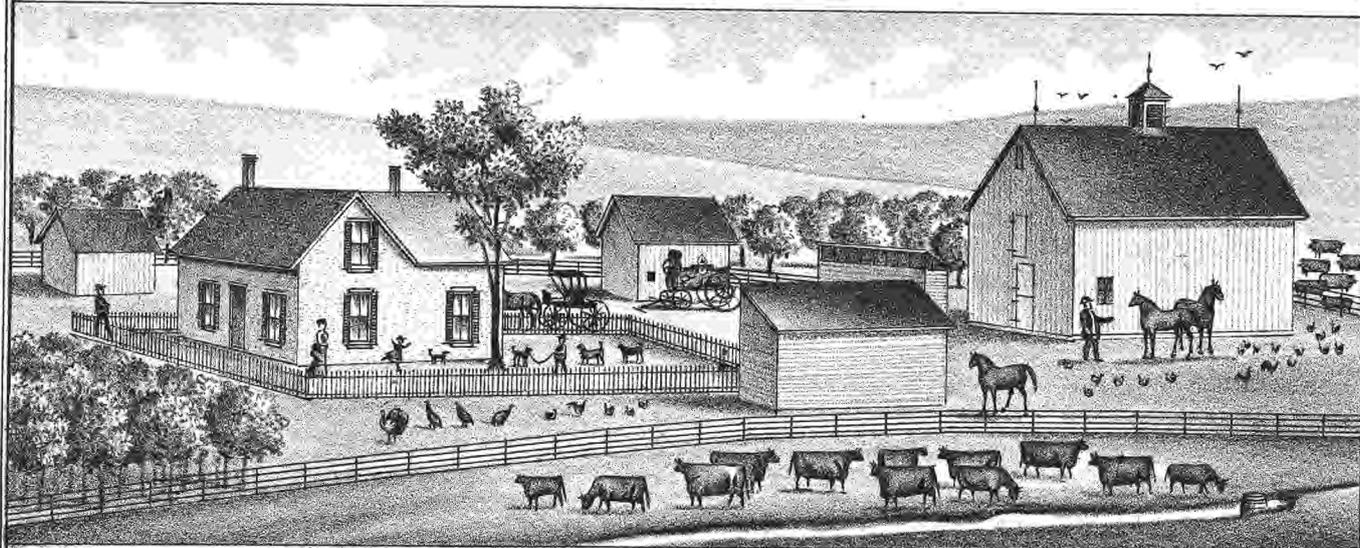

In the spring of 1878 young Skinner, leaving his native State once more, this time started to the West, and spent one year in Boone, Iowa. In March of 1879 he came to Nebraska, and establishing himself at Plattsmouth, began learning the trade of brickmaker, at which he worked three seasons. This, however, not being entirely congenial to his tastes, he in the fall of 1882 secured a position in the County Clerk's office, where he remained until the spring of 1883, and the summer following was one of a Government surveying party operating in the northwestern part of the State. This contract ended he resumed his clerkship in the court-house, operating mostly as Deputy Clerk until January, 1886. Then forming a partnership with J. W. Jennings and H. C. Ritchie, he began operating in real estate, the firm name being J. W. Jennings & Co. They continued in partnership until December, 1886, when our subject and Mr. Ritchie purchased the interest of Mr. Jennings, and the firm assumed the title of Skinner & Ritchie, as at present.

Mr. Skinner was married, in November, 1881, to Miss Susan, daughter of Christian Mockenhaupt. Mrs. Skinner was born in Plattsmouth, Neb., where she was reared and educated. Her parents were among the earliest pioneers of Nebraska, settling in Plattsmouth when it was a mere hamlet. The mother died in 1878. The father is still a resident of Plattsmouth. Of this union there have been born three children—Nelson C., Maggie May and Bernice J. Mr. Skinner, politically, is a staunch Republican.

ELI J. PITTMAN. Among the substantial and enterprising agriculturists of Cass County, of whom brief biographical notices are given in this volume, no one is more worthy of mention than the subject of this biographical sketch. He has an extensive farm, consisting of 200 acres on section 9, and 160 acres more on section 16, Liberty Precinct, which he bought in 1872, and moved onto November 28 of that year. It was then but slightly improved, but by hard labor and skillful management it has been transformed from the wild, unbroken prairie to a veritable garden spot, blossoming and yielding abundantly of the numerous cereals entrusted to its soil. On his homestead, which lies on section 9, Mr. Pittman has erected a handsome dwelling, which is one of the most commodious and conveniently arranged in the precinct, it being well heated and ventilated, and with water carried throughout the house. The barn and other farm buildings are also of modern construction and in keeping with the dwelling, water for the stock being carried by means of pipes and a windmill pump to the barn and feed lots. The house is situated on a rising knoll, and commands an extensive view of the surrounding country, Nebraska City, seventeen miles distant, being often clearly perceptible. Hardly such another fine natural location can be found in Cass County, and Mr. Pittman has taken advantage of all the facilities for improving and beautifying his homestead. Besides general farming our subject is much interested in stock-raising, and has large herds of fine cattle and many good horses. He is a member of the Factoryville Stock Company, which was formed in 1887, with ten charter members, for the purpose of introducing the English Shire draught horses into the country, making a specialty of that breed. The head of that herd, Young Samson, was sired in England, and imported by O. O. Heffner, of Nebraska City. He is a fine specimen of that stock, being coal black in color, about five years of age, and weighs upward of 1,700 pounds.

RESIDENCE OF PETER VALLERY, SEC. 28. PLATTSMOUTH PRECT. CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF E. J. PITTMAN, SEC. 9. (10. 13) LIBERTY PRECT. CASS CO.

The subject of our sketch was born in Harrison County, Ind., March 9, 1845, and is the youngest child of the second marriage of David Pittman. The maiden name of the mother of our subject was Mary E. Young. She was a native of North Carolina, and her husband of Virginia. After their marriage they lived many years in Indiana, but subsequently moved to Nebraska, and died at the home of our subject in Liberty Precinct, the father dying June 23, 1881, aged seventy-four years, one month and seventeen days, and the mother Dec. 26, 1881, at the age of seventy-four years. He was a Democrat in his political views, and a communicant of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, while Mrs. Pittman held to the faith of the United Brethren Church.

E. J. Pittman, of our sketch, was reared in his native county, and in early life became familiarly acquainted with the duties devolving upon the son of a farmer. When the time came for him to decide upon the way in which he should earn his livelihood, he concluded to become a tiller of the soil, and therefore purchased a farm in his native State. Before settling on it he was united in marriage, in Harrison County, Ind., Oct. 30, 1866, to Miss Anna McBride. She was also a native of Harrison County, born April 12, 1849, and is the second daughter and third child born to George W. and Eliza (McCoy) McBride, who were natives respectively of Tennessee and Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. McBride began their wedded life on his farm in Harrison County, and there she died while yet in the prime of life, leaving three sons and two daughters, Mrs. Pittman being at that time five years old. Her father married for his second wife Adeline Neely, of Indiana, and they continued living in that State until the spring of 1888, when they came to Nebraska and settled on the farm in Liberty Precinct which they still occupy. Mr. McBride is an active man of fifty-six years, while his wife is twelve years younger. Both are consistent members of the United Brethren Church. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Pittman, Edward McBride, was a native of North Carolina, of Scotch descent, as is indicated by the name. He died in Indiana, past fourscore years of age. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Pittman, John McCoy, was born and reared in Pennsylvania, but after his marriage located on a farm in Indiana, where he spent his last years. Mrs. Pittman was reared on a farm, receiving a good common-school education, and instructions in domestic duties that have rendered her an invaluable help to her husband in the building up of their beautiful home. She is one of those women of whom we can truly say the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, and her children rise up and call her blessed. To our subject and his wife have been born two children—Benjamin Wallace and John W. The former, who has attained his majority, was well educated in Nebraska City College, and is now at home. John W. also attended school at Nebraska City. Mrs. Pittman is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Pittman affiliates with the Democratic party, which finds in him one of its most earnest and intelligent supporters. A view of their elegant residence and fine surroundings is shown on an accompanying page in this volume.

—❦—

PETER VALLERY, whose farm on section 28, Plattsmouth Township, is considered one of the best managed estates in this vicinity, is a young man who has a good, practical knowledge of agriculture, and an intelligent comprehension of the most approved methods of cultivating the land and making it yield to the uttermost. He is a son of the well-known Jacob Vallery, Sr., a sketch of whose life also appears in this biographical work.

Our subject was born in Pike County, Ohio, Oct. 16, 1857, and there the first years of his life were spent. He was eight years of age when his parents brought him to Nebraska, and he received his education in this district, the first school that he attended here being of the most primitive style of architecture, consisting of a dug-out surmounted by a frame shanty. He received a sound, practical training from his parents, that well fitted him to battle with life, and he grew to an energetic and self-reliant manhood under the pioneer influences that obtained in his youth. He had a natural aptitude for agricultural pursuits, for which his life on his father's farm had well fitted him, and he chose to become a farmer. His father set apart for him 160 acres of land from his large estate, and it has been his pleasure to improve it. It is now under an admirable state of cultivation, and yields a good income in repayment of his care. It is provided with a neat and well-appointed set of farm buildings, including a substantial and comfortable brick house, a commodious frame barn, corn cribs, etc.

Mr. Vallery was married to Miss Eva Schlander March 6, 1878. In her he finds a companion and helper who is devoted to the interests of her family. She is an earnest and consistent member of the Lutheran Church. Mrs. Vallery is a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Horn) Schlander. Our subject and his wife have one of the brightest and coziest homes in this community, whose generous hospitality is well known to hosts of friends. Willie and Lottie are the names of the two children who have blessed their wedded life.

Our subject is a man of prompt and decisive action, and is well endowed with the keenness and foresight essential to complete success in any pursuit. He is exemplary in his conduct, being guided by honest and truthful principles, and he exerts his influence to promote the moral, as well as the material, interests of this precinct. As Road Overseer, which position he has held for two years, he is doing his share toward providing good highways for the convenience of the people. He strongly sympathizes with the Democratic party, and supports its men and measures whenever the occasion offers.

The comfortable home of Mr. Vallery is well illustrated in a view printed on another page.

SIMON BOLIVER JUDKINS, of Eagle, is numbered among its substantial citizens, who, after a life of active industry, is now relieved from its sterner labors, and is enjoying his declining years amid the comforts of a pleasant home, located about a quarter of a mile from Eagle. A goodly portion of his life has been spent in Dane County, Wis., where he ranked among the leading farmers of that section. His children having come to Nebraska, he disposed of his interests in the Badger State in the spring of 1884, and joined them in this county. His property here consists of four acres of ground and a fine residence handsomely furnished, and which, with its surroundings, forms one of the attractive homes of Eagle and its environs. Within it presides one of the most estimable of ladies, who is intelligent and accomplished, and like her husband, extends a hospitality both to friend and stranger which is agreeable in the extreme, and is indicative of birth and breeding.

Of New England ancestry and parentage, our subject was born in Palmyra, in Somerset County, Mo., Aug. 6, 1828, and is the son of Benjamin F. and Submit (Taylor) Judkins, who were natives of the same county as their son. The paternal grandfather, Hills Judkins, a native of New Hampshire, moved into the Maine forests when a young man, where he cleared a farm, and worked at his trade of carpenter as he had opportunity. He traced his forefathers to England, the records showing that they came over in the "Mayflower," and were thereafter among the prominent members of the Plymouth community. Later some of them fought in the War of 1812, as did also Grandfather Taylor. Both grandfathers spent their last years in the Pine Tree State.

Benjamin F. Judkins also learned the carpenter trade, and was a resident for some years of both Oldtown and Bangor, where he was prominent in public affairs, and held the various offices. He also erected many of the public buildings, including court-houses and academies. In the spring of 1849 he resolved to seek the Far West, and after a long and tedious journey after the manner of that time, established himself in Milwaukee, Wis. He continued his business as a carpenter, putting up in the Cream City many of its first important buildings. In 1852 he purchased land in Dane County, and later became owner of valuable city property. He built the old water course on the Assembly grounds and the first Baptist Church, and continued a resident there until after the close of the Civil War. Later he took up his residence on the farm in Madison Township, where he spent his last days, passing away in 1883, at the advanced age of eighty years. The mother survived her husband about four years, dying Oct. 10, 1887, in Van Buren County, Ark., at the age of eighty-nine years. Both were members of the Baptist Church. Their six children were named respectively: Louisa, who died when young; Christian; S. Boliver, our subject; Elisha and Emily (twins), and Martha, deceased.

The early education of Mr. Judkins was exceedingly limited, he having to make himself useful around the homestead as soon as his age and strength would permit. When fifteen years old he commenced his apprenticeship at the carpenter trade, which he followed continuously a period of twelve years. In 1848, at the age of twenty, he accompanied the family from his native Maine to Milwaukee, Wis., where he soon began operating as a contractor, and resided three years. In the spring of 1851 he changed the scene of his operations to the growing town of Madison, purchasing property there, and living there until the spring of 1854. He now thought best to invest in farm property, and purchased eighty acres of land in Fitchburg Township, Dane County, upon which he moved, and began in earnest its cultivation and improvement. Not long afterward, however, he sold out, and after returning East on a visit, purchased, in the fall of 1863, a farm of 160 acres on the Waterloo Creek, in Medina Township, Dane County. This he devoted mostly to stock-raising, with excellent results. In the meantime he had been married and become the father of a family, and his boys were desirous of locating further West. His first visit to Nebraska was made overland with teams, when the boys selected their location in this county, and Mr. Judkins in due time disposed of his interests in the Badger State, joining them here in the fall of 1884. He lived upon the place which they had purchased four years, then secured his present snug property. He has already effected many improvements, putting up a good residence and barn, with other buildings, and planting an apple orchard with trees, and the smaller fruits and shrubbery.

Mr. Judkins was married in his native Maine on Thursday, Oct. 15, 1848, to Miss Martha O., daughter of Thomas and Abigail (Norton) Butler. Mr. and Mrs. Butler were both natives of Maine, the former born in Franklin County, and the latter in Kennebec County. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Judkins was also a native of Maine, and the records show that his ancestry, like that of the Judkins, crossed the Atlantic in the "Mayflower," landing with the Puritans at Plymouth Rock. Later he served in the Revolutionary War. Grandfather Zachariah Norton was also a native of Maine. Sturdy Ben Butler, of Massachusetts, and so closely connected with the history of the late war, is an offspring of one of the branches of this family. The father of Mrs. Judkins was a shoemaker by trade, which he followed all his life in his native State. Both parents spent their last years in Farmington, the father dying in 1861, at the age of sixty years, and the mother in 1865, at the same age as her husband. Both were members of the Regular Baptist Church.

To the parents of Mrs. Judkins there were born eight children, namely: The eldest, who died in infancy; Martha J., the wife of our subject; Hannah, deceased; Sophronia, a resident of Massachusetts; Abbie and William, deceased; and Irene and Edwin. The latter died after marriage. Mrs. Judkins was born in Strong, Franklin Co., Me., May 25, 1826, and received a good education, being graduated from the Phillips High School, and afterward was employed as a teacher. She left New England in 1849, joining her husband in Milwaukee, Wis., whither he had migrated to prepare their home.

She is one of the heirs of the Spoliation claim lost by Ichabod Norton during the time of the French and Indian War, and although a bill to restore the property was passed by Congress, the restoration never occurred.

To Mr. and Mrs. Judkins there have been born five children, the eldest of whom, a daughter, Julia A., is the wife of Henry Clark; they are residents of Grant County, Neb., and the parents of seven children. Earl B. is occupied at farming in Eagle Precinct, this county; Benjamin F. lives on a farm in Tipton Precinct; Abbie L. is the wife of H. J. Edson, of Eagle, and they are the parents of two children—Howard J. and Mollie E.; Loantha, a dressmaker by trade, is at home with her parents. The family attend the Congregational Church. Mr. J., politically, is a sound Republican, and has been quite prominent in local politics, having been sent frequently as a delegate to the various conventions. He has held the various township offices, and while a resident of Marshall, Wis., identified himself with the I. O. O. F. He is also a member of the A. F. & A. M.

HON. ORLANDO TEFFT. The ALBUM of Cass County would in nowise be complete without a sketch of the life of this gentleman, who has been one of its most prominent and useful citizens. He was one of the earliest settlers of Avoca Precinct, and many years ago became intimately identified with its agricultural and business interests. He performed his part in the development of a portion of its land, and has uniformly lent his aid to the enterprises calculated for the best good of its people. He is now a resident of Avoca Village, which was platted by himself and his father, Amos Tefft, in February, 1882, and who are the possessors of a large amount of real estate in the precinct.

Mr. Tefft is now engaged in the loaning of money, and the various real-estate interests connected with the development and building up of the village. He owns property also in the city of Omaha, and has invested considerably in land further west, mostly in Cheyenne County, where he originally purchased twenty sections of land. About 1885 he made a large addition to the town of Potter, now one of the most thriving villages in that county, and lying on the main line of the Union Pacific Railroad. The town of Avoca comprises now about 250 population, and the plant includes about 100 acres of land. The school building is one of the finest of the kind in the county, and evinces the interest of the projectors of the town in that most important item, education.

Up to sixteen years ago our subject, from 1866, operated a large farm on section 33, in Avoca Precinct, and during those years developed more than ordinary capacities as a business man and citizen, and was chosen, after having occupied minor positions of trust and responsibility, to represent the people of this county in the State Legislature, being elected on the Republican ticket in the fall of 1879. So well did he acquit himself that he was re-elected to a second term, being a member of the Senate, and interested himself largely in the Slocum Bill, a measure having for its object the regulation and sale of liquor, and which was passed in 1881. Mr. Tefft was appointed Chairman of the Finance Committee, and in fact there were few questions of local interest to his county in which he did not have a leading voice. Mr. Tefft, in the Senate as elsewhere, was an incessant worker, and exhibited the same qualities of resolution and energy which have characterized him all through life.

The subject of this sketch crossed the Missouri as early as 1857, eleven years before Nebraska became a State. Since that time he has been a resident of Avoca Precinct. He is essentially a Western man, having been born in Elgin, Ill., Dec. 26, 1843. He comes of a highly respected family, of English descent, and which was probably first represented in America during the Colonial days. His father, Amos Tefft, a native of New York State, was born and reared to manhood in Madison County, and came of Rhode Island parentage, his parents having settled in that State in the latter part of the eighteenth century. Later they removed to the Empire State. The Teffts are quite numerous throughout New England, and people generally well-to-do. Jonathan Tefft, the paternal grandfather of our subject, married Miss Elizabeth Collins, of an old New England family, and they in due time migrated to New York State, locating on a farm in Madison County. Grandfather Tefft in middle life changed his residence from New York State to Illinois, settling near the present site of Elgin as early as 1835, at a time when that town gave little indication of its present importance, where they spent their last days, and passed away when nearly fourscore years of age. Grandmother Tefft came of Orthodox Quaker stock, and adhered closely to the religious faith in which she had been reared.

Amos Tefft, the father of our subject, was the third in order of birth of a family of seven sons and five daughters. Two of the sons became prominent and successful physicians, and most of them being men of more than ordinary intelligence, turned their attention to the professions. Amos Tefft was born in Madison County, N. Y., Aug. 29, 1815, and spent his childhood and youth at his father's farm, receiving his education in the common school. He was yet a single man when his family removed to Kane County, Ill. He was married in the Prairie State to Miss Margaret Calvert. This lady was born on the other side of the Atlantic, in the well-known city of Greenock, Scotland, and was of pure Scotch ancestry. Her father, Thomas Calvert, emigrated to the United States, and settled in the vicinity of Ithaca, N. Y., but later removed to Illinois, locating in Elgin, where he and his estimable wife spent the remainder of their days, both passing away when about seventy-seven years old.

In the spring of 1850 Amos Tefft, with a company of other men, left Elgin, Ill., and set out across the plains for the gold fields of California. They made the journey overland, and a few weeks later landed in Hangtown, where they began the search for the yellow ore with varied success, sojourning in that region about one year. The return trip was made via the Isthmus to New York City, and thence to Illinois. Although it did not result in a fortune to Mr. T., he traveled over a country which he had never seen before, and obtained much useful information in regard to the regions lying west of the Mississippi. In passing through Nebraska Territory he was greatly pleased with the face of the country, and from that time never gave up the idea of making it his home.

The father of our subject is still living, and has arrived at the advanced age of seventy-three years. He is still the bright and kindly man which he has always been during the years of a long and useful life. He identified himself entirely with the interests of his adopted State, and after filling other positions of trust was, in 1862, elected by the Republicans of Cass County to represent them in the Territorial Legislature. He has been a sound Republican since the organization of the party, and cast his vote for old Tippecanoe in the election of 1840. It is hardly necessary to say that he supported the grandson, Benjamin Harrison, with equal enthusiasm in the late election (1888). Mrs. Margaret Tefft, the wife and mother, accompanied her family to Nebraska, and with true devotedness did her full share in the building up of a home. Her death took place in Avoca Village, at the age of sixty-seven years. She was a descendant of old Presbyterian stock, and united with the Congregational Church in early life, remaining under its wing until the end. Orlando, our subject, is the only survivor of the two children of the parental family, his brother Randolph having died in infancy.

The subject of this sketch was reared in his native town of Elgin, Ill., and received a good practical education, completing his studies in the academy at that place. He has always been a reader, and like his father before him keeps himself well posted upon matters of general interest. After a residence of a few years in Avoca Precinct, during which he assisted his parents in the building of the homestead, he was married, July 4, 1867, to Miss E. H. Kirkpatrick. This lady was born Jan. 3, 1850, in Wapello County, Iowa, and was quite young when her parents came to Nebraska. Thereafter she returned to the Hawkeye State and completed her studies in the college at Tabor. She made her home with her parents until her marriage. Her father, S. M. Kirkpatrick, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume, is one of the most prominent men in this county, and a resident of Liberty Precinct.

To Mr. and Mrs. Tefft there have been born two children, one of whom, Roland, died in infancy; Clarence E. is pursuing his studies in the State University at Lincoln, being now a promising lad of seventeen years. Mr. Tefft, politically, is a staunch Republican, and both he and his excellent wife are members in good standing of the Congregational Church. Socially, Mr. T. belongs to the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 29, of Avoca. He takes a genuine interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of Cass County, is a man of decided views, and one whose opinions are generally respected.

GEORGE W. NORTON, Mayor of Weeping Water, has been closely identified with its most important interests for a period of eight years, and is consequently well qualified to discharge the duties of his responsible position. A native of the Empire State, he was born in the vicinity of Richfield Springs, Otsego County, Nov. 29, 1831, and there spent the opening years of his life, removing thence with his parents when a lad nine years of age. They at that time took up their residence on a farm in Springville Township, Erie County, where they lived until 1844, and where George W. entered upon the rudiments of a practical education.

Young Norton began his business career as an apprentice to the cabinet-maker's trade, and continued a resident of his native State until the fall of 1852. Then desiring to see something of the Great West, he migrated to Northern Illinois, and for a period of six years was a resident of Chicago. Two years of this time he conducted a grocery at the corner of Clark and Adams streets, in a building widely dissimilar from the handsome blocks which now occupy that site and of which the post-office is a conspicuous feature. The city fathers were at that time raising the grade, and Mr. Norton finally abandoned the grocery trade and resumed his work as a cabinet-maker.

In Chicago our subject made the acquaintance of Miss Abbie Sawyer, to whom he was married Oct. 16, 1856. Providence blessed this union with a family of six children, two sons and four daughters, five of whom are living; Jennie M. is the wife of E. E. Day, of Weeping Water, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work, and they have two children; Luella I. married Walter Cole, a merchant of Weeping Water; Elizabeth A., Edwin K. and Robert R., are at home with their parents. They are a bright and intelligent group, and have been given the educational advantages in keeping with their station in life.

Mr. Norton upon leaving Chicago in 1858 went to LaFayette, Ind., and was employed by the New Albany Railroad Company, to superintend the building of their roundhouse and other structures along the line of their road. This occupied most of his time until 1862. In the meantime, the Civil War being in progress, he entered the ranks of the State Militia, and finally became a member of Wilson's Cavalry at Chicago, where, with his comrades, he encamped and drilled a year, in the meantime furnishing their own horses and equipments. They desired to enter the regular service, but not being needed, disbanded and returned home.

We next find Mr. Norton a member of Company D in the 3d Wisconsin Infantry, which was assigned to the Department of the West, being first a portion of the 12th Army Corps and afterward with the 20th. Mr. Norton had the satisfaction of participating in the Atlanta campaign under Gen. Sherman, and met the enemy in the battles of Dalton, Resaca, Peachtree Creek, and the siege of Atlanta. At this latter place he was wounded, July 22, and sent to Kingston, Ga., where he was confined in the hospital until November. He then joined his regiment at Atlanta and marched to the sea. Upon entering the ranks of the regular army he was made First Sergeant. At Savannah he was promoted to Second Lieutenant. On the 14th of March, 1865, near Averasboro, N. C., he was again wounded, and obliged to ride six days before he could be relieved, and when reaching Goldsboro, N. C., was in such bad shape that it was impossible to give him proper treatment. He still carries the ball in his limb.

From Goldsboro our subject, with his regiment, was taken to New York by boat, where he was confined in the hospital until the close of the war, when he was mustered out and received his honorable discharge, after two years of hard service. In the meantime his family had been left in Marquette County, Wis., and after a brief sojourn there Mr. Norton made arrangements to settle at Atlantic, Iowa, and engage in the grain business. He put up an elevator and a mill, and was one of the first settlers in the town, being ahead of the railroad. This enterprise of Mr. Norton proved at first very remunerative. Later both mill and elevator were destroyed by fire, and he thus lost the greater part of his property. He, however, did not "desert the ship," but remained at Atlantic, and was one of the leading men in the various enterprises which resulted in the building up of a flourishing and important city. He officiated on the School Boards, and was a member continuously of the City Council and finally elected Mayor, serving two terms. He assisted in the erection of the school buildings and the establishment of the Congregational Church, being one of the seven who assisted in the organization of the society and the erection of the church edifice, at a cost of $2,500.

Mr. Norton remained a resident of the city of his fostering care and of which he was practically the founder, until 1880. His attention then became attracted to this county and especially South Bend Precinct, where he established himself in the grain business, and the following year came to Weeping Water. His fine business capacities were at once recognized, and he was welcomed to the community as a man very likely to be of value to its best interests. Upon the organization of the town as a city he was elected its first Mayor. He has always voted the Republican ticket, becoming a member of the party upon its organization, and casting his first Presidential vote for John C. Fremont, its first nominee, in 1856. He is treasurer of the Building Committee of the new Congregational Church, and is connected with various other enterprises having for their object the general progress of the town. He is prominent in the G. A. R., being a member of the Lafayette Post No. 61, at Weeping Water, and still maintains the patriotic principles which have actuated him since his early manhood.

Mrs. Norton was born in Portland, Me., Nov. 6, 1838, and came West with her parents in 1854, when a maiden of sixteen years, they locating in Wanpon, Wis., where she was married subsequently to our subject. Her parents were Josiah B. and Elizabeth S. (Barnes) Sawyer, who were natives of Maine, and the father a farmer by occupation. They lived in Wisconsin about two years, then removed to Atlantic, Iowa. They are still living, and make their home with their daughter, Mrs. Norton.

Burroughs Norton, the father of our subject, was born in Worcester, Mass., in June, 1800, and removed with his parents when a little lad of eight years to Richfield Springs, N. Y., where soon afterward he was left an orphan by the death of both parents. He became the apprentice of a tanner and currier, a trade which he learned in all its details, and subsequently established in business for himself at Richfield Springs. He married Miss Margaret Weber, and they became the parents of sixteen children, eleven of whom lived to mature years.

About 1842 the Norton family changed their residence to Erie County, N. Y., whence they removed about 1852 to Marquette County, Wis. The death of the mother took place at Kewanee, Ill., in 1864. The father later removed to St. Joseph, Mo., and now makes his home with his youngest daughter at that place. He was a very active and industrious man during his prime and a strong Abolitionist. Being a man of fine capabilities he was at one time quite prominent in public affairs, and was sent as a delegate to the National Convention at the city of Buffalo, which nominated John Van Buren for President on the Free-Soil ticket in 1844. He is a member of the Congregational Church, and although quite well advanced in years, enjoys good health and is quite active.

JOHAN M. NEELY, M. D. Too few men in the medical profession have a proper sense of the responsibilities connected therewith; too few realize the magnitude of the trusts committed to their care. When therefore there comes into a community a man of thorough intelligence as connected with his calling, one who has made a deep and patient study of his art, he obtains that recognition of his services which can only be gained by fidelity to duty and knowledge of the important things connected therewith. These thoughts are suggested in reviewing the career of the subject of this sketch. A man of thorough education and an extensive experience as army surgeon in the late war, Dr. Neely occupies a position in the front ranks of the medical profession in Southeastern Nebraska.

Our subject in the autumn of 1884 came to Bush-bury, this county, and after practicing there two years changed his residence to Wabash, soon after it had been laid out as a town. He has thus practically grown up with the village and become fully identified with the various interests pertaining to its growth and prosperity. The only son of Dr. Joseph and Lydia (Montgomery) Neely, he was born at Newburg, Warrick Co., Ind., Feb. 20, 1836, the home of his parents at that time being near the banks of the Ohio River. When an infant of six weeks old, his parents changed their location to Cynthiana, Posey County, that State, where the father thereafter practiced his profession for a period of twenty years. The family, besides our subject, included six daughters, one of whom is living, and making her home in Mississippi.

Young Neely began his education in the district school, and at an early age had decided to adopt the practice of medicine as his life calling. When a youth of sixteen years he entered the Baptist College at Franklin, Ind., of which he was a student one year, then he attended the academy at Newburg one and one-half years, completing the academic course. He entered upon the study of medicine at the age of nineteen, under the instruction of his father, who enjoyed a very extensive practice and was eminently successful. After three years of close attention to the best medical works published, he entered the Eclectic College of Medicine at Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he was graduated with honors in February, 1858.

Young Dr. Neely began the practice of his profession in his native town, but a little over two years later removed, Jan. 1, 1862, to Owensville, Ind., becoming one of the many physicians and surgeons giving their attention to the sick and wounded Union soldiers after the battle of Pittsburg Landing, receiving his commission from

Gov. Morton. Dr. Neely was assigned to the 7th Illinois Cavalry, and attended upon his patients during their sojourn at the hospital in the field. In September, 1863, he received the regular commission of Assistant Surgeon of the 120th Indiana Infantry, and was soon promoted to Surgeon, Sept. 1, 1864. In January, 1865, after the battle of Nashville, he was sent to North Carolina, where he became Medical Director of the general hospital at Raleigh, and was retained in the Government service until January, 1866. During this period he gathered valuable knowledge from a varied experience, which has done him good service for more than twenty years.

In April, 1866, Dr. Neely returned to Owensville, Ind., and on the 17th day of that month was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Smith. This lady was born near Vincennes, Ind., Nov. 6, 1844, and was finely educated, following the profession of a teacher three or four years before her marriage. Dr. Neely, at Owensville, entered upon a very large and lucrative practice, receiving the bulk of the patronage in his county, where his conscientious attention to duty served to gather around him hosts of friends. With the natural desire of mankind, however, for change, he finally decided to cast his lot with the people of the farther West, and accordingly pitched his tent in the young and growing State of Nebraska. He met with a severe affliction in the death of his wife, in October, 1882, when she was but thirty-eight years old. There had been born to them six interesting children, namely: Mary, who died in infancy; Joseph, John M., Charles, William S. and Otis. Joseph is an expert telegraph operator, and makes his home in Wabash. The other children are with their father. The parents of Dr. Neely were natives of Kentucky, and are now deceased. He comes of honorable ancestry, and his paternal great-grandfather distinguished himself as a soldier in the Revolutionary War, invested with the rank of Major. His uncle, Gen. John I. Neely, was an aid-de-camp, under Gen. Harrison, in the War of 1812. Springing thus from a patriotic source and in sympathy with the Union and freedom, it is hardly necessary to say that our subject is one of the staunchest supporters of the Republican party. Socially, he belongs to Kenesaw Post, G. A. R., at Elmwood. He has been a close student and an extensive reader, and in the ranks of his profession has aimed to excel. The fact that his practice is constantly increasing, being a third more the past year (1888) than heretofore, gives sufficient indication of his standing among the people of this county.

FRANCIS R. GUTHMANN, a capitalist of Plattsmouth, is numbered among the wealthy and substantial citizens of Cass County. He has now practically retired from business, although he still supervises his extensive interests. He has contributed largely to the upbuilding of the city, and has a great deal of property here, including a handsome residence, the best hotel of the place, and two smaller ones, besides stores and other buildings.

Mr. Guthmann was born in the village of Waldhausen, near Buchen, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, July 2, 1841. His parents, Francis and Anna Maria (Gramlich) Guthmann, were natives of the same place, as were also their parents. The paternal grandfather of our subject owned a farm there and was a lifelong resident of that place. His father, Francis Guthmann, was reared to agriculture, which he pursued in his native land until his death, Nov. 26, 1875. His wife, Anna Maria, was born in a village near her husband's birthplace, and spent her last years in the home where all of her married life was passed. She died Dec. 11, 1860. There were fourteen children born to her and her husband, and ten of them grew to maturity. Caroline married Peter Rauen; Helen married Valentine Egeuberger; Charles, who served in the 3d Missouri Regiment under Gen. Sigel for four years, and afterward settled in Lancaster County, Neb., died at the home of our subject in 1882; Maria L. married Benjamin Hempel; William, who served in the German Army, died in Plattsmouth in 1884; our subject was the next in order of birth; then Maria Catherine, who married J. V. Weckbach, of whom see sketch on another page of this book; John F. M. died in his native village; Fred and Oswald are the youngest members of the family. Seven of these are living in Nebraska, and all in Cass County, with the exception of Fred, who is a resident of Seward County.

Francis R. received an excellent education in the Fatherland, attending school pretty steadily in his boyhood until he was fourteen years of age. He then assisted his father in the labors of the farm until the month of December, 1856, when he and one of his sisters set sail from London, and landed in New York Feb. 9, 1857. Another brother and sister had preceded them, and they joined them in Davenport, Iowa, where they had settled. Our subject had come to America with but little means, and he immediately set about procuring work that he might better his financial condition. The first year of his stay in this country he was employed at the saddler's trade. In 1859 he started with a party bound for Pike's Peak in search of gold. Going from Davenport with teams, they traversed the wild prairies of Iowa, and crossing the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, then an insignificant hamlet, they pushed on across the plains through the Territory of Nebraska to near Ft. Kearney, where they were stayed in their course by meeting many weary and disappointed emigrants returning from Pike's Peak with very discouraging reports, so the party concluded to abandon their purpose. Our subject's brother decided to take up a claim in Nebraska, and selected a tract of land in Lancaster County, about ten miles east of the present site of Lincoln, which was then a wild, open prairie, owned by the Government, and for sale at $1.25 an acre. Indians still lingered in that part of the country, and deer, elks and wolves roamed at will over the plains. Our subject was then too young to make a claim to some land, so he returned to civilization. He spent two months in St. Louis, and then went to St. Joseph and worked in a bakery. After thoroughly mastering that trade, he engaged in pantry work in the Pacific House in that city, remaining there until 1863. He then crossed the plains to Denver, and there engaged as pastry cook in the Planters' Hotel, then the leading hotel in Denver. Ten months later he left that place, in February, 1864, and, with others, started with six wagons for that part of Idaho now included in the Territory of Montana. While traveling in the mountains the party encountered severe storms and nearly perished.

In one place they were five days making seven miles, and one night the wolves killed and devoured one of the mules. On the 15th of May the party arrived at Virginia City, and there learned that it had been reported that they had all perished in the mountains. Mr. Guthmann opened a bake shop and boarding-house in that city, but his residence in that part of the country was of short duration, as in the fall of 1864 he came to Plattsmouth to invest his money in city property, and made arrangements to erect a store building. In 1865 he returned to the mountains and established a bakery and boarding-house in Blackfoot City, Deer Lodge Co., Mont., conducting both with good financial success until 1868, when he again came to Plattsmouth. He engaged in the bakery business here, and the following year added packing pork. In 1870 he opened a billiard hall, and in 1871 a grocery store, giving his personal attention to these varied enterprises until 1874, all the while carrying on his bakery. He then sold the grocery store, but continued to manage the billiard hall until 1881. Since that time he has not been engaged in any actual business, but devotes himself to the supervision of his multiplicity of interests, from which he derives an ample income. Mr. Guthmann is a man of great enterprise; he has a clear head for business, and displays much tact and shrewdness in his various undertakings. He has done much toward building up Plattsmouth, having erected two dwelling-houses and three stores, besides other buildings. The brick house which he occupies with his family is one of the finest in the city, and was erected in 1886. Mr. Guthmann is a stockholder in the Citizens' Bank, also in the Bank of Cass County, and also in the Plattsmouth Canning Factory, of which he is President. He has taken an honorable part in public affairs, having been a member of the City Council. He has always been identified with the Democrats in his political affiliations.

Mr. Guthmann was united in marriage to Anna M. Pankratz, Jan. 10, 1878, and to them have been born four children—Nellie, Charles F. M., Henry A. J. and Minnie T. They have also an adopted daughter, Annie. Mrs. Guthmann was born in Manitowoc County, Wis., Nov. 24, 1860, and is a daughter of Joseph and Katrina (Bruner) Pankratz, natives of Bavaria. They were reared and married in that country, and resided there until 1853. In that year they crossed the water to the United States, and located in Manitowoc County, Wis., being early settlers of that part of the country. Mr. Pankratz bought a tract of timber land, and first erected a round log house to shelter his family, and then commenced to clear a farm from the wilderness. Later he erected a substantial, two-story, hewed log house, and other necessary farm buildings, and resided there until his death in 1863. His widow is still living on the old homestead. There were eight children in their family, as follows: Anton, who died at the old home in 1888; Mary, who married Joseph Lemberger, is now deceased; Katrina, who married John Steiner, and lives in Manitowoc County, Wis.; Theresa, who married Henry Fetzer, and lives in Lancaster County, Neb.; Frances, who married Fabian Heitzmann, and lives in Gage County, Neb.; Joseph, who lives in Manitowoc County; Mrs. Guthmann; Maggie, who married John Smith, and lives in Manitowoc County, Wis.

The life of Mr. Guthmann has been an active one, full of enterprise and stirring incident, and through all he preserved the cool headedness and good judgment which enabled him to acquire the fortune he is now enjoying. On an adjoining page appears an excellent portrait of this well-known resident.

—•••••

AMSDEL SHELDON, a practical and well-to-do farmer of Avoca Precinct, owns a good homestead property on section 19, and has within the precinct, all told, 480 acres. The land is fertile and valuable, and in addition to this Mr. Sheldon has 279 acres in Berlin Precinct, Otoe County. The whole is well developed and supplied with good improvements. The homestead buildings are more than ordinarily tasteful and substantial, and the Sheldon family occupies no unimportant position among the intelligent people in good circumstances along the southern line of the county.

Mr. Sheldon has been a resident of Avoca only since 1884, removing to this place from Berlin Pre-cinet, Otoe County, where he had resided a period of fifteen years. He settled in that county in the spring of 1869, and built up a good homestead from the uncultivated prairie. His arrival in Nebraska was the completion of a long journey from New England and the Green Mountain State, where he was born in Windsor County, Sept. 27, 1839. His father, Joel Sheldon, was a well-to-do Windsor County farmer, who later migrated to Michigan in 1830, where he spent a few years, then returned to his native haunts, and in 1869 came to Nebraska with his two sons, and died here in March, 1875, at the age of seventy-four years. He was born in February, 1801, and was the son of Jacob Sheldon, a native of either Vermont or New Hampshire, and who married a Miss Lovejoy. They afterward lived in both Windham and Rutland Counties, Vt., and passed their last days in the latter county. Joel Sheldon, the father of our subject, upon reaching manhood was married in Windsor County, Vt., to Miss Fidelia Pettigrew, who was born and reared there. She is yet living, and makes her home with her son, Lawson Sheldon, in Nehawka Village, this county, and is now arrived at the advanced age of eighty-three years.

The subject of this sketch is one of twins, the two youngest of six children born to his parents, and he lived with them until reaching his majority. He was a single man upon coming to Nebraska, but found a bride in Otoe County, being married Sept. 3, 1874, to Miss Celia Ellis. This lady was born in Fond du Lac, Wis., Sept. 5, 1852, and came to Nebraska with her parents in her girlhood. The latter were Lathrop and Elmeria (Ward) Ellis, who settled in Otoe County about 1866. The father is still living on a farm there, and is now past his threescore years and ten. The mother died in middle life in 1862.

Mrs. Sheldon received a very good education in the schools of her native county, pursuing her studies for a time in Oshkosh, Wis. Later she developed into a teacher, and followed this profession in Wisconsin and Nebraska City before her marriage. Of her union with our subject there are three children—Carrie L., Esther C. and Lucian A. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon are favorites in the social circles of their community, and their home forms one of its most pleasant places of resort. Mrs. Sheldon is a member in good standing of the Congregational Church, attending services at Avoca. Mr. Sheldon, politically, is a solid Republican, giving his undivided support to the principles of his party. He has officiated as Assessor of Avoca Precinct, and socially, belongs to Lodge No. 29, I. O. O. F.

DANIEL D. ANDRUS is extensively identified with the agricultural interests of Cass County, owning one of the largest and best managed farms in Centre Precinct. Its 600 broad and fertile acres, lying on sections 15, 16, 21 and 22, are all under good tillage, yielding abundant harvests, and the fine pastures support large herds of well-graded stock.

The subject of this biographical notice was born in Orleans County, N. Y., Nov. 13, 1835. His father, A. B. Andrus, was born in the same State in 1811, and lived there until 1852, when he went to California by steamer, and staid there until 1856. During his sojourn in that Eldorado he made good use of his time and secured a good share of gold dust. After his return to his old home he went to Iowa and lived for several years. He subsequently came to the home of our subject, and died here in 1885. His widow is still living in Iowa. Her maiden name was Olive Bradway, and to her and her husband were born five children, two of whom are living.

Daniel Andrus was reared in his native county to a stalwart and vigorous manhood, remaining an inmate of his old home until he was twenty years old. At that age he went to Jones County, Iowa, arriving there in January, 1856. He there engaged in farming and stock dealing quite extensively. While a resident of Iowa Mr. Andrus met and married Miss Louisa Ewing, and to them have come six children, five of whom are still living, namely: Charles B., Clifton M., Daniel D., Jr., Fred W. and Olive E. All are at home. They have been given excellent opportunities to secure an education, and have been trained to good and honorable lives. Mrs. Andrus was born in Pennsylvania, June 1, 1840, and lived there until about 1859, when she accompanied her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Ewing, to Jackson County, Iowa, and from there to Bowen's Prairie, Jones Co., Iowa, where she lived until her marriage.

Mr. Andrus came to Nebraska in 1864, and spent the ensuing years in Omaha and Grand Island. In 1868 he came to Cass County and bought a farm in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, and made his home on that for a short time. Finally, after several changes, he came here in 1875, and bought the land included in his present place, which was then mostly wild prairie. He has since added to it until he now owns one of the largest farms in the county. He has set out a fine grove, embracing about eight acres, including a good orchard. In 1876-77 he erected a substantial residence, and has made many other valuable improvements. The farm is well cultivated and is devoted to raising stock and grain.

As Mr. Andrus has been a powerful factor in developing the agricultural resources of this precinct, he is naturally a man of weight and influence in its public affairs, and he has often been called upon to hold both precinct and school offices, his fellow-citizens gladly availing themselves of his counsel and wisdom in carrying out schemes for the improvement of the township, or for the advancement of education within its limits. He is a man of far-reaching foresight, with business talents of a high order, and superior powers of judgment. He is independent in his political views, but generally casts his vote with the Republicans.

THOMAS MITCHELL, who worthily represents the industrial interests of Plattsmouth as a carpenter, was a pioneer of this city and county, and has contributed his share in developing them from the wild, sparsely settled prairie that he found on his arrival here in the days of 1857. He was born near Xenia, Greene Co., Ohio, Aug. 27, 1811. His father, James Mitchell, was a native of Pennsylvania, but it is not known where his grandfather, David Mitchell, was born, only that he was of foreign parentage. He was for several years engaged in his occupation of farmer in Pennsylvania, but in 1792 he removed from there to Kentucky, and was one of the pioneers of Fayette County in the time of Daniel Boone's residence there. The Indians were then numerous and hostile, and at one time, while Mr. Mitchell was out with a scouting party, in quest of a party of savages who had stolen some horses, the latter lay in ambush, surprised the white men, and killed some of them. Mr. Mitchell was severely wounded, but managed to escape alive. He moved with his family to Ohio in 1802, and was an early settler there. He took up a tract of timber land, from which he commenced to develop a farm, and continued to reside there until his death, June 10, 1817, in his eightieth year. Margaret Mitchell, his wife, died Feb. 4, 1825, and they now lie peacefully sleeping in Massie's Creek Cemetery, near Xenia.

The father of our subject went to Kentucky at the same time that his parents did, and also accompanied them to Ohio a few years later. He bought a tract of timber land near Xenia, and built a log house thereon for the shelter of his family, and in that humble dwelling our subject was afterward born. Mr. Mitchell cleared a farm and lived on it some years, when he had an opportunity to trade it for one nearer to his father's land, and there he made his home until his death in 1850. He had gone to Greene County as a pioneer in the early days of its settlement, and in the forty-eight years that he passed there, years fraught with labor and hardships at first, wherein he had won a comfortable competence, he witnessed great changes, and was himself one of the factors in bringing them about. In the early days there were no markets anywhere in that section, and after the completion of the canal Dayton was the nearest market for some years. The maiden name of the mother of our subject was Martha Espy, and she was born in Pennsylvania. Her father, Josiah Espy, was, it is thought, a native of Pennsylvania. He moved from there at the same time the Mitchell family did to Kentucky, and there died in November, 1801. His wife, Elizabeth Espy, died in Ohio, Nov. 19, 1809. The mother of our subject resided with her parents until her marriage, and was carefully trained in the art of spinning flax and wool. She was an excellent housewife, and in the days when stoves were almost unknown did her cooking by the fire in the huge, old-fashioned fireplace. She died at the home of a daughter in Xenia, Ohio, in 1863, at the venerable age of eighty-six years. There were thirteen children born to her and her husband, all of whom grew up and eleven of them are married. Their names are Margaret, David, Eliza, Ann, Maria, James E., Josiah, Martha, Thomas, Sarah, Robert A., Francis P. and Samuel K.

Thomas Mitchell was reared in his native county, and there learned the trade of carpenter and joiner, following it in different parts of Ohio, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and New York. In 1839 he located in Warren County, Ohio, and resided there until 1850. From there he went to Loveland, Clermont Co., Ohio, and at the expiration of four years' residence there went to Cincinnati, where he was actively engaged at his trade until 1857. Shrewdly foreseeing that in a newly settled Territory like Nebraska his work as a carpenter would be in great demand, he resolved to locate here, and in the month of May came to Platts-mouth, with his family, by way of the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri Rivers. The land here was at that time nearly all owned by the Government and for sale at $1.25 an acre. There were but few inhabitants here, and only a short distance to the westward deer, antelopes and other wild game roamed the prairies. He immediately entered land from the Government, but he never resided on it, as he commenced to work at carpentering that summer in Platts-mouth, and has been a continuous resident here since; and thus he has witnessed the entire growth of the city, and has aided it not a little, as he was considered a very skillful and faithful workman, and his services were in constant demand as a builder. By his industry and the judicious management of his monetary affairs he has been enabled to lay up a competence, so that his declining years may be spent free from care.

Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage to Jane Clendenin, Aug. 12, 1841, and for twenty years they faithfully shared life's burdens, and were then called to part, she dying in 1861. She was a native of Warren County, Ohio, and was a daughter of Samuel and Cynthia Clendenin. She was an exemplary woman, and her death was felt far beyond the family circle by the many friends who had been attracted to her by her genial disposition. Ten children blessed her union with her husband, seven of whom grew to maturity, three dying in infancy. The names of the former are Cordelia, James, Martha, Francis L., Cynthia, George W. and Charles.

Mr. Mitchell is a straightforward man, whose word is considered as good as a bond, and in him the Presbyterian Church finds a valued member, who cheerfully aids all schemes for the moral elevation of society. He is a thorough believer in the policy of the Republican party, of which he has been a member since its formation. Before that time he was a Whig, and cast his first vote for Gen. Harrison, of Tippecanoe fame, in 1840, and after a lapse of forty-eight years voted for that illustrious President's grandson, the Gen. Harrison of the present day.

—❦—

BENJAMIN F. LANG, M. D., the only homeopathic physician in Weeping Water, enjoys an extensive and lucrative business, and bears the reputation of being a conscientious practitioner and valuable as a member of the community. He was born thirty-three years ago on the rugged New England Coast in Somerset County, Me., Dec. 12, 1855, and lived there until reaching man's estate. Upon leaving the primary schools he entered the Friends' Classical School in Providence, R. I., where he was a student four years, taking the full course, and acquitting himself with great honor. Soon after leaving school he became private tutor in the family of Moses Bailey, of Winthrop, Me., and a year later entered upon the study of medicine under the instruction of Dr. Byron Porter, one of the most prominent and successful physicians of Newport, Me. He remained a resident of his native State some time thereafter, and took lectures in Bowdoin Medical Institute and the Cincinnati Medical College, from which latter institution he was graduated in 1883.

Dr. Lang, when leaving New England and after completing his medical studies, began the regular practice of his profession in Bainbridge, Ross Co.,

Ohio, of which he remained a resident until coming to Nebraska in September of 1886. In his introduction of the homeopathic system of practice, he finds many adherents and a generally favorable feeling toward the simple methods of this school. His success has naturally been largely influential in building up this feeling among the people in the central and southern portions of the county, where he numbers a large list of patrons. Although his residence here has been comparatively brief, his labors have met with a most generous response. His main office is located in the new Gibson Block, on I street, and he has an elegant home, a very large two-story residence, which he has built since coming here, and which is the result of his two years' work—a showing which he may justly look upon with pride.

Dr. Lang was married in Shreve, Wayne Co., Ohio, Dec. 6, 1883, to Miss Clara Hughes, who was born at Moreland, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1855, being married on her birthday. They have had two children, but only one is living, Edith May, who was born Nov. 13, 1885. Mrs. Lang received a good education, being graduated from the High School in her native town, and thereafter followed the profession of a teacher for a period of thirteen years. Her parents were John and Susan (Caveny) Hughes, the former a native of Wayne County, Ohio. They are both living, making their home in Shreve, of which place the father is at present the Mayor. He was for many years engaged as a merchant, but is now retired from active labor. Both parents are members in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Their son James is Judge of the Circuit Court at Mattoon, Ill., and another son is a successful practicing attorney of David City, this State.

Dr. Lang and his estimable wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Weeping Water, in which the Doctor officiates as chorister of the church and Sunday-school. He is a solid Republican politically, although carefully avoiding the cares and responsibilities of official honors, preferring to give his time and attention to his profession. He is prominently connected with the Homeopathic State Medical Society of Nebraska.

Hon. Peter H. Lang, the father of our subject, was born in Palmyra, Me., March 4, 1828, and has lived there all his life, engaged mostly in farming and stock-raising and also in general merchandising. He was married to Miss Nancy E. Farnham, in 1852, and they became the parents of five children. The parents in religious matters belong to the Society of Friends. Peter Lang was elected to the Maine Legislature in 1881, serving his term acceptably, and has held various offices in his county, officiating as Sheriff, Justice of the Peace, and in other positions of trust. Samuel S. Lang, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Bath, N. H., and spent his life from the age of twenty in Maine.

—❦—

RUSSELL A. ASHMUN. In the career of this gentleman we find an excellent example for young men just embarking in the field of active life, of what may be accomplished by a man beginning with modest means, but honest, prudent and industrious. He came to Nebraska in June, 1869, two years after it had been admitted into the Union as a State, and settling on section 12, Weeping Water Precinct, proceeded to construct a farm from the elements of the primitive soil. It required no small amount of energy and perseverance during the first years of his residence here to combat the various difficulties which beset him, in common with his neighbors, but he has come out of the strife with flying colors. He now has one of the best regulated farms in the precinct, the improvements of which he has brought about mostly through his own personal efforts, and which consist of a good set of buildings, a flourishing apple orchard four acres in extent, a grove of forest trees of his own planting, substantial fencing, a goodly assortment of live stock, and the farm machinery indispensable to the progressive agriculturist. The present residence was completed in the summer of 1888, and is in modern style of architecture, forming, with its surroundings, one of the attractive homes along the southern line of the county. His farming operations include the breeding of cattle, including blooded Holsteins and Short-horns, and he also has some first-class horses, both roadsters and for farm purposes. The premises form a scene delightful to the eye, and as an illustration of industry and perseverance most pleasing to contemplate.

William Ashmun, the father of our subject, lived for many years on a farm northeast of what was called Talmage Center, Talmage Township, Summit Co., Ohio, and at this homestead the subject of our sketch was born, Sept. 25, 1847. He pursued his first studies in the little school-house at the "Four Corners," and later attended the academy at the "Center," completing a practical education. He remained at the homestead until a young man twenty-two years of age, then turned his face toward the farther West, and across the Father of Waters, resolving to cast his lot among the pioneers of Nebraska. Here also he found his bride, being married, Nov. 20, 1872, to Miss Ella Weaver. Mrs. Ashmun is also a native of Ohio, and was born Feb. 5, 1853, in Tuscarawas County. She lived there until about three years old, and then removed with her adopted parents to Missouri, from there to Iowa, where she lived until the fall of 1870, when they took up their residence in Weeping Water Precinct, this county. Her adopted parents are Jacob and Emily (Weaver) Walter, natives of Ohio, and the father a harness-maker by occupation. They are residents of Denver, Colo. Of this union there have been born eight children, six of whom are living, namely: Edward, Frank, Charles, Royal, Walter and Sterling H. In the sketch of Henry Ashmun, a brother of our subject, and which will be found on another page, is noted the parental history. The Ashmun family is widely and favorably known throughout the northeastern part of Ohio as belonging to the best element of that section, being generally people well-to-do, highly intelligent, and prominent in their community.

JOHAN M. FOWLER. The subject of this biography, as a son of one of the earliest pioneers of Cass County, and one who has borne worthily the mantle of his honored sire, deserves more than passing mention. He is pleasantly located on a good farm of 160 acres on section 6, one and one-half miles east of Weeping Water. This land was secured by his father as a pre-emption claim in 1858, nine years before Nebraska was admitted into the Union as a State.

Charles Fowler, the father of our subject, here began life as a pioneer, giving to his homestead his best efforts, and remaining upon it until his death, which took place April 21, 1884. He was born in Cattaraugus County, N. Y., in 1825, and traced his ancestry to the Empire of Germany. When he was a mere boy his parents removed from New York State to Pennsylvania, settling in Mercer County, where Charles was reared to manhood and married Miss Esther A. Brakeman. This lady, the mother of our subject, was a native of Pennsylvania, and of Holland-Dutch descent.

After their marriage Charles Fowler and his young wife began life together on a farm in the Keystone State, having little besides their courageous hearts and strong hands with which to labor. After the birth of three children, the father, desirous of bettering his financial condition, resolved upon seeking the Far West. Disposing of his interests in Mercer County, Pa., he started overland with his little family to Nebraska, which became the field of his future operations through life. He was prospered in his labors as a pioneer and an agriculturist, securing a competency for his old age, and retired from active labor about six years before his death, leaving the farm and taking up his abode in Weeping Water. There the mother is still living, occupying a comfortable home in Park addition, and is now fifty-nine years old. She is a lady widely respected, and a member in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Charles Fowler, politically, was a lifelong Democrat, a man of decided views, and one who kept himself well informed upon matters of interest to the intelligent citizen.

The subject of this sketch, the third child of the parental family, was born in Mercer County, Pa., June 14, 1856. He came with his parents to Nebraska Territory when but a lad, and was reared to manhood in this county. He became at an early age familiar with the various employments of farm life, and has been content to make of agriculture his independent vocation. He found his wife in Avoca Precinct, being married Dec. 10, 1877, to Miss Laura J. Compton, one of its most estimable young ladies. Mrs. Fowler is a native of Tama County, Iowa, where her birth took place March 15, 1858. She came with her parents to Nebraska in the spring of 1875. The latter, Elias and Nancy A. (Jenkins) Compton, are now living on a farm in Avoca Precinct, of which they have been residents for the last thirteen years. They are natives of Ohio, and are numbered among the highly respected citizens of this county.

Mrs. Fowler was educated in the Hawkeye State, and received careful home training from an excellent mother. She remained under the parental roof until her marriage. The household circle of Mr. and Mrs. Fowler was completed by the birth of six children, namely: George L., Alice M., Eddie L., Mabel A., Myrtle M. and Charles. The homestead with its appurtenances suggests the idea of plenty and comfort, and is noticeable among the other well-regulated farms along the southern line of the county. Mr. Fowler uniformly votes the straight Democratic ticket, but further from this takes no part in politics, preferring to give his undivided attention to his farming interests.

JOHAN B. HOLMES. The subject of this sketch has built up one of the finest estates in Rock Bluff Precinct, which comprises one of the most valuable farms within its borders, embellished with substantial buildings, including a very handsome and commodious two-story brick residence, constructed in modern style of architecture. There is probably not a more attractive home along the eastern line of the county, and its inmates are people of more than ordinary intelligence. There are four children at present under the home roof, namely: Willie A., John H., Alvin A. and Elizabeth. The eldest daughter, Christina, is the wife of C. W. Nix, and lives in Custer County, this State.

Our subject traces his ancestry to Scotland, of which his paternal grandfather, John Holmes, was a native, and was born near the city of Glasgow. When reaching man's estate he married a lady of that city, and they emigrated to the United States about 1805, locating in Delaware County, N. Y., in the midst of a timber tract, from which the hardy Scotch pioneer built up a good homestead, and there with his estimable wife spent the remainder of his days. They were the parents of five children, of whom the eldest, a daughter, Mary, remained in Scotland, and as far as known is still living. When quite young she was adopted by a wealthy aunt, a Mrs. Miller, from whom she inherited a large property. One of the sons, Robert, lived in Scotland until he became the father of grown sons, Harry and Robert, Jr., whom he subsequently accompanied to the United States. They are living in New York, but the father returned to Scotland, looking his last upon the scenes of earth in his native country, where his bones were laid to rest. The other son, Walter, the father of our subject, was a lad six years of age when he came with his parents to America. He was reared to manhood on the farm in Delaware County, N. Y., and married Miss Elizabeth Blair. He took his bride to the old homestead, where they lived until after the death of the wife and mother. Of their children, thirteen in number, John B. was the fourth in order of birth, and of that large family only five survive. Three brothers, Thomas, Archibald M. and John B., reside in this county. The two sisters still live in Delaware County, N. Y. R. Elizabeth is the wife of William Blair, and lives in Hamden; and Agnes is the wife of Samuel Terry, living in Walton.

A few years after the settlement of the Holmes family in New York State our subject began to assist his father in the various employments of the pioneer farm, and upon reaching man's estate was married, Jan. 3, 1855, to Miss Mary A., daughter of Samuel and Pauline (Holmes) Law. Mrs. Holmes was born Dec. 18, 1830, in Greene County, N. Y., and spent the years of her childhood and youth under the parental roof, acquiring her education in the district schools. Her parents were natives of New York. Her father died in 1888. Her mother is still living. Their family consisted of nine children, five of whom are yet living, three in Nebraska and two in New York State.

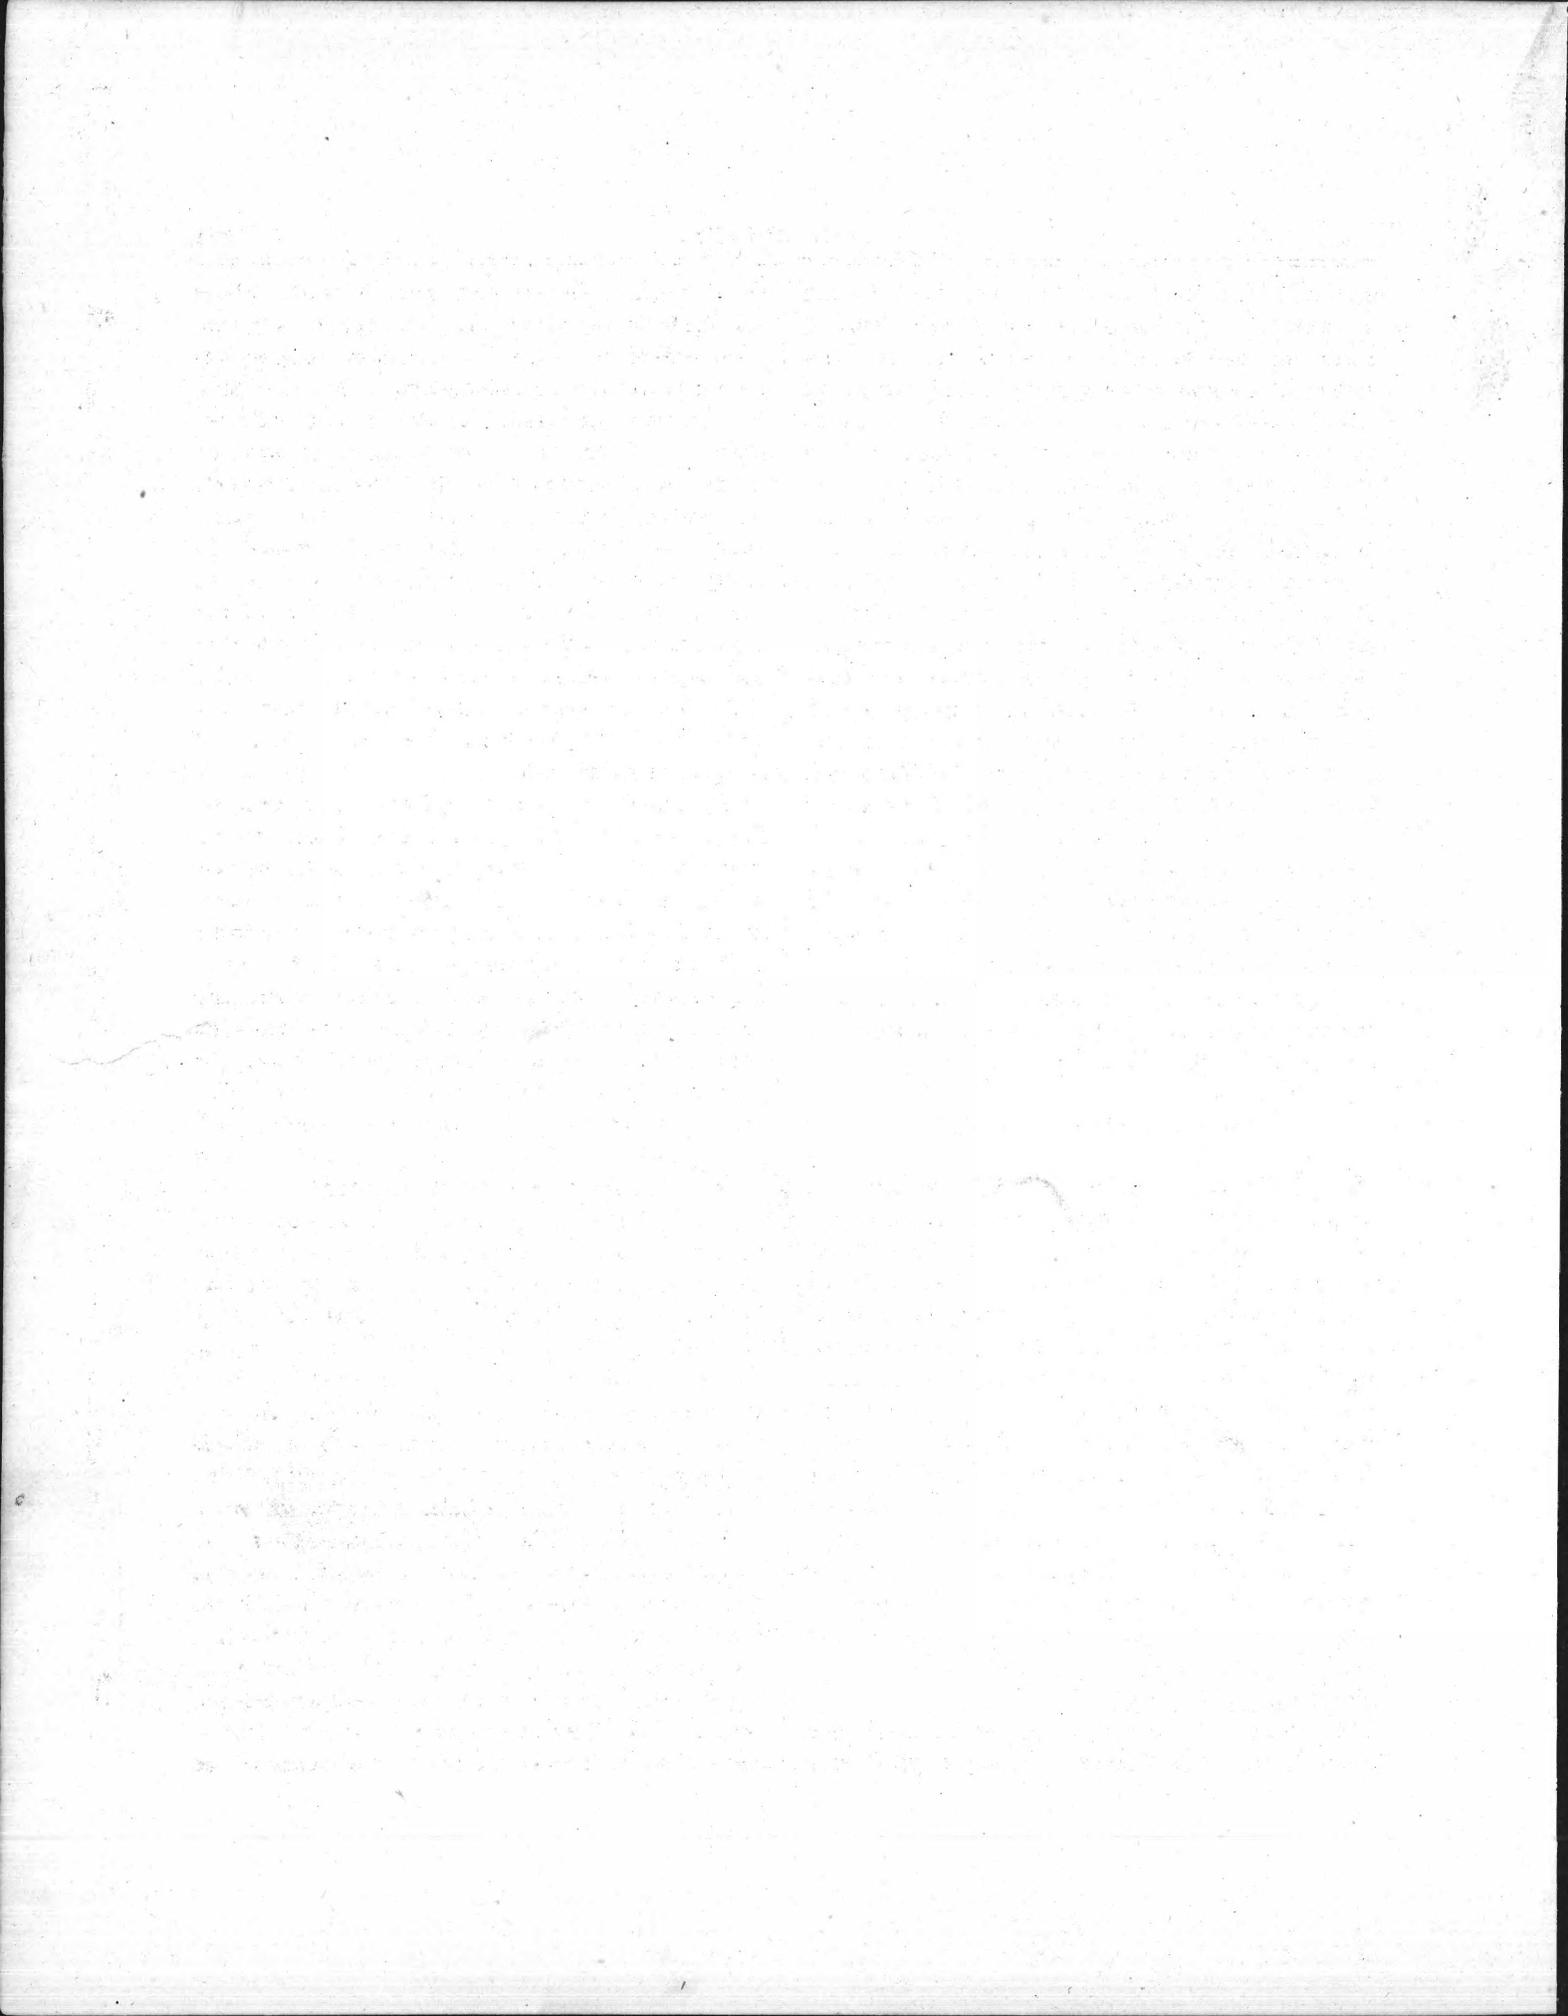

Mr. Holmes in the spring of 1865, leaving the Empire State, came to Nebraska Territory, and the year following purchased 160 acres of land on section 18, in Rock Bluff Precinct, which he has since added to his estate, and it now comprises 540 acres, and there he has since been a resident. His father joined him in the spring of 1867, remaining with him two years, then returned to the old home in New York State, where his death took place in the year 1871, when he was sixty-three years old. For a period of fifteen years he had voted with the Republican party, of which our subject is also a most decided adherent. The family, except John B., as far back as is known, belonged to the Presbyterian Church. The Holmes family comprise a portion of the solid element of Cass County, and have contributed their full quota in building up its present enviable reputation and advancing its prosperity and welfare. On his extensive farm Mr. Holmes usually feeds from 200 to 300 head of cattle. He is also engaged in breeding high-grade Norman and Clydesdale horses, some of which are full blood, and eligible to be registered in the American herd book. His cattle run from thoroughbred Short-horns down to grades.

RESIDENCE OF LOUIS FOLTZ, SEC. 33. M<sup>T</sup>. PLEASANT PRECT. CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF J. B. HOLMES, SEC. 18. (11.-14.) ROCK BLUFF PRECT. CASS CO.

We invite the reader's attention to a fine view of the elegant home of Mr. Holmes on an accompanying page of this work.

LOUIS FOLTZ, a representative citizen and thorough-going farmer, resides on his highly improved farm on section 33 of Mt. Pleasant Precinct. He was born Feb. 23, 1840, in Holmes County, Ohio, where he lived, dividing his time between labor on the farm and attending public school, until he enlisted in the Union Army, May 2, 1861, in Company G, 16th Ohio Infantry, as a private soldier. The regiment of which he was a member formed a part of the corps commanded by Gen. Morrison. Their field of operation was in Virginia and West Virginia. He took an active part in many skirmishes and engagements, but the largest portion of his duty was confined to the garrison and guarding property. He was honorably discharged in September, 1861, when he returned to Holmes County, Ohio.

Mr. Foltz was married, on the 4th of December, 1862, to Miss Susan Stucker, a native of Holmes County, where she was born April 3, 1838. She is a daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth Stucker, who were natives of Pennsylvania. Her parental ancestors were of German descent. Mr. and Mrs. Foltz have an interesting family of four children, namely: William J.; Mary R., now the wife of E. Munson, residing in Mt. Pleasant Precinct; Andrew J., deceased, and David. After his marriage, our subject with his family resided in Holmes County until the spring of 1876, when he removed to Cass County, Neb. In the fall of the same year he settled on his present farm, which now embraces 440 acres of land, a large portion of which is under a high state of cultivation. He also owns 160 acres in Stove Creek Precinct, in all, 600 acres of valuable land.

Mr. Foltz is a son of Solomon and Rebecca Foltz. Both parents were natives of Pennsylvania, who removed from their native State and settled in Holmes County, Ohio, at a very early date, nearly a half-century ago. They resided there until 1862, when they migrated to Cass County, Neb., and settled in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, where the mother died in 1882. The father now resides with our subject, and is past seventy years of age, in splendid health, bidding fair to live for many years. His paternal ancestors were German; his grandfather, David Foltz, served as a soldier in the American Army during the War of 1812.

A large family of children, ten in number, were born to the parents of our subject, nine of whom are living, namely: Louis, who was the eldest; Louisa, now the wife of Mr. John Shelton, residing in Weeping Water; David resides in Cheyenne County; Frederick resides in Elmwood Precinct; Barbara E. is the wife of Samuel Bergen, and resides in Kansas; Catherine is the wife of Robert Lockston, and resides in Fillmore County, Neb.; Susan, now Mrs. Brant, resides in Nebraska; Mary is the wife of Caye Wright, and resides in Nebraska; Joseph resides in Stove Creek Precinct, this county, and Rose A. is deceased. The parents of Mrs. Foltz had a family of six children, namely: Catherine, who resides in Wayne County, Ohio; Mary A. is the wife of George McElroy, and resides in Greene County, Ind.; Christina is the wife of S. J. Cutter, and resides in Holmes County, Ohio; Susan is the wife of our subject; George resides in Clinton County, Mo., and Ohio Stucker resides in Mt. Pleasant Precinct.

Mr. Foltz is a level-headed, clear-thinking man, thoroughly well posted in all matters pertaining to successful farming, and is a self-made man in all respects. The elegant property which he has accumulated is the direct result of his own application and energy. Coming to Nebraska at an early day, with means very limited in amount, he has applied himself so closely to the business in which he is engaged that he has acquired the fine property with which he is now surrounded. He is in politics a thorough-going Democrat, and has served his friends and neighbors in various official capacities. In 1884 he was elected as one of the County Commissioners of Cass County, and was re-elected to the same office in the fall of 1887, from a district which usually gave a handsome Republican majority. He is a member of LaFayette Post No. 60, G. A. R., at Weeping Water, and takes an active interest in all that pertains to the educational, political or religious benefit of the precinct. Both himself and wife are active members of society, in which they fill a conspicuous place. They are both open hearted and generous, and their home is the abode of peace and comfort. They are both well known throughout Cass County, and they take rank among its foremost citizens.

The home of Mr. Foltz and family, one of the most comfortable in Mt. Pleasant, is shown on another page of this ALBUM.

HENRY L. MESSNER. Those who suppose that there is required in the prosecution of farming little skill and no education, are vastly mistaken, as they will find upon experience and observation. The biographer in obtaining a record of the events which have transpired during the early settlement of Cass County, finds among its successful agriculturists the most intelligent element of this region. Among these the subject of this sketch occupies no secondary position. His industry and enterprise are proverbial in the community where he has operated with results of which he has reason to be proud. His property lies on section 25, South Bend Precinct, and comprises 800 acres of land, which produce in abundance the rich crops of Nebraska. He commenced in a modest manner his operations as an agriculturist in this section of country, and battled with the difficulties experienced by the pioneer of twenty years ago, suffering from the ravages of grasshoppers two years in succession, and fighting his way through the other disadvantages common to that time. Besides the home farm, he purchased land in Louisville and Elmwood Precincts, his whole estate at one time comprising 1,280 acres. This was largely devoted to stock-raising, Mr. Messner finding this industry the most profitable, and perhaps carried on with less of labor than the tilling of the soil, although he raises grain in sufficient quantities to feed his stock.

We find in the career of Mr. Messner a man essentially the architect of his own fortune. Upon coming to Cass County, in the fall of 1869, he settled at a point on Cedar Creek, and employed himself by the day or month as he could secure work, while his winters were occupied in teaching school. He was the first pedagogue in Cedar Creek district, and a favorite alike with pupils and parents. He was born in Monroe County, Ohio, near the little village of Lebanon, Feb. 6, 1849, and was the fourth in a family of five children, two sons and three daughters, comprising the offspring of Adam and Elizabeth (Smith) Messner. The parents were both natives of the Province of Alsace, now in Germany, whence they emigrated to the United States after their marriage, settling first in Washington County, Pa., where the father carried on farming for a time, and then changed his residence to Monroe County, Ohio. In the latter he built up a good homestead, where, with his excellent wife, he still resides. They took up their residence in the Buckeye State in 1847, and are now quite aged, the father being in his seventy-second year and the mother nearing her sixty-eighth birthday.

The maternal grandfather of our subject was Philip Smith, also a native of the Fatherland, who served under Napoleon Bonaparte, and was taken a prisoner at the battle of Waterloo. He lived to attain the advanced age of one hundred and eight years.

His wife was, in her girlhood, Elizabeth Rodhon. Our subject was reared at the farm in Monroe County, Ohio, and acquired a practical education in the common schools. He was bright and ambitious beyond his years, and when a lad of fourteen started out for himself, entering the employ of the Marietta & Cincinnati Railroad Company, which was then operating between Parkersburg and Cincinnati. A year later he returned to the old roof-tree, and fortified himself for life's future duties by a further attendance at school, finally developing into a teacher, which profession he followed in the Buckeye State for several terms.

Before his departure for the West Mr. Messner provided himself with a wife and helpmate, being married in 1869, to Miss Lydia Haney, a native of his own county, and the daughter of Evan Haney. He arrived upon the soil of Nebraska with two suits of clothes and $51 in money, and spent the winter following with his wife's brother, Mr. Nicholas Haney, who had settled on Cedar Creek. The following spring he homesteaded forty acres of land, upon which he made some improvements, and sold four years later for the snug sum of $750. This seemed quite a bonanza in those days, and he invested the proceeds in 160 acres in the same precinct, which he occupied two years, at the expiration of which time he received a visitation from the grasshoppers two years in succession. The siege being more than he could cheerfully withstand, he sold out, and purchased eighty acres in Elmwood Precinct, upon which he lived nine years, having good crops almost every year. He invested his surplus capital in additional land from time to time, and his large property is mostly included in South Bend Precinct. A part of this, however, he afterward disposed of, and has now 800 acres, all in one body. In his live-stock operations he makes a specialty of cattle and swine, having usually of the former 270 head, and ships frequently three carloads of the latter a year.

Our subject and his estimable wife are the parents of the following living children: Eliza, Nancy B.; Elizabeth, now Mrs. Albert Keller, of this county; Henry, James and Charles, all at home with their parents. Two are deceased. Mr. Messner, politically, is a solid Democrat, but otherwise than servng as a member of the School Board for the last six years, has declined becoming an officeholder. He maintains that to make a success of any business a man must give to it his whole attention, and not be meddling too much with outside matters. The theory adhered to has doubtless been the secret of his success.

JOHN TURNER, an enterprising farmer and stock-raiser on section 20, Stove Creek Precinct, where he has 120 acres of well-improved, arable land, is of Virginian birth, born in Randolph County, Dec. 26, 1841. William Turner, his paternal grandfather, a native of Pennsylvania, was of German descent. He moved from his native State to Virginia, and there purchased a farm, on which he spent his last years.

James Turner, father of our subject, was born in Randolph County, Va., in 1816, and married Miss Martha Abernathy, in Hampshire County, the same State, where she was born in 1819. He was a farmer, and after his marriage returned to Randolph County, where he worked at farming during the summers, and at shoemaking in the winter seasons. In 1844 he sold his farm of 190 acres in that State, and moved to Alleghany County, Md., but nine years later returned to Virginia and bought a farm of 200 acres in Barbour County. He improved it well, and in 1865 sold out and moved to Iowa, where he bought 230 acres of land, lying near Granville, Mahaska County, where he remained until his death in October, 1882. Mrs. Turner preceded him to the better land, having died in Iowa some years before. Both were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, where he had been Class-Leader for several years. Of their union twelve children were born, as follows: E. S., Aaron (deceased), John, James, Mary M., Sarah E. (deceased), Lucy A., Daniel (deceased), an infant (deceased), Theodore, Laura B. and LaFayette S. John Abernathy, maternal grandfather of our subject, was born in Ireland. In early life he emigrated to the United States, and settled in Hampshire County, Va., where he bought a large farm. His eyesight failed during the last part of his life, and before his death he became entirely blind. He was a man of great stature and vigorous intellect.

The subject of our sketch was only three years old when his parents moved to Maryland, and there he received the greater part of his education, attending a pay school during the time he was there. After the removal of his parents to Barbour County, Va., he had only one term's schooling, being obliged to assist his father on the farm from that time until twenty years of age. In 1861 our subject went into the war as teamster, continuing thus engaged for some months. He then returned home and worked on the farm six months, and in 1863 started a lumber business in Maryland. The following year Mr. Turner went to Ohio, and that summer pushed on further West, and in Mahaska County, Iowa, rented a farm on which he lived six years. Then, deciding that it was time that he was establishing a home of his own, our subject went to Lancaster County, Neb., where he took up a homestead claim in Rock Creek. Three years later he sold out his improvements and claim, and in 1874 moved to Stove Creek Precinct, and bought his present farm of eighty acres. There were no trees on the place, and only thirty-six acres had been broken. He has toiled unceasingly for its improvement, and has now over forty acres in grain, the farm fenced and cross-fenced, and a good bearing orchard. He has also purchased forty acres in addition, which he has under cultivation, and he carries on general farming and stock-raising, having fine cattle, good graded horses, and twelve or fifteen head of ponies.

The marriage of Mr. Turner with Miss Ann M. Squires was solemnized in Granville, Mahaska Co., Iowa, Nov. 22, 1866. She is a daughter of Nehemiah and Olive (Fortney) Squires, natives of Preston County, Va., born in 1815 and 1820 respectively. Thomas Squires, Nehemiah's father, was a native of Virginia, of German descent. By trade he was a blacksmith. Henry Fortney, maternal grandfather of Mrs. Turner, was a native of Virginia, engaged in agricultural pursuits. The father of Mrs. Turner was a blacksmith in his native State, and carried on a good business. In 1856 he removed to Davis County, Iowa, where he put up a blacksmith-shop, and also rented the adjoining farm, continuing there until 1863, when he removed to Lineville, the same State, and engaged in blacksmithing. In 1864 he removed to Schuyler County, Mo., where he purchased a farm of 120 acres, and there he still lives, engaged in farming and blacksmithing. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a devout Christian. His worthy wife departed this life in 1861. To them had been born eight children, namely: Cornelius, Ann Matilda, Ellen, Hattie, Henry, Jerome, George, Olive. Jerome is deceased; Cornelius served in defense of his country during the late Civil War, enlisting in Company E, 3d Iowa Cavalry, and joined the army in 1861. He was mustered out at Arkansas, and honorably discharged in 1864. Mrs. Turner was born during the residence of her parents in Barbour County, Va., Jan. 17, 1843. She attended a pay school there until twelve years of age, and then a free school. She afterward moved with her parents to Iowa, remaining in her home until her marriage. Of her union with our subject there have been four children, namely: Oscar S., Melvin T., James L., and an infant deceased.

Mr. Turner is an industrious man, highly respected throughout the community for his many admirable traits of character. In all local affairs he takes an intelligent interest, and has served with ability as Supervisor and School Trustee. Socially, he is a member of the A. O. U. W., and in politics is a staunch Republican. Mrs. Turner is a pleasant, hospitable woman, and a sincere member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ALBERT U. MAYFIELD, of Elmwood, editor of the Elmwood Echo, is a native of this State, being born near Louisville, Neb., March 14, 1865. He prepared himself for future usefulness by attending the common schools where he lived, and a course in the High School at Plattsmouth, which latter he completed in 1881, shortly after which he went into the newspaper business as assistant in the office of the Louisville Observer. In 1885, in company with his brother, he edited the Hawkeye in Greenwood. This partnership was dissolved in 1886, when our subject settled in Elmwood and began the publication of the Echo, which was a six-column folio. In the fall of 1887 the paper was enlarged to a six-column quarto. The success of the paper was assured from the start, having an ever-increasing subscription list, and a handsome advertising patronage. This success is due exclusively to the energy and knowledge of the business possessed by its able editor. The prospects are very bright that in a short time the Echo will be one of, if not the, leading paper of the county.

The subject of our sketch is one of a family of eight children, Clarence G., Eugene O. and Winifred being older, and Leroy J., Rosa M., George A. and Olin M., being younger. He was married, in Burlington, Iowa, to Miss Milly Volkmer, Feb. 13, 1887. His wife was born in Berlin, Germany; she is highly educated and refined, and is at heart a thorough American. They have one child, Moyne.

Mr. Mayfield is identified with the order of the Knights of Pythias, Master of Exchequer; at present Warden of the I. O. O. F.; Inside Guard of the A. O. U. W.; and a member of the Christian Church.

The father of our subject, George W. Mayfield, was born in Indiana, and is a minister in the Christian Church. In 1857 he removed from Indiana to Plattsmouth, Neb. During the war he freighted between Plattsmouth and Denver with an ox-team. He entered a homestead claim near Louisville, which he improved. He sold it and removed to Salt Creek, being one of the first settlers in that section, acquiring 160 acres of wild land, which he fully improved. During this time he served in the Christian ministry, having a charge to which he preached every Sunday, at Loader school-house. In 1875 he sold his land and went into the mercantile business, opening the second store in Greenwood, where he did a successful business. He continued this four years, then removed to Plattsmouth, and formed a connection with the Herald in that city.

In 1882 the father of our subject removed to Louisville, where he established the Weekly Observer in company with his son Eugene O. At the end of two years the son went to Greenwood, and is now in Omaha, Neb., in the job printing business. The father continues editing the Observer, and preaching in the Christian Church at Louisville.

The mother of our subject, Emeline E. Todd, was born in Jamestown, N. Y. Grandfather Thomas J. Todd was a contractor and builder in New York, and removed to Plattsmouth in 1857, and entered a homestead on Four Mile Creek, near that town. In 1880 he retired to Plattsmouth, where he had built one of the handsomest residences on Chicago avenue. He died there in 1881.

Grandfather George W. Mayfield served in the War of 1812 against England. He was of English descent, and could trace his ancestry back to the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock.

HENRY ASHMUN, senior member of the firm of Henry Ashmun & Co., is, with his partners, conducting one of the most flourishing hardware establishments in the city of Weeping Water. They built and now occupy the fine brick structure on the corner of I and Elm streets, known as the Ashmun Block, and which is one of the most attractive features of the business portion of the city. It is constructed of fine pressed brick, the building being 22x100 feet in dimensions, with plate-glass front, and in height two stories, with basement. In the near future the whole of it will be occupied by the firm, and when completed it will be the finest hardware store along the southern line of Cass County. Mr. Ashmun occupies with his family a beautiful residence in the northeastern part of town.

Our subject first crossed the Mississippi in May of 1869, coming direct to Weeping Water Precinct, and purchasing a quarter of section 36, school land, in Centre Precinct. There had then been no attempt at improvement, the land having just come into the market that year, and was then valued at $8.50 per acre. Mr. Ashmun enclosed it with a substantial fence, set out a grove of forest trees, together with an apple orchard and the smaller fruits, besides putting up a good house and barn. In the meantime he proceeded with the cultivation of the land, devoting it at first almost entirely to the raising of grain; later he discovered that stock-growing would prove remunerative, and accordingly turned his attention to this industry, keeping good grades of cattle, horses and swine. He constructed thus out of a wild tract of uncultivated land a fine farm, which he sold at a good price in April of 1888.

Mr. Ashmun has been interested in the hardware business for the past eight years, being first associated with the firm of Schermerhorn & Ashmun, at Weeping Water, which partnership continued one year. He then became junior member of the firm of Fitchie & Ashmun, which conducted the business at Weeping Water three years. Mr. Fitchie then withdrew, and G. A. Ashmun assumed proprietorship of his interest in the business. The firm then became Ashmun Bros., and later, upon the admission of other partners, Henry Ashmun & Co. Mr. Ashmun, although a thorough young business man, and popular in his community, has avoided politics, excepting attending to his duty as a voter upon occasions of election, when he gives his support to the Republican party. Socially, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and in religious matters is, with his family, prominently connected with the Congregational Church. He takes a warm interest in Sunday-school work, and has held different official positions in the church.

Mr. Ashmun was born in Tallmadge, Summit Co., Ohio, Nov. 29, 1843, and lived there until a young man twenty-six years of age. He completed his education in Tallmadge Academy, and employed himself on his father's farm, and as a civil engineer, until 1869, with the exception of the time spent in the army. At Tallmadge, in 1864, he enlisted in Company H, 164th Ohio Infantry, serving out his time and receiving his honorable discharge. After leaving the army he returned to the home of his boyhood, remaining there engaged in engineering until coming to Nebraska, as we have already stated.

Our subject was married at LaGrange, Sept. 13, 1870, to Miss Ida Burton. This lady was born in Collamer, Ohio, Dec. 14, 1847. Her parents were natives of Ohio, and are now deceased. Mrs. Ashmun received a liberal education, completing her studies in Lake Erie Seminary, in Painesville, Ohio. Her father died when she was quite young, and her mother was married the second time, and removed to Lagrange County, Ind, Miss Ida accompanying them and engaging as a teacher until her marriage. Mrs. Burton died in Indiana. To Mr. and Mrs. Ashmun there have been born four children, namely: Louis, Ernest, Flora and Beth. They are all at home with their parents, and are being given first-class educational advantages.

William B. Ashmun, the father of our subject, was born in Russell Township, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., July 5, 1815, and lived there until the eighteenth year of his age. He received a good practical education, and in 1833 removed with his parents to Ohio, settling in what was then Portage, but what afterward became Summit County, seven miles from Akron. The family had been preceded to this place by one of the elder sons. William B. removed, in 1837, from the Buckeye State to Whiteside County, Ill., where he lived one year, then returned to Ohio. In 1842, April 27, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah E. Fenn, and they became the parents of six children, all of whom are living, and of whom Henry, the subject of this sketch, is the eldest. The others were: Julia, now Mrs. A. O. Ashley, of Weeping Water; George, who also lives here; Russell A., located on a farm south of town; Edward, a minister of the Congregational Church, of Denver, Col.; and Helen, of Weeping Water.

The father is still living, and is now retired from active business. He makes his home in Weeping Water. He has held the various township offices, serving as School Director and Justice of the Peace, and with his wife and family, belongs to the Congregational Church.

Mrs. Sarah E. (Fenn) Ashmun was born in Milford, New Haven Co., Conn., Jan. 3, 1815, and when three years old emigrated with her parents to Ohio. She is the daughter of Richard and Mabel (Platt) Fenn, and lived at home until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Ashmun afterward lived with the parents of the latter, and took care of them for twenty-five years. Richard Fenn and his wife were natives of Connecticut, the former born in 1818. He emigrated to Ohio in the pioneer days, taking up a tract of land in Summit County, and building up a homestead from the wilderness. There he spent the remainder of his life, passing away about 1867. The mother had died several years before.

Reuben Ashmun, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was born in Massachusetts, May 23, 1780. He lived there until after his marriage with Miss Hulda Upson, then emigrating to St. Lawrence County, N. Y., settled on a farm there, where he lived until pushing farther westward, in 1833, to Summit County, Ohio. In the latter his death took place in 1848. He was one of the earliest settlers in that region, a prominent man in his community, a successful farmer, and for many years a Justice of the Peace. His wife died about 1841. Both were members of the Episcopal Church, in Connecticut. During his early manhood Mr. Ashmun had learned the trade of batter.

CHRIST STOEHR. Among the reliable German citizens of Eight Mile Grove Precinct none are held in kindlier regard than the subject of this sketch. He was born in the Province of Hesse-Darmstadt, Aug. 6, 1828, and is the son of Nicholas and Elizabeth Stoehr, who were also of German birth and ancestry. The mother passed from earth when her son Christ was a boy of twelve or thirteen years. He lived with his father until reaching his majority, and then the two, believing there were better opportunities for them in America, decided to emigrate hither. Making their way to the city of Bremen they engaged passage on a sailing-vessel bound for New York City, and after an ocean voyage of forty-seven days arrived at their destination.

Our travelers sojourned only a very brief time in the metropolis but proceeded at once to Tazewell County, Ill., where Christ employed himself as a farm laborer, and the father also farmed. The latter spent his last years in Tazewell County. Our subject the year following his arrival in the Prairie State, having formed the acquaintance of one of the most estimable of his young country-women, Miss Elizabeth Ehrhart, was married to that lady in Tazewell County, Ill., in April, 1850. Mrs. Stoehr was born in Germany, May 6, 1831, and was the daughter of Leonard and Margaret Ehrhart, who all came to America in the same ship with young Stoehr.

Mr. and Mrs. Stoehr began their wedded life together in Tazewell County, Ill., coming to Nebraska in the spring of 1882. In due time there were born to them a family of eight children, namely: George, Oct. 28, 1854; Philip, Sept. 30, 1856; Conrad, Oct. 25, 1862; Maggie, Feb. 5, 1866 (this daughter is the wife of George P. Heil); Alice, March 19, 1870; Catherine, Feb. 3, 1872; Louisa, July 28, 1874, and Adam, June 11, 1877. Mr. Stoehr operated for a time on rented land in Illinois, then became the owner of a farm. His property in this county consisted of 160 acres, which has been finely developed and is supplied with good buildings. In his labors and successes he acknowledges that he has had in his wife a most efficient helpmate, one who has stood bravely by his side and borne with him the heat and burden of the day. To her efforts as much as his own belongs the credit of accumulating a property and establishing the reputation of the family in a good social as well as financial position. Mr. S., politically, votes the Democratic ticket, and both he and his wife belong to the German Lutheran Church. Our subject served as Commissioner in Tazewell County, Ill., for a period of nine years, being three years of this time Treasurer of the board. He was also for a number of years a member of the School Board of his district.

DAVID S. HALVERSTADT. Few members of the farming community of Cass County have been more successful in their vocations, or secured better results by the expenditure of energetic and persistent labor, than has the subject of this notice, who is one of the leading agriculturists of Weeping Water Precinct. His farm on section 14, with its carefully tilled acres, neatly hedged and fenced, its beautiful grove and orchard, its tasty and comfortable buildings, and the fine and well-kept specimens of cattle and horses roaming over the fields, is considered one of the most desirable and best managed farms in the whole precinct, and with all its various improvements, indicates the presence of an intelligent mind and a skillful hand.

Mr. Halverstadt inherited from a good old German stock the traits of sobriety, honesty and industry that have made him successful in life. He was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1848, to Henry and Mary (Supers) Halverstadt. His father was born in Maryland, Jan. 26, 1808, a son of David Halverstadt. The latter was a native of Germany, who, coming to this country when six years of age, was bound out until he was twenty-five years of age to pay for his passage over, and in the same manner his parents were sold for a number of years to pay for their passage, and from this humble beginning have the Halverstadts in America risen to their present prominence. The grandfather settled in Maryland, and there married. He afterward moved to Ohio with his wife and children, and in the primeval forests of Columbiana County took up a homestead, and with the aid of his boys cleared a farm. He became prosperous, and accumulated quite a large property, and when his four sons were ready to start in life for themselves, he gave them each over a hundred acres of land.

The father of our subject was a boy when his parents moved to Ohio, and he there assisted his father in the pioneer task of hewing trees and uprooting stumps, to prepare the land for cultivation. He remained on the homestead until his marriage, at twenty-eight years of age, and then took his share of his father's land. He was more than ordinarily successful in his vocation, and from time to time added more land to his homestead, and became quite wealthy. Of his happy wedded life with the mother of our subject eleven children were born, two dying in infancy. When his children were ready to go out into the world, he sold off his land and gave them each a good start, it having been his intention to give them each a home near him, but they chose to go West, so he unselfishly gave up his own wishes, and furthered theirs, by giving them money instead of the land. He continued to live on the old homestead until he passed away from the scenes of earth, in May, 1888, at the ripe old age of eighty years. He was held in reverence and honor by his townspeople for his noble and manly qualities. He was a man of unquestioned integrity, whose word was equal to his bond. He was a staunch member of the Lutheran Church, and was liberal in his contributions toward its support. His widow survives him, and is still vigorous in mind and body, and has just returned to the old home from a visit to her son.

David S. Halverstadt lived in the home of his birth until he was of age, obtaining in the meantime a substantial education, and a practical training in all kinds of farm work under his father's tuition. He came to Nebraska in 1869 and located on Elk Creek, in Johnson County, where he lived until 1870. In the spring of that year he purchased his present place, which was then but slightly improved, a few acres having been broken, and a small house erected. From that wild state our subject has brought it up to its present high condition. He has fenced the land and set out five acres of forest, and a large orchard, three acres of which are in bearing. The land is very productive, and nearly every pasture has been sowed to tame grass. Mr. Halverstadt has also built himself a house, which is a good, comfortable, convenient home. He feeds the most of his grain, as he pays especial attention to raising draft horses, high-graded Short-horn cattle, and full-blooded Poland-China hogs.

After coming to this place our subject was married, Nov. 15, 1875, to Miss Lucy Faylor, and to them have come seven children, of whom the following six are living: Florence, Birdena, Clinton, Lilly, Clara and Hattie. Their daughter Clementine died Oct. 2, 1888, aged ten years. Mrs. Halverstadt was born at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1852. Her parents, Christian and Sarah (Misseldine) Faylor, moved to Centreville, Ind., about 1869, and there she lived with them until her marriage. She has proved an efficient helpmate and a wise mother. Her father was a native of Ohio, and was there engaged in the milling business, but when he removed to Indiana he entered into business as a grocer, and was carrying on that trade at the time of his death in 1886, aged eighty years.

In our subject are found all the characteristics of a good citizen, such as loyalty to his country, straightforward and manly conduct in the everyday affairs of life, and kindness and helpfulness

Yours Truly

A. P. Weston

Yours Truly
Amelia B. Weston

where his neighbors are concerned. He is one of the members of the Congregational Church of Weeping Water, and is also connected with the Sunday-school held in the Cascade school-house on the opposite corner, and in his capacity as Superintendent of said Sunday-school he has been instrumental in building it up and making it a success. He is identified with the Royal Arcanum and Farmers' Alliance. He has served as School Director and as Constable, but does not care for office, preferring the quiet and comforts of home. He is in sympathy with the Republican party in his political views, but exercises his judgment in voting for men and measures.

ADDISON P. WESTON is one of the most prosperous and progressive citizens of Liberty, and for many years was closely identified with the farming and stock-raising interests of Cass County, owning an extensive farm on section 21, this precinct. By hard labor and thrift he has amassed a handsome fortune, and soon intends to leave the farm and retire from the active duties of a busy life to spend his declining years with his good wife in one of the most comfortable and well-appointed homes in the village of Nehawka.

Mr. Weston is a native of Vermont, his birthplace being the town of Plymouth, among the beautiful hills of Windsor County, where he first opened his eyes to the light of day Aug. 13, 1825. Both on his mother's and his father's side he is descended from respectable old New England families. His father, Stephen Weston, was born either in Massachusetts or New Hampshire, and went to Windsor County, Vt., most likely a single man, in 1802. He was married to Lydia Boynton, who came of hardy, long-lived stock. After marriage Mr. Weston began farming in a small way among the hills of Plymouth, Windsor County, and there his wife died when our subject was little less than six years old. The father afterward married Mrs. Burnap, who subsequently died without issue by her second marriage. The father spent his last days with his children, our subject, with the others, contributing liberally to his support and comfort after he became enfeebled by age. His life was prolonged to the unusual length of ninety-two years.

He of whom we write, after the death of his mother lived with an aunt and uncle for three years, after which he lived with an elder brother until seventeen years old. In the vigorous air of his native hills he grew to be a sturdy youth, and at seventeen years of age was allowed to go forth to earn his own living. For four years he worked for the sum of $100 and his board and clothes, and thus got his first start in life, which he later added to by working out by the day. He was ambitious to obtain an education, and attended school whenever opportunity offered. In 1852 he struck out into the world with characteristic enterprise and pluck, and with a flock of sheep, which he drove and shipped from point to point, he made his way to Racine County, Wis., finally stopping at Waterford. Those were among the first fine wool Spanish and French Merinos ever introduced into that part of Wisconsin, and his venture proved very successful. In 1864 he came to Nebraska, bringing with him 225 fine wool sheep, and embarked in the business of sheep-raising here. He carried it on until the spring of 1866, when he abandoned it to pay attention more exclusively to general stock growing and feeding, in which he was extensively engaged until his recent retirement. His farm, beautifully located on section 21, on either side of Weeping Water Creek, embraces one of the best and most valuable strips of land in Liberty Precinct. Mr. Weston bought his first land in Cass County in 1863, it being located in Avoca Precinct, and he resided on it two years, owning 240 acres, and making considerable improvements. In 1866 he purchased his homestead on section 21, Liberty Precinct, with a view of getting stone, wood and water, with which it is well supplied, and it has proved a very valuable farm for making money. It embraces 320 acres of land, most of which is under cultivation, and has been improved to a very high point by a judicious expenditure of labor and money. It has a fine bearing orchard of 1,200 fruit trees. He has erected on it a fine set of the most modern farm buildings; one barn is 66x60 feet in dimensions, with a lean-to and an L attached, making it very commodious; and another large stock and grain barn, 24x64 feet, is also a fine structure. These buildings are well constructed, and after the most approved and conveniently arranged plans. The house that Mr. Weston formerly occupied is a pleasant frame dwelling, but the home to which he will soon retire, in Nehawka, is a fine brick edifice, two stories in height, with basement, all the modern appliances for comfort and convenience, and in its exterior is an ornament to the village.

During his residence in Racine County, Wis., Mr. Weston was married, Aug. 24, 1856, to Miss Amelia Bent, who was born in the town of Wendell, Franklin Co., Mass., March 24, 1839. She is a daughter of William L. and Lucinda (Armstrong) Bent, both of whom are deceased, the mother dying in Wendell when her daughter of whom we write was only three years old. She was a native of Massachusetts, and was a daughter of Timothy Armstrong, likewise a native of the old Bay State, and a farmer of Franklin County. William Bent survived his first wife twelve years, and was a second time wedded, Maria Woodbury becoming his wife, and she survived him. Mr. Bent was a farmer, and prosecuted his calling in Franklin County. He subsequently removed to Wisconsin, and died in Racine County. He was a son of Joel Bent, a native of Barry, Mass. Mrs. Weston was reared by her father until his death, and then her step-mother had charge of her until she attained womanhood, and she continued to live with her until her marriage, having accompanied her parents to Racine County, Wis., when a child of ten years. She is broad and liberal minded, a woman whose large heart is full of womanly love and neighborly kindness.

Mr. Weston has acquired his entire fortune since leaving his native hills, and by the exercise of habits of indefatigable industry, prudence and economy. He inherited a full share of those fine traits of character that mark the New England stock and make them valuable citizens wherever they may settle. He has not only been a hard-working man all his life until recently, but his labors have been directed by a mind of more than ordinary acuteness, and he has always displayed an intelligent enterprise, and has been quick to seize every opportunity or advantage that would conduce to his material prosperity. He is a Republican in his politics, and gives his party earnest support. He has borne an honorable part in public affairs as Assessor of the precinct, which office he has twice held.

The portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Weston adjoining, are a valuable acquisition to this ALBUM, and will be regarded with much pleasure by their many friends.

BENJAMIN F. LAUGHLIN. Both the personal and ancestral history of the subject of this sketch, an enterprising business man of Greenwood, is worthy of more than a passing mention. A son of one of the earliest pioneers of Washington County, Iowa, he was born there Aug. 25, 1841, and grew up amid its primitive scenes, at the time when the Indians had not long been removed from the western limits of the State.

John Laughlin, the father of our subject, was born in Randolph County, N. C., and married Miss Mary Tucker, a native of the same State. Both were the offspring of prominent old families, who had emigrated to America during the Colonial days. John Laughlin after his marriage migrated across the Mississippi about 1835, and was one of the earliest settlers of Henry County, Iowa. A man of great energy and more than ordinary abilities, he by his own labors furnished an incentive to the men around him, and that part of Henry County in which he settled sensibly outgrew its neighbors. He was held by his fellow-citizens in high esteem, occupied the various local offices, and accumulated a good property. He personally assisted in removing the Indians from Henry County to their reservation in Iowa, and was foremost in inaugurating the various enterprises which gradually grew up within the precincts of a new settlement. His death took place June 10, 1865, at the old homestead, and that of the mother, December 7 of the same year. The latter was six years younger than her husband, and he was about fifty-two years old at the time of his decease. To John and Mary Laughlin there were born eleven children, namely:

William J., McKenzie G., Louisa, Charity, John M., Nancy, Benjamin F. (our subject), Ephraim D., Jesse Payne. Alvin Thomas and Mary Lizzie.

Benjamin F. Laughlin was reared to manhood in Washington County, Iowa, acquiring a practical education in the common schools. His boyhood and youth were spent after the manner of the sons of pioneer farmers, he also receiving careful home training, and being taught those habits of industry and principles of honor which have made him a worthy and reliable member of the community. At the death of his father, being among the eldest of the boys, he naturally assumed much of the responsibility of carrying on the homestead, until the outbreak of the Civil War. A year later, when only twenty-one years old, he proffered his services in behalf of the Union by enlisting in Company B, 25th Iowa Infantry, for three years or during the war, in response to the call of President Lincoln for 300,000 troops.

Company B spent some time drilling at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, in which they made good progress, and were also well equipped with the necessary arms when starting for the South on the 1st of November, 1862. Their destination was Helena, Ark., to which they journeyed via Burlington, St. Louis and Memphis, by steamer. They first saw the smoke of battle at Chickasaw Bayou, and soon afterward followed the first attack of Vicksburg, the day before Christmas, 1862. Being repulsed there they took boats up the river to Arkansas Post, surrounding the rebel works and capturing the place Jan. 11, 1863, after a lengthy and hotly contested engagement. Retiring to Young's Point, they sojourned there until the middle of April, and then began the campaign which included the battles of Raymond, Canton, Miss., and Champion Hills. They drove the enemy into their works at Vicksburg, then surrounded the city, and on the 22d of May commenced an assault in which the 25th Iowa lost heavily.

Soon afterward began the actual siege of Vicksburg, which finally ended in glorious victory for the Union troops, the Confederates surrendering July 4, 1863. On the morning of the 5th they were ordered to Jackson, Miss., to follow up Joe Johnston's army, fighting at Clinton and then returning to Vicksburg. At the latter place they remained in camp until October, when they were ordered to assist the Army of the Cumberland. Later they fought at Cherokee Station, driving the rebels to Tusculum on the Tusculum River. Afterward returning to Cherokee Station, they encamped there one week, then started for Chattanooga. At that place, under command of Gen. Hooker, they soon moved upon Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge and Ringgold, and after dislodging the enemy from these places went into camp at Woodville, Ala. They remained there the greater portion of the winter.

The campaign of 1864 found our subject and his comrades opening up the campaign in Georgia, under the command of Gen. Sherman, 1st Division, 15th Army Corps. The principal battles which followed in this region were Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Marietta, the siege of Atlanta July 22 and 28, and afterward Jonesboro. Then followed the famous march to sea. Their business ended in this section of country, they returned up through the Carolinas, being at Raleigh, N. C., when news was received of the surrender of Lee. A few days later found them in Washington at the grand review, when our subject, with his comrades, was mustered out, and repairing to Davenport, Iowa, received his honorable discharge June 14, 1865.

After returning home Mr. Laughlin began to realize the fact that whether in time of peace or time of war it was not well for man to live alone. It is probable that his heart had already been captured by the young lady, Miss Susan Reeves, to whom he was married in Washington County, Iowa, Jan. 25, 1866. Mrs. Laughlin was also the daughter of a pioneer of the Hawkeye State, who settled there as early as 1836. There later Miss Susan was born, Sept. 20, 1846. The young people commenced their wedded life together on a farm in Washington County, and resided there until the spring of 1883, when they changed their residence to this county.

Mr. Laughlin is now conducting a thriving livery stable in the suburbs of Greenwood, in connection with which he also operates a farm. He is recognized as a useful and worthy citizen, having inherited in a marked degree the enterprise and industry of his honored father, which were among the notable characteristics of their substantial German ancestry. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin is pleasant in the extreme, and has been brightened by the birth of seven children. These were named respectively: Anna L., Alvah Thomas, William F. and Ephraim (twins), Katie deceased, Charita, and E. D. deceased. The survivors are all at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. L. are members in good standing of the Christian Church, and our subject, politically, is an uncompromising Democrat. Socially, he belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and officiates as Junior Deacon of Unity Lodge No. 163, at Greenwood. He is also a member of the G. A. R., belonging to Mission Ridge Post No. 149, at Greenwood.

Mr. Laughlin purchased his livery business in 1888, and is gradually gathering together the equipments which will in due time make it one of the most complete establishments of the kind in this part of the county. He is a man prompt to meet his obligations, is courteous and obliging, and one who naturally gathers around him many friends.

NELSON McREYNOLDS, a retired farmer, is an old settler and a representative citizen of Cass County. His large farm of 240 acres, pleasantly located on section 8 of Liberty Precinct, is finely improved and well adapted to the raising of cereals or to stock-raising, to which he has always paid much attention. He is a native of Virginia, born in Abingdon, Washington County, June 6, 1808, of Scotch-Irish parentage. His parents, John and Sarah (Scott) McReynolds, were born and reared in the same county. After establishing themselves in a home of their own in their native county, they remained there until after the birth of two of their children, and then they removed to Warren County, Tenn. Mr. McReynolds there purchased 300 acres of land, on which he farmed and carried on blacksmithing until his death, when about fifty years of age. Mrs. McReynolds survived her husband and married again, finally dying in Tennessee of cholera.

The subject of our sketch was very young when his parents moved to Tennessee, where he was educated and grew to manhood. Being nearly nineteen years of age when his father died, our subject soon after set out to seek his fortune, going first to Saline County, Mo., where he secured work by the day. He subsequently purchased a piece of land in that county, but later bought 500 acres in Carroll County, the same State, which he afterward disposed of at $5 an acre, it having been flooded by the high water of 1844. Mr. McReynolds then went to Holt County, where he farmed for some years. In 1865 he came to this State, and for a few months lived in Nebraska City, when, desiring to establish himself permanently in a home, he purchased 200 acres of land, to which he later added another 200 acres, and began the improvement of his farm. He labored judiciously and succeeded in eliminating a fine farm from the unbroken prairie, and has now as comfortable a home as one could wish for. He has given 160 acres of land to his sons, thus reducing the number of acres in his original homestead, but it is still large enough to supply all of his wants.

Mr. McReynolds has been twice married. His first wife, Anna Cregg, to whom he was united in Saline County, Mo., was born in Virginia, and moved to Missouri when quite young with her parents, making her home with them until her marriage. She remained in Carroll County until her death, which occurred while she was in the prime of life. She left four children, of whom only one, William, now living with his father, survives. One daughter, Mollie, and a son Hugh died after marriage, the former leaving one child and the latter two. The second marriage of our subject took place in Carroll County, Mo., where he married Martha Henderson; her first husband's name was Grover Brinker. Mrs. McReynolds was the daughter of George Washington and Mary (Miller) Henderson, who spent their lives in Kentucky, both dying at a ripe old age. Their daughter Martha was reared and educated in that State, and there married her first husband, who, after a few years of happy married life, died, leaving her with one child, now deceased. She subsequently went to Missouri and met our subject, whom she afterward married, as before mentioned.

The household circle of Mr. and Mrs. McReynolds has been brightened by the birth of four children, of whom one, Robert, is dead. Of the others the following is recorded: George, a farmer of Liberty, married Miss Nanna Alford; Charles is living in the West; Mollie is the wife of John Berger, a farmer and merchant of Fleming, Butte Co., Neb. Mr. McReynolds has always lived an honorable life, and is respected everywhere for his upright dealings and fair business transactions. In politics he is an uncompromising Democrat, and never fails to vote with that party when opportunity offers.

THOMAS THOMAS, deceased. Among the pioneers of this county none have been held in greater respect than the subject of this sketch, who rested from his earthly labors Nov. 22, 1884. He was born in Monongahela, Pa., Oct. 20, 1812, and was the son of Samuel Thomas, a native of New Jersey. His paternal grandfather, also Thomas Thomas, was likewise born in New Jersey, and was the son of a native-born Welshman, who crossed the Atlantic about 1750, in company with two brothers, landing in New Jersey. One brother settled in Virginia, and the other in South Carolina. The great-grandfather of our subject remained in New Jersey, and it is supposed spent the remainder of his life there.

Grandfather Thomas enlisted in the Revolutionary Army under the direct command of Gen. Washington, at the age of fifteen years, and for a time was employed in cutting out sheets of Continental currency. Later, greatly to his delight he was mustered into a light horse company, in which he served valiantly until the close of the war. Afterward he was married to Miss Mary N. Grimes, who was of American birth but Irish descent, and after becoming the parents of two sons, Benjamin and Samuel, and one daughter, they migrated west of the Alleghany Mountains with pack horses, there being then no wagon roads. They carried with them what few goods they could load upon their horses, and the grandmother with her daughter in her arms rode one horse, the two boys rode another, and the grandfather led the way on foot with his gun on his shoulder.

Arriving in Pennsylvania Grandfather Thomas took up a tract of timber land in the valley of the Monongahela, where he improved a large area, and there spent the remainder of his life, becoming quite wealthy for those days. Of this family Samuel Thomas, the father of our subject, probably remained a resident of Pennsylvania until his marriage. His bride, Miss Elizabeth LaRue, was of American birth, but French ancestry. Her father, Abraham LaRue, was also a soldier in the Revolutionary War. In 1817 they started westward to Guernsey County, Ohio, and located upon a tract of timber land near the embryo village of Fairview. This land had been given Mr. Thomas by his father, and he remained upon it until his death in 1830, a period of thirteen years. In the year 1830 our subject purchased the interest of the other heirs in the property. Of this he retained possession until 1837, then selling out he started for Indiana, accompanied by his wife and son Samuel, making the journey overland with a one-horse wagon, and taking such goods as could be transported by this limited means of conveyance.

Mr. Thomas, selecting his location in Grant County, Ind., purchased 160 acres of timber land five miles from Macon, the county seat, which was then but a village of a few houses. It was several years before a railroad was built to the place. Mr. T. put up a log house 16x14 feet in area, the floor being of puncheon and the roof covered with rived boards. The chimney was constructed of earth and sticks on the outside, and the fireplace occupied nearly one side of the building. Mrs. Thomas had no stove for some years, doing her cooking by the fireplace. She also manufactured the clothing for the family, spinning and weaving wool and flax. She, like her husband, was very industrious and energetic, and one year spun enough yarn for 100 yards of cloth.

Mr. Thomas improved quite a tract of his land, and this it must be remembered, covered with timber, was no small task. After felling the trees he was assisted by his good wife in rolling the logs together, so they could be burned and thus got out of the way, then before the crops could be put in the stumps must be dug out of the ground and likewise piled and burned. He thus labored on this land a period of ten years, then selling out removed with his family to Wabash County, purchasing there also 160 acres of timber land, and repeating the labors of clearing and bringing the soil to a state of cultivation.

On the 6th of April, 1856, Mr. Thomas, leaving Indiana started on another migratory tour, this time landing in Nebraska Territory. The entire journey, as had been his other peregrinations, was made overland with teams, but on his arrival in the vicinity of what is now Glenwood, Iowa, he halted and purchased a house and four acres of land, where he ensconced his family, and then during the summer following took up his line of march for Nebraska. Arriving in this county he purchased a claim four miles northwest of the present city of Plattsmouth, and in September of that year removed to it with his family. Their first shelter was a frame shanty 10x22 feet in area, and their nearest neighbor on the west was ten miles away, on the east settlers joined their farm. The consequence was many travelers called to stop over night, and they were never turned away. Deer were plentiful at that time, but the winter of 1856-57 was very severe, and it is supposed that many of them must have perished, as they were never seen in such numbers afterward.

Among other visitors to the home of this pioneer family were Indians, who frequently called at the house, but further than creating a natural feeling of distrust did not molest the inmates, except to beg for something to eat, or some article which attracted their fancy. At one time the Thomas family were visited by a delegation of 200 Indians. Life thus passed with the Thomas family until the settlers began to take up land around them, which greatly relieved the solitude of their existence. Our subject proceeded with the improvement of his purchase while his children grew up around him, and in 1874, retiring from active labor he left his two youngest sons in charge of the farm, and moved with his wife to Plattsmouth.

Prior to this Mr. Thomas had purchased the place where his widow now resides, on Wintersteen Hill. Thereafter he devoted his time to the beautifying of his home and gathering together the little conveniences and comforts which he loved. His death took place here Nov. 22, 1884. He and his estimable wife had lived together for a period of nearly fifty years, having been married Oct. 15, 1835. The bride was Miss Susannah Carrothers, and she was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, Feb. 15, 1815. Her father, James Carrothers, was a native of Scotland and of pure Scotch ancestry. He emigrated to America at an early day, settling first in Guernsey County, Ohio, whence he removed later to Morrow County, where he lived many years, passing away at the advanced age of eighty-seven. He had married in early manhood Miss Ann Blakely, also a native of County Fermanagh, and the daughter of Robert and Ellen Blakely, who, it is supposed, were natives of Scotland.

The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Thomas, James Carrothers by name, was a farmer by occupation, and spent his last years in County Fermanagh, Ireland. He married Miss Margaret Beatty. To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas there were born nine children, viz: Samuel L.; Ann Eliza, who died when five years old; James W., a resident of Plattsmouth Precinct, this county; Margaret Ann, who died at the age of seven years; Mary E., the wife of E. R. Todd, whose biography appears on another page; Eliza Ann, who died when five years old; Cinderella, the wife of O. M. Carter, of Omaha; Thomas J., living in Plattsmouth Precinct, residing on the old homestead, and George W., living in the city.

Prior to the war Mr. Thomas was a Democrat, after that he became a Republican. At the age of twenty-two he became a member of the Methodist Church, and Mrs. Thomas, at the age of sixteen, became a member of the same church.

NEHEMIAH LIVINGSTON. At this day and age the pioneer settlers are looked upon with more than ordinary respect and veneration, for they are passing away. Their works, however, in the language of Scripture, "do follow them," and their descendants for generations will "rise up to call them blessed." Under the present system of preserving the records of the lives of those men, it is becoming a matter held in great consideration as years advance, for the history of men's lives is a history of the country. The American people are learning to hold in greater estimation the resources of their native land, which resources could only have been developed by those who pushed their way into the wilderness in the face of what seemed almost insurmountable obstacles, but whose perseverance enabled them to come off victors in the struggle.

The subject of this sketch, a pioneer of Cass County, came to Nebraska Territory in 1857, and filed a tract of Government land on section 6, Mt. Pleasant Precinct. This land did not come into the market until the fall following, and then, not having the means to purchase, it reverted again to Uncle Sam. Mr. Livingston, however, a short time later was enabled to buy a small tract of forty acres from George W. Mayfield, which he was successful in improving, and in adding to later by a like amount. Upon this he labored until the spring of 1874, when he wisely determined to retire, and is now taking life easy in the comfortable home of his own building.

Our subject was born in Rensselaer County, N. Y., April 22, 1809, and is the son of Nehemiah, Sr., and Elizabeth (McMillen) Livingston, the father a native of New York, and the mother of Bennington, Vt. The latter left her native State when a little girl of nine years, settling with her parents in Washington County, N. Y. Here, upon reaching womanhood, she made the acquaintance of her future husband, who was stricken down in his prime, dying before the birth of our subject. He was a skilled mechanic and millwright, an honest, hard-working man, who enjoyed the esteem and respect of all who knew him.

After the death of her husband the mother of our subject took up her residence in Washington County, N. Y., where Nehemiah, Jr., attended the common school, and assisted his mother until her second marriage. He then left home, and began in earnest the struggle of life on his own account. He worked at farming and carpentering, and continued a resident of his native State until 1856, when he migrated to Ohio, and sojourned a brief season in Sandusky County. Next we find him in Henry County, Ill., and later in Fremont County, Iowa. In the spring of 1857 he first set foot upon the soil of Nebraska, and his subsequent operations we have already indicated.

In the year 1857 Mr. Livingston met with an accident which destroyed the sight of one eye. He was prying a glass from a window sash, which, breaking, threw a piece of glass into his eye, and from which he suffered greatly for some time. Later he also met with additional misfortune by the loss of a good ox, which was killed by the Indians, which left him without a team. His neighbors were few and far between, there being for some time after his settlement in this county only two houses between his property and Plattsmouth. His first dwelling was formed by sticking poles in the ground, and then weatherboarding these, and he succeeded in making quite a comfortable habitation.

There had accompanied our subject to the Far West his faithful wife and companion, who in her girlhood was Miss Indiana Foster, and to whom he had been married, in 1832, in New York. This lady was born in Cayuga County, N. Y., and was the third daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Patterson) Foster. Mr. and Mrs. Livingston are the parents of five sons and six daughters; three of these are deceased. James A., the second son, during the late Civil War, enlisted in Company A, 4th Iowa Cavalry, was wounded and taken prisoner, and after great suffering died in the hospital at Jackson, Miss. The others were named respectively: Samuel V., Charles E., Levi H., Lewis H. L.; Eliza, deceased; Frances, the wife of Jackson Barker; Mary M., Mrs. Isaac M. Goodspeed; and Sarah E., the wife of Benon Teodorski.

Mr. Livingston has served his township in various capacities, officiating as School Director many years; he operated as Road Supervisor four years, and as Judge of Elections four years. He uniformly votes the Democratic ticket, and is a member of the Knights of Labor. Upon reaching his majority he cast his first Presidential vote for Andrew Jackson. He is now in the eightieth year of his age, hale and hearty, the result of temperance and correct habits. In religious matters he is liberal, but has sought throughout a long career to do good as he has had opportunity, never turning a hungry man from his door, and giving his influence to the projects calculated for the moral welfare of society. In his native State, during his early manhood, he belonged to the militia, holding the rank of Second Lieutenant.

The paternal grandfather of our subject was a native of Scotland, whence he emigrated to England early in life, serving as a soldier, and being under the command of Gen. Wool in the battle of Quebec, in which he received an honorable wound.

JAMES JOHNSON. The subject of this sketch was the fourth of five children born in Seilkeborg, Denmark, Feb. 10, 1853. He remained at home twenty years, attending the common schools until fourteen, then attended the High School at the city of Hammel one year, thoroughly mastering his mother tongue. He remained with his father until 1873, in which year he took an extended tour through Germany, England, Scotland and Ireland, after which he concluded to come to America, leaving Londonderry on the steamer "Atlantic," and landing in Portland, Me., after a twelve days' voyage. There he remained but a short time, leaving there for Union City, Branch Co., Mich., where he began working on a farm, and continued to remain there five years, when he came to Nebraska to buy land, going by rail to Plattsmouth, thence to Weeping Water, where he rented his present place for a period of two years, when in 1880 he bought it. There were no improvements, and only 100 acres were broken. He at once proceeded to build up a home and the necessary out-buildings, continued breaking the soil until the whole tract was under plow, and set out a grove of eight acres, an orchard of 400 trees, and a vineyard of 200 vines. The farm is well fenced with wire fence, and is watered by the Cascade Creek, which gives the farm its name as the Cascade Stock Farm. It is admirably adapted to the raising and feeding of stock, and is situated within less than one mile from the stockyards of Weeping Water. He devotes his attention to the raising of thoroughbred Herefords, of which he has now a herd of fourteen choice head, also a fine herd of thoroughbred Poland-China and Chester-White hogs, and twenty-four head of horses, including three thoroughbred Hambletonians. One is "Lamont," a famous trotter, and he has likewise a number of Normans. This branch of the business is the especial pride of the gentleman, and he is certainly justified in exercising it in the way he has. All his animals show the great care expended on them. There are herds having a larger number, but few, if any, present a finer appearance. In addition to stock-raising he buys and feeds from 100 to 125 head of cattle each year, and buys and ships stock of all kinds to Omaha, and also raises 150 to 200 head of hogs per year for the general market, which he ships to the best market available.

Our subject's father was Jens J., born in Seilkeborg, Denmark. His mother, Mattie M. Juergensen, was born in the same Province, where they were married. Grandfather Nils J. Johnson served in the army during the war against Germany in 1848, was a farmer, and died at the ripe old age of ninety-six years. The father of our subject was a farmer in his native Province, and also served in the war of 1864 against Germany. He owned 200 acres of land, and was considered quite wealthy; he died in 1880, fifty-nine years old. The mother is still living in Denmark, and is seventy-four years old. Of their children, of whom James is the fourth, Carl and Nils are in Denmark, and Elsie is in America.

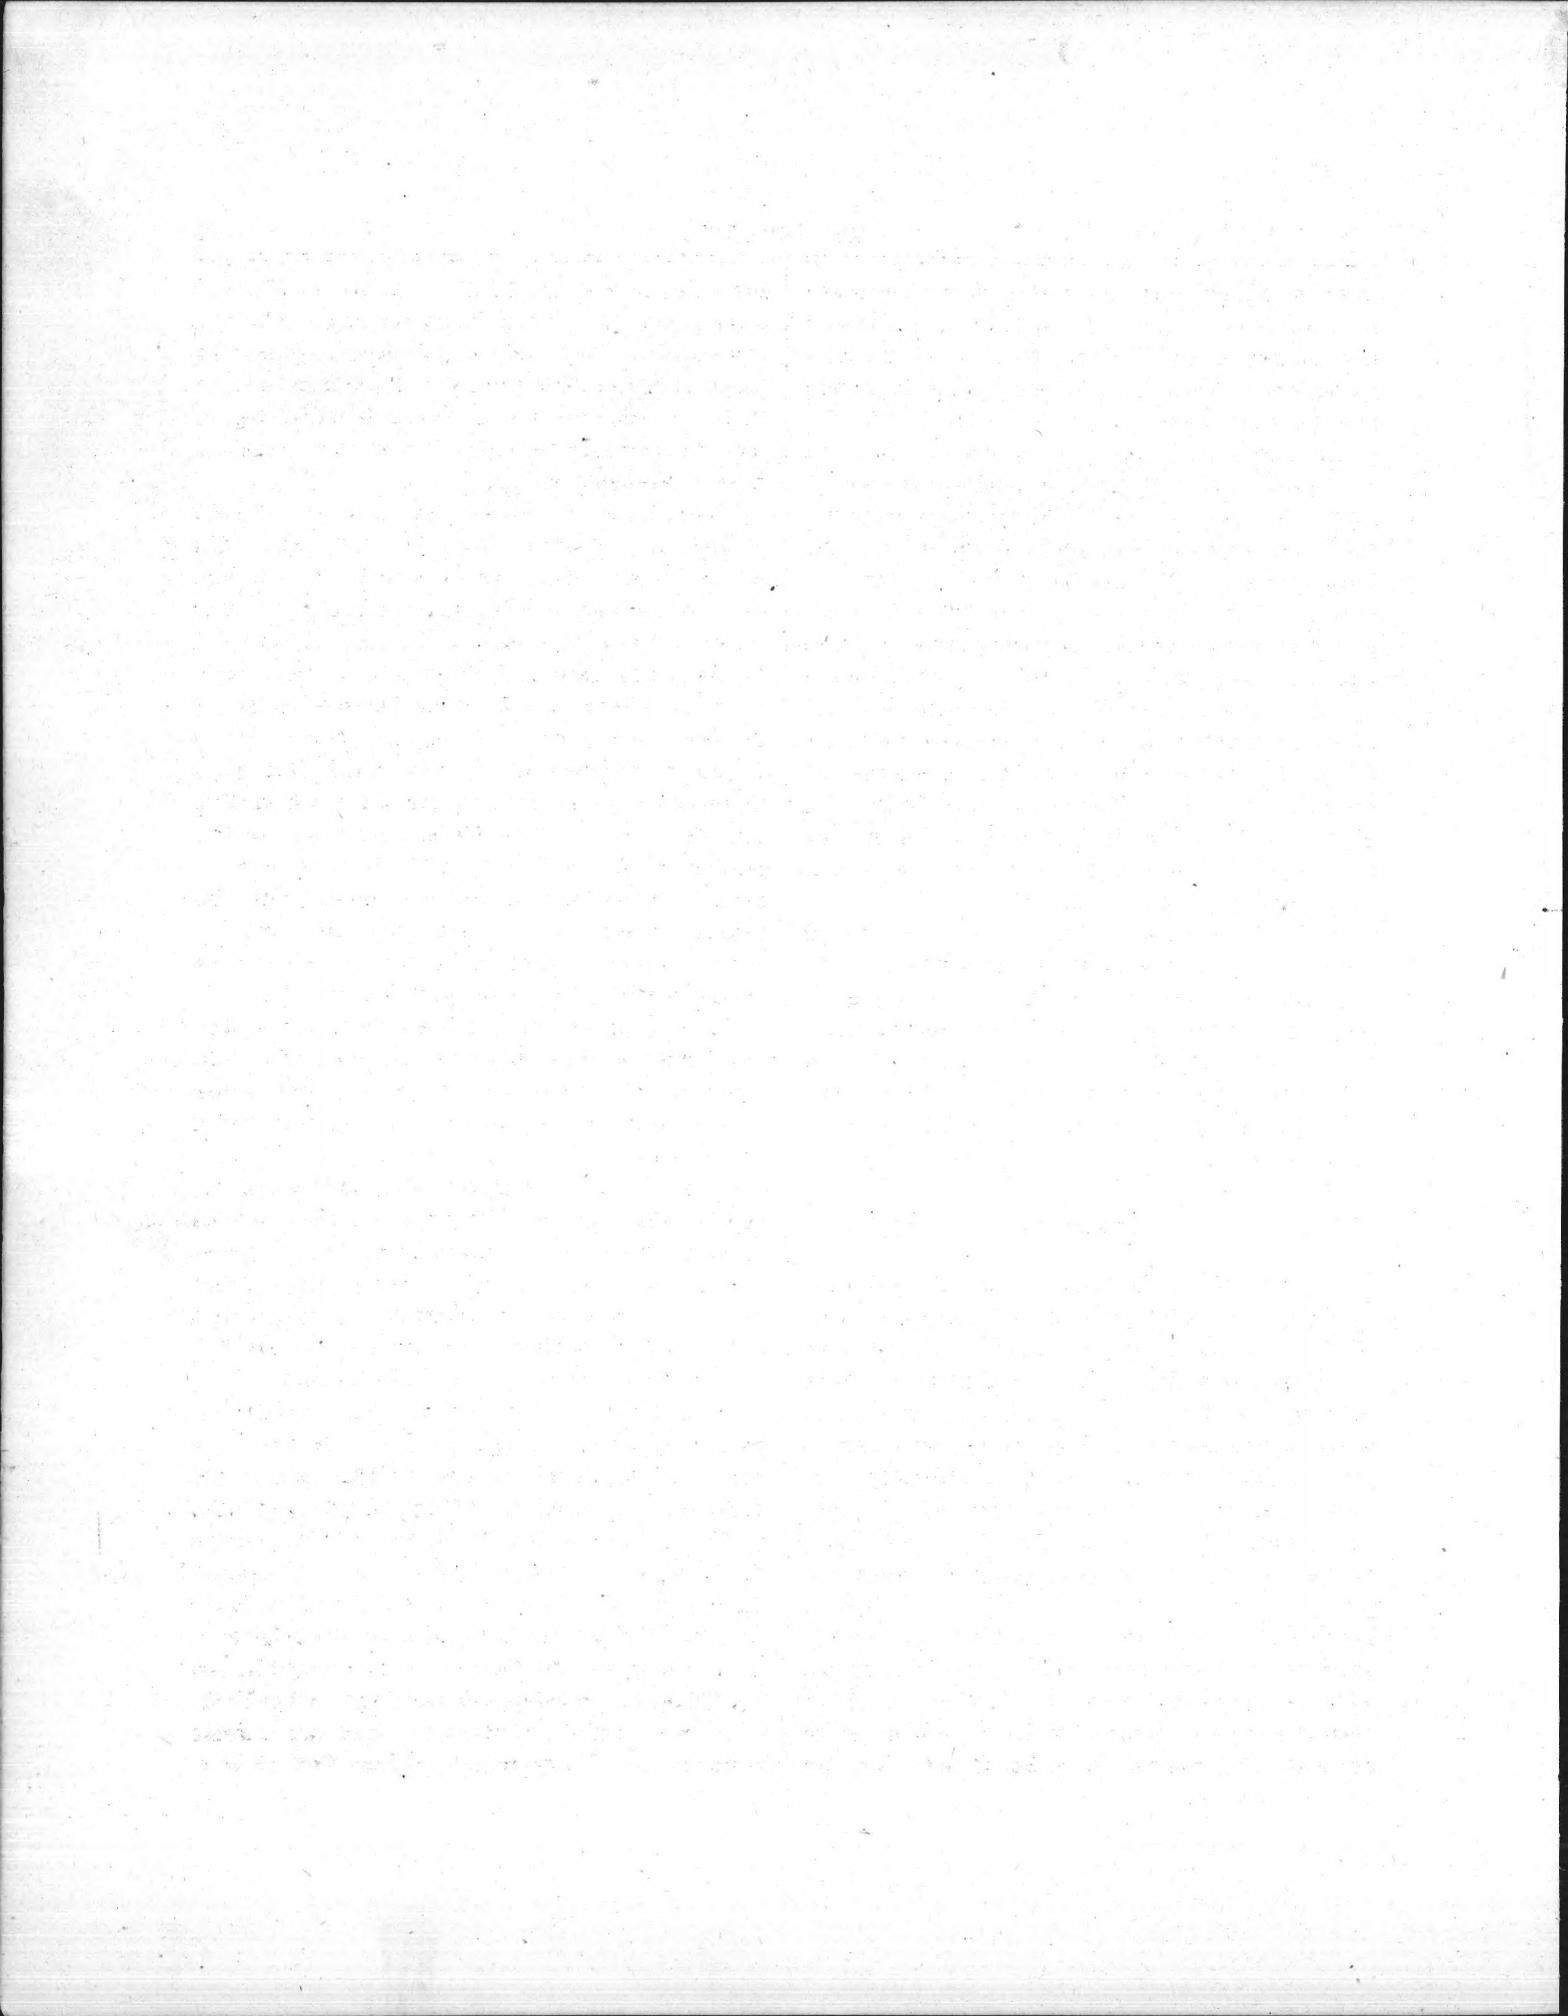

Mr. Johnson superintends all the labor and management of the farm himself, and is an example of what thrift and intelligently directed labor can accomplish. He was married, March 17, 1880, to Miss Eliza Murfin, daughter of Henry and Jane (Windt) Murfin, both born in Carroll County, Ohio. Grandfather Murfin came from England and settled and farmed in Ohio, and was in easy circumstances. Grandfather Windt was a German, who came to America and settled in Ohio, where he was a shoemaker and farmer. The father and mother of Mrs. Johnson were married in Carroll County, Ohio. Her father was a farmer, and enlisted in the Ohio Infantry with his two brothers. The father went South and served until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged, and returned to his home in Ohio and farmed there for several years, removing thence to Branch County, Mich.,

RESIDENCE OF R. K. LEYDA, SEC. 29. M<sup>Y</sup>. PLEASANT PRECT. CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF JAMES JOHNSON, SEC. 11., WEEPING WATER PRECINCT, CASS CO.

where he bought forty acres of land, and continued farming and raising fruit until 1873, when he sold out and removed to Wabash, Neb., where he now has an elegant farm of 160 acres, well improved and thoroughly equipped with modern appliances, which make farming a source of pleasure, as well as of profit. He is a strong Republican in politics, and takes a great interest in the success of his party. He is fifty-seven years of age, and the mother the same. The lady is the eldest of five children, was born in Carroll County, Ohio, Jan. 26, 1860, emigrated to Michigan with her parents, and was there married. They have one child, Leo, born March 5, 1882. She is a very kind, companionable lady, devoting herself to the comfort and pleasure of her family and friends. Our subject is a member of the A. F. & A. M. at Weeping Water, Lodge No. 97, has been through all the Chairs, and Master for two years. He served one term on the School Board, and at present is Assessor.

During his spare hours Mr. Johnson has studied the English language, until he has mastered it so well that he would not be taken for a foreigner, judging from his language. He says that America has given him chances he would not have had in his mother country, consequently he is an American through and through. On another page is shown a view of Mr. Johnson's comfortable residence.

R EUBEN K. LEYDA and his excellent wife, who in her girlhood was Miss Catherine Shoup, are numbered among the well-known people of Mt. Pleasant Precinct who have built up for themselves a good homestead, and whose course has been such as to commend them to their neighbors. Their property is pleasantly situated on section 29, and fulfills, in the air of plenty and comfort which surrounds it, the modern idea of the well-regulated rural home, where peace and plenty abound. The farm is 160 acres in extent, and since settling upon it in March of 1881 many improvements have been effected by Mr. Leyda, who has gradually gathered together the little comforts and conveniences which have so much to do with the happiness of a household. Mr. and

Mrs. Leyda are people in the prime of life, and after years of arduous labor are now enabled to rest upon their oars, taking satisfaction in watching the growth and development of the country around them, looking after the comfort and well-being of their children, and doing good unto their neighbors as they have opportunity.

The birth of our subject took place in Clinton Township, Wayne Co., Ohio, March 6, 1834. His father, James Leyda, was a native of Washington County, Pa.; and in early manhood married Miss Hulda Sanford, who was born on Long Island. The Leyda family trace their ancestry to Ireland, while from his mother our subject has inherited some of the best qualities of New England stock. James Leyda was occupied mostly in farming during his lifetime, and spent his last years in Ohio, departing this life in March, 1880. He was one of the earliest settlers of Wayne County, Ohio, locating in a log cabin in the wilderness, and in common with the pioneers around him experiencing the hardships and privations incident to the time and place. The mother is still living in Wayne County, Ohio.

Our subject was the second son and third child in a family of nine children, and was reared to man's estate in his native county, assisting in the development of the pioneer farm, and receiving a limited education in the primitive school. His parents realized the advantage of a good education, and did what they could for their children in this direction. Reuben, after leaving the district school, was given instruction by a teacher of a select school, and made such good progress that he himself developed in time into a pedagogue. He followed teaching briefly in his native county.

Mr. Leyda in leaving his native State was accompanied by the estimable lady who now bears his name, and to whom he was married March 25, 1858. Mrs. Catherine (Shoup) Leyda was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, May 2, 1836, and is the daughter of John and Nancy (Foreman) Shoup, the former a native of Ohio, and the latter of Pennsylvania. The paternal ancestors originated in Germany, and the family was represented in the United States probably 150 years ago. When Catherine was a little girl of seven years her parents removed from Tuscarawas to Holmes County, during the early settlement of the latter, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The father was a farmer by occupation, and looked his last upon the scenes of earth Jan. 14, 1885. The mother survived her husband a little over two years, dying in August, 1887.

Mrs. Leyda was the eldest daughter of her parents, and was reared and married in Holmes County, Ohio. Of her union with our subject there have been born five children, four of whom are living: The eldest son, James E., a young man of more than ordinary abilities, occupies himself as a teacher in the public schools of this county; John M., also making his mark in the world, is Deputy Recorder of this county; Wilbur S. is engaged in the real-estate business at Weeping Water; Otis T. remains at home with his parents. Albert died in infancy.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Leyda resided in various parts of Ohio until March of 1881, when they crossed the Mississippi, and sought a home in the farther West. Providence has kindly smiled upon their labors, and they have had little reason to regret their decision. Both were carefully trained morally and religiously, and are members in good standing of the Regular Baptist Church, in which Mr. Leyda officiates as Deacon and Trustee, attending services at Weeping Water. They have uniformly been the supporters and encouragers of those worthy enterprises having for their object the best good of the community, and tending to elevate society. The spacious and comfortable home is well illustrated by a view on another page.

CHARLES H. KING, of Weeping Water, is known far and wide as one of the earliest pioneers of Cass County, and a man closely identified with its early history. His has been a career at once busy and honorable, and in which he has been accorded by his fellow-citizens all the positions of trust and responsibility within their gift. He is at present Police Judge and Justice of the Peace, and is also carrying on a lucrative insurance business. He owns and occupies a good home at the corner of I and Commercial streets.

Mr. King first settled upon the soil of Nebraska

Territory in 1859, eight years before it was admitted into the Union as a State. He took up his abode in Plattsmouth, on the eastern line of the county, when it had a population of about 250. He sojourned with the people of that region a number of years, operating as a contractor and builder, and putting up some of its earliest business houses and better class of residences. In the meantime he interested himself in its improvement generally, and gave indications of more than ordinary business ability. In the year 1860 he was elected Sheriff of Cass County by the Democratic party, and bears the honor of having been the only Democratic Sheriff elected in this county. He served two years with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents, and at the expiration of this time the Civil War directed his thoughts and interests in another channel.

On the 17th of October, 1862, Mr. King proffered his services as a Union soldier, enlisting in Company H, 2d Nebraska Cavalry, and was given the post of Commissary Sergeant, in which capacity he served until the 1st of December, 1863. This being the expiration of his term of enlistment, he was honorably discharged. His regiment had operated mostly with the Northern Indiana army in the vicinity of the Whitestone Hills in the State of Dakota.

Upon retiring from the service Mr. King returned to Plattsmouth, and resumed his business as a contractor and builder. Not long afterward he was elected a City Councilman, a post which he held for a number of years. At Plattsmouth he was one of the pillars of the Christian Church, was Deacon, and filled other positions of trust. He was especially interested in the religious training of the young and the establishment and maintenance of Sunday-schools. In the spring of 1868, deciding upon a change of occupation, he removed with his family to a farm in the vicinity of Eight Mile Grove, and which he had partially improved from a wild and uncultivated tract of land. He now vigorously entered upon the pursuit of agriculture and carrying on the improvement of his farm, setting out trees, putting up the necessary buildings, and gathering together the machinery and live stock which complete the details of a country homestead. In the meantime he was appointed the Postmaster of the town. In the winter of 1871 he left his farm and put up a dwelling near the church building and school-house, which he occupied until coming to Weeping Water. He was in effect the first Postmaster of Eight Mile Grove, and held the office for a period of more than eleven years, receiving his appointment from Postmaster-General David M. Keys. After his removal to the town he established a grocery and drug business, the first in that neighborhood. He was during his entire residence at Eight Mile Grove a member of the School Board, serving as Secretary, and also held the various other township offices. Upon the incorporation of the town he was Magistrate for a period of eight years.

When Mr. King entered upon his duties as Postmaster of Eight Mile Grove, the office was paying the munificent salary of $12 a year. When he left it in 1881 it was worth $75. His main business as magistrate was in the matrimonial line, he frequently joining several couples in a day. Upon coming to Weeping Water in the spring of 1881, having sold his interests at Eight Mile Grove, Mr. King resumed business as a builder and contractor, and also operated as mine host of the King's Hotel until 1885. In the fall of that year he was elected Justice of the Peace, and controlled the bulk of the business in this line, doing also considerable in the way of conveyancing, collecting and other legal business.

Mr. King assisted in the organization of the Baptist Church at Weeping Water, of which he has been twice elected as Deacon and still serves in this capacity. He is usually the man selected by the brethren as a delegate to the various church assemblies in the county and State. In 1860 he was elected Sheriff of Cass County, being the third man to hold this position. At that time the county had only 400 voters.

Charles H. King is a native of Montgomery County, N. Y., born March 3, 1818, and lived there until reaching his majority, completing his studies at Watertown Academy. Upon leaving school he was engaged several terms as a teacher. Upon leaving the Empire State, about 1839, he migrated to Quincy, Ill., where he lived six months, and then moved on across the Mississippi into Van Buren County, Iowa, where he followed the profession of a teacher for a number of years. His rare courage and good business capacities commended him to the people of that county as suitable material for Sheriff, which office he first held by appointment. At the close of the term he was regularly elected, and held the office by re-election for a period of eleven years. He also officiated considerably as County Collector. In the meantime he still pursued teaching during the winter season, and in summer operated likewise as a contractor and builder.

Mr. King cast his first Presidential vote in the Hawkeye State, in 1840, for Martin Van Buren. Here also his first experience as a magistrate began. He likewise found in that county one of the most estimable of young ladies, Miss Almira King (no connection), to whom he was married in Iowa, July 12, 1844. This lady became the mother of two children, and died in July, 1849, five short years after their marriage. Their elder son, Omer J., is married and living on a farm in Rock Bluff Precinct, this county; he is the father of one child. The other child, Orson D., died when quite young.

Mr. King remained in Iowa until 1859, in the meantime having contracted a second marriage, with Miss Janetta K. Root, then of Orleans County, N. Y. Mrs. King was born in Madison County, N. Y., and was the daughter of E. K. Root, a well-to-do farmer of Orleans County. Mrs. Janetta King died in Iowa, April 11, 1865. Our subject was the third time married, March 25, 1878, to Mrs. Frances J. Greenfield. The latter was born Aug. 7, 1833, in Connecticut, and is the daughter of Stodard and Sarah J. Leech, who were natives of England, and are now deceased.

Sylvester King, the father of our subject, was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1793. He lived there until reaching man's estate, and then migrated to Montgomery County, N. Y., during the pioneer days. He was there married to Miss Lydia Stewart, of Balston Springs, Saratoga County, and who was born Oct. 31, 1800. They became the parents of eight children, four of whom lived to mature years, Charles H. being the eldest.

After his marriage the father of our subject engaged in mercantile business in Johnstown, N. Y. A few years later he removed to Adams, Jefferson County, and taking up a tract of new land, constructed a homestead, where he remained until about 1841. His father died about that time, and he then removed to the old homestead in Orleans County, where his death occurred about 1867. He had been a prominent man in his community, holding the offices of Township Supervisor and Justice of the Peace, and taking a lively interest in politics. He voted for Martin Van Buren, and worked for his election. He and his family were identified with the Christian Church. The mother is still living in Orleans County, N. Y., continuing on the old homestead. The paternal grandfather was Paul King, a farmer by occupation, who spent his last years in New York State.

HON. EUGENE L. REED. The subject of this sketch occupies a prominent position in the history of this county, being the oldest surviving settler of importance now living here, and of which he has been a resident since the spring of 1857. The chief events in a career of more than ordinary interest are substantially as follows: A native of Trumbull County, Ohio, Mr. Reed was born May 23, 1841, living there with his parents until a little lad five years of age. His father then decided to try the experiment of life in the Far West, and accordingly made his way with his little family across the Mississippi to Washington County, Iowa, settling in Clay Township, where Eugene L. pursued his early studies in the common schools. Afterward he remained with his father on the farm, and working in the sawmill thereon until coming to Weeping Water, this county.

Eugene L. is the son of William H. Reed, who was born in Hartland, Conn., in 1808, and in his boyhood removed to New Connecticut on the Western Reserve in Ohio. William Reed, Sr., the grandfather of our subject, was one of the earliest pioneers in that section of country. He settled in the wilderness and felled a portion of the heavy timber around him, building up a comfortable homestead, where he lived to be an old man. Later he went to Iowa, to his son William H., Jr. He had married in early manhood Miss Lucy Hyde, of Connecticut. They became the parents of six children, all of whom lived to mature years. One died at the age of twenty-two, in Mississippi. The others lived to a ripe old age. William H. Reed, Sr., and his wife, spent their last years in Iowa. The grandmother for the last twelve years of her life was an invalid, but most tenderly cared for by her husband, who gave to her his whole attention until her death, after which he came to Weeping Water. Each traced their ancestry to the Puritans who came over in the "Mayflower" in 1620, and were, like their forefathers, Congregationalists in religious belief. Politically, grandfather Reed was a Whig and Abolitionist, and one of the first members of the Free-Soil party. In Iowa their farm was a station of the "underground railroad," and Eugene L. remembers that when a little lad of eight years he assisted in the rescue of a fugitive slave, getting him to a place of safety only fifteen minutes ahead of his pursuers.

William H. Reed, Jr., the father of our subject, in early manhood married Miss Sophronia Clinton, who became the mother of one son and died. He was a second time married, to Miss Adelia Fuller, who, like the first wife, was at the time a resident of Ohio. Of this union there were born three children: Eugene L., of our sketch; Lucius F., who was his partner in business, and Ellen, the wife of P. E. Beardsley, of Lincoln, this State.

After his marriage and the birth of his sons Mr. Reed moved to Washington County, Iowa, where he took up a tract of raw land, and later built a mill on the Skunk River Bottoms. He remained in that locality a period of twelve years, and in the fall of 1856 changed his operations to Nebraska Territory, coming to the present site of Weeping Water, and obtained an interest in a mill and land which comprises the present town site of Weeping Water. Then, returning to Iowa, he settled up his interests in that section with the intention of transferring them to this county.

Mr. Reed, the owner of two sections of land and a good mill in Iowa, had unfortunately placed his name to a note for $2,700 with the usual result, and to meet this was obliged to turn over most of his property, having left only a team and his household furniture. This necessitated a beginning again at the foot of the ladder. In company with his son Eugene he put up a small mill in what was then the Far West, the first of its kind in that locality, and the farthest mill toward the setting sun until reaching the coast. It was completed and opened up for business in the fall of 1861. Father and son operated this until their construction of what was afterward long familiarly known as Reed's Mill, in 1865, and which is still standing. After the completion of this mill our subject remained here until 1866. He then moved to Milford, having become interested in a mill site at that place. In the meantime, however, at the outbreak of the Civil War, Mr. Reed felt that he could not do otherwise than hasten to the defense of the Union, and in June, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, 1st Nebraska Infantry, which was called Thayer's Regiment, and which afterward was under command of Gen. Livingston. Mr. Reed went in as a private and came out a non-commissioned officer. This regiment operated mostly with the Western Division of the army, and participated in the battles of Independence, Mo., Springfield and Ft. Donelson, and went with the campaign of Gen. Fremont throughout the Southwest. Those acquainted with the history of that time will recall the fact that Missouri was no unimportant battleground during the war, the guerrillas and bushwhackers being peculiarly destructive in their operations. At the hard-fought battle of Ft. Donelson, where Floyd sought to escape with 10,000 troops, the regiment was in Gen. Lew Wallace's division, and stood the brunt of Floyd's charge alone.

Mr. Reed about this time was seized with pneumonia and confined in the hospital at Cincinnati, Ohio. At the expiration of his term of enlistment he received his honorable discharge, in October, 1862, and returning to this county resumed, as soon as able, his former operations in Weeping Water. He had in the spring of 1859 purchased an interest in the original town site, and later owned all the ground upon which it now stands. He has since made three additions, one being East Riverside and another Park Addition, which embraces about 140 acres. He conducted his milling business until 1868, then sold out and became one of the firm of Reed Bros., who opened one of the first general stores to be established in Weeping Water. It is now Reed Bros. & Co. Lucius F. died in January, 1880. The firm comprised Eugene L. and Lucius F.

The father of our subject sold his mill in 1872, and the year following returned to Weeping Water, where he lived retired from active business until passing away about 1885. His second wife had died in 1854. He was subsequently married, and his last wife is still living. William H. Reed was the first man to make any move toward establishing the town of Weeping Water, securing the land before it had come into market, his claim being "jumped." He lived to see a fine and flourishing city built up from the spot which, when he first looked upon it, was little more than a wilderness. He purchased the land, a quarter-section, of Elam Flower, and attended personally to laying out a large portion of the town. It naturally followed that he was thereafter chosen by the people who came in and settled to fill the various offices, which became necessary as the community enlarged.

The subject of this sketch, like his father before him, developed at an early age more than ordinary abilities, and after having served in various other positions of trust and responsibility, was elected in 1868 to the State Senate on the Republican ticket. While in the Legislature he was associated with many of the important committees, and distinguished himself as a safe adviser and temperate counselor in matters of moment. He believes in compulsory education, and has taken a warm interest in the establishment and maintenance of schools, being usually connected with the School Board of his district. Although no office-seeker, he has been active in the councils of his party, and keeps himself well informed upon current events.

Mr. Reed was the first Republican Postmaster appointed by President Lincoln. He assumed charge of the office in 1862, discharging its duties conscientiously until the incoming of the Democratic administration in the spring of 1885. He was sent from Nebraska to the National Republican Convention which nominated Blaine, although he had been strongly in favor of renominating Arthur. He was frequently appointed a delegate to the County and State Conventions, being uniformly active and efficient in connection therewith.

Mr. Reed reserved one block of the original town site for the establishment of Weeping Water Academy, which, in addition to this gift of land, he has also endowed, and has been largely instrumental in bringing it to its present prosperous condition. It is now the favorite institution of learning in Southern Nebraska. He also holds in reserve two blocks for the campus when the new building is erected. He was the founder of the Weeping Water Bank, the first institution of the kind in the place, and was elected its first President. He is also President of the Weeping Water Lime and Stone Company, who have their headquarters south of town, and which ship a hundred cars per day of crushed rock and 250 barrels of lime, besides rubble stones of all dimensions. This latter enterprise was established in 1885, and now gives employment to 200 men. Mr. Reed has an interest in the Pressed Brick Company of Weeping Water, of which he is also a Director, and which was established in 1888. He was one of the founders of the Weeping Water Creamery, and is President of the Town Company, in fact there have been few enterprises in which he has not been interested and in which he has not been called upon to exercise his uniform good judgment in their conduct and establishment.

The marriage of Hon. Eugene L. Reed and Miss Anna Bellows, of Weeping Water, was celebrated at the home of the bride in this place, Nov. 11, 1865. This union resulted in the birth of two sons and two daughters, the eldest of whom, Will E., is a student of Dartmouth College, in his junior year. Estella, Clinton and Lucile are at home with their parents, who purpose to give them also the advantages of a first-class education.

Mrs. Reed was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio, in 1849, and is the daughter of Josiah Bellows, a native also of the Buckeye State, where he lived until 1857, then coming to Nebraska Territory he settled on a tract of new land west of the present site of Weeping Water, before it had assumed even the dignity of a village. He there commenced farming in true pioneer style, but was permitted to labor a brief time only, dying the year after his arrival, and leaving a widow who was the mother of three children, and who gave birth to a fourth child after the death of her husband. The eldest, a son, B. F. Bellows, is now in business in the city of Cleveland, Ohio. The others are True and J. H. Bellows. The maiden name of the mother of Mrs. Reed was Celestia Mills. She died in 1862.

Mr. Reed was the first merchant in Weeping Water to have a cash carrier placed in his store, and which for some time was regarded with a great deal of curiosity, being quite an innovation upon the old system. The store building is located at the corner of I and Randolph streets, and was erected in 1868.

—❦—

FREDERICK D. LEHNHOFF, of wide reputation in connection with the brick and tile manufactories of Plattsmouth, was born near the city of Hanover, in the Province of that name in Germany, on the 11th of August, 1831. That was the home of the Lehnhoff family for many generations. He is the son of Frederick and Caroline (Allswede) Lehnhoff. His father, like his grandfather, Christopher Lehnhoff, followed agricultural pursuits and trained our subject in the same.

Accompanied by his wife and seven children, the father of our subject emigrated to America in the year 1847, taking passage at Bremen, and landing in the city of New York on the 3d of July. From New York they journeyed up the Hudson River and the canal to Buffalo. From there they went via the lakes to Milwaukee, then a small and comparatively unimportant place. After making all necessary provision for their comfort, he left his wife and family for a time, and with four others hired a team the better to explore the wilderness. Each took a tract of land, Mr. Lehnhoff selecting his in Jefferson County, about thirty-two miles almost due west from Milwaukee. There was about five acres of land cleared and a fair log cabin on the place, and the family took immediate possession. There was no railroad in the district, and Milwaukee was their nearest market. The region abounded in all kinds of wild game, of which he was not slow to take full advantage. A fine farm speedily became an accomplished fact, and there the family continued to live until 1879; then removal was made to Platts-mouth, where the father spent his last days with his children, dying in the year 1882, aged eighty years.

There were nine children born to the parents of our subject. Their names are as follows: Frederick D., Henry; Dorothy, who is the wife of G. Schnasse, of Rapid City, Dak.; Caroline, who is married to A. Tartsch; Minnie, now Mrs. Charles Buskirke; Louise, the wife of G. Benty; August, William and Charles. William and Charles were born in the United States, the others in the old country.

Our subject attended school quite regularly in his native land, and was sixteen years of age when he came to America with his parents, and continued to reside with his father until 1859, when, with a number of others, his companions, he started with a four-horse team and wagon for Pike's Peak. The time occupied en route was five weeks; they crossed the Missouri River at Platts-mouth on the 8th of May, 1859. They very soon met large numbers returning from the mountains, by very far the large majority being without means, discouraged, and so far as that venture was concerned broken-spirited. The effect upon our subject and his companions was such as to deter them from their original purpose, and they determined to return.

The subject of our sketch and brother Henry took up a claim of 160 acres in Centre Precinct, Cass County, and at once built a small house and took possession. They traded their horses for a land warrant and entered the land from the Government at the Nebraska City office. This was truly frontier life, and provided them with an interesting and by no means unprofitable experience. Our subject continued farming there until 1864, and then sold his interest in the farm to his brother, and came to Platts-mouth.

Since his settlement in Platts-mouth our subject has been engaged in various branches of business, including general mercantile, grain, wood and coal. When the Platts-mouth Brick and Tile Manufacturing Company was started he became a large stockholder, and indeed was one of the prime movers in the enterprise. For the past three years he has been manager of the company. The company has a kiln with a capacity of 10,000 per day, and it is of the pattern known as the continuous kiln, built under the Bochnke patent, and was the second of the kind constructed in the United States.

On Oct. 27, 1861, our subject was united in marriage with Katie Reichert, a native of Bavaria, who came to America with her parents, George and Katie Reichert, when about seven years of age, to Ohio, and on the death of her parents lived with her uncle, and subsequently removed with his family to Nebraska. There have been born of this union three children, viz.: Matilda, George and Frederick. Our subject and family are held in high regard in the town, and are worthy members of society. Politically, Mr. Lehnhoff is a Democrat, and fully appreciates the liberty of franchise and Republican government, and is thoroughly imbued with the American spirit.

~~~~~

CHARLES PHILPOT is a prosperous and representative farmer and citizen of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and resides on his magnificent farm located on section 23. He is a native of Jo Daviess County, Ill., where he was born Feb. 10, 1847. He is a son of John and Sarah (May) Philpot. Our subject from his earliest years was accustomed to the privations and toils of pioneer life, both in his native county and his present home. His means of acquiring an education was confined to the public schools of the neighborhood, which had not then acquired the perfection they have today; but having naturally a studious mind, he continued his course of study, reading all available books and papers, and studying by observation the events of the times as they transpired about him, he now possesses a well-stored mind and an eminently practical education.

The father of our subject, John Philpot, was a native of Kent County, England, and his mother a native of Illinois. He emigrated to America when quite a young man, and after extended tours through the country, both North and South, he finally located in Jo Daviess County, Ill., where he lived for many years. He was married twice; the first wife bore him no children, but his second and present wife has borne him eight, five of whom are living: Charles, our subject; John and James live in Mt. Pleasant Precinct; Alfred is in Jo Daviess County, Ill., and Mary is the wife of E. P. Hay, and resides in Cass County, Neb. In 1872 the father removed from his home in Illinois to Carroll County, Mo., where he resided but a short time, when he came to Nebraska, and located in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, where he has resided ever since. He is well along in years, and is enjoying the comforts which he has so richly earned. A cousin of the mother of our subject, named James Drousdle, took an active part in the Black Hawk War.

Our subject and Miss Cerelia L. Barrett were married Nov. 19, 1868. The lady was born in Jo Daviess County, Ill., May 30, 1852, and is a daughter of Lockhart and Nancy J. (Carter) Barrett. Her father was born in York State, and her mother is supposed to be a native of Rock Island County, Ill., but it is not positively known to be true, as the records of her family were lost. Her parents were early settlers in Jo Daviess County, and reared a family of eight children, four of whom are living: Cerelia L., the wife of our subject; William L., a resident of Cass County; Prince A. resides in South Omaha, Neb., and Benjamin F., a resident of Valparaiso, Neb.

Mr. and Mrs. Philpot with two children emigrated to Cass County, Neb., in 1872, coming overland in a wagon. They had one team of horses and a few cattle. They camped out wherever night overtook them, and after a wearisome journey of five weeks, they arrived at and settled on their present farm, which was in a wild condition, but by dint of energy, perseverance and good management, by both himself and wife, they have improved it, and gathered about them so many conveniences that they now possess one of the most valuable farms in the county. These good people have become the parents of a family of eleven children; eight are living, namely: James W., Wallace M., John W., Charles E., May E., Bertie L., Lottie E. and Cynthia J. The three who are dead were named: Julia L., Albert W. and Benjamin F.

In the accumulation of the estate of which he is the owner our subject has been ably assisted by the counsels and good offices of his wife. Coming as she did to a new and wild country, she accepted the condition, and has left nothing undone to make their venture a permanent success, which they have admirably accomplished, as is evidenced by the snug and comfortably arranged home, and the well designed and located buildings, necessary to shelter the stock and care for the crops raised on their farm.

Mr. Philpot has been repeatedly solicited to accept public office from the hands of his neighbors, which he has steadily refused, only accepting some position connected with the advancement of the educational interests of the precinct, in which he takes an especial pride. He is now serving as Treasurer of the district, and has been connected with the School Board for a number of years. He is public-spirited, and is an ardent supporter of any plan having for its object the general good. Himself and wife are active members of society, and they fill a prominent position in a highly creditable manner. In politics he is strictly Republican.

WILLIAM R. LEWIS, a wide-awake farmer, living on eighty acres of choice land on section 31, Elmwood Precinct, was born in LaSalle County, Ill., Aug. 31, 1847. He enlisted in the Union Army in 1862, but was rejected on account of his age, being considered too young, as he was then but sixteen years of age. As soon as he was old enough to handle a plow he was obliged to earn his own living. As a result his facilities for obtaining an education by attending school were of the most limited extent, but being possessed of a naturally quick, observing turn of mind, he has overcome that deficiency to such an extent that he is now a well-informed man.

Mr. Lewis was married, Jan. 16, 1877, to Miss Flora B. Hite, the daughter of David Hite, whose biography will be found on another page in this volume. In 1880 they came to Nebraska. They are the parents of two children: Viola Maude was born in Illinois, and Allie E. was born on their present homestead. They are very intelligent, fine appearing children, obedient and lovable.

Your Truly
E. W. Barnum

The mother of our subject, Eliza Ann Lewis, and his father, William, settled in Illinois in 1838. The mother's parents were killed by the Indians in the Black Hawk War, thus leaving her an orphan. She was taken into the family and raised to womanhood by Mr. Holman. For further information relative to the parents see the biography of Albert E. Lewis, given elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Lewis has a nice, comfortable home, containing many of the comforts and conveniences of life. He has a handsome and affectionate wife and is the father of two intelligent children. His political affiliations are with the Democratic party.

HON. EVANDER W. BARNUM. Prominent among the early settlers of Cass County stands the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch, and few men are better or more favorably known throughout the county than he. Coming here with a younger brother, Thomas J., in the spring of 1857, each preempted 160 acres of land, he on section 27, and his brother on section 22, of Liberty Precinct, both quarters being now owned and occupied by our subject. It was then raw prairie land, but with untiring diligence Mr. Barnum labored with much skill and wisdom in his management, and he now has a magnificent farm, nearly all under cultivation, well watered, and to the original homestead he has added by purchase until his realty consists of 640 acres of land, well adapted for tillage or stock-raising. He has erected a comfortable house, and has a fine set of farm buildings, with all the modern conveniences for the prosecution of his chosen vocation. He takes especial pride in his superior grades of stock, and is the President and Treasurer of a live-stock association, consisting of ten members, of Factoryville. The head of their fine herd of horses is Young Samson, a black, imported English Shire horse, six years of age.

Thomas J. Barnum, who came here with our subject, remained on his claim until the fall of 1859, when he went to New Mexico, where he remained for a few years. He was afterward connected with the Kansas City and Santa Fe stage route, but subsequently disposed of his interest in that, and located in St. Louis, where he died after a residence of two years. He was a man of wide experience in the vicissitudes of frontier life, and his death in 1880, while yet in the prime of life, was the sudden ending of what promised to be a brilliant career, he having been a man of excellent business capacity and sound judgment.

Our subject was born in Middlefield, Otsego Co., N. Y., Sept. 28, 1826. He came of substantial New England stock, his grandfather, Abijah Barnum, having been a native of Connecticut. In early life he moved from there to Otsego County, N. Y., and subsequently married there. Some years afterward he moved to Seneca County, where he spent his last years, dying at a ripe old age. He was twice married, Lewis Barnum, father of our subject, having been a son by his first wife. He was born Oct. 22, 1790, in Otsego County, where he spent his entire life. He was also twice married. The maiden name of his first wife was Lucy Jones, and she was a native of New York State, born Feb. 12, 1790. She was a daughter of Thomas Jones, a farmer of Otsego County, who died there after a long and useful life. She died Oct. 26, 1830, and Mr. Barnum married a second time, taking for a wife Catherine Huff, of Seneca County, who survived him some years. Both died at an advanced age in Otsego County, Mr. Barnum's death occurring Feb. 7, 1843. Of the first marriage seven children were born, and of the second marriage five children were born.

Evander W. Barnum, of our sketch, was the fifth child and third son of the first marriage. He was reared and educated in his native county, and after arriving at man's estate was married, in Springfield, to Miss Eliza Gilchrist, who was born in Otsego County, Feb. 28, 1832. William Gilchrist, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Barnum, was born in Lanarkshire, Scotland, and when a young man emigrated to America, and settled in Dutchess County, N. Y. He subsequently married Miss Mary Frazer, a native of the parish of Cromdell, Inverness, Scotland, and a lineal descendant of the family of Lord Lovell, a family of whom Scotch people have been very proud. After their marriage they lived on a farm in Dutchess County, then moved to Schoharie County, and finally settled in Springfield, Otsego County, where they died April 9, 1819, and Sept. 11, 1829, respectively. They had nine children, six sons and three daughters. The parents of Mrs. Barnum, Peter and Sylvia (Dutcher) Gilchrist, were born respectively in Duaneburg, N. Y., Sept. 30, 1788, and in Springfield, June 3, 1804. They were married in the latter place March 14, 1822, and settled on the farm, where they passed the remainder of their lives, Mr. Gilchrist dying March 2, 1838, and Mrs. Gilchrist April 26, 1884. They were intelligent, worthy people, highly respected by all who know them. Peter Gilchrist was a farmer and leading stockman of his day in that section of the State. They were the parents of seven children, of whom the following is a record: Martha, the eldest child, who married Mr. G. Shaw, died leaving a family of four children; Mary, widow of the late Philip Rice, lives in Springfield, N. Y., aged sixty-four years; Christopher, a dealer in ladies' hair goods, in Ft. Wayne, Ind., married Melissa Harwick; Jane is the wife of John Scollard, a farmer of Springfield, N. Y.; Daniel, a farmer in Springfield, N. Y., married Hannah Walradt; Eliza is the wife of our subject; Margaret is the wife of Dexter Matison, of Newark, N. J.

After their marriage our subject and his wife started immediately for their new home in Nebraska, becoming pioneers of Cass County. They set to work energetically to build a home for themselves, and in doing that have contributed largely to the growth of the precinct and county, and have added their full quota to its progress, aiding by every possible means all things calculated for its moral, social or intellectual development. To people of like calibre is Cass County indebted for its high rank among the adjacent counties of Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Barnum are social and hospitable people in every sense implied by the words, held in the highest respect, and are esteemed members of the Episcopal Church, of Wyoming. In his political views Mr. Barnum is a Republican, and in 1860 and 1862 represented his county in the Territorial Legislature, and in 1873 was a member of the State Senate. He is now an incumbent of the office of Justice of the Peace. Mr. and Mrs. Barnum are the parents of one child, Thomas G., who still lives on the old homestead. He married Miss Hattie, daughter of Isaac Pollard, an extensive farmer of Liberty Precinct. They have one child, Vernie. A portrait of Mr. Barnum appears on another page.

JOHAN D. SIMPSON, who has often been a prominent figure in the civic life of Platts-mouth, his present place of residence, was an early pioneer of Cass County. He holds a responsible position in the office of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company in this city, as clerk in the supply department. He was born in Huntingdon, Huntingdon Co., Pa., Sept. 12, 1826. His grandfather was Matthew Simpson, a Scotchman by birth, living on an estate in the North of Ireland, which had come into the possession of the family at the time of the Conquest by William of Orange. In 1783 he was married to Catherine Moore, a native of Ireland, born in 1757. On Oct. 19, 1784, their only child was born; this was William, father of our subject. When he was in his fourth year his parents came to America, landing May 8, 1788. Directly after landing they went to Huntingdon County, Pa., where Matthew Simpson died, in July 1810, at the age of seventy-three, leaving a large fortune to his son William, who became a leading man in the community, and was subsequently connected with a large iron foundry in that county. His connection with this enterprise was a costly one, as he lost $50,000 in it directly, and in a financial panic shortly after lost another $50,000 by the failure of the "Citizens' Bank" of that place. He was yet in comfortable circumstances, however, but by becoming security for friends he lost heavily, and became quite reduced in circumstances. He had held many positions of trust and responsibility. In 1827 he was elected Sheriff of Huntingdon County, serving four years with much credit to himself and greatly to the satisfaction of the citizens of the county. In 1838 he removed to Delphi, Ind., where he also became a conspicuous figure in public life. In 1839 he was appointed Postmaster of that place, and in 1841 was elected Treasurer of the county (Carroll), serving two terms in that office. After retiring to private life he did not engage in any private business. In 1850 he died there, at the age of sixty-five, leaving behind an unsullied name and the pleasant memory of one who in life was an eminently kind and companionable man, who was widely respected not only for his ability, but for his virtues. His wife, whose maiden name was Jane Dean, was born in Philadelphia, and died in Delphi also, Aug. 20, 1838. She was a true wife and mother, and had borne beside her husband the vicissitudes of life with uncomplaining fortitude. They were married May 1, 1810. Their children were: Catherine, born March 23, 1811; Maria, May 23, 1813; Matthew, July 1, 1816; Jane Dean, Feb. 24, 1819; Debora, April 27, 1821; Eliza Ann, Nov. 5, 1823, and John Dean, Sept. 12, 1826. Two of these are now deceased: Maria died in November, 1857, and Jane Dean in April, 1843.

On the maternal side Mr. Simpson's ancestors came from Holland, and were settled in Philadelphia, Pa. His grandmother's maiden name was Debora Johnston, who was married to John Dean, after whom our subject was named. He came from England, but about the time of the Indian depredations there moved to Huntingdon County, Pa., where he became a leader in the warfare with the savages. He died comparatively young, leaving two children, Jane and William, the former the mother of our subject. William became a soldier in the War of 1812, and died soon after its close. John Dean had one brother, named Alexander, who became administrator of his estate, and soon became its owner. Debora, widow of John Dean, removed to Delphi, Ind., where she died in 1838. Her mother, who had removed from Pennsylvania to the Western Reserve, died in Mansfield, Ohio, at the extreme age of one hundred and ten years.

The subject of this biographical notice was the youngest child of his parents, and was twelve years old when they moved to Indiana. Two years later, in 1840, he became self-supporting, being a lad of great self-reliance, and blessed with health and a vigorous mind. He went to Galena, Ill., to reside with Richard Crocker, and clerked in his store. He acted in that capacity until 1843, when he went to Belvidere, in the same State, to take advantage of the excellent school in that town to complete his education, and he had as classmate there Bishop Nealey. In the spring of 1844 our subject returned to Indiana, and was a clerk in a general store until 1856. During that time his fine business qualifications brought him into public notice, and he was made Deputy Treasurer, and subsequently Clerk of the county. While acting in the latter capacity he made a numerical index of the records of deeds for the county. In September, 1856, he decided to try life on the wild Western plains, and started by rail for Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, then the western terminus of the railway, and from there took the stage to Plattsmouth. This was quite a small place at the time, with but three stores and not many dwelling-houses. Mr. Simpson commenced clerking in a general store, the trade being mostly confined to the emigrants who had come in and taken up claims. When emigration across the plains set in the merchants did a large business. In a newly settled country the men of brains come to the front, as their assistance is needed to carry out the affairs of State, and the fellow-citizens of our subject were not long in selecting him as worthy of their suffrage, and in the fall of 1857 they elected him to the position of County Treasurer. His discharge of the onerous duties of that office was so pleasing to his constituency that they re-elected him to the same position in 1859, and he thus served two full terms with great honor.

In 1861 our subject crossed the plains to Denver, and there kept books for the Rocky Mountain News Company for one year. He then accepted a position in the Quartermaster's department, having charge of mustering the soldiers in and out of the service of the Territory of Colorado. He returned to Plattsmouth in 1864, and the following year was engaged in keeping books for a mercantile house there. In 1866 he formed a partnership with Sharp & Micelwait to carry on the lumber and grocery business. He remained a member of that company until 1869, and also acted during that time as agent for the American Express Company. In 1869 he was appointed agent for the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, which in that year had put its line through this city, the first shovel-full of dirt having been thrown up in the month of July, and in the fall of that year the railroad was in operation, Mr.

Simpson being its first agent here. He acted in that capacity six months, but continued his agency for the American Express Company until 1873. He then went to Omaha as Secretary for the Brewer & Bemis Brewing Company, staying with them until 1874. In the spring of that year he visited Cheyenne, but spent only a few months there, and in the fall of that year we again find him in Plattsmouth, he having accepted the position of express messenger for the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, holding it until 1880. From that time until 1886 the American and Wells-Fargo Express Companies claimed his services as their agent in Plattsmouth. He resigned in the latter year to become clerk in the supply department of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company, the duties of which position he discharges with characteristic fidelity, looking carefully after the interests of his employers.

Mr. Simpson was married, July 6, 1853, to Catherine Klepser, a native of Salem, Ohio, and a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Klepser, of whom see sketch on another page of this volume. She fills the perfect measure of wife, mother, friend, and her many noble qualities of mind and heart endear her to a large circle of friends. Two amiable and accomplished daughters, Lelia and Edith Luella, complete the happy household group of our subject and his wife. Mrs. Simpson has acquired an enviable reputation as a music teacher of rare merit. She first gave music lessons in Delphi, Ind., and commenced teaching in Plattsmouth in 1858, and was one of the first music teachers in the Territory of Nebraska. Her children have inherited her talent in a marked degree, and her daughter Lelia was considered a musical prodigy at twelve years of age.

Mrs. Simpson on her mother's side is a granddaughter of Tunis William Vancleve, a pioneer of Ohio, who died in South Arlington in that State, Oct. 18, 1879, in his ninetyeth year. He was born in New Jersey, in 1790, and emigrated to Warren County, Ohio, in 1818, shortly afterward removing to Montgomery County, Ohio, where the rest of his life was passed. His ancestors were Holland-Dutch, and both his father and grandfather had fought in the Revolutionary War, on the patriot side. T. W. Vancleve was a soldier in the War of 1812, for which he received a pension. A brother served in the navy in the same war. One of his uncles was killed by Indians in the forest where Cincinnati now stands, and the first white child born in Dayton, Ohio, was his cousin, John Vancleve, a lifelong resident of that place.

Tunis W. Vancleve was a blacksmith by trade, working at it both in New Jersey and Ohio, and until advancing age warned him that his days of active labor were drawing to a close. During his long life he had witnessed many changes—States and Empires had risen and fallen, confederacies organized and overthrown, ocean steamships, railways, telegraphs and telephones had sprung into existence, and the face of the map of the world had been changed by recent discoveries. His first vote had been cast for President Monroe, and he subsequently voted for all the Whig candidates until the formation of the Republican party, with which he acted until his death. He was four times married, his last wife surviving him. He left four children, several grandchildren, thirty-two great-grandchildren and six great-great-grandchildren, all of whom attended a family re-union, at which he presided a short time before his death.

Mr. Simpson's wise counsel and clear, candid judgment have been used effectually in the guidance of municipal affairs, and while holding office he always made his private interests subservient to those of the public. Under his administration as Mayor of Plattsmouth, in which office he served two years, the city was well governed, and prospered accordingly. He was City Clerk from 1875 to 1883, and retired from that office with an honorable record for efficiency and fidelity.

JOHN M. LEIS, a thrifty German-American citizen, who operates a splendid farm of 160 acres in Elmwood Precinct, was born in Hoxel, Prussia, where he lived and worked with his father, who was a farmer and merchant. He educated himself by attending the splendid schools of his native town. At the age of nineteen he undertook to learn the trade of cabinet-maker, which, proving uncongenial to his taste, he and his brother Matthew sailed for America from Bremen, March 27, 1851, landing in New York May 11, 1851. The first years of their life in the New World was passed in various employments in different places. Mr. L. spent two years at labor in a sugar refinery in New York City. He then journeyed in Pennsylvania and Maryland for two or three years, where he worked at farming and in an iron foundry until 1859, when he migrated to Canton, Fulton Co., Ill.

It was in this year, 1859, our subject met and married Miss Kate Vogt, a native of Baden, Germany, born near the Black Forest, where she lived until she was fourteen years old, when, in company with her mother and three brothers and sisters, she came to America, landing in New York in 1852, where she went immediately to work by the week. After his marriage with this lady Mr. L. worked as a stonemason, they living in Illinois for the ensuing twenty years, when in 1876 they came to Nebraska. By hard labor and strict economy they had saved the sum of $900, and with this money and their family they settled on and proceeded to improve their home farm. Their children are: Fannie Louisa, now the wife of Mr. Horn, residing in Wabash, Neb.; John Z., residing in Holt County, Neb.; Stephen, Peter and Charles are living in Holt County, near their brother John; Calvin and the twins, George and Henry, are at home with their parents.

By the thrift and industry peculiar to the people of which our subject is one, he has accumulated a handsome property. In addition to the home farm he owns 160 acres in Holt County, Neb., and in company with his three sons has an ownership of 1,100 acres of land in that county. The improvements on the home farm are not at this date extensive, but those which are made are of the most solid and substantial character, designed with the view of ultimately extending them largely; but the condition and appearance of his farm are not excelled by any in the precinct.

The father of Mr. Leis, John B. Leis, was a farmer and merchant and also hotel-keeper in the mother country; his mother was Anna Mary Proesch. Both parents are dead. They were the parents of five children: Stephen and Catherine are dead; Susannah; John M., our subject, and Mathew. Susannah is in Germany; Mathew is a tailor in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he is conducting a prosperous and lucrative business.

The scholastic education of our subject was entirely in the German language. Upon his arrival in America he applied himself assiduously to the study of the English language, until he has attained a considerable efficiency. He is a student and close observer of events, and as a means of assisting himself he has kept a complete, careful record of events as they have transpired since 1863, adopting a system of making a note daily of the occurrences of that day, and he now possesses a record which is particularly valuable, as it relates in a great measure to local occurrences.

The wife of our subject is a large, portly, good-natured lady, an excellent housekeeper, and a lady who is worthy the respect of all her neighbors. She is a consistent member of the Lutheran Church, and her husband is a member of the Catholic Church. In politics the gentleman is a Republican; he has held no public office except that of Road Supervisor. As an indication of the bent of his mind it will suffice to say that he regularly receives eight newspapers and periodicals, and studies them all very carefully.

ELIAS M. COMPTON. Nebraska has drawn within her borders men from all sections of the United States, and among her citizens the "Ohio man" has acquitted himself in a manner worthy the reputation of the Buckeye State. The subject of this sketch, a native of that State, and at present a resident of Avoca Precinct, was born in Montgomery County, Sept. 23, 1830, and is consequently fast approaching his threescore years.

The Compton family is essentially a good one, and William, the father of our subject, was one of its most honored representatives, who, settling in Montgomery County, Ohio, when beginning his career as a farmer on his own account, there spent the remainder of his life, making for himself a record which his children may look upon with reasonable pride. William Compton was born Feb. 18, 1798. in South Carolina, and after becoming a resident of Ohio, was married to Miss Susanna Frost, of Miami County, that State. The mother of our subject, a most excellent and worthy lady, traces her ancestry to Wales. She was not permitted to spend a long and useful life by the side of her honored husband, she passing away in the prime of life, he living to a ripe old age. They were the parents of seven children, four of whom are living and making their homes mostly in the United States.

The subject of this sketch was reared and educated in his native county, which he left when a little past twenty years of age, going into Miami County, in the same State, where he labored as a carpenter for some years. In Miami County also he was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Jenkins, who was born and reared there, and who was the daughter of Isaac and Mary (Jay) Jenkins. The Jenkins family were Quakers in religious belief, and possessed all the peculiar and praiseworthy characteristics of that peaceable sect. The parents of Mrs. Compton spent the greater part of their lives in Ohio, dying there at an advanced age. Such had been their lives among the people of their community that their names are held in kindly remembrance by a large number of friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. Compton was carefully reared, and received a common-school education, remaining under the parental roof until her marriage. As the wife of our subject she became the mother of nine children, two of whom, a little daughter Ellen, and an infant unnamed, are deceased. Of the survivors the record is as follows: Samuel married Miss Jerusha Grubbs, and is living in Weeping Water, engaged as a brick and stone mason; William is farming in Colorado; Frank and Rollin I. are at home with their parents; Lora J. is the wife of John Fowler, an esteemed citizen of Cass County, whose biography appears elsewhere in this work; Minnie R. is the wife of Frank P. Parker, a farmer of Sarpy County, this State; Ida M. is at home.

Mr. Compton, politically, is a sound Republican, and in religious matters, with his estimable wife, adheres to the doctrines of the United Brethren Church. Upon leaving his native State he was thereafter a resident of Tama County, Iowa, for a period of eighteen years, a part of the time living in Benton County. He came to Avoca Precinct in the spring of 1875, purchasing his present homestead of 160 acres on section 17. His buildings compare favorably with those of the industrious men around him, and he has made for himself the reputation of a peaceable and law-abiding citizen, one who is creditably filling his niche in a community of intelligent people.

HENRY C. CUTLER. Among the prominent and successful farmers and enterprising men within the limits of Cass County, the name of our subject holds a proud place. His handsome home is situated on the west half of section 16, in Greenwood Precinct, and consists of 320 acres, all under a high state of cultivation. He is a husbandman of no small ability, keeps his home in the best condition, and makes agriculture a science. This gentleman was born in Cass County, Neb., Aug. 16, 1864, and as a specimen of a native-born Nebraskian, he does his native State full honor. He is the son of Martin B. Cutler, who was born in Cayuga County, N. Y., Dec. 2, 1835. He came to Nebraska thirty-three years ago, when he was twenty years old, and settled on a farm in Greenwood Precinct. He purchased one-half of section 16 from the State ten years ago, when he moved onto it.

The father of our subject was married to Miss Caroline McHerron, April 12, 1858. This lady was born in Keokuk County, Iowa, in 1841. They were the parents of two children—George H. and Henry C. George H. was born June 24, 1860, in Cass County, Neb. The father died at the age of fifty-three. Henry C. Cutler was married, Nov. 14, 1888, to Miss Lillian Walker, a daughter of George Walker, residing on section 8, in Greenwood Precinct. Her father came to Nebraska in 1887, from Sidney, Fremont Co., Iowa, where Miss Lillian was born, and settled on their present homestead. The grandmother of our subject, Mrs. Axenia Cutler, was born Dec. 17, 1810, in Cayuga County, N. Y., and was the wife of L. H. Cutler, who was born in Guilford, Vt., Aug. 20, 1805, where he was engaged in the mercantile business until the time of his death. She was the mother of six children, named: Martha R., Axenia; Martin B., the father of our subject; Elizabeth R., Charles J. and Frank L.

The father of our subject, Martin B. Cutler, was married to Miss Gertrude Border in 1877. She now survives him, and lives in the village of Greenwood. Our subject's father enlisted for a period of nine months for service against the Indians in the West. At the expiration of this term of service he organized a company of scouts, of which he was elected First Lieutenant. After his discharge from this service, and on his return home, he was elected to the office of Sheriff of Cass County, which he filled most acceptably for a period of four years. After this he retired to his farm, where he died March 29, 1885. Our subject and brother George H. went into the business of raising thoroughbred cattle, horses and hogs, on what is well known throughout the northwestern part of the county as the "Highland Stock Farm."

A tour of inspection of the farm of our subject and his brother, cannot fail to be of interest to the admirer of thoroughbred stock, of the different species handled by these gentlemen. The horses in comfortably designed and roomy box-stalls, the cattle sleek and contented in their quarters, and the hogs with their various fine points displayed to the best advantage, in their clean, well-lighted pens, convey an idea of comfort and animal contentment seldom witnessed. These same animals, when roaming over the pastures, present a scene calculated to inspire the brush of a Rosa Bonheur. The owners of these fine animals possess a complete knowledge of the business in which they are engaged; they bring to it science and the skill derived from their own experience, as well as availing themselves of the knowledge gained by years of patient study and practice by men who have grown old and gray in its pursuit. The result is they have a stock farm second to none in value in the West.

Our subject and his brother George received a first-class education, first in the common schools in the neighborhood, and afterward attending the High School in Plattsburgh, where they were graduated with honors, since which time they have been engaged in active business. George is in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, as locomotive engineer, having entered their service since the time of the great strike, which occurred Feb. 22, 1888.

In his domestic relations our subject is an exceptionally well-favored man. He has just brought to his home a handsome young wife, a splendidly formed, handsome, blonde lady, of medium height. She is well educated and refined, and is capable of adorning any position in life in which she may be placed. In securing this lady for a life partnership our subject has undoubtedly made the most successful venture of his life, and in the coming years, when time has tried their affection, as fire tries pure gold, he can turn his thoughts backward, and say that the 14th of November, 1888, was the most fortunate day of his life. His grandmother, who is still living, hale and hearty, is one of the representative ladies of the old school. No one can be in her presence without feeling the beneficent influence of her kindly and happy disposition. The father partook largely of the characteristics of his mother, and during his lifetime intercourse with him was a benefit to all his friends. George H. Cutler was married to Miss Annie Hansen, of Cass County, Dec. 25, 1880.

— — — — —

DR. URBAN H. NORRIS, physician and surgeon, and an esteemed resident of Greenwood, was born near Findlay, Ohio, and grew up on a farm on which his father had settled in 1832. His early life, in common with other farmers' sons of that time, was spent alternately working and attending the common schools in the town of Findlay, which were unusually good. His parents had a proper conception of the value of a good education, and as a consequence insisted that our subject should have every facility within their reach for acquiring complete and thoroughgoing instruction. At the age of fourteen he entered the High School in Findlay, from which he was graduated with honors. At a very early period in life he conceived the idea of becoming a physician and surgeon, and devoted all his energies to acquiring a knowledge which would facilitate his attaining to the object of his ambition.

The mother of our subject died, and it almost broke the hearts of her children and husband; the latter was getting well along in years and thought a change to the golden South would be beneficial to his health. In pursuance of this decision, he removed with his entire family soon after the mother's death to Southwestern Kansas. After living there several months he went to Oskaloosa, Iowa, where our subject began studying for the medical profession under the censorship of Dr. Crowder. After studying with the Doctor for three years, at the age of twenty he entered the University of Iowa, at Iowa City, attending one course of lectures. He began the practice of medicine with his former preceptor, where he remained a period of two years. At the expiration of this time he removed to Ashland, Neb., and completed his studies under the direction of Dr. Mansfield, and finally, as a completion and rounding out of a full course, he attended the Medical College at Omaha, where he attained a high position in his class, and was graduated in the spring of 1882.

The long practical experience of our subject, capped by the thorough course of his study at Western medical colleges, insured his immediate success upon coming to Greenwood in 1880. He is as well and favorably known as any physician in Southeastern Nebraska, and his practice has been crowned with unusually successful results. He is a self-made man, having paid his own way through the various colleges, and his whole expenses while studying under his preceptors, by the fruits of his own labor. His practice engages his entire attention, and he devotes himself most assiduously to his loved profession, studying all the latest literature pertaining to his chosen walk in life, losing no opportunity of informing himself of the best methods and remedies, and in all ways keeping thoroughly abreast of the times.

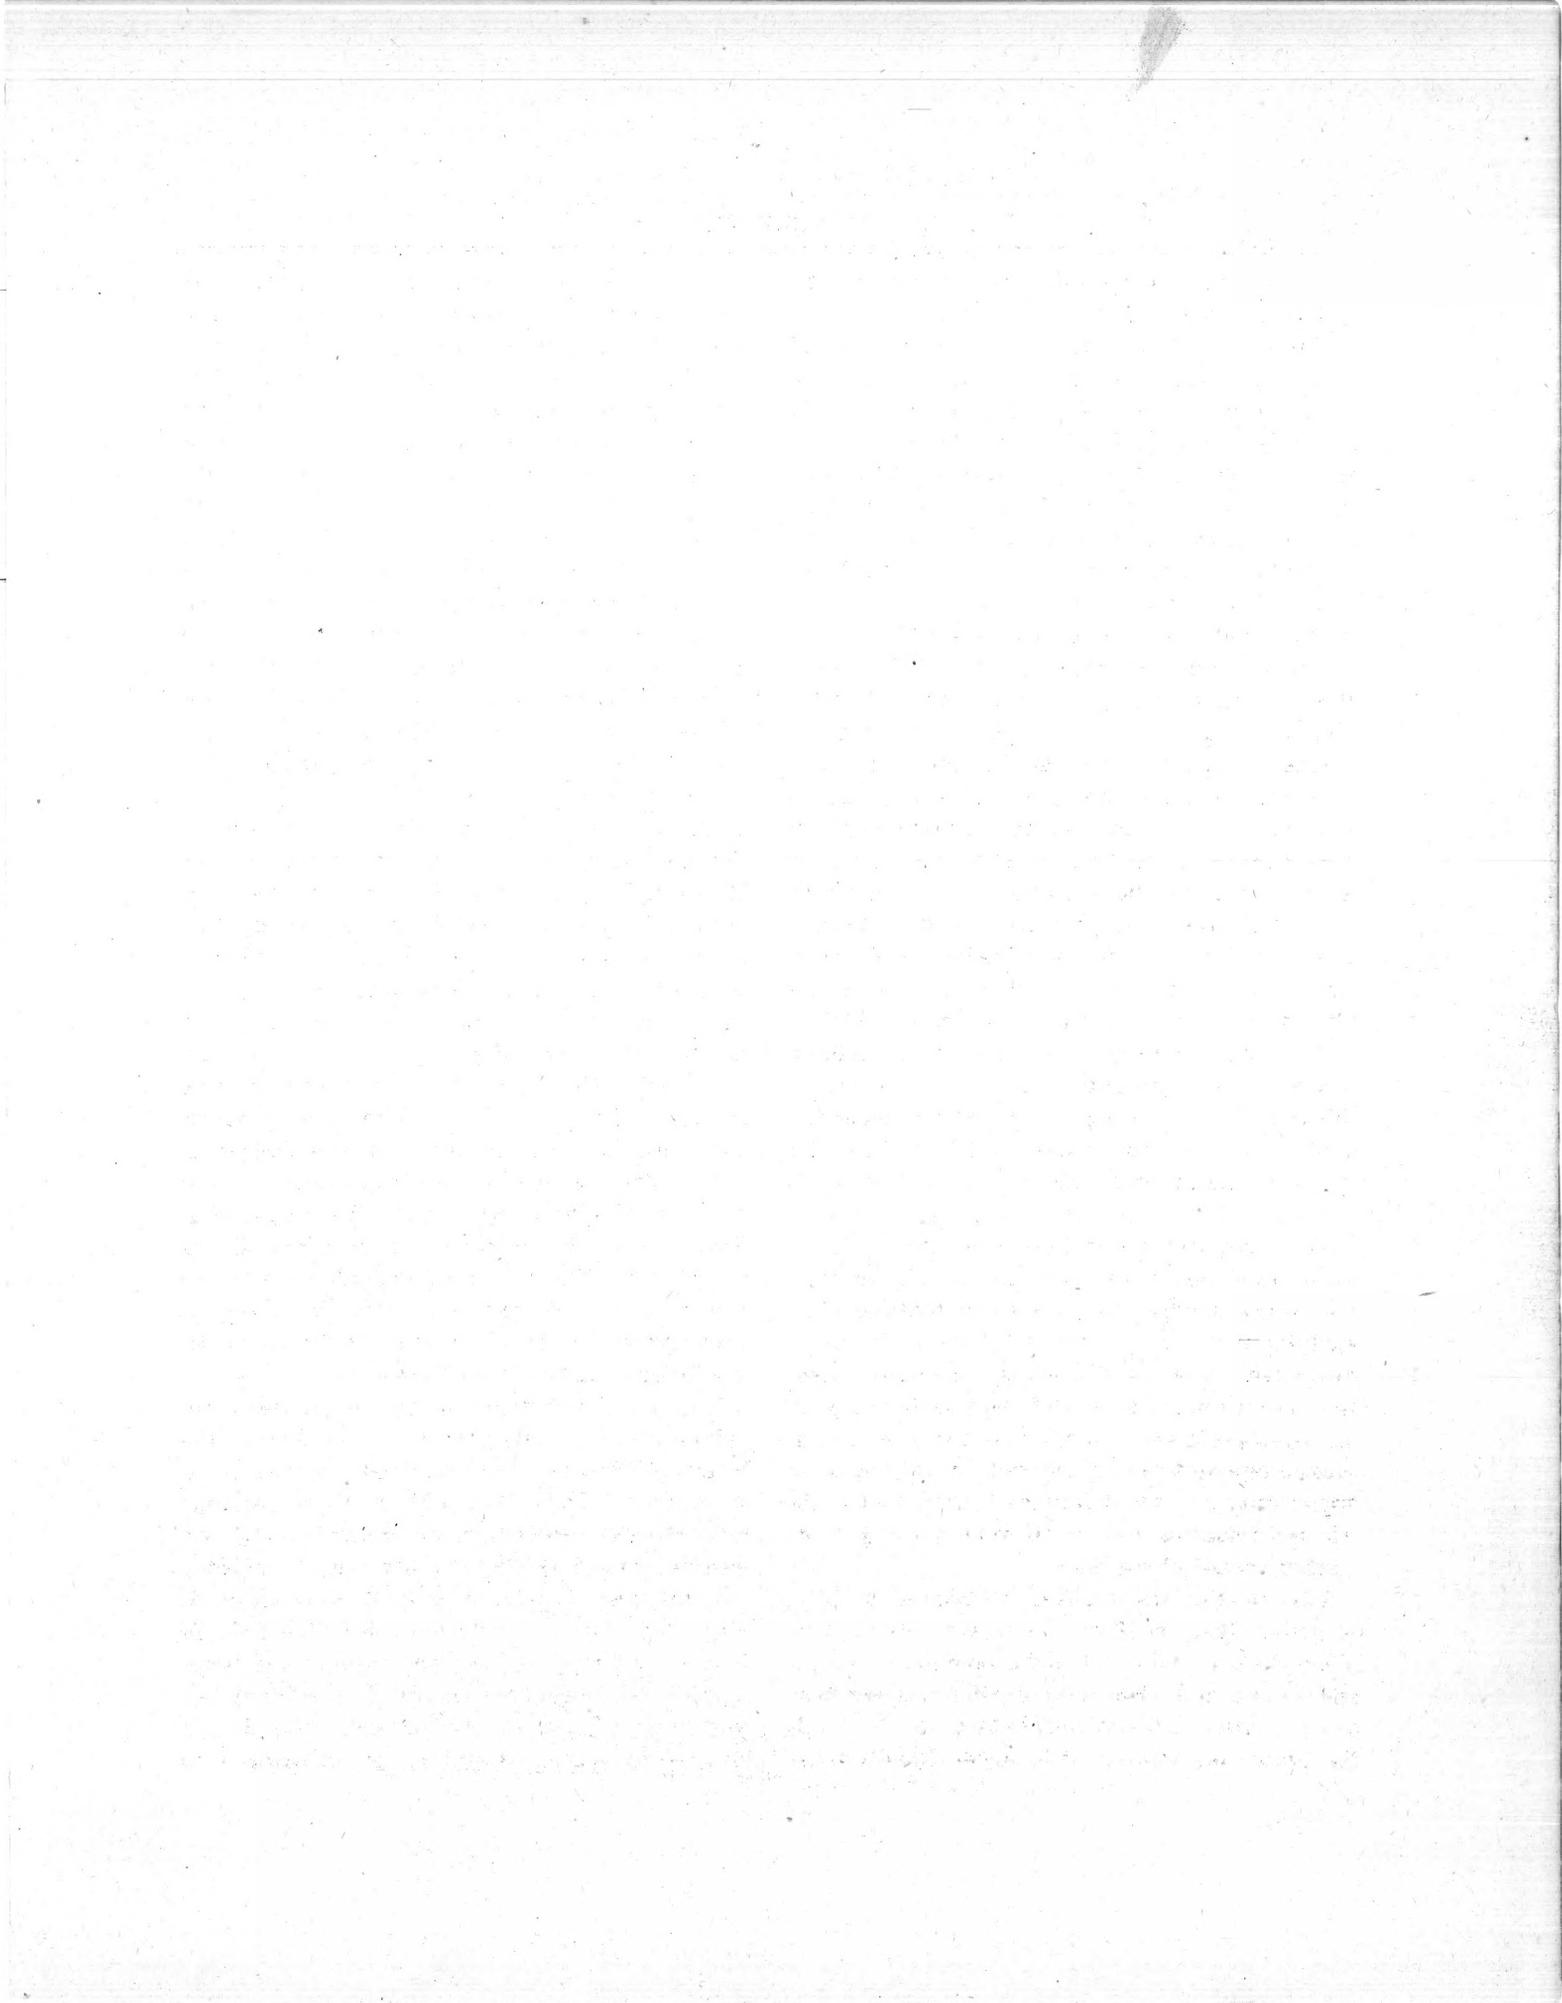

The Doctor was married in Kansas to Miss Angeline Bell, in 1882. This lady was born in Knox County, Ohio, and is the daughter of Albert and Areboa Bell. Her home in Ohio was near that of our subject in his early days, and in his youth the Doctor was smitten with one of Cupid's darts, and after preparing himself for a life of usefulness, he took to his heart his first love, and now the Doctor and his lovable wife are happy and content in their new and elegant home, and they, in company with their two children, Ethel M. and Ralph W., present a picture of contentment that is seldom beheld. During the summer of 1885 the Doctor built a commodious residence, two full stories high, located on one of the most beautiful building sites in Greenwood. The whole house is most conveniently arranged, possessing all the modern improvements which can add to the comfort and well-being of his little family. His office and laboratory, complete in all the equipments for the successful practice of his profession, is in a wing of his residence. His practice is very satisfactory, and is extending daily.

Our subject's father was John Norris, born in Wayne County, Ohio; his mother was Mary Lavina Hartman, born in Richland County, in the same State. The father is now residing in Dallas, Tex., and is the proprietor of a large cattle ranch in Denton County, that State. He has attained the ripe old age of eighty-six years, and is still active and hearty. The mother died Sept. 2, 1875, aged fifty-one years. The Doctor is the youngest of three children. The other two children were Ambrose and Semilda. His brother Ambrose resides in Dallas, Tex., as does also his sister Semilda, now Mrs. Alfred Alerd, and is the mother of two children. Grandfather Norris was born in England, as was his wife. The maternal grandfather and grandmother of our subject were born in Germany. Prof. Norris, of the University of Pennsylvania, is a distant relative of the Doctor.

The neighbors of the Doctor have succeeded in inducing him to serve them as a member of the Board of Education of Greenwood, for a period of three years. He is also a member of the Nebraska State Medical Association, and is a very prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, being connected with the local lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Greenwood. He is also a member of Greenwood Lodge, I. O. O. F. In politics he is a thorough-going Republican.

While the Doctor has succeeded in working his way up to the position he now holds, it is due to his great force of character and his disposition to

ST JOHN THE BAPTIST CHURCH AND SCHOOL, OAK ST. BETWEEN 5TH & 6TH, PLATTSMOUTH, NEB.
Rev. T. J. Carney, Pastor

attain to the highest in the profession to which he is giving his time, life and might to attain. He is a gentleman of more than ordinary ability, and his success professionally and socially may be attributed to his strictly straightforward, upright life. He is genial, generous and public spirited, the poor among his patients being treated as efficiently and with as much courtesy as the rich. He is a citizen that Greenwood may well be proud to own.

REV. T. J. CARNEY, the Pastor in charge of St. John the Baptist's Catholic Church of Plattsmouth, is too widely and favorably known to need an introduction to the readers of this volume, nevertheless, they may appreciate the effort to present succinctly the chief points of interest in his life. He was born in County Roscommon, Ireland, Dec. 25, 1851, and was brought up principally in New York State. He came to the United States when quite young with his parents, Patrick and Bridget (McDonough) Carney. They are both living, and still residents of the State of New York. His education was received in the Seminary of Our Lady of Angels at Niagara, N. Y., from which he was graduated in the year 1880, and was ordained to the priesthood.

The first work of our subject after taking holy orders was the mission at West Point, Neb., where he remained as an assistant for about one month, after which he was transferred to Norfolk, Madison Co., Neb., to take charge of the mission there, having five churches in his care, which he continued to hold until 1884, when he went to Plattsmouth, since which time he has had full charge here, also having charge of the church near Louisville, Neb.

The Plattsmouth Mission was established in 1861, and during the war period a small brick church was erected on South Hill. This building, although quite small, was nevertheless large enough for all requirements for several years, but under the constant, vigilant care of its several pastors, the society has grown and flourished in a most gratifying manner. In 1875 the present handsome structure was erected upon a commanding site on Oak street, between Fifth and Sixth.

An important feature of the work as it has grown under the care of Father Carney is that connected with the schools. In the year 1887 a fine brick school building was put up; this stands 50x55 feet, and is two stories in height. It was opened in September, 1888, and given in charge of the Dominican Sisters, with 200 children enrolled. There are in all about eighty families connected with the church, and under the pastoral care of our subject.

Father Carney is a man of culture and education, an able and popular clergyman, enthusiastic to a degree, and very popular. He is very highly esteemed by the members of his flock and in the community at large, taking an active interest in all matters that look to the advancement of the religious, as well as general interests of the people.

As showing what has been accomplished by this zealous priest during his comparatively short residence in Plattsmouth, we give in this connection an excellent view of the church and the fine brick school-house, erected through his efforts, and also the parsonage.

JACOB TRITSCH. There was added to the population of Nebraska Territory, in 1866, the subject of this sketch, with his brother, his stepfather, his mother, and besides other members of the family, one Frederick Guenther, the whole making quite a company with their outfit of two wagons and seven horses. It was the month of January, and they were eighteen days on the journey from Pekin, Ill. They had been delayed two days by a snowstorm. They generally were fortunate enough to be in the vicinity of a town when night overtook them, but otherwise when not able to put up at a hotel, were given shelter overnight in a primitive dwelling of some settler who had preceded them to this region. They brought with them their household goods, a stock of provisions, and a limited number of farming implements.

The Tritsch family took up their residence on a tract of land in Plattsmouth Precinct, and our subject, who was then a youth of seventeen years, amid pioneer scenes was reared to sturdy manhood, and there were developed in him those qualities which have resulted in making him one of the most industrious and reliable men of his county. His industry and economy have also served to gather about him a snug property, together with all the comforts of life. He is now the owner of a good farm in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, embracing 240 acres of land on section 24. This he built up from the uncultivated soil, fenced the fields, planted groves and fruit trees, erected the necessary buildings, and is now quite largely engaged in stock-raising.

The early home of our subject was in Germany, and his birth took place June 17, 1849. His father, Philip Tritsch, died in his native Germany, and the mother two years later emigrated with her little family of two sons and a daughter to America. Jacob was then a lad nine years of age. He still remembers many of the incidents of preparation and the two weeks' voyage across the Atlantic, at the expiration of which they arrived safely in New York City. Thence they proceeded at once to Tazewell County, Ill., settling on land in the vicinity of Pekin, where the mother labored industriously to keep her children together; in due time she married again, and became the wife of Philip Horn, of that county.

Mr. Tritsch had attended school considerably in his native Germany, but after coming to America his education was mostly confined to a few weeks during the winter season. He attained his majority in Plattsmouth Precinct, then, having a desire to revisit the scenes of his younger years in Illinois, returned to Tazewell County, and remained there one season. Upon coming back to Nebraska, he concluded to locate in this county, and of this has accordingly been a resident since 1872. At the age of twenty-three years he was married, in Illinois, Jan. 18, 1872, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas and Margaret (Urich) Volk, of Tazewell County, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Volk were natives of Germany, whence they emigrated to America early in life, settling in Illinois, where they still live.

Mrs. Tritsch was born Feb. 2, 1852, and remained under the parental roof until her marriage, receiving a fair education in the common schools. The young people began life together on a tract of rented land in Plattsmouth Precinct, whence they removed to their present home about 1875. This had undergone but little improvement at the time of their taking possession, and the fact that the substantial buildings with their appurtenances have been the result of the labors and industry of our subject, is sufficient proof that he has spent few idle hours since coming here. When we reflect that he was dependent upon his own resources from the start, too much credit cannot be given him for the good judgment which has marked his operations, he having been wise in his investments, and in his farming operations seeming to have the faculty of utilizing every acre, so that none have been allowed to run to waste.

Upon becoming a naturalized citizen and a voter Mr. Tritsch allied himself with the Democratic party, to which he has since given his undivided support. He has been no unimportant factor among the counsels of his fellow-citizens, and has served with credit in various positions of trust and responsibility. He is now closing his fifth term as Assessor of Eight Mile Grove Precinct. Both he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the German Lutheran Church. They have three children, all sons: Michael, Jacob and Philip, the eldest sixteen years of age and the youngest eleven.

RICHARD LEWIS is an old settler and prosperous farmer, owning and operating over 480 acres of land in Eight Mile Grove Precinct. His residence is located on section 32. He was born in Pennsylvania, Dec. 24, 1818. When he was five years old his parents migrated with their family to Monongalia County, W. Va., which was at that time a comparatively new country, and as a consequence the family encountered all the troubles and privations incident to the life of the pioneer. His opportunities for securing an education were limited to the subscription schools of the time, and having a natural inclination to study, he improved his opportunities to the fullest extent, and, since he has attained to years of manhood, he has lost no opportunity of adding to his store of knowledge,

Our subject is the son of Benjamin and Elizabeth

Lewis; both parents were born in Maryland. His paternal ancestors were English, and those on the mother's side were of German descent. His parents had a large number of children, of whom only four survive, named as follows: Richard; Abraham, who resides in West Virginia; John, who lives in Tipton Precinct, Cass County, and Elizabeth, now Mrs. Cline, who resides in Ohio. Our subject was married, April 7, 1846, to Margaret Wells, a native of West Virginia. She is the daughter of Richard and Nancy Wells. By this union there has been a family of eight children, four sons and four daughters, six of whom are living, namely: Simon, Sanford C., Gilly, Adeline, Gertrude and George. Those deceased are Rebecca and John. Simon resides in Lincoln; Sanford C. resides in Hayes County, this State; Gilly is now the wife of Benjamin Ward, and resides in Colorado; Adeline is the wife of M. L. Thomas, the editor of the Dundy County Pioneer, at Benkleman, Neb.; Gertrude is the wife of George Laverty, and resides in McCook, Neb.; George also resides in McCook.

After the marriage of our subject he settled in Virginia, where he farmed for many years. In 1868 he migrated to Cass County with his family, taking a steamer at Wheeling, coming down the Ohio to its confluence with the Mississippi, thence up the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers as far as Platts-mouth. The first year he was in Nebraska he rented land. He then purchased eighty acres in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, settled on it, and began its improvement, in regular pioneer style. The land had twenty-seven acres plowed, which was all the improvement he had to begin on. By energy, perseverance and good management, he has brought it up to a good state of cultivation. He now owns 480 acres of good land, which he has procured by purchase from time to time, and which is second to none in value in the county.

The improvements which our subject has made on his farm are very substantial in their character, and are in accordance with a well-defined plan. The barns and various other buildings are well located and conveniently arranged for the purposes for which they were intended. His dwelling-house is finely located, and contains all the conveniences obtainable. It is roomy and nicely furnished. He has planted a good orchard, which is a source of handsome profit, and presents a fine appearance.

The wife of our subject during her life was an able coadjutor to her husband in all his efforts and plans, and studied his interests carefully, and much of his success is due to her wise counsels and valuable assistance, which she cheerfully rendered to the day of her death, which occurred Sept. 7, 1873. She left behind her a wealth of love and affection, and a large circle of loving friends and acquaintances. The place she filled in the home circle can never be fully supplied. Her memory will ever be a green spot in the lives of her husband and children. She was identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and endeavored to live what she thought to be the earnest, consistent life of a Christian.

When Mr. Lewis settled in Nebraska he was without means or any influential friends. He could look to no one for assistance, and depended entirely on his own energy and perseverance for success. How well he has accomplished his purpose is manifested by the present condition in which he finds himself. He is kind-hearted and generous to a fault. He is public-spirited, thinking that the greatest good for the greatest number should be the prevailing sentiment among the people. He is always found heartily supporting any measure that may be proposed which will have that result, oftentimes to his serious inconvenience. In politics he is a Democrat, but has filled no public office except a position on the School Board, where he felt that his services would be of permanent value.

HENRY D. BARR is a valued citizen of Weeping Water (a resident of the First Ward), where he is engaged in business as a fire insurance and real-estate agent, and as collector and conveyancer, and holds the offices of Justice of the Peace and Notary Public.

Mr. Barr was born in Greene County, Ohio, July 15, 1849. His father, John W. Barr, was born in Virginia or Pennsylvania, and went to Ohio when a young man, and as a pioneer of Allen County, hewed out a farm for himself in the wilderness. He always lived in that part of the country after his removal to it until death called him hence, in 1875. He was an upright, conscientious man, and a consistent member of the Baptist Church, as was also his good wife, whose maiden name was Phoebe Snodgrass. She was the mother of eight children, all of whom lived to maturity, namely: John C., Joseph M., James V. B., Robert H., Henry D., Elizabeth, Minerva J. and Sally A. The four oldest boys served in the army, and two of them never came back alive. Robert H. was killed while gallantly fighting at Atlanta, Ga.; Joseph was wounded at Harper's Ferry, Va., and was transferred to the invalid corps at Columbus, Ohio, in Camp Chase, and there died from the effects of his wound April 5, 1864. Sally married C. C. Hadsell, of Waterloo, Ind., and they are now living there; Minerva is in Waterloo, Ind.; John C. is in Ottawa, Ohio; James lives at Creston, Iowa, where he is engaged in the mercantile business; Elizabeth died in Allen County, Ohio. The mother of this family was born in Virginia in 1812, and accompanied her father, Daniel S. Snodgrass, to Ohio when young, and there lived until her marriage. She died in Weeping Water, A. S., 28, 1888.

The subject of this sketch was but a babe when his parents moved to Allen County, and he was there reared amid pioneer influences. In 1861 he left the parental home and entered the printing-office of the Anglicize County Democrat, serving an apprenticeship of one year; from there he went to Lima, Ohio, and again entered a printing office, that of the Gazette, and was employed there a year and a half. In 1863 he was called home to stay with his parents, his older brothers having joined the army. He assisted in the management of the old homestead until 1865, when, the war being over, two of his brothers came back and relieved him from further duty. Thus gaining a thorough, practical knowledge of the art preservative, he next went into the office of the Allen County Democrat. Eighteen months later he was elected Assessor of his home ward, being then but twenty-five or twenty-six years of age. He discharged the onerous duties of that responsible office in a manner to call forth the warm praise of his fellow-citizens.

He subsequently engaged in teaching, a vocation to which he was well adapted both by temperament and education. At one time he was appointed delinquent tax collector for the city of Lima, which office he filled satisfactorily. After his term of office expired he came West, abandoning the profession of teacher, he having taught nine terms. He also read law one year with Judge McBride. When he first came to Cass County he stopped in Centre Precinct for a few months, and then spent the following winter in Iowa. He came back in the fall of 1880, and engaged on various papers, and was local writer and editor of the Republican, of Weeping Water, for a year, and he was also on the staff of the Cass County Eagle for two or three years. He subsequently went to Talmage and purchased the Tribune, of which paper he was editor and publisher until the spring of 1885. He then returned to this place, and was engaged on the Republican for a year. He was thus engaged when he received the appointment of Justice of the Peace, and resigned his connection with the paper to accept it, having been appointed to fill an unexpired term. In the fall of 1887, so satisfactory was his administration of the affairs of his office, he was elected for a full term, and qualified Jan. 1, 1888.

Mr. Barr is a candid, sincere man, of unblemished character, whose intelligent, well-informed mind amply fits him for any station to which he may be called. He is influential in local politics and a standard bearer of the Republican party of Cass County. Socially, Mr. Barr belongs to the I. O. O. F., Prairie Lodge No. 25, also the Daughters of Rebecca, Woodland Lodge, at Weeping Water.

ADAM HILD, of Eight Mile Grove Precinct, presents a picture of the typical well-to-do German farmer and stock-raiser, with his comfortable home and fat cattle and horses, and all the other substantial surroundings brought about by his thrift and industry. His property comprises 240 acres on section 35, and eighty acres on section 36, with good buildings, fruit and shade trees, the necessary farm machinery, and the various comforts and conveniences which he has gradually added to the estate from year to year. A man peaceable and law-abiding, he is one who attends strictly to his own concerns, and one in whom his neighbors have entire confidence.

Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, was the native place of our subject, where his birth occurred July 6, 1844. When a little lad six years of age his parents, George and Margaret (Schaffer) Hild, who were also of pure German birth and ancestry, decided to emigrate with their little family to the United States. Taking passage on a sailing-vessel at Havre, they landed safely in New York City after a long ocean voyage of sixty-seven days. Thence they repaired to the vicinity of Rochester, where they lived about one year, and at the expiration of that time set their faces westward, resolving to cast their lot among the pioneer settlers of Tazewell County, Ill. The father rented a tract of land in that county, where he lived and labored until his death, which occurred in March, 1881, when he was about eighty-three years of age. The mother survived her husband six years, her death taking place Jan. 27, 1887, in Tazewell County, Ill.

To the parents of our subject there were born six children: George and Philip remain residents of Tazewell County, Ill.; Elizabeth died when thirty-five years old; Adam, our subject, was the fourth of the family; Michael lives in Tazewell County, and Charlotte is dead. Adam, like his brothers and sisters, received but a limited education, and at an early age was trained to habits of industry and economy. He was fond of reading, and thus employed his leisure hours, keeping himself well informed upon topics of general interest. Nothing delighted him better than to watch the growing crops, and no occupation pleased him better than that of the husbandman. His ambition was to have a farm of his own, and to this end he labored from early manhood. While a resident of Tazewell County, Ill., he was married, Feb. 25, 1869, to Miss Elizabeth C. Reeg, a native of his own country, born also in Hesse-Darmstadt, Feb. 2, 1850. The parents of Mrs. Hild were Jacob John and Mary M. (Kllinger) Reeg, who were natives of Germany, and died in that country. Mrs. Hild was only fourteen days crossing the Atlantic, which at that time was considered quite rapid transit. She was the third child of her parents, whose family consisted of five children, namely: Maggie Elizabeth, now deceased; Anna M, the wife of Leonard Trautman, of Germany; Mrs. Hild; Sophia, deceased; and Elizabeth, the wife of Michael Schwarzfischer, of this county.

To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born nine children, namely: Michael, at home; Elizabeth and Adam, deceased; Ferdinand J., George M., Philip A., Frederick L., Anna C. and Emma L. After his marriage Mr. Hild continued farming in Tazewell County, Ill., until the spring of 1883, when he decided to seek the farther West. He is the owner of 320 acres of land, which comprises one of the finest farms in Eight Mile Grove Precinct. He has been the architect of his own fortune, and was fortunate in the selection of a wife and helpmate, Mrs. Hild having proved herself fully as industrious and energetic as he. Politically, our subject votes the Democratic ticket.

JACOB KUNZMANN, now the owner of 400 broad acres of land in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, landed in Plattsmouth, this county, in July, 1867, with a capital of ten cents in his pocket. From that modest beginning and by years of plodding industry, with the exercise of the most careful economy, he has accumulated a snug fortune, and presents an admirable illustration of the results of energy and perseverance. He is numbered among the leading stock-raisers in this part of the county, and has his homestead on section 8, a place which, with all its appurtenances, invariably attracts the admiring attention of the passing traveler. It has taken years of labor and thousands of dollars to bring the property to its present condition, but the owner and projector of this fine estate must certainly feel that his labors have been richly rewarded.

The enterprising German citizen is found all over the United States where thrift and prosperity abound, and to him is this great commonwealth largely indebted for the development of her best resources. The subject of this sketch has been in nowise behind his countrymen, and has contributed his full quota to their labors and their fame. A native of the Grand Duchy of Baden, he was born on the 22d of August, 1833, and is the son of Christian and Eve Kunzmann, who spent their lives in Germany; their family consisted of five children. Jacob spent his boyhood and youth like the others, a portion of the time in school, receiving a practical education in his native tongue. Later he served an apprenticeship at the trade of shoemaker, at which he worked for a period of seven years. After that he was variously occupied until coming to the United States.

Mr. Kunzmann remained a single man until twenty-eight years of age, and was then married, Sept. 1, 1861, to Miss Madalena Gebhart, a native of his own Province, and who was born Feb. 2, 1837. Mrs. Kunzmann was orphaned by the death of both parents when a young child, and was reared by her maternal aunt. Our subject and his wife continued to live in the Fatherland until the spring of 1867, then decided to emigrate to America. Securing passage on an ocean steamer at Bremen, they landed in New York City after a voyage of thirteen days, and making their way directly across the Mississippi, came to this county, within whose limits they have since lived.

Mr. Kunzmann was a resident of Plattsmouth the first four years after coming to America, and employed himself at whatever he could find to do. By the most rigid economy and self-denial on the part of both himself and his estimable wife, they were in the fall of 1877 enabled to settle upon their present farm. This was but little removed from its primitive condition, and our subject worked early and late to develop his land and bring the estate to its present condition. He has been remarkably prosperous, and is now enabled to rest upon his oars and view with satisfaction the result of his arduous labors.

Four children came to bless the union of our subject and his estimable wife, the eldest of whom, a son, William, is living at home; Emma became the wife of Edward Herman, and they live in Frontier County, this State; Joseph and Charles continue under the home roof. Mr. and Mrs. K. are members in good standing of the German Lutheran Church, and are held in the highest respect by their neighbors and fellow-citizens. Mr. K., politically, exercises the right of an independent American citizen, aiming to support the men whom he considers best qualified for office, irrespective of party.

J W. PITTMAN, who stands prominently among the solid men of Cass County, can justly be classed with the pioneers of the State, having spent thirty years of his life west of the Missouri River. In 1859 he pre-empted a tract of land in Rock Bluff Precinct, but did not undertake its improvement, preferring to go to Nebraska City, where he engaged in freighting across the plains on his own account, continuing thus engaged for nine years. His route was from the Missouri River to Denver, and he visited at different times all the places of note between the river and the mountains. He also went into Montana Territory, and in 1862 and 1863 visited Virginia City, when the greatest excitement prevailed in the mining regions of that part of the country on account of the discovery of gold. Mr. Pittman invested in mines and operated two at that time, but his ventures were not successful, though he lost nothing pecuniarily. His experiences of frontier life have been many and startling, and had we space to rehearse them they would prove most entertaining reading. Mr. Pittman is well acquainted throughout this part of the United States, having always been the same, genial, open-hearted gentleman he now is, making friends of all chance acquaintances, and always retaining their regard and esteem. In 1867, deciding to permanently establish himself in a home of his own, our subject located on a new farm of 160 acres on section 15, Liberty Precinct, which he now occupies. He has since then added to his landed possessions, and is now the proprietor of 560 acres on section 15, eighty acres on section 10, and has a six-acre tract of timber on section 4. His farm is well watered, having running water on every eighty acres, and it is under good improvement. He has it heavily stocked, and pays especial attention to stock raising and feeding, that branch of his business being very lucrative. He is considered one of the founders of Cass County's present prosperity, as since settling here he has been intimately connected with its growth and development, having contributed liberally toward the advancement of its interests. He has attained his present position by the exercise of his many natural gifts, among which are energy, perseverance, and good financial judgment. On his arrival in Nebraska he was not only a poor man, but was heavily in debt, having met with reverses while in the mercantile business in Iowa. He has since paid up his indebtedness, dollar for dollar, and has a large balance in his exchequer. Meanwhile, besides building up a fine property, he has built up a good name for himself, which, as Scripture saith, "is better to be chosen than great riches."

We will now turn back in the history of our subject, and give a brief review of his early life. He was born on the 25th of March, 1834, in Harrison County, Ind. (For parental history see sketch of Andrew Pittman.) Our subject is the third son and fourth child born of the first marriage of his father. He was reared in his native county, and after attending its common school for awhile, was sent to the university at Hartsville, where he was a student for several years. After attaining his majority our subject went to Iowa, and supported himself by teaching school and selling dry-goods in Weston, a small town in Marion County. He remained there until he became insolvent, then came to Nebraska to recruit, and finally liquidated all debts, as before mentioned.

Mr. Pittman was united in marriage, in Marion County, Iowa, to Miss Lydia A. Goodwin. She was born in Madison County, Ind., March 15, 1840. Her parents, Samuel and Susan (Beange) Goodwin, were natives of South Carolina, but moved to Indiana when quite young, and were afterward married in that State. Mr. Goodwin was a farmer and school teacher by occupation, and followed that business in Indiana until his death, which occurred in 1850. Mrs. Goodwin subsequently married again, becoming the wife of Mr. James Baley. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Baley removed to Iowa, then to Nebraska, locating first in Cass County, removing thence to Nebraska City, where Mrs. Baley died in November, 1883, in the sixty-fourth year of her age. Mrs. Pittman remained with her mother until her marriage with our subject, receiving a good common-school education and thorough instruction in household duties. To our subject and his wife have been born nine children, two of whom, David J. and Stella, died when about two years of age. Of the seven living children, Arelia A. is the wife of J. D. Bramblet, a farmer of Gage County; Melissa J., a talented artist, lives at home; Hattie J. married George L. Schryder, of Weeping Water Precinct; Charles L., James S., Edward A. and Berdie D. are at home.

Politically, Mr. Pittman is a sound Democrat, believing that within that party lie the principles that are the safest guides for our National Government.

WALTER MUTZ may successfully lay claim to the honor of being one of the pioneers of Cass County, where he came with his parents in 1856. He now resides on a well-cultivated farm of 120 acres, located on section 14, Mt. Pleasant Precinct. He was born in Indiana, Jan. 24, 1852. His parents lived in that State until he was about three years old, when the family removed to Mills County, Iowa, where they resided for one year, when they continued their journey to Cass County, Neb., where they settled on a tract of wild land in what is now known as Rock Bluff Precinct, in Eight Mile Grove. At that day neighbors were few and widely scattered, and in common with the other early settlers of the county, they had their full share of the troubles and trials incident to the life of a Nebraska pioneer. The father, John Mutz, now lives in Nemaha County, Neb., with his aged wife, Phoebe, where they removed from Rock Bluff Precinct several years ago. The parents of Mr. Mutz were natives of Pennsylvania; his paternal ancestors were German.

Our subject is one of a family of eight children; George W., Austin C.; Walter, our subject; William, Otto, Albert, Nettie and Hattie. George W. resides at Plattsmouth, Neb.; Austin C. resides in Nemaha County, near his parents; William resides in Dakota County, Neb.; Otto resides in Keya Paha County, Neb.; Albert resides in Otoe County; Nettie is the wife of John Majors, and now living at McCook, Neb.; Hattie is the wife of A. T. Stewart, and resides at Omaha. The entire family are classed among the very first and representative pioneers of the State.

Our subject having been a resident of Cass County since he was three years old, has seen the country develop from a wild, cheerless waste to its present prosperous condition, and without drawing too heavily on imagination, he may be considered to all intents and purposes a native to the manner born. Possessing a fair education, he was engaged as a teacher for three terms. With this exception his entire life has been devoted to farming, in which he has proved eminently successful, bringing a rare degree of skill and intelligence to the business, and ingeniously bringing everything to bear that could in any manner contribute to his advantage and success.

Mr. Mutz was married, Dec. 29, 1876, to Martha Hall, the daughter of the Hon. James Hall, a resident of Mt. Pleasant Precinct. This couple have become the parents of six very intelligent and interesting children. They are named: Jessie F., Guy R., Katie E., Jay D., John G., and an infant son, Harrison H. He has a large conception of the value of a thorough education, and he is sparing no effort to afford his children such advantages as the country affords, to fit themselves to fill exalted positions in life, with honor and profit, and by giving them these facilities he gives them that which will always be of value, and in the various mutations of life cannot be lost.

The improvements our subject has put upon his home farm are composed of very substantial buildings, especially designed for the care and economical handling of the stock and the various crops grown on the farm. His residence is neatly and tastefully designed, and is fitted with the latest appliances to reduce the household cares to the minimum, as he feels that it is but due to his good wife that she should have everything obtainable to make her household work, which at best is always heavy, as light as possible.

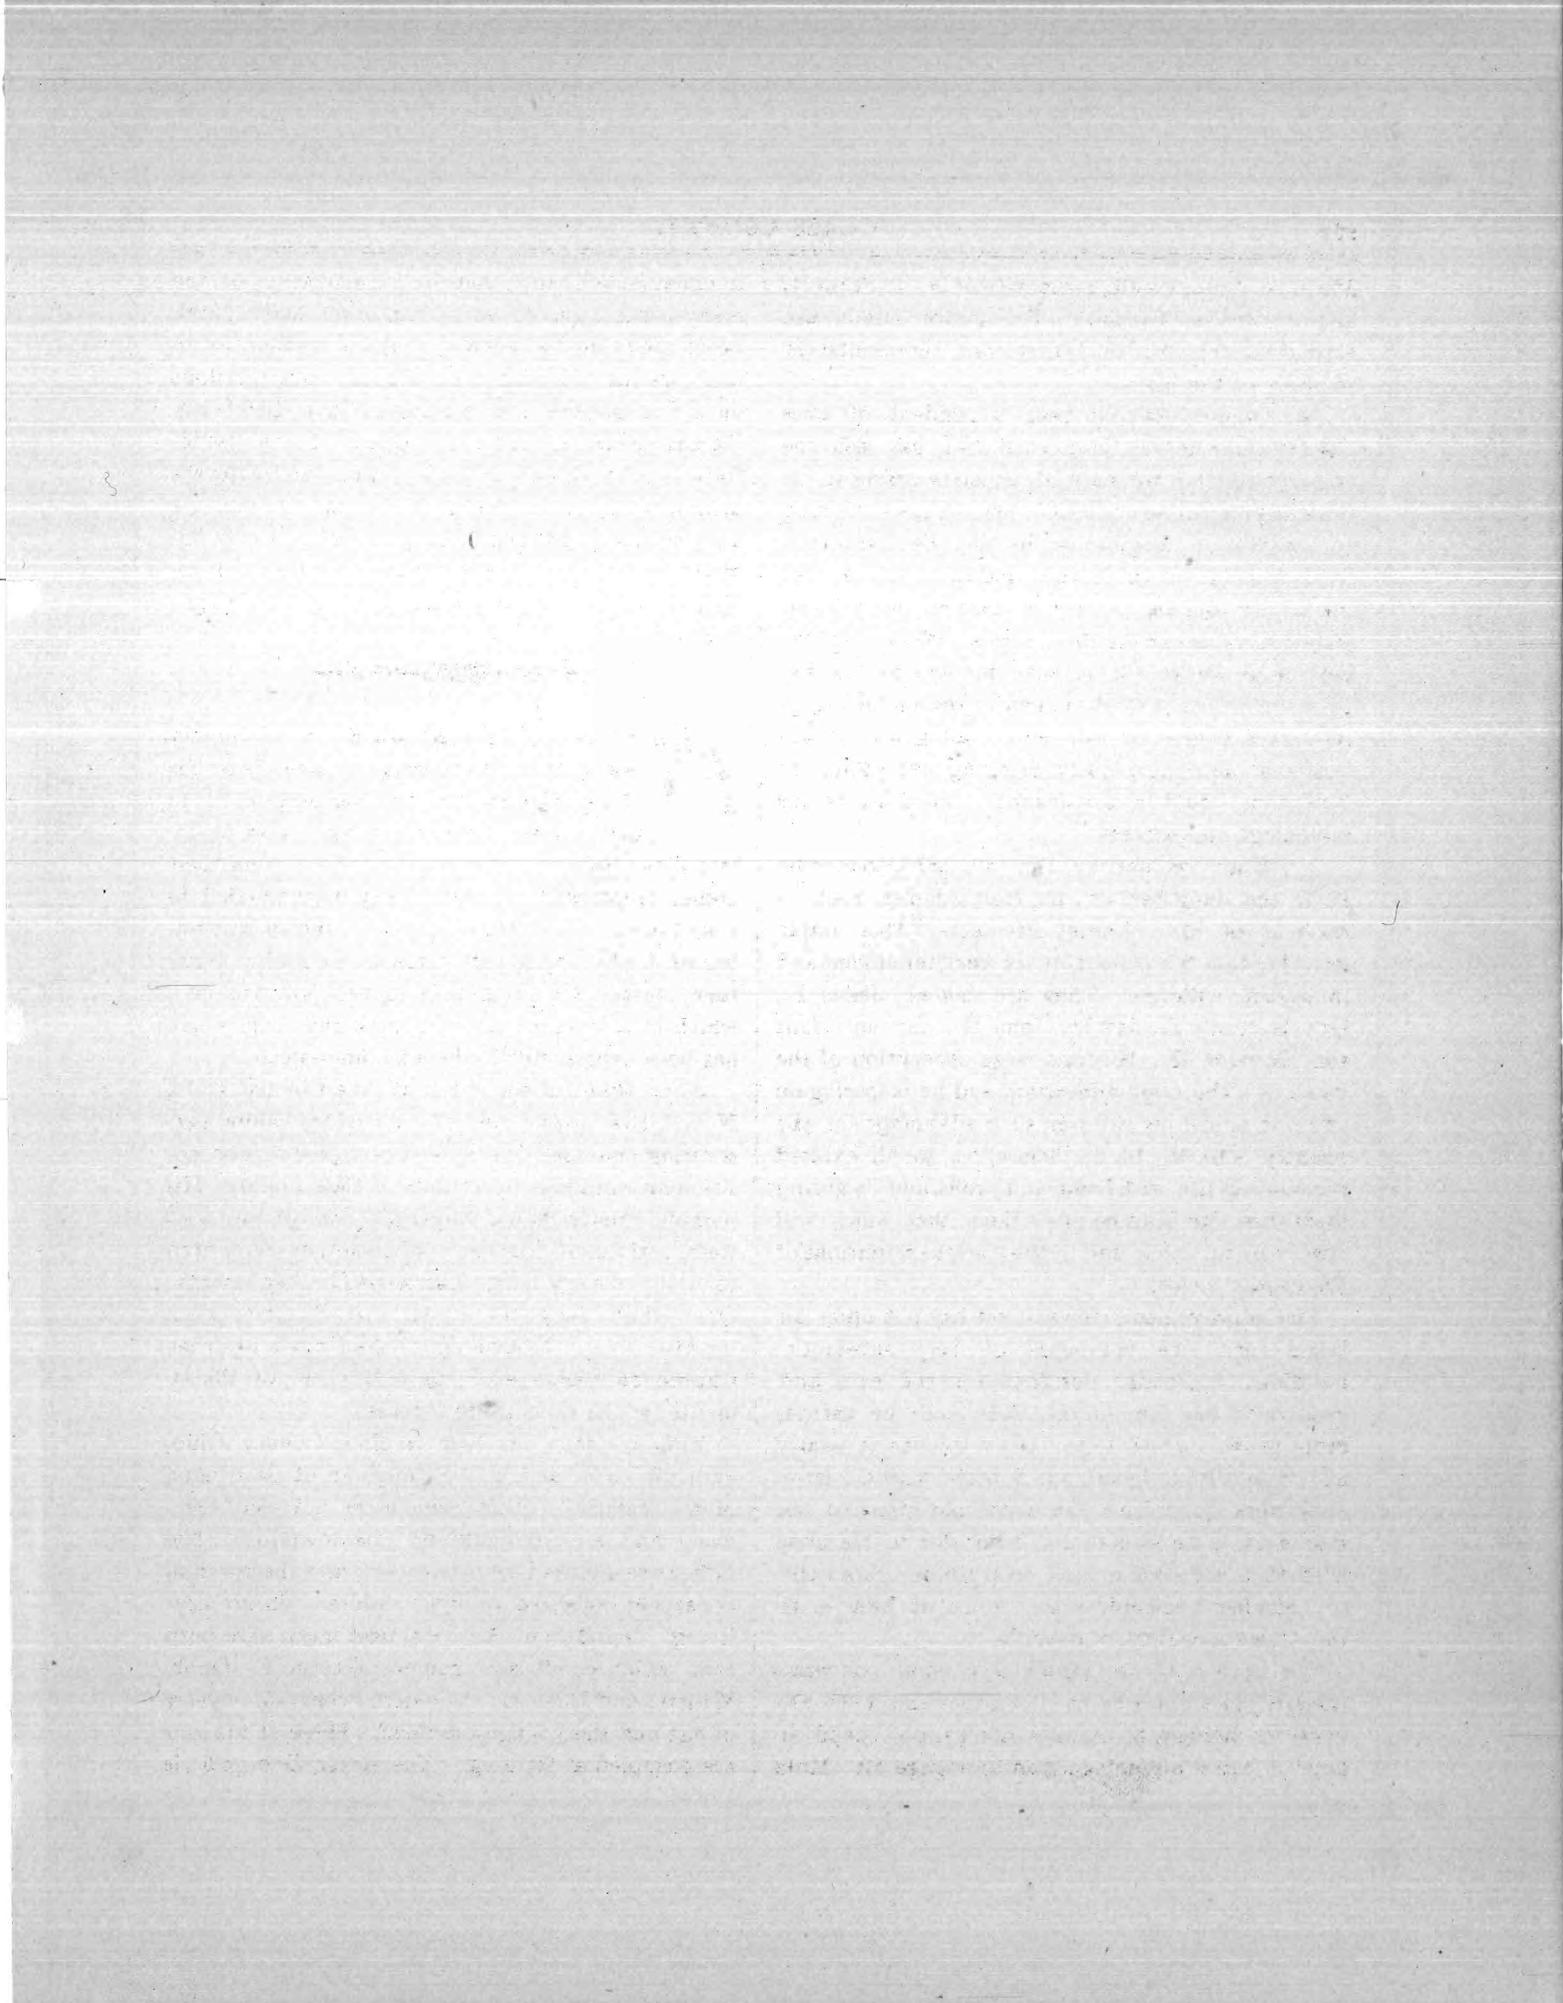

The subject of our sketch is a good conversationalist, and one who has not experienced the adventures incident to pioneer life cannot spend an hour to better advantage than to engage Mr. Mutz in conversation, and listen to his narration of the many perils experienced by him in his early years, which are related in such a graphic manner as to carry the listener with him back to those perilous days. In politics this gentleman is a Democrat. He has served on the School Board of his district for a number of years. Both himself and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, are very sociable and hospitable, and take a lively interest in all matters, either social, educational or religious, relating to the general good of their neighborhood.

MRS. CHRISTINA RUMMEL, a lady highly esteemed in the community, and the owner of a good farm property on section 21 in Plattsmouth Precinct, is the widow of the late Peter Rummel, who departed this life at their homestead April 24, 1885. They were married in Pike County, Ohio, March 22, 1864, and in November of the following year came to Nebraska Territory, locating in the pioneer days upon the land which Mrs. Rummel now occupies, and from which has been constructed a valuable homestead.

Peter Rummel was born in Pike County, Ohio, Nov. 8, 1841, was a man of industrious habits, persevering and enterprising, and occupied a good position among the early settlers of Cass County. His parents, Frederick and Angelina (Gloop) Rummel, were natives of Germany, whence they emigrated to America early in life, and settled in Pike County, Ohio, where they still reside. Mr. Rummel was a member in good standing of the United Brethren Church, and belonged to the I. O. O. F., of Plattsmouth, at the time of his decease.

Mrs. Rummel was born in Pike County, Ohio, June 29, 1842, and is the daughter of Jacob and Mary (Vallery) Vallery, who were natives of Germany, and are residents of this township. The father was a farmer by occupation, and the parental household consisted of eight children; six are now living. To Mr. and Mrs. Rummel there were born four children, all sons, namely; George F., Jacob, William and Edward; the eldest twenty-four years of age and the youngest sixteen. Three of the sons are occupied at farming. The eldest, George F., is in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, making his headquarters at Pacific Junction. Mr. Rummel during his lifetime was a Democrat, and a man of pure principles and integrity.

Yours Truly
John H. Buck

GEORGE W. LAMBING is one of the leading merchants of Weeping Water, and is the only implement dealer in the city, excepting a small branch of a Plattsmouth house. Mr. Lambing established his present prosperous business about six years ago, in 1882, when the railway came through, and although at one time there were two opposition dealers in implements, by his fair and square dealings with his farmer customers, he has maintained his trade, and is now the only dealer remaining that was established at that time. Mr. Lambing has a large trade in wagons, buggies, and all kinds of farming implements, and always keeps on hand a good class of goods.

Our subject was born in Jefferson County, Pa., June 9, 1844, to John and Margaret (Shirley) Lambing, natives and lifelong residents of Pennsylvania. The father died in 1876, and the mother in 1883. They were the parents of eleven children, eight of whom grew to maturity. Our subject received a substantial education in the schools of his native county, and continued to live there until 1869. In that year he came to Plattsmouth, this State, where he engaged in his trade of blacksmith, which he had learned and practiced in his native home. Nineteen months later he opened a smithy in Weeping Water, arriving here in September, 1870, and he is now the only blacksmith that was here at that early date, and he still has a shop in connection with his business. He continued to ply his trade until he opened his store for the sale of implements.

Mr. Lambing has a substantial residence on Randolph street, near the Congregational Church, and to the lady who makes his home pleasant and attractive he was married in this city, Nov. 14, 1871. Of the six children born to them, five are still living, as follows: Charles O., George E., John H., William and Clara B. All are at home and enjoying the benefit of good educations. Mrs. Lambing, whose maiden name was Sarah F. Potter, was born in Maryland. Her parents moved to Indiana when she was a small girl, and there she lived until she had grown to womanhood, and then accompanied her parents to Illinois. Her father died in that State, and her mother came here with her son, T. L. Potter, who was the first jeweler in town. He did not remain here long, but went to Springfield. While here our subject met and made the acquaintance of his wife. Her mother makes her home with our subject and her daughter the most of the time.

Mr. Lambing takes an active part in promoting the material prosperity of his adopted city, and the furtherance of any and all schemes for its improvement is sure to meet with his cordial approbation and substantial aid. He has borne an honorable part in the public life of this place, and was a Trustee of the village the first year of its incorporation. He and his wife are esteemed members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and in their daily walk show themselves to be sincere Christians, guided by the highest principles, and they are therefore eminently worthy of the respect accorded to them. Mr. Lambing is identified with the I. O. O. F., and is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

HON. JOHN F. BUCK. Of all the honored pioneers of Cass County who came here at an early day, and who have witnessed and aided its steady development and growth, the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch is a worthy representative, and his silvered hairs and venerable form are everywhere greeted with the respect and reverence due to an honest and upright man.

Mr. Buck was born in Metz Township, Cayuga Co., N. Y., May 31, 1815. His paternal grandfather, Elijah Buck, was a native of Pennsylvania, and came of a good old English family, who had settled in that State many years before. After his marriage he removed to Wyoming County, Pa., and during the Revolutionary War, when his son, the father of our subject, was an infant, he enlisted in the home militia, and was mustered in as Lieutenant. He was a brave soldier, and fought gallantly for his country. While he was away the Indians attempted to massacre the people of Wyoming, and his wife escaped from the house with the baby in her arms, saving none of her household goods except the silver spoon with which she was feeding him. In 1781 Lieut. Buck moved with his family to what is now Chemung County, N. Y., and settled on the banks of the Chemung River, where he cleared a farm and spent his last years, dying in 1829, of paralysis, after a long and useful life of more than fourscore years. His wife, who had died some years before, was of Irish parentage.

The father of our subject, Aboliab Buck, was born in Wyoming, Pa., in 1776, and when five years of age accompanied his parents to Chemung County, where he grew to manhood. He was there married, in 1781, to Miss Annis Drake, who was a descendant of one of the first settlers of Manhattan Island. She was a lineal descendant of the Prince of Orange. A large part of the land now owned by Trinity Church corporation, New York City, originally belonged to that family. Her father, Benjamin Drake, spent his entire life in New York State. After marriage Mr. Buck and his wife began their wedded life in Cayuga County, N. Y., where they cleared a farm from the wilderness, seven miles from the present site of Auburn, living there until 1831, when they removed with their family of five sons and two daughters to Peoria County, Ill. Mr. Buck had accumulated considerable property while in New York, but lost it through the dishonesty of others, and was a comparatively poor man when he emigrated to the Prairie State. With characteristic energy he set to work to establish a new home for himself and family, and lived there, happy and prosperous, until his death from paralysis, Nov. 21, 1855. His wife survived him five years, dying in 1860, at the venerable age of eighty-four years. Both were earnest members of the Presbyterian Church, and lived honest, Christian lives.

John F. Buck, of whom we write, was the sixth child born to his parents. He was reared and educated in New York, and, being naturally studious and ambitious, with a keen intellect, acquired a good education, which he has further extended by constant study and reading. He was married in Peoria County, Ill., Nov. 5, 1839, to Miss Mary Schryder, daughter of Ernest C. and Sarah Schryder. (For full parental history see sketch of her brother, George F. Schryder.) Mrs. Buck was born in Cayuga County, N. Y., near Lake Ontario, May 23, 1820, being next to the youngest of the family of three daughters and two sons born to her parents. When seventeen years of age she accompanied her parents to Peoria County, Ill., and remained an inmate of their home until her marriage with our subject. She received a good education in the schools of her native State, and a superior training in domestic duties from her excellent mother, which well fitted her for her position as companion, help-mate, counselor, and all that makes a true wife and faithful mother. To her and her husband there have been born ten children. The names of the deceased are Charles D., James R., George N., Willie E. and Daniel W., all of whom died when quite young, and some of them of diphtheria. The record of the living is as follows: John S., a farmer and stock-raiser of Whitman, W. T.; he married Huldah Wolph, and they have six children; Theodore D., a farmer of Liberty Precinct, married Florence R. Barber, and they have four children; Abigail J. married Andrew Klepser, and is a resident of Bellevue; Sarah A. married W. B. Gates, a farmer of Ottawa, Kan.; Maria A. is a well educated young lady, and is residing at home with her parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Buck remained in Peoria County several years after their marriage, but in 1855 concluded to start with their family for the new farming regions of the West. May 19th of that year they crossed the Missouri River, and coming to Liberty, Mr. Buck pre-empted 160 acres of land, and later, after the Government had disposed of its domain to this county, he became possessor of another quarter-section in Liberty Precinct, which had really been secured by another man in Mr. Buck's name, and thus fell to him by deed and title.

A short time after our subject purchased another tract of 160 acres, thus becoming owner of three-quarters of a section before 1860. As soon as he had established himself here, Mr. Buck identified himself with the interests of his adopted town and county, and soon occupied a prominent place among its valued and influential citizens. He is a man of great intelligence and sound judgment, and his counsel and advice have been sought on all important questions. He was one of the foremost in having the old pre-emption law of 1842 so modified and arranged that a person could pre-empt land in Nebraska, even though he had filed a claim elsewhere. He has watched with pride the many changes and improvements of the county, and facilitated by every means in his power its rapid advancement. Mr. Buck has worked with unflagging industry on his own farm, and, although deprived of the use of one arm, has by his perseverance, sagacious judgment, thrift, and wise economy, improved one of the best farms in the county, and has accumulated sufficient property to enable him and his worthy wife to spend their declining years in comfort and ease. He has erected a commodious dwelling, replete with all the modern conveniences, and has a good set of farm buildings. His realty consists of 320 acres in Liberty Precinct, and 160 acres in Rock Bluff Precinct, all of which is suitable for tillage or grazing, being well watered by branches of the Weeping Water Creek.

Our subject has done his part in making the government of Nebraska what it is, having been sent in 1855 to represent his county in the Territorial Legislature, and he was chairman of two committees while a member of the house. He was an excellent man for those positions, and worked for the highest good of his constituents, without prejudice to his opponents, being a broad and liberal minded man of the highest integrity. In politics he was formerly an old-line Whig, and voted for William H. Harrison in 1836, and again in 1840. On the formation of the Republican party he became one of its members, and has since been a firm supporter of its principles, and voted at the last presidential election for Benjamin Harrison. Until within the last few years Mr. Buck was an attendant at nearly every State and county convention of his party as a delegate, and the people of Cass County would have honored him with any office within their gift, had he been willing to accept, but his home duties were such that he could not conveniently leave them for any protracted term, and he was always obliged to decline official honors. He has, however, served as Justice of the Peace for about forty years, and is still an incumbent of that office. In 1855 Three Grove post-office was established, the first one in this part of the county, and Mr. Buck was appointed Postmaster, and served until 1862. Both he and his good wife are people of sterling worth, and possess in a marked degree those honest, substantial qualities which have made them loved and revered by all who know them, and will keep their memory green in the community where they have lived so many years, long after they have passed away.

A portrait of this venerable pioneer and honored citizen adorns a page of this ALBUM, and will be justly regarded as one most worthy of a place here.

MATTES AKESON may be taken as a typical representative of the hardy, industrious Swedish-American citizen, who has by his industry and perseverance brought his home farm, located on section 7, Mt. Pleasant Precinct, to its present high state of cultivation. He was born in Sweden, Nov. 29, 1825, where he resided and followed the occupation of a farmer until he emigrated to America in 1854, in which year he took passage in a sailing-vessel, and after a comparatively uneventful voyage of seven weeks, he landed in New York City, whence he came directly west to Illinois, residing in Henderson and Knox Counties in that State for about ten years, the most of the time working at farming by the month.

Feeling an intense love for his adopted country, our subject enlisted for service in the Union Army, on Aug. 10, 1862, in Company H, 102d Illinois Infantry. The first part of his term of service was in Kentucky and Tennessee. The regiment of which he was a member was made a part of Sherman's grand army, that cut the Confederacy in twain, and contributed so largely to the ending of the war. He participated in the battles of Snake Gap, Burnt Hickory, siege of Atlanta, and in a large number of skirmishes and battles in which Sherman's army was engaged in his memorable march to the sea. He took part in the grand review at Washington at the close of the war, and was honorably discharged in June, 1865. He served as a private during the entire term.

Upon his return northward Mr. Akeson went to Mills County, Iowa. He remained there but a short time, when he married Mrs. Rebecca Gentry, which happy event occurred July 3, 1866. This lady was the widow of William Gentry, and was a resident of Mills County. By her first marriage the lady became the mother of three children, Milton, Katie and Benjamin, and by her marriage to our subject she became the mother of three children, Thomas, Emma, and Ella E., who is now dead. This lady was born in Henry County, Ind., Jan. 12, 1832, and is the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Wiles. Her parents came from North Carolina. Her paternal ancestors were of English origin. When she was about seven or eight years of age her parents removed with their family to Andrew County, Mo., where she lived until her marriage with Mr. Gentry, who died in Missouri in 1861.

Our subject is the son of Akey and Ellen Akeson. He is the youngest child in the family. His education was received in his native country, where all children are required to have certain educational facilities, which has served more than any other one thing to make those people fill the proud position among the educated nations of the world they occupy. Upon his arrival in America Mr. Akeson applied himself industriously to the task of acquiring a knowledge of the English language, and he has succeeded most admirably.

After his marriage our subject left Iowa for Nebraska, and settled upon his present farm in February, 1873, where he has lived ever since. When he began life in this country it was without a dollar in money, and he was deeply in debt, but by his close application and unflagging industry, he has become the owner of a farm of 480 acres of choice land, improved with good buildings and fences. His home, under the rule of his intelligent wife, is the abode of comfort and peace, and it would be difficult to find a family wherein social qualities and fraternal feeling, and general affection and goodwill one toward the other, are more harmoniously blended, than they are in this family circle. Both himself and wife are in the prime of life, and are enjoying that felicity and prosperity for which they have so diligently wrought so many long weary years, and they have at least formed an ideal home.

Mr. Akeson has adopted a systematic plan for the improvement of his farm, which he is perfecting from year to year. His dwelling is neatly and conveniently arranged and furnished, the barns and other out-buildings are located in accordance with the general plan, his orchards contain the choicest varieties of fruit, and the lawn surrounding his house is beautified with shrubbery, flowering plants and ornamental trees. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, his wife is identified with the Baptist denomination. The entire family take an active interest in the social matters of their locality. He is a Republican in politics, and loses no opportunity to secure the advancement of the success of that party. Mr. Akeson is noted for his uprightness and manly qualities, and in all matters of business his word is considered as good as his bond.

— ❦ —

SQUIRE MARSHALL D. ABBOTT. It is refreshing to meet with such a gentleman as the subject of the following biography. He is one for whom nature has done much, who has been given a good constitution and a courageous spirit, and been able to surmount the difficulties common to the lot of man. He calls Nebraska "God's country," having a fine appreciation of its natural resources, and believing that the man who cannot delve out a comfortable fortune from its soil is of little account.

Mr. Abbott is essentially a self-made man, and has been able to turn to good account his fine natural abilities. He is of bright and sharp intellect, has good command of language, and is always entertaining on account of his humor and witticisms. Perhaps rather below the medium height, he is stout of muscle and very active, and there are few men who can accomplish more either mentally or physically than he. He has watched with more than ordinary interest the growth and development of his adopted State, and has been largely instrumental in the building up of his particular corner of Cass County. He owns and operates a fine farm of 190 acres, pleasantly situated on sections 28 and 29 in Salt Creek Precinct, which is devoted largely to the feeding of stock. Mr. Abbott ships annually large numbers of cattle and swine to the Omaha market, and is at present (the winter of 1888-89) preparing two carloads of cattle and one of swine for this purpose. His homestead has around it the air of plenty and comfort which distinguishes so many of the homes of Southern Nebraska, which have been built up from first principles and illustrate the labor of man within the space of a few years. Perhaps there is no region in the Great West more fortunate in the men who have opened it up for settlement than Cass County and its environments, and Squire Abbott has been by no means behind the diligent and progressive men who have augmented its reputation and standing.

Our subject traces his immediate ancestry to New England, being the son of Stephen and Lydia (Deveraux) Abbott, who were natives of Connecticut but married in Oneida County, N. Y. The paternal grandfather came from good old English stock, and spent his last years in New York. Stephen Abbott, upon leaving New England, migrated to New York State, and was a member of the militia during the War of 1812, serving under Capt. Haskell. The parents resided a number of years in Chautauqua County, N. Y., where the father planted the first nursery within its limits. About 1856 the parents, leaving the Empire State, joined their son Marshall in Henry County, Iowa, and spent their last days at his home five miles from Mt. Pleasant, the father dying about 1863 and the mother in 1860. Their family consisted of twelve children, of whom Marshall was the youngest born.

Mr. Abbott was born April 11, 1829, in the town of Busti, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., and the scenes of his earliest recollections lay along the beautiful Lake Chautauqua. He was taught at an early age habits of industry, learning to swing the ax, to plow and sow, and to do the various work pertaining to the farm. His early education was acquired in the old log school-house, with its floor of puncheon and benches of slabs, the huge fireplace occupying nearly one side of the room, and the chimney built outside, of earth and sticks. The system of instruction was fully in keeping with the surroundings of the pupil. The boys of that day, however, although perhaps lacking polish and culture, grew up strong of muscle and self-reliant, and of them were made the men who have left their footprints on the sands of time.

Our subject remained under the home roof until reaching his majority, and the day after he was twenty-one years old he started for California. He had in the meantime learned the trade of wagon-maker, but he was not satisfied with his condition or his prospects, and believed that the Far West would furnish something more in consonance with his ambitions and desires. He proceeded to the city of Buffalo by stage, thence took a steamer to Detroit, and from there journeyed by rail to the young city of Chicago. He had for his traveling companion one L. F. Thompson, and at this point they purchased a wagon and horses, with sufficient provisions for a long journey, and started with high hopes over the plains. They crossed the Missouri River at Council Bluffs, and passed by the present site of the city of Omaha, seeing nothing whatever to indicate that a white man had ever been in that region. Sixty miles west of the muddy Missouri they came across large herds of buffaloes. The 12th of August, 1850, saw our travelers at Placerville or Hangtown as it was then called, and there they made a halt and took up a claim on Weaver Creek. They had come hither in search of gold, but knew nothing about the methods of mining, and consequently realized no profits from this first venture. They did not allow this fact to discourage them, however, but moved to another locality near Diamond Springs, where they remained over winter with the same results as before.

Our adventurers now went back to San Francisco, and soon afterward set out for the headwaters of the Feather and Yuba Rivers. There they struck a rich gulch, and within a space of twenty square feet took out ore to the value of $5,000. They divided this equally between them and concluded they would return home. They made this trip via the Isthmus of Panama, Kingston and New York City. Upon their arrival in New York State they purchased a farm, of which they retained possession four years, selling out in 1856. Mr. Abbott again crossed the Mississippi, and took up his abode in Henry County, Iowa.

Our subject purchased a farm in the Hawkeye State, upon which he settled with his family, and in his efforts as an agriculturist met with reasonable success. In the fall of 1869, however, his attention was attracted to the advantages of the young State of Nebraska, and coming to this county he purchased his father's war claim from the balance of the heirs, and settled upon the land which he has since occupied. In the construction of this homestead he began at first principles, and the improvements which the passing traveler observes with an admiring eye are the result of the diligence and perseverance of Mr. Abbott. The farm is all enclosed with neat and substantial fencing, the buildings are convenient and well arranged, there is a grove of cottonwood, maple, ash and walnut trees, and an orchard of 200 bearing apple trees. In addition to these there are trees of the smaller fruits, and each year adds something by the way of convenience and embellishment for the happiness and comfort of the family.

Miss Mary Andrews, of Chautauqua County, N. Y., became the wedded wife of our subject May 6, 1852. This most excellent lady was the playmate of Mr. Abbott in his boyhood days, indeed they practically grew up together from childhood, attending the same school and interested in the same pleasures and recreations. Of this congenial union there have been born two children in New York State, and three in Iowa, namely: Edna M., Estella May, Mary B., an infant who died unnamed, and Dwight Marion. The eldest of these is thirty-five and the youngest twenty. They grew up bright and intelligent, and were given careful home training, which makes useful and respected members of the community. Mr. Abbott, politically, votes the straight Republican ticket, and has been always interested in the projects calculated to advance the people, socially, morally and financially. He has for years been a member of the School Board of his district, and has served as Supervisor. He was for three years Justice of the Peace in his county, and has filled many other positions of trust and responsibility. No ordinary circumstance could move him from his marked-out course of honesty and uprightness which was taught him in boyhood by his parents and which he proposes to follow the remainder of his life. It is hardly necessary to say that he is held in high respect by the people of his community, and is a man whose opinions exert no small influence among their councils.

REV. EDWARD ROOT, of Weeping Water, has occupied the pulpit of the Free Will Baptist Church about forty-five years, fifteen of which have been spent in this county. Of New England ancestry, he was born in Connecticut Feb. 4, 1822, and is the son of Dr. Anson L. and Sally (Brooks) Root. The father spent the latter part of his life in Trumbull County, Ohio, where his death took place about May 6, 1846. In pursuance of his duties as a practicing physician he rode all through the counties of Trumbull, Cuyahoga and Ashtabula, becoming widely and favorably known throughout that region. He also was a native of Connecticut, born about Jan. 4, 1793, in Litchfield, and in the Nutmeg State received his medical education. He practiced in the East a number of years before his removal to Ohio, which occurred in 1827. The country was then wild and new and the journeyings of Dr. Root were performed mostly on horseback, he frequently riding many miles to see a single patient. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Root removed to Berrien County, Mich., where she died Dec. 16, 1857.

The paternal grandfather of our subject, Dr. Anson Root, also a physician, was eminent in his profession, having a very extensive practice in Connecticut, where he spent his entire life.

Edward Root, our subject, was a lad five years of age when his parents removed to Ohio, and he received a practical education in the district schools of his day. He commenced reading theology at home and began preaching when a youth of seventeen years. His first charge, two or three years later, was in Clarksfield Hollow, Huron Co.,

Ohio, where he was stationed one year. Thence he removed to Vermillion, in Erie County, where he organized a church, over which he was pastor three years. The climate of that region inducing malaria, he removed to Greenfield, Huron County, taking charge of the Greenfield and New Haven Churches, and there he resided a period of over ten years. At that point he did remarkably efficient service as a pastor and evangelist. From Ohio, about 1856, Mr. Root removed to Cass County, Mich., of which he was a resident sixteen years, having in charge one congregation at Porter, Van Buren County, fifteen years of this time, besides doing much outside work. At the expiration of this time, returning to Ohio, he spent one and one-half years with the New Haven and Greenfield Churches at the earnest solicitation of the people, and which was as long as his health would permit. In the year 1873 he came to this county and did miscellaneous church work in different localities, until the organization of the Free Will Baptist Church at Centreville. The church edifice of this society stands on the line between Centre and Elmwood Precincts.

Our subject purchased a farm in Stove Creek Precinct where he lived twelve years, still having the same church in charge, and resigned his pastorate in October, 1887. He sold his farm and moved into Weeping Water, about 1884, where he secured a pleasant home. Since withdrawing from the church above mentioned, Mr. Root has had charge of two societies, one at Long Branch, in Todd Creek Precinct, Johnson County, and the other at Grand View, in Gage County, six miles south of Firth. In connection with these he officiates alternately.

Mr. Root was married in Medina County, Ohio, May 15, 1842, to Miss Lucy S. Palmer, who was born in Tolland, Mass., April 19, 1824. Her father, Henry Palmer, was a descendant of one of three brothers who came on the Mayflower from England, and located at Stonington, Conn. He was the owner of a vessel and was its captain. His vessel being lost, his wife, Sophia Palmer, was left at an early day a widow with two children, Lucy S. and Henry F. Palmer. In 1831 the widow Palmer moved to Medina County, Ohio, and resided there until her death in 1864. Her son, Henry F. Palmer, when quite young went into the clothing and milling business, which he has followed up to the present time; he now resides in Fremont, Ohio, and is sixty-six years of age.

To Mr. and Mrs. Root there were born ten children, of whom only five are living. The eldest, Henry D., is a practicing physician and druggist of Lincoln; he served one term in the Legislature and was receiver in the United States Land Office for four years. He married Miss Emma Haggerty, and is the father of two children; Jennie, Mrs. Jeffers, resides in Dunbar, Otoe County, and is the mother of three children; her husband is a grain merchant. Nellie, Mrs. Fought, of Plattsmouth, is the mother of one child. The husband is bookkeeper in the B. & M. lumber-yard at that place. Della and Frank are at home with their parents. The children of Mr. Root have all been given a good education, and all but the youngest boy are members of the Baptist Church.

Besides his regular pastoral duties Mr. Root for a period of twenty years conducted revival meetings nearly every winter. He has been active and earnest as a laborer in the Master's vineyard and looks for his reward in the Great Hereafter.

MRS. WILHELMINA NOLTING owns a fine farm on section 17, Plattsmouth Precinct, which, since her husband's death, she has managed with great skill, and derives therefrom a comfortable income. She is the widow of the late Wilhelm Nolting, at whose decease, April 14, 1882, this precinct was deprived of a good citizen, who had materially aided in developing the agricultural interests of Cass County.

Mrs. Nolting was born in Lippe-Detmold, Germany, Sept. 14, 1825, and is a daughter of Conrad and Rebecca (Dorath) Gadka, likewise natives of that Province. They were lifelong residents of their place of birth, and there reared a family of four sons and four daughters, of whom our subject was the seventh in order of birth. Her parents were of pure German ancestry, and were held in great respect by their neighbors. In 1854 our subject left the Fatherland to make her home in the future in this country. After landing she proceeded to Watertown, Wis., where she was soon after united in marriage with Wilhelm Nolting. He came of an ancient German family, and Lippe-Deimold was also his place of birth.

In August, 1865, they came to Cass County, Neb., with their family, and bought the farm where Mrs. Nolting now lives. There was a small house on the place, and some plowing had been done, constituting the only improvements. Mr. Nolting at once entered upon the work before him, and in the laborious years that followed brought about a great change, placing the land under a high state of tillage, and erecting a good house, barn, corn cribs and all other necessary buildings, everything about the place indicating that he was a practical, skillful farmer. In the midst of his prosperous career, when he was sixty-three years of age, death closed his useful life. He was a truly good man, and led an exemplary Christian life, dying, as he had lived, a firm believer in the faith of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, within whose fold he had been reared. To him and his excellent wife were born eight children, five of whom survive, namely: Minnie, now Mrs. Adam Kaffenberger; Anna, now Mrs. Henry Jasper; Bertha, August and Frederic; the three latter live with their mother. The names of the children deceased are Wilhelm, Helena and Sophia. Mrs. Nolting is a devoted member of the Lutheran Evangelical Church, and is deservedly held in high respect by all in the community. She is a very capable, industrious woman, a good manager, and under her careful supervision her farming interests are in a very satisfactory condition.

GEORGE W. YOUNG, a representative farmer and one of the earliest settlers of Cass County, resides on section 26 of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, where he settled in 1867, coming from Scioto County, Ohio. He was born in Smith County, Va., July 14, 1846, where he lived until the fall of 1864, when, in company with his parents, he removed to Scioto County, Ohio, where he lived until he came to Nebraska, and settled on his present home farm. He is a son of Lewis N. and Levniah (Patrick) Young. The parents were both natives of Virginia. A family of seven children were born to them, namely: Mary, now the wife of Asher Tanner, who resides in Mt. Pleasant Precinct; George W., our subject; Robert A. and Lewis H., both residing in Mt. Pleasant Precinct; Causby is now the wife of George W. Carroll, and residing in Keya Paha County, Neb.; Julia is the wife of Charles Troop, and resides in Rock Bluff Precinct; and Vacey J., who is deceased. The paternal grandfather was a native of Scotland.

Our subject was married, Feb. 6, 1868, to Miss Mary Barry, who was born in Noble County, Ohio, Oct. 7, 1848. She is a daughter of Thomas L. and Sarah (Headly) Barry. Her father was a native of Pennsylvania, and the mother was a resident of Noble County, Ohio. Her father was of Irish descent; her mother came with her grandparents to Nebraska in 1867, and settled in Cass County. In 1885 her parents removed to New Mexico, where they at present reside. The Barry family were among the early settlers of Noble County, Ohio, where they occupied a prominent position in the affairs of the county.

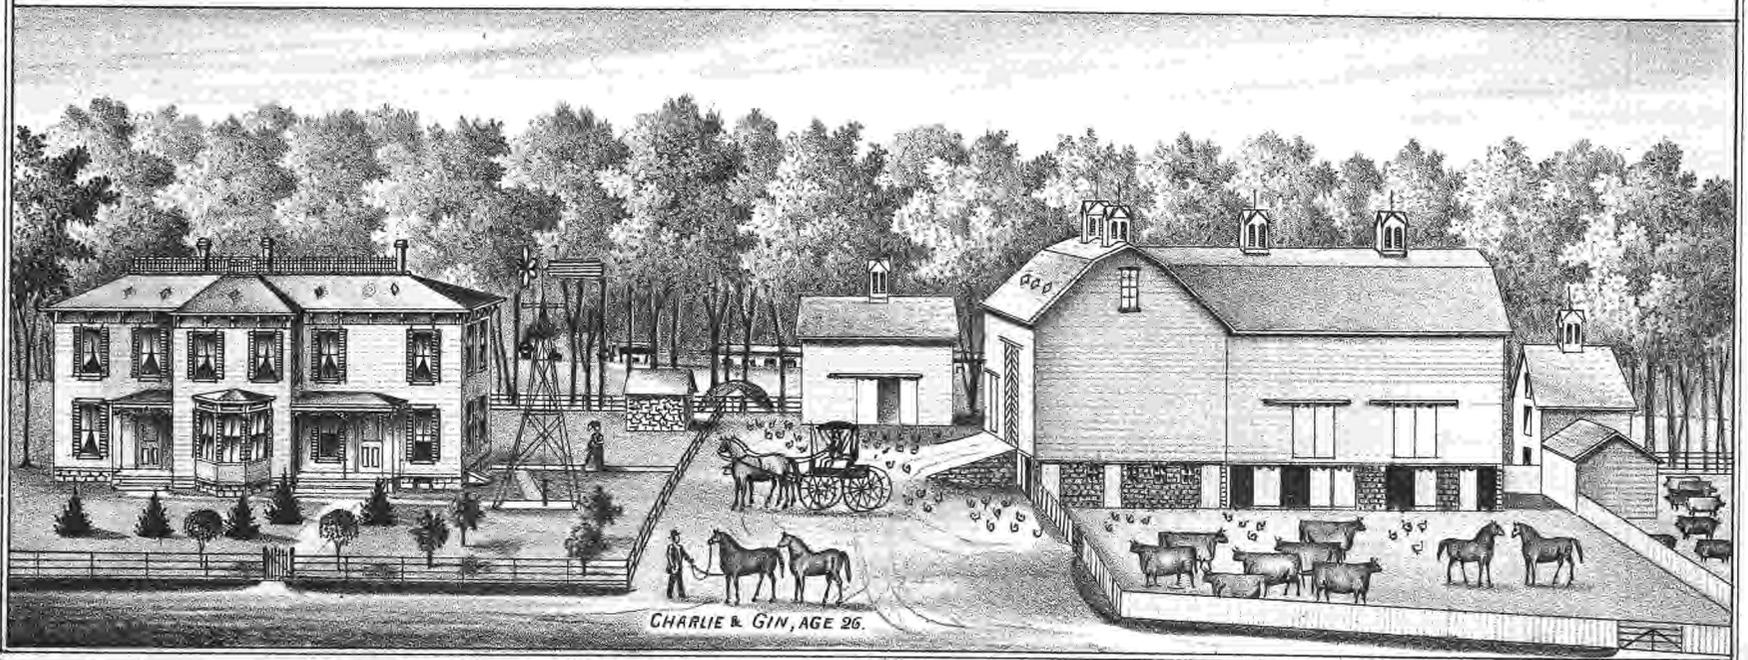

An interesting family of six children have been born to our subject and his good wife, namely: Hattie J., born May 27, 1877; Eunavista, Feb. 5, 1880; and four are dead, named James A., William, Sarah E. and Thomas L.

Mr. Young owns a tract of 240 acres of eligibly located and highly cultivated land. His improvements are of the highest class. His elegant residence, handsomely furnished and conveniently arranged, is supplied with all the comforts and many of the luxuries known to but few people outside our larger cities. His home is surrounded by an elegantly designed lawn, ornamented with evergreens and shrubbery, which present a pleasing picture. The barns are large and commodious, designed with a view to accommodating the stock and handling the various products of the farm in the most economical manner. He has a large and fine orchard and numerous groves. The farm is divided by substantial and well-kept hedges and wire fences into fields of convenient size. The whole tract is well supplied with large quantities of pure water.

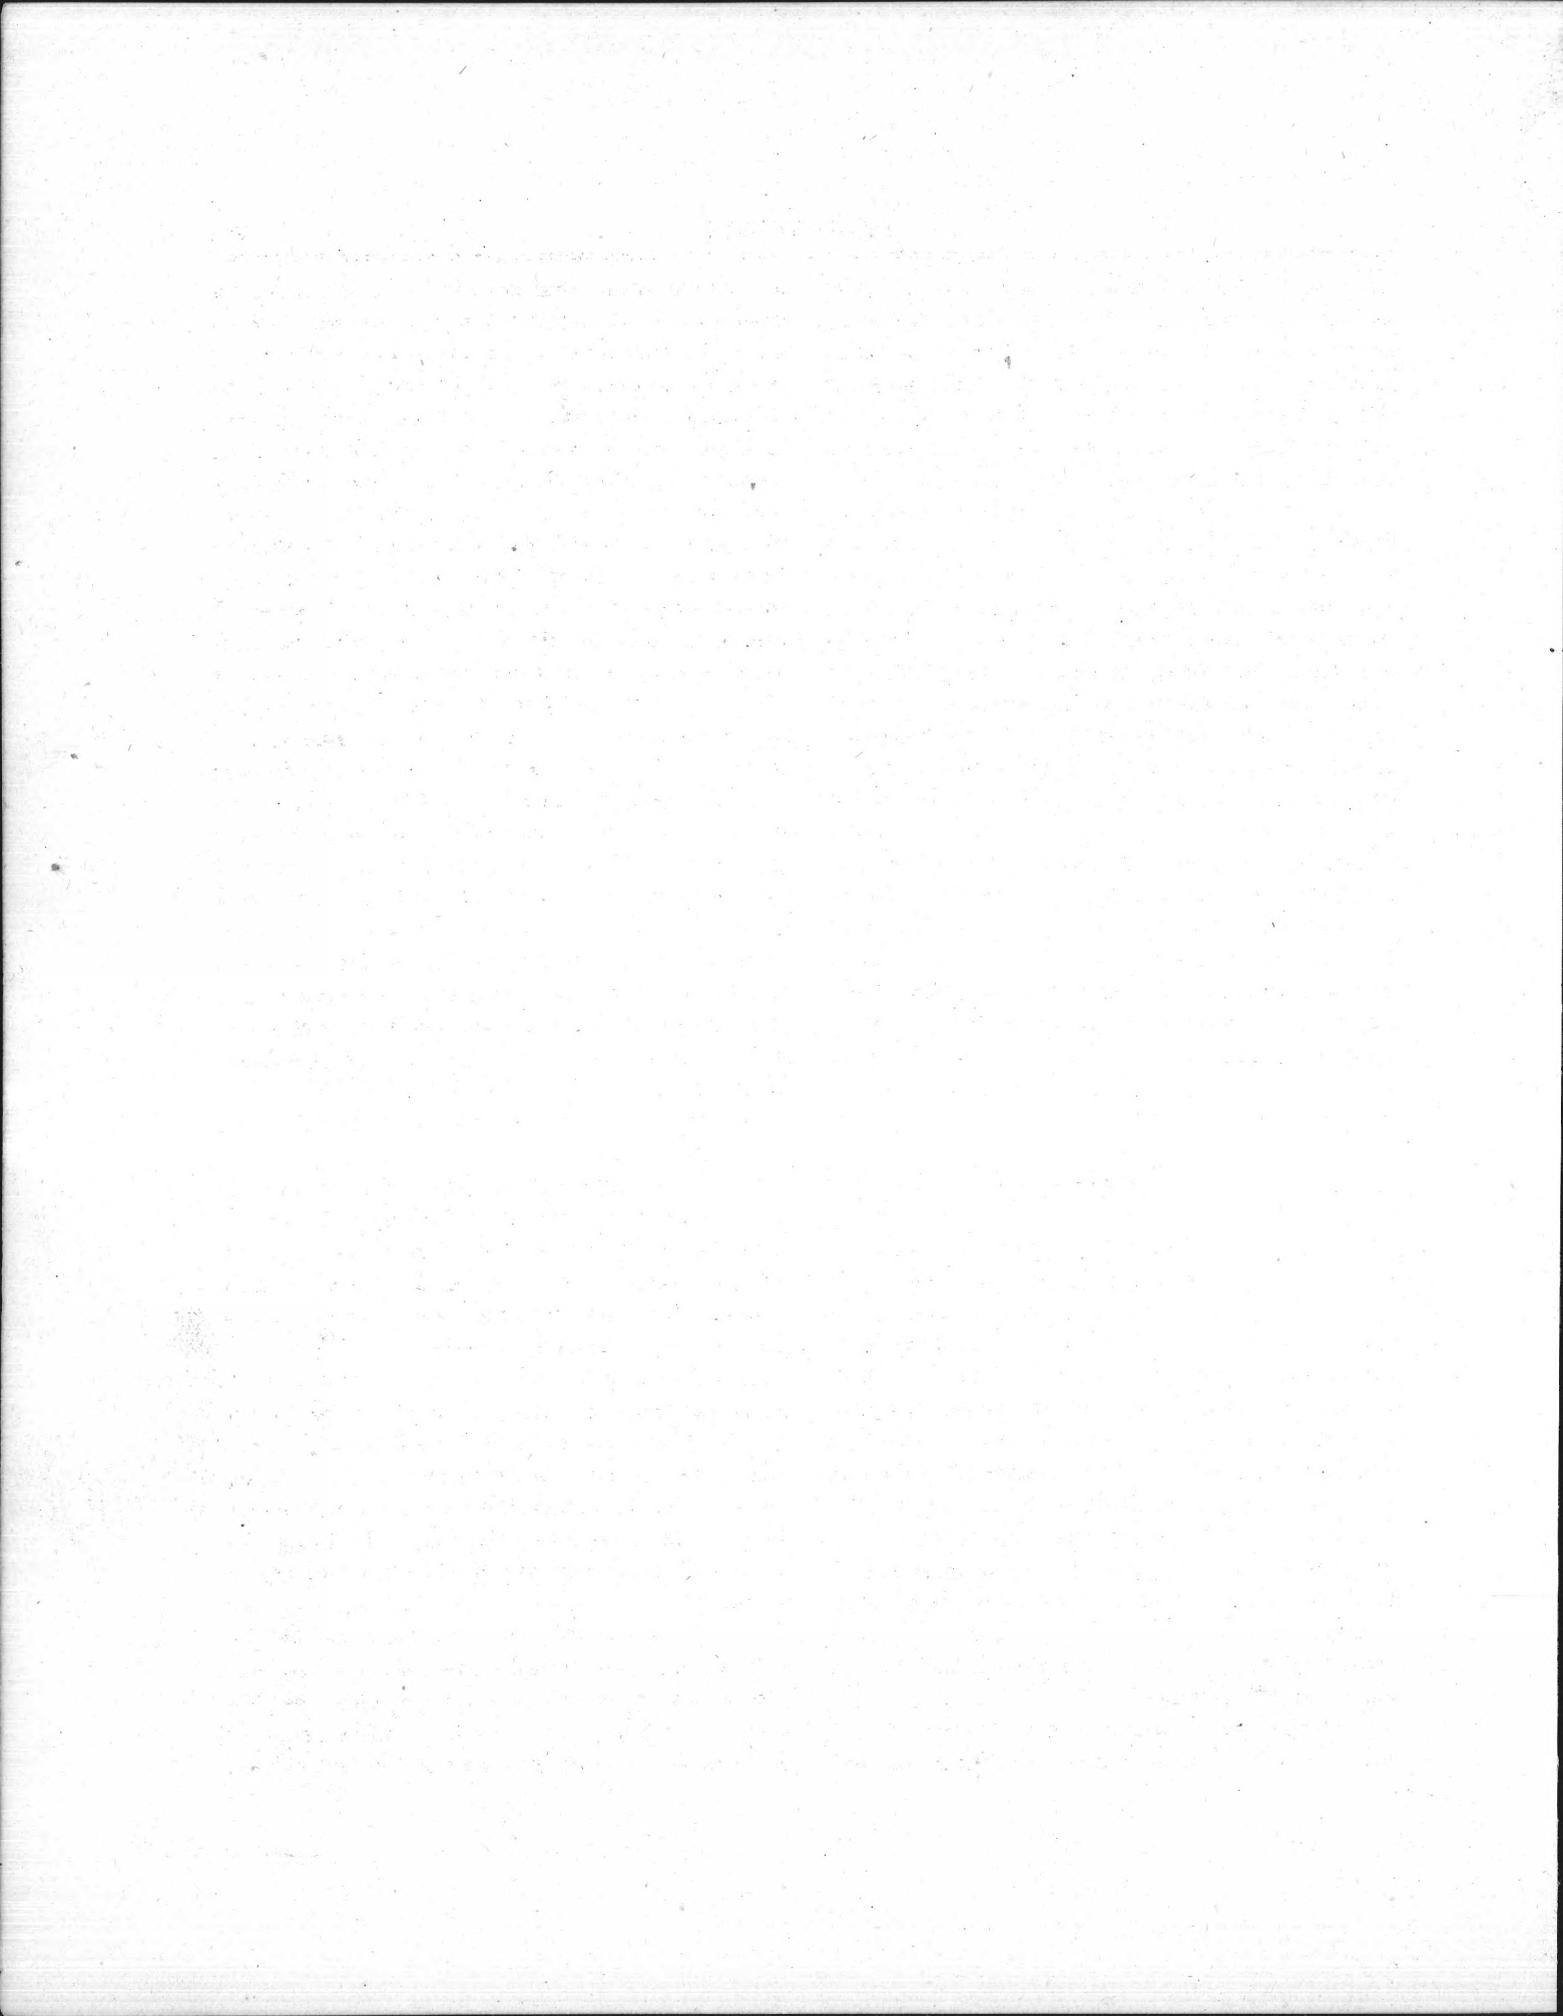

In accumulating this beautiful property our subject has been ably assisted by his devoted wife, who has been ever ready to render him all assistance by her counsel and presence. She is a refined, intelligent lady, and holds the interests of her husband and family dear to her heart. Both husband and wife are consistent members of the United Brethren Church. He is at present President of the Board of Trustees of the Otterbein Chapel, of Rock Bluff Precinct. He was one of the organizers of the school district in which he lives, and has been for a long time connected with its Board of Directors. He is Republican in politics. In the fall of 1887 he was a candidate for the office of County Commissioner, but was defeated by Louis Foltz, the present incumbent. He has served as Judge of Election in his precinct, and was Constable for two years. Himself and wife take an active part in the social life of the precinct, and are classed among the representative families of the county. They have had their share of the troubles and cares incident to pioneer life, and are now enjoying the fruits of their industry and enterprise. Mr. Young is one of the organizers and a Director of the Nehawka Bank, and is one of the Trustees of the Nehawka United Brethren Church. A view of his beautiful residence, with its surroundings, is given in this connection.

RESIDENCE OF G. W. YOUNG, SEC. 36. M^T. PLEASANT PRECINCT, CASS COUNTY.

RESIDENCE OF C. G. TABER, SEC. 22. CENTER PRECINCT, CASS COUNTY.

CALVIN G. TABER occupies an honorable place among the pioneers who were active in opening up the agricultural resources of Centre Precinct, and he is now one of its prominent and successful farmers. His farm of 200 acres, 120 of which is on section 22, and the remaining eighty acres on section 23, is considered one of the best kept farms in Cass County, and is admirably adapted to raising stock, to which he devotes it principally. He has a beautiful home on section 22; the commodious, substantial residence, of a pleasing architectural design, is said to be one of the finest in all Cass County. It is nicely finished on the inside, to correspond with its external appearance, and is well and tastefully furnished.

Mr. Taber was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., Oct. 29, 1831. Durphy Taber, his father, was also a native of New York, born in 179 , and spent his entire life in Saratoga County. He was a shoemaker by trade, and also a tanner and currier, being quite an extensive business man. He married Miss Sally Woodard, and to them were born six children, all of whom lived to maturity, their names being, Eliza, Susan, Orris (who lives next door north of our subject's residence), Calvin, Margaret, Laura and Melinda. The father died in 1835, while yet in the prime of life, being only forty-four years of age, in the midst of a career of usefulness, and his death was regarded as a severe blow to the industrial and financial interests of his town. His widow survived him until 1864, dying in the home of our subject, at the ripe age of seventy-eight years. Peleg Taber, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Rhode Island, and the next spring after his marriage he went to Saratoga County, N. Y., which was then mostly covered by the primeval forest, and there he built up a home for himself and family, with pioneer labor, drawing the logs for the erection of a cabin without the help of a team. He eliminated a good farm from the forest depths during the latter part of the eighteenth century, and there spent the remainder of his life. He was twice married and reared a large family of children. He was a Quaker, or Friend, in his religious belief.

Our subject lived in his native county until he was twenty-four years old, receiving in the meantime the benefit of an education at the common schools. At the age mentioned he went to Stark County, Ill., and remained there several years, prosperously engaged in farming. In 1865 he visited Nebraska for the purpose of taking up a homestead claim on eighty acres of land that forms a part of his present farm. He erected a small house, and the same fall returned to Illinois and spent the winter, closing up his affairs there preparatory to the removal to this State. In the spring of 1866 he came here with his family to locate permanently, arriving here on the 29th day of May, having driven all the way from Stark County, Ill., a distance of 420 miles. He still has the team with which he drove through, a bay team that was at that time four years old. He thinks a great deal of them, and they are now having the best of care, having good shelter even in mild weather, and from one of them he has reared nine colts, of which he has three left. With characteristic energy, Mr. Taber immediately set to work to improve his land, planting a grove, also 200 good fruit trees, besides a variety of small fruits, put out one and one-half miles of hedge, and put the land under good tillage. In a few years he had his first 80-acre tract under good improvements, and all under cultivation but seventeen acres, and that is in tame grass. As he became more prosperous he bought another eighty, improved that, and has since added forty acres more to his land, making it a fine farm in every respect. He has erected ample and commodious farm buildings; one fine barn is 36x50, with 16-foot posts, and a stone basement. He has a large granary, 18x32x16 feet, with 16-foot posts, and large double cribs; also has a hog house, 20x30x12 feet, to protect his hogs, as he carefully cares for all of his animals. In 1887 he erected his fine residence, with a frontage of fifty-six feet, twenty-six feet in depth, and two stories in height, with an L in the rear. Mr. Taber has been exceedingly successful in raising stock. He has a fine herd of fifty-three head of cattle, mainly Short-horns of a high grade. He has a number of hogs, of a mixed breed of Poland-China and Berkshire. He devotes most of his time, however, to horse breeding, and has several fine roadsters, besides ten work-horses of good grades, which he keeps busily employed on his farm.

Mr. Taber and Miss Sarah Harris were united in marriage in Saratoga County, N. Y., April 26, 1855, and to them have been born six children, all of whom are living, and of them the following is recorded: Sophronia, born June 24, 1856, is now Mrs. George Michael, of Webster County, Neb.; Lydia Malvina is Mrs. Orin Pitney; Wyan married Miss Susan Fairfield, and they have one child, George, and reside in Cheyenne County, Neb.; Eliza is now Mrs. Zade; Orin, William, at home. All of the daughters live in Webster County, this State. Mrs. Michael has three children—Sarah, Laura and Milton; Mrs. Pitney has two children—Clyde and Floyd; Mrs. Zade has three children—Clara, Sarah and Ertle.

Mrs. Taber was born Feb. 6, 1833, in Warren

County, N. Y. Her father, William Harris, was a physician and surgeon of Athol, that county, where he always lived, with the exception of two years that he spent in Illinois. He died in 1883, aged seventy-two years. His wife, whose maiden name was Sophronia Flanders, survived him until 1885, when she, too, passed to the great beyond, at the age of seventy years. They were prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Taber is a man of more than average capacity and decision of character, and it is to such men that Cass County is indebted for her rapid progress during the last two decades to a position of prominence among her sister counties. Our subject may well be proud of the part he has taken in developing her resources, as well as of the fact that, by his own exertions, he has placed himself in the front rank among her successful farmers. His fellow-townspersons regard him with feelings of the highest respect and esteem, as he is frank and warm-hearted, is a model of honest integrity, and is the soul of honor. As a good citizen should, he is interested in political affairs of the country, and is sincerely convinced that the principles promulgated by the Republican party are the safest in dealing with public interests.

A view of Mr. Taber's fine residence, with its surroundings, is given on another page.

ELIC CHALKER COLEMAN, an honored citizen, and an enterprising lumber and coal merchant of Greenwood, was born in Miller Township, Knox Co., Ohio, on the 23d of April, 1843. His first recollections are of Ohio, where he entered the public schools when only four years of age; when he was seven years old he went with his parents to Iowa, where he lived with them and attended school until he was nineteen years old. In 1862 he joined his parents, who had preceded him two years, in Nebraska. In the autumn of 1861 he enlisted in Company F, 17th Iowa Infantry, to take part in the Civil War, which had just begun at that time. The regiment went into camp at Keokuk, from which city they went to Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Mo. In 1862 they started down the Missis-

Mississippi River, and participated in the battles of Pittsburg Landing and Shiloh, and took part in the many engagements which led to the evacuation of Corinth and Iuka.

At the camp at Clear Creek our subject was attacked with the intermittent fever. He was removed to St. Louis, Mo., and placed in the Good Samaritan Hospital, remaining there for some time, and was finally honorably discharged on account of physical disability. At the time of his discharge he was so reduced in flesh that he was merely a skeleton, with an epidermis stretched over it. He rejoined his people in Nebraska, and remained under the paternal roof for two years, where the wonderful climate of Nebraska, coupled with strong recuperative powers of our subject, restored him to his former state of health. In 1866 he engaged in freighting from Plattsmouth across the plains. He would occasionally meet armed bands of Indians, but they never interfered with him in any serious manner, although they would beg and steal any small articles they could secure. Exposure became so common to him, it was merely a continuation of his army life.

In 1867 our subject homesteaded a farm of 160 acres in Salt Creek Precinct, near the stream of that name. He was very successful in his farming operations, so that soon afterward he purchased another tract of 160 acres. Dec. 26, 1867, he was married to Miss Nancy Jane Loder, who was born in Cohoston County, Ohio. She came to Nebraska with her parents when she was a child, in 1853. The children born to them are as follows: Cassie M., Hettie G., Ella M., Loy L., Ada F., Isa Lola, Mattie, Lulu; William E., deceased; Myron and Elmer Chalker.

Our subject's father, Elie Chalker Coleman, Sr., was a farmer, and born in Connecticut; his mother was Catherine (Beller) Coleman, and was a native of Maryland. The Coleman family were among the earliest settlers in Connecticut, and the father of our subject went to Ohio when he was a boy, in the neighborhood of 1812. He attained to years of manhood, and was married there, and removed to Iowa in 1856, settling in Henry County, near Mt. Pleasant. In 1860 the family came to Nebraska and settled in Salt Creek Precinct, and were among the earliest settlers in that precinct. Here the father entered a homestead in the year 1863. He prospered, and lived on the farm until he died in 1878, at the age of sixty-nine years. The mother died in 1858, aged seventy-nine years. They were the parents of eleven children, namey: Jane, deceased; Matilda, Ebenezer, Mary, Lucy, William, John H., Amy; Elie Chalker, our subject; Amanda and Martin Luther. Henry resides in Colorado; the remainder of the children live in Nebraska.

Mr. Coleman continued operating his farm until 1887, when he moved into Greenwood. During this year he traveled through Eastern Colorado. In 1888 he entered into his present business, as the senior partner in the firm of Coleman & McPherson, dealing in lumber and coal, in which they transact an extensive business. Our subject has disposed of a portion of his holdings, but he still owns a well-improved and valuable farm of 120 acres in Salt Creek Precinct. He and his family reside in a pleasant and comfortable home in the northwestern part of the village.

It is to such men as Mr. Coleman that the lasting prosperity of our nation is due. It is they who open the wild, unsettled plains of the country, and make way for the advancement and progress of civilization and the fine arts. It is to the patriotism of such men that we owe our existence as a nation to-day. In no other country under the sun do we witness the spectacle of beardless youths eager to enter the service of their native land in times of need and peril, yet he, with thousands of others, did this, and endured without a complaint the terrible experiences had on the fields of Shiloh, Pittsburg Landing and Iuka. Returning home he suffered for years, broken in health, but not in courage or spirit, and we find him entering on the perilous tasks of the freighter across the trackless plains of the West, facing new and unseen dangers from the hand of the treacherous Indian. But those times have passed, taking with them their dangers, and what was then to be dreaded is as safe and pleasant as the walks in our thickly populated cities.

When that organization of old soldiers, the G. A. R., was organized, we find our subject entering zealously and whole souled into the project, and he is now Commander of Mission Ridge Post No. 145, composed of twenty-two members, all old veterans. He is also a prominent member and Chancellor Commander of the Knights of Pythias of Greenwood. In politics he is a Republican, and takes a lively interest in the success of his party. He has been delegate many times to the different County Conventions of that party, and was delegate to the State Convention in 1886, and assisted in the nomination of Gov. Thayer. Himself and wife are esteemed members of the Christian Church.

WILLIAM SHEFFER, deceased. The name of this honored pioneer of Cass County is familiarly known to the people of Salt Creek Precinct and vicinity as that of the very first man to locate on the creek, which was then called the Saline River on account of the quality of its waters. Mr. Sheffer landed here on the 18th of July, 1856, while Indians were still roaming over the country and wild game was abundant. It was nearly eleven years thereafter before Nebraska was admitted to the Union as a State.

The subject of this sketch living here from that time until his death, Jan. 26, 1889, had thus had an experience rich in variety, as the country around him slowly developed from an uncultivated waste into the abiding-place of a prosperous and civilized community. A native of Lycoming County, Pa., he was born near the city of Williamsport, July 10, 1804, and at the time of his death was over eighty-four years of age. His father, John Sheffer, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., and married Miss Susan Reynolds, a native of the same county. The paternal grandfather, John Sheffer, Sr., carried a musket during the Revolutionary War, under the direct command of Gen. Washington. He was a native of Georgia and after the war settled in Lancaster County, Pa., where he spent the remainder of his life.

On the mother's side grandfather William Reynolds came over from England at an early period in his life and also entered the ranks of the army as a Revolutionary soldier. After the war was over he turned his attention to farming, and spent his last years in Tioga County, Pa. His son John, the father of our subject, upon approaching manhood learned the trade of a tailor, and after his marriage settled in Lycoming County, Pa. Later he removed with his family to Tioga County, and changing his occupation took up agricultural pursuits and became the owner of a farm of 100 acres. Upon this he spent the last years of his life, passing away in 1830 at the age of sixty-one years. The mother survived her husband until about 1862, her death taking place when she was seventy-five years old.

To the parents of our subject there were born twelve children, seven sons and five daughters, of whom four survive. William, the subject of our sketch, was the second born and spent his childhood and youth on the farm in the Keystone State. In common with the young people of that time and place his educational advantages were limited to the evening fireside and the New Testament, and such was his application to his only text book that he in time became a theologian of no mean abilities. He possessed a good memory and was able to quote profusely, being often able to jog the memory of the preacher in this respect. Upon the necessity arising for him to make himself useful, he began learning the tailor trade of his father, which, however, he was forced to abandon ere long, on account of the confinement, which threatened to throw him into consumption. He then began working on a farm, and when twenty-six years old set about the establishment of domestic ties of his own, being married Dec. 28, 1828, to Miss Elizabeth Kehler, who was also a native of Pennsylvania and born in Northampton County, Nov. 30, 1801. Her parents were Abraham and Elizabeth (Shelley) Kehler, who were born near the city of Philadelphia. Their family consisted of eight children, four sons and four daughters, of whom Mrs. S. was next to the eldest. The paternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Sheffer was of German birth and ancestry, and upon coming to the United States settled near Philadelphia, where he engaged in farming, and there he spent the remainder of his life.

When Mrs. Sheffer was eight years of age her parents removed to Lycoming County, Pa., where she received careful home and religious training, her parents being devoted members of the Presbyterian Church. She remained a member of her father's household until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Sheffer continued residents of their native State until coming to Nebraska Territory in July, 1856. The intention of Mr. Sheffer had been to settle in Illinois and secure land for his boys, who were fast approaching manhood. In the spring of 1856 he began making his preparations for removal, gathering together his household effects, loading them upon a wagon, and on the 28th of April he started with his family overland for the prairies. His destination was Freeport, Ill., where he proposed having his sons and son-in-law settle on rented farms in the vicinity of that then small hamlet. The boys, however, wished to take up land from the Government, so they departed from the first plan and moved onward through Illinois toward the farther West.

Upon arriving in Dubuque, Iowa, Mr. Sheffer visited the land office and found he could not locate land in that State without running a risk of settling on what might become railroad property. He therefore resolved that Iowa was not the place for him and decided to hunt until he found it. Crossing the Missouri at the present site of Platts-mouth, which was then marked by a few cabins, he moved on with courage until finding a place suitable in all respects, this being on the Saline River. There he took up a "squatter's" claim and for seven years lived on the east side of the creek. The land at that time had not been surveyed by the Government, but in 1857-58 it was marked off in sections. Mr. Sheffer turned the first furrow along the waters of Salt Creek, breaking five acres in the month of September, 1856. It is hardly necessary to state that he also built the first cabin, this being put up in August of that year.

As time passed on and other adventurous men followed in the footsteps of our subject, the latter with his natural benevolence of character, began looking around in search of some good he might do among his neighbors. He had always been of a religious turn of mind and began as soon as he could gather together an audience to hold prayer meetings in his cabin. The worshipers were few in number, but they remembered the Scripture promise and were strong in faith. The first sermon listened to by the people of that region was preached by a missionary, Mr. Turman, who was sent into the Territory to "preach to the heathens" as he expressed it. Mr. Sheffer informed him that if it were heathens to whom he wished to preach he would have to go farther West, but if he would like to discourse to people from Pennsylvania his cabin should be thrown open to all who might wish to listen to the first sermon on Salt Creek.

The first election in this country was held on the wood pile of Mr. Sheffer. The authorities at Platts-mouth appointed him the Judge, in which capacity he served thereafter a period of nine years. The ballots were written with pen and ink and the pieces of paper deposited in the hat of Mr. Sheffer, which answered the purpose of the first ballot box in Salt Creek Precinct. There was very little trouble about the election returns, for the five votes cast were unanimously in favor of the same measures and the same officials.

Mr. Sheffer planted the first cottonwood trees on Salt Creek and one of them is still living. This stood in front of his cabin, long since demolished, and has grown to be a monarch of its kind. He set out the first apple trees in the spring of 1860, the sprouts having been shipped from New York State. The first child born in the precinct was a son to Mrs. Elizabeth Farmer, the daughter of our subject. The mother is now deceased, but Mr. Farmer is living on the creek. The first school was taught by Mrs. Laughlin on the creek, in the house of a Mr. Callahan, not far from the Sheffer cabin. The first Fourth of July celebration in the western part of Cass County was held near Greenwood in 1858. This was made the occasion of much hilarity in pioneer fashion, and Mr. John Loder mounting a rude stand read with great dignity the Declaration of Independence. All present entered into the spirit of the occasion, and everybody retired from the scene of the festivities feeling that he had done his full duty as an American patriot.

Those years to our subject and his estimable wife, although not devoid of pleasure, were plentifully besprinkled with hardships and privation. They had come to stay, however, and kept up their courage amid scenes and surroundings which would probably have dismayed the people of to-day. They lived not only to see their children grown and settled in comfortable homes, but their grandchildren finally began to play around their door and in due time another generation; before Mr. Sheffer's death he and his wife had six great-grandchildren. Their own household included nine children, namely: Katie A., now Mrs. Ellis Calahan; Elizabeth already spoken of; Frances, now Mrs. L. K. Bell; John, Curtiss, Nelson, Abraham and Aaron. An unnamed infant is also deceased. These two latter, the eldest born, were twins and died in infancy. Mr. Sheffer was prospered in his labors as a farmer and in the building up of a comfortable homestead, which at his death became the heritage of his family and his faithful and devoted wife, who had lived by his side for more than sixty years. They were numbered among the oldest living residents along the western line of the county.

Our subject hurrahed enthusiastically for Gen. William Henry Harrison in 1840 and cast his last vote with no less satisfaction for his grandson in the election of November, 1888. He had been a supporter of the Republican party since its organization. Both he and his estimable wife were members of the Christian Church, in which he had officiated as Elder for more than forty years, and up to the time of his death. He organized the first Sabbath School on Salt Creek and the first Christian Church in the Territory of Nebraska outside of Plattsmouth. Prior to coming West he had been Superintendent of a Sabbath School in Pennsylvania for a period of nine years.

In the fall of 1856, a company of 500 Pawnee Indians came along and drove Mr. Sheffer and his family from their home, taking with them a horse and threatening to do violence if there was any resistance. The Sheffers sought refuge in Plattsmouth, where they remained during the winter. In the spring Mr. S. returned to his claim accompanied by about thirty men, fortified the house, and during the siege which followed captured one of the Pawnees, holding him until Gen. Thayer and his agents could come to their assistance. After the Indians had been driven off Mr. Sheffer went to Plattsmouth after his family, and thereafter they lived in comparative peace and safety.

The first bridge across Salt Creek was built by Mr. Sheffer in the spring of 1857. This was afterward used as a crossing place for emigrants and freighters West, instead of the old Mormon and California trail. It was run on the toll system and proved a fine source of revenue to its architect. Mr. Sheffer came to Nebraska with considerable means, and possessing a strong constitution and an abundance of energy and perseverance, was one of the men most needed at that time in the development of the country. During his residence of over thirty years he had become known to most of the prominent people in the county, and his services as a pioneer and a citizen were fully recognized by those who have watched with intense satisfaction the rapid growth of this now great commonwealth. The death of this honored pioneer, when full of years and honors, though in the course of nature not unexpected, yet evoked much sorrow and sympathy from those who had known him so long and well.

REBUBEN A. CHAPIN. Among the many solid and substantial citizens of Salt Creek Precinct, none are more favorably known or have a more enviable reputation than our subject, who is a carpenter and builder, as well as farmer, owning and operating a highly improved farm of eighty acres on section 33, town 12, range 9. This gentleman is a son of Ashur M. and Mary (Look) Chapin. The father was born in Hartford, Conn., where he was a prominent man, dealing in live stock: horses, cattle, hogs, etc. He died in Monmouth, Ill., aged seventy-six. His grandfather, Asa Chapin, was of Welsh descent. His grandmother's maiden name was Franklin, a direct descendant of the renowned philosopher, Benjamin Franklin.

Our subject is the fifth child and fourth son in a family of twelve children. He was born Nov. 12, 1830, at Bath, Steuben Co., N. Y. When he was yet a boy his parents moved with their family into the heavy forests of Ohio. The place they selected for settlement was six miles from the nearest white man. When he was five years of age his parents removed to Knox County, Ohio, where he attended the public and subscription schools of the neighborhood, and the High School at Mt. Vernon, acquiring a great desire for knowledge, which he has never lost an opportunity to gratify.

After obtaining his education our subject thought it would be well to have a practical knowledge of some mechanical trade. He therefore entered an apprenticeship as a carpenter and builder in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, which trade he completely mastered in all its details. He resided there until he was married to Miss Larinda Chevroul. This lady was of French descent, the daughter of Lemuel Chevroul, of Greenwood, Neb. After his marriage he moved to Lima, Allen Co., Ohio, where in company with his two brothers he erected a planing-mill, manufacturing everything connected with the building business. This he followed successfully for three years, when he went to Saline County, Mo. There he engaged in business as a builder and contractor, employing steadily from fifteen to twenty men.

About this time the war broke out and our subject, for his own safety and the safety of his wife, moved to Monmouth, Warren Co., Ill., where his father was living. At this place he entered the service of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company as bridge-builder, where he remained for several years, when, feeling that the West offered better possibilities than he was able to secure where he then was, he came to Plattsmouth, Neb., with $5 in cash, which sum represented his entire fortune. In December of the same year he came to Salt Creek Precinct, where he built the flouring mill for Messrs. Reed Bros., of Weeping Water. In 1864 he took up a homestead claim of 160 acres. He hired a man to work the farm until his boys became old enough to take charge of it.

Our subject is the father of four children—Eva, Kate, Milton and Edward E. Eva died in Mt. Vernon, Ohio; Milton died in Missouri; Kate married John Beiler, a merchant in Greeley County, Kan., and is the mother of five children living. They are named as follows: Ethel, Bert, Pearl, Verned and Raymond. Edward is a noted operator now at Bradshaw, York Co., Neb., is married to Miss Jessie McKibbon, and they have one child, Fred. Mrs. Chapin died in 1869. After a season he married a Miss Teresa Mefford, a resident of Iowa; she is the daughter of James P. Mefford, now a resident of Salt Creek Precinct. By this union he is the father of six children, three of whom, Jesse O., Ira F. and Tacy A., are living. Lillie, William P., Charles and Sallie are deceased.

There are very few men engaged in the business followed by our subject that have a better or more complete knowledge of it than he. By a systematic course of study and reading, as well as a close observation of the work of other matters in the same line of business, he keeps fully abreast of the times, and is thoroughly informed of all the improvements and details made in his favorite profession. Among all the many fine iron buildings that do credit to the city of Omaha, our subject can lay claim to the honor of erecting the first iron building in the city, which has been followed by so many magnificent specimens of the builder's art, but none are more substantially built or better designed than the first one.

Mr. Chapin recalls many incidents and episodes relating to the old "hard cider" Harrison campaign of 1840, in which he played the role of drummer boy. In his later years he has not forgotten the precepts inculcated by the orators during that campaign, and has ever since been true to the discipline of that party. He has been a Deacon of the Christian Church at Greenwood for six years, and has held the office of Justice of the Peace, being the only public office he has ever filled, preferring to devote his time exclusively to the prosecution of his business.

JOHAN H. HASEMEIER is a representative German-American citizen, residing on a valuable farm of 260 acres on section 29, in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, where he settled in 1867, at which time the land was in a perfectly natural condition. He is a native of Hanover, Germany, where he was born Jan. 15, 1815. He is the son of John and Catherine Hasemeier, both natives of Germany. When our subject was about eight or nine years of age he lost his mother by death; he resided in the old country until he was about seventeen years old, when, with his father, one brother and two sisters, he emigrated to America, taking passage at Havre in a sailing-ship. After a comparatively uneventful voyage of nearly nine weeks they landed at Baltimore, Md.

From Baltimore our subject went to Franklin County, Pa., where he worked on a farm for $5 per month and board. He also performed a large amount of labor for daily wages, for which he received forty cents per day. He lived in Franklin County for a number of years. After he left his parents and brother and sisters in Baltimore, they are supposed to have gone westward to Missouri, where all traces of them are lost, although he has made strong efforts to ascertain their whereabouts, feeling that it would be a great source of consolation and gratification to know the results of their life in the country of their adoption.

During the residence of our subject in Pennsylvania he was married to Mary Potter, Feb. 9, 1848. This lady was born in Washington County, Md., May 12, 1827. Her parents were Daniel and Catherine (Stewart) Potter, and were natives of Germany, settling in Maryland, where their decease occurred. She is one of a family of four children; the following named are supposed to be alive: Barbara, John, Mary and Lewis. Barbara is the wife of John Ray, and lives in Jefferson County, W. Va.; John resides in Noblesville, Ind., and Lewis is supposed to be dead.

In the autumn of 1853 our subject with his wife and two children migrated to Henry County, Ind., where they resided until the fall of 1867, when he removed to Cass County, Neb., purchasing the 160 acres of land on which he now lives. At the time he acquired possession of the land there were no improvements of any kind upon it, but by perseverance and good management our subject has one of the best farms in the precinct. As he has prospered in his adventures, he added to the original purchase at different times, until he now owns 260 acres. At the time of his marriage his entire worldly possessions consisted of $25 in cash, but with this slender start, and by the assistance and advice of his good wife, he has accumulated his present fine property.

The family circle of our subject and his wife has been enlivened by the birth of eight children, four of whom are living, namely: Jacob A., Mary C., Benjamin S. and Charles D. Jacob is a physician in Louisville, Neb.; Mary C. is the wife of James Robertson, Superintendent of the Colorado & Nebraska Stone Quarry, at Weeping Water, Neb.; Benjamin S., resides in Louisville, this State, and Charles D. is at home. The deceased children were named Clara C., John F., William and Julia.

Mr. Hasemeier has lived continuously on his original purchase of land, to the improvement and cultivation of which he has devoted his entire time and energies. The buildings are of the most substantial and solid character. The barns and other necessary out-buildings are well located, and very conveniently arranged for the purposes for which they are designed. His residence is finely located, large and roomy, neatly and tastefully furnished throughout, and is a place in which his good wife can take great comfort and satisfaction, which she has most certainly earned. For the past forty years she has been an able adviser and companion to her husband, cheerfully bearing her share of the burdens of life, and contributing largely to his success, besides devoting her motherly attention to her family, the surviving members of which do her great credit, and of whom she may well be proud. Mr. and Mrs. H. are members of the United Brethren Church, in which society they take an active and substantial interest. In politics he is thoroughly Republican. Public-spirited, he is a hearty supporter of every proposition designed to advance the prosperity of the people.

L EONARD C. W. MURRY is a pioneer of Cass County of 1855. The pioneer element of Cass County has no more worthy factor than the subject of this biography, who, with his estimable wife, began housekeeping on an 80-acre farm four miles south of the present city of Plattsmouth in the spring of 1870. They lived there until 1882, then moved to a farm on section 30, in Plattsmouth Precinct, where they have since resided. This embraces 160 acres of good land, which, with the exception of having been plowed, was at the time of purchase destitute of improvement, there being no buildings. Mr. M. has put up a comfortable residence, a barn and other out-buildings, planted an orchard, fenced the fields, and by degrees added the [Faint, illegible text, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page]

[Faint signature or name]

[Faint signature or name]

*Yours Truly
Lewis Bird*

other conveniences necessary for the successful prosecution of agriculture. Besides a large amount of labor involved he has expended over $4,000 in money, and has a homestead at once desirable and attractive.

Mr. Murry is essentially a Western man, having been born in Moniteau County, Mo., June 6, 1848. His parents were Jonathan and Elizabeth (Berger) Murry (see sketch of his brother Joshua), and were among the very earliest settlers of that part of Missouri, going there with their parents from Tennessee when small children. They were reared and married in Moniteau County, where they lived until 1851, then removed to Mills County, Iowa, where they lived two years, and thence came to Nebraska Territory in 1855. The father selected a tract of land north of the present city of Rock Bluff, where the family lived a number of years, and where their thirteen children were reared to maturity.

The father of our subject died at the home farm in this precinct. He had been a pioneer of three Territories, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska, in fact his entire life was spent on the frontier. The mother is still living, making her home with her son Alvares, in Smith County, Kan. Leonard was the tenth child of the family, and was a little lad of five years when he came with his parents to Nebraska. There were then many Indians in the vicinity of the present site of Rock Bluff, and probably about six white families. Our subject labored with his father in the development of the Nebraska homestead, and early in life began to form his own plans for the future. A few months after reaching his majority he was married, Sept. 2, 1869, to Miss Rebecca A., daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth Wiles, of Platts-mouth Precinct. This lady was born Feb. 1, 1857, in Missouri, and of their union there are eleven children living: Charles A., Clarence, John, Isabel, Laura J., Ida May, Leonard C. W., Jr., David, Florence, Eddie and Christopher C. Cordelia, the second child, died at the age of eighteen months.

When the father of our subject began life in Nebraska he was without means, and got his first cow and their limited stock of household furniture with money earned by mauling rails at fifty cents per hundred. The mother added to the family income by weaving and spinning. Thus commenced the married life of the young people, in wide contrast to the condition of most of the newly wedded people of to-day, who would consider themselves greatly abused by fate or Providence were they compelled to make the shifts and turns which pioneers cheerfully underwent together. Mr. and Mrs. Murry have gathered around them scores of friends during their long residence in this county. They are both members in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. M., politically, is a staunch Republican.

— ❦ —

LEWIS BIRD. The farming interests of Liberty Precinct and of this part of Cass County are no better represented than by our subject. He came to this county and precinct in 1863, being then in the prime of a vigorous and self-reliant manhood, and casting his lot with the pioneers of the county who had preceded him, he purchased most of the land he now owns, which was then but slightly improved. The years that have followed have been for him years of busy, patient toil, and although, in common with other settlers of this section of the West, he has met with various hardships and discouragements, which he has faced bravely, he has kept steadily onward until to-day he may be classed among the most fortunate and successful farmers of this precinct. His farm is provided with neat and substantial buildings, is well improved and well stocked, has a good supply of running water, and with its 280 acres finely located on sections 9, 10 and 4, is justly considered a first-class farm in its appointments.

Mr. Bird was born in Sussex County, N. J., June 14, 1833, and came of good old New Jersey and New England stock, and was well reared by his parents. His father, Joseph Bird, was also a native of New Jersey, and during his residence there, after he was old enough to learn a trade, he became a shoemaker. He was married in his native State to Miss Rachel Young, who was of Jersey birth and New England parentage, coming of a good family. In 1836 Joseph Bird and his family started on a pilgrimage to the State of Indiana, which was then considered to lie in the Far West, although some of the country beyond the Mississippi, particularly Missouri, had been partly settled for several years, and Iowa was beginning to attract the attention of settlers, and a few had already made their homes there. After arriving at his destination in Indiana Mr. Bird located in the wilds of Delaware County, becoming one of its pioneers, and turned his attention to farming. He met with unqualified success in his new vocation, and improved a fine, large estate, upon which he made his home until death claimed him at the age of sixty-four years, in 1867. His wife survived him ten years, dying at the age of threescore years and ten. They were honest, hard-working people, and richly deserved the good fortune that followed their labors. They were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which the father was Class-Leader for years.

Lewis Bird was the fifth son and child in the family of eight sons and two daughters born to his parents. He was reared to manhood on the old homestead that his father had reclaimed from the primeval forests of Indiana, he having been but a child of three years when his parents moved to that State. He received a good common-school education, and a thorough, practical drill in the calling that he has since pursued with such success, and he remained an inmate of the parental household, affording his father active assistance in the management of the farm until his marriage, which occurred in Jay County, Ind. The maiden name of his wife was Emeline R. Current, and she was born in West Virginia, Dec. 27, 1830. She was a daughter of Peter and Rebecca (Jones) Current, natives of West Virginia. They were there reared, and after marriage and the birth of most of their children, they moved to Jay County, Ind., in 1855, having first come to that State in 1832, and settled in Henry County in its pioneer days. They moved onto a farm in Jay County, and there the mother died in 1866, when past threescore years. The father later came to Nebraska and lived with his daughter, Mrs. Norris, in Rock Bluff Precinct, until his death in 1870, at the age of seventy-three years. He and his wife were people of great respectability, and were sound Methodists in their religious belief. Mrs. Bird was well educated in Henry County, Ind., and taught school for a time before her marriage. Her pleasant wedded life has been blessed to her and her husband by the birth of six children, all of whom are living, and the following is recorded of them: Rachel J. and Rebecca A. are twins, and the former is the wife of W. P. Webster, a jeweler in Lander, Wyo.; Rebecca is the wife of Aaron Porter, a farmer of Custer County, Neb.; Olive is the wife of Albert Searl, who is Deputy Clerk in the Treasurer's office in Gosper County, this State; Florence is the wife of Charles Mougey, a farmer in Custer County, Neb.; Maggie is the wife of Edward Mougey, and they live on Mr. Bird's farm in this precinct; Osta lives with her parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Bird have a very attractive home on section 10, and all who come beneath its hospitable roof are sure of a genial and cordial welcome from the pleasant and social host and hostess. They are bright and intelligent people, and have many warm friends in this community. They are influential members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is an official. Mr. Bird is a strong advocate of temperance, both in word and deed, and votes with the Prohibition party.

As one of the best representative farmers of the county, the portrait of Mr. Bird, on an adjoining page, is peculiarly appropriate in this work.

GEORGE W. MAYFIELD. The Louisville Observer was established by the subject of this sketch in 1883, and he is still its editor and proprietor. He has made of it a newsy local sheet, and impregnated it with his own uncompromising Republican principles. It is issued every Friday, and has become an institution quite indispensable to the people along the northern line of the county.

The city of Bloomington, Ind., claims Mr. Mayfield as one of its natives, his birth taking place Aug. 22, 1827. His father, Leroy Mayfield, was a native of Kentucky, and married Miss Martha Basket, of South Carolina. The maternal grandfather, William Basket, was a native of the same State, and spent his last years in Indiana. Leroy Mayfield removed from the Blue Grass regions to Indiana during its pioneer days, locating near the present city of Bloomington when it was a small village. Here our subject was reared, and received his education in the common schools. In 1855 he drifted westward to Nebraska Territory, a single man, and taking up his abode near the present city of Plattsmouth when it was a hamlet of a few houses, employed himself working on a farm.

The same year of his arrival here young Mayfield engaged in border warfare with the Indians, under the command of Gov. Thayer, proceeding up the Loup and Elkhorn Rivers to protect the settlers from the threatened outbreak of the savages. He was thus occupied three months, during which time he took part in two or three skirmishes with no very serious results. Upon returning to this county he stationed himself at Plattsmouth, and later assisted in the establishment of the Republican, of Weeping Water, with which he was connected about one year. From that time until 1883 he was occupied at Weeping Water as above stated, then coming to Louisville he started the Observer, of which he is making a success.

Our subject found his bride in this county, being married, in 1858, to Miss Emeline Todd, a native of Nebraska, and the daughter of Jefferson and Mary E. Todd. This union resulted in the birth of eight children, who are located as follows: Clarence G. is engaged in farming in Louisville Precinct; Eugene is editor of the South Omaha Times; Winnie is the wife of Frank Secord, agent of the Union Pacific Railroad at Omaha; Albert U. is publisher of the Elmwood Echo; Leroy J. assists his father in the publication of the Louisville Observer; Valentine, Georgia and Oland are at home with their parents.

GEORGE T. CUTLER. The industrial interests of the western part of this county find an admirable representative in the subject of this sketch, who, in addition to being the manufacturer of bee-hives, is a dealer in bee-keepers' supplies, and also the proprietor of a grist-mill and carriage-shops at Greenwood. He came to this place in March, 1879, and settled first on a farm in the vicinity of the village. Four and one-half years later he practically abandoned the pursuits of agriculture, and by degrees turned his attention to his present enterprises. He is a gentleman of remarkable industry and forethought, of an inventive turn of mind and more than ordinary business abilities. Personally, he is of commanding stature and fine intelligence, and with all these qualities combined it is but natural that he should be a leader of his community.

The origin of family names is a question which is frequently discussed, and the name of Cutter centuries ago was applied to an English family of prominence in the Old World, who evinced particular adaptation for the manufacture of that article of commerce suggested by the patronymic. The branch from which our subject sprang, the records indicate, were from the beginning notable for their fine proportions physically, and no less for their intelligence and moral worth. While they performed feats of extraordinary strength and daring, they were alike high-minded, and possessed great integrity of character, scorning a mean action. These qualities, handed down from father to son, seem to be in nowise dying out, for the present generation is probably as noted as were those of ages gone, both in this respect and as regards mechanical genius.

Of New England ancestry and a native of the Bay State, our subject was born in Bernardston, Franklin County, Aug. 18, 1844, and is the son of Zenas and Lucy (Wood) Cutler, the former a native of Vermont. The paternal grandparents during the early years of their married life lived in Guilford, that State, but later removed to Wilmington. Grandfather Thomas Cutler was a typical Green Mountain boy, and one of nine brothers, all of whom were of unusual stature, strong of muscle and brave in disposition. None of them were less than six feet in height, and none weighed less than 200 pounds. Thomas Cutler traced his forefathers to one of three brothers who emigrated to America from England during the Colonial times. Zenas Cutler died at Greenfield, Mass., in January, 1881, at the age of seventy-six years. In early manhood he had operated a saw and grist mill at Northfield, Mass., but later purchased and lived upon a farm. The mother passed away after the decease of her husband that same year, in March, at the age of seventy-three, and the remains of both were laid to rest in the same grave at Bernardston, Mass. Their household included seven children, namely: Lucy J., George T., Leroy Z., Nhum S., Laura S., George T., our subject, and Ella B. Of these four are living, and located mostly in Massachusetts.

Mr. Cutler spent his boyhood and youth at the homestead farm in his native county, a period of his life which was more than ordinarily frolicsome and overflowing with good spirits. Much to the regret of his excellent parents, he was a boy who did not take remarkably kindly to his books, preferring to be abroad in the fields or engaged in athletic sports. He assisted his parents around the homestead until a youth of twenty years, and then began an apprenticeship at carriage-making. It was not long before he developed unusual mechanical genius, and he did not by any means confine himself to the one department of labor. He remembers hearing his mother tell of the time before he could speak plainly, when he used to hang to her skirts and point to the hammer, which in New England style had its separate place on the kitchen wall. He would not be appeased until she took it down from its place and gave it to him. He would then amuse himself for hours by driving nails into the wall. A little later he began using other tools, and has kept up the habit to this day. When sixteen years of age he was considered a master mechanic.

A few years later young Cutler took a position with the Wauseon Car Company, at Springfield, Mass., where he distinguished himself as a competent artisan, receiving many compliments for the beauty and correctness of his work. His father's declining years finally necessitated his presence at home, and about 1865 he returned to the farm and assumed its responsibilities. In the meantime, however, he did not abandon the use of tools, and put up his first wagon-shop in his native village. This structure occupied an area 22x34 feet, and had in connection with it a blacksmith-shop. In the year 1867, having in view the establishment of a home of his own, Mr. Cutler was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Goodenough, and soon afterward they removed to Montague, Mass., where Mr. Cutler was tendered a position in the Goss' piano case factory, where he continued a period of five years. Here his skill and industry obtained ready recognition, and in due time he was given the position of general foreman in the veneering department.

After occupying the above-named position a period of one and one-half years, Mr. Cutler was solicited by his brother Nhum S. to become a partner with him in a boot and shoe manufacturing enterprise. George T. was to have charge of the machinery of the establishment, and his brother was to assume the business management of the concern, which was located at Burrinston. They operated very successfully together until the panic of 1873, when collections were extremely difficult to make, and the business suffered greatly thereby. In addition to this, the confinement of the shop had its effect upon our subject, and resolving upon a change of scene and occupation, he turned his eyes toward the young and rapidly growing State of Nebraska.

Not long after Mr. Cutler was stricken with the Western fever we find him snugly located upon a tract of land in Greenwood Precinct, this county, which, he states, proved a great contrast to life in New England. In most respects it was for the better, and he remained upon the farm a number of years. The habits of his youth, however, still controlled him, and he longed to again exercise his mechanical skill, which years of experience and observation convinced him would enable him to outstrip his former efforts. Accordingly, in the spring of 1884, he selected a building site in the village of Greenwood and put up his present shop. This is a substantial frame structure of commodious dimensions, and is equipped with the various appliances necessary for the several departments of the industry in which he is engaged. There is a steam engine and an abundance of wood-working machinery, and in addition to the manufacture of bee-hives and carriage-making, there is a feed-grinder and corn-sheller, and the manner in which they are patronized by the people along the western line of the county indicates their importance and usefulness.

In addition to the manufacture of road and farm vehicles, Mr. Cutler is the agent of outside parties, carriage and wagon manufacturers of the East. Greenwood only needs a few more such men as Mr. Cutler to quickly raise it to the standard of a first-class city. Progressive and liberal-minded, he takes a genuine interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of his adopted State, and has borne no unimportant part in developing the best interests of Greenwood Precinct. He votes the straight Republican ticket, and is a man of progressive views, one who keeps himself well posted upon current events and possesses an admirable fund of information.

Mrs. Nancy (Goodenough) Cutler was born at Brattleboro, Vt., July 5, 1844, and is a lady of fine culture and accomplishments. In fact, we are assured that her husband has found in her the qualities suggested by her maiden name. She is the offspring of an excellent family, the daughter of Simon F. and Emily F. (Chase) Goodenough, who were natives of Vermont. Mr. G. was a farmer by occupation, and, with his excellent wife, is now deceased. Their family consisted of six children, four of whom are living, and located mostly in Vermont.

The family represents all that is intelligent and praiseworthy, people who, as far as the record goes back, have been celebrated—the women for their virtues, and the men for their fine business qualifications and usefulness as citizens and members of society. Mr. and Mrs. Cutler occupy a pleasant home, which is the frequent resort of hosts of friends. They have no children.

~~~~~

GEORGE PHILLIP NICKEL, a prosperous farmer, located on section 32 of Elmwood Precinct, where he owns and operates 160 acres of land, in addition to which he leases forty acres, is the oldest son and second child in a family of seven children, born to his parents. He was born Sept. 25, 1838, in Germany, where he lived with his parents until he was fourteen years of age, when he came to America, being induced to make the change by his uncle, George P., who resided in Pekin, Ill., but is now deceased. After his arrival in this country he worked at the blacksmithing trade, but this proving injurious to his health he abandoned it, and at the age of seventeen began farming for himself. In 1867 he was married to Catherine Eidenmiller, who was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. Her parents, with their family, came to America when she was but six years old, and settled at Little York, Pa. Removing from there they went to Illinois in 1865.

Mr. Nickel came to Nebraska on a prospecting tour in 1873, where he purchased land from the Burlington & Missouri River Railway Company, and came out with his family in 1875, which at that time consisted of his wife and five children. They endured many hardships and privations, were eaten out by grasshoppers, but did not become discouraged, but kept at work on their home, feeling sure that their perseverance would be ultimately rewarded. On account of his inability to raise any crops for two or three successive years, he was not able to meet the demands of the railroad company for the payment of their land, so he was obliged to surrender his home to them.

A family of ten children have been born to our subject and his wife, named respectively: Mary E., now dead; Anna C.; George P., Jr.; Martin and Emma L. were born in Illinois; William, Edward H., Charles C. (deceased), Irene Mabel and Nellie May, were born in Nebraska. The father of our subject, John, and mother, Christine, were born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. His father died in 1856, fifty-three years of age, and his mother still lives in the old home in Germany, and is now seventy-seven years old.

In the face of many discouragements and trials Mr. Nickel has succeeded in securing for himself and family one of the most eligibly located and well-improved farms in the precinct. To bring the land to its present high state of cultivation has required, at the hands of the owner, the most strict economy and thorough application. His well-kept fences, and comfortable and conveniently arranged buildings, bespeak a man thoroughly informed in the business in which he is engaged. It is not intended to give Mr. Nickel individually the full credit for this most desirable state of affairs, for his good wife has borne an equal amount of the privations and labor required to bring it about.

She is a lady who has always been found by her husband's side, sharing equally with him the burdens of a pioneer's life, and she has contributed her portion of labor which is required to make the desert blossom as the rose. Her husband recognizes this fact, and it is only one of the many illustrations we have before us of the truism that "'tis the hand that rocks the cradle that moves the world." Mr. N. has served his neighbors as School Treasurer, that being the extent of his public services to date. In politics he is a straight Republican.

ANDREW PITTMAN. The southeastern portion of this county contains many fine farms, but none probably more attractive or valuable than that belonging to the subject of this sketch. He is a man of energy and enterprise, and in addition to general agriculture, has built up quite a reputation as a stock-raiser. His land comprises 250 acres, lying on sections 4 and 5, Liberty Precinct, and most of which is under a fine state of cultivation, fertile, and well adapted to general farm purposes. The buildings compare favorably with those of the neighboring agriculturists, while the fat cattle of the Holstein breed, together with the horses and swine, the ample stabling room, the farm machinery, and last but not least, the comfortable and commodious residence, form a picture of country life delightful to contemplate.

The improvements which are noticeable upon the farm of Mr. Pittman have been brought about by his own efforts, he having come to the place when it was little removed from its primitive condition. He had prior to his arrival in Nebraska been a resident of Harrison County, Ind., whence he removed in 1876. In Heth Township, that county, occurred his birth, Sept. 1, 1831. His father, David Pittman, also a farmer by occupation, was a native of Shenandoah County, Va., and the son of John Pittman, who was also born in the Old Dominion. The latter married a Virginia lady, and they lived in Shenandoah County until after the birth of all their children. Thence they migrated to Harrison County, Ind., settling among the earliest pioneers of Heth Township, about 1820, before Indiana had become a State. There John Pittman and his estimable wife spent the remainder of their days, and passed peacefully away at the homestead which they had built up from the wilderness, dying at a ripe old age.

The Pittman family is of Holland-Dutch descent, and the grandparents of our subject spoke mostly in the language of their native country. Their son David in his boyhood attended the pioneer schools of Harrison County, Ind., where he was reared to man's estate. He married Miss Catherine Eddleman, who was of Pennsylvania birth and parentage, her progenitors having been residents of the Keystone State through many generations. Her parents removed to Indiana when she was a young lady, and there she met her future husband.

After marriage the parents of our subject began life together on a new farm, and in due time the household circle was completed by the birth of five children, of whom Andrew was the third. The wife and mother departed this life at the birth of her last child, about 1834, when in the prime of life. She was a lady possessing all the Christian virtues, and her name is held by her children in most affectionate remembrance. David Pittman was in due time married the second time, his wife being Miss Mary Young, and they are both now deceased. In 1873, leaving Indiana, they came to this State, settling in Liberty Precinct, and here spent their last days, both dying in the same year, 1881. The father, politically, was a strong adherent of the Democratic party, and a member in good standing of the Presbyterian Church.

Our subject grew to man's estate in his native county, and was there married to Miss Elizabeth Conrad, who was born not far from the home of her husband, in Harrison County, Ind., May 19, 1831. Her parents, George and Nancy (Wiseman) Conrad, were natives of Pennsylvania, and like the Pittmans, of Holland-Dutch stock. They came to Indiana in their youth, and were married in Harrison County, where the husband took up land, and where both parents spent the remainder of their lives, dying well advanced in years. Mrs. Pittman was one of the younger members of a large family. Two brothers and two sisters are yet living. She was educated in the district school, and remained under the home roof until her marriage.

To Andrew Pittman and wife there were born six children, two of whom are now deceased. George married Miss Nevie Koontz, and became the father of two children, Glenn and Jessie, and died at the age of thirty-three years. The other child deceased was a daughter named Emma A., who passed away at the tender age of three years. Of the survivors the record is as follows: Thomas married Miss Sarah M. Smoots, and they live on a farm in York County, this State; Charles W. married Miss Fannie Haas, and is engaged in the livery business at Waco, this State; Jacob H. took to wife Miss Anna Mauck, of Harrison County, Ind.; they have one daughter, Gertie, and he is operating the farm of his father; this son is also owner of eighty acres elsewhere in the precinct. Hattie M. is yet at home.

Mr. Pittman, politically, is a Democrat. While in Indiana he and his wife joined the German Reformed Church, of which they continue to be members. A view of the homestead of Mr. Pittman is shown on another page of this work.

JOHN A. HENNINGS. Not a furrow had been turned upon the present farm of our subject when he settled upon it in the spring of 1874, and no buildings. He realized that there was before him an Herculean task, but he was possessed of that sturdy and persistent courage which led him to believe that from it he could construct a homestead in due time which would serve to shelter him in his later years, and prove the source of a comfortable income. Happily his anticipations have been realized, and he is now the owner of one of the best farms in the northeastern part of the county. He has the manliness to acknowledge that his labors in their results might have been far different had he been possessed of a companion and helpmate less capable and efficient than the lady who has borne his name and stood by his side for a period of fifteen years. Mrs. Hennings has been in all respects the equal of her husband in diligence and industry, while her careful management has had a vast influence over the happiness of the home and the success of her husband.

The Hennings homestead comprises 280 acres of land, and is finely situated on section 21, Eight Mile Grove Precinct. The proprietor, a native of Germany, was born near the famous old city of Hamburg, March 21, 1848, and is the son of John and Sophia Hennings, who emigrated to America fifty-one years ago, and are now living not far from the homestead of their son. Both have passed their threescore years and ten. Of the children born to them there are living, John A., our subject; Charles, Henry and Ferdinand, all living in the same precinct. John A. was in the sixth year of his age when he crossed the Atlantic, and the family first settled in Washington County, Wis. He was there reared to man's estate amid the wild scenes of pioneer life, when Indians were their neighbors for a number of years. He thus received only a limited education, but he grew up strong of muscle and stout of heart, and was well fitted for life's future duties. He was at an early age taught to make himself useful, and acquired those habits of industry and economy which in later life proved the key to his success.

Mr. Hennings came to this county in the fall of 1871, and purchased eighty acres of land on section 21, paying therefor the sum of $580. It was considered very good land, but had never been cultivated. Our subject, still in the enjoyment of single blessedness, proceeded with the improvement of his purchase, and in due time found himself in a condition to establish domestic ties. He had made the acquaintance of Miss Margaret Jerdine in this county, and they were married at her home, Feb. 10, 1874. Mrs. Hennings was born in Hartford, Conn., Sept. 2, 1855, and is the daughter of David and Margaret Jerdine, the former of whom died in this county about 1864. The mother is still living, making her home with her sons in this county. The Jerdine family originated in Scotland, and there the parents of Mrs. Hennings were born. The father emigrated to America when a boy, and the mother when a young girl fifteen years old. They lived in Connecticut some years after their marriage, but came West in 1856, taking up their abode in this county among its earliest pioneers, and eleven years before Nebraska was admitted into the Union as a State. The father secured a tract of land in the vicinity of the present flourishing city of Plattsmouth, when there was probably upon its site not a solitary building. He was only permitted to live eight years thereafter, his death taking place Dec. 20, 1864.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerdine were the parents of five children, of whom Mrs. Hennings was the eldest born. Her sister Mary is the wife of August Bomahk, of Centre Precinct, this county; Ellen married Henry Kahne, and lives in Centre Precinct; David and Alexander are residents of this county. To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born eight children, namely: Henry J. and John W., deceased; Charles H., Emma M., Maggie J., William C., John E. and Louis.

Mr. Hennings cast his first Presidential vote for Hayes, and has since been a staunch supporter of Republican principles. He has served as Moderator in his school district, and is in favor of every measure to improve the county and elevate society. Mrs. Hennings is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, attending services at Eight Mile Grove.

WILLIAM SNYDER, one of the honored pioneers of Nebraska, settled in this county in May of 1859, improved a tract of land, and battled successfully with the difficulties of life in a new settlement. He is now in possession of a comfortable property, and has contributed his full quota to the growth and development of Southern Nebraska.

A native of the Old Dominion, our subject was born in Highland County, Jan. 1, 1830, and lived there until September, 1857, being then a young man of twenty-seven years. His parents, Abraham and Susan (Heavener) Snyder, were also natives of Virginia, to which the paternal grandparents had removed from their native State of Pennsylvania, being among the earliest settlers locating at the head of the Potomac River.

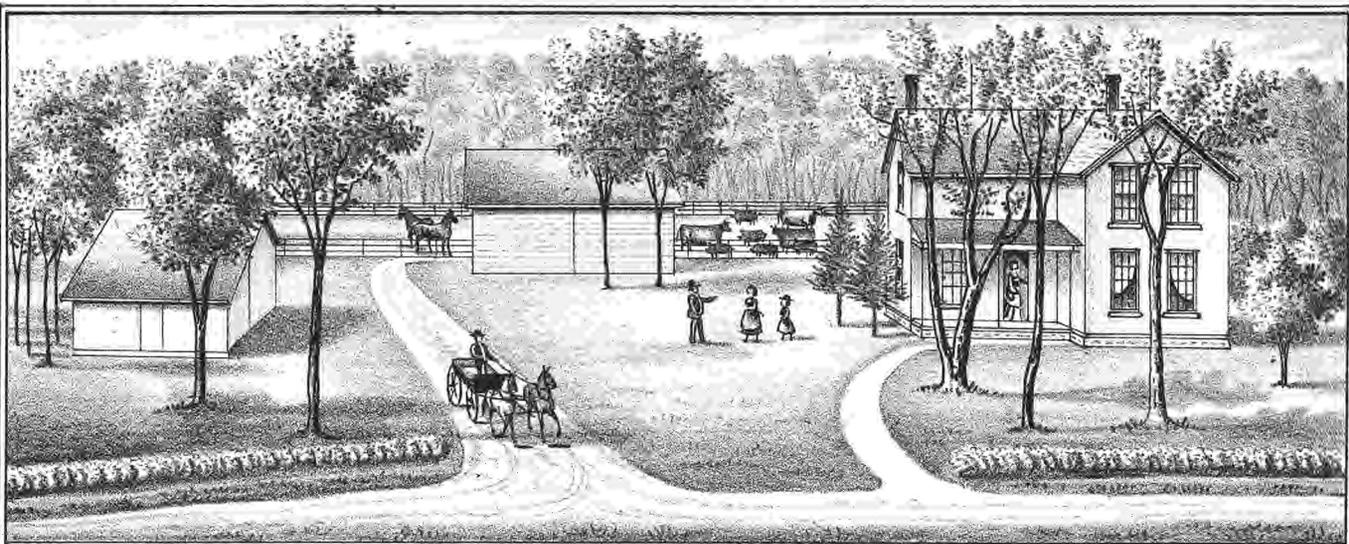

Mr. Snyder acquired a common-school education in his native township, and before leaving the Old Dominion fortified himself for the further struggle of life by taking to himself a wife and helpmate, being married, Dec. 20, 1855, to Miss Elizabeth Beverage. This lady was the daughter of George and Hannah (Heavener) Beverage, also natives of Virginia, where they were reared and married and became the parents of ten children. Of these Mrs. Snyder was the third in order of birth, and besides herself six others are living, being residents mostly of Nebraska and Virginia.

About two years after his marriage, Mr. Snyder, accompanied by his young wife and his parents, started for Scott County, Iowa, Sept. 15, 1857, making the journey overland, and being five weeks and three days upon the road. They settled upon a tract of wild land, upon which they labored two years, and then in April, 1859, set out for Nebraska Territory, making the journey by teams, as before, and arriving at the embryo town of Plattsmouth May 13 following. There were then but a few houses to mark the site of the present flourishing city. The Snyder family rented a house on the farm of Mr. A. B. Taylor, about two miles west of town, and our subject commenced working by the day, laboring thus for a period of two years.

At the expiration of this time Mr. Snyder purchased eighty acres of land on section 27, in Plattsmouth Precinct, where he has since resided. Upon this no attempt whatever has been made at improvement. Mr. S. and his father put up a small frame house, and began in earnest the cultivation of the soil. They had brought with them one horse and an old carriage, which our subject traded as part pay for his farm. Their dwelling was built of cottonwood lumber, Mr. S. cutting the trees and hauling the logs with his father's team. He and the latter worked together in the improvement of a farm until the death of the father, which occurred April 2, 1872, when he was seventy-three years old. The mother is still living, having now arrived at the advanced age of eighty-two years, and makes her home with her children.

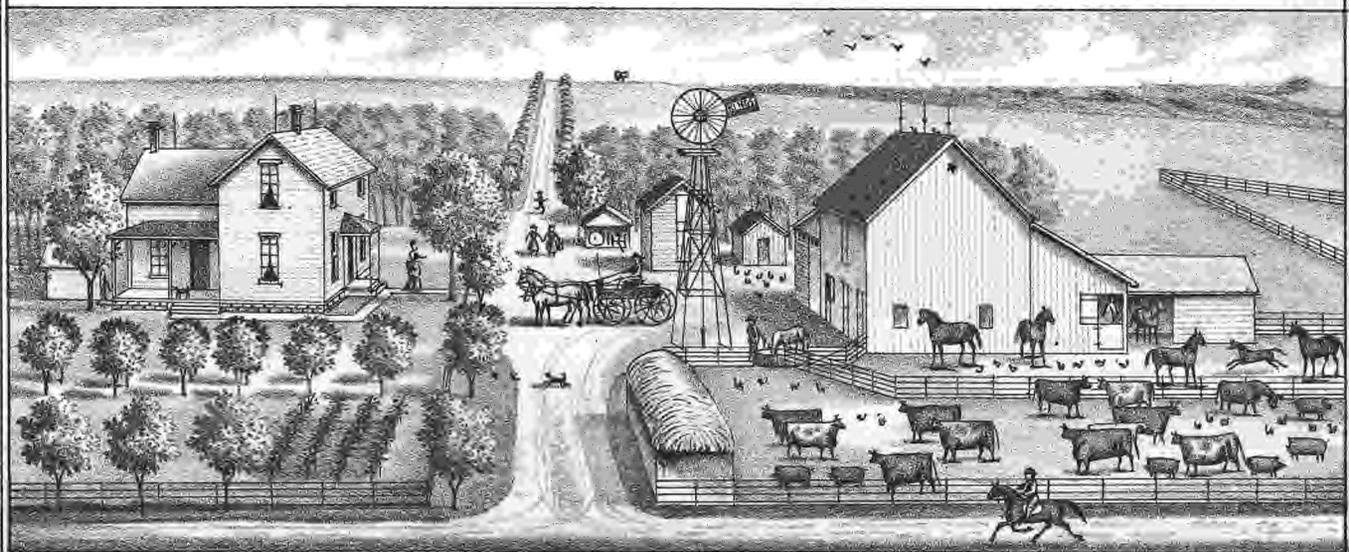

The Snyder homestead embraces now 200 acres of finely cultivated land, with good improvements, including a substantial dwelling, barns, and the various other structures for the shelter of stock and the storage of grain. The estate is one of the most important landmarks in the history of Cass County. A windmill carries water from a never-failing well to whatever place it is required, and Mr. Snyder is supplied with all the modern machinery necessary for the successful prosecution of agriculture. He has a goodly assortment of live stock, including horses, cattle and swine, and is rated as one of the most thorough and skillful farmers of his precinct. The family occupy a fine position socially, being widely and favorably known throughout this part of the county.

RESIDENCE OF J. E. ANDRUS, SEC. 34. TIPTON PRECINCT, CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF ANDREW PITTMAN, SEC. 4. (10-13) LIBERTY PRECINCT, CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF E. E. WILLIAMS, SEC. 6. WEEPING WATER PRECINCT, CASS CO.

Mr. Snyder was accompanied to Nebraska by two brothers and one of his wife's brothers, in addition to his father's family. Andrew and John Snyder for a number of years carried on a successful freighting business from Plattsmouth to Denver and other important points. The brothers also broke prairie for the settlers around. Andrew died of consumption in San Francisco, Cal., July 15, 1872. John died in Omaha in September, 1884. John Beverage, the brother of Mrs. Snyder, is a resident of Omaha.

Mr. and Mrs. Snyder have had born to them three children, viz.: Peter died when nearly two years of age; Amanda is the wife of Charles Jean. They are engaged in farming in this township. George W. is single and at home. In politics Mr. Snyder is a staunch Democrat.

ADAM HEIL. To the German Fatherland Nebraska is largely indebted for the development of her rich resources. The subject of this sketch, now a man of seventy-four years, and who has since the spring of 1870 been a resident of Eight Mile Grove Precinct, first opened his eyes to the light in the Province of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, May 8, 1814. He was reared to manhood amid the scenes and surroundings of his birthplace, and received a good education in his native tongue. When a youth of fifteen years he began his apprenticeship at the trade of weaver, which he followed until emigrating to America in the summer of 1851.

Our subject had in the meantime been married in Germany, in 1846, to Miss Magdalena Schafer, and there were born to them in their native Empire two children, Wendel and William.

Not satisfied with his condition or his prospects upon the soil of Germany Mr. Heil finally decided to seek his fortunes in America. Gathering together his personal effects and his little family, he secured passage at Antwerp on a sailing-vessel, and after an ocean voyage of forty-two days they landed safely at New York City. Thence they journeyed to Tazewell County, Ill., and Mr. Heil entered upon the pursuit of agriculture, which he followed in the Prairie State until coming to this county, in the spring of 1870.

The fine large farm of our subject, the property which he has accumulated by his own perseverance and industry, embraces 320 acres of improved land, whereon he has erected substantial buildings. There are few who can tell him anything new about pioneer life, for he has experienced its hardships both in Illinois and Nebraska. In addition to this, soon after his arrival in America he met with a dire affliction in the death of his wife, which occurred July 14, 1851, the day after they arrived in Tazewell County, Ill. He was thus obliged to suffer a season of inconvenience and trouble incident to the care of his motherless children, but in October, 1852, was the second time married, to Miss Mary Lautenschlager, then a resident of Illinois.

This second marriage of our subject resulted in the birth of six children, only three of whom are living, namely: George, Henry and Elizabeth. They make their homes in this county. The eldest son, William H., is one of the most enterprising young farmers of Eight Mile Grove Precinct, and remains with his father, assisting in the management of the homestead. He was born in Tazewell County, Ill., and since coming to the State of Nebraska, in the spring of 1870, has given his attention mainly to the development of the property which his father then secured. He is intelligent and industrious, and has received a practical education. There are few among the younger men along the northern line of the county who occupy a more enviable position, or whose talents have better fitted them for a worthy and honorable career. As the father is gradually laying off the mantle of care and labor it is being shifted to the worthy shoulders of the son, who, as the elder representative of the family, is naturally looked up to by the other members with that respect and consideration which are his due, on account of the fidelity to duty and reliability of character which are especially his own.

William H. Hail votes the Democratic ticket, and although having large property interests to look after, still keeps in mind the welfare of the people around him, and especially the rising generation. He believes in the establishment and maintenance of schools, and serves as a Director in his district. He has been quite prominent in local politics, serving frequently as Chairman of the Democratic Committee. He continues in the enjoyment of single blessedness, and it is predicted by those who know him best that he is carefully paving the way to a successful future.

WALTER CUTFORTH. The business element of Louisville recognizes in the subject of this sketch one of its most capable and enterprising men. He represents the hardware and farm implement trade, carrying also stoves, tinware, and the other commodities included in this branch of merchandising. He came to this county in the fall of 1873, having in view agricultural pursuits, and settling upon a farm south of Louisville. A year later, however, he sold out, having resolved to invest his capital in town. He first established a livery business, which he conducted successfully a term of six years, then, selling out, he became interested in grain and coal. A year later we find him established as a hardware merchant. He has a choice and well-selected stock of goods in all departments, and is a man occupying a good position both in social and business circles.

A native of Adams County, Ill., Mr. Cutforth was born July 30, 1847, and comes of excellent ancestry, his parents being of Scotch and English descent. Upon emigrating to this country both families settled in New England, and later George Cut-forth, the father of our subject, married Miss Jane Marston. The latter was born in Maine, and was the daughter of James Marston, the father a sea captain, who, upon retiring from ocean life, migrated to Adams County, Ill. He was married in Maine, and later occupied himself at farming. He and his estimable wife spent their last years in Adams County, Ill.

George Cutforth, the father of our subject, was a native of England, and in 1835 emigrated to America. Two years later we find him in Adams County, Ill., of which he remained a resident until his death, Oct. 11, 1888. His last years had been spent in the town of Barnard, Adams County. The wife and mother preceded her husband to the silent land, in 1871. Their family consisted of twelve children, nine sons and three daughters, six of whom are deceased; the others are living mostly in Illinois.

The subject of this biography acquired a common-school education, and remained on the farm with his parents until reaching his majority. Then, setting out in life for himself, he emigrated westward, coming to this county, and entering upon the career which has proved so successful. With him came his young wife, formerly Miss Sarah J. Merrill, of Adams County, Ill., to whom he had been married Oct. 3, 1871. Mrs. Cutforth was born Nov. 25, 1845, and is the daughter of Abijas and Percilla (Cunningham) Merrill, who were natives of Pennsylvania, and are now deceased. Of this union there are no children.

Mr. Cutforth, politically, is a sound Republican, and has been quite prominent in the affairs of Louisville. He officiated as a member of the School Board for a period of twelve years, and as a member of the City Council five years. He has frequently served as Chairman of the same, and in society matters belongs to Cass Lodge No. 146, I. O. O. F., at Plattsmouth. He looks back upon a career in which he may reasonably consider himself uniformly fortunate, the result of the sound common sense with which nature endowed him, and the impulse to honesty and uprightness, which have proved to him better friends than silver or gold. He began in life without means, and the necessity for self-reliance bred within him those traits of character which have yielded him success. Mr. Cutforth has among his household relics a copy of the history of England by counties, which was printed in 1771, and which was originally the property of his paternal great-grandfather. This ancient volume is still in a good state of preservation, and it is scarcely necessary to add becomes more valuable each year, as one among the relics of the past, which, if lost, could scarcely be replaced.

SIMEON I. LONG. Among the thrifty and successful farmers of Cass County who are represented in this biographical work no one is more worthy of notice than the gentleman whose name heads this sketch. His home is in Plattsmouth Precinct, where he owns two valuable, highly improved farms, residing on the one on section 33, and renting the other on section 32.

Our subject was born in Jefferson County, Ind., July 28, 1818, to Abraham and Ruth (House) Long, natives of Virginia. The maternal and paternal grandparents of our subject removed from the Old Dominion to Kentucky at a very early date of its settlement, thus becoming pioneers of that State, and there the parents of our subject were united in marriage. They continued to live there a few years after marriage, Mr. Long occupying himself in agricultural pursuits. In about 1800 they removed to Indiana, then a wild, sparsely settled Territory, and located in the primeval forests of Jefferson County, where among other perils they had to contend with bears, wolves, wildcats, and the still more formidable foe, hostile Indians. They immediately began the tedious task of making a home in that heavily timbered country, first erecting a log cabin, in which they cooked and ate their meals, but when night came they would betake themselves to the block-house, which they had jointly built with the few other settlers as a protection against the Indians. When the red men were on the war path the father volunteered to assist the inhabitants of a British settlement in that part of Indiana to suppress hostilities; this was in Wayne's campaign. That was before his marriage, and after the close of the war he returned to Kentucky and was married. He and his wife reared a family of nine children in their pioneer home in Indiana, and in the year 1828 the faithful helpmate and devoted mother closed her eyes in death. Mr. Long returned again to Kentucky, selling the old homestead in Indiana, and remained a resident of the former State four years, marrying, in the meantime, Sarah Taigue. In 1854 Mr. Long once more became a pioneer, moving still further west, and settling in Monmouth, Warren Co., Ill. He staid there four years, when he again took up the westward march, and did not stay his course until he had crossed the Mississippi and taken up his abode in Henry County, Iowa, becoming an early settler there, and there his pilgrimage on earth was brought to a close by his death. He had been a pioneer in three States, and his life was spent on the frontier.

The subject of this sketch was but a lad ten years of age when he had the sad misfortune to lose a good mother, and he then returned to Kentucky with his father. He staid there with him three years, and then returned to his birthplace in Indiana and made his home with his brothers, Louis, Scrawder, Clay and Samuel, who had staid in Indiana. There he went to school one winter, and thence went to South Bend, Ind. From there he returned to Jefferson County, and lived with his sister, Lucinda Long, the three ensuing years. In 1839 he joined his father in Iowa, and resided in that State until 1866, returning, however, to Indiana in 1844, where he was soon after married to Miss Elizabeth Shafer, July 18 being the date of their wedding. He immediately proceeded to Iowa with his bride, he having previously bought a farm in that State, and there his family of seven children were born, namely: John S., who died at the age of two years; Malinda, now Mrs. William Wetenkamp, who lives in Plattsmouth Township; Abraham, who lives in this county; Silas and Rowen W., who also live in this county; Samuel, who died in Iowa when quite young; and William T., who lives here.

Mr. Long came to Cass County with his family in 1866, and purchased his present farm of 160 acres on section 33. There were then only a small house and about sixty-five acres of the land plowed as improvements. Now he has a fine set of commodious buildings, and has the land under the best of cultivation. He also owns another 160-acre farm on section 32, all under improvement, and from its rental he derives a good income.

Our subject has always been strictly honest and honorable in all his dealings, and his conduct in all the relations of life has been such as to command the warm friendship of the many with whom he has associated. His success in life has been brought about by incessant industry, shrewd management, and the wise economy that knows how to spend judiciously as well as how to save. He is a man of sturdy, independent views, and politically, generally casts his vote with the Democrats. When a resident of Iowa he was actively interested in public affairs, and served one term as Justice of the Peace. In his wife our subject was fortunate in selecting one who has been to him a true helpmate, and is devoted to the interests of her family. She is a sincere Christian, and a valued member of the United Brethren Church.

JOSHUA MURRAY. The family of this name is widely and favorably known throughout the eastern part of Cass County, being closely connected with its pioneer element. The subject of this sketch, a resident of Platts-mouth Precinct, and having a good farm on section 30, was born June 12, 1833, in Moniteau County, Mo., and is the son of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Berger) Murray, natives of Tennessee. The parents became residents of Missouri when mere children, and there were reared and married.

The paternal grandparents of our subject, Joshua and Polly Murray, natives of Kentucky, moved from the blue grass region to Tennessee when young people, probably after their marriage. They were of English and Irish ancestry respectively, and possibly natives of England and Ireland. The grandfather, if emigrating at all, did so at a very early date, and in time to enter the Revolutionary Army, being then but a youth of eighteen years.

On his mother's side the grandparents of our subject, Michael and Margaret (Ledgerwood) Berger, were of German ancestry, and early settlers of Tennessee. Thence they removed across the Mississippi into Missouri, locating among the pioneers of Moniteau County, where all of the grandparents of our subject spent their last days. Jonathan Murry, leaving Missouri in the fall of 1852, moved to Mills County, Iowa, where the family lived until the spring of 1855; thence they changed their residence to this county, locating in the vicinity of Rock Bluff. There the father spent his last days, his death occurring in July, 1860.

Joshua Murray came to this county on the 1st of October, 1854, with his family, this being his second visit to Nebraska, as he had the spring before selected his land and built a house adjoining the present limits of Rock Bluff. He purchased the right to build from the Otoe Indians, this being prior to the consummation of the treaty between them and the Government. The humble dwelling was constructed of round logs, and covered an area of 16x18 feet. The floor was laid with puncheon, the chimney built outside, of earth and sticks, and the fireplace occupied nearly one side of the structure. When the parents and family of nine children came in the spring of 1855, father and son united their interests. The father had a team, with which he plowed for his son, and the latter paid his father by making rails for him. Of the parental family, finally embracing thirteen children, twelve were born in Missouri and one in Nebraska. One child died and two were married before the family removed to Nebraska.

Our subject was the second child of his parents, and was married in Moniteau County, Mo., in October, 1852, to Miss Rachael Williams. This lady was born in 1833, in Indiana, and of her union with our subject there were born three children, all now deceased. She only survived her marriage five years, dying at her home in this county in July, 1857.

Our subject, on July 4, 1859, was married the second time to Miss Lucina Walker, in Mills County, Iowa. Mrs. Murray was born Nov. 25, 1835, in Hendricks, County, Ind., and is the daughter of Robert and Sallie (Campbell) Walker, who were natives of North Carolina, whence they removed to Morgan County, Ind., about 1825, and a year later changed their residence to Hendricks County, where Mr. Walker put up a little rail pen, the cracks of which were stopped up with spice brush, and in which the family lived until he could build a log cabin. He cleared a portion of the heavily timbered land at a time in the history of that section of country when they were obliged to keep a fire all night in front of the cabin to protect themselves from the wolves. There the mother died in the year 1852.

In 1854 Mr. Walker with his six motherless children started for Kansas, but on the way there stopped in Jackson County, Mo., where they sojourned from October until February of the year following. They then resumed their journey to Iowa, and thereafter lived in Mills County, where the father rested from his earthly labors in June, 1878, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. He was a true type of the pioneer and frontiersman, of sturdy frame, industrious and persevering, a man of limited education but reliable qualities of character, who, though living a quiet and unostentatious life, performed faithfully his part, and is held in kindly remembrance.

The subject of this sketch, like his father before him, is intimately acquainted with all the phases of pioneer life, having been an early settler of three States, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska. By a course of regular reading he keeps himself thoroughly posted upon current events, and while making no pretenses to be a politician, is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party. He occupies a good standing in that party in this section, and in the fall of 1886 was its nominee for the Nebraska Legislature, in place of the regular nominee, who had been withdrawn about two weeks before the election. So little did he care for the office that he declined to spend one cent to secure his election, and being in a Republican county was defeated, as he expected, although by only twenty votes. This indicates in a forcible manner the estimation in which he is held by the people of this section. He was Assessor of Rock Bluff Precinct while a resident there, and has filled many positions of trust.

Of the second marriage of our subject there have been born seven children, namely: Alvis C.;

Estella M., the wife of William Mutz, of Cuming County, Neb.; Sarah E. and Robert G., deceased; Charles E., Emma E. and Joshua L. The home farm includes 320 acres of valuable land, finely improved, and occupying a part of sections 30 and 31. Besides the homestead Mr. Murray owns 160 acres of improved land in Holt County, in addition to a timber claim there. He makes a specialty of stock-raising, feeding about seventy-five head of cattle and from seventy-five to 100 hogs annually. It will thus be seen that he has borne no important part in stimulating the agricultural interests of this portion of the county.

LYCURGUS RUSSELL. The precinct of Salt Creek recognizes the subject of this sketch as one of its most prominent men and useful citizens. He owns and operates 200 acres of good land on section 18, and has signalized himself as a gentleman of more than ordinary enterprise and ability. His home is that of the typical American, attractive, orderly and well-regulated, and is presided over by one of the most estimable ladies, Mrs. Russell being in all respects the suitable companion for such a man as her husband. Their children are being carefully trained and educated, and under these circumstances it is hardly necessary to say that the Russells are surrounded by hosts of friends.

Wapello County, Iowa, was the early tramping ground of our subject, and where his birth took place Oct. 14, 1849, in the little village of Dablonaga, two and one-half miles from Ottumwa. His father, Owens Russell, was born in Pennsylvania, and the mother, in her girlhood Miss Mary Kight, was a native of Ohio. The paternal grandfather first opened his eyes to the light among the Scottish Highlands, and upon emigrating to America settled in Pennsylvania, among its earliest pioneers.

The Kights were of English origin, and the first representatives of the family in America settled in Pennsylvania during the Colonial days. Owens Russell upon leaving his native State migrated first to Ohio, where he was married, and a few years later pushed on further westward to Wapello County, Iowa. In the Hawkeye State he was abundantly prospered as a tiller of the soil, and accumulated a good property. He rested from his earthly labors in April, 1868, at the age of fifty-six years. The mother had died in 1861, when forty-seven years old. The seven children of the parental household were named respectively: Harriet, Rhoda, Elizabeth, Lycurgus, our subject; Hamilton, Franklin and Monroe. Five of these are living, and located mostly in Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri.

After leaving the district school our subject entered the graded school at Ottumwa, where he completed his education. He was a little lad eight years of age at the time of his mother's death, and about fifteen years when deprived of his father's care. Although so young he then assumed mainly the charge of the homestead, assisted by his two elder sisters, who presided over their domestic affairs. After the marriage of Rhoda the family was practically broken up, and the year following, in April, 1869, at the age of sixteen, young Russell came to Nebraska. He was a resident of Plattsmouth four or five years, employed at working on a farm. His first intention had been to go to Denver, but meeting Mr. T. Martin Marquette, of Plattsmouth, he was advised to remain at Plattsmouth. His farming experience now served him well, and he entered the employ of Mr. E. Sage, of Plattsmouth, as foreman of his ranch at Plattsmouth. He occupied this position a period of four years, then coming to Greenwood Precinct, purchased a homestead claim of eighty acres, comprising a part of the southwest quarter of section 18. This purchase was made in the spring of 1874, and it was then an uncultivated tract of prairie. He took up his abode upon it alone, in a frame house, and his labors that year came to naught on account of the grasshoppers. In the spring of 1875 Mr. Russell added forty acres to his real estate, and two years later purchased another forty acres, thus becoming owner of a quarter section.

The marriage of Lycurgus Russell and Miss Mary E. Robbins was celebrated at the home of the bride in Saunders County, Neb., Feb. 18, 1876, and they soon thereafter took up their abode at the new farm. They are now the parents of seven children, one of whom, the eldest, a son, Bertie, died when four years old. The survivors are: Maude, Etta E., Goldie, Leonard J., and an infant, Lonie. Mrs. Russell was born Jan. 10, 1857, in Davis County, Iowa, and is the daughter of Charles and Nancy (Pollard) Robbins, who were natives of New York State and Iowa. They came to Nebraska when their daughter Mary was a little child three years of age, and settled in Ashland, where they are still residing.

Mr. Russell in common with the men around him has embellished his farm with groves of cottonwood, ash, maple and walnut trees, and the much admired Catawba flourishes adjacent.

The buildings are neat and substantial structures, and Mr. Russell has the farm machinery necessary for the successful prosecution of agriculture. Although having little time to meddle with political affairs, he is a uniform supporter of Democratic principles, and has been quite prominent in local affairs, serving as a member of the Board of Education five terms, officiating as a Grand Juror, and otherwise identifying himself with the interests of the community. Socially, he belongs to the Knights of Pythias at Ashland.

ISAAC STONE, a model citizen, conscientious Christian and prosperous farmer, owns and resides on a fine farm embracing 240 acres on section 24 of Greenwood Precinct. He was born in Indiana, Oct. 18, 1817, the son of Benjamin Stone, who was born and reared in Pennsylvania, and in his early life moved to Indiana. He was a school teacher, and engaged in educational pursuits all his life. He died in 1833, aged fifty years. The mother died in 1871, aged eighty-seven years.

Our subject is one of a family of ten children, who are named: Abigail, Polly, Ann, Elijah, Rebecca, Benjamin, Abraham, Sarah J., Isaac, Jeremiah and Lovisas. Ann was born in Pennsylvania; Elijah, Rebecca and Benjamin were born in Ohio; Abraham and Isaac are twins.

Our subject resided a short time in Kansas, where he settled in March, 1871. About one year from this date he moved to Cass County, Neb., and settled on the farm where he now resides. He was married, Nov. 7, 1841, to Miss Nancy Milner, a resident of Indiana. She departed this life in September, 1861. She was the mother of a family of five children—Zerelda D., Minerva D., Richard K., David M. and Mary M. Richard resides on a farm located on section 24, this precinct; Minerva is married, and the other three children are deceased.

After a season Mr. Stone married Miss Malisinth P. Wygall, a resident of Ohio County, Ind. By this marriage he became the father of five children: Edgar M., I. Dean, Roland A., Adelea H. and Josephine W., all of whom are at home at this writing, assisting in the various duties of the farm, attending school, acquiring an education, and thus laying the foundation for a life of usefulness and benefit to themselves and the world.

Mr. Stone is a pleasant, agreeable gentleman to meet, highly educated, and thoroughly informed on the general topics of the day. He has a good farm, well improved, and the land is divided into fields by fences of wire and hedges, good barns and commodious sheds for the accommodation of cattle, of which he has a large number, all high-grade animals, which he keeps in fine condition, and gives the best care possible. They are a goodly source of profit to their owner.

The residence of Mr. Stone is neat and tasty in appearance, and is well kept both inside and out. It stands in the midst of a fine grove of trees, mingled with shrubbery and flowering plants, the whole presenting a very attractive and beautiful appearance. All the improvements are arranged in order, indicating the owner to be a man thoroughly well posted in his business.

Mr. Stone was elected to the Legislature of the State in 1878, where he served one term. He has been Postmaster ten years, and Mrs. Stone has served four years. He has been School Director for some time, and has been connected with the School Board in some capacity the greater portion of the time he has resided in Nebraska. He is now, and has been for the last twenty years, a minister of the Gospel in the Free-Will Baptist Church. His daily life is a living example of what the love of God will accomplish, when the heart of a man is devoted to His service. His good wife joins her husband in his plans and labors, is a conscientious, unostentatious, Christian woman, a joy, blessing and comfort to all with whom she comes in contact. She is several years younger than her husband. In politics Mr. Stone is a Republican.

STEPHEN HULFISH. The best interests of a town in its incipency depend largely upon the men instrumental in its establishment and after them those who seek to identify themselves with it. The subject of this sketch is numbered among the men of prominence and influence who are bringing Wabash into a position worthy of more than a passing notice. Here he has invested a large portion of his capital, while his enterprise and intelligence have been the means of others of like character locating here. He officiates as Postmaster and Notary Public; and conducts a flourishing trade in drugs, medicines, paints and the other articles pertaining to this department of trade. He came to Nebraska in the spring of 1880, settling first in Bushberry, where he engaged in mercantile pursuits until Wabash was laid out, when he changed the scene of his operations to this place, a very fortunate thing for Wabash. He brought to it the first stock of commodities in which he is now dealing, and is looked upon as a leading man of his community.

A native of the Keystone State, our subject was born in the city of Philadelphia, April 24, 1840. His parents were David and Rebecca (Carpenter) Hulfish, the father a native of New Jersey, and the mother of Philadelphia, Pa. The paternal grandfather was a native of Germany, and emigrated to America in time to shoulder a musket effectively during the Revolutionary War. Later he served in the War of 1812. David Hulfish, his son, upon approaching manhood, learned the trade of a shoemaker, and afterward became a large dealer in boots and shoes in Philadelphia. He lived there after his marriage until 1853, and then removed to Owensville, Ind., where he also established a trade in boots and shoes, and where he still lives, being now seventy years old. The mother is likewise living, and is five years younger than her husband. They were the parents of two children only, Stephen, our subject, and Ewin D. a newspaper man and editor, of Owensville, Ind.

The first recollections of our subject are of a modest home in his native city, where he commenced a practical education in the public schools. Being necessarily much of his time in the shop and store of his father, he learned the rudimentary details of the business at an early age, and when a lad of thirteen years, being unusually bright and apt, was given a position with a large wholesale establishment in Philadelphia, where he remained until 1853. He was reared to man's estate in his native city, but in 1859 joined his parents in Owensville, Ind., where he met his future wife, then Miss Kate Storton, to whom he was married March 31, 1863. In the spring of 1865 he began on his own account in the boot and shoe trade at Owensville, being then twenty-five years of age. His good business capacities and his progressive ideas as a citizen, and member of the community brought him into prominence among his townsmen, and in the year above mentioned he was appointed, by President Johnson, Postmaster of Owensville.

Mrs. Kate (Storton) Hulfish was born in England, and came to America with her parents when young. Of her union with our subject were born two children, the elder of whom, a son, Willie, married Miss Henrietta Gordon, of Wabash, this county, and is now living in Wabash. The daughter, Rebecca, is the wife of Charles Hite, a well-to-do farmer, of Elmwood Precinct. They have two children—George and Letta. Mrs. Kate Hulfish died at Owensville, Ind., in December, 1874.

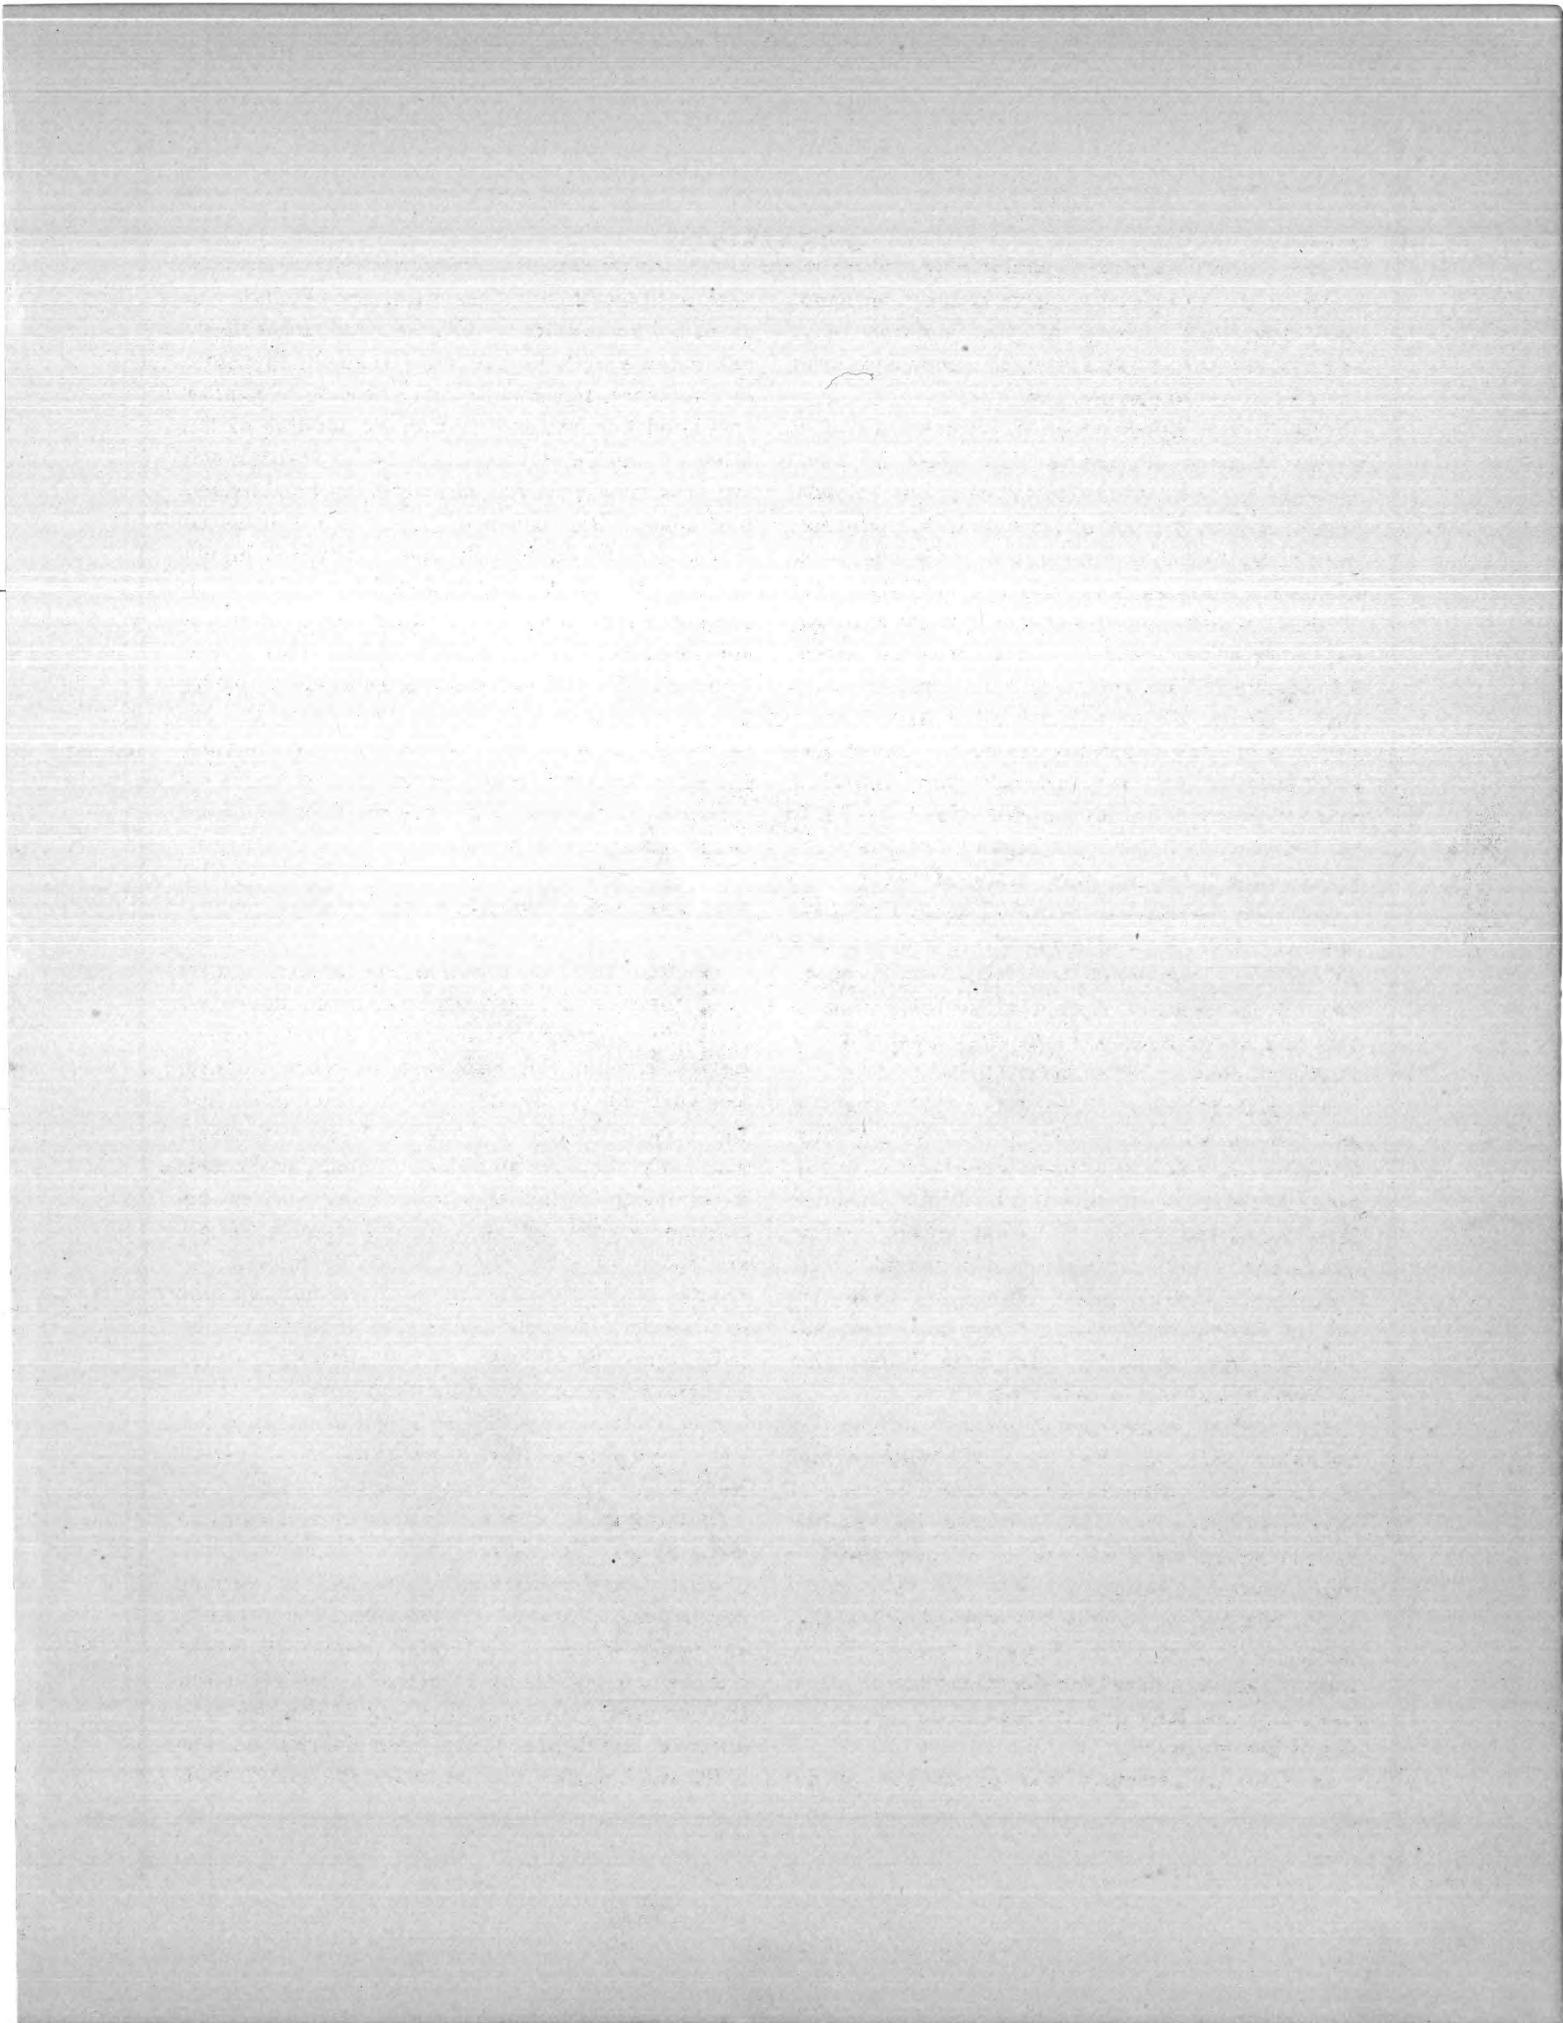

Mr. Hulfish contracted a second marriage in December, 1875, with Miss Anna Worrell, daughter of Charles and Catherine (Templeton) Worrell, of Wayne County, Ill. This marriage has resulted in the birth of three children, a daughter and two sons—Myrtle, Charles and Frank. They are a bright trio, and the daughter is completing her education in St. Francis' Academy at Council Bluffs, Iowa. She has evinced considerable musical talent, and is a young lady greatly liked in the social circles of her community.

In 1880, the present wife of our subject having been in ill-health for some time, Mr. Hulfish decided upon a change of climate, and accordingly left Indiana for Nebraska. He started the first store in Bushberry, this county, and was soon thereafter appointed Postmaster. During the building of the Missouri Pacific Railroad he came to Wabash, and after assisting in platting the town, built a store and post-office. His residence is a neat and substantial structure, and both himself and family are highly esteemed by the people of this locality. Mr. H. in 1882 was first appointed Notary Public, and reappointed in 1888 for another term of six years. Politically, he affiliates with the Democratic party, and is an active member of the I. O. O. F. He believes in the establishment of schools and churches, and as he has opportunity gives his aid to every enterprise calculated to advance the interests of the people, morally and financially.

JOHAN PHILPOT, Sr., an enterprising farmer, lives on a highly cultivated and improved farm, located on section 27 in Mt. Pleasant Precinct. He was born in Kent County, England, March 10, 1815. He is the son of George and Abigail Philpot, and lived at home in England with his parents until he was twenty years old. Recognizing the fact that for a young man in his position in life there was no opportunity for advancement or procuring a home for himself, he decided to emigrate to America. In pursuance of this decision he took passage from London in the sailing-ship "St. James." After a stormy passage of eight weeks he arrived in New York City. His means being very limited he found it necessary to seek employment, which he procured on a farm in New Jersey, where he worked for two years.

Wishing to see more of the country and learn the ways of the people, our subject went to New Orleans, where for a time he worked at various occupations. He then worked his way northward, and finally settled in Jo Daviess County, Ill., which was then an unsettled wild country. He secured a tract of finely located land, which he proceeded to improve, and in later years, when the railroad was built, and a market was made for the varied products of the farm, and other settlers coming to the neighborhood, he found himself by the natural increase bestowed by these advantages to be the owner of an extremely valuable farm. He resided on this farm for thirty years, and he still owns it.

*yours Truly
John Stine*

While Mr. Philpot was living there he married Miss Sarah Dugan, who survived her marriage but about a year. After a season he married a second time, and to him and his wife were born a family of eight children, five of whom are living, namely: Charles, John, Alfred, James and Mary. John is a resident of Nebraska (for a sketch of his life see another page in this work). Shortly after the close of the Civil War our subject went to Carroll County, Mo., where he remained a short time. From there he came to Cass County and secured a fine tract of land, which he has thoroughly improved, and he has become an honored and respected citizen of the precinct.

Our subject is in all respects a self-made man. Since his arrival in America he has applied himself so diligently to the observation of men and events as they transpired about him, that he now possesses a good, practical knowledge, which is available in the everyday affairs of life. He is widely and favorably known in his locality, and enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who know him. In politics he is a thorough Republican. He cast his vote for William Henry Harrison, in the ever memorable "hard cider" campaign of 1840, and cast his last vote, in 1888, for the grandson, Benjamin Harrison.

JOHN STINE, a pioneer farmer of this State, is as closely connected with its growth and development, and has lent as much assistance toward placing Nebraska in the front rank among the western commonwealths, as any one individual residing within its limits. His first advent in the State was April 8, 1855, when he crossed the river at Omaha, then a mere hamlet of three shanties. He bought a claim two and a half miles west of that place, on which he lived one year, and during that time took an active part in local affairs, being an influential member of the well-known Claim Club of that day, which had a branch in Omaha consisting of 160 members. They executed whatever they undertook, and protected the pioneer against the encroachments of the claim jumper. Mr. Stine recollects very clearly the incidents and scenes of his early life in Omaha, and can recall the time, when, in the fall of 1855, the first treaty with the Indians was made. The Government agreed to pay annually for a term of years to the different tribes, Omahas, Otoes, Pawnees and Sioux, a large revenue, some of the payments of which are already completed, and in no case was a tribe to receive indemnity for more than forty years. He also remembers when John Brown was granted a charter to run a ferry across the Missouri River at Omaha. Times were then perilous, the people being largely a lawless set, struggling for supremacy as well as for existence, and it was decidedly unsafe for a man to make any encroachment on another man's property. Soon after coming to Nebraska our subject was employed by the present Governor of the State to break 105 acres of the land now embraced within the limits of Omaha, receiving $6 an acre for his labors, this being before the original Government survey was made. He also broke the same year fifty acres not far from Omaha. This was practically the first breaking of prairie in the State. In 1856 Mr. Stine concluded to locate south of the Platte River, thinking the soil there better adapted to farming. He therefore sold for $1,000 the squatter's claim that he had taken up in Omaha before the Government had set a compass in the State, and moving to Otoe County, he pre-empted a quarter-section in what is now Wyoming Precinct, but was then the enterprising and lively town of Wyoming, having the appearance of a city with a boom on, but is now defunct. The land had, however, more timber on than our subject desired for farming purposes, so, after making considerable improvements, he exchanged it for 160 acres four miles west, on what is now section 7, Wyoming Precinct. He partly improved that farm, and in 1866 purchased his present homestead of 160 acres on section 22, Liberty Precinct. It was then in its primitive wildness, with not a furrow turned, but as its natural advantages were good, our subject set to work with enthusiastic zeal to improve it, and by indomitable perseverance and industry he has succeeded in his efforts, and has now a good productive farm, well stocked with choice breeds of animals, and is in receipt of a comfortable income therefrom.

Our subject was born in Berks County, Pa., Aug. 6, 1829. He is of the old Pennsylvania Dutch stock, his father, Philip Stine, having been a farmer in Berks County, where he was reared and subsequently married to Sarah Dundore. After their marriage they remained in the Keystone State until 1840, when they removed with their family of seven children to Fairfield County, Ohio. There Mr. Stine purchased a good farm, and there remained until his death in 1847, being then forty-seven years old. His wife survived him many years, dying in Fremont, Sandusky Co., Ohio, in September, 1887, at the venerable age of eighty-one years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Stine were members of the Lutheran Church, and lived upright Christian lives. They had eleven children, ten sons and one daughter, John, of whom we write, having been the fourth child and third son.

The latter remained at home until twenty-two years of age, and then commenced life for himself. He was married in Liberty Precinct to Catherine D. Tyson, who was born in Adams County, Ill., Dec. 8, 1845. Her parents, Mathias and Katie (Bailey) Tyson, were natives of Virginia, but were both reared in Ohio, and moved with their parents to Indiana, where they were married. They began their wedded life on a farm in Central Indiana, living there until after the birth of three children, then moved to Adams County, Ill., going thence in 1851 to Texas. They were not pleased, however, with the Lone Star State, and returning North, spent a year in Missouri, then came to Nebraska, crossing the Missouri River March 5, 1855. They took up 160 acres of land on what is now section 22, Liberty Precinct, that being one of the first pre-emptions in this part of the county. They were very successful in their labors, and improved a fine farm, on which they spent the remainder of their lives, Mrs. Tyson dying in 1874, when sixty-five years of age, and Mr. Tyson in 1877, at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. They were worthy types of the pioneer, and exercised the generosity and hospitality characteristic of the early settlers of that time, and always helped the needy and the afflicted.

To our subject and his wife have been born five children, one of whom, George A., died in infancy. The living ones are: Reuben B., William L., Sarah E. and John R. In his political views Mr. Stine is a Republican, and is fearless in his endorsement of those principles which he believes to be for the general good of his community and the country at large. Both he and his worthy wife are held in the highest respect in the community which has known them so long and so well, and their pleasant home is the resort of a large circle of friends.

We are pleased to present herewith a fine portrait of this worthy pioneer farmer, who has done much to develop the agricultural interests of the county.

— + % — + % — + % — + % — + % —

JAMES K. KEITHLEY, editor and publisher of the Weeping Water Republican, came first to Nebraska in 1875, and to Weeping Water in 1878. In the year 1882, in company with his brother, W. A. Keithley, he established the journal which has now become an indispensable institution of this county. Three years later James K. purchased the interest of his brother, and has since conducted the business singly and alone. The Republican has a large circulation, and is a staunch advocate of the principles of its party. In connection therewith is a fine job office, the presses operated by the only steam printing power in the county. The office is equipped with a select assortment of type and other material, and turns out some of the prettiest job work done in this part of the State. This department gives employment to four men the year round. Mr. Keithley, although a warm advocate of his party principles, has never made any effort to become an office-holder, preferring that some other man should assume its cares and responsibilities. In business circles he is a member of the Board of Trade, and a financier of good abilities. He is well spoken of by the people of his community, which indicates at once the true character of the man.

Mr. Keithley was born in Louisville, Ky., April 21, 1852, and in 1855 his parents removed to Minnesota, where the father took up a tract of land. The boyhood and youth of our subject were employed mostly in securing his education, and after a brief period spent in the district school he was sent to the Academy of Salem, Ind. After spending two years at this institution he taught school a period of six years in the States of Indiana, Minnesota and Nebraska, coming to the latter in the spring of 1875. His father in the meantime had died when he was a youth of sixteen years, and he aided in the support of his mother. The latter is now dead, and her remains are interred at Nebraska City.

Mr. Keithley upon coming to Nebraska was located for a time in Nebraska City, and was there married, Oct. 22, 1878, to Miss Agnes E. Kay. This lady was born May 15, 1859, in Nebraska City, Otoe County, and received a good education, completing her studies in the Nebraska City High School. She made her home with her parents until her marriage. She is the daughter of Dr. M. K. and Demaris (Seaton) Kay, the former a prominent physician of Nebraska City and one of its earliest settlers. He comes of excellent ancestry, and was born in Inverness, Scotland, in 1818. He came to America about 1848, settling first in Illinois, and removing in the year 1855 to Nebraska City. Mrs. Demaris Kay, the wife and mother, was born in Louisville, Ky., and married in Hennepin, Ill. Of this union there were born four children, two only of whom lived to mature years. Dr. Kay obtained his medical education in Glasgow, Scotland, being graduated from one of the colleges there. Both he and his estimable wife are still living, making their home in Nebraska City, and both are members of the Episcopal Church.

Samuel T. Keithley, the father of our subject, was born in Harrison County, Ind., Dec. 23, 1818, and lived there until reaching man's estate. He was married, in 1839, to Miss Sarah J. Catlin, of Washington County, and they became the parents of seven children, four of whom are living, namely: James K., our subject; Nancy C., Mrs. J. S. Bean, of St. Paul, Minn.; Theo W., a resident of Montevideo, Minn., and William A., publisher of the Saunders County Leader, in Ashland, this State.

Samuel Keithley was a ship carpenter by trade, which he followed for a time in Louisville, Ky., and until 1855, then migrating to Minnesota, he took up land in LeSueur County, and improved a farm, upon which he lived until 1862. The progress of the Civil War called him from his farm and family, and he enlisted in Company K, 7th Minnesota Infantry. During his absence there occurred the Indian outbreak in which the family fled to the city, leaving the farm to the mercy of both Indians and white outlaws, who stole everything they could carry off.

In the meantime the father of the family, after serving as a Union soldier two years and ten months, suffered greatly in health, and was obliged to accept his honorable discharge two months before the expiration of his term of enlistment. He then returned to Cleveland, where the family lived until 1867, when they removed to Fredericksburg, Ind., where in December, 1868, his death occurred. The mother was left with four children, and returned to Minnesota, where she resided until the spring of 1876, when she went to the home of her son James K., in Nebraska City, and died there in 1877. Both parents were lifelong members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which the father officiated as Class-Leader and was otherwise prominent in its councils.

James Keithley, the paternal grandfather of our subject, it is supposed was a native of Pennsylvania, and for many years filled the pulpit of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as an itinerant, and rode the circuit a number of years in the fashion of the Methodist preachers of that day. He settled in Harrison County, Ind., and married a Miss Kendall, by whom he became the father of two sons, who lived to mature years. This lady died, and he married a second time. He passed away some time between 1840 and 1850.

CHARLES C. HENNINGS and the estimable lady who has borne his name for the last seventeen years settled on their farm in Eight Mile Grove Precinct about 1874. The land was then as the Indians had left it, not a furrow having been turned and no attempt whatever having been made at improvement. After putting in the first season's crops, the area devoted to this being necessarily contracted, Mr. H. began to fence the remainder of his purchase, and in due time to plant fruit and forest trees and gather about him the comforts of life. He has now one of the most productive farms on the northern line of the county. He has not been slow to avail himself of modern methods and machinery, and is consequently numbered among the progressive agriculturists of his time.

Mr. Hennings came to this section in time to assist in the organization of his school district and the various other enterprises gradually developing as the country settled up. He has been liberal and public-spirited, aiding by his influence and more substantial means the enterprises set on foot for the good of the people. By his own thrift and industry he was the means of attracting to his neighborhood a class of intelligent people who were not slow in imitating his example. The Hennings farm is largely devoted to stock-raising, which yields the proprietor a handsome income.

The infant years of our subject were spent on the other side of the Atlantic, in Germany, where he was born Nov. 13, 1847. His parents, John C. and Sophia Hennings, were of pure German stock, and natives of the same Province as their son. The father on his native soil occupied himself as a shoemaker, but had ambitions which were not satisfied in the Fatherland. About 1851 he decided that it would be best for himself and family to emigrate to the United States. After a safe voyage they took up their abode on a tract of land in Washington County, Wis., where they were numbered among the earliest pioneers. They lived there a number of years, the father carrying on agriculture, but in the spring of 1872 he sold out his interests in the Badger State and came to this county. Both parents are now living in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, each being past seventy years of age. They have good property, and while passing down the hill of life are surrounded by those things conducive to their comfort and enjoyment, and which they so richly deserve as the reward of their toils and sacrifices.

To the parents of Mr. Hennings there was born a large family of children, of whom but five survive, namely: John A., Henry H., Ferdinand, Emma, the wife of Lorenzo Brou, and Charles C., our subject. The latter, the youngest born, lived in Washington County, Wis., until a youth of nineteen years, then left the parental roof to seek his own fortune. He first emigrated to Illinois, then to Iowa, and finally came to this county in 1871. Later that same year he, in company with his brother John A., purchased a part of the land which he now owns and occupies. Before settling upon this our subject farmed on rented land in the vicinity of Plattsmouth two years. At the expiration of this time he took possession of his own property.

The marriage of Charles C. Hennings and Miss Mary Volk was celebrated at the home of the bride in Illinois, Feb. 18, 1872. Mrs. Hennings was born in Tazewell County, Ill., Feb. 1, 1849, and is the daughter of Nicholas and Maggie Volk, natives of Germany and pioneers of Tazewell County, Ill., where they still reside. This union has resulted in the birth of nine children: Elizabeth, Oct. 24, 1872; John F., Jan. 26, 1874; Nicholas F., Jan. 5, 1876; Jacob C., Nov. 28, 1877; Charles F., Nov. 25, 1879; Mary E., Dec. 6, 1881; Annie E., Dec. 18, 1883; Maggie M., Dec. 6, 1885, and Ferdinand J., Feb. 1, 1888. They form a lively little company, and are a perpetual source of interest to their devoted parents.

JOHAN R. BAIRD, a self-made man, and a farmer operating a farm of 200 acres, 160 of which he owns, is a native of Canada, where he lost his mother by death when only seven years old, and as in many similar cases, he was, by the second marriage of his father, practically left homeless. For years he drudged and worked for a Canadian farmer for his board and (old) clothes. When he had reached the age of eighteen years, having a desire to improve his interests he went to Saginaw, Mich., where he engaged as a sawyer for two years. While there he conceived the idea of going to the West, and securing a home for himself. Accordingly he left Michigan for this purpose. When he reached Cook County, Ill., he found his money exhausted, and he was obliged to go to work on a farm in that county. This he continued until he resumed his journey toward Nebraska in 1875. Arriving in this State he purchased eighty acres of land on section 32 of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company, which he immediately began to improve. Prospering in his new location he purchased in 1879 another eighty acres on section 29, Elmwood Precinct.

While working on the farm in Cook County our subject met Miss Mary L. Grant, to whom he was married on the 14th of December, 1871. This lady was born in Kankakee County, Ill., and is the daughter of Thomas W. and Margaret Jane (Geddis) Grant, who came to Illinois from Battle Creek, Mich. After their marriage they lived in Illinois on rented land for two years. Three children have been born to this couple: Elsie I., now deceased; Jessie M. and Walter P. Bright and intelligent as they are, the parents are proud of them.

The father of our subject, George Baird, was a cooper in Prince Edwards County, at Solomon's Point. He found a market for the product of his labor among the fishermen. His mother, Grace, was born in Canada, of Scotch parents. She died in 1856, forty-eight years of age, leaving five children, namely: Nancy; Maggie, now deceased; Mary E.; John R., our subject; and George R., now deceased. The father married a second time, and had four children by the last union. He died in 1884 in Canada, sixty-eight or seventy years of age. Our subject was born in Prince Edwards County, Canada, Aug. 12, 1849.

Mr. Baird is a man who began life under very marked disadvantages and adverse circumstances, but by the inherent force of will and determination he has progressed and conquered all obstacles, until to-day he is recognized as one of the leading men in Elmwood Precinct. He and his faithful wife have fought life's battle bravely, and they now find themselves well remunerated for all the struggles and privations they have endured in former years, while making their home what it is to-day; and they can look out over their broad fields with a degree of complacency and satisfaction that is justifiable to the fullest extent. An orchard of choicest varieties of fruits annually yields its golden stores, and the fields their rich harvests of grain, and plenty is indicated all over the farm, while inside their nice new dwelling peace and pleasure reign supreme.

Mr. Baird is a charter member of the Order of Modern Woodmen of America, in the Wabash Lodge. He has served several terms as School Director, also as Constable, and assisted in building the school-house in District No. 44. He became a naturalized citizen of the United States during his first year of residence in Nebraska. He holds political allegiance with the Republican party.

JOHN HESS, an estimable farmer of Elmwood Precinct, was born in Holstein twelve or fifteen miles from Hamburg, Germany, where his father, Hans Yocum, was a farmer. His father died in the old country when our subject was nine years of age. To escape military service in the German Army our subject sailed with his brother for America, arriving in New York City April 5, 1853, their final destination being Davenport, Iowa, where he resided until 1856. He removed from Davenport to Platts-mouth, Neb., intending to go down into Kansas, but on account of the Kansas and Nebraska troubles he stopped at Platts-mouth, where he worked until the breaking out of the late Civil War, when he enlisted, June 11, 1861, in Company A, 1st Nebraska Infantry, under Dr. R. R. Livingston. They went into camp at Omaha, where they were drilled and instructed in military tactics, and from there they went down the river to Ft. Leavenworth, Kan.; from there to St. Louis, thence in turn to Pilot Knob, Syracuse, Georgetown and Sedalia, participating in the various battles and skirmishes in that section. In the spring of 1862 the regiment of which he was a member was under the command of Gen. Grant, and participated in the battles of Ft. Donelson and Shiloh. From the latter battle-field they went to Corinth, Miss., and were attached to the command of Gen. Lew Wallace. After the evacuation of Corinth they went to Memphis, Tenn., and Helena, Ark. From Helena they were sent to Missouri under the command of Gen. Steele, stopping on their old camping ground at Pilot Knob. From there they were dispatched to Cape Girardeau, Mo., then to St. Louis, where the 1st Nebraska Infantry was merged into the 1st Nebraska Cavalry. He, with the consolidated regiment, took an active part in the Arkansas campaign.

Before leaving Omaha our subject was made a Corporal, and when the 1st Regiment was merged into the new cavalry he was made a Sergeant, at some point in Missouri. While in the Arkansas campaign his term of enlistment expired, he was returned to Omaha, and there honorably discharged on the 12th of August, 1864. He was so attentive to his duties as a soldier and so prompt that he never missed a roll call during his entire term of service. His record as a soldier is unexceptionable in every particular, and is a matter in which he can justly feel the greatest pride.

In 1856 Mr. Hess married Miss Emily Graves, who bore him four children—Frederick A., George D., J. Johnson and Emily. He lost his wife by death. He came to Elmwood Precinct, and homesteaded on eighty acres of land, to the improvement of which he devoted his entire time and attention. In 1885 he contracted a second marriage, with Miss Lois Gordon, daughter of Ransom and Rachel Gordon. At the time of her birth her parents were residents in Canada, where they lived until she was three years old, when the entire family came to Iowa, where she lived with them up to the time of her marriage with Mr. Hess. Being naturally of a sharp, intelligent disposition, she availed herself of all the educational facilities of her home, and profiting by the experience of others, she is one of the brightest ladies in Elmwood Precinct. Possessing a keen sense of the beautiful, her home is arranged in an exceedingly neat and tasty manner. She is a good manager, and is in every way a true helpmate to her husband, which he fully appreciates and values accordingly. No children have been born to them. The children by the former wife find in their stepmother a fitting successor to their mother who has gone.

Mr. Hess purchased his present home farm in 1879, which he has thoroughly improved by the erection of his comfortable home, and the necessary barns and granaries calculated to handle the various farm products to the best advantage and in the most economical manner. The tract of land is well supplied with pure water, and is well fenced and cared for. He prides himself on the fact that he is one of the earliest Nebraska pioneers, and he well may be, for he has certainly borne his share of the toils and struggles incident to the opening of a new and wild country.

Our subject is the youngest of a family of six children. His brothers, Amos, Frederick and Henry, and sisters Anna and Catherine, are older; he was born in August, 1832. He was twenty years old when his mother died. The latter's name was Pelonia Cathrena. His parents as well as himself were consistent members of the Lutheran Church. In politics he has always been a staunch Republican, but has never sought or held any public office, preferring the quietude and enjoyment of his own home.

—•••••

PHILIP J. SCHAFER. In the career of this estimable citizen of Mt. Pleasant Precinct and his worthy wife are presented some of the phases of early life in Southern Nebraska. They took up their abode in this section of country before it was converted from a Territory into a State, and when the long prairie grass as high as their heads waved over the now beautifully cultivated fields. In those primitive days one of the duties of Mrs. Schafer was to hunt for the family cow early in the morning when the dew lay heavily on this long grass, and which task, as may be imagined, was far from being pleasant. Those days are long past and gone, and now the sturdy old pioneer and his no less courageous wife are sitting comfortably under their own vine and fig tree. In reviewing the scenes through which they have passed they feel that they now have little reason to complain of the manner in which their toils and sacrifices have been rewarded.

The Schafer homestead, one of the distinctive features in the landscape of the central part of the county, is pleasantly located on section 15, and with its substantial buildings has about it the air of comfort and plenty which is extremely pleasant to contemplate. The proprietor, a native of the Province of Bairen in the German Empire, was born Aug. 19, 1842, and is the son of Adam and Barbara (Yung) Schafer, the latter of whom died in Ohio in 1886. When Philip J. was a lad twelve years of age the parents, in May, 1854, emigrated to America, setting sail from Havre, France, and after an ocean voyage of sixty-five days landed in New York City. Thence they proceeded directly to Pike County, Ohio, where the father secured a tract of land and prosecuted agriculture from that time on. He is still living there, and is now over seventy years of age. The parental family included eight children, six of whom are surviving, and making their homes mostly in Nebraska and Ohio.

Our subject spent his boyhood and youth in the Buckeye State, and there attained to his majority. He had gained the rudiments of a good education in his native Germany, and being fond of his books he, after coming to America, learned to read and write in English. Keeping his eyes open to what was going on around him, he acquired a good fund of general information, and upon reaching manhood was reasonably well equipped for the more serious business of life. Deciding finally to seek his fortunes in the farther West he set out in February, 1865, coming directly to this county, and for three years thereafter was employed as a farm laborer. In 1867 he purchased the wild tract of land on section 15 in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, which he has since transformed into one of its most desirable homesteads. Upon this not a furrow had been turned, and his first business was to put up a temporary shelter for himself and wife. There now came into play the qualities of character which he had inherited from his substantial German ancestry, and in due time they yielded their legitimate reward. Believing that it was proper to secure a cage before he brought to it a bird, when married, the 24th day of December, 1869, he was quite well prepared to invite the lady of his choice, Miss Mary Egger, to share his home and fortunes. This lady has been equal in all respects to the confidence which her husband first reposed in her, proving a most efficient wife and helpmate during the years of their early struggles and labors, and later assisting in maintaining the dignity and reputation of the family and the homestead. Mrs. Schafer was born in November, 1848, in the Canton Bern, in Switzerland, and is the daughter of John and Mary (Gygli) Egger, who were natives of the same romantic country, and who emigrated to America when Miss Mary was a young lady of eighteen years. They settled first in Tazewell County, Ill., thence came into Nebraska in September, 1868. The father purchased a tract of land in Lancaster County, from which he constructed a good homestead, and where he and his estimable wife are now living. Mrs. Schafer remained under the home roof until her marriage. Of her union with our subject there have been born twelve children, four of whom are deceased, namely: Andrew, Annie, Jacob, and a babe who died unnamed. The survivors are George, Frederic, Adam, Albert, Mary, John, Christina and Otto. The eldest of these is sixteen years old and the youngest two, and they are all at home with their parents.

Mr. Schafer, politically, is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party. Coming from a country believing in compulsory education, he is naturally interested in the establishment and maintenance of schools, and has frequently served as a director in his district. Both he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the Lutheran Church, and are held by their neighbors in the highest respect. Their home and their surroundings at once indicate their substantial and reliable qualities of character, and they naturally have made hosts of friends in a community of people more than ordinarily intelligent.

—S—E—S—

GEORGE ALEXANDER STEWART. As the town of Louisville gradually settled up there came a demand for artisans in various trades and occupations, and among them was the subject of this sketch, one of the most intelligent and skillful machinists now numbered among its citizens. He is still comparatively young in years, having been born July 20, 1851, in the city of Ogdensburg, N. Y. There his boyhood was spent, and he was carefully educated in a private school. He at an early age developed more than ordinary genius and skill as connected with machinery, and in the exercise of this talent he has been enabled to make a comfortable living.

This branch of the Stewart family is of excellent ancestry, the father of our subject, George Standley Stewart, having been the scion of an old French stock, and a man possessed of large means. He was born in fair France, and after becoming a citizen of the United States, being provided with ample means, lived mostly at his leisure. He married a lady of his own country, Miss Mary DeClivros, and after emigrating to America they settled in Ogdensburg, N. Y., about 1812, where they spent the most of their days thereafter. In 1859 the father made a visit to his native land, and while there was taken ill, died very suddenly and was laid to rest upon his native soil. The wife and mother is still living, and makes her home in London, England. The household included eight children, four sons and four daughters, all of whom are living, our subject being the sixth in order of birth. They are all in the United States.

Our subject when a lad of nine years accompanied his mother to France, and spent some time there with his brother William, in the meantime serving an apprenticeship at the trade of machinist. Seven years later he returned to the United States, then went to Montreal, Canada, and for five years following was in the employ of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Two years of this time he was foreman of their foundry. Later he acted in the capacity of fireman on the Great Western branch of the same railway system.

In 1884 Mr. Stewart resolved upon seeking a permanent location in the Great West, and coming to this county entered the employ of the Burlington & Missouri River Railway Company, with whom he continued three years, making his headquarters at Louisville. Later he became associated with Mr. Walter Cutforth as a master mechanic, which position he still holds. In the settlement of his father's estate a large portion of it was wasted in litigation, the family deriving little benefit therefrom. Our subject has therefore been mainly the architect of his own fortune, but his natural abilities form an inexhaustible capital, which will serve him in some cases perhaps better than money, being that which no man can steal from him. Although nearly thirty-eight years of age he is still unmarried, but with this exception has performed all his duties faithfully as an honest man and a good citizen. Politically, he is a staunch Republican.

LOUIS C. EICKHOFF. One of the finest farms in Louisville Precinct belongs to the subject of this sketch, who settled in Cass County in 1859, during the Territorial days of Nebraska. He began life without other resources than his own muscle and his persevering disposition, which have resulted in making him independent—the owner of 800 acres of land, which comprises one of the most valuable estates along the northern line of the county. This he built up from an uncultivated tract of land, and has erected a good residence and all the out-buildings necessary for the storage of crops and the shelter of stock. The place is abundantly supplied with fruit, and all the other appliances calculated to make a pleasant and attractive home.

Upon coming to this county our subject stopped first at Plattsmouth, where he occupied himself a year at whatever he could find to do. He then rented a tract of land two miles west of Plattsmouth, upon which he operated two years, and at the expiration of this time purchased 400 acres of his present property. This lies on section 32, and years of arduous labor and close economy have been required to bring it to its present condition. It now yields to the owner a handsome income.

The Kingdom of Hanover, Germany, was the native place of our subject, his birth occurring April 15, 1847. He was the youngest of a family of six children, four sons and two daughters, the offspring of Frederick and Mary (Schweitzer) Eickhoff, who were also of German birth and ancestry. The father was a tailor by trade, which occupation he pursued during his early manhood, but later engaged in agriculture. He, however, was not satisfied with the outlook in the Fatherland, and in 1855 started with his little family for America. They sojourned for a very brief space in the city of New York, then proceeded westward, and for a to the half-formed hope that it may some day serve to unlock the mystery of his birthplace.

The orphan child, after the death of his mother, was legally adopted by a family of the same name, who had afterward one daughter, Frances Grace, who is now Mrs. Sanson, of East Orange, N. J., the wife of a lawyer of New York City. When our subject was ten years old the McPhersons removed to Saratoga County, that State, settling in Galloway Township, where Mr. McPherson, the elder, operated a hotel. Later, however, the family returned to Schenectady, where Mrs. McPherson died first, and Mr. McPherson a few years later. John, who had been taught to call them father and mother, left the roof of his foster parents when a youth of eighteen, in the fall of 1855. Joining one of his young acquaintances in Bellevue, this State, they wintered in a tent at St. Mary's, Iowa, and waited there until the snow should disappear, so they could locate in Nebraska.

Our subject, as soon as winter broke, repaired on the 1st of April, 1856, to Omaha, and began running on a ferry boat, which was the initiation of a long and successful career as a pilot on the Missouri River. His first experience was as a common deck hand, but by faithful attention to his duties he worked his way upward, and in a few months was made master of the ferry boat "Nebraska, No. 1." He continued in the employ of the Nebraska Ferry Company until the spring of 1858, when he made his first trip down the river as a watchman on the "Watawa," plying between St. Joseph and Omaha. He operated as a pilot up and down the Missouri for a number of years, and about 1865 built the boat "P. F. Geise," designed to run on the Missouri River, fitting it up with machinery at Wellsville, Ohio. Later Mr. McPherson bought the transfer boat "H. C. Nutt," the first of its kind at Omaha, to which he brought it from St. Louis. He operated on various transfers, steamboats and ferry boats on the Missouri thereafter until about 1888, making his home in the meantime at Omaha, Plattsmouth and Nebraska City, becoming the employe of the Union Pacific Company, running the old "Mata-moras," which conveyed the first locomotive into Nebraska at Omaha. He continued in the employ of the Union Pacific about two years, and until the railroad bridge across the Missouri was completed at Omaha. Afterward he plied from Omaha to Sioux City.

Becoming aware of the fact that the transfer and steamboat business would eventually give place to more expeditious methods of travel and transportation, Mr. McPherson turned his attention to a totally different occupation, embarking in the grocery business at Omaha. This venture, however, not proving successful, in fact, being attended by severe loss, he returned to river life, and resumed his occupation of pilot for the "Vice President," a transfer boat conveying merchandise and cars from Omaha to Plattsmouth. Upon the completion of the railroad bridge at Plattsmouth they took the "Vice President" to Nebraska City, and Mr. McPherson continued pilot until March, 1888. He then engaged in the lumber business with his present partner, Mr. E. C. Coleman.

Mr. McPherson has piloted thousands of cars across the Big Muddy, as many as 300 in one day. In company with Capt. Butts he built the steam ferry "Capitola Butts," and later sold out his interest to the son of Mr. Butts. Both the "Vice President" and "Capitola Butts" are now (November, 1888) lying dormant at Nebraska City. Mr. McPherson during his thirty-two years' experience as a Missouri River pilot was uncommonly fortunate, never having lost more than two boats, and strange to say, without loss of life or limb. He, himself, however, sustained quite serious injuries one day on the "Vice President," having both legs broken. By skillful treatment, however, he recovered.

Upon the building of the "Q" bridge at Nebraska City Mr. McPherson spent the greater part of the winter of 1887-88 in looking up another point at which he might carry on his business. Greatly to his disappointment and regret, however, he was forced to abandon his purpose, and the employment which notwithstanding its dangers and responsibilities possessed for him a strange fascination. He has been enabled to save a snug sum of money, and the prospect is that his venture in the lumber business will be successful. He is a man genial and companionable, and one who naturally makes friends wherever he goes.

Our subject was first married at Omaha in 1861, ber claim in Antelope County, Neb. He has had a long and varied experience in this State, endured privations and hard work, but through it all he has maintained his usual good cheer and has come out unscathed. He was married, Feb. 1, 1882, to Miss Edith M. Foote, daughter of James Foote, one of Otoe County's earliest settlers, and who is now comfortably located on his large farm in Otoe Precinct, Otoe County. Mr. Richards has not only strong and willing hands for work, but has also a bright and active intelligence to direct his efforts into the best channels, and in the course of his business of farming and cattle dealing he has accumulated a handsome property. In addition to the lands that he owns in Elmwood Precinct he has 160 acres in Stove Creek Precinct, in this county. Mr. and Mrs. Richards have two children: Warren T. and Mary E., bright and intelligent, partaking of their father's energetic disposition and their mother's sweetness of temper. Mr. Richards is generous, and no application for aid for any cause possessing merit is turned away unsatisfied. Mrs. Richards is an active and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Wabash.

Our subject has a fine two-story frame dwelling, very conveniently arranged and nicely furnished, with good orchard and groves. The lawn surrounding his home is well kept and presents a very pleasing appearance. His home farm has a never-failing and abundant supply of the purest water; he has commodious barns for his cattle and hogs, and all the latest improved machinery for making his business a success. Taken as a whole the farm of our subject presents a pleasing scene, and everything connected therewith denotes a thrifty and prosperous condition, the result of intelligently directed labor, close application, and a thorough knowledge of the business. The hardships and privations endured by Mr. Richards upon first entering the State certainly justify some recompense, and if the present indications are realized the gentleman will certainly have no reason to complain.

For further and complete history of the gentleman's parentage see biography of his brother, Edwin F. Richards, upon another page, and elsewhere in this volume we give a view of his fine home and its comfortable surroundings.

JOHAN P. McPHERSON. This old-time popular pilot of Missouri River fame has been the hero of many a thrilling experience and witnessed scenes which, were there time and space to detail them, would comprise a much longer biography than is proposed within the compass of the present work. Naturally of an adventurous and courageous disposition, he may be termed a self-made man, one who has kept his eyes open to what was going on around him in the world, and who from experience has gathered wisdom, possibly of more value to him than that which he might have acquired in college halls. He is now numbered among the leading citizens of Greenwood Village.

Mr. McPherson was born in Canada, and when a little child two years of age was taken by his mother to Schenectady, N. Y. The mother not long afterward was taken seriously ill with a fever, and her physicians being of the opinion that she would not recover, she was induced to relate a few incidents connected with her history which might in time be of service to her only child.

It was learned that the mother of Mr. McPherson was the daughter of an English gentleman, and from her apparel and other circumstances there was little doubt that she was the offspring of a wealthy family, and had been accustomed to the surroundings of refined life. She was married to Capt. Parmer McPherson of the English Navy, against the wishes of her parents, and with whom she came to Canada. She soon passed away, and our subject was too young to have any recollection of her. A scene which appears almost like a dream is thus related by Mr. McPherson in connection with his infantile days. He remembers sitting in the lap of a lady, presumably his mother. He looked out through the window and saw an orchard and a bridge, beneath which ran a river, upon which was a boat containing a man. On the opposite side was a little rude dwelling, and the man in the boat in making efforts to land capsized the little craft. The mother upon seeing this arose to her feet undoubtedly much moved, and placing the child on the floor the panorama to him thus ended. This view stands out prominently before the eyes of Mr. McPherson, being about the only one in a space of time which is mostly a blank. But he still clings time made their home in Chicago. In 1859 they sought the farther West, coming to this county. In the meantime three of the sons of the family had died in Chicago, and of the six children only two are now living. The father spent his last years with his son, our subject, his death taking place in 1874, in the sixty-third year of his age. The mother died Feb. 5, 1889, at the home of her daughter, aged seventy-eight years, having been born in May, 1810.

The subject of this sketch was a lad seven years of age when he landed in the United States with his parents, and he completed his education in the common schools of this country, attending mostly in the winter season, while in the summer he assisted his parents around the homestead. Of this he took charge after the death of his father. To this he brought a bride in 1867, having been married that year to Miss Sophia Brunko, a native of his own country, and the daughter of Frederick Brunko and wife, who were also natives of Germany; the mother is dead, but the father is still living in Nebraska. This union resulted in the birth of nine children, five sons and four daughters.

One of the noticeable features on the farm is the fine barn which was erected by Mr. Eickhoff in 1884, and covers an area of 40x66 feet. It has a solid stone foundation, forming a good basement, and is considered the best structure of the kind in Louisville Precinct. It is nearly surrounded with cattle sheds, and within it are all the conveniences required by the progressive agriculturist. There is also a model corn crib, with numerous other buildings, all indicative of the thoroughness and skill with which the estate has been conducted.

Mr. Eickhoff has been prominent in local affairs, and is a man of decided views. He votes the straight Republican ticket, has officiated as Township Supervisor four years, as Assessor a period of seven years, and as a member of the School Board fifteen years. In religious belief he espouses the doctrines of the Evangelical association. His good management is indicative of the fact that he has inherited from his German ancestry the admirable, thrifty qualities which distinguish that nationality. A man prompt to meet his obligations, and systematic in the oversight of his finances, he occupies a position second to none among the leading men of this part of the county. His property has been the result mainly of his own industry. The family, upon landing in Chicago from their ocean trip, owed $50, and upon coming to Nebraska were obliged to economize in the closest manner for years, in order to make both ends meet. That early experience, Mr. Eickhoff acknowledges, instead of being a detriment, has been a benefit to him, imbuing him with those habits of industry and economy which have enabled him to gather an ample competence for his declining years.

The view of Mr. Eickhoff's premises, on another page of this ALBUM, shows what a fine property the one-time poor German emigrant has acquired by his own unaided efforts.

HORACE T. RICHARDS, one of the most prosperous and enterprising men of Elmwood Precinct, Cass Co., Neb., was born in Goffstown, N. H., Oct. 5, 1848. He was a member of a family of seven children—Emma C., Mary A., George W., Ephraim W., Edwin F., Charles A. and George W. Two are deceased, Ephraim W. and Charles A. The early life of our subject was spent on the farm in New Hampshire. In 1871 he migrated to Illinois, where he joined his younger brother, Edwin F., who had preceded him, and they determined to try their luck together in the then Far West. They each had a team, and they started across the prairies of Illinois and Iowa for Nebraska, crossing the Missouri River at Platts-mouth, where they purchased 160 acres of land from the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company. They experienced very hard times at first, and this purchase of land was let go by default. Time has righted matters, however, and Mr. Richards is now a large land-owner. For many years past he has been a shipper of cattle and hogs. He also feeds a large number of cattle on his own account.

In 1883 Mr. Richards filed a homestead and tim-many, his parents being Adam and Magdalena Heil, the latter of whom died about July 14, 1851. The father came to America with his wife in 1831, and is now a resident of Eight Mile Grove Precinct. The parental household included five children. Wendel was a little lad three years of age when his parents emigrated to the United States and settled in Tazewell County, Ill. There our subject developed into manhood, becoming familiar with farm pursuits, and resided there until coming to this county. He received a limited education in its primitive schools, which were carried on in a manner far different from those of the present day, but his native intelligence sufficed to provide him with a good store of general information, and he launched out upon the more serious business of life with a fair idea of its requirements and the health and strength which were the natural results of temperance and correct habits.

[The page contains extremely faint, illegible text, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the document. The text is too light to transcribe accurately.]

RESIDENCE OF HORACE T RICHARDS, SEC. 24. ELMWOOD PRECINCT, CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF L. C. EICKHOFF, SEC. 32. LOUISVILLE PRECT, CASS CO.

To the mother of our subject there were born two sons only, Wendel and his brother William. The latter is now living in Eight Mile Grove Precinct. The father was subsequently married a second time, and six children more were added to the parental household, three of whom survive, namely: George, Henry and Elizabeth. These are now residents of Eight Mile Grove Precinct, and settled in comfortable homes of their own. Adam Heil is now in the seventy-fifth year of his age. He has been a man who has done a large amount of hard labor, and is now the owner of a good property, able in his declining years to surround himself with all the comforts of life. A man careful and conscientious in his daily walk, he is a member in good standing of the Lutheran Church. His property embraces a fine farm 320 acres in extent, upon which he settled in 1870, being among the leading German pioneers in his neighborhood.

Wendel Heil, our subject, was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Meisinger at the home of the bride in Cass County, Neb., March 26, 1873. This lady was born in Tazewell County, Sept. 10, 1855, and is the daughter of Michael and Catherine Meisinger, the latter of whom died April 21, 1884, at their home in this county. Mr. M. came to Nebraska with his family about 1869, and settled among the pioneers of Eight Mile Grove Precinct.

He is still living and a resident of the city. To the parents of Mrs. Heil there was born a family of seven children, of whom five survive. Lena, the eldest, is the wife of John Wallinger, and with her brother Henry is a resident of Eight Mile Grove Precinct; Anna married Charles Reifenstahl, of Pekin, Ill.; Emma, Mrs. George Weitman, lives in Plattsmouth, this county; Mrs. Heil is the youngest living of the children.

To Mr. and Mrs. Heil there have been born eight children, seven of whom are living, namely: John, George, Henry, Carrie, Eddie, Ida, Philip and William, the latter of whom died when eighteen months old. Our subject, politically, is an uncompromising Democrat, and with his estimable wife a member of the Lutheran Church, attending services at Eight Mile Grove, and taking an active interest in its prosperity. Considering his nationality he could not be otherwise than in favor of the establishment and maintenance of schools, and serves at present as Moderator of the district. The family represents the substantial element of citizens along the northern line of Cass County.

GEORGE L. BERGER. There came to Louisville Precinct during its pioneer days the subject of this sketch, casting his lot among the other adventurous spirits bent upon investigating the resources of Nebraska Territory. He was amply fitted for the task before him, being the offspring of a hardy race, and possessing the elements of character most needed in subduing the soil of a new section of country. Coming here in his boyhood he completed his education in the primitive schools, rounding up with two terms at Plattsmouth, and then, with the spirit of adventure strong within him, engaged first as a freighter across the plains. This occupied his attention, however, only a year, when he resumed the farm pursuits to which he had been accustomed, operating first on rented land, and the year following purchased that which he now owns and occupies.

A native of Mercer County, Pa., our subject was born at the farm of his father near Greenville, Sept. 4, 1849. The latter, Jacob T. Berger, was a native of Germany, and married Miss Margaret Waltenbugh, after coming to the United States. The mother of our subject was born in Mercer County, Pa., and departed this life at her home in Louisville Precinct, in August, 1886. She had survived her husband some years, Jacob Berger having died in 1872, at the age of sixty-eight. They were the parents of three sons and two daughters, and only three of the family survive. The family came to Nebraska in 1857, and settled one-half mile south of the farm now occupied by our subject. Here the latter was reared to man's estate, and may properly be termed as one having grown up with the country.

Mr. Berger labored many years in the opening up of his farm, bringing the soil to a state of cultivation, and erecting the buildings needed for his convenience and success. His residence, a substantial stone structure, was built in 1886, and he has also a stone barn flanked by stables, a corn house, and the other requisite buildings for his convenience. The farm with its appurtenances presents a picture of plenty and content, which is most delightful to look upon.

When twenty-one years of age Mr. Berger took to himself a wife and helpmate, being married, Nov. 3, 1870, to Miss Florinda Kilgore, who was born in Indiana, and is the third child of six children comprising the household of Jesse and Ann (Smith) Kilgore. Her parents were natives of Kentucky and Maryland; the father is now living in Nebraska, but the mother is deceased. Our subject and his estimable wife took up their abode in Louisville Precinct, of which they have since been residents, and they are now the parents of seven children, namely: Ella J., William H., Anna May, Harry E., Flora J., Jesse T. and Bertha M.

Mr. Berger cast his first Presidential vote for U. S. Grant, and since attaining his majority has been an active supporter of Republican principles. He has been an active member of his community, serving as School Director for the last nine years, and representing his precinct in the County Board of Supervisors. Of late years he has given his attention to the breeding of swine, which has been the source of a snug sum of money. He commenced for himself at first principles, without other resources than his own industry and perseverance, his worldly goods a suit of clothes costing $6, and thereafter employed himself by the month until he could gather together sufficient capital to begin operations for himself.

The paternal grandfather of our subject, Christian Berger by name, was a native-born German, and emigrated to the United States late in life, coming to the West and making his home with our subject until his death. Jacob T., his son, and the father of our subject, met his death, it is supposed, by the hand of an assassin, in the fall of 1872, while on a trip to the mountains, via the Bear River Valley. He took with him upon leaving home between $4,000 and $5,000 for the purpose of establishing a cattle ranch in Colorado, and was accompanied by a young man. They were last seen following a path leading up the valley in a remote section among the mountains, and a few days later the young man was seen with the pony, saddle and outfit owned by Mr. Berger. Upon being questioned as to the whereabouts of the latter he replied he had bought him out, and that was the last ever heard.

The Berger family made the trip from Pennsylvania to the West overland by wagon to Rochester, which was a small town on the Ohio River, whence they made their way by boat to St. Louis, and from that point up the Missouri River to Plattsmouth. The latter place was then a settlement of one frame house, three log cabins and three or four tents.

THEODORE STARKJOHANN stands among the foremost of the successful and enterprising farmers of Plattsmouth Precinct, and his farm on section 4 has been developed by his energetic and able management into one of the finest estates in this locality. Our subject was born in Hamburg, Germany, Aug. 10, 1852. His parents, Thies and Maggie (Timm) Starkjohann, were natives of Holstein, Germany, and were there reared and married. In 1850 they removed to the city of Hamburg, where they lived until 1866. In that year they came to America with their family of four children, making the voyage on the steamship "Borussia," in ten days. They landed at New York City and immediately came to this State, and made their home in Weeping Water, Cass County, until the spring of 1869, when Mr. Starkjohann bought 160 acres of land, comprising the farm on which our subject now lives. There was a small frame house on the place, and about seventy acres of the land had been plowed, and the father immediately set about its further improvement, and by his well directed toil greatly increasing the value of the farm in the few years that were spared to him in his new home in his adopted country. He had not reached old age, but fifty-five years having passed over his head, when, Feb. 17, 1872, he was called to a better world, leaving his family to mourn the loss of a good husband and kind father. The mother of our subject, a most estimable lady, still lives on the homestead, a welcome inmate of her son's home. She has three children besides our subject, namely: Mary (now Mrs. Philip Tritsch, of this county), William and August. The latter is dead.

Theodore Starkjohann was married in February, 1881, to Miss Mary, daughter of Philip Horn, of whom see sketch on another page. Two children complete the pleasant household circle of our subject and his wife: Lula, born March 10, 1883, and Henry, born July 1, 1885. Mr. Starkjohann, with characteristic energy has continued the improvements begun by his father, until his farm is numbered among the finest places in the township. He has erected a splendidly built and commodious frame house, a good barn, corn cribs and granary; has planted an orchard of about 150 fruit trees of choice varieties, and has at least 1,000 forest trees. This well fenced farm, with its neatly painted buildings, beautiful trees, and well kept surroundings, is one of the most attractive places in the vicinity—is, indeed, a pleasant feature in the landscape, and is indicative of the taste, thrift, and wise management of the owner.

A perusal of this brief outline of the life of our subject shows that he is a man of more than ordinary foresight, shrewdness and capacity, and that an indomitable will and incessant industry have been prominent factors in the success that he has achieved in his life work thus far, for, although he is yet a young man, his position among the leading farmers of his neighborhood is assured. His personal integrity is of a high order, and he is a devoted member of the Evangelical Lutheran church, which embodies the religious belief of his ancestors, that has descended from father to son for many generations. His political faith is that of the Democratic party, of which he is a staunch supporter.

PETER W. MARCELLUS, one of the leading photographers of Cass County, is the proprietor of the Weeping Water Art Studio. He is a young man of excellent business principles, with a thorough knowledge of his work, and displays much taste and ability in his chosen calling. He is a native of New York City, born Oct. 3, 1859, and remained there until he had attained his majority. He was educated in the public schools of that city, and after finishing his school life he worked at various occupations during his residence in the city of his nativity. Deciding to establish himself in some Western city he came to Nebraska, and engaged in farming in Brock, Nemaha County, remaining there three years. Having no special taste for agriculture, Mr. Marcellus turned his attention to photography, and in Southern Kansas learned the business he has since followed. From Kansas our subject came to Nebraska, and opened a gallery in Stella, where he met with much success. Desiring a larger field for his operations, our subject next moved to Fairbury, where he carried on the same business. In December, 1887, deeming Weeping Water an excellent place for his branch of business, he established himself here, his being the oldest establishment of the kind in the place, and he is now doing a thriving business. During his short stay here he has earned the reputation of being a first-class artist, sending out none but work of the first quality, done after the most approved methods of the times.

John Marcellus, the father of our subject, was born in New York May 25, 1807, and lived there until his death, May 16, 1868. He was three times married. Of his union with the mother of our subject, who was his second wife, there were born six children, four of whom are still living, namely: Thomas J., of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Martin L., of New York City; Edward, of Lancaster, Wis., and Peter W. Mrs. Marcellus, whose maiden name was Eliza Waldron Byrne, died in December, 1863, aged about forty years. Our subject was then four years of age, and some time after his father married again, and his widow is still living in New York City. Mr. Marcellus was a cabinet-maker by trade, and lived an honest and honorable life, respected and esteemed by all who knew him. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and faithfully lived up to his belief. The subject of our sketch is also a communicant in the church to which his father belonged, and in his daily walk exemplifies its teachings. He is a strictly temperate man in all his habits, and a Good Templar.

GEORGE HEIL. In the subject of this biography we find one of the most prominent and successful farmers of Eight Mile Grove Precinct. His property is finely located on section 21, and embraces 160 acres of good land, which, under careful cultivation, produces abundantly, and is amply adapted to the purposes of general farming. Mr. Heil came to this region in the spring of 1870, accompanied by his parents, and has since made his home within the limits of this county, identifying himself with its interests, morally, socially and financially. He bears the reputation of an honest man and a good citizen, one who has contributed his quota to the development of the general resources of Southern Nebraska.

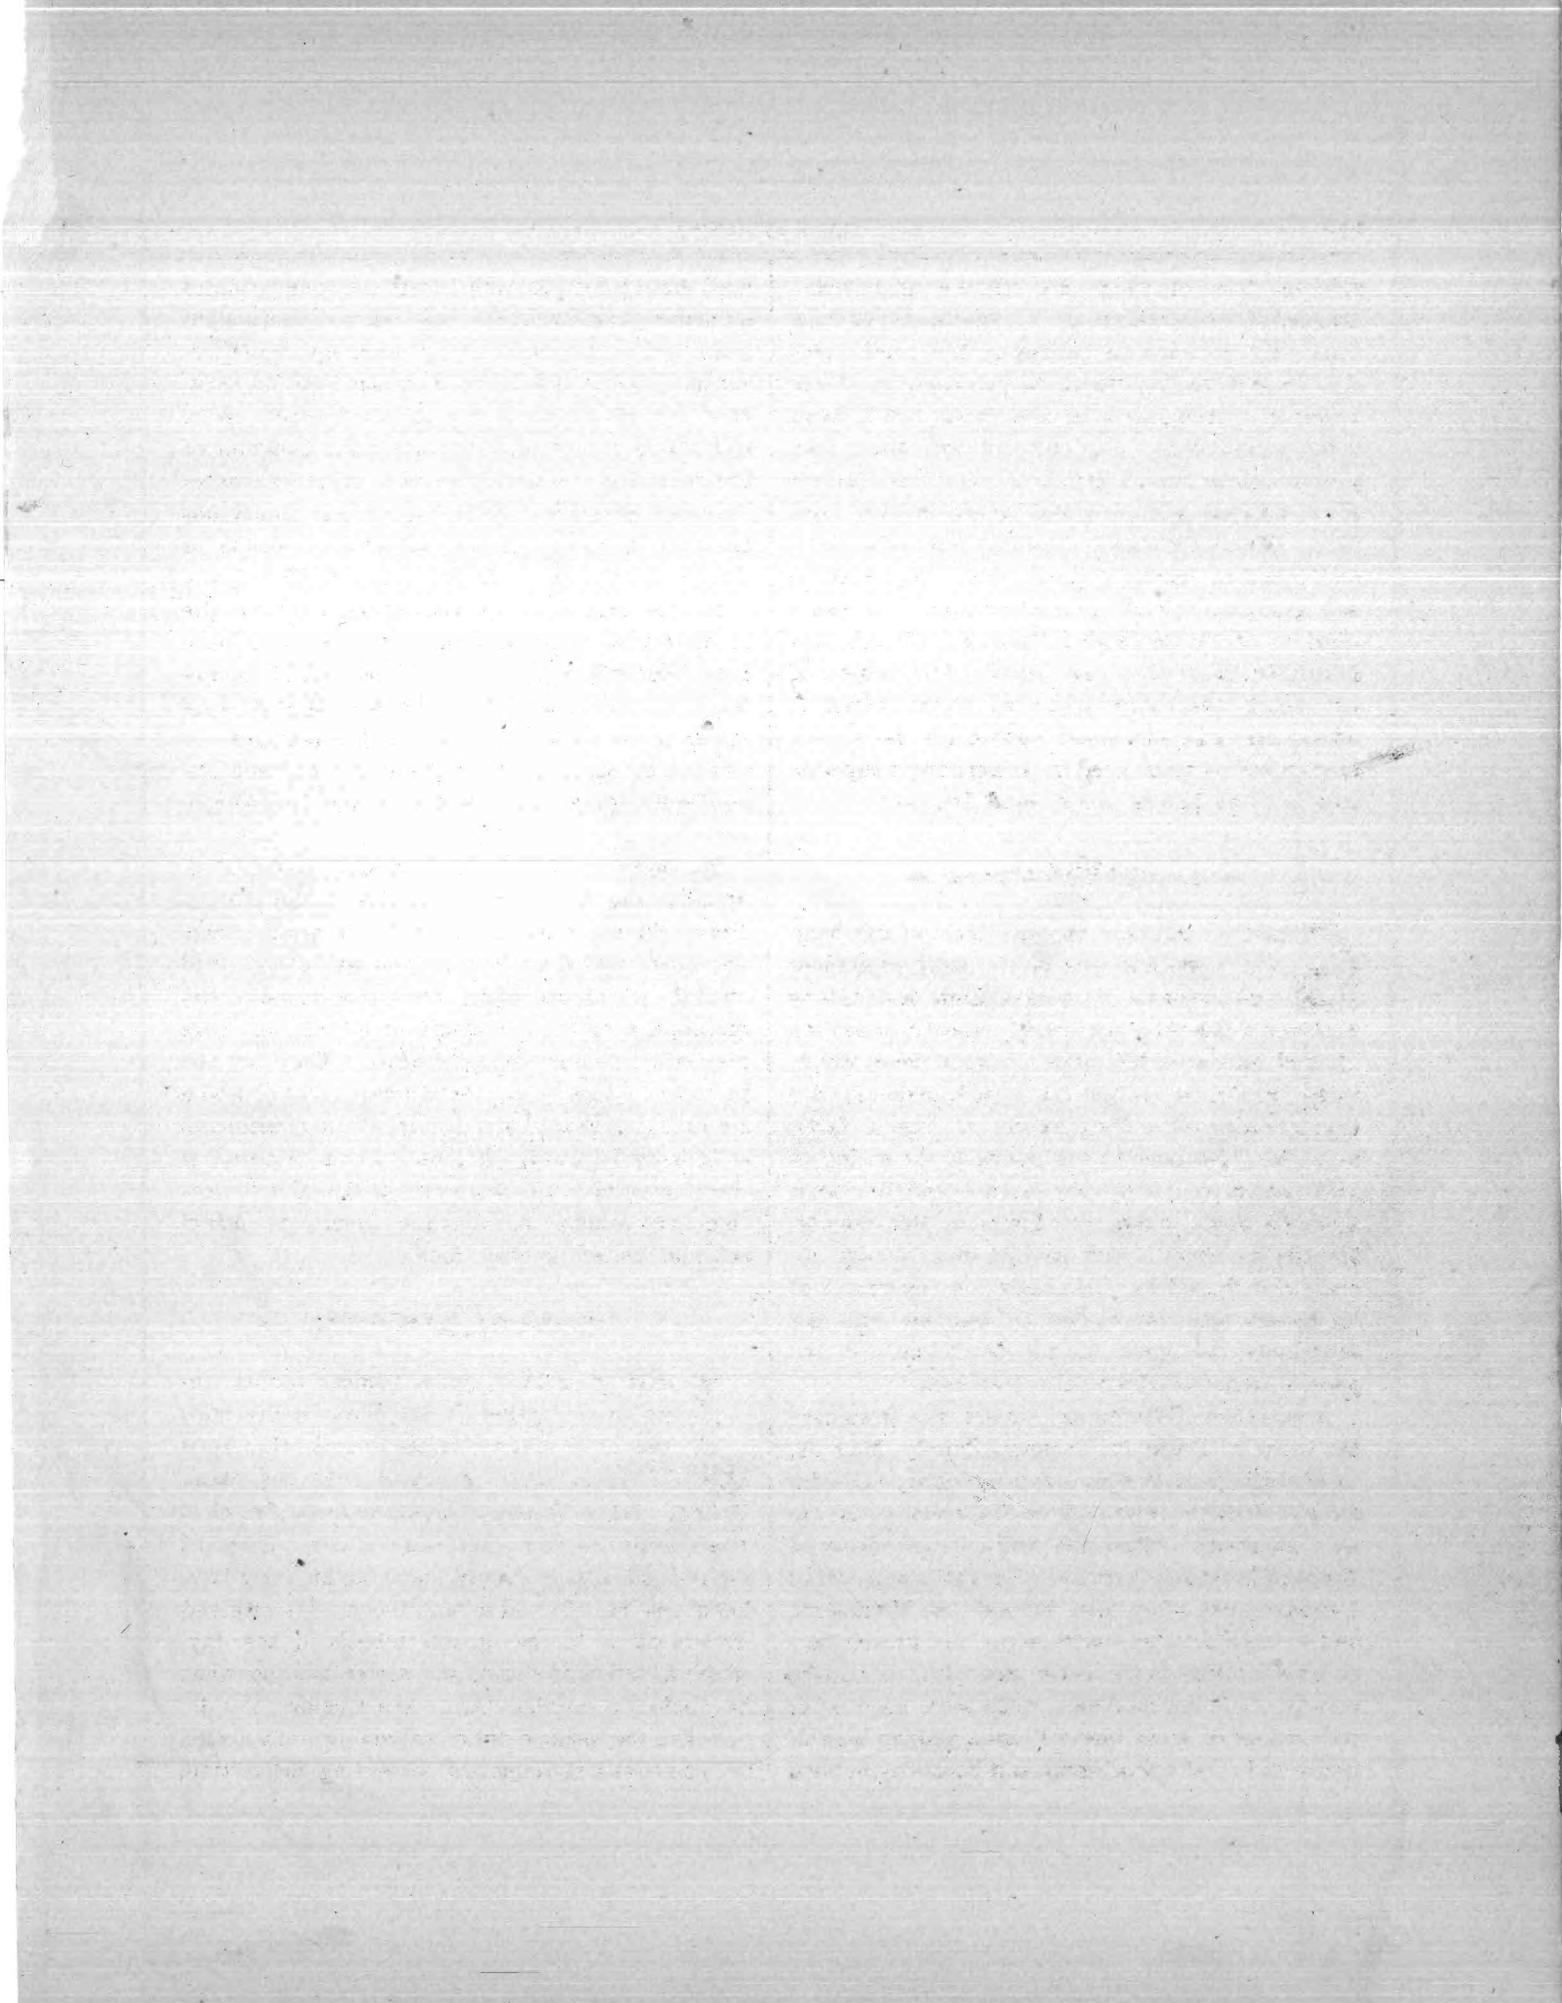

A native of Illinois, our subject was born near the town of Pekin, in Tazewell County, May 31, 1856. His parents were Adam and Mary (Lautenschlag) Heil, who were natives of Germany, and are now numbered among the well-to-do residents of Eight Mile Grove Precinct. George was a lad of fourteen years when they crossed the Mississippi, and in the meantime had received the greater part of his education in the district schools of his native county. His boyhood and youth were spent after the manner of most farmers' sons, making himself useful as he had opportunity, and becoming imbued with those principles which form the foundation of all manly character. He was nearly twenty-eight years old at the time of his marriage, which occurred in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, Feb. 28, 1884, Miss Maggie Stohrer being the bride-elect. Mrs. Heil was born Feb. 5, 1865, and is the daughter of Christian and Lizzie Stohrer, who were natives of Germany, and are now living in this county not far from the home of our subject. A sketch of them will be found on another page in this volume.

Mr. and Mrs. Heil commenced their wedded life at their present homestead, and here have been born two children: Henry E., May 18, 1886, and Mary L., March 1, 1887. Mr. and Mrs. H. were reared in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church, of which they are devout members, and our subject, politically, gives his support to the Democratic party.

Mr. and Mrs. Stohrer, the parents of Mrs. Heil, upon leaving their native land and coming to the United States settled in Tazewell County, Ill., where the father carried on farming, and where they lived until the spring of 1882. They then came to Nebraska, settling in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, where they still live and are prospering. They are the parents of a large family of children, eight of whom are living. George and Philip continue residents of Tazewell County, Ill., near Pekin; Courad is carrying on his own farm in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, this county; Alice, Katie, Louisa and Adam continue under the home roof.

JOHN PHILPOT, JR., a pioneer farmer, residing on section 33, Mt. Pleasant Precinct, was born in Jo Daviess County, Ill., April 19, 1851. He is a son of John and Sarah Philpot. (See sketch of John Philpot, Sr., elsewhere in this work.) Our subject attained man's estate in his native county, and from his early boyhood has been inured to farm labor. He received his education in the district schools of the day, which he attended during the winter months, when he could do nothing else. The summer was devoted to the various duties pertaining to farm life. He possesses a studious and observing disposition, and has by the close study of events added largely to his fund of practical knowledge.

Yours Truly
Noah Clemmons

In the summer of 1872 our subject came to Nebraska, where he purchased the eighty acres of land on which he now lives, and returned to Illinois. In the autumn of 1873 he settled on his present farm, where he has lived ever since. His land was wild and uncultivated when he bought it, and when he settled on it he devoted his energy to its cultivation and improvement. His efforts have been very successful, and he has from time to time added to his original purchase until he now owns 280 acres, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation, and rendered very valuable by his energy and industry.

After our subject had visited Nebraska and purchased his land he returned to Illinois, and was married to Miss Mary Mosley, Feb. 20, 1873. This lady is a native of England, was born Jan. 7, 1855, and is the daughter of James and Ellen Mosley, who came to America from England, and now reside in Mt. Pleasant Precinct. They first located in Jo Daviess County, Ill., when this lady was a child about three years old. They resided there a number of years, when they came to Cass County, Neb. Her parents have a family of seven children, five of whom are living, namely: Mary, Sarah E.; Hattie L., the wife of J. E. Leyda, residing in Avoca Precinct; Annie L., the wife of Abram Cutter, resides in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and Ella S. The two deceased children were James and William. Both her parents are members of the Christian Church; they are in the prime of life, surrounded by their friends and relatives, and are enjoying the fruits of a life of usefulness and well-doing.

A family of five children have been born to Mr. Philpot and his wife, named as follows: James H. was born Feb. 16, 1874; Sarah E., Aug. 11, 1876; Laura E., Sept. 13, 1878; Alice L., Nov. 11, 1880, and an infant daughter, not yet named, June 17, 1888. In his efforts to secure a competency his wife has proved an able counselor for many years. No task was too hard for her to undertake, no duty too unpleasant for her to perform, if she felt that the interests of her husband and family would be subserved. It is to this self-sacrificing spirit manifested by her that their present competency may be largely attributed. She is a consistent and active member of the Christian Church, taking a special interest in all matters connected therewith. Our subject and his wife find time to share in any and all plans having for their object the ultimate good of the community in which they live, in a social, educational or religious manner.

In politics Mr. Philpot is a Republican, is serving the second term as President of the Mt. Pleasant Precinct Central Republican Committee, also a second term as School Director, and has served as Judge of Elections in his precinct. In addition to his general farming he is just entering into the business of thoroughbred stock-raising, and in a few years from now will have made his mark in that branch of the business.

— — — — —

NOA H CLEMMONS. Perhaps one of the most distinguished traits in the character of the subject of this biography, who is an ex-member of the Wisconsin Legislature, is his uncompromising advocacy of temperance, and his decided prohibition principles. His peculiar experience in life, and the opportunities which he has had to observe the evils of strong drink, have led him to set his face in opposition to both the manufacture and the sale of liquor in any form. He has for the last forty-two years devoted himself to the temperance work, and given his aid in every way possible to prohibition, first, last, and all the time.

Our subject traces his ancestry to Ireland, of which his grandfather, Zachariah Clemmons, is thought to have been a native. If he were born there, however, he emigrated to America in time to do good service in the Revolutionary War, being in the army the whole seven years, and becoming closely acquainted with Gen. Washington. After the independence of the Colonies had been established, he migrated to Jackson County, Ohio, during the period of its early settlement, and there spent the remainder of his days, passing away at the advanced age of one hundred and fifteen years. A year prior to his decease he was quite active on his feet.

John Clemmons, the father of our subject, was born in Tazewell County, Va., in 1771, where he lived until reaching man's estate, then made his way to Tennessee. During his sojourn there he made the acquaintance of Andrew Jackson, later President of the United States, with whom he played ball and engaged in other youthful sports. While a resident of Tennessee he was married to Miss Phœbe Travis, and later they removed to Jackson County, Ohio, where Noah, the subject of this sketch, was born Feb. 8, 1814. John Clemmons was a resident of the Buckeye State thirty years thereafter, and then in his old age came west of the Mississippi, and died at the home of his son John, in Cass County, Neb., March 20, 1855, when eighty-seven years old. The mother had passed away fifteen years before, about 1840, in Scioto County, Ohio.

Our subject was reared in Jackson and Scioto Counties, of the Buckeye State, receiving a very limited education, as there were then no schools except those carried on by subscription. The father was in limited circumstances, and the children, as soon as old enough, were obliged to render assistance in working the farm. Noah soon began to "paddle his own canoe," working for the farmers of his neighborhood, mornings, evenings and Saturdays, for his board, and the balance of the time attending school in the town of Wheelersburg, where he learned bookkeeping and the other details of a business education.

March 28, 1842, when a man of twenty-eight years, Mr. Clemmons left his native State, and making his way to the Territory of Wisconsin worked four years in the lead mines of Grant County, and at the expiration of this time was given a situation as clerk in a store of general merchandise in Platteville. Later, in the spring of 1853, in company with a friend he embarked in the mercantile business, which he carried on for the space of five years. He had in the meantime distinguished himself as a public-spirited and intelligent citizen, and was esteemed worthy by the people of that county to represent them in the Wisconsin Legislature, being elected in 1851 on the Independent ticket. He received all but five out of over 500 votes in the township where he lived, and the solid vote of the township adjoining, being elected by perhaps the largest majority ever given a man in the State. He served his term acceptably, and in 1855 removed to Madison, of which he was a resident until July, 1869.

In the year above mentioned Mr. Clemmons, crossing the Mississippi, came to Southern Nebraska and purchased the farm of 200 acres on section 13, in Rock Bluff Precinct, where he has since lived. In this community, as heretofore, he was recognized as a valued addition to the ranks of its enterprising and able men, and has occupied various positions of trust. While in Wisconsin he served as Assessor, and has also held the same office two years in Rock Bluff Precinct.

Liquor, during the pioneer days of Ohio, as in other places, was freely dispensed both in the stores and the harvest fields, and Mr. Clemmons at an early period in his life was brought face to face with the evils resulting therefrom. In several stores where he was employed as clerk, he, by persevering argument, induced the proprietors to abandon the sale of liquor, and in Madison, Wis., was instrumental in organizing a lodge of the Sons of Temperance, its two first members being Albert Maine and Daniel Johnson, inebriates whom Mr. Clemmons induced to sign the pledge with him. From this trio started the lodge which afterward became one of the important factors of the work in that section, they in the course of six weeks having secured about sixty members. Mr. Maine was a man of means, and prominent in his community, and happily listened to the arguments of Mr. Clemmons against the use of liquor in time to save himself from ruin. He finally became one of the most earnest workers in the temperance cause. Mr. Maine served as Sheriff of Dane County, Wis., several years, and was succeeded to the office by his son. The father passed away some time ago, and the son is now one of the prominent men of Madison.

At one period of his early life Mr. Clemmons was a bartender on the steamboat "Brownville," plying the Ohio, Mississippi, Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers. During this time what he saw around him completed his disgust for whisky, and strengthened him in his resolve to fight it to the bitter end. He saw around him men of fine talents being ruined by its use, happy homes made desolate, and the standard sometimes of an entire community laid in the dust. That he has been enabled to contribute toward the demolition of this monster should be a source of deep satisfaction, and confer upon him the consciousness that he has not lived in vain. Of this prominent and popular citizen a fine portrait appears on an adjoining page.

WILLIAM T. COLE, of Plattsmouth Precinct, in common with most of the men around him, built up the homestead which he now owns and occupies nearly from first principles, it being but slightly improved when he took possession of it in 1875. In addition to carrying on agriculture, he has put up a good house, barn, stable, corn-cribs, and the other structures necessary for his convenience, besides fencing his fields and planting fruit and shade trees. His farm ranks in value among the best in his locality. He has a fair assortment of live stock, and is each year adding something to the beauty and value of his property.

Our subject was born in Shelby County, Ohio, Nov. 18, 1838, and is the son of DeMitt and Elizabeth (McVey) Cole, who were also natives of the Buckeye State, and born respectively in Pickaway and Shelby Counties. Their mother died in her native county in 1842, when her son William T., was a little lad of four years. The father subsequently removed, about 1844, to Pickaway County, where he lived a period of twenty years, then set his face toward the farther West, coming to Nebraska Territory in the year 1864. He located on land eight miles south of the present city of Plattsmouth, and there followed agriculture until his death, which occurred in December, 1883, after arriving at the ripe old age of seventy-eight years.

William T. Cole upon the outbreak of the Civil War was a resident of Ohio, and enlisted as a Union soldier in Company B, 88th Ohio Infantry, serving a period of thirty-three months, and being in the meantime promoted to Corporal. Although only a member of the State Militia, he was sent outside with his regiment several times, and his squad captured John Morgan, while making his raid through Southern Ohio. At the expiration of his term of enlistment, Mr. Cole received his honorable discharge, and returning to Pickaway County, Ohio, engaged there in farming until the year 1867. Then joining his father in the new State of Nebraska, he located on the farm of the latter, which occupied a part of section 25, Rock Bluff Precinct. He was a resident there five years, then removing to town, was engaged in the sale of sewing machines two years. At the expiration of this time he purchased the land which he now owns, and began in earnest its development and improvement.

Our subject was married in Pickaway County, Ohio, Dec. 7, 1865, to Miss Harriet A., daughter of William and Susan (Hoffline) Peters. Mrs. Cole was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, Oct. 6, 1844, and lived there with her parents until her marriage. The family of the latter consisted of six children. The parents were natives of Ohio and Maryland. The father was a Universalist in religious belief, and is now deceased. The mother is still living, and belongs to the Lutheran Church.

To Mr. and Mrs. Cole there were born four children, the eldest of whom a daughter Ella, is now the wife of William T. Adams, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume; Elmer E., Verna E. and Lily are at home with their parents. In politics Mr. Cole is a Democrat.

MAYNARD SPINK is County Superintendent of Public Instruction, and serving his second term, which is ample indication of the estimation in which he is held by the people interested in educational matters. He has had a thorough experience in connection with his calling, and has always been warmly interested in the most important matter of training the young, making it a life study to adopt that system which shall effect the best results. He came to Nebraska first in April of 1880, taking up his residence in Elmwood Precinct. Later he purchased land, and in connection with the cultivation of this also pursued his calling as a teacher. His land, however, was located in South Bend Precinct, and comprised 160 acres in an uncultivated condition. He moved upon it in the spring of 1881, and commenced in earnest the battle with the primitive soil, fencing the land, putting out an orchard and forest trees, and erecting the necessary buildings. Upon this he lived until the spring of 1886, engaged mostly in teaching, while at the same time superintending the operations of his farm. He has always taken an active interest in the educational affairs of the county and State, and in the fall of 1885 was elected to his present position. The spring following he removed from the farm to Weeping Water, where he has since resided. At the expiration of the first term of his office he was re-elected by a very greatly increased majority, and the people have indicated in many other directions the esteem and confidence in which they hold him, not only as an instructor and official, but as a man and citizen. Politically, he affiliates with the Republican party.

Our subject was born in Wayne, Wayne Co., Mich., Dec. 27, 1856, and completed his education in the schools of Belleville, that State. His experience as a teacher commenced when he was a youth of seventeen years, and he has been continuously engaged in the duties pertaining to his calling until the present. In his native State he was first elected, in 1879, Superintendent of the schools of Sumpter Township, Wayne County, and served in that capacity until coming to Nebraska. He was married in Cass County, Neb., Sept. 28, 1881, to Miss Kate Magee, who was born in Peoria County, Ill., Jan. 5, 1860. Mrs. Spink came to this county with her parents when a young girl of fifteen years, they settling in South Bend Precinct, where she lived until her marriage. She is the daughter of George and Elizabeth Magee, who were natives of Ohio and Kentucky, and the father for many years carried on farming in Peoria County, Ill. He is living in Aston, Saunders Co., Neb. To Mr. and Mrs. Spink there has been born one child only, a daughter, Lefie Claire, born July 19, 1886.

Solomon Spink, the father of our subject, was born near Whitehall, Vt., and left New England with his parents when a small boy, they settling in Western New York. He was there reared to man's estate, and married Miss Jane C. Heath. In due time they became the parents of four children, three sons and one daughter, and all are now living, and residents of Nebraska, Colorado and Michigan. After their marriage the parents emigrated to Wayne County, Mich., where the father followed his trade of carpenter until after the outbreak of the Rebellion. He watched the conflict until 1863, and then, unable further to restrain his patriotic impulses, left his little family and enlisted in a Michigan regiment. He returned to them again, dying at his home in Michigan. His widow is still living, making her home with her children in Eastern Colorado. She was born at Olean, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., in 1831, and both parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ADAM KRAEGER. The pioneer element of Cass County numbers the subject of this sketch as one of its most enterprising and successful men. He came to Eight Mile Grove Precinct in the spring of 1871, and purchased 160 acres of uncultivated prairie land, for which he paid the munificent sum of $1.50 per acre. He was without means for its development, and for two years thereafter employed himself as a farm laborer by the month to secure that by which he could proceed with the cultivation of his property. Upon it not a furrow had been turned, neither was there a building nor a fence. He thus began from the first principles in the construction of a homestead, and looking upon his possessions to-day—a finely improved estate of 320 acres—we must acknowledge that the industry and perseverance with which he has labored are worthy of more than a passing mention.

One of the finest representatives of the substantial German element of this county, our subject was born May 5, 1840. His parents, John and Eve Kraeger, were natives of the same locality as their son, and there the father died. The mother later, in company with her two sons, Adam and John, emigrated to America, taking passage on a sailing-vessel at the port of Bremen, and after an ocean voyage of about one month landed at New York City. They had embarked about the 1st of December, 1865, and first set foot upon American soil in January following. They made their way at once to Tazewell County, Ill., where the sons provided comfortably for their mother until her death, which occurred about 1871. The brother John thereafter took up his residence in Illinois. He is now living in Eight Mile Grove.

Mr. Kraeger after coming to this country turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, and believing that it was not good for man to be alone, he was married, Feb. 15, 1881, to Miss Louisa Wagner. This lady is a native of the same Province as her husband in Germany, and was born Jan. 12, 1857. Her parents were William and Wilhelmina Wagner, also natives of the Fatherland, and the former of whom died in his native Germany about 1868. The mother in 1875 came with her two daughters to America, making the passage in eleven days on a steamer, and like the future husband of Miss Louisa, coming directly to this county. It was not long thereafter until the young people met and decided to unite their fortunes for life.

To our subject and his excellent wife there have been born five children, namely: Caroline, Feb. 25, 1882; Dollie, Jan. 25, 1884; Wilhelmina, July 21, 1885, and John, April 8, 1886. Mr. Kraeger, politically, affiliates with the Democratic party, and has distinguished himself as a peaceable and law-abiding citizen, attending strictly to his own concerns, but always willing to aid and encourage the projects calculated for the general welfare of the community.

PHILIP C. ENGELL, a prominent pioneer of Cass County, is now a prominent member of its farming community. He owns and manages a large farm comprising one-half of section 14, Liberty Precinct, and here he and his family have a very pleasant home. He is a native of New York, Schoharie County his birthplace, and Sept. 25, 1831, was the date of his birth. His parents, Peter and Catherine (Crounze) Engell, natives of the State of New York, were early settlers of St. Joseph County, Mich., going there when our subject was an infant, and settling in the woods when the surrounding country was in its primitive wildness, inhabited by the Indians, as is indicated by the date of their arrival there early in 1832. There by hard labor they reared a comfortable home, and bore an honorable part in the development of the county, and there the father rounded out and completed a useful life, dying in the sixties on his homestead in White Pigeon Township, he then being past middle age. His wife is yet living there with her youngest son, Henry, by her second husband, Lorenzo Jones, and she is now seventy-nine years old. She is a devoted member of the Methodist Church, as was her husband, and she shared with him the respect of the entire community.

Their son of whom we write grew to man's estate amid the pioneer scenes of his parental home, remaining an inmate of the household until he was twenty-five years old, never until that time, since his entrance into the county when an infant, going beyond its boundaries, his first journey into the great world at that time being to Pike's Peak and Denver City. This was during the great excitement caused by the discovery of gold in 1859. Our subject prospected for some six weeks with others who went with him, but they found that the precious metal was not to be picked up on the surface as many seemed to think when they started for that region, and that, in fact, its hidden sources were undiscoverable, so our subject and his companions retraced their way across the great plains that they had traversed so recently with such exultant feelings and strong hopes of securing a fortune. Mr. Engle determined not to return to his old home only to confess the failure of his schemes, but decided instead to locate somewhere on the rich farming lands of the Missouri River basin, and in a surer, if slower way, build up the fortune that he had vainly sought in the Rocky Mountains. He soon decided on Cass County as the most desirable place for location, as he was favorably impressed with its many advantages of climate, fertility of soil, etc. With characteristic energy he went to work at breaking land for other settlers in order to pay for land of his own, and in that way secured a part of his present farm, and doubtless broke a section or more of land. In the spring of 1862 he completed the purchase of his land, which was then in a primitive state. It now forms one of the finest and best improved farms in this part of the county, and with its neat and comfortable buildings, of a modern style of architecture, attracts the eye of the stranger, who singles it out as one of the most desirable places for a home to be seen in the precinct. At one time in the early years of his settlement here Mr. Engell was actively and profitably engaged in freighting across the plains to Denver and even beyond. While thus engaged he hunted some, and has killed as many as fourteen buffaloes, besides a large number of antelopes.

When our subject first located here he was a single man, and for a few years kept bachelor's hall, but April 16, 1863, he became a benedict, as on that day his marriage was solemnized in Liberty with Miss Luticia Brinson, a native of Madison County, Ind. She was born Oct. 12, 1843, to David and Margaret (Saylor) Brinson, natives of Indiana. They were there reared and married, and after the birth of two children, Lydia A. and Mrs. Engell, they moved westward in 1844, and lived in Missouri five years. Later they removed to Madison County, Iowa, and there the mother died in 1851, leaving six small children. Two years after her death Mr. Brinson married Sarah Evans, and in 1854 the family moved to Nebraska City, when that place was in its infancy. Mr. Brinson took up a claim and lived on it two years, and then sold it and purchased another in Liberty. He lived here for some years with his family, and finally went to Broken Bow, Custer County, this State, with his family, and still resides there, he at the age of seventy years, and his wife at the age of sixty-five years. Mrs. Engell remained an inmate of the parental household until she was married. She is the mother of seven children, of whom three are dead—an infant, Anna E. and Emery. Those living are all at home, and their names are Frederic E., Charles E., Theresa A. and John B.

Mr. Engell has seen much of pioneer life, having been reared in a pioneer home in a newly settled country, and then, in the vigor of early manhood, becoming in turn an important factor in the development of a frontier Territory. He was well endowed with a courageous, self-sacrificing spirit, powers of endurance, energy and capacity, necessary to encounter the difficulties that lay before him in the wild, undeveloped West when he first cast in his lot with the early settlers of this region. The probity of his character and his unblemished life record cause him to be greatly respected by all in this community, of which he has been a member for so many years. He and his estimable wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Engell is Trustee and Steward of that church. In politics he is a solid Republican.

GEORGE F. SHRYDER, Sr., retired farmer, is a genuine pioneer of Cass County, having been here since 1856, arriving on the day that James Buchanan was elected President of the United States. He first located in Three Grove, twelve miles east of Weeping Water, where he bought a claim for $1,600, and settled on it before there were any improvements, excepting that there was a small house on it. When Mr. Shryder came to this county there were only two houses in Plattsmouth, and none between there and Three Grove, which received its cognomen from the fact that there were three houses there, three settlers in a grove. In 1857 there was quite an Indian scare in that region, and all in the vicinity of Three Grove were out scouting, and camped one night on the site of the present city of Weeping Water. They captured one Indian and a pony; the former was tied and a guard placed over him, but he escaped in spite of their precaution. Some of the people who took part in that affair are still living here. The alarm was all caused by the shooting of an Indian on Salt Creek near Lincoln. Nothing more was heard of the Indians for some time after that. Indian scares were often aroused by maliciously disposed people, who would don red blankets and show themselves to the settlers for the purpose of frightening them.

Our subject was born Sept. 10, 1822, in Cayuga County, N. Y., where he was reared and educated. His father, Ernest C. Shryder, was born in Hamburg, Germany, and when six years of age emigrated with his mother to New York. In that State he grew to manhood and was married, Sarah Cooper becoming his wife. She bore him five children, three girls and two boys, all of whom grew to maturity, and three are still living, our subject being the youngest. Mr. and Mrs. Shryder spent their last years in Nebraska. Both were members of the United Presbyterian Church, and lived consistent Christian lives.

George F. Shryder, of this sketch, remained in his native town until the age of sixteen, when he removed with his parents to Illinois, settling in Peoria County. He worked at various occupations, and continued a resident of the Prairie State until taking up his abode here, as previously mentioned. The claim which he bought consisted of 220 acres of land in its primitive wildness, and from this, by dint of hard labor, ambitious energy and practical judgment, he has eliminated a fine, productive farm. During the twenty-eight years that he resided on it he fenced it, set out an orchard, small fruits and vines, and from it gained a good subsistence, and amassed a handsome competency by raising stock and grain, and expending the proceeds judiciously. In 1884 Mr. Shryder sold his farm for the modest sum of $8,000, and moved into town, where he lived fourteen months. He then bought 160 acres of land on section 36, Centre Precinct, where he has since lived. He also owns a good house on the edge of the city of Weeping Water, where he now resides.

The union of our subject with Miss Margaret A. Parr was solemnized Jan. 4, 1852, in Illinois. Her parents, Joseph and Margaret (Bloomer) Parr, were natives of Ireland, and lived there several years after their marriage, finally coming to America, and settling in Peoria County, Ill., where he pursued his occupation of farming. Of their union six children were born, three during their residence in Ireland, and three after they came to Illinois. Of these five grew to maturity, of whom the following is the record: Nancy, born Feb. 10, 1828; Margaret, Oct. 1, 1833; Thomas, April 12, 1839; James, born June 6, 1841, died Feb. 4, 1887; Sarah M., born Dec. 19, 1844. Mr. Parr remained in Illinois until his death, which occurred Nov. 15, 1852, in the fifty-third year of his age. His wife survived him and married again, living until Feb. 11, 1881, when she too quietly passed on to the silent world beyond.

Of the union of our subject and his wife six children have been born, three of whom died in early childhood, namely: James, John and Theodore. Of the three now living the following is recorded: Sarah Margaret married L. A. Young, and they have two children (see sketch of L. A. Young); Ida May married Robert Young, and they have three children; George L. Shryder married Miss Hattie J. Pitman, a native of Nebraska, born in Nebraska City, Sept. 30, 1866. Her father, Wesley Pitman, is a native of Indiana, and removed with his family to Liberty Precinct in the early days of its settlement.

Our subject takes a deep interest in the welfare of his town, and is at all times ready and willing to aid all practical schemes for its moral, social or intellectual improvement, and though not a politician, he has held various town offices, always performing the duties devolving upon him with care and fidelity. He is a staunch Republican, voted for William H. Harrison, and also for Benjamin Harrison. Both he and his estimable wife are valued members of the Presbyterian Church, and are sincere and conscientious Christians.

—•••••—

FRANK STANDER. The Great West is permeated with the thrifty German element which has found its way into every channel of trade and business, and comprises a large proportion of the bone and sinew and the wealth of the United States. The sons of the Fatherland were not slow to avail themselves of the inducements held out for settlement beyond the Mississippi, and among them in the earlier days came the subject of this sketch, who is now one of the most prominent farmers of Louisville Precinct, and President of the Louisville Bank. This institution was purchased by himself and his son James in 1884, having been established the year previously by J. J. Manker and his brothers. James Stander operated as cashier, and the bank is conducted upon those principles which are calculated to insure its perpetuation and success.

Our subject was born in the small village of Valkarota, in Prussia, on the 26th of May, 1835, and is the son of George and Mary (Hartman) Stander, natives of the same section of country. Their family comprised four sons and four daughters, all of whom are living, and of whom Frank was the sixth in order of birth. In accordance with the laws and customs of his native country he was placed in school when a little lad six years of age, and gave close attention to his studies until fourteen years old. He then served an apprenticeship of three years at the trade of shoemaker, and thereafter was engaged as a journeyman until a youth of nineteen, when he set sail for America.

From the city of New York young Stander made his way to Milwaukee, Wis., where he was employed two years at his trade and other pursuits. Later we find him working on a farm for about five years, and in the fall of 1858 he turned his steps toward the farther West. Coming to this county he stopped for a brief time at Plattsmouth, and later visited the land-office in Nebraska City, where he entered 120 acres on section 35, Louisville Precinct. From this he opened up a good farm, occupying it eight years, then selling out, purchased 160 acres on section 34. To this he added from time to time until he is now the owner of 480 acres in one body. He has carried on mixed farming successfully, making a specialty of grain and stock raising, breeding horses, cattle and swine, his favorite equines being the Norman and Clydesdale stock.

In 1882 Mr. Stander erected a large store building in Louisville, wherein he put a good stock of general merchandise, and three years later the bank was established in the same place. In addition to the property already mentioned, Mr. Stander has two sections of land in Keith County, which is mostly under a state of cultivation. He has been a man prominent in his community, serving as a member of the School Board for the last fifteen years, officiating as Assessor six years, and occupying the various other local offices. He votes the straight Democratic ticket, and in religious matters is a devout member of the Catholic Church. For a man who crossed the Missouri River without capital, borrowing $1.50 to get across, it must be admitted that his industry and perseverance have been amply rewarded.

Our subject was married, in the spring of 1859, to Miss Eliza, daughter of Jacob and Fillapena Regula, who was a native of Wisconsin. They began their wedded life together at the farm in Louisville Precinct, and in due time the household circle was completed by the birth of twelve children, nine sons and three daughters. The eldest, James, has already been mentioned; George is occupied at farming on his own account; Helen, the eldest daughter, and her brother Peter, are the assistants of their father in the store and bank; Henry, William, Lizzie, Louie, Leslie, Arthur, Olivie and Ralph are at home with their parents.

HIRAM G. HAWLEY is one of the kind of men to whom the thriving State of Nebraska is deeply indebted for the present proud position she holds in the galaxy of the States of the nation. It is by the skill, knowledge and energy he exerted that he has made his home farm, which is located on section 31 in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, to blossom as the rose, and to bring forth abundant fruits.

This gentleman is a native of Ohio, having been born in Lorain County, Aug. 8, 1834. There he resided and attained to years of manhood, becoming, from the earliest days of his life, accustomed to the trials and cares incident to a life in a new country, as at that time his native county was in a comparatively wild and sparsely settled condition. During his youth he received a fair common-school education, and since that time he has lost no opportunity for adding in a practical way to his store of knowledge. In the autumn of 1855 Mr. Hawley went to Scott County, Iowa, and remained there about a year. From there he went to Cedar County, same State, where he lived for thirteen years. In the spring of 1869, having heard so much about the advantages held out by Nebraska, and the opportunity that it offered for securing a home and a competence, he decided to test the truth of the reports for himself. Accordingly, in the spring of 1869 he migrated to this State, and at once settled upon his present farm of eighty acres, which he purchased for $450. The land was void of all improvement, and the present high state of its cultivation is due in every respect to the application and perseverance of the owner.

The subject of our sketch was married in Lorain County, Ohio, Aug. 15, 1855, to Emily B. Bunker. She is a daughter of James and Julia Bunker, both of whom are dead. Nine children have been born to the couple, six of whom survive: Archie L. resides in Chase County, Neb.; Dwight H. in Cheyenne County; Frederick in Chase County; Ada is a teacher in the district school, and Harry and Frank are at home with their parents.

Mr. Hawley is a son of Uriah and Elizabeth Hawley, both natives of New England. The father was supposed to have settled in Lorain County, Ohio, as early as 1824 or 1825. His paternal ancestors are believed to have been of English descent, but no record in existence will verify the belief. A family of seven children was born to his parents, of which number the following survive: Elizabeth, now the widow of Josiah Jenney, resides in Ottumwa, Iowa; Newton J. resides in Missouri; Sarah is the wife of Henry Boswith, and resides in Henry County, Iowa; and Hiram G., our subject. Maria was the wife of Quincy Boswith, and is now deceased.

For a few months after settling on his new land Hiram G. Hawley lived in a shanty until he could build a home sufficiently comfortable for his family. He began his work with a will and determination to have a home second to none in the county, and it needs but a glance to be convinced of what success he has had in his undertaking. In the course of his life in Nebraska he escaped many of the hardships which came to his fellow settlers, yet he saw sufficient trouble, and endured self-denials to an extent that has taught him what a pioneer in Nebraska should expect. When he settled here Weeping Water contained only a few buildings, one a blacksmith-shop, and one building used jointly for religious and educational purposes, and from this wild and desolate condition he has seen the entire country develop into its present perfected state.

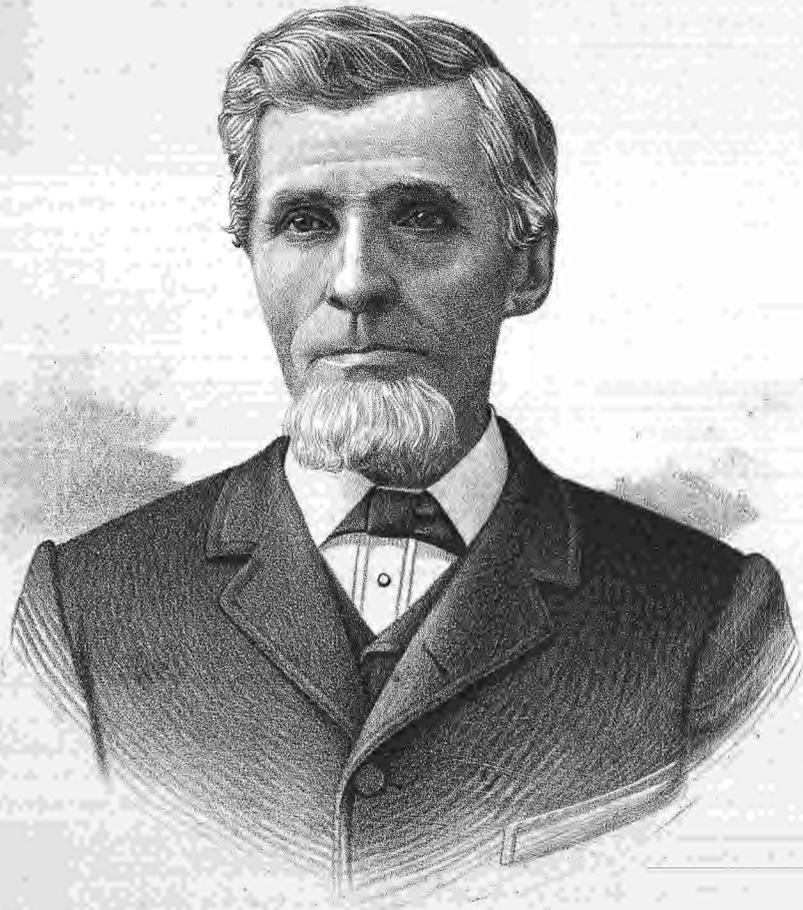

Our subject has by a life of rectitude and honor gained the entire confidence and good-will of the entire neighborhood, and has been called by the people of his precinct to fill a position of credit and trust. For three years he has been the Assessor of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and in 1888 he was re-elected his own successor. His political affiliations are with the Republican party, in the success of which he takes an active and lively interest. His wife and daughter are members of the Congregational Church. The entire family hold a prominent position in the society of the precinct.

EDWIN F. RICHARDS, a prosperous young farmer, a resident of Elmwood Precinct, was born in Goffstown Village, Hillsboro Co., N. H., July 13, 1852. His early life was spent in that Switzerland of America, living upon a farm. When he was three years of age his mother died, and he was cared for by his sister Mary A., then only eleven years of age, and who is now a resident of Illinois. At the age of fourteen he went to Illinois, where he joined his sister, who had married Mr. Harrison Stinson, and removed to that State, settling in Ogle County, where Mr. Richards lived until 1872. Edwin's educational advantages in New Hampshire as well as in Illinois consisted only of the good common schools, which he improved to the fullest extent. He began work at an early day, and was taught to be industrious and to rely solely upon his own efforts, which early training has been of the utmost value to him in his life in the West. In the spring of 1871 his brother Horace came West and joined him in Illinois, and in the following year they determined to seek their fortunes in the at that time Far West. In pursuance of this determination they started with teams overland for Nebraska. They crossed the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, where they purchased a quarter-section of land from the railway company, but which they were not able to retain.

After the grasshopper scourge had abated, our subject and his brother thought they would again make the venture, as their faith in the ultimate prosperity of the State was unshaken, so they repurchased their first selection. In 1879 Mr. Richards purchased his present eighty acres of land, and has since added to it, until he is now the owner of 200 acres, 120 of which is located on section 24 and eighty on section 25, which is improved by a snug and conveniently arranged one and one-half story frame house, good barns, very extensive cattle sheds and corn cribs, a fine orchard and thrifty groves. His entire tract of land has a never-failing supply of the purest water.

*Yours &c
Brand Cole*

Our subject was married, in 1881, to Miss Alvira B. Colbert, the eldest daughter of James Colbert, a resident of Elmwood Precinct. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Richards: Ralph E., born June 15, 1882, died while an infant; Mary A., born May 15, 1884, still living, is a brilliant, lovable child; and another son, Henry C., born July 18, 1887, died while an infant.

At the time of her death the mother of our subject was but thirty-six years of age. She possessed one of those fine, high-strung natures which enabled her to see all that was beautiful and grand in nature, which she has transmitted fully to her sons. A fine poetical vein threaded her nature, which often showed itself during life, and especially at the time of her last illness, when she wrote many fine poems, one of which we give:

Farewell, farewell, now husband dear,
And you six little ones,
For I am going to my long home
Never more to return.

Death soon will break the tie
That has bound us heart and hand,
But soon we all shall meet again
In that holy, happy land.

I leave you with these little ones,
Watch them with a parent's eye,
For they will have no mother near
To hear them when they cry.

When pain and sickness rack your frame
And make your flesh decay,
Then may you be provided for
As I have all my days.

And when your days are past,
And the Saviour calls you to rest,
Then shall we all meet in that holy land
Where we may all be blessed.

She died as she had lived, having a deep and abiding faith in the promises of the Creator, and having a Christian's hope.

The father of Mr. Richards is still living in New Hampshire, and is a man of considerable wealth. In 1887 he visited his sons and was very highly pleased with the progress they were making and the prospects that lay before them. He has attained the ripe old age of seventy-four years. He and his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Warren, were born in New Hampshire, and were among the early settlers of Goffstown. The mother was a granddaughter of the Gen. Warren who fell in defense of his country at the battle of Bunker Hill, at the beginning of the War for Independence. The paternal grandfather died when the father of our subject was a young boy, so the family history on that side is lost. Our subject's father remarried after his first wife's death, and four children were the result of that union; only one, Arthur, is now living. He resides on the old homestead in New Hampshire.

The subject of our sketch is one of a family of seven children, namely: Henry C., Mary A.; George W., now dead; Horace T., and Ephraim W., deceased, were older, and Charles A., who died when an infant, was younger. For several years Mr. Richards has been widely and favorably known as a well-informed stock-raiser, bringing a great degree of intelligence to the prosecution and successful conduct of that business. He is a liberal, large-hearted, kind man, who almost idolizes his wife and little daughter. He has contributed liberally toward the erection of all the churches in his vicinity, and is found in the front in all charitable enterprises, doing his part. In politics Mr. Richards is a Democrat. His services as public officer have up to this time been limited to membership in the School Board.

JOHAN H. BECKER. The precinct of Eight Mile Grove finds no more substantial or reliable citizen than the subject of this biography, who is the owner of over 1,000 acres of land. His property lies on section 13, the home farm comprising 1,000 acres, which his native thrift and industry have transformed from a raw prairie to one of the most thoroughly cultivated tracts of land along the northern line of the county. Like a large proportion of the solid men of this precinct. Mr. Becker is of German birth and parentage, first opening his eyes to the light Nov. 3, 1840. When a youth of seventeen years he emigrated to America, making the long voyage across the Atlantic from Havre, France, to New York City, being on the ocean forty-two days.

From the great metropolis our subject, a stranger in a strange land, and with very little money in his pocket, made his way directly to Tazewell County, Ill., where he set about earning his own living by the sweat of his brow. Engaging as a farm hand in that county, he sojourned in that region a period of seven years. There also he met his fate in the person of Miss Harriet E. Fuller, to whom he was married May 12, 1864. The young couple began the journey of life together in the modest home in that county, and lived in Illinois until the spring of 1878. Then, deciding to cast his lot with the people of Nebraska, Mr. Becker gathered together his personal effects and his little family, and crossing the Father of Waters came to this county. He had previously purchased 160 acres of land which is included in his present farm. From that time on he labored diligently, early and late, and was more than ordinarily wise in his investments, while his careful cultivation of the soil soon placed him upon an independent footing. Aside from a small amount received from his father's estate, he has had no assistance, being the architect of his own fortune.

Mr. Becker, who struggled under many difficulties for a number of years after coming to Nebraska, is now numbered among the leading land-owners of this county. In proportion to his property there also increased his position and standing among his fellow-citizens, who would have gladly raised him to the most important offices within their gift. While in Illinois he had held the minor offices of his township, and in 1884 he was the candidate of the Republican party of Cass County for Commissioner, but owing to his position on the county seat fight, he was defeated. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church, while his estimable wife belongs to the Baptist.

Mr. Becker received a good education in his native tongue, and by a course of reading keeps himself well posted upon topics of general interest. His land of late years has been largely devoted to stock-raising, with results eminently satisfactory. The homestead proper lies on section 13, and with its substantial and commodious buildings fulfills the modern idea of rural life with all its comforts. Seven children completed the household circle, who were named respectively: George H., William A., Mary E., Henry E., Philip T., Dora A. and Carrie O.

Philip and Catherine (Schneider) Becker, the parents of our subject, were also natives of Germany, and spent their last years there. The family consisted of six children.

—•••••—

E BENEZER G. LAUGHLIN, senior member of the firm of Laughlin & Laughlin, is, with his uncle, Benjamin F., conducting a very successful livery business at Greenwood. He is a man who at once attracts universal attention on account of his fine physique, being of commanding presence, upright, and of handsome proportions. In addition to a fine physical frame he has been endowed by nature with more than ordinary good business capacities. In a business requiring much tact and good management, he is extremely popular in his community, being courteous and obliging, and prompt to meet his obligations.

Our subject is a son of one of the first three pioneers of this county, William J. Laughlin, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere in this work. He was born in Mt. Pleasant, Henry Co., Iowa, May 12, 1859. He was an infant of five months when his parents moved to Nebraska, settling in Salt Creek Precinct. The country in that vicinity had at that time received but little attention from white settlers, and the first school in Salt Creek Precinct was conducted in the house of William Laughlin by the mother, who in her girlhood was Miss Mary Coleman. Later, a school building was erected on Salt Creek, where our subject attended principally in the winter season.

Our subject spent his boyhood and youth amid the scenes of frontier life, his mind and muscles developing in a healthy atmosphere. He assisted his parents around the homestead and continued with them until his marriage, which occurred Oct. 2, 1882, the bride being Miss Alice L., daughter of S. L. Anderson, of Kentucky. Mrs. Laughlin was born in Marion County, Iowa, Nov. 25, 1862, and was a maiden of seventeen years when her parents came to this county. They are now residing in Salt Creek. Their family consists of five children, all of whom are surviving and making their homes in this State except one, who lives in Kansas.

Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin commenced their wedded life together at a modest home in Salt Creek Precinct, and of their union there have been born four children, namely: Mary L., Pearl, William G. and Earl, the latter of whom died in infancy. Mrs. L. is a member in good standing of the Christian Church, and our subject uniformly votes the straight Democratic ticket. The family residence is pleasantly located in the southwestern part of the city, and is the resort of hosts of friends.

The livery business of Laughlins' was established at Greenwood in 1887. They have commodious quarters, located on Third street, and their horses and equipments will compare favorably with anything of the kind along the western line of the county. They enjoy a good patronage from the people of this locality.

DAVID SAMSON. This gentleman played no unimportant part among the men of intelligence, thrift and foresight, who as pioneers of Cass County have been factors in its growth. He was an early settler of Platts-mouth, and has now been a permanent resident here for several years. He was at one time interested in agriculture quite extensively, but the state of his health does not permit him to carry on any active business, and he employs his time solely in looking after his property.

Mr. Samson was born in Pike County, Ohio, May 11, 1823. His father, James B. Samson, was a native of Virginia, and his father, David Samson, is also supposed to have been born in that State. He removed to Ohio about 1800, the removal being made in wagons, and he became a pioneer of Scioto County, where he bought quite a tract of timbered land, from which he evolved a farm. Twenty years later he sold that homestead, and entered a large tract of Government land in Pike County, where he resided until death. He had in the meantime labored hard at the pioneer task of clearing and improving a farm, which ranked among the best in that locality, and was provided with good buildings. He married a Miss Brouse, a native of Pennsylvania, of German ancestry.

The father of our subject was about six years old when his parents removed from the old Virginian home, and the place of his birth, to the wilderness in the Territory of Ohio. He there grew to a vigorous manhood, and soon established a home, having married Margaret Bradford, a native of Virginia, and daughter of Ezra Bradford, an early settler of Scioto County. Mr. Samson had learned the stonemason's trade, and also picked up a knowledge of blacksmithing. At the time of his marriage he settled in Scioto County, but after living there one year he took up his abode in Pike County. He bought a tract of timbered land there, and built a log house, the same in which our subject was born. He worked at his trade of stonemason on the Ohio Canal, receiving $1 a day, and in that way earned enough to pay for his land, and when he did not have work at his trade, he cleared away the timber that covered it. He continued to reside on it until 1835, and then traded it for a farm in Scioto County, to which he immediately moved his family. In 1845 he disposed of that place, having decided to seek a location beyond the Mississippi River. Accompanied by his wife and children, he started for his new home, traveling by the way of the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri Rivers to Missouri, disembarking at Savannah Landing, Andrew County. He soon bought a tract of land four miles from that place, in the same county; a log cabin on the place and twelve acres of the land broken, the rest being timbered, constituted the improvements. He cleared quite a tract of the land, and resided on it about ten years, when he sold out and moved to the village of Fillmore, where he bought a home. Soon after his removal there he was elected Justice of the Peace, and he also became a local preacher of much repute, having joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when he first took up his residence in Missouri. He died there about 1873, but his memory is cherished by those who knew him as a man of large heart, kindly impulses, whose life was blameless, and who sought to do good.

Our subject was the third of the nine children born to his worthy parents, who trained him to a useful manhood. He was reared amid pioneer scenes, and he well remembers when his mother, having no stove, was obliged to cook their meals by the heat of the fire in the rude fireplace, and when the clothing that he wore was spun and woven by her hands. He resided with his parents until he was twenty-two, and then bought a claim to some Government land in Andrew County, in company with his brother-in-law, and commenced to improve it. One year later he sold it and returned home, and lived with his parents two years. We next hear of him in Ohio, where he was variously employed for a year. He then went back to Andrew County and farmed on shares for a year. He traded his share of the crops for lumber, and buying a lot in Fillmore, built a house. He sold that residence in 1853, and moved to Coonville, now Glenwood, Mills Co., Iowa. That place was then only a small hamlet, and a great deal of the land thereabout was owned by the Government. He bought an interest in a sawmill which he operated for six months, and then disposed of his share, and turned his attention to building up the town, and erected three houses in Glenwood. His health was not good, and he was obliged to give up his business almost entirely. In 1856 he sold his property there, and made ready to move to Oregon. But before the time set for him to start, he made arrangements that entirely changed his plans, agreeing with some gentlemen who had claims in Cass County to come here and hold those claims for them, one of the claims joining the city, and the other on the prairie a short distance west. He found that he could not hold both claims, so he bought the one on the prairie, and entered it from the Government. At that time the whole of Nebraska was a wild, undeveloped prairie, with but one or two permanent settlements, and deer, wild turkeys and other game very plentiful. Mr. Samson spent a few days on his claim, and then settled in Plattsmouth, and buying a lot here, he erected a frame building, and rented the upper stories to the county for public offices. Four years later Mr. Samson moved to his land to cultivate it and improve it into a farm. He staid there four years, and then once again made Plattsmouth his home. He soon after bought the improvements on a tract of school land that belonged to the State, and farmed that three years, when he traded it for land in Mills County, Iowa. Five years subsequently he sold that place and tried life in Southeastern Kansas. He did not like it there, and four months later found him once more a resident of Plattsmouth, and ever since that time he has made his home here.

Mr. Samson and Miss Margaret F. Clement were united in marriage in 1858, and of their happy union five children have been born, as follows: Wilbur C.; Agnes, the wife of Hon. Samuel M. Chapman; Susan and Margaret N., both teachers; and Edwin Stanton. They have been given good advantages for education, and have been carefully trained in all that makes good and helpful lives. Mrs. Samson was born in the Province of Lorraine, France, May 28, 1825. Her father, John Francis Clement, was a native of the same place, as was also his wife, whose maiden name was Mary Catherine Puloung. Mr. Clement learned the trade of cabinet-maker, and followed that trade in France until 1831. In that year he first located in America, settling in Maryland, and carrying on cabinet-making there. St. Louis subsequently became his home for a time, and he still continued to work at his trade. From that city he went to Illinois and pre-empted Government land near Pekin, Tazewell County, of which he thus became a pioneer. He was the first man in that county to break the land and engage in farming. He resided there until his death, July 15, 1844. His widow died on the home farm four years later. After the death of her parents Mrs. Samson lived with a sister at Tremont until 1857, and then left Illinois for the Territory of Nebraska, coming by water. They found this city only an insignificant hamlet, with scarcely any indications of its present size and importance. In Mrs. Samson we have a fine representative of the pioneer women of Nebraska who have been such important factors in the settlement of this commonwealth. She possesses a remarkably clear mind, and is well endowed with firmness and judgment, and her many pleasing attributes have gained her many warm friends.

Mr. Samson is, as his fellow-citizens long since found, an eminently trustworthy man, of high principles and right conduct, and he is regarded with sincere respect and esteem. He has borne an honorable part in developing Cass County, and his share in building up Plattsmouth will not be forgotten.

HON. ANDERSON ROOT, an ex-member of the Nebraska Legislature, and one of the solid citizens of Cass County, is a gentleman of more than ordinary capabilities, kind-hearted, public-spirited and benevolent, possessing hosts of friends, and of that uniform and kindly temperament which carries a happy influence with him wherever he goes. He owns and occupies a fine farm on section 34, in Rock Bluff Precinct, comprising 220 acres, and gives his support to all enterprises having for their object the general welfare of his community. His family comprises an amiable and intelligent wife, and a group of bright and interesting children, the latter named respectively: Charles T., who is a student at the school of telegraphy, Janesville, Wis.; Robert S., Eliza J. and Ralph Roy are at home. Mr. Root is a lifelong Republican politically, and he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the United Presbyterian Church at Murray.

The subject of this sketch is a great-grandson of Dr. Anson Root, an eminent physician in the State of Connecticut, where his entire life was passed. His son, Anson L. Root, grandfather of Anderson, was also a native of Connecticut, where he was reared, and where he married Miss Sally Brooks, also a native of that State. They remained in New England until after the birth of their son Charles T., father of our subject, then emigrated to Trumbull County, Ohio, during the earliest settlement of the Buckeye State. There Grandfather Root battled successfully with the elements of the soil, and from the wilderness built up a good homestead, where he spent his last days. The grandmother later removed to Michigan, and spent the remainder of her life with her son Nelson, in Berrien County, where her death took place Dec. 16, 1857.

The father of the subject of this sketch was born in Connecticut, and went with his parents when they removed to Ohio. He staid in that State but three years, however, and then removed to Newaygo County, Mich, where he made his home until 1870, when he resolved to try his fortune in the new State of Nebraska, and came to Cass County. He has been twice married, his first wife being Miss Sarah A. Laughlin, mother of our subject, who died in 1849. Mr. Root again married, but is again a widower, and is now engaged in farming in Cheyenne County, Neb.

The mother of our subject was a daughter of James Laughlin and his wife, whose maiden name was Rachel Matthews. The father of James, and maternal great-grandfather of Anderson Root, was Alexander Laughlin, a native of County Down, Ireland, where he was united in marriage with Sarah Gordon, of the same county. Prior to the War of the Revolution he emigrated to America, and settled in Western Pennsylvania, where he engaged in farming, and there reared a large family. Tradition has it that he served in the Patriot Army for three years in the latter part of the Revolutionary War. He died June 25, 1822, at the age of fifty-nine years, and is buried in the Kinsman Cemetery, in Trumbull County, Ohio. Of the time of his wife's death we have no record.

James Laughlin, son of Alexander, and grandfather of Anderson Root, was born in Beaver County, Pa., Aug. 10, 1791. He became a farmer, and while yet a young man removed to Trumbull County, Ohio, where he was married to Rachel Matthews, and reared a large family. A man of unbounded enterprise and energy, he hewed out of the wilderness a good home, and acquired an ample competence for his declining years. On the breaking out of the War of 1812, imbued with the patriotic impulses of his sire, he enlisted as a private in the United States Army, and served until the close of the war. Receiving an honorable discharge he returned to the pursuits of peace, and died July 10, 1868, aged seventy-six years, eleven months and eighteen days. In politics Mr. Laughlin was originally a Whig, but on its formation joined the ranks of the Republican party, with which he ever after affiliated. He and his wife were both members of the Presbyterian Church.

Rachel Matthews, wife of James Laughlin, and grandmother of Anderson Root, was also a native of Beaver County, Pa., and was a daughter of Deacon William Matthews, who was born in County Down, Ireland, and emigrated to America while a young man. With the innate love of liberty characteristic of the sturdy race from which he sprang, he entered the Continental Army, and for three years battled for the freedom of his adopted country. He fought until the close of the war, and with the return of peace and the assumed liberty of the Colonies, left the army, receiving an honorable discharge, and in the latter years of his life drew a pension. He had settled at Georgetown, near the mouth of the Little Beaver River, in Beaver County, Pa., to which he returned, and there he was married and reared a numerous family. In 1804 the patriot soldier decided to go farther West, and removed to a farm on what was then known as the "Center Road," in Trumbull County, Ohio, where he lived until he had attained the ripe old age of eighty-three, dying in 1834, full of years and honor. For many years in Ohio he had been Justice of the Peace, an important office in that day and country. In regard to this venerable old pioneer we extract the following from "Historical Collections of the Mahoning Valley, Ohio," published in 1876:

"The name of Deacon Matthews should be remembered and cherished, not only by his descendants, but by all the inhabitants of the township of Kinsman, Trumbull Co., Ohio, especially all those who are interested in its moral and religious improvement. In this regard his influence was greater and entered more deeply into the structure of society than that of any other of the first settlers of the town. He early established religious meetings and assemblies of worship on the Sabbath, where there were no clergymen present, as there was not except occasionally until 1813, and he always conducted the meetings. His attendance was a fixed habit, no matter what the state of the weather or roads. Whether hot or cold, wet or dry, mud or snow, he was in his place promptly at the hour of service. His venerable appearance always commanded respect, and his meek and unostentatious manner and fervency of spirit gave all who knew him confidence in the sincerity of the religion he professed."

From such stock on both sides our subject drew those inspirations which have been his guide through life; of sterling worth, these hardy pioneers were well fitted to become the progenitors of a race embracing all those attributes which go to make up the best type of American manhood and womanhood. Prominent among their characteristics were deep religious convictions, and an unflinching loyalty and patriotism shown by them and their descendants in three wars—the Revolution, 1812, and the great Rebellion.

Anderson Root was born Aug. 14, 1842, in Trumbull County, Ohio, where he pursued his first studies in the district school, and became familiar with farming as carried on in the pioneer days. His education was completed by an attendance of one term at Jamestown (Pa.) Seminary. On the 7th of December, 1864, he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret L., daughter of Robert and Eliza J. (Thompson) Snodgrass. William Snodgrass, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Root, was a native of Ireland, whence he emigrated to America when a small boy. He married Miss Margaret McMaster, and about 1800 located in Crawford County, Pa., when that portion of the Keystone State bore little evidence of civilization. He built the first farmhouse in his neighborhood, at a time when his nearest market was at Meadville, a distance of twenty miles away.

Upon the Crawford County farm there was reared a family of five children, and there the grandparents looked their last upon the scenes of earth. Their son Robert was the eldest born, and spent all his life at the old homestead, dying there in November, 1887. His wife, the mother of Mrs. Root, still lives there, and has now arrived at the age of seventy-four years. They were the parents of four daughters, Margaret L. being the second born. William and Mary (Latta) Thompson, the maternal grandparents of Mrs. Root, were natives of Ireland, and of Scotch ancestry. They came to the United States with their respected parents when mere children, and spent the remainder of their lives in Crawford County, Pa. They trace their progenitors to the Erskines, one of the best families of Scotland.

Mr. and Mrs. Root were married at the old Snodgrass homestead in Crawford County, Pa., and lived there until September, 1865. Then deciding to cast their lot with the pioneers of Nebraska Territory they came to this county, and were residents of Rock Bluff Precinct seven years. Next they removed to the farm of the State Agricultural Society of Lincoln, over which Mr. Root had been appointed Superintendent, and there they lived three years. Mr. Root had in the meantime purchased 320 acres of land in Rock Bluff Precinct, to which he returned. Later he sold 100 acres of this, having now 220 acres, and is largely interested in the raising of cattle and horses.

The Root farm and its appurtenances indicates on all sides the thoroughness and skill with which the land has been cultivated, and the good management of the proprietor. A large portion of the land is necessarily devoted to pasture, and the barns and outhouses are furnished with all modern conveniences for the shelter and care of stock. The residence is in keeping with the taste and means of the proprietor.

During the late Civil War Mr. Root, in August, 1861, enlisted in the 2d Ohio Cavalry, and journeyed with his comrades through Missouri, Kansas and the Indian Territory, under command of Gen. Blunt. In 1862 he was in the Indian expedition under Gen. Weir. He met the rebels in several hand-to-hand conflicts, but escaped wounds and capture. He was, however, injured by the accidental falling of his horse upon him while at Columbus, Ohio, recruiting his regiment both with men and horses, and was obliged to accept an honorable discharge March 11, 1863.

Mr. Root upon coming to this section of country was at once recognized as a valued addition to the community, and after filling many positions of trust, and otherwise indicating his ability for business and his integrity of character, was selected by the Republican party as their candidate for the State Legislature, and being elected, discharged his duties in a manner creditable to himself and satisfactory to his constituents. He has never indicated a desire for office, preferring the quiet of his farm and family. He cast his first Presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and has ever been a uniform supporter of Republican principles.

NICHOLAS THEIS for the last seven years has been industriously engaged in the cultivation of a good farm on section 16, in Plattsmouth Precinct, where he settled in the year of 1883. His career has been one of persevering industry, and he has ranked among the most thorough and skillful farmers along the northern line of Cass County. In addition to general agriculture he makes a specialty of stock-raising, keeping good grades of cattle, horses and swine. He first settled in the county in 1878.

Our subject traces his ancestry to Germany, which was the birthplace of his paternal grandfather, Adam Theis, who, upon reaching manhood, married Miss Susan Newell, and became the father of one child, a son Matthew. The latter, also born in Germany, married Miss Lucy Reicharth, and they became the parents of seven children, namely: Adam, John, Joseph, Nicholas, Susan (Mrs. James Miller, of Sheboygan County, Wis.), Theodore, and Anna (Mrs. Theodore Baker, of Ozaukee County, Wis.)

Matthew Theis, after his marriage and the birth of two children, set sail with his little family and his parents for the United States, arriving upon American soil in the year 1851, and making their way to Washington County, Wis. There they took up land and followed the peaceful pursuits of agriculture. The grandparents passed away a few years later. The parents of Mr. Theis are still living and continue residents of the Badger State. Their family consisted of seven children, six of whom are living, and residents of Wisconsin, Illinois and Nebraska.

The subject of this sketch was born in Washington County, Wis., at the modest home of his parents near Fillmore, Nov. 5, 1856. He acquired his education in the district school and assisted his father on the homestead, remaining with his parents until reaching man's estate. When twenty-two years of age, starting out for himself, he made his way to this county, and began farming on rented land in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, in the year 1878. Three years later he was married, Jan. 13, 1881, to Miss Mary, daughter of Nicholas and Henrietta Holmes, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere in this work.

Mr. and Mrs. Theis commenced the journey of life together in this county. Mr. T. purchased his present farm in the year 1888, and besides this property has 160 acres of improved land with buildings in Pierce County. For a man coming to Nebraska comparatively without means it must be conceded that he has made good headway. He has an interesting little family, including three children, two daughters and a son—Mary A., John W. and Susan. Politically, he is a Democrat.

HON. BRAUD COLE. Residing within the borders of Cass County there are many citizens whose names are an honor and credit to her records, and prominent among them will be found the name of the subject of this sketch. He is a well-known and widely respected gentleman, and is noted not only for his straightforward and honorable characteristics, but for that prosperity and success which gild their possessor with the light of popular admiration. He is one of the oldest residents of Cass County, and lives in South Bend Precinct, where he devotes his time and attention to the prosecution of the business of general farming. He was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1824, the youngest child in a family of eleven. His father, Shadrach Cole, was born in Baltimore County, Md., and his mother was Mary (Mathena) Cole. Grandfather Braud Cole was also born in Baltimore County, Md., and when a young man removed to Pennsylvania. During the Revolutionary War he returned to Maryland, on account of the Indian troubles in Pennsylvania. The great-grandfather was a resident of Maryland, and was a highly educated and refined man. He was one of the progenitors of the Braud family, and held large possessions in Maryland. In all the ancestry great mental vigor and bodily strength are exhibited. Our subject's grandfather was on the frontier, assisting in the protection of the settlers from the depredations of the Indians during the war of the Revolution. He was not an enlisted soldier, but being a strong, earnest patriot, he felt that his first duty was due to his country, and that he should render it all the aid in his power. After the Revolutionary War he removed to Bourbon County, Ky., where he was one of the first settlers. He was very influential, and took an important part in the development of that State. In later years he removed to Ohio, where he joined the great-grandfather in Fairfield County, Sept. 14, 1805. The former settled in that county, removing from Pennsylvania in 1801. The great-grandfather died there when quite old. The grandfather died in Pickaway County, Ohio. The father of our subject also died in Pickaway County, Sept. 24, 1845, aged sixty-seven years. His mother died when our subject was only ten years of age, leaving the following-named children: Elizabeth, Demitt, Sarah, Wesley, Rebecca, Polly, Ann, Shadrach, Ivah, and Braud, our subject.

The earlier years in the life of Mr. Cole were passed on a farm. Possessing a great desire to obtain an education he said to his father: "Give me a chance to educate myself." The father, having a full knowledge of the value of education, gave his consent. Our subject then entered the Blendon Young Men's Seminary, now Otterbein University. There he studied the more advanced branches. He taught school the winter after he entered the university, for which he received $14 per month and boarded himself. He occasionally taught school during the winters following. In 1853 he was married to Miss Harriet Bruner. This lady was an orphan, brought up by our subject's brother Wesley. She was born in Greene County, Ohio, and was the daughter of Joseph Bruner and wife, who had been a Miss Cummins. Her ancestors on both the maternal and paternal side were distinguished, educated people. She studied and improved all her educational advantages, and at the age of eighteen she engaged in teaching. Her salary was $1.25 per week, "boarding 'round." She was in all respects a splendid girl and a noble woman.

Mr. Cole removed to Lee County, Iowa, in 1851, where he had gone and secured a home before he returned to Ohio to claim his wife. He lived in his Iowa home until 1854, when early in the year he sold his property and moved to the Territory of Nebraska. He stopped at Council Bluffs, Iowa, during the summer of that year, entering Nebraska in the autumn, settling on the now celebrated Walker farm, two miles southwest of Plattsmouth, where, in 1857, he set out the first extensive orchard in the State, containing 2,000 trees. In the same year he pre-empted an additional 160 acres of land. About this time serious trouble began growing out of the conflicting claims of the settlers. To facilitate the amicable settlement of such disputes, Mr. Cole suggested the formation of a "Claim Club," which was accepted and acted upon, a club organized, and he was elected Secretary of the organization. During its existence it formed an important factor in the peaceful settlement of disputes and difficulties, caused principally by the new Government survey of the land.

After Mr. Cole had settled on the Walker farm he recognized the possibilities of the site now occupied by the city of Plattsmouth, intended to purchase it, but failed to carry out his plans, and other parties secured it. He suggested the present name for the proposed city. He was elected a member of the Third Territorial Legislature, where he at once took a prominent place, and was instrumental in securing much important legislation; one of his acts was securing the passage of the law prohibiting cattle and hogs from running at large, which law has been of incalculable benefit to the State, as it made the opening up of the broad prairie lands and their conversion into valuable farms possible, which could not otherwise have been done, by reason of the scarcity and high price of lumber, that would necessarily be required for fencing.

Mr. Cole sold his farm in 1864 and removed to Grand Traverse County, Mich., where he expected to engage in the fruit business, but afterward changed his mind and came back to Nebraska. In order to give his children better educational advantages he removed with his family to Baldwin City, Kan., the seat of Baker University, in 1872. He remained there for two years, and in 1874 he came back to Nebraska and settled in South Bend Precinct, where he has lived ever since.

Our subject and his good wife became the parents of the following-named children: Lester O., Ivah A., Almeda, Sylvia, Myra, Oran, Harland, Emery and an unnamed infant. Of this number Lester, Oran and Harland are deceased. Almeda is now the wife of Rev. T. H. Whorley; she and her husband were missionaries in China for two years. At this time they reside at Exeter, Fillmore Co., Neb. Sylvia is the wife of Rev. T. H. Hull, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, now residing at Wahoo, Neb.; Myra is the wife of Prof. Andruss, and resides at Baltley, the seat of Mallalieu University, where she is at the head of the department of oratory and elocution; Emery, now eighteen years old, is attending a course in Mallalieu University. The mother of this family passed from this to a higher life June 2, 1886, while on a visit to her brother in Ohio. A woman of most estimable character and of many lovable qualities, her death was a severe blow to her sorrowing husband and children, and she was sincerely mourned by everyone who knew her.

All the children of our subject who have reached the age of maturity hold high positions in life among the refined and educated classes, and reflect great honor on their parents. Their lives show that no pains were spared to instruct them in the paths of virtue and honor, and they are counterparts of the devout, earnest, Christian lives which have been and are now the attributes of the parents. The farm now occupied by our subject contains 550 acres, located in South Bend Precinct. It is all under the highest state of cultivation, the larger portion enclosed by substantial hedge and wire fences. The buildings are second to none in size in the precinct, and are built very solidly and substantially. The family residence is nicely located, is very large, and is complete in all its appointments, and is a typical home, where love and fraternal affection reign supreme.

Mr. Cole has experienced many of the vicissitudes and changes of life, but he has been in the main very successful, and has prospered until he is now not only one of the wealthiest men, but one of the most highly respected citizens of the southeastern part of the State—in fact wherever he is known he holds the perfect confidence and esteem of all with whom he comes in contact. He is interested to the extent of 200 shares in the Mexican Iron Manufacturing Company, of Murango, Mex. He is deeply interested in the religious affairs of his neighborhood, and has always led an upright, consistent Christian life. He was the first Sunday-school Superintendent, and organized the first Sunday-school in Plattsmouth. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Ashland; in politics he is a straight Republican.

A good portrait of this pioneer of Nebraska in its Territorial days is given on another page in this ALBUM.

JESSE R. McVAY, of Rock Bluff Precinct, is perhaps as fine an illustration of the self-made man as will often be found. He started out in life for himself with a capital of $5, which he was obliged to spend not long afterward for clothing. He made a practice thereafter of saving $100 a year, and at the time of his marriage had accumulated in this manner the snug sum of $1,850 in cash. This he was enabled to invest judiciously, and he is now numbered among the solid men along the eastern line of this county, who have developed its resources and brought it to its present position.

The parents of our subject were James and Hannah (Lemasters) McVay. The paternal grandfather, John McVay, is supposed to have been a native of Pennsylvania, and married a lady who was probably, as indicated by the records, born in Pickaway County, Ohio. They were residents the most of their lives in Shelby County, that State, where their remains were laid to rest. Of their thirteen children the record is as follows: Betsey became the wife of Dimitt Cole, of whom mention is made in the sketch of W. P. Cole, elsewhere in this volume; Polly, Martha, Minerva, Hannah, Thomas, John, James, Jason, Aaron, Miller and Henry comprise the remainder of the household circle, James McVay and his estimable wife are still living, and have for many years resided on the old home farm in Shelby County, Ohio, where they settled soon after their marriage.

After their marriage the parents of our subject took up their abode in the woods of Shelby County, Ohio, where the father cleared about forty acres, then sold out and purchased another farm of eighty-five acres, which was mostly in a state of cultivation. Upon this he erected good buildings and has since made it his home. Upon that farm the subject of this sketch was born Nov. 10, 1836, and lived there with his parents until a youth of eighteen years; then, desirous of beginning for himself in life, he began working for the farmers of his neighborhood, and was thus employed two years for the consideration of $12.75 per month. In the year 1856, leaving the Buckeye State he made his way to Shelby County, Ill., where he still pursued agriculture at an increased salary, working now for $14 per month about two and a half years.

At the expiration of this time Mr. McVay started on horseback for a visit to his native State, and upon his arrival there commenced working on a farm in Clarke County, being the employe of Mr. William Foreman. He continued with him one year and ten days, then in the spring of 1861 going into Clinton County, operated there, still as a farm laborer, until the fall of 1862. Returning then to Illinois he worked on a farm in Shelby County until the fall of 1864. The Civil War being then in progress he entered the ranks as a member of Company D, 12th Illinois Infantry, and going to the front participated in the battle of Kingston, N. C., where he was wounded by a musket ball in the left cheek. He was confined in the hospital a short time, and upon recovering from his wound contracted typhoid fever and another disease, which kept him in the hospital until the close of the war.

Mr. McVay received his honorable discharge July 4, 1865, and returning to the old homestead in Ohio visited with his parents two weeks, then setting out once more for the Prairie State engaged to work on a farm in Shelby County for the sum of $30 per month. In the spring of 1866 he rented a farm of his uncle, Caldwell Russell, and the fall following purchased a half interest in a threshing-machine. A year later he sold the machine and commenced working by the month again in Illinois until July 16, 1867. Then going back to Ohio, he was employed in a gristmill until the spring of 1868, when he again set his face westward, sojourning a brief time in Shelby County, Ill., and proceeding thence to Iowa City, Iowa.

The spring of 1869 found our subject again on the soil of Illinois, working on a farm in Tazewell County for Alexander Mooberry, where he remained until completing his preparations for his marriage. This most interesting event of his life occurred on the 9th of November, 1871, the maiden of his choice being Miss Lucy A. Mooberry, a sister of his employer. They remained in Illinois until September, 1872, then came to this county with a view of locating. Being pleased with the outlook, Mr. McVay purchased eighty acres of his present homestead, to which he moved with his young wife on the 11th of February, 1873. Here they have since lived. Two years later Mr. McVay purchased another eighty acres, and has now 160 acres of good land, in productive condition with a neat and substantial dwelling, an ample barn, granaries, corn cribs, an apple orchard and the smaller fruit trees, and in short all the accessories of a modern farm. The fences are mostly of wire, and the land which is not devoted to grain furnishes excellent pasture for the live stock to which Mr. McVay has given considerable attention. He at one time bought and sold land to a considerable extent, realizing good profits.

To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born two children, a daughter and a son, Jessie M. and Lintie M. The elder was born Aug. 20, 1872, in Tazewell County, Ill., and the younger April 30, 1874, in Cass County, Neb. The parents of Mrs. McVay were John and Lydia (Marion) Mooberry. The father was born in York County, Pa., and was the son of William Mooberry, who was also a native of Pennsylvania, whence he emigrated to Franklin County, Ohio, during its early settlement, and where his family was reared. The mother of Mrs. McV. was a native of Norfolk, Mass., and born in 1805. She came with her parents, Elijah and Lydia Marion, to Ohio about 1815, they settling in Franklin County, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Our subject, politically, is a solid Republican, and as a business man and citizen, ranks among the reliable and substantial men of Cass County.

GEORGE HAIN, a prosperous farmer, is a resident of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, where he owns a valuable farm of 160 acres on section 23. He was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, in December, 1850. His parents were natives of Scotland and came to America in 1849, and located in Trumbull County, Ohio, where they still reside. Mr. Hain is a purely self-made man, being obliged from his early youth to support himself by the labor of his own hands. His first employment was milling, which he followed successfully; having a strong taste for mechanical pursuits, he obtained employment as a sawyer in a sawmill, which he followed for a season, and later he was employed as stationary engineer, which pursuit was especially congenial to him, and which he followed for a long time. He has received a fair school education, to which he has added the knowledge derived by a wide experience and varied observation.

In the autumn of 1877 Mr. Hain came to Cass County, Neb., and for the following two years he worked at farming and operated a threshing-machine. In 1879 he bought eighty acres of wild prairie land, which he proceeded to improve by plowing his land and erecting the necessary buildings for residence and protection of his stock, which he still owns. He has been very prosperous in his venture, and has purchased an additional eighty acres, which, with the original eighty, he has brought to a very high state of cultivation. It has taken years of hard, steady work for him to accomplish this result, and now, after he has attained it, it is exceedingly gratifying to him, as it is the result exclusively of his own energy and ability.

Our subject and Jenna McCool were married

March 1, 1882. The lady is a native of Pennsylvania, and was born in Venango County, May 25, 1858. She is a daughter of Robert and Fietta (Shurtz) McCool. Her father died when she was about five years of age. Shortly after his death the mother removed with her children to Trumbull County, Ohio, where they settled, and where her mother still lives. One son has been born to this couple, James, July 24, 1886.

Mr. Hain is one of those live, progressive men who are not content with living in yesterday, and following up the old routine in vogue many years ago, but on the contrary he believes in the advancement of modern ideas and modern methods. The late improved machinery for agricultural purposes is found on his farm, and all the labor-saving inventions that will assist in the household are provided for his wife, by means of which their life is not now one continual round of toil and labor, but they have many hours which they can and do devote to recreation and the advancement of social life of the neighborhood. Both himself and wife are very sociable and take a leading position in the society where they live. They are attendants of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His political allegiance is held by the Republican party.

DR. MILTON M. BUTLER, a prominent physician and surgeon of Weeping Water, is one of the oldest settlers of this county, arriving in this State in the year 1870, and becoming a resident of the village three years later. A man of fine capabilities, excellent judgment and good education, he has been an important factor in the building up of the town, and has uniformly entertained a lively interest in everything connected with its welfare. He has a fine residence at the corner of Elm and G streets, and is numbered among the leading men of the place.

Dr. Butler, a gentleman in the prime of life, was born near Greenfield, Hancock Co., Ind., Nov. 15, 1845. He there received the rudiments of his early education, and later entered Earlham College, at Richmond, where he studied for some months. Upon leaving this institution he engaged in the reading of medicine with his brother, Dr. D. W. Butler, who was then located in Dunreith, and with whom he continued a period of ten years. In the meantime he had begun the practice of his profession, but later entered upon a course of lectures at Miami College, in Ohio, and became the regular partner of his brother, with whom he practiced a number of years. On coming to Nebraska, in the fall of 1870, Dr. Butler established himself first in Plattsmouth, on the eastern line of this county, where he remained until 1873. In the month of August of that year he changed his field of operations to Weeping Water, coming to the town at a time when he had only been preceded by one other physician. There were then probably not to exceed 250 people in the place. The town now numbers probably 3,000 souls. Dr. Butler has thus watched the growth and development of one of the most enterprising cities in Southern Nebraska, and has been one of the most generous contributors to its prosperity.

A Republican in politics, Dr. Butler, while keeping himself well posted upon current events, has been no office-seeker, although his natural capabilities have always obtained ready recognition at the hands of his fellow-citizens. He has frequently been pressed into service upon important occasions, serving as Chairman of the County Central Committee, and occupying other positions of trust. During the late election (1888) he served as a Republican elector, and takes satisfaction in the reflection that he was instrumental in the selection of the grandson of Old Tippecanoe for the future President. He was chosen President of the Electoral College of the State at the meeting of that college. He has almost uniformly been a delegate to all the conventions, County, State and National, and is always willing to serve in any capacity where he can do anything which shall result in the furtherance of the principles of which he has been an earnest adherent since old enough to reflect upon men and things and life in its various places.

Dr. Butler became identified with the I. O. O. F. about 1872, while a resident of Plattsmouth, and is one of the warmest advocates of the principles of the order. He has filled every office in Prairie Lodge No. 25, serving as its first Presiding Officer, and has represented it in the Grand Lodge. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. The local camp in this city was named in his honor, Butler Camp No. 748.

At Weeping Water, Neb., on the 19th of August, 1874, occurred the marriage of our subject with Miss Stella A. Paine. This lady was born at Painesville, Ohio, July 19, 1853, and is the daughter of Hon. Henry Paine, of Lake County, Ohio. Mr. Paine was at one time a member of the State Legislature, and was otherwise prominent in public affairs, serving as County Commissioner, Justice of the Peace, and in various other official capacities. He married Miss Harriet N. Tuttle, and they became the parents of ten children, all of whom are living. Of these Mrs. Butler was next to the youngest. Her brothers and sisters are located mostly in Nebraska. Mr. Paine met his death by accident, falling from a wagon in 1868, a few days before the first election of Gen. Grant. His widow continued her residence at the old homestead in Painesville, and survived her husband a period of twenty years, her death taking place Jan. 17, 1888.

As may be surmised, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Butler was one of the earliest settlers of Lake County, Ohio, and the founder of Painesville. He emigrated there in the pioneer days, carried on agriculture a number of years, and built up a home for himself in the wilderness, which remained the property of the Paine family for years. The town is located upon a part of the land which he took up from the Government. To Dr. and Mrs. Butler there were born four children, one of whom, Mattie R., the second child, died at the age of two years and nine months. The survivors are: Charie A., Agnes E. and Mildred Mary. These children are being given first-class advantages. The eldest, though only thirteen years of age, is very proficient in music, and they are remarkably promising.

George W. Butler, the father of our subject, was born in Virginia, April 11, 1818, and a week later his mother died. Not long after he was doubly orphaned by the death of his father, and was assigned to a guardian, who bound him out to a farmer in Virginia. Soon after his guardian moved to Ohio. He was reared to manhood in the Buckeye State, whence he migrated to Hancock County, Ind., and was there married to Miss Martha Rawls. They became the parents of ten children, eight of whom are living, and most of whom are located in Indiana. Two of the sons are physicians of note, and one is a professor in one of the public schools of Rushville, Ind. The father belongs to the Society of Friends, and is one of the prominent men among this peaceable sect. He makes his home in Fairmount, Ind. Mrs. Martha (Rawls) Butler, the mother, was born Sept. 21, 1814, and departed this life at her home in Fairmount, Ind., May 13, 1880. She was the daughter of John Rawls, a substantial farmer of the Old Dominion.

Dr. Butler and his estimable wife, together with his eldest daughter, are members in good standing of the Congregational Church at Weeping Water. The Doctor has always cherished a warm interest in Sunday-school work, and has always been one of the liberal supporters and pillars of the church. As a business man and citizen he is well spoken of by his fellow-townsmen.

EDWARD A. SACKETT, a product of the Buckeye State, and junior member of the firm of Sackett & Amerman, stands at the head of a flourishing hardware trade in Weeping Water, the house handling a heavy stock of goods in this line, and having a wide and steadily increasing patronage. Mr. Sackett is one of the leading men of the town in business as well as in social circles, and is the owner of valuable property including a fine home on Commercial street, and besides the store he occupies owns another one utilized by Flower Bros. as the city drug-store. Mr. Sackett put up a handsome residence in the summer of 1888, which, with its surroundings, is not only an ornament to the city, but combines all the comforts and conveniences of modern life.

Edward Sackett was born July 28, 1859, at the homestead of his father, Hiram Sackett, in Tallmadge Township, Summit Co., Ohio, a homestead which comprised a tract of valuable land lying among rolling hills and fertile fields, and there spent his boyhood and youth. His first studies were conducted in the little school-house at the "Six Corners," to which he traveled a distance of about a mile up and down the hills, and when further advanced he entered the High School at Kent, three or four miles from his home, where he completed his education. Then returning to the farm he remained there with his father until a young man of twenty-three years. Leaving Tallmadge in the spring of 1882, he turned his steps westward, and coming to Nebraska, purchased land on section 9, Weeping Water Precinct, this county, from which in its raw state he constructed a good farm. Upon this he turned the first furrow, put out trees, built fences, and during the first three years of his labors here harvested 4,000 bushels of wheat. The only year in which he put in a corn crop, the sixty acres which he devoted to this cereal yielded him 3,600 bushels. He thus secured the capital which laid the foundation of his present business.

In the fall of 1886 Mr. Sackett sold his farm and became a member of the firm of Cole & Sackett, engaging in general merchandising on a large scale. This business was located on I street, and was conducted by our subject and his partner two and one-half years very successfully. In October, 1888, they sold out and dissolved partnership, and less than two weeks later the present firm was organized, and purchased the hardware department of Chase & Churchill's store, opening up with a fine large stock and the promise of future prosperity. Mr. Sackett was reared as it were under the wing of the Republican party, to which he still loyally adheres. He was also trained in the doctrines of the Congregational Church, of which his honored father has been for years a Deacon at Tallmadge, and upon coming to the West identified himself with the same, to which he still belongs, with his estimable wife. He is warmly interested in the religious training of the young, and has been interested in Sunday-school work for many years.

Mr. Sackett found his bride in the West, being married, Oct. 6, 1887, to Miss Nellie Monroe, of Weeping Water, and they have one child, a son, William M., born Aug. 19, 1888. Mrs. Sackett is the daughter of William J. Monroe, and was born Aug. 5, 1865, in Indiana. Of Mr. Monroe and his estimable wife a sketch will be found elsewhere in this volume.

Hiram Sackett, the father of our subject, was also born in Tallmadge, Ohio, March 28, 1824, and up to this time has spent his entire life there. He is the son of Deacon Clark Sackett, a native of Connecticut, and one of the pioneers of Tallmadge, a man held in the highest respect by the people of Summit County, and who for many years was one of the pillars of the Congregational Church. Deacon Sackett lived to be quite aged, reared a large family, and died full of years and honors, about 1862. Hiram Sackett is still living a few miles from the farm where he was born and reared, and is worthily bearing the mantle which descended to him from his honored father, being an active member and Deacon of the same Congregational Church, officiating as Clerk, and from his youth up being otherwise foremost among its councils and deliberations. Politically, he still abides with the Republican party.

The mother of our subject, Mrs. Eliza (Treat) Sackett, was the daughter of Richard and Amoret (Hutchins) Treat, and was also born in Tallmadge Township, a few miles from the boyhood home of her husband. They were reared in the same township, becoming members of the same church at an early period in their lives. Grandfather Treat, like Deacon Sackett, was also one of the prominent men of Tallmadge, the owner of a good property, and the father of a large and highly-respected family of children. He suffered many years from inflammatory rheumatism, and passed away about 1872. His excellent wife survived him several years, and died about 1875, being found one morning in a sleep from which she never awakened. To Hiram and Eliza Sackett there were born nine children, five sons and four daughters, all of whom are living, some of them not far from the homestead, where the mother and father still reside.

Clark Sackett, Jr., an uncle of our subject, owns and occupies the old Deacon Sackett homestead, two and one-half miles west of Tallmadge Center, and which is one of the finest farms in that region. Edward Sackett, our subject, is one of the most worthy representatives of this large family, who for three generations have been landmarks in the history of the Buckeye State; and coming to Nebraska a young man, if life and health be spared, and he continues here, there is no doubt that he will leave his mark in this section of Nebraska as thoroughly as his progenitors impressed themselves upon the soil of Ohio.

WILLIAM TIGHE. The pioneer element of Mt. Pleasant Precinct is admirably represented by the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this sketch, and who is the owner of a pleasant country home on section 7. His has been a career filled with industry, and in which the exercise of diligence and perseverance has met with its natural reward. Upon coming to Nebraska he battled for many years with the difficulties of life in a new settlement, but from the struggle has emerged with flying colors. He is regarded by the people of his community as an honest man, a good citizen, and one amply worthy of representation in a work of this kind.

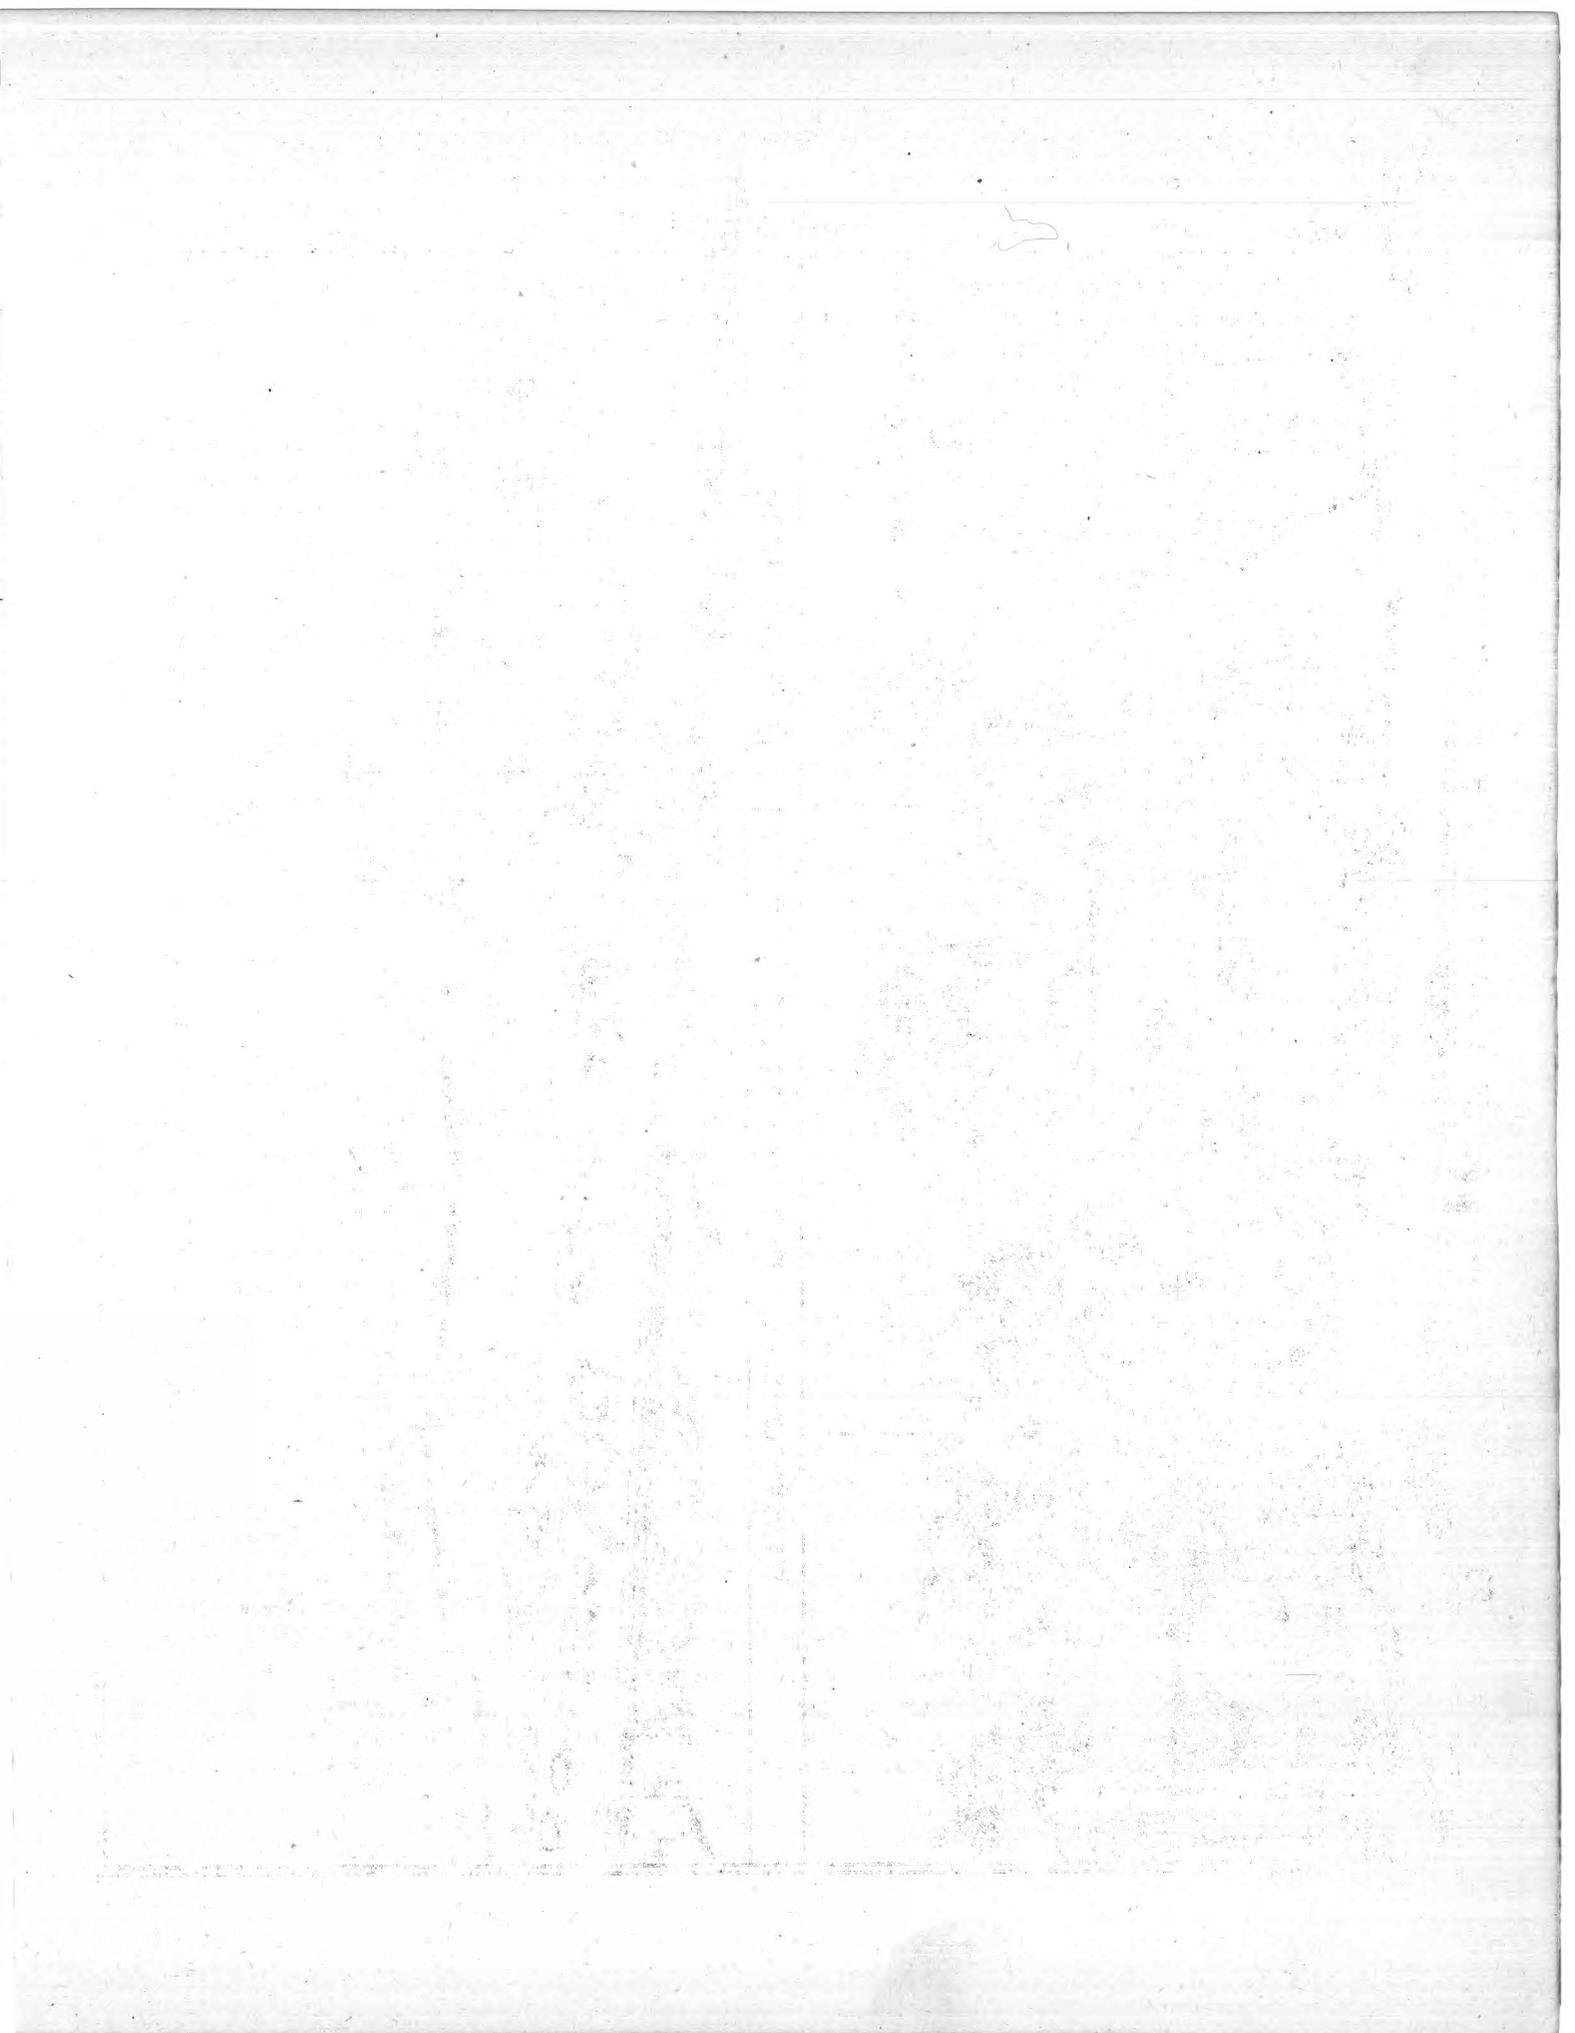

The place of the birth of our subject is recorded as near the town of Toronto, Province of Ontario, Canada, and the date March 31, 1840. He is of pure Irish ancestry, being the son of John and Mary A. Tighe, who were both natives of Ireland. They emigrated to the United States after their marriage, and are now residents of this precinct. Their household consisted of seven sons and three daughters, making a large and interesting family, of whom the survivors are recorded as follows: James is married, and numbered among the well-to-do farmers of Centre Precinct, this county; Jane, the wife of Michael Kennedy, together with William and Edward, also resides there; Margaret married John Casey, and they are residents of Richardson County; John lives in Grand Island, this State; Charles and Joseph are residents of this State, the former in Centre Precinct, this county, and the latter in Bradshaw; Mary A., Mrs. James Carper, and Josiah S., live in Mt. Pleasant Precinct.

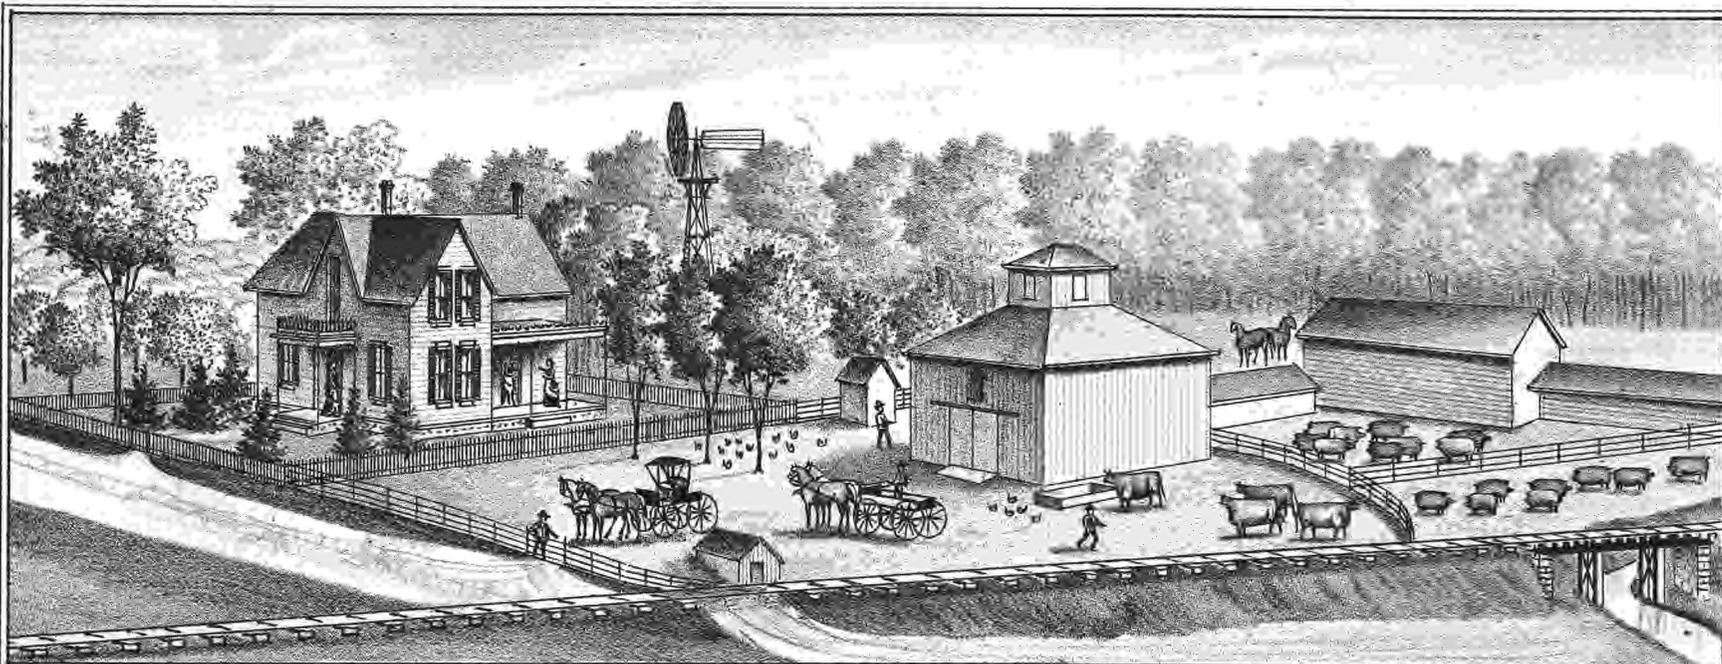

The subject of this sketch was reared to man's estate in the Dominion, receiving a common-school education. He has always been a reader and has thus kept himself well posted upon passing events. He came over into the States after the close of the late Civil War, locating first in Clinton County, Iowa, where he resided a number of years and carried on farming. In the spring of 1873, leaving the Hawkeye State, he came to this county, and traded a portion of his Iowa land for the quarter-section in Mt. Pleasant Precinct which he now lives upon. He has watched the raw prairie developing from its primitive condition into beautiful homesteads and valuable farms, the erection of school buildings, and all the other indications of the advance of civilization, with that satisfaction only felt by the intelligent and progressive citizen. A man who has spent most of his time attending to his own concerns, he is nevertheless public spirited and liberal-minded, and has ever been ready to give his substantial aid to the projects calculated for the advancement of the people around him. His course has been that of a peaceable and law-abiding citizen, who has done good as he has had opportunity, and who will leave a record of which his children need never be ashamed.

The 16th of November, 1879, witnessed the marriage of our subject with Miss Mary Quinn, who was born in Clinton County, Iowa, Sept. 22, 1856. Mrs. Tighe is the daughter of Thomas and Mary (Crowly) Quinn, who were natives of Ireland; the mother is now deceased. They emigrated to America prior to their marriage, indeed when quite young, and the parents of each settled in the Province of Ontario, Canada. Later the family emigrated first to Illinois and then to Iowa. Mrs. Tighe came to this county on a visit in the fall of 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Quinn settled in Linn County, Kan., where they lived for a number of years. The father is now in Cass County. The parental household included eight children, six of whom are living: Ann, Mrs. William Wells; Ellen, Mrs. Thomas Murphy, and Kate, Mrs. Michael Murphy, are residents of Richardson County, Neb.; Hannah lives in Anderson County, Kan., being the wife of Thomas Hunt, who is carrying on farming; John is a resident of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, this county. Mrs. Tighe is according to age in about the middle of the group.

Mr. and Mrs. Tighe commenced their wedded life together at the modest farm homestead in Cass

RESIDENCE OF W. J. LAUGHLIN, SEC. 22. SALT CREEK PRECINCT, CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF A. S. WILL, SEC. 1., MI. PLEASANT PRECINCT CASS CO.

County, Neb., and they have labored side by side since that time to accumulate their snug property and rear their family. Of their children, five in number, the record is as follows: John Q. was born Jan. 12, 1881; Mary M., Aug. 1, 1882; Thomas J., in 1883; Maggie, Dec. 15, 1884, and Edward J., June 13, 1886. Mr. Tighe, politically, is an uncompromising Democrat. Both he and his estimable wife were reared in the doctrines of the Catholic Church, to which they still loyally adhere.

WILLIAM J. LAUGHLIN. Among the goodly land-holders of this county, and a gentleman respected for his sterling worth and integrity, is the subject of this sketch, who resides on and operates a valuable farm of 360 acres on section 22, Salt Creek Precinct. He was born in North Carolina, March 13, 1830. His earliest recollections are of his home in Randolph County, in that State, followed by the memories of early days in the heavy timber regions of Indiana. He was early in life harnessed to hard work, and for many long weary days he has driven four, five and six yoke of oxen, breaking new land and cultivating it in after years. The subscription schools of those days were his only source for acquiring an education, every opportunity for which he eagerly improved. At the age of twenty he was attacked with the gold fever, and in 1850 he formed a company of several of his neighbors, and they went across the plains to California, their journey ending at Placerville, that State, August 6, they having been a little over four months on the way. This trip was made by the way of Salt Lake, where Mr. Laughlin spent several days among the Mormons. On their arrival in California, our subject with his companions, Winthrop Cheney and James McCauley, took up a placer claim, and worked in the mines for a year, when the former went to Nevada and worked on Gold Run until Oct. 1, 1851, and then started for home. Having had enough of mining life, Mr. Laughlin took passage on the steamer "Oregon" for the Isthmus of Panama, which he crossed, took steamer again for New Orleans, from which city he came up the Mississippi River to Keokuk, Iowa, thence by stage to the home of his parents, which at that time was near Mt. Pleasant, Henry Co., Iowa.

The subject of our sketch is a son of John and Mary (Tucker) Laughlin. The father was born in Randolph County, N. C., in 1808. Grandfather James Laughlin was born in Ireland. Grandfather Amos Tucker was a noted stockman in North Carolina, where he was born. Great-grandfather Tucker was a native of England. The parents of our subject were married in North Carolina, where the father was a prosperous farmer. Becoming dissatisfied with his native State, he sold his possessions and removed to Putnam County, Ind. There he resided for about eighteen months, when he removed to the prairies of Henry County, Iowa, settling near Mt. Pleasant before the land had been surveyed by the Government or put on the market. During his later years he removed to Washington County, Iowa, where he died in 1865, aged fifty-seven years. The mother died in December of the same year, aged fifty-five years. Our subject is the eldest of the family of eleven children, who were named as follows: William J., our subject; McKenzie G., Louisa, Nancy, Charity, John M., Benjamin F., Ephraim D., Jesse, Thomas and Mary, of which number the following only survive: William J., Louisa, Benjamin F. and Ephraim D.

After his return from California, William J. Laughlin remained on the farm with his father until he was married to Miss Mary Coleman, Dec. 8, 1853. This lady was born in Knox County, Ohio, where she lived at home with her parents until she was a young lady of seventeen, when, in the fall of 1850, her parents removed with their entire family to Iowa, settling near the town of Mt. Pleasant. Her parents were Elic and Catherine (Beiler) Coleman. The father was born in Connecticut, and the mother in Maryland. Her mother was reared to womanhood in Knox County, Ohio, where she lived with her parents, who were married in Ohio, and had a family of two children when they removed to Knox County. From there in 1850 they removed to Henry County, Iowa, where they resided until 1861, when they joined our subject and his wife. Her father died in 1873, aged sixty-nine years, and her mother died at Greenwood in 1881, seventy-eight years old.

The wife of our subject is one of a family of eleven children, who are named as follows: Jane, Matilda, Ebenezer, Mary, Lucy, William, John H., Amy, Chalker, Amanda and Luther. The Coleman family originally came from England. The great-grandparents settled in Connecticut in the early Colonial days, and the great-grandfather, Ebenezer, was a soldier in the War for Independence, in which he took no insignificant part. On the maternal side, the Beilers were of German blood, and came to America in Colonial times, settling in Maryland. Grandfather Beiler died a comparatively young man, and the lineage cannot be traced any further. The wife of our subject received her education in the common schools of Ohio, and in the High School at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. After being graduated from the High School, she was employed as a teacher in Henry County, Iowa, for three years, and she was the first teacher in charge of a public school in the western portion of Cass County, Neb.

After his marriage our subject continued farming in Henry County until 1859, when he was again seized with the gold fever, this time his destination being Pike's Peak, Col. He, in company with several of the leading citizens of Mt. Pleasant, among whom was William Coleman, made preparations for and began their journey to the land of gold. When they had gone as far on their way as Salt Creek, they met large numbers of disheartened men, who were returning from the gold regions, and the reports which these men gave were so discouraging that the party westward bound determined to discontinue their journey. Mr. Laughlin became so infatuated with the location and appearance of the country in which they then were, that he laid claim to 160 acres of land through a "squatter's right." He dug a cellar and hewed his logs ready to be built into a house. He also plowed sixteen acres of the ground before he returned to his family in Iowa. In the fall of 1859 he came back to his claim with his family, with the avowed purpose of making it his future home, and he has since made it so.

The following spring Mr. Laughlin began the improvements which have now reached such a perfect state, by setting out an extensive grove and plowing the balance of his land. The house that he built of logs has long since given way to a more convenient and roomy residence. To enter into all the details of the history pertaining to their first year in Nebraska would require a volume, and would be but a repetition of thousands of other histories, as contemporaneous with that of our subject. At that time their nearest post-office was Plattsmouth, thirty-four miles away, and the nearest railroad was at Ottumwa, Iowa. He has hunted deer and antelope on the site occupied by the now flourishing city of Lincoln.

Our subject, profiting by the experience of his life with his father in the new country, worked hard and with unbounded energy, having an abiding faith in the future possibilities of his adopted State. He devoted himself to the task of doing his share toward the development of the country of his choice. He is always found to be generous, and ready to lend substantial assistance to those who stand in need. He is large-hearted and public-spirited, and holds the welfare of the people in his locality near to his heart. Himself and wife are the parents of seven children: Oscar W., Mary Catherine and Ebenezer G. were born in Iowa; John C., Lucy Matilda, Benjamin F. and Nellie A. were born in Nebraska. Lucy M. is deceased. The entire family form an important factor in the social life of the precinct.

Mr. Laughlin has filled many positions of trust received at the hands of his neighbors, devoting a good share of his public life to the educational interests of the community. He has been a member of the School Board for sixteen years, and assisted in the organization of the first public school in Salt Creek Precinct. The district embraced at that time all of the precinct, the northern half of Greenwood, and the western half of South Bend. He is a member of Mt. Moriah Commandery No. 4, K. T., of Lincoln, Neb., and holds a prominent position in Unity Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Greenwood. In politics he is a Democrat, and was delegate to the State Democratic Convention in 1884. He has been a delegate to the various County Conventions of his party, and has served as a member of the County Central Committee, has been nominated twice by his party for the office of Representative, once from Cass County and the second time from Cass and Saunders Counties. Himself and wife are consistent members of the Christian Church at Greenwood.

The fine residence and buildings of Mr. Laughlin are shown in a view on another page of this volume.

BURWELL SPURLOCK came to Cass County in the opening years of his manhood, and cast in his lot with the early pioneers of Nebraska, and he has ever since been a resident of Plattsmouth. He has figured in the civic life of the county, and has been identified with its business interests. He now holds a clerkship in the store of E. G. Dovey & Sons, where he has been for over eleven years, which alone is sufficient evidence of unusual faithfulness. His honorable and upright life has been an influence for good in this community, where he is held in the highest respect and consideration.

Our subject was born in that part of Cabal County now Wayne County, W. Va., June 28, 1835, and is the eldest son of Wesley and Mary A. (Booton) Spurlock, of whom see sketch. He was in his third year when his parents moved to Illinois, and therefore has no recollection of the scenes of his birth. He first attended school near Abingdon, Ill., and later, when about twelve years old, entered the Cherry Grove Presbyterian Seminary, and remained a student for about two years. His faithful parents carefully trained him to a useful and industrious life, and early instilled into his mind those high principles of honor, justice and truth, which have been the guides to a pure and conscientious life. He made his home with his father until the removal to Iowa, assisting in the improvement of the farm, and doing all kinds of farm work in the days when machinery did not play so important a part in lightening the labors of the farmer, the cradle being then the most improved method of harvesting the grain; splitting rails being his work in the winter season. Soon after the family moved to

Greenwood, he engaged as clerk for Sarpy & English, the former being a pioneer of Nebraska, for whom Sarpy County (where he had charge of a station of the American Fur Company, and was engaged as an Indian trader) had been named. He first agreed to work for the firm for a month. All stores in those days had liquor for sale, and the store in which he was employed was no exception. At the end of a month his employers were so satisfied with his services that they wished to engage him for a year. But, mindful of the instructions of his parents, who had taught him to abhor the liquor traffic, he told them that he could not work for them and sell liquor, and they readily excused him from that duty. There was in that vicinity, as in all new countries, the usual percentage of men only a step removed from barbarism, who on the slightest pretext were ready to reek vengeance on the unfortunate offender. One of those men of Belial came into the store one day where young Spurlock was clerk and called for whisky. He took the man one side and told him he could not sell him liquor, and the reason why. The man said that was all right, and went away expressing his approval. A few days later the same man came in again and called for whisky, and when our subject refused to sell him any, he cursed him and said that he would cut his heart out. Mr. Spurlock grabbed an ax that stood near him, as a means of self defense, and emphatically told him that he would chop him into mincemeat before he would sell him a drop of whisky. Seeing that the young clerk was not frightened by his threats he laughed and said it was all a joke. In the fall of 1855 our subject, wishing to improve his education, entered the Iowa Wesleyan University. There were no railroads in Iowa at that time, and he was obliged to go to his destination on the old stage coach, and while on the road a terrific storm struck them, and on account of the excessive rain and unusual flood of the streams, a bridge gave way under the weight of the stage coach, and he narrowly escaped drowning, but he managed to get out of the water and the wreck, and assisted the driver in rescuing the horses. After attending the university but a few terms, he then came to the Territory of Nebraska, arriving in Plattsmouth April 1, 1856. The city had been platted previous to that time, and a speculation in house lots ran high. There was then one store here, kept in a log building by Messrs. Slaughter & Vallery, and they engaged the services of our subject as clerk. He continued with them until 1858, and during that time was Deputy Postmaster. The store then changed hands, and young Spurlock was retained in the employ of his first employers' successor for a time. He subsequently engaged with Tuttle & Hanna, who kept a large establishment, and did a large business during the Pike's Peak excitement, selling supplies and mining appliances to the emigrants. Those emigrants who were eagerly pressing forward across the vast plains, then known as the "Great American Desert," in search of gold in the rocky barriers that rise on the Western horizon, were many of them a novel study to the lover of human nature, and displaying as they did so many varieties of it, ranging from grave to gay; men of decision and determination, men of weak and careless natures, and men of noble characters, with those of vicious tendencies, traveling side by side, all aiming for the same goal. On many of the wagons was inscribed in large letters, "Pike's Peak or Bust." Alas! for the hopes of man. It is unnecessary to say here that most of them came back in a condition expressed by the last word of the legend just referred to.

In 1861 Mr. Spurlock was elected County Clerk, running as an independent candidate. His administration of the affairs pertaining to that office was so eminently satisfactory that he was afterward three successive times unanimously nominated for the position by Republican Conventions, and was three times re-elected. After his fourth term expired he refused to be a candidate again. Retiring from office, he engaged in the real-estate business with R. B. Windham, for awhile, and then accepted a position as clerk in the Burlington & Missouri River land-office, and acted in that capacity until the office was removed to Lincoln, a few months later. Clark & Plummer then secured his services as salesman and book-keeper, and he remained with them until they sold out five years afterward. Our subject then made a new move, and going to Falls City, engaged in the real-estate business for one year. Then Plattsmouth again became his home, and he obtained a situation as clerk in Dovey's establishment, and has remained there ever since.

Mr. Spurlock was married, Nov. 1, 1860, to Miss Isabella Smiley Davis, and their union has been blessed by the birth of one son, George M., to whom they are giving every advantage to obtain a good education, and he is now a student at the De-Pauw University. Mrs. Spurlock was born in Andrew County, Mo., and is a daughter of the late William H. Davis, a well-known pioneer of Cass County, who was prominent in public life here in the early days of the settlement of the county. He was born in Tennessee, and was a son of Wade H. Davis, a native of South Carolina. The latter went to Tennessee when he was a young man, and from there to Missouri, and was a pioneer of Andrew County, where he entered a tract of Government land and carried on farming there until he died. The father of Mrs. Spurlock moved from Tennessee to Illinois when a young man, and married, in Fulton County, that State, Sarah Elizabeth Windham, a native of Virginia, and a daughter of Kinchen and Betsy (Barnes) Windham. Mr. Davis moved from Illinois to Andrew County, Mo., and he being quite well educated for these times, taught school there and served as Justice of the Peace. He was opposed to slavery and was in favor of the free-soil system, consequently Missouri became rather too warm a place for him, and he returned to Illinois about 1848. He bought a farm in Vermont Township, Fulton County, and lived there until 1852, when he sold the farm and once again crossed the Mississippi to find a home in the West. He went up the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers to St. Joseph, Mo., and from there with teams to Glenwood, Iowa. Soon after settling there he was appointed Sheriff, and when the term expired, was re-elected to that position. He built a home in the village for himself and family. In 1853 he visited Nebraska with others, while it was still held by the Indians, their titles not having been abrogated, and he and his friends paid the savages $100 to let them select lands for themselves. In 1824 Mr. Davis and his family crossed the border and spent a few months on his claim in Rock Creek, five miles west of the present site of Plattsmouth. In order to secure a good title to the land, he had built a log cabin on the place, in which his family lived. During that year the stage line was established by his place, and he was appointed Postmaster of the post-office, that was established at that time in his house. The land had not been surveyed when he settled on it, and he joined the Claim Club Association, and was made Secretary of it. He assisted in the organization of the county, and was the first County Clerk. In 1862 he moved to Marysville, Mo., and resided there until his death, July 12, 1875, his wife dying two years later, Aug. 4, 1877. They were both prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Spurlock are also identified with that church, being among the leading members of that denomination in Plattsburgh, Mr. Spurlock having assisted in organizing the society, and been active in building up the church, and has for over twenty-five years been Recording Steward. In politics he was one of the organizers of the Republican party in Cass County and the State, and has ever since been a staunch supporter of the same.

Elizabeth S. Shaper William Henry Shaper

WESLEY A. DAVIS is a level-headed, clear-thinking farmer, one of the first settlers of Cass County, residing on a well-improved farm on section 31, Mt. Pleasant Precinct. He may well lay claim to the appellation of pioneer, for he has been a resident of the State since 1856, when he came with his parents and settled in what is now known as Liberty Precinct, where his father had purchased 160 acres of wild land. At that time it contained a rude log cabin and a small field of plowed land, which amounted to but little value. At that time neighbors were so few that there was but one house between their home and Plattsburgh.

Our subject was born in Yadkin County, N. C., June 16, 1851. He is the son of Ruel R. and Biddy Davis. The parents were both natives of North Carolina. The father died in 1861; the mother is still living in Weeping Water Precinct. Mr. Davis is one of a family of nine children: Stephen A., who resides in Plattsburgh; Orlando J., who resides in Otoe County, as does Brantley H., Wesley A.; William R. resides in Avoca Precinct; Julia A. is now the wife of William Jamison, and resides in Weeping Water; John H. was born Nov. 3, 1857, and now resides in Mt. Pleasant Precinct. It is claimed that he was one of the first white children born within the limits of Cass County. The children deceased were named Eunice and Joseph.

The subject of this sketch has always lived on a farm, amid the stirring scenes incident to the development of a new country, and by the death of his father, when he was but thirteen years of age, he was thrown upon his own resources, and was obliged to render all the assistance possible to the other members of the family. He assisted one of his brothers in working a farm which he had rented, and also worked for neighboring farmers whenever occasion offered. It was owing to this mode of life that he was deprived of the opportunity for acquiring an education by attending school. But he has studied and read all available books and papers, and closely observed events as they occurred. until he now possesses a large fund of practical knowledge, the greater portion of which has been learned in that best of all schools—experience.

The subject of our sketch and Alice Harmon were married Dec. 19, 1876, in Mills County, Iowa, where the lady was born Sept. 18, 1859. She is the daughter of Francis M. and Minerva Harmon. Both parents were natives of Indiana, and settled in Mills County in 1856. Her father was in the army during the late war; he was wounded at the battle of Shiloh, and which resulted in his death. Her mother is now the wife of Joshua Boyd; she resides in Washington Territory. The parents of the lady had a family of three children; her brother Fielding resides in Washington Territory; Alice is the wife of our subject, and Mary E., now the wife of William R. Davis, resides in Avoca Precinct. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have one adopted child—Lulu M.

After his marriage our subject resided in Rock Bluff Precinct for four years. He then removed to Liberty Precinct, where he lived a short time; in the summer of 1883 he settled in his present home, where he owns 120 acres of land, which he has very highly improved, by the erection of a neat and pleasant dwelling-house, which is comfortably furnished throughout, conveniently arranged barns and other out-buildings for the care and protection of his stock and crops. The farm is divided into conveniently sized fields by permanent wire fences and well-cared-for hedges. The farm presents a picture of industry and untiring zeal; a fine orchard and groves of trees add beauty and value as well.

Mrs. Davis, the wife of our subject, came with her mother to Cass County and settled in Rock Bluff Precinct, where she lived up to the time of her marriage with Mr. Davis. Mrs. Davis is an active and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; they take a lively interest in all matters pertaining to the best interests of the people among whom they live. They occupy a prominent position in the social life of the community, and are honored and respected. In political matters he is a Democrat, and takes great interest in the success of his party. He has served as School Treasurer in Mt. Pleasant District four years. He is a leading member of the I. O. O. F., belonging to the Lodge at Weeping Water. He never has sought and does not care for political or public preferment.

ARON L. VAN DOREN, a noted and successful breeder of English Shire and Cleveland Bay horses, resides in Salt Creek Precinct, where he owns a valuable, highly improved farm of 245 acres of land, on which he settled when he came to Nebraska in 1880. The gentleman was born in Chester, Morris Co., N. J., on the 8th of March, 1842. He lived in his native place until he was a lad fourteen years of age, when he migrated with his parents to Mills County, Iowa. In the years prior to their leaving New Jersey he attended the excellent schools of Newark, in that State, consequently he had a good educational training when they went to Iowa. There, however, the advantages were meager, and presented a striking contrast to the schools in the East. Their first residence in Iowa was in the typical log house, built not for beauty, but for comfort and shelter, and it can be truly said that the log cabins of our country have been the homes and birthplace of many of the brightest intellects and noblest lives that have come to this world on which we live.

The father of our subject died when his son was only fourteen years of age, leaving the mother and our subject, with his brothers John and George, at home in charge of the farm. John died in 1859, leaving the two surviving brothers to care for the mother and the farm. The father was a very energetic, pushing man, and his sons inherited from him that very desirable quality. The two sons continued on the farm with their mother until the opening of the late Civil War, when, in response to President Lincoln's first call for 300,000 men, our subject enlisted for three years, or during the war, at Sidney, Iowa, Aug. 27, 1861. He, with his comrades, went to Davenport to Camp McClellan, and then to Camp Harland, at Mt. Pleasant, where they were drilled and instructed in the science of war. Leaving Camp McClellan they departed for the seat of war in the South, by the way of St. Louis. The remainder of their military education was obtained by actual experience under Confederate fire.

The command of which our subject was a member took an active part in the battles of Springfield and Pea Ridge, Mo., where the 4th Iowa Cavalry did effective service. Our subject was a member of Company A, of this regiment. Beginning with the Missouri campaign, the regiment was actively and continuously employed, and was present and took part in the engagements at Helena, Ark., Grenada, Jackson, Guntown and Osage, Miss., finding themselves at last a part of Grant's army around Vicksburg. His brother George was killed near our subject, being the third man from him, in the same rank. In this engagement eight companions of our subject were killed and nine wounded inside of twenty minutes. During the siege of Vicksburg our subject re-enlisted as a veteran in Company A, 4th Iowa Cavalry, when he was granted a furlough of thirty days, which gave him an opportunity to visit his home and friends. At the expiration of his leave of absence he rejoined his regiment at Memphis, Tenn.

After rejoining his regiment our subject accompanied it, and participated in the engagements at the Big Blue and Monticello, Mo., Selma, Ala., and Columbus, Ga., besides taking part in many skirmishes, reconnoitering and foraging expeditions. They were at Macon, Ga., when Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant at Appomattox Court House. They then went to Atlanta, Ga., when they were sent to Davenport, Iowa, where they were mustered out, and honorably discharged Aug. 24, 1865. At Vicksburg he was made a Corporal, and in 1864, at Louisville, he was promoted to Duty Sergeant, in which capacity he served until the close of the war. During his entire term of service, covering a period of four years, he never missed a roll call. Our subject and his comrade, Jacob Barnett, had the best records of any members of the regiment, and the commanding officer not wishing to make any distinction between the two, who were equal in every respect, granted them both a duty furlough of forty days, as a reward for duties well and faithfully performed. In 1865 he returned home and began farming.

In July, 1866, Mr. Van Doren and Miss Sarah E. Hill were married. The lady is a daughter of Edmund and Harriet (Morey) Hill. The father of this lady was born in Ohio, and the mother in Maine. The parents went to Henry County, Iowa, in 1844, and there lived for a period of eighteen years, when they removed to Mills County, Iowa. Her father was a wagon-maker, and by his industry he became the owner of a farm in Mills County, Iowa. In the years 1854-57 he visited the gold mines in California, and then returned to his family in Iowa. His sons, who are living in that State, continued to write him such flattering letters, and described the country in such glowing terms, that they induced their father, at his advanced age, to sell his home in Mills County and remove to California, which he did in 1874, and lived there until his death, which occurred Dec. 6, 1887, when he was sixty-eight years old. The mother is still living, at Cedarville, Cal., aged sixty-nine years.

Mrs. Van Doren is the second eldest in a family of seven children, her brother Daniel E. being older; and George F., Alvin (who died when one year old), Nellie A., Charley (who died when four years old), and Eva M. are younger. Sarah E. was born in Henry County, Iowa, where she lived with her parents until she was sixteen years old, when she went with them to Mills County, Iowa. At the age of seventeen she began teaching school, which she continued for three years. After her marriage she lived with her husband in Mills County, Iowa, until they came to Nebraska in 1880.

The father of our subject, William Van Doren, was born in New Jersey, where he was a farmer. He moved to Mills County, Iowa, in 1855, settling near Emerson, where he prospered and owned a large and valuable farm. He became widely known as an excellent judge of cattle and horses. He died on his homestead in 1856, aged fifty-four years. The mother, Peribenia (Drake) Van Doren, was also a native of New Jersey; she was married twice, and one child was the result of her first union, named James A. Lusk, now an esteemed citizen and farmer of Logan, Harrison Co., Iowa. Eight children were born to her after her second marriage, who were named: Ann Maria, Nancy J., Caroline, William, Mary E., George W., John (now dead), and our subject, Aaron L. George was married, became the father of a son, and is now dead; Ann M. resides at Alexander, Dak.; Nancy resides in Lawrence, Mills Co., Iowa; Caroline resides in Topeka, Mason Co., Ill.; William resides in Malvern, Iowa; Mary E. is the wife of William J. Baldwin, for a sketch of whose life see another page of this volume. After her husband's death, the mother lived on the old homestead, where she died in 1886, eighty-five years old. The Van Doren homestead is now owned jointly by the heirs, but all of them have homes of their own, so none of the family live there.

The paternal grandparents of our subject came to America from Holland, and settled in New Jersey in the early Colonial times. The mother's people came from England at a very early date, and settled in New Jersey.

A family of six children have been born to our subject and his wife, named: Edgar W.; Flora, who died aged three months; Frank H., Freddie L., Nellie M. and Raymond. His wife is a lady of culture and refinement; kind and hospitable, she takes and holds one of the first places in the social life of the precinct. Coming to the West as she did at an early age, the toils, privations and dangers of pioneer life are not strange to her, she having borne unflinchingly her full share as a dutiful daughter and faithful wife, and she has richly earned the life of competence and ease which is now her portion.

Mr. Van Doren is a gentleman who presents an ideal of manly beauty and strength; he is rather above the medium stature, well and strongly built, a frame closely knit, with sinewy muscles, he has all the attributes that make him a man of extraordinary physical power. He is a man of great force of character, and makes his individuality felt and recognized by all. His career as a soldier is one of which he may be exceedingly proud. There may have been others who possessed one equally as good, but no one surpasses him in that respect. Bearing all the privations, discharging every duty, however dangerous, unflinchingly, seeing his only brother shot down at his side, and exposing his own life to the same fate, show him to be a man of courage and resolution. In tracing his ancestry back to the early days of our country, no flaw or stain can be found attaching to any of the name, but each one faithfully discharged every duty of patriotism and honor devolving upon them.

The love of horses exhibited by our subject is inherited from his father, and he has cultivated it from his earliest childhood. The horse was an object of great delight to him in his early years, and in his later life and during the time of the Rebellion he held constant companionship with the graceful members of the equine tribe, and it is therefore no wonder that in his years of mature manhood he should engage in a business having for its purpose the breeding and development of the most noble animal of creation. Such has been his experience, the result of study and observation, that his judgment in all matters relating to stock-raising is accepted by his neighbors without question, it being proverbial, and the farm which he has devoted to this purpose presents to the eye of the observer a place perfect in all its details, designed especially for the comfort and accommodation of the many fine specimens of the horse—the property of our subject. His farm is well improved by substantial fences, large and conveniently arranged barns, and a commodious, well-furnished dwelling-house, a choice orchard, and numerous groves and numbers of ornamental trees. A large supply of pure water is available, made convenient to the barns and dwelling by a system of piping from a large tank, filled by a pump operated by a large windmill. A view of the place is shown on another page of this work.

Our subject is Junior Vice-Commander of the G. A. R. Post at Greenwood, and is Past Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias. He is a School Director of District No. 81, and is now serving his third term. In politics he is a strict Republican, and takes a lively interest in the success of that party.

RED WEHRBEIN is one of the leading farmers of Plattsmouth Township, and his highly productive farm, one of the most valuable estates in this locality, is sufficient evidence that he has met with more than ordinary success in his chosen calling. He comes of an ancient German family, and is a son of Frederic Wehrbein, who was born in Lippe-Detmold, Germany, and was there united in marriage to Amalia Goedike. There were eight children born unto them, namely: Wilhelmina, Amalia, Charlotte, Dorothea, Frederic (who died in infancy), our subject, William and Gustine; the latter is deceased.

In 1855 Mr. Wehrbein emigrated to the United States with his family, and located in Jefferson County, Wis., where he was prosperously engaged in farming for some years. In 1868 he removed to Nebraska with his wife and children, and made his home here until his death, his wife also dying here. He was a capable, self-reliant man, and while acquiring a competency contributed to the material welfare of Cass County.

The subject of this sketch was born in the home of his fathers in far-away Germany, June 14, 1848, and but seven years had passed over his head when he left the Fatherland with his parents and came to the United States, of which he was to become a useful citizen after attaining manhood. He continued to live with his parents until his marriage. He first purchased eighty acres of land on section 18,

Plattsmouth Precinct, now included in his present farm, and the good success that he had in managing it enabled him to buy more land, until he is now the possessor of as fine a farm as is to be found in Cass County, comprising 227 acres in all. It is under good tillage, and is amply supplied with everything necessary for carrying on agriculture after the most approved methods. Mr. Wehrbein has erected a conveniently arranged, substantial dwelling, corn cribs and other necessary out-buildings, and everything about the place wears an air of neatness and thrift.

To the wife who presides over his pleasant home Mr. Wehrbein was united in marriage in this county, in January, 1873. Her maiden name was Margaret Hagel, and she is also a German by birth. Mrs. Wehrbein's parents, Anton and Theresa (Schoeule) Hagel, were likewise natives of Germany, who emigrated to this country and spent their last years in Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Wehrbein have five children living, namely: Ida, Emma, Mary, John and William. Frederic, their eldest child, died at the age of nine months.

Mr. Wehrbein is a manly, upright man, of good financial ability, and prompt and methodical in his business habits. In him the Presbyterian Church finds a useful and earnest member. Mrs. Wehrbein is a much esteemed lady, was reared in the Catholic Church, and has remained true to the faith of her forefathers. Politically, Mr. W. is a Democrat.

WILLIAM HENRY SHAFER is distinguished in the annals of Cass County as being the second oldest settler in point of settlement, and to him and men of like energy, enterprise and ability, does it owe its present importance and prosperity. He took up his residence in Plattsmouth in 1854, when there was scarcely another habitation for miles around, shrewdly noting its eligible position for a town site, and it is with pleasure that he has witnessed the various stages of its growth from the wild, lonely prairie, and then a struggling village, to its present size and importance as the metropolis of one of the finest counties and richest farming regions in the State, and it must be to him a source of satisfaction that he has had a hand in bringing about this marvelous change. He is extensively engaged in the real-estate business in this city, aside from devoting much time to looking after his private interests, as he has a large amount of property, and at one time owned 1,000 acres of land in Cass County, besides 1,500 acres in other parts of Nebraska and Iowa.

The subject of this biographical notice was born in Pendleton County, Ky., and his father, Frederic Shafer, was likewise born in that State, Harrison County being the place of his birth. His father, Henry Shafer, was a native of Pennsylvania, and was there reared and married. His first wife died there, and he married a second time, the grandmother of our subject being his second wife. After his second marriage he resided in Mercer County, his native State, until his removal to Kentucky with several other families. They made the journey from Pittsburgh down the Ohio River in a flatboat. The country through which they passed presented a very different appearance from what it does to-day, the picturesque banks of the stream being thickly wooded with tall, centuries-old trees. But in the depths of the primeval forest lurked the implacable enemy of the early settlers, the Indian; and once on the way they were attacked by the hostile aborigines, but all escaped unharmed. The grandfather of our subject took up a tract of heavily timbered land in Harrison County, after his arrival in Kentucky, and cast in his lot with the pioneers of that State. The land had never been surveyed, and he marked the boundaries of his claim by blazing trees. The Indians being numerous, the settlers were obliged to build a fort, to which they could flee on occasion of hostile demonstrations from them. The men had frequently to go out on scouting expeditions, and Mr. Shafer was with Poe on one of these when Mr. Poe killed the Indian chief, Big Foot. There were no markets in that part of the country for farm products for some years, and the people lived in the most primitive manner. The grandmother of our subject used to spin, weave, and make up all the cloth used in the family, and the skins of wild animals were utilized to make clothing. After several years of hard labor, and the patient endurance of hardships, Mr. Shafer cleared a fine farm, which remained his home until death claimed him. His wife then removed to Illinois with her son John, and died at his home in Vermilion County. She was the mother of nine children, of whom the father of our subject was one.

The latter was reared in Harrison County, but after marriage he moved to Pendleton County, in the same State, and bought timbered land, from which he cleared a farm. He built a log house for a dwelling, and in that humble abode his son, of whom we write, first opened his eyes to the light of day. The father engaged in general farming there for several years, then took up his residence in Gallatin County, where he bought a partially improved farm. In 1836, seven years later, we find him among the pioneers of Decatur County, Ind., where he purchased a tract of land, which he cultivated during his six years' residence there. After that he spent eight years in Tipton County, and then he found a home in Nebraska with his son, our subject, until his death, Oct. 3, 1867, at the advanced age of seventy-eight. The maiden name of his wife was Sarah Jones, and she was a daughter of Joshua Jones, of Pennsylvania. She was born in Harrison County, Ky., and died at the home of a daughter in Cass County, this State, April 5, 1865. She and her husband were the parents of the following children: Seth, Milton, Thomas, William H., Joshua and Harriet.

William Shafer was four years old when his parents moved to Gallatin County, and about twelve years old when they crossed the border to take up their abode in Indiana, the removal being made with wagons. The home that his father selected comprised a tract of land in the wilderness, and there our subject was reared amid the pioneer influences that often serve to bring out strength of character and manly self-reliance. The household lived in the most simple manner, luxuries being almost unattainable; the mother did all her cooking before the fire in the rude fireplace, and it was her skillful hands that made all the clothing for her family. Our subject made his home with his parents until he was about twenty years of age, although he had previously worked out by the day or month, receiving for wages fifty cents a day in harvest seasons and $8 a month at other seasons of the year. At the age mentioned he went to Switzerland County, Ind., with two of his brothers, and they rented land and engaged in agricultural pursuits for two years at that point. Our subject then married, and after that rented land and farmed it on its own account for three years. We next hear of him in Tipton County, where he invested the money that he had accumulated in a 100-acre tract of timbered land, at $2 an acre. He built a primitive log structure, with an earth and stick chimney at one end of it, and in that house he and his wife took up their abode. Pioneer conditions still obtained in that part of the country, from which the primeval forests had not yet been eliminated by the ax of the settler; nor had the wild turkeys, deer, wolves and other wild animals fled before the advancing steps of civilization, but venison and the delicious meat of the wild turkey often set forth the table of the settler. Mr. Shafer cleared and cultivated twenty-five acres of his land, and made his home on it until 1854. In the spring of that year he sold his land, and migrating with his family to Iowa, purchased a tract of timbered land, comprising 500 acres, near Glenwood, opposite Plattsmouth, and there resided from May 25 until November 19. His removal to that place had been by rail to Madison, Ind., where he had embarked on a steamer for Bethlehem, Iowa, traveling on the waters of the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri Rivers. He paid his first visit to Nebraska April 25 of that year, and pre-empted the land where he now lives, which now forms a part of the city. May 19 he erected a log house on the place, with a stick and mud chimney, and a few months later moved into it with his family. At that time there were but two houses in Plattsmouth, and the Indian titles had not been quieted, but after the ratification of the treaties, the Government sold the land for $1.25 an acre. In 1855 Plattsmouth was surveyed, and Mr. Shafer assisted in the first survey by carrying the chain. Two men named Martin and O'Neill had kept a store on the opposite side of the river, and had later become the proprietors of the town site, and had platted the city. They both died here. In 1855 a post-office was established here, it being kept in a log building that was for some years used for a store, and the mail came once a week from Glenwood, Iowa. After settling here Mr. Shafer turned his attention to the improvement of his land, a part of which was open prairie and a part of it covered with brush. In August, 1850, he commenced freighting across the plains to Denver, starting with two wagons laden with flour, with three yokes of oxen to each wagon. Two men accompanied him, and they took provisions and cooked and camped by the way. The Indians were at that time peaceable and friendly, and did not attempt to molest them. Buffaloes, deer, antelopes and other wild game were plentiful and were seen nearly every day. It took three months to make the round trip to and from Denver, and each year after that he made two trips across the plains until 1868, and then made trips from Julesburg to Denver. During that year he also made two trips from Denver to Ft. Wallace, Kan., a distance of 160 miles, for the purpose of teaming lumber, and during the time he killed several buffaloes. The Indians were then hostile, but he fortunately never happened to encounter them. In 1879 Mr. Shafer freighted from Denver to the Upper North Platte, and also for the contractors on the Union Pacific Railroad, between the Upper North Platte and Echo Canyon, and from Bayant City to Salt Lake City. In the fall of the year he disposed of his team at a good price, and returned to his home in Plattsmouth, and established himself in the real-estate business. In the spring of 1876 he concluded to resume freighting, and started for Sidney, Neb., with three wagons and seven yokes of oxen, and there loaded freight for the Black Hills. It took six weeks to make the round trip between Sidney and Deadwood, and the cost of freighting articles to the latter point was from two and one-half cents to three cents a pound. Mr. Shafer continued freighting between those points for three years, and then he went upon the route between Ft. Pierce and Deadwood for two years. July 12, 1881, he sold his teams at Ft. Pierce, and returned home. In 1882 he set about the improvement of his real estate by building, and during that year he erected seventeen dwellings and a blacksmith-shop, thus giving Plattsmouth's building interests quite a boom. In 1882 he formed a partnership with William Wise, and they became agents for the Union Pacific Railroad for the sale of that company's Cheyenne lands. At the end of one season they dissolved partnership, and our subject has been dealing in real estate alone since that time. His is a busy, active life, and has been fraught with much adventure. He has accomplished much where a less determined and energetic man would have failed, and is now numbered among the substantial and wealthy men of this community.

Mr. Shafer was married, May 30, 1846, to Elizabeth Gullion, a native of Switzerland County, Ind., Dec. 14, 1826, being the date of her birth. Her parents, John and Elizabeth (Scudder) Gullion, were also natives of Indiana. Dec. 22, 1872, this devoted wife and tender mother was removed from the cares and sorrows of earth, and many there were to share the grief of the family thus left desolate. To her and her husband twelve children had been born, seven of whom are living—John F., Melissa J., Missouri A., Sarah C., Zilva, Hattie and Ida. In early manhood Mr. Schafer was a Whig, and he cast his first vote for Henry Clay. On the formation of the Republican party he fell into its ranks, and has firmly supported its measures ever since.

Portraits of this noble old pioneer and his equally noble wife, who had witnessed and participated in the growth of the city of Plattsmouth from its primitive state of open prairie to its present flourishing condition, are given herewith.

—•••••—

FREDERIC GORDER is one of the leading citizens of the city of Plattsmouth, standing in the foremost ranks of its energetic and enterprising business men, and taking a prominent part in its civic life. He was born in Lippe-De-mold, Germany, in 1838, and his father, August Gorder, was likewise a native of the same locality. He was a shoemaker by trade, and followed that calling in the old country for some years, afterward, however, engaging in farming. In 1853 he embarked for America with his wife and six children, setting sail from Bremen in March, landing in New York City the following May. He went to Jefferson County, Wis., and worked at his trade of shoemaker there for two years. After that he bought a tract of improved land in Watertown Township, and for several years was prosperously engaged in farming. He subsequently retired with a comfortable competence to the town of Watertown, and there passed his last years, dying in 1880. He and his wife were highly respected by all who knew them for their many good traits of character. The children born to him and his wife were as follows: Frederic, Henrietta, August, William, Mena and Sophia.

The subject of our sketch attended school in his native country, and acquired a substantial education. He was fifteen years of age when he accompanied his parents to the United States, and he began life here by working on a farm at $5 a month. After his father bought a farm he resided with his parents until marriage, and assisted in the management of the homestead, thus gaining a sound, practical knowledge of agriculture. Feb. 14, 1862, Mr. Gorder established a home of his own, and to the young lady, Miss Charlotte Wehrbein, whom he asked to preside over it, he was united in marriage. Six children have been born unto them, namely: Emma, Fred, Annie, August, Louisa and John.

At the time of his marriage Mr. Gorder bought 120 acres of improved land in Waterloo Township, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits with good success until 1868, when he sold all of his property in Wisconsin, having decided to try his fortunes in the young State of Nebraska. He came to Plattsmouth and bought a farm in this precinct, which he managed with profit for five years. At the expiration of that time he removed into town and engaged in buying grain, continuing in that business the greater part of the time until 1887, and for the past eight years he has also been engaged in the sale of farm implements. He still carries on that business, and has built up a large trade. When the Plattsmouth canning factory was established Mr. Gorder became a stockholder and director in the company, and in 1888 he was appointed manager and secretary.

Mr. Gorder is a fine example of the self-made men of this country who, solely by their honorable ambition, persistence and industry, have placed themselves among the most substantial and wealthy citizens of the localities where they reside. He is a man whose genuine honesty, capacity for affairs, and unblemished characters, have been instrumental in raising him to responsible offices, as in him his fellow-citizens saw one whom they could trust to serve them faithfully, and, it is needless to add, their confidence has never been betrayed. Mr. Gorder is a stockholder in the Cass County Bank, and he is prominently identified with the local Board of Trade, having been a charter member. He has been a member of the City Council, and is at present a member of the Board of Public Works. He is independent in politics, voting for the men whom he thinks to be best fitted for office, and sustaining such measures as in his judgment are for the best interests of the country, regardless of the party from which they may have emanated. He and his family are among the most active members of the German Presbyterian Church.

ARCHIBALD McFALL, who is profitably engaged in agricultural pursuits on section 13 of Stove Creek Precinct, has been in Nebraska only a few years, but during his residence here he has gained the respect and confidence of the community by his upright dealings and fair business transactions. He was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, June 29, 1839. He is of Scotch-Irish descent, his paternal grandfather having emigrated from Ireland to Canada, and was a pioneer in the Province of Quebec, remaining there engaged in farming until his death, at the advanced age of eighty years. William G. McFall, the father of our subject, was born in Ireland in 1816, and when three years of age came to Canada with his parents. When old enough to establish himself in life he bought 100 acres of densely timbered land in Canada, from which he cleared a farm. He took part in the Canadian Rebellion in 1838, going out as a volunteer in the home guards. In 1855 he removed to the Province of Ontario, where he began pioneer life anew. He improved a farm of 200 acres, put up good buildings, and remained there many years. In 1881, disposing of his property in Canada, he came to Nebraska, and has since lived with his son at Eagle. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and a man of excellent personal character. He married Miss Ellen Broadie, a native of the Province of Ontario, who died there in 1857, when thirty-nine years of age. Her father was born in Scotland, and emigrated to Canada when a young man, and spent the remaining years of his life there. To Mr. and Mrs. McFall were born eight children, namely: Archibald, Ellen, James, Adam, William, Mathew, Margaret and Michael.

The subject of our sketch was reared in his native town, and remained at home, assisting his father on the farm out of school hours, until sixteen years of age, when he moved with his parents to Ontario. He then worked with his father until he attained his majority. Soon after that auspicious event our subject bought 100 acres of land in Canada, which was covered with a dense forest, and began the arduous task of clearing a farm. He succeeded, put up good buildings, and devoted himself to general farming and stock-raising, wheat having been his staple product. Becoming dissatisfied with the country, Mr. McFall moved from Canada to Nebraska, coming by rail to South Bend, thence to his present farm, which he had purchased the year before. It was in its primitive state, and he at once commenced its improvement. He lived in a small house, but has since built a more commodious one, and the first season broke fifty acres of ground. The next season he set out groves of forest trees and an orchard of 115 fruit trees, and fenced his land. His farm is well watered, being crossed by two streams of running water, besides having two wells on the place. Our subject pays much attention to raising cattle and hogs, feeding out the larger part of his grain to them. His herd of cows comprises some fine grades. He also keeps three teams of horses of a fine grade.

Mr. McFall was married in Perth County, Canada, April 7, 1851, to Miss Ellen, daughter of Andrew and Sarah (Mathewson) Morrow. Both parents were natives of Ireland, and soon after their marriage moved to Canada, where Mr. Morrow engaged in the mercantile business in Quebec. He subsequently bought a farm of 300 acres in the Province of Quebec, on which he lived until his death in 1864. In 1838 he took an active part in the Canadian Rebellion, having enlisted as a volunteer. Mrs. Morrow died on the homestead in 1857. They were the parents of six children, as follows: Rebecca, Sarah, George (deceased), Ellen, John and Gilbert.

The household of our subject and wife has been brightened by the birth of eight children, seven of whom are now living, namely: Ellen, wife of E. Boyles, of Stove Creek Precinct; Annie, Emma, George, John, Ida and Bertha. Mr. McFall is an intelligent, industrious man, of sound judgment, always interested in local and general affairs, and during his residence in Canada was for many years a member of the Board of Education, a position which he has also filled here to the satisfaction of all, and he has likewise been Supervisor of Roads. Both Mr. and Mrs. McFall are worthy members of the Christian Church at Elmwood, and contributed generously toward building it, and have since helped to support it. Mr. McFall was naturalized in 1886, and has since identified himself with the Prohibition party.

EVERETT E. DAY. As one of the practical business men of Weeping Water and representative citizens of Cass County, it affords us pleasure to place before the reading public a brief commendatory notice of the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch. He is of good New England origin, his great-grandfather, William Day, having been born in Massachusetts, where he spent his entire life. He was President of the first body of men who came together to formulate a petition to Congress praying for the Declaration of Independence. John Day, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Sheffield, Berkshire Co., Mass., about 1770. He married a Miss Austin, and after spending many years of their married life in Massachusetts, they emigrated to Ohio with their family of fourteen children in 1816.

Judge William Day, the father of our subject, was born Dec. 15, 1796, in Sheffield, Mass., where he remained until his removal to the Western Reserve in Ohio. When he crossed the Cuyahoga River there were only a few houses on the site now occupied by the city of Cleveland. He settled in Sheffield, Lorain Co., Ohio, where he hewed out a farm from the forest-covered land. His father and Isaac Burrill, afterward his father-in-law, bought the whole township of Sheffield. He being only about twenty years of age at the time of moving to Ohio, remained with his father until he went to New Orleans to take charge of a large hotel for his uncle, and remained there for several years. In 1833 he returned to Ohio, and was soon after married to Miss Augusta, daughter of Isaac Burrill, who was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and moved with his family to Sheffield, Ohio, in 1817, going with an ox-team, and cutting his road a large part of the way. After their marriage Judge Day and his wife settled on a part of his land which he had previously taken up, and he now has a magnificent farm, the homestead comprising five or six hundred acres of land. Besides this he owns other farms, but the larger part of his fortune was made by dealing in white oak lumber. He has been for many years Associate Judge of the District Court of Ohio. He is still living, a hale and hearty old man, having the universal esteem of the community, and is a prominent and representative man of his county. He, with a few of the older families, was a founder of the Congregational Church of Sheffield, and has always contributed liberally toward its support. The Judge's estimable wife died Oct. 9, 1887, her death having been the first one in the family since the marriage of herself and husband fifty-four years before. She left seven children and sixteen grandchildren. The record of the children is as follows: E. I. Day lives in Weeping Water; Maria is the wife of Prof. G. F. Wright, of Oberlin College; William is now at the old homestead; Henry lives in Elyria, Ohio; Marietta is now Mrs. Disbrow, of Atlantic, Iowa; Sumner B., also living in Elyria, owns a large farm in Weeping Water, and Everett E. The children were all educated at Oberlin College.

Everett Day, of whom we write, was born in Sheffield, Lorain Co., Ohio, Nov. 3, 1850, and remained in his native State until through school. After leaving the district school our subject entered Oberlin College, and subsequently pursued his studies for two years at Tabor College, afterward returning to Oberlin for another year. Soon after finishing his education he started for the West, and in 1870 visited Nebraska. He did not, however, make a permanent stay here then, but afterward engaged in business in Atlantic, Iowa, where he remained two years, and in 1881 came to South Bend, Neb., where he bought a bankrupt stock of goods and an elevator, staying there two years. He then built two elevators on the Missouri Pacific Railway, and had Mr. Norton take charge of one. Five years later Mr. Day came to Weeping Water, and continued the stock business which he had before begun. His first investment in stock was the purchase of a carload of Herefords and Jerseys in Ohio, in 1884, and to this, besides the natural accretions and single purchases, he has since added two carloads of fine cattle, so that in his herd he has fully one-half dozen Herefords imported from England, and registered in the American Hereford Cattle Herd Book. He also has thirty-five or forty-five Jerseys registered. "Sir Evelyn, 2d," stands at the head of the Hereford herd. "Miss Barbara," full-blooded, at the age of eight years won the sweepstakes at the St. Louis Fair. "Miss Patti" won the sweepstakes at the Lincoln and Omaha Fairs. "Lilac," a fine imported cow, also won the sweepstakes at the Omaha Fair, and a half-dozen others have taken premiums at various fairs.

Our subject, besides attending to his stock, is the owner of E. E. Day's dry-goods store, of Weeping Water, and also of three elevators, one at Walton, one at Eagle, one at Weeping Water, and, until recently, one at Avoca; the one that he owned at Wabash he sold about a year ago. His real estate consists of two farms in Centre Precinct, one on section 36 and one on section 35, one half-mile west of the town, on which he resides. He also owns another farm in South Bend, one-half mile from the station, all of which are used as stock farms.

Mr. Day was united in marriage, Dec. 15, 1881, to Miss Jennie, daughter of G. W. Norton, of whom see sketch on another page of this work. Of this union two children have been born, Harold E. and Mabel Bess. They are yet young, but will receive good educational advantages, both parents believing a good education the best foundation for future success and happiness.

Our subject is a patriotic, liberal-spirited citizen, and, though avoiding all offices as far as possible, does his duty at the polls, voting consistently and intelligently with the Republican party. Mr. and Mrs. Day are people of good social standing, and during their residence here have made many warm friends and won for themselves an enviable place in the regard of others in the community. Both are highly esteemed members of the Congregational Church, and teachers in the Sunday-school.

ABRAM HATHAWAY. Among the old pioneers of Liberty Precinct and Cass County, the subject of this biographical sketch deserves more than passing notice. As by his industry and practical farming he has been an important factor in the development of the rich agricultural resources of this region. The farm that he occupies on section 24, in the southeastern part of the precinct, is the same which he obtained from the Government by pre-emption in the early days of the settlement of Nebraska, he having been well satisfied with its location and the unusual facilities it afforded for successfully cultivating the land, the soil being exceedingly rich and well watered. The time, care and money that he has expended on it have been well rewarded, and the once wild prairie yields him bountiful returns. The buildings are ample and well arranged, and everything about is indicative of the thrift and wise management of the owner.

Mr. Hathaway was born Feb. 16, 1813, in Steuben County, N. Y., and his parents were P. D. and Rebecca (Howard) Hathaway, who were also natives of that State. During some period of their married life they moved to Ohio, and some years later to Lake County, Ind., where they died at an advanced age, the father being eighty-two, and the mother, who died some years prior to his death, being over sixty. He was a farmer all his life, and with his wife a member of the Methodist Church for many years. In politics he was a sturdy Democrat, and zealously promoted the interests of his party.

The subject of this sketch was the third child in a family of thirteen children, eight sons and five daughters. He was reared in his native State until he was fourteen years old, when he accompanied his parents to Ohio, and attained his majority in Shelby County, that State. He afterward lived in Indiana for some years, making his home at different times in LaPorte, Porter, Lake and Shelby Counties. During his residence in that State he contracted a matrimonial alliance with Miss Ann Cannon, a native of the Hoosier State. She was born Oct. 11, 1817, and was a daughter of Abraham and Jane (Thatcher) Cannon, who are both deceased, the father dying in the prime of life in Ohio, and the mother, who had married a second time, dying at a ripe old age in Indiana. Mrs. Hathaway was reared in her mother's home in that State, and was married from there. The marriage of our subject and his wife has been blessed with the birth of twelve children, one of whom is dead, Elizabeth, who was the wife of William Hardy. The record of the others is as follows: Rebecca J., Mary A., Peter D. and Esther, all of whom are married; Bethuel, single; Lewis P. and George, married; Alfred D., Sylvester and Joseph T., single; Charlotta, married.

Some time after his marriage Mr. Hathaway removed to Kankakee County, Ill., and made his home near the river of the same name for nearly twelve years, and then crossed the Mississippi River to Iowa, and was a resident of Polk County, near Des Moines, until his removal to this State.

Since coming to Nebraska Mr. Hathaway has crossed the plains to the Rockies, starting on his journey in April, 1850, and after his arrival in the vicinity of Pike's Peak engaging in mining until September of the same year. He then returned to his home in this county, richer in experience if not in pocket, and he has since lived on his farm in contentment.

Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway are well known and warmly liked in Cass County as good, honest people, and to their many friends they present examples of busy lives fully rounded by their various experiences into a serene and active old age. Mrs. Hathaway is a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Hathaway, although taking a quiet interest in public affairs, has never sought office. In his political sentiments he is a Republican of the first water.

HENRY ENGELKEMEIER. Perhaps no State in the Union has derived greater benefits from the enterprise and industry of the thrifty German citizen, who is represented in such generous numbers along its southern line, than Nebraska. Among them may be mentioned in no unworthy terms the prosperous agriculturist whose name stands at the head of this sketch. He selected his location in the spring of 1880, on section 34, in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, and since that time has been industriously engaged in his farming pursuits, taking little part in the noise and dissensions of the world outside. By this, however, it must not be inferred that he is in anywise an ignorant or uninformed man, for on the contrary the very appearance of his farm indicates his native intelligence.

Our subject is a direct offspring of the Fatherland, and was born April 10, 1854. The son of Henry and Anna M. Engelkemeier, he was the fourth of their eight children, seven of whom are still living. William, the eldest, continues a resident of his native Germany; Frederick came to America with friends, and is carrying on farming in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, this county; August lives not far from the brother before mentioned, while Charles is a resident of this county. The parents have been content to remain upon the soil which gave them birth.

Continuing in his native Province until a youth of eighteen years, our subject received the benefits of a practical education, and in revolving within his mind his plans for the future, decided to seek his fortune on another continent. Accordingly, in the spring of 1872 he bade adieu to his old friends and the associations of his childhood, and embarking on a steamer at the port of Bremen, landed in the city of Baltimore after an ocean voyage of seventeen days. Thence he made his way directly westward to this county. His honest and intelligent face soon secured for him friends and employment, and for about seven years he worked by the month as a farm laborer. He then commenced operating on rented land, and in the spring of 1882 had made such good headway that he was enabled to settle upon a farm which he could call his own. This he still occupies. His first purchase was 160 acres, for which he paid $2,000, and upon which there were no improvements whatever, it being simply a tract of uncultivated prairie, which not long before had been traveled over by wandering bands of Indians.

The results of energy and perseverance have been finely illustrated in the career of our subject. Beginning as he did from first principles, the task which lay before him was of no small dimensions, but with hereditary perseverance and by laboring early and late, he soon gained a solid footing, and there opened before him the prospect of a home and a competency. In due time he added to his first purchase, and is now the owner of 248 broad acres, which he has enclosed with substantial fencing, and upon which he has erected the buildings necessary for his comfort and convenience and the successful prosecution of his calling. He keeps a goodly assortment of live stock, and avails himself of modern machinery, making of farm work not the drudgery it used to be twenty years ago, but changing it in many respects to a pleasure and a pastime.

Among the interesting incidents in the life of our subject, none was of more importance than his marriage, which occurred in Cass County, Neb., April 27, 1883, his bride being Miss Lizzie Sieker, a native of his own country, and born Oct. 29, 1859. Mrs. Engelkemeier is the daughter of William and Minnie (Engelkemeier) Sieker, the former of whom was a farmer by occupation, and died in Germany about 1858. The mother is now living with our subject. Miss Lizzie, when a young lady of twenty-two years, came with her brother, August, in 1881, to America, and located with him in Woodson County, Kan. Later she came to this county by herself, making her own living until her marriage. Of this union there have been born two children, sons: William, June 11, 1885, and Charles, Oct. 7, 1886. Both Mr. and Mrs. E. were reared in the doctrines of the German-Lutheran Church, to which they still give their loyal adherence, attending services in this precinct. Our subject, politically, votes the straight Democratic ticket. He was well educated in his native tongue, and has picked up a fair knowledge of English. After coming to this country he attended school for a time, and this fact in itself indicates his appreciation of those things which tend to the elevation of society and the formation of the useful and worthy member of the community.

JAMES INGRAM, a thorough-going Scotch-American citizen, resides on the well-improved farm located on section 30, township 12 north, range 12, in Eight Mile Grove Precinct. He was born March 16, 1826, in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, and is the son of Adam and Margaret (McGregor) Ingram. His mother was a descendant of the clan McGregor, who were at one time among the bravest of the brave of Scottish clans. His father is now residing in Aberdeen, Scotland, at the ripe old age of ninety years. Our subject is the only child by his father's first marriage. He lived in his native country until he was fourteen years old, when he went to England and worked for three years. He was on railroad work the greater portion of the time, connected with the track-laying department. Subsequently he passed some three and a half years on the Channel Islands, erecting a breakwater for the British Government. It was designed for the protection of their man of war ships.

During the early years of his life our subject availed himself of all the educational facilities afforded by the neighborhood in which he lived, and has, since leaving his native country, made a careful study of events, until he now possesses a large fund of knowledge. About the year 1847 he took passage at Liverpool, England, on an American sailing-vessel, called the "Florida," bound for the New World. After an uneventful voyage of one month he landed in New York City. Wending his way westward he arrived in Buffalo, N. Y., July 4, and continued his journey via Chicago to Elgin, Ill., where he obtained employment on the Chicago & Galena Railroad, which was then under construction, working a portion of the time at track laying, when he was promoted to the position of foreman. He remained there about six months. He then went to Indiana, and obtained work on the Michigan Southern Railroad, which was then being built, where he remained about six months, when he left, and went on the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad, near LaSalle, Ill., for about four months.

During much of the railroad work done by our subject he was employed by George Armour as a foreman. Armour was a railroad contractor and builder in those days. Growing tired of working for others he concluded to engage in business for himself, when he secured a contract on the railroad, which he completed. Subsequently we find him connected with the Illinois Central Railroad, as a contractor, for about nine months. He then went to Guthrie County, Iowa, and began farming, which he followed for about two and one-half years. In the fall of 1856 he came to Nebraska having heard the country so highly spoken of and as possessing superior advantages. Arriving in the then Territory he located for a short time in what is known at present as Louisville Precinct, where he lived until he finally settled on his present farm in 1865. He "squatted" on 160 acres of land, which he afterward pre-empted as soon as it came into market. There was about one acre plowed when he settled on it. He has improved it since then until he now owns one of the finest improved farms in the country. He now exercises ownership of over 280 acres of land.

The subject of our sketch and Elizabeth Urwin were married May 16, 1857; the lady was born in England, Nov. 16, 1840. She is a daughter of William and Ellen (Wandless) Urwin. Her father now resides in Cass County, Neb., and is one of the oldest settlers. He was born in Newcastle, England, and when this lady was about eight years old the parents emigrated to America, where they setbled for a time in Wisconsin, where her mother died. In the year 1856 her father removed with his family to his present home, where he has resided ever since.

Mr. and Mrs. Ingram have become the parents of a large family of children, of whom the following named survive: William, Elizabeth, James, Adam, Ellen, Margaret, George, Elsie, Andrew, Adella and Nora. Elizabeth is now the wife of A. Swason, and resides in Kearney County, Neb.; Ellen is the wife of George Palmer, and resides in Cass County; Margaret is Mrs. Isaac Tenant, and lives in Kearney County, and her brother George is a resident of the same county; three children are deceased. They were named: Joseph, Samuel and Mary.

The improvements that have been made by our subject are of a very substantial and prominent character. The barn and other out-buildings are large and commodious, and well adapted to the purposes for which they were intended. His residence contains many of the improvements that are seldom found outside of older settled communities; the house is roomy, well designed and nicely furnished. His wife is the presiding genius of his home, and is a refined and intelligent woman. She has in every way possible been an assistant to her husband in acquiring the handsome property which they now own. Both husband and wife occupy a prominent place among the pioneer families of the county; they are widely and favorably known for their generosity and hospitality. In politics Mr. Ingram is a Democrat. With the exception of being Treasurer of the School Board for several years he has accepted no public office.

STERLING F. GIRARDET, senior member of the firm of Girardet, Boone & Emens, is, with his partners, conducting a lively trade in dry-goods, groceries, fancy goods, notions, carpets, and an unusually full assortment of everything pertaining to the country or city household. They have as fine an establishment as is to be found in Weeping Water, where the business was inaugurated in January of 1888. Mr. G.

is essentially a Western man, the son of one of the earliest pioneers of the county, and was born in Nebraska City, April 28, 1858. He is consequently a young man still, and he has entered upon what at present appears to be an undoubtedly prosperous business career.

Our subject received a good practical education, completing his studies in the Normal School at Peru, and also attending the school at Tabor, Iowa. He entered upon his mercantile career as the clerk of L. Wessel & Co., of Nebraska City, with which firm he remained continuously for a period of five years at that point. At the expiration of this time, still in the employ of the same firm, he was assigned to the branch of their house at Weeping Water, which they established in 1883, and was manager of this five years. The building, with its contents, being destroyed in the general conflagration of Dec. 19, 1887, the firm withdrew from business there.

In January of 1888 our subject associated himself with Messrs. Boone & Emens, the latter of whom had been for some time in his employ as a clerk. They opened their doors for business on the 10th of January, 1888, in the new brick block on the south side of I street. They carry a large and finely selected stock, and enjoy a trade which is steadily increasing.

On the 26th of October, 1887, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude Potter, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride in Ogallala, Neb. Of this union there is one child, Max, who was born Aug. 3, 1888. Mrs. Girardet, a native of Ogle County, Ill., was born Sept. 17, 1866, and is the daughter of Thomas L. and Urilla (Heistad) Potter, who came to Cass County about 1872 or 1873. They are now residents of Maria, Neb. Mrs. G. is a member in good standing of the Congregational Church, of which her husband is a regular attendant, giving liberally to its support. Our subject, socially, belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the K. of P., in the latter of which he is Vice Chancellor. As a successful business man he has avoided meddling with politics, excepting doing his duty at the polls, when he casts his vote with the Democratic party.

Jules Girardet, the father of our subject, and a native of Switzerland, was born in the Canton of Bern, Nov. 6, 1818. When a young man he emigrated to the United States, settling in New York City, where he followed his trade of baker, and came thence to Nebraska City in 1856, during its pioneer days. He purchased a tract of slightly improved land in Otoe Precinct, Otoe County, and for a number of years labored in its cultivation and the building up of a homestead, putting out an orchard of apple trees and the smaller fruits, and erecting a dwelling and the other buildings required for the comfort of himself and family. Upon this farm he is still living, and it is now numbered among the finest homesteads of the county. The land, 160 acres in extent, has been brought to a high state of cultivation.

In his native Switzerland Jules Girardet was united in marriage with Miss Susan Zimmererer, and they became the parents of six children, five of whom are living and all residents of the West. The wife and mother departed this life Aug. 31, 1872. She was born Nov. 6, 1818. Mr. G. is a member in good standing of the Lutheran Church, and a man held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens.

Our subject remembers Nebraska City when it was only a village, and often recalls the interest with which the citizens watched the completion of the first railroad, the Midland Pacific, which ran through it. When he settled in Weeping Water it was a little town of between 300 and 400 inhabitants, and there was being built through it the Missouri Pacific Railroad. He has practically "grown up with the country," and takes the deepest interest in its progress and development. His friends predict for him a most prosperous future, and that when years have added dignity to his age he will be numbered among the solid citizens of the place.

T. L. Potter, the father of Mrs. Girardet, was married in early manhood to Miss Urilla Heistad, who was born in Ogle County, Ill., and is now in Maria, Neb. Of this union there were six children, five of whom are living and residents mostly of the West. Mr. and Mrs. Potter left this county in 1887, settling in Perkins County, Neb., where they are now living, and the father successfully engaged in farming. He was formerly in the jewelry business, having learned the trade in Illinois, and was one of the first practical jewelers of Weeping Water, where he carried on the business until failing health compelled him to seek a change of occupation. He served as a soldier three years during the late Civil War, participating in several active engagements. Both he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the Congregational Church. Sterling F. Girardet has already-signalized himself as a citizen interested in education and the other enterprises calculated to build up a city, giving to these his support and his substantial encouragement, and has served as a member of the Village Board, besides occupying other positions of trust.

— ❦ — ❦ — ❦ — ❦ — ❦ —

OLIVER JACOBS. In the career of the subject of this sketch we have that of a man who has arisen to a high position solely through his own unaided efforts, and through many struggles. He was at an early age thrown upon his own resources, and grew up to be a thoughtful and industrious young man, self-reliant, and imbued with those principles which have developed a character respected and liked by all who know him. A man remarkably quiet in his demeanor, there is little about him at first glance to indicate his strong qualities of character, and that which he has accomplished in the space of comparatively a few years. He possesses the innate culture and refinement coming only from an excellent ancestry, and has been fortunate in making the most of his opportunities of observation, his mind naturally turning to the useful and the good. Nature has not endowed him with a very strong body, but mentally, he has attained to the highest manhood. His business is that of a merchant in the young and growing town of Wabash, whose people have learned to respect him for his genuine worth, and with whose development he has been closely identified.

Mr. Jacobs was born in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, April 7, 1853, and was orphaned by the death of both parents when a tender child of three. He was the youngest of three brothers and two sisters, these being named respectively: John, Henry,

Anna and Mary. Mr. Jacobs has no recollections of his father, and but a faint remembrance of his mother. After the death of the latter, who only survived her husband a short time, the little family was separated, and our subject was adopted by an Englishman, Thomas Talbot, who lived on a farm in the vicinity of Oneida, Knox Co., Ill. Mr. Jacobs was therefore reared amid the quiet scenes of rural life, with limited school advantages. Through all these years he had his doubts about the manner of his education and training, and when a youth of nineteen left the farm, and began working in one of the many iron manufacturing establishments of Cleveland. He was thus employed a period of five or six years, but in the fall of 1876 resolved upon another change of location.

Mr. Jacobs now leaving Ohio made his way to the West. The fall of 1878 found him this side of the Mississippi, located near Blue Springs, in Gage County, this State. Later he sojourned in various places at Weeping Water and South Bend, employing himself at times on a farm and at times as clerk in a store. Amid all these changes he managed to pick up much useful information, gaining a good idea of business methods. Finally he started in business for himself at South Bend as a general merchant, and soon afterward was appointed Postmaster, holding this position two years.

In April, 1886, Mr. Jacobs desired to establish himself at Wabash, and accordingly securing ground began putting up his present store building. It was completed in due time, and he moved into it with a stock of goods. It is a two-story frame structure which would do credit to a burg far more pretentious than Wabash, and which will be an ornament to the town when it shall have attained to much larger proportions. He soon took two partners in the business, Messrs. Emery, of Iowa, and P. Horton, of Wabash, the firm name being Jacobs & Co. They are all gentlemen of good business abilities, courteous in demeanor, and are rapidly building up a large and lucrative trade.

As one of the first settlers of Wabash and one who risked his capital in a new town at a time when other men were afraid to invest a dollar, the name of Mr. Jacobs deserves to be preserved in its annals for all time. Liberal-minded and public-spirited, he has done much to develop the town, and bring to it a worthy class of people. When he put up his store building there were few houses in its vicinity, it being erected literally in a field. Wabash has now become one of the most promising villages on the line of the Missouri Pacific, between Nebraska City and Lincoln, and ships more grain and live stock than any other village of its size in the State. The early experience of Mr. Jacobs among agricultural pursuits has been of service to him in his later enterprises, as in connection with his merchandising he operates a market garden of twenty-five acres adjacent to the village. Like Horace Greeley, nothing gives Mr. Jacobs more pleasure and diversion than the hours devoted to horticultural pursuits. With an organization fully appreciative of the charms of nature, there is not a more lovely sight to his eyes than the springing up of vegetation on the soil, and its development under the action of the sun and rain. He recognizes as the spring of this the great Power which gives life to the universe, and before which every intelligent person must bow with reverence and praise.

With an eye to the near future of an intelligent community who must have their pleasures and recreations, Mr. Jacobs and Mr. Horton have established a boating park immediately east of the village on a branch of the Weeping Water, which here winds around in graceful curves, as if purposely loitering to enjoy the beauty of the situation. Mr. Jacobs, upon discovering this bit of natural scenery, decided that a park might here be established with comparatively little trouble and expense, and accordingly set himself about it with his characteristic energy. He has, with the above-named partner, spared no pains to make it attractive as a summer resort, constructing a little lake, and placing row-boats at the service of visitors, while the waters are stocked with that favorite fish, the German carp, for the recreation of anglers. This enterprise has met with the hearty approbation of the people in this vicinity, who fully appreciate the enterprise of its projectors.

In fact there have been few projects tending to the growth and progress of Wabash Village to which Mr. Jacobs has not lent a helping hand. As the head of the Oliver Jacobs & Co. Commission

House of Lincoln, he has intercourse with the best business men of the county, and occupies a high place in their confidence and esteem. Although not a member of any religious organization he believes in the establishment of churches, and to this end has contributed liberally of his means, the Methodist and Baptist Churches of Wabash being the objects of his especial benefits. Socially, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen, having a lodge at Wabash, in which organization he is the banker. Distinctively a man of progress, it is hardly necessary to state that Mr. Jacobs is a staunch member of the Republican party, to which he lends a hearty support, and labors in the maintenance of its principles as he has opportunity. During his incumbency of the office of Assessor of Elmwood Precinct, he pursued a course which was eminently satisfactory to his constituents, and one reflecting great credit upon himself. Cass County recognizes no more worthy citizen within her limits than Mr. Jacobs, who is building for himself a monument that shall endure for decades to come.

HIRAH STANFORD was an early settler of Stove Creek Precinct, where he is now prosperously engaged in business as a carpenter, besides superintending his farming and stock-raising interests on section 36. He is a native of Boardman, Ohio, March 12, 1823, being the date of his birth. His parents, Oliver and Olive (Mason) Stanford, were natives respectively of New York and Massachusetts. His father was a pioneer of Ohio. He was a carpenter and joiner by trade, and also carried on farming, having cleared a 160-acre tract of land from the primeval forests of Ohio. In 1854 he sold his property in that State and moved to Wisconsin, locating in Elkhorn, Walworth County. He subsequently removed to Waupun, where his death occurred in 1864, at the age of seventy-two years. His widow died in Howard County, Iowa, in 1876, at the age of seventy years. They were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in their exemplary lives were illustrated the beauties of the Christian religion. He was a man of strong convictions, one of which was that the policy of the Democratic party of his day was the right one to be pursued in the conduct of National affairs. To him and his wife were born nine children, namely: Leroy and Orin (deceased), Orceumus, Chauncey, Squire, Hirah, Wesley, William and Mary (deceased).

Hirah Stanford grew to manhood on the homestead of his father, amid pioneer surroundings, and gained an education in the common schools. At the age of twenty-one he left the parental home and began life for himself as a carpenter in Ohio, remaining there until he was twenty-nine, with the exception of three years spent in Wisconsin. After his marriage he removed to Elkhorn, Wis., and there established himself as a carpenter, also engaging in farming a part of the time. In 1860 he removed with his family to Nebraska City, traveling with a team and driving his cattle before him. They were five weeks on the journey, and forded every river between Wisconsin and Nebraska except the Mississippi, which they crossed at Savannah, and the Missouri at Nebraska City. Mr. Stanford immediately identified himself with the agricultural interests of Otoe County, beginning to farm on Summit Farm. He owned 120 acres of land, which he cultivated five years. He then sold it and moved to Nebraska City, built a residence, and his wife, determining to do her share toward increasing the family exchequer, kept a boarding-house, while he was actively employed at carpentering. They continued their respective employments until the spring of 1866, when they came to Cass County, and in Stove Creek Precinct Mr. Stanford took up his present farm under the provisions of the Homestead Act. This 80-acre tract then formed a part of the wild, treeless prairie, where but few settlers had preceded our subject. Notwithstanding the fact that the first few years were disastrous, and but little was accomplished in the way of cultivating the land on account of the grasshopper plague, drouth, etc., our subject has done well, and has made many valuable improvements. He has five acres of forest trees, an orchard containing eighty fruit trees; has hedges and wire fences around his land; has erected a good dwelling, barns, and other needed buildings, and has everything in order, so that his place compares very favorably with others in the neighborhood. Besides obtaining a good income from the products of his land, he finds stock-raising very profitable, and has his farm well stocked with cattle, horses and hogs. He has had quite an extensive business as a carpenter, besides attending to his agricultural interests.

Our subject was very fortunate in the selection of his wife, to whom he was married March 29, 1850, in Rootstown, Portage Co., Ohio. She has been to him a true helpmate, and to their children a wise mother. She is an excellent housekeeper, and rules her household with a firm hand, thus contributing to the comfort of its members, and making their home neat and attractive. She has seen much of life on the prairies, and in the trying times of pioneer days her cheerfulness and sympathy encouraged her husband. She is a devoted Christian and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Elmwood. Of her happy wedded life three children have been born—Henry, Nettie and Fred. Henry is farming eighty acres of land on section 27, Stove Creek Precinct, which he purchased in 1882. He has it all broken, and has a good house, barn, windmill, etc. He is a stalwart Republican in politics. Fred married Miss Minnie Donnelly, and they have one child, Herbert. They reside in Nebraska City, where he is engaged as book-keeper in Lorton's wholesale grocery store.

Mrs. Stanford was born in Rootstown, Ohio, March 14, 1826. She received a common education and taught school. Her maiden name was Sarah L. Shewell, and she was a daughter of James and Mary (Chapman) Shewell, natives respectively of New Jersey and Rootstown, Ohio. Her grandfather, Henry Shewell, who was of English descent, was a pioneer of Ohio, where he carried on farming, and was also a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The maternal grandfather of our subject, Nathan Chapman, was of English descent. He was born in Connecticut, where he learned the trade of chairmaker. He, too, was a pioneer of Ohio, and carried on a farm there. Mrs. Stanford's great-grandfather, Paine, was a Revolutionary soldier and pensioner. Her father and mother were married in Ohio, and there Mr. Shewell engaged in the pioneer task of clearing a heavily timbered tract of ninety acres, which he improved into a good farm, whereon he and his family made their home until 1860. He then sold it and moved to Nebraska City, where he died in 1865, at the age of sixty-five years. His wife died on the old homestead in Ohio in 1858, at the age of fifty-one years. They were stanch members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Four children were born of their marriage, as follows: Sarah L.; Samantha L., who resides with our subject; Oscar, who owns and operates a sawmill in Ohio; Henry, a banker in Nebraska City.

Mr. Stanford is well known and honored throughout this community. His high character and generous nature are so evident to all as to need no comment here. He is a man of good understanding, and his opinion both in public and private carries much weight. In his home life he is kind and devoted to his family; in public, he is faithful to his obligations to his neighbors and in his duties as a citizen; he has been Justice of the Peace. He takes great interest in politics, and is a prominent member of the Republican party of Cass County, and has served as delegate to conventions.

GEORGE W. ADAMS, senior member of the firm of Adams & Gilbert, is one of the leading grain and stock men of Cass County, having his headquarters in Weeping Water. His has been a remarkably interesting experience, the main points of which, as near as we can gather, are as follows: The fifth in a family of twelve children, he was born in Crawford County, Pa., Dec. 23, 1836, and lived there only until a little lad of three years, when the father, accompanied by his family, started for the West with teams. They lived afterward several years each in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. In the latter State the father died six months after his arrival, leaving a widow and eleven children.

The mother of our subject after the death of her husband returned to Pennsylvania, where her death occurred in 1872, she being about sixty-four years of age. David M. Adams, the father of our subject, was also a native of Crawford County, Pa., where he spent the days of his boyhood and youth, and when reaching man's estate was married to Miss Grazillia Hickernell, who became the mother of seven sons and five daughters. Seven of these are now living, being located in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas, California and Nebraska.

The subject of this sketch is numbered among the earliest pioneers of this county, and one of the first men to settle upon the present site of Avoca Precinct. There are now very few remaining of the men who followed him within the course of a few years to this place. His nearest post-office and trading point for some time was at Plattsmouth, or Nebraska City, and for a number of years these places seemed, as it were, to stand still, while Indians roamed over the country frightening the white settlers, but really doing no serious injury. Wild game was plentiful, and many were the adventures of which our subject and his few companions at that time were heroes.

Mr. Adams first set foot upon the soil of Nebraska in the summer of 1858, when he came to the southern part of this county and took up land on section 3, in Avoca Precinct, upon which not a furrow had been turned or a tree planted. He labored in true pioneer style in establishing a homestead, planting fruit and shade trees, making fences, erecting buildings, and bringing about the other improvements naturally suggested to the enterprising and progressive mind. In Mt. Pleasant Precinct he has now a beautiful farm 520 acres in extent, and another tract of 160 acres in Avoca Precinct, this also being brought to a high state of cultivation. His stock operations yield him annually a handsome income. He deals largely in fine cattle and horses, being able to exhibit some of the handsomest and most valuable animals in this part of the State.

Mr. Adams put up the present family residence on his farm in Avoca Precinct in the year 1876. It is a very handsome and commodious structure, and at the time of being built was considered one of the finest dwellings in this part of the county. It has stood the storms of twelve years in an admirable manner, with no perceptible change in its appearance since its completion. On this farm Mr. Adams has expended his best efforts, much of the land being enclosed with beautiful hedge fencing, while he has planted an abundance of fruit trees, and has five acres of forest trees, forming one of the grandest windbreaks in this section.

The stock barn of Mr. Adams is a very noticeable feature of his farm, occupying an area of 40x60 feet, with a fine basement, and ample conveniences for the shelter of stock and the storing of grain. In his stables are some splendid specimens of the equine race, high-bred imported Norman horses, and in another department registered Short-horn cattle, comprising one of the finest herds in the country. Among his horses are Ney, No. 2,950, French imported, of the foal of 1882, an imported two-year-old; he is now a beautiful dark iron-gray, weighing about 2,000 pounds, with fine points in every particular, and valued at $2,000. In all, Mr. Adams keeps about thirty head of horses, a number of them registered, the others of high grade. Mr. Adams is a lover of this noble animal, a good judge of its value, and thoroughly acquainted with the best methods exercised in its proper care and treatment.

Mr. Adams in 1884 transferred his farming interests mostly to the hands of his son Himenus, a very energetic and enterprising young business man, possessing many of the traits of his honored father. Moving into the city he associated himself with Mr. Gilbert in the grain business, of which the firm has the monopoly in Weeping Water and vicinity. They have a large elevator here as well as at Elmwood and Eagle, all of which are in constant use and prove a great convenience to the business men and farmers of the surrounding country. The present residence of Mr. Adams is a handsome dwelling, finely situated on Eldora avenue, and stands in the midst of seven acres of land, which furnishes ample grounds for the carriage barn and drive, and the various other conveniences and comforts which tend to make a charming suburban home. In Avoca Precinct Mr. Adams served as Assessor and School Director for a number of years and was otherwise identified with local affairs. He lays no claim to being a politician, in fact, is desirous of avoiding this channel of public life, excepting so far as to do his duty at the polls, when he uniformly gives his support to the Republican party.

After the death of the father of our subject, in St. Clair County, Ill., George W. Adams passed the three years following engaged in boating; then he started for the West, his sole possessions the clothing which he wore, no money, in fact, nothing to depend upon but his own resources. It is hardly necessary to say that he traveled on foot, worked his way along the Ohio, Mississippi and Illinois Rivers, and finally landed in Peoria County, Ill. where he purchased a loaf of bread with five cents he had left. His equipments were not near fine enough to linger in the town, so he made his way into the agricultural districts, and secured employment with a farmer about three miles from LaSalle, for whom he engaged to work the following summer for the sum total of $16 and his board.

Young Adams did not encroach upon his capital during the time of his sojourn there, but in the fall, taking his money, made his way across the Mississippi into Cedar County, Iowa. There he employed himself at whatever he could find to do, working on the farm in summer, and sawing wood in winter, for a period of four years. In the meantime he met and married Miss Sabra Girard, the wedding taking place in Iowa, Aug. 17, 1858. The young couple soon afterward, leaving the Hawkeye State, came to this county, then a bare prairie, and began their wedded life together in a small house on an open tract of land. The land now constitutes the farm of our subject in Avoca Precinct, but that first humble dwelling was long since abandoned for a more pretentious residence.

After a few years of earnest labor and strict economy, our subject began to realize the reward of his toils. It is not necessary to state here what has been so often repeated in connection with the history of the Nebraska pioneer. Suffice it to say that Mr. Adams in his labors, in common with the men around him, worked early and late and endured many hardships and difficulties, and while many men abandoned their purpose after coming to the Territory, he persevered in his first resolve and has had no reason to regret it. The universal regard in which he is held by the people around him is sufficient evidence of his personal worth and integrity. He bears the reputation of a man honest and honorable in all his transactions, one whose word is considered as good as his bond.

Mrs. Sabra (Girard) Adams, the wife of our subject, was born June 5, 1840, near LaFayette, Ind. She received a common-school education and was carefully trained in all housewifely duties—those things which have so much to do with the happiness and comfort of a home. Of her union with our subject there were born five children, only two of whom are living. The eldest son, Himenus, of whom we have before spoken, married Miss Louisa Gruber, and as before stated, is operating the home farm. George G. makes his home with his parents in Weeping Water.

James M. Girard, the father of Mrs. Adams, was born Aug. 25, 1814, in Ohio, whence he removed when a boy to LaFayette, Ind., when it was but a small town. He was there married to Miss Elizabeth Miller, and they became the parents of five children, four of whom are living. The family about 1852 moved across the Mississippi into Cedar County, Iowa, where the father, as before, followed farming for a number of years, then changed his residence to this county, making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Adams, where his death took place during the winter of 1888. The wife and mother passed away at the same place in 1886. Besides Mrs. Adams their surviving children are located in Nebraska.

JOHAN G. WUNDERLICH. The subject of this sketch is probably about the youngest established farmer in his community, being not quite twenty-four years old, and having already a snug farm of 160 acres, a wife and a little child. He owns his farm, and is of that quality of character which constitutes him a prudent manager and an industrious worker. His land is fertile and he has comfortable buildings.

Mr. Wunderlich has been a resident of Avoca Precinct since the spring of 1880, and purchased his present property two years later. He was born on the other side of the Atlantic, in the little Kingdom of Bavaria, July 2, 1865, and is the only child of John F. and Maggie (Patal) Wunderlich, who were also natives of Bavaria, and of pure German ancestry. The father was a blacksmith by trade, and met his death accidentally in his native country, by falling from a train of cars, being caught and having both legs severed from his body. He only lived about five hours. This calamity occurred in the fall of 1869. He was a good and worthy man, and labored industriously to maintain his little family in comfort.

Capt. J. J. A. Hoover

The mother of our subject remained a widow ten years after the death of her husband, and was then married to Henry Hepner, also a Bavarian by birth. They came to the United States in the fall of 1880, and settling in Avoca Precinct have since made it their home. Mr. Hepner is carrying on farming successfully, and is regarded as a worthy citizen.

Mr. Wunderlich accompanied his mother and stepfather to the United States before reaching his majority. He had received a practical education in his native tongue, and from his youth up been accustomed to labor. He was married in Berlin Precinct, Otoe County, March 9, 1887, to Miss Lena Carsten, who was born in Avoca Precinct, this county, Dec. 26, 1865, being a few months younger than her husband. The history of her parents is given in the sketch of Henry Schomaker, which will be found on another page of this work.

Our subject and his young wife settled soon after their marriage at their present homestead, and are the parents of one child, a daughter, Lotta, who was born Dec. 14, 1887. Mr. Wunderlich votes the straight Democratic ticket, and both he and his wife in religious matters adhere to the faith of the Lutheran Church, in which they were reared.

CAPT. JOHN T. A. HOOVER, well known as the founder of Louisville, Cass County, has by that fact alone, independent of his well-known character for energy and enterprise, made himself a man of much consequence along the northern line of Cass County. His sagacity and forethought made this point, in his judgment, a good one for future operations, and after persuading the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company to lay their track as near as possible to the projected site of the village, contributed $500 for the location of a station there. He put up the first house in the place, and the town has since been the object of his fostering care.

Capt. Hoover, it is hardly necessary to state, was one of the pioneers of this county, to which he came with a capital of but $320. He has now a fine property, and at his farm on sections 23 and 27, Louisville Precinct, he has inaugurated the modern improvements which have made it one of the most valuable estates in the precinct. One noticeable feature is a fish pond of seven acres, well stocked with German carp, the first enterprise of the kind in this region. The Captain has of late years been engaged in the manufacture of fire brick, in which he utilizes some of the best quality of clay found in the West, the product of his own land. A citizen public-spirited and liberal, giving generously of his time and means for the advancement of his township, he holds a position second to no man in Cass County. He was the founder of the Louisville Pottery, one of the flourishing industries of the place.

The birthplace of our subject was in the city of Nagold, Wurtemberg, Germany, where he was born Sept. 13, 1826. He was the youngest of twelve children, seven of whom lived to mature years, but only three of whom now survive. The father, Ferdinand Hoover, was a farmer and stock-trader, and was married in his native Germany to Miss Catherine Scheehinger. This lady was born in 1783, being five years younger than her husband, whose birth took place in 1778. After marriage they settled on a farm in their native Province, where the father carried on agriculture until 1846. He then emigrated to America with his family, landing in New York City after a voyage of twenty-one days. From the great metropolis they proceeded directly to Darke County, Ohio, where the parents settled on a farm, and where the death of the father took place in 1857. The mother survived her husband a period of seventeen years, passing away in 1874.

The subject of this sketch was placed in school at the age of five years, and followed his studies quite closely until a youth of sixteen. He then entered an establishment for the manufacture of essences, where he also learned the compounding of medicines, and devoted himself to the study of chemistry. He was thus occupied three years, and then accompanied his parents to the United States, and made his home with them in Ohio until the death of his father. Upon the outbreak of the Civil War he resolved to assist in the defense of his adopted country, and soon after the first call for troops enlisted in Company D, 58th Ohio Infantry, which was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, under command of Gen. Smith. He met the enemy in some of the most important battles which followed, being in the fights at Ft. Donelson, Pittsburg Landing, the siege of Corinth, and various other minor engagements and skirmishes. Such was his natural intelligence and energy that he was made a First Lieutenant, and was a short time later promoted to a Captaincy, receiving his commission from Gov. Denison of Ohio. He was thus actively engaged about two years, and then, on account of failing health, was obliged to resign his commission in March, 1863.

Capt. Hoover now returned to his home in Darke County, Ohio, and thereafter engaged in agricultural pursuits. Later he disposed of his interests in the Buckeye State and determined to locate in Nebraska Territory. Coming to this county he purchased land on section 23, Louisville Precinct, securing at once 320 acres, upon which there were no improvements, with the exception of a small log house. Under many disadvantages he commenced the opening up of a farm, and six years later, in 1869, put up the present stone dwelling, which is a fine, substantial structure, commanding the admiration of the country around. The material was quarried on his farm, and the building is constructed to stand for generations. The Captain has found that his land was best adapted to the cultivation of corn, from which he has realized as high as 100 bushels to the acre. This he utilizes largely in the fattening of swine. His well-regulated pens, to which he gives particular care, make a cleanly and healthy domicile for his porkers, and they have been singularly free from the diseases usually attending this species of live stock.

The marriage of Capt. John T. A. Hoover and Miss Eva Hufnagel was celebrated in Darke County, Ohio, Dec. 31, 1848. Mrs. Hoover was born in Lebanon, Pa., in 1832, and is the daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Breckbiel) Hufnagel, who spent their last years in Ohio. This union resulted in the birth of ten children, six sons and four daughters, all of whom are living, presenting a family group which any parent may well be proud to look upon. These are recorded as: Benjamin G.; Ellen, the wife of G. Metzger; Catherine, Mrs. Hern Smith; Lizzie, Mrs. Morris Carnay; Emily M., Mrs. William Worth; James; Mary, Mrs. Nelson Dewey; Andrew, William and Isabelle. The two latter are at home with their parents.

After signaling himself in a most decided manner as a man well fitted for positions of trust and responsibility, Capt. Hoover was, in 1867, elected to represent this county in the Nebraska Legislature on the Republican ticket, endorsed by the Democracy. He served his term acceptably, and in 1870 was appointed by President Grant the Postmaster of Louisville, which position he held a period of ten years. He has served in the various other local offices, and, socially, belongs to the G. A. R., Post No. 175, of Louisville. This well-known pioneer and founder of one of the flourishing towns of Cass County is fitly represented by his portrait, shown on an adjoining page.

— — — — —

THOMAS GOODIER is one of the early settlers as well as one of the most prosperous farmers of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and resides on a well-improved farm located on section 21. He was born in Manchester, England, Jan. 17, 1831. He attended the schools in his native country until he was about eleven years old, where he acquired a taste for reading and study, which he continues to the present time. In his twelfth year he began the business of gardening, which he followed for two years; from this time for nearly twenty years he was employed in the warehouse of Wolff, Hassah & Co., in Manchester, England, his duties in this house being principally the packing of goods for foreign shipment. Another year was spent in the same business for another firm.

In September of 1856 Mr. Goodier was married to Frances Woolstencroft, a daughter of John Woolstencroft, who resided near the native city of our subject. They are now the parents of five children, named: Mary E., George, Anna, Maud and Thomas. Mary E. is the wife of James Stockem, and resides in Custer County, Neb.; the son George also resides in the same county; Anna is the wife of Jacob Stamm, and resides in Mt. Pleasant Precinct.

Feeling that there were countries that offered better advantages than his native land, our subject with his family came to America in 1872, sailing from Liverpool, England, in the Cunard steamer "Batavia," and after a voyage of ten days they landed at New York City, came direct to Cass County, and purchased the eighty acres of land on which they now live. When they arrived on their land it was in a perfectly wild condition, not a furrow had been turned or any improvement of any kind had been made. With the pertinacity for which his countrymen are noted, he went to work with a will to improve his farm, and by close application and continuous hard labor he is the owner of one of the most productive tracts of land in the county.

From a wild and unsettled condition our subject has seen the country about him develop into the splendid, prosperous and highly cultivated state it has now reached, and he has taken no unimportant part in bringing it to its present high and flourishing degree of prosperity, and where a few years ago deer and buffaloes roamed at will, we see productive fields, pleasant, comfortable homes, churches and school-houses abound, denoting an intelligent and God-fearing people.

Our subject is the son of John and Mary Goodier. The mother is now deceased. Both parents were natives of England. He is the second oldest son of the family; all the surviving members of his parents' family are still in England. He has become an American citizen by complying with the laws of the country relative to that question; all his interests are here and his sympathies are wholly and entirely with the American people.

The residence of our subject is pleasantly situated, neatly designed and comfortably furnished. The barns and other out-buildings necessary to the successful prosecution of the business in which he is engaged are conveniently located and are sufficiently extensive to meet his present requirements. A fine thriving orchard yields to his family an abundance of fruit, and a number of ornamental trees and a quantity of flowering plants and choice shrubbery add to the beauty of his home and the pleasure of its inmates. The political allegiance of our subject is with the Democratic party. He has served one term as School Director, but declines to accept further political favors from his neighbors, as he cannot spare the time from his farm duties. He is large-hearted and public-spirited, and with his wife and family, takes a great interest in the social matters of their locality. They are members of the Christian Church, are widely and favorably known, and enjoy the confidence and esteem of all who know them.

IRA GORDON, one of the first business men locating in the young town of Wabash, established himself in the hardware trade here in March, 1888, and is now carrying on a prosperous trade, receiving a generous patronage from the people of this part of the county. He came to Nebraska in 1879, from Dubuque County, Iowa, to which he had been taken by his parents when a little lad seven years of age, and where he developed into manhood on a farm. He was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, near the town of Patton, April 15, 1847, and was the fourth child in a family of seven, the offspring of Ransom S. and Rachel (Little) Gordon, who were natives of Maine and Ireland. The father died at the old homestead in Dubuque County, Iowa, at the advanced age of eighty years. He was twice married, and was one of a family of fourteen children. The mother is still living, making her home with her son, Smith Gordon, in Red Willow County, this State, and is now seventy-eight years old.

This branch of the Gordon family is of Scotch ancestry, and was first represented in this country forty years or so after the settlement of the Plymouth colony by the paternal great-grandfather of our subject, Alexander Gordon, who took up his abode in Saco, Me. His progenitors were the heirs of a large estate in Scotland, Gordon Castle and its appurtenances, which is still in existence, and estimated to be worth $40,000,000. The brothers and sisters of our subject were named respectively: Ransom, Smith, Henry and Lois. The first named is now numbered among the prosperous farmers of Centre Precinct; Smith is a resident of Red Willow County; Henry is a soldier of the regular army, and located at Ft. Windgate, New Mexico; Lois is the wife of John Hess, of Elmwood Precinct, and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Gordon was given the advantage of a practical education in the common school, completing his studies in Dubuque County, Iowa. He was but a boy at the outbreak of the Rebellion, and consequently did not enter the army as he wished, in company with his brothers and half-brothers. In the meantime they had pre-empted land in Centre Precinct, this county, where they settled afterward. Young Gordon, also deciding upon the pursuit of agriculture, purchased, in 1879, eighty acres of land in Stove Creek Precinct, to which he came with his little family not long afterward. He had been married, Dec. 22, 1875, to a Miss Ida Tisdale, who was born in Dubuque County, Iowa. Mrs. Gordon was carefully reared and thoroughly educated, completing her studies in St. Mary's Academy in Dubuque. She became the mother of two children, daughters, May M. and Emma M., and departed this life at their home in Iowa, July 23, 1879. Thereafter our subject for several years following lived in Iowa, and his children were taken care of by himself, his sister keeping house for him.

On the 18th of February, 1886, Mr. Gordon contracted a second marriage, with Miss Annie, daughter of William Thaler, of Palmyra, Otoe County, and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Of this union there is one child, a daughter, Bessie Lurette. In March, 1888, leaving his farm in Stove Creek Precinct, Mr. Gordon purchased the hardware business of G. W. Woodruff, the pioneer establishment of its kind in Wabash. His energy and enterprise are proverbial among the people of this section, and he has become identified with the various leading interests of the town, to which he gives his encouragement and support. He is one of the stockholders of the Wabash Publishing Company, and uniformly votes the straight Republican ticket. In religious matters he adheres to the doctrines of the Free-Will Baptist Church, and in Masonic circles is a member of Euclid Lodge, at Weeping Water. He has distinguished himself as an able financier, and if we may judge anything from the opinions of his fellow-citizens, no man stands higher in the business or social circles of Wabash and vicinity than Mr. Gordon.

GREELEY GARRISON. The main points in the history of this highly esteemed resident of Plattsmouth are as follows: He was born near Three Rivers, St. Joseph Co., Mich., Feb. 16, 1854, and is the son of William Garrison, a native of the State of New York. The paternal grandfather it is believed was a native of Holland, and upon coming to America early in life, located in the State of New York, whence he removed later to Michigan, settling in St. Joseph County, and there spent the remainder of his days.

William Garrison, the father of our subject, was reared to manhood in his native State, which he left about the time of reaching his majority, casting his lot among the pioneers of St. Joseph County, Mich. He purchased a tract of timber land near which grew up the present flourishing city of Three Rivers, eliminated a good homestead from the wilderness, and lived there until November, 1854. Then crossing the Mississippi he established himself a short time in Glenwood, Iowa, where he sojourned until March, 1855, and with the spirit of adventure still upon him, once more changed his residence, taking up his abode among the pioneers of Nebraska Territory. He located this time in Cass County, when there were little indications of white men in this region.

The removal of the father of our subject from Michigan was made overland by means of a team of horses and a wagon. He crossed the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, before this now flourishing city had even assumed the dignity of a platted village. There was one store, which was conducted in a log building, and of this Mr. Garrison soon secured possession. The Indian titles had been only a short time extinguished, and the savages themselves still lingered in the country. But few white people had ventured within the Territory, and they were mostly located along the river. The land was still owned by the Government, and was selling at $1.25 per acre.

For several years afterward the elder Garrison carried on general merchandising in primitive style, but finally sold out and located on a tract of land northwest of the city. This he improved and occupied until about the time of the outbreak of the Civil War, when he once more gathered together his family and his personal effects, and journeyed to Douglas County, Col., where he now resides.

Mrs. Mary A. (Crawford) Garrison, the mother of our subject, was born in Richland County, Ohio, and is the daughter of Robert Crawford, a native of Maryland, who emigrated to Ohio and located in Richland County during its pioneer days. Thence a few years later he pushed still further westward into St. Joseph County, Mich., being also among the first settlers there. He improved a farm, erecting buildings and gathering together all the comforts and conveniences needful, and there closed his eyes upon earthly scenes. Mrs. Garrison is still living, making her home with her son in Plattsmouth. The parental family included six children, five of whom grew to mature years, and are now living.

The subject of this sketch was but an infant when his parents came to Nebraska Territory, and he has thus literally grown up with the country. He has been a resident of this county all his life, and has witnessed the growth and development of Southern Nebraska with the warmest interest, and borne no unimportant part as an honest man and a good citizen in building up its reputation. Plattsmouth during this time has grown from a settlement of a few log cabins and frame shanties to one of the most important cities west of the Mississippi, and contains now nearly 10,000 souls. Mr. Garrison spent his boyhood and youth at his father's farm, amid the wild scenes of pioneer life, and upon reaching manhood chose agriculture for his occupation, and gave to this the most of his attention until the spring of 1888, when he disposed of his farm property, and moving into the city established himself as a blacksmith, and is in the enjoyment of a good patronage. He is a natural mechanic, and without having served any regular trade either as blacksmith or carpenter, is a regular expert in the handling of tools. This talent has been the means of saving him many hundreds of dollars on his farm and elsewhere.

The marriage of H. Greeley Garrison and Miss Harriet N. Bailey was celebrated at the home of the bride in Cass County, July 19, 1883. Mrs. Garrison was born in Schenectady County, N. Y., Sept. 4, 1855, and is the daughter of William P. and Angelique (Van Slike) Bailey, who were natives of New York, and are now residing in this township. (See sketch of Mr. Bailey.) Of this union there is one child, a daughter Letta. Our subject and his family occupy a snug home in the northwestern part of the city, and which is the frequent resort of a large number of friends. Mr. G., politically, is a member of the Democratic party.

EZEKIAH VAN HORN, a highly respected farmer of Plattsmouth Precinct, is pursuing the even tenor of his way on one of its well-cultivated farms, and has built up a good homestead by his own persevering efforts, unaided except by his faithful and devoted wife. He was thrown upon his own resources early in life, and his possessions are the accumulations of industry and economy. He is one of the many men who came to Nebraska with faith in its future, and whose labors have been crowned with their legitimate reward.

The ancestors of our subject were originally from Holland, where his paternal grandfather, by name Christian Van Horn, was born, and whence he emigrated to the United States when a young man, locating in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Pa. He served as a soldier in the War of 1812, and when his services were no longer needed located in Belmont County, Ohio, about 1836. Thence he removed to the vicinity of Xenia, in Greene County, where his death took place in 1858, when he was seventy-five years old. His son James, the father of our subject, was born in Berks County, Pa., in 1817, and accompanied his father to the Buckeye State. He was there married to Miss Lydia Gray, and they became the parents of eight children, viz: Christian, our subject, Caroline, Thompson, James, Zeruah, William and Edward. The mother died when a young woman, aged about thirty years, in February, 1853, at the home in Ohio.

The father of our subject was married the second time, in Ohio, in 1857, to Miss Caroline Ruse, a native of Virginia. Of this union there were born six children: John W., Howard; Maggie, who died in August, 1885; Joseph, Ida and Laura. The family lived in Ohio until the year 1868, then decided to push on further westward, and located in the vicinity of Shawneetown, Ill. Not being satisfied with their surroundings at that place, they changed their residence to Posey County, Ind., but later returned to Illinois, settling in Crawford County. Thence in the year 1881 they moved across the Mississippi to Union County, Iowa, where they still live.

The subject of this sketch was born in Belmont County, Ohio, Nov. 8, 1843, and remained with his father until a youth of fifteen years. He then started out for himself, going first to his uncle, Joseph Van Horn, in Grape Grove, Greene Co., Ohio, with whom he remained one year. He then returned to his father in Greene County, and in 1863 went with his parents to Illinois, and then he journeyed alone to Iowa, in September, 1872. Two years later he was married, Sept. 10, 1874, to Miss Mercy I. Barlow, and they commenced the journey of life together in Iowa, where they lived until coming to this county, Oct. 19, 1879. Mr. Van Horn was quite prominent in Grant Township, Iowa, serving as a Constable, and occupying other positions of trust. Politically, he is a staunch Democrat. Christian, the oldest brother of our subject, was a soldier in the Union Army during the late war, and was killed at Goldsboro, N. C., about the time of Lee's surrender.

To our subject and his estimable wife there were born four children, three of whom are living, viz:

George C., Albert M. and Emma Laura. One son, James M., died Aug. 27, 1882, when seven years, two months and six days old. Mrs. Van Horn was born Aug. 14, 1851, in Crawford County, Ill., and is the daughter of Henry M. and Laura E. (Barlow) Barlow. The father was a native of Crawford County, Ill., and the mother of Vermont. The parental household consisted of three children two of whom are now living.

WILLIAM EDGAR came to Nebraska three years ago, and immediately attached himself to the farming community of Cass County, having previously purchased a partly improved farm on section 25, Centre Precinct. He has brought his land to a good state of cultivation, and is continually making improvements. He raises both grain and stock, and is meeting with unqualified success.

Mr. Edgar was born in Northumberland County, Pa., Sept. 9, 1843, to Moses and Mary (Winner) Edgar. His father was a native of the Eastern States, although it is not known in which one he was born, as he died when our subject was a child. He spent his last years in Pennsylvania, where he was engaged as a weaver. To him and his wife were born fourteen children, eleven of whom grew to maturity. After his death his widow, who was a woman of much capability and energy, moved with her children to Wisconsin, thence to Illinois, and finally to Iowa, where the most of the family are now living.

He of whom we write was a lad of ten or more years when his mother moved to Wisconsin, and in Green County, that State, he obtained his education in the common schools, and was reared to a practical, useful life. A few years later the family moved to Ogle County, Ill., and he resided there until he came to this State. He has always followed farming, and had a good farm, which he had brought to a high state of cultivation. But in the spring of 1885 he sold all his property in that State to start anew in Cass County, Neb., having previously purchased this one. It was partly improved, but by his wise management and hard labor he has greatly increased its value, and has made many fine improvements. The past summer (1888) he erected a large and conveniently arranged barn, 36x44 feet in dimensions, with high posts, and well painted. Everything about the place is neat and orderly, denoting the practical, thrifty man in the owner. There is a good orchard and grove, and from the former Mr. Edgar already derives an income. He usually raises about sixty acres of corn and other small grains, the fertile soil yielding large harvests.

Mr. Edgar was married to Miss Mary Jane Vanderkar, Sept. 22, 1869. She was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., Sept. 14, 1850, and lived there until she was five years old, when she accompanied her parents to Ogle County, Ill. She there grew to womanhood, receiving from her good mother a careful training in all that goes to make a good housewife. She remained in the home of her parents until our subject claimed her assistance to build up another. Her father, Michael Vanderkar, was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., March 29, 1827, and was a son of John B. and Mary (Warrington) Vanderkar, natives of New York. His mother was a daughter of James Warrington, who came from England, and was a pioneer settler of Saratoga County. He improved and owned two farms, clearing them from the unbroken forest, and on one of them he lived and died, having his home on the banks of the beautiful Mohawk River. The father of Mrs. Edgar married Miss Adeline Vandercook, a daughter of Peter and Nancy (Filkins) Vandercook, and a resident of Saratoga County, which was also the place of his birth. He was a farmer by occupation, but later in life he retired from active labor, and died at his home in Cohoes. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderkar spent the early part of their married life in their native county. Later in life, about 1855, they removed with their family to Ogle County, Ill., where they still reside, he owning a valuable farm there. They have had nine children, seven of whom grew to maturity.

The shadow of a heavy grief has darkened the married life of our subject and his wife, in the death of four of the five children who have been born to them, Addie being the only one now living. Of the others the following is recorded: Blanche died Jan. 18, 1877, aged six years, six months and six days; Carrie died January 24, the same year, aged three years, twenty-four days; Lula died April 4, 1886, aged six years, eight months and twenty-eight days; Arthur, the only son, died Nov. 11, 1888, aged five years, eight months and twenty-seven days. The first two died of membranous croup. In this great bereavement Mr. and Mrs. Edgar do not sorrow without the hope that their darlings will be restored to them in a future and brighter life, and to them, in the beautiful words of the poet:

More homelike seems the vast unknown
 Since they have entered there;
 To follow them were not so hard,
 Wherever they may fare;
 They cannot be where God is not,
 On any sea or shore,
 Whate'er betides, Thy love abides,
 Our God, forevermore.

Mr. Edgar is a man of good understanding, keen and prompt, and, withal, honorable in his dealings. Although he has been a resident of this place but a comparatively short time, yet he has made a favorable impression upon the people by his manly, straightforward ways, and, with his wife, is justly regarded with feelings of respect and friendship by all in the community. He keeps well informed on the political issues of the day, and is decidedly in favor of the Republican party.

Mr. Edgar had three brothers in the Union Army—John, Reuben and Lazarus. John was killed at the battle of South Mountain; the other two were spared to return home, but broken down in health, as were so many of our bravest soldiers.

— — — — —

DANIEL G. MENDENHALL, an old settler of Stove Creek Precinct, is now numbered among its most successful farmers, and is one of its leading citizens. He is a son of Pennell and Mariah (West) Mendenhall, natives of Lancaster County, Pa., the father born April 27, 1811, and the mother May 17, 1811. Both his paternal and maternal grandfather were of English descent, and the former was a native of the Keystone State. His father passed his early years in the State of his nativity, and when a youth learned the shoemaker's trade. When a young man he went to Cleveland, Ohio, and was there married. He carried on shoemaking in that city a short time, and then moved to Indiana, and became one of the first settlers of Randolph County. He bought timber land there, improved a good farm of 140 acres, built up a nice home for himself and family, and was prosperously engaged in agriculture there until his death in 1871, at the age of sixty-eight years. His widow died in Indiana, in 1881, at the age of sixty-five years. They were active members of the Free-Will Baptist Church, and occupied a high position in the society of their community, where they were valued for their many good traits of character. They had eleven children, as follows: Jesse, Sarah, Joseph (deceased), James, Lydia, Susan, Daniel G., Eliza, Margaret, Ann (deceased), William. Joseph enlisted in the defense of the Union as a member of an Indiana regiment, went to the front, and in Tennessee died of diarrhoea. James enlisted in an Ohio regiment in 1861, served three years without a wound, and was honorably discharged in 1864.

Daniel G., the subject of this biographical notice, was born near Ridgeville, Randolph Co., Ind., July 7, 1846. He passed his early years on his father's farm, and in the winter seasons attended school. In February, 1865, when a youth of eighteen years, he enlisted in the 147th Indiana Infantry, was mustered in at Richmond, Ind., and with his regiment sent to join the Army of the Potomac in Virginia, but did not arrive in Richmond until Lee had surrendered. Our subject acted mostly as guard in the Shenandoah Valley, and was finally mustered out at Harper's Ferry, and discharged at Indianapolis, having shown himself to be possessed of the valor, patriotism, endurance and other qualities necessary to make a good soldier. After his military experience he went back to his father's farm, and worked for him until he attained his majority. He then rented the home farm for three years. In the fall of 1871 he determined to come farther West to build up for himself a home, and, coming to Nebraska City by rail, he came from there to Stove Creek Precinct, and bought the west eighty acres of the northeast quarter of section 25. He broke the land, built on it, improved and farmed it for two years, and then sold it, and purchased 160 acres on the northwest corner of the same section, from the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company. This was also wild prairie land, with not a tree on it. He broke the soil, set out a large grove of forest trees, six acres of orchard, containing 600 choice fruit trees, besides a vineyard and plenty of small fruits. He had to draw the timber for his first house from McKesick Island, in the Missouri River. He had not paid for the whole of his land when the grasshopper raid came, and for two years he was the only one who held on to railroad land in Stove Creek Precinct, the others having to leave, starvation staring them in the face. He pitted himself against the grasshopper, and, though these insects left nothing but the soil, his staying powers proved the stronger, and he won in the end, and has now much more than retrieved his losses. His farm is in a fine condition, and is one of the best appointed in the precinct, with a large, well-arranged house, good barns, corn cribs, windmill, tank, etc. It is well supplied with running water, and is willow hedged and wire fenced. It is admirably fitted for a stock farm, and he raises and feeds fine Durham cattle, full-blooded Poland-China hogs, with a thoroughbred sow, and he has three teams of graded horses.

The marriage that united our subject to Miss Jane Smithson, a native of Randolph County, Ind., took place Aug. 29, 1868, and of their pleasant wedded life seven children have been born, as follows: Rosetta B., born Aug. 21, 1869; Elizabeth F., Sept. 4, 1870; John W., May 7, 1872; Charley, born March 13, 1874, died May 22, 1874; Margaret A., born Oct. 10, 1875; William H., May 19, 1877; Frankie O. S., Nov. 27, 1884.

Mr. Mendenhall is a practical man, endowed with sufficient enterprise and tenacity of purpose to make him successful in whatever he undertakes. That he is an intelligent and skillful agriculturist is demonstrated by the appearance of his farm, with its well-tilled fields, and well-kept, finely graded stock. He stands high in the esteem of his fellow-citizens, who show their confidence in his ability and integrity by entrusting to him such responsible offices as the Supervisorship of the precinct, and electing him to a position on the School Board. He is influential in the councils of the Republican party of his locality, being a strong believer in the principles promulgated by that party. He has served as a jurymen. Religiously, he adheres to the doctrines of the Free-Will Baptist Church.

GEORGE W. GRIMES, who settled in Otoe County, Neb., in May, 1865, in McWilliams Precinct, and Sept. 20, 1869, moved to his present home, owns an extensive farm in Liberty Precinct, and is classed among the most substantial and well-to-do representative agriculturists of Cass County. His farm is supplied with good buildings and all the necessary improvements to make it one of the most desirable estates for many miles around. It comprises 380 acres of finely tilled land, which is distributed on different sections as follows: 140 on section 19, eighty acres on section 30, and 160 acres on section 17. It has living water on it and many other advantages, adapting it admirably to stock-raising or any other purpose to which the owner chooses to apply it.

Mr. Grimes was born in Howard County, Mo., Nov. 19, 1826. His father, Robert Grimes, was a native of what is now West Virginia, and a son of Aaron Grimes, a native of Ireland, who, coming to America prior to the Revolutionary War, cast in his lot with the struggling colonists and gallantly assisted them in obtaining their freedom from the mother country. After the war he settled in that part of Virginia now known as West Virginia, and there spent his remaining years, his wife preceding him to the grave. They had a large family of children, and Robert Grimes, father of our subject, was one of the youngest members of the family. He attained his majority in Randolph County, where was the home of his birth, and while yet a single man, accompanied by his elder brother George, he made his way to Kentucky, living there some years, near Lexington. His brother became a prominent man in public life, and represented either Bourbon or Clark County in the State Legislature for a number of terms. He was married, but died without children. Robert Grimes was married not far from Lexington, Ky., to Miss Temperance Swetman, a native of either Clark or Bourbon County where she was reared and lived until marriage, after which Mr. Grimes began life as a farmer in Kentucky. Subsequent to the birth of four children, he moved with his family to Howard County, Mo., and was among its earliest settlers, having arrived there in the fall of 1826. The Indians were numerous and troublesome at that time, and Mr. Grimes took an active part in suppressing their outrages during the various raids made by the savages. He had also been a patriotic soldier in the War of 1812, while he was still a resident of his native State, Virginia. Mr. Grimes later in life made another move, and with his wife and children settled in Randolph County, Mo., and began to farm in Prairie Township, and there he and his wife made a comfortable home. He served as Major of Militia in the Mormon War in Missouri at the time they were driven out of that State and located in Nauvoo, Ill. During the last part of their lives they moved to the northern part of the same county, where they both died, he at the age of sixty-three, Nov. 1, 1847, and she eight years later, when past sixty years old. They were members of the Christian Church, and their daily lives exemplified the beauties of its teachings.

Our subject was the first son and the fifth child in order of birth of the six sons and seven daughters born to his parents and of this large family all are living but two. He comes of a long-lived, hardy race, and inherits many of their independent, sturdy traits of character, that make him invaluable as a citizen and successful as a man. He was married in Randolph County, Mo., June 15, 1854, to Miss Nancy M. Goddard, a native of that county. She was born Feb. 10, 1834, and was a daughter of John G. and Talitha (Fipps) Goddard, now deceased, they having died in Randolph County. The father's death was tragic, for as he was standing on his own door-step he was shot by bushwhackers, Feb. 26, 1865. He was then over fifty years old. During the war he had stood on neutral ground. His first wife, the mother of Mrs. Grimes, ten years before his death had departed this life, and he had married a second time. He and his first wife were natives of Kentucky, but were married in Randolph County, Mo., to which county they had gone from Kentucky some years before. Mr. Goddard was a lifelong farmer. Mrs. Grimes was the eldest of a large family of children, and she was reared and educated in the county of her nativity. She is the mother of ten children, five of whom early passed to the great beyond, two of them being named Francis E. and George E. The other three died in infancy. The record of the living children is as follows: Talitha T. is the wife of E. M. Smith, a farmer of this precinct; Louvina is the wife of W. P. Comer, a farmer of this precinct; Mary A., Floreta and John E. are at home with their parents.

Mr. Grimes has not achieved success without hard labor, but his toils have been directed by a clear head and cool judgment. He is shrewd in his dealings, and his credit stands high in financial circles. He and his good wife are active members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Union Village, and he is an Elder. In politics he is a sound Democrat, and has been true to his party ever since he became a voter.

WILLIAM HENRY H. CASSEL is a practical farmer, who is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits on section 26, Weeping Water Precinct. He is the son of one of Nebraska's pioneers, his father, John Cassel, having been an early settler of Otoe County, where he evolved a valuable farm from the wild prairie near Nebraska City. Our subject was only a boy when he accompanied his parents to this State in 1856, but he may well be denominated a pioneer of Nebraska, not only for his share of the pioneer labor needed to improve his father's farm, but for the hard work that he has performed since coming here in developing his own farm from a state of nature, and thus materially assisting in advancing the agricultural interests of Cass County.

Our subject was born in Indiana, May 7, 1844, and there the first twelve years of his life were passed, and he gained the rudiments of his education in the public schools of his native State. His father was a native of South Carolina, and there lived until he had attained manhood. He then sought the wilds of Ohio, and was there married to Sarah Thomas, and with her valuable aid hewed out a farm from the forest-covered land. They subsequently moved to Indiana, and later to Nebraska, always keeping on the frontier, and again began the pioneer task of building up a home far from the haunts of civilization. On the tract of wild prairie not far from Nebraska City he improved a farm, and there spent his remaining years, dying in 1882. He left the record of a life of usefulness and good deeds, and his memory is respected by his early associates in pioneer days, and by later comers, as that of a just and upright man, whose kind hand was readily extended to them in times of trouble. He was an earnest Christian, and a member of the Baptist Church, as is also his esteemed wife, who still survives him. Of their wedded life twelve children were born, nine of whom lived to maturity.

Their son, of whom we write, was a strong and active boy of twelve years when they came to Nebraska, and thus it has been his privilege to witness the growth of the State, its upbuilding from the wild prairies, from which the buffalo, deer and antelope had not fled when he first came, and where the Indian still lingered. He can remember when Nebraska City was an insignificant trading-post with less than 100 habitations, and most of them of rude style of architecture, or of no architecture at all. In the early schools of that city he completed his education, and on his father's homestead he gained a good knowledge of agriculture. He remained an inmate of the parental household until 1871, when he came to Cass County and purchased the land comprised in his present farm of ninety-two acres, finely located on section 6, township 10, range 11, Weeping Water Precinct. From that cultivated prairie he has developed one of the most productive farms in this region, and every improvement has been the work of his own hand. He planted a lovely grove of forest trees that adds greatly to the attractiveness of his place; a good orchard, and small fruits in abundance. His farm is mostly fenced with hedge, and the buildings that he has erected are in good order, and look neat and substantial. He devotes his time principally to stock-raising, and his cattle, horses, and hogs of good grades, are always in fine condition, and bring good prices when thrown on the market. He makes a specialty of raising hogs, finding them very profitable. The first dwelling in which our subject lived on his land was the typical dugout of these Western States, which he built himself, and in which he for a time kept a bachelor's establishment until he could secure a more commodious residence. The following year, 1872, after making various improvements, he was married to Miss Sarah Emery, and she has cheerfully aided him in building up their present comfortable home. In this four children have been born to them, of whom three are still living, namely: Wayland, Lottie and Earl. Their son Harry died when one year old. Mrs. Cassel was born in Canada, and came to Nebraska with her parents. They settled near Tecumseh and lived there until lately, when they moved to Crab Orchard.

Mr. and Mrs. Cassel are members in good standing of the Baptist Church, of Wabash, and they earnestly and sincerely strive to live up to their professions. They are cordially liked in this community, and none know them but to respect them. Mr. Cassel votes with the Republican party, and always takes an intelligent interest in politics. He uses his influence to procure good educational facilities in this precinct, and has done good work for the cause while serving as Director on the School Board.

WILLIAM FRANS and his son R. H. are carrying on an extensive mercantile business in the town of Union, and they may well be classed among the leading merchants of this part of Cass County. Mr. Frans was one of the original settlers of Cass County, and during the first decade of the settlement of Nebraska he was one of its active pioneers. There are but few people now living in this State who visited it as early as he did, and saw it in all its primeval wildness, when it was the domain of the Indian, with scarcely a trace of civilization, and some time before its great possibilities were realized, or it was dreamed that it would one day become a powerful commonwealth, occupying a proud position as one of the States of the great American Union. The time of Mr. Frans' first visit here to which we refer was 1848. He was in the Government service, it being the last year of the Mexican War, when he, an adventurous, high-spirited youth of eighteen, crossed the Missouri River at Ft. Kearney, now Nebraska City, to enter the employ of the Government as teamster. The fort was then occupied by five companies of United States troops, known as the Oregon Battalion, that had been recruited in Missouri for service in the Mexican War if needed, and had been sent from Ft. Leavenworth, Kan., to take possession of the unoccupied post at Nebraska City. In the fall of that year old Ft. Kearney was finally abandoned, and the garrison moved to what was afterward known as new Ft. Kearney, in the southern portion of the State, on the Platte River. Our subject was engaged in hauling supplies to the new fort, making three trips during the year, and on the last one he went in a diagonal direction across the Territories from new Ft. Kearney to Ft. Leavenworth, where he was discharged from the service, having been in the Government employ just five months. He then returned to his home in Buchanan County, Mo., and remained there until 1851, when he took up a claim near Plum Hollow in Fremont County, Iowa, and made several improvements on his 80-acre tract of land, continuing to reside on it until 1854. He then crossed the Missouri River at a place known as Thompson Ferry, which he himself had managed in 1853, and found himself once again in the Territory of Nebraska, this time as a settler. He took up a claim where the old town of Rock Bluff was first laid out, and with his father-in-law and a son of the latter who had come with him, each of whom took up claims, paid the Indians a tribute of $13 for the privilege of being allowed to stay and not be molested, as those settlers who refused to pay the tribute exacted were run off by the natives to whom the land then belonged. Our subject and his kinsmen remained on their farms until 1862, and during that time had materially aided in building up the now defunct town of Rock Bluff, which was at that time a thriving little village, and one of the foremost in the county on the Missouri River. In 1862 Mr. Frans sold all his interests in the Territory, and again took up his abode in Buchanan County, Mo. While a resident of Nebraska he had engaged to some extent in freighting, and from the 17th of March, 1861, until Jan. 10, 1862, had made three trips to Denver on his own account. He afterward made two other trips across the plains, one to Denver, Col., and one to Jewelburg, Neb. Mr. Frans did not escape the vicissitudes of life in a pioneer country, and avers that it was desperately hard times for the pioneers in 1858 to 1861, and the only way to make money was to freight provisions across the plains, and at that business he was financially successful.

The early years of the life of our subject were passed in Meade County, Ky., on the banks of the Ohio River, where he was born March 1, 1831. His father, Tazwell Frans, was a Virginian by birth, and spent the first few years of his life in the Old Dominion, but while he was still a boy his parents, likewise natives of Virginia, moved from there to Kentucky and settled among the pioneers of that State. They built a home in Meade County, and there John Frans and his wife, the grandparents of our subject, passed away, full of years, leaving the blessed memory of well-spent lives. They were Missionary Baptists in their religious faith, and held tenaciously to the tenets of their church. The father of our subject grew to manhood in his father's home on the beautiful banks of the Ohio, and there he and Ruan Hardin united their lives for better or for worse, and began their wedded life on a farm in that vicinity. Mrs. Frans was a relative of the celebrated Ben Hardin. The most of their family were born there, and in 1844 they migrated to Missouri and settled in what was commonly called Platte Purchase, being the northwest corner of the State of Missouri. Their remaining years were passed there, the father dying in 1864, in the opening month of the year, and the mother preceding him in death six months before, having died in July, 1863, and they were both aged sixty-three years. They were of the Baptist faith, and were strictly honorable, upright people. Of the sixteen children, eight sons and eight daughters, born of their marriage, thirteen lived to marry and settle in life, and twelve are yet living.

Our subject, who was the fourth child of that large family, was a lad of fourteen years when he accompanied his parents to their new home in Missouri. We have seen that two or three years later he started out in the world for himself, and have traced his life to his return to Buchanan County, and we will now resume the thread at that point. After his return from the mountains he left Nebraska in 1862 and went to Buchanan County, Mo. He there turned his attention to farming, which occupation he laid aside awhile in 1864, at the call of duty, to enlist with the State troops for the protection of the State. He was in the service for seven months, and was then honorably discharged without having taken part in any battles. He continued to reside in Buchanan and DeKalb Counties until 1884. In the latter county he sold his interests and in the year just mentioned returned to Nebraska, and in Factoryville, this county, entered into the mercantile business with his son R. H., who had established himself there the year before. They continued to conduct their business in Factoryville until October, 1887, when they moved their stock of goods to this point, regarding the location as more favorable for their trade. They have a new and commodious store, 36x40 feet in dimensions, with a wareroom at the rear, 20x16 feet, a fine basement beneath the whole, and a comfortable tenement above. They carry about $10,000 worth of stock, and have an annual sale of about $20,000 of general merchandise, having to supply all the country trade for miles around. The post-office is also in the store, and R. H. Frans has held the position of Postmaster for several years, while our subject is Deputy Postmaster. Mr. Frans is a staunch Democrat, and takes an active interest in local and National politics. He is a man of honor, who is cordially liked by all with whom he has dealings, and his credit stands high in the commercial world. He is a man of deep religious feelings, and has been for years Deacon of the Baptist Church, of which his wife and all but their three youngest children are also valued members.

Mr. Frans and Miss Rebecca Spiers were united in marriage in Buchanan County, Mo. Mrs. Frans is a native of Ohio, born in Coshocton County, Sept. 9, 1835, and is a daughter of Benedict and Ruphena (Rife) Spiers. They were natives of Germany, born near the famous Rhine, where they were reared and married. Soon after the latter event they came to America and located in Ohio, where Mr. Spiers carried on farming and milling, being a professional miller. In 1843 the family made their way to Buchanan County, Mo., and there Mr. Spiers was engaged as a miller for some time. In 1854 he and his family came to Nebraska, and settled in Rock Bluff Precinct. In 1875 he left his Cass County home, and with his wife and son moved to Kansas, and settled in Smith County, where they are yet living, the parents both being past eighty years of age. Mrs. Frans was quite young when her parents moved to Missouri, and there she completed her education. Of her marriage with our subject eleven children have been born, all of whom are living, and the following is recorded of them: Augustus lives in DeKalb County as a merchant, and he married Clara Jones; R. H., in business with his father, married Jennie Fitch; Charles W., a farmer in Wyoming Precinct, Otoe County, married Belle Fitch for his second wife, his first wife having died some years ago; Florilda is the wife of Joseph Sands, a farmer near old Rock Bluff Village; Rosanna is the wife of Robert Cogdill, a farmer of Factoryville; Isabel is the wife of Dr. M. L. Thomas, a physician of Union; Betsy is the wife of Wyatt Hutchinson, a farmer in Rock Bluff Precinct; Lavinia is the wife of William W. Wolfe, a blacksmith at Union; Colmore R. is a clerk in the store, and lives at home; Harry is also at home, and a clerk in the drug-store of Dr. Thomas; Emma is at home.

CHARLES A. WEBSTER, proprietor of the leading jewelry and book store of Weeping Water, also carries a fine line of stationery and fancy goods, and is transacting a large and lucrative business. The house was established in the winter of 1881-82, first as a jewelry store, and was the first of its kind in the place. It has grown gradually from a modest beginning, and enjoys a constantly increasing patronage. Mr. Webster is a thorough business man, a master jeweler, and numbered among the stirring and enterprising men of his community.

Our subject was born in Batavia, N. Y., March 18, 1840, and lived there until a lad twelve years of age. He then accompanied his widowed mother to Oberlin, Ohio, and four years later, in 1856, to Mills County, Iowa. He was a resident of the Hawkeye State until after the outbreak of the Rebellion, and on the 12th of August, 1862, he proffered his services as a Union soldier, enlisting in Company K, 29th Iowa Infantry, as a private. He was soon promoted to Sergeant. His regiment was made a part of the Western Army, and operated mostly in Arkansas and Louisiana. Mr. Webster participated in many of the important battles of that period, including the fights at Helena, Elkinsford, Poison Springs, Camden, Jenkins' Ferry, the siege of Spanish Fort, and numerous other engagements and skirmishes. He escaped unharmed, and at the expiration of his term of service was mustered out at New Orleans, Aug. 10, 1865, and reached home the first week in September following.

Mr. Webster now began his business career at Tabor, Fremont Co., Iowa, where he first carried on farming and then engaged in general merchandising a period of five years. Selling out in January, 1876, and coming to this county, he first purchased 160 acres of land in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and occupied this farm until 1881. He effected some excellent improvements, and added later to his original purchase, providing the whole with good fences, and setting out an apple orchard and trees of the smaller fruits, putting up buildings, and generally adding to the value of the property. In the year mentioned he sold out, and invested a portion of his capital in his present enterprise. He is a man who gives his strict attention to his business, meddling very little with politics, otherwise than giving his decided support to the principles of the Republican party. He was one year persuaded to accept the office of Alderman, and frequently serves as School Director in his district.

Mr. Webster was married in Iowa, Nov. 13, 1862, to Miss Jerusha S. Reed, of Tabor, and they became the parents of four children, only three of whom are living, namely: Ellen L. S., Charles E. and William. They are all at home with their parents, and are being trained and educated in a manner which shall make of them worthy members of the community. Mrs. Webster was born in Gustavus County, Ohio, in 1842, and is the daughter of Augustus and Serena (Hutchins) Reed, who were natives of Connecticut, and the father for many years was one of the prominent farmers of the Buckeye State. About 1853 he removed to Iowa, engaging in business at Tabor. Later, coming to Nebraska, he took up his residence in Weeping Water Precinct, and died about 1881. He was one of the earliest pioneers of Washington County, Iowa. Mrs. Reed is still living, making her home in Weeping Water with her son.

William H. Webster, the father of our subject, was born in Connecticut, and received a thorough education, being graduated from Yale College. Later he took up the study of medicine, completing his medical course in one of the New York hospitals. He commenced the regular practice of his profession at Batavia, N. Y., and during a period of eight years accumulated a fortune while still a young man. He possessed unbounded energy in the duties of his calling, and labored beyond his strength, in fact, working himself to death, departing hence while in his prime, about 1842. He had married Miss Victoria Bowen, of Fall River, Mass., and they became the parents of four children, the youngest of whom died after the death of the father. The mother subsequently came to the West, and spent her last years in Kansas with her daughter, dying about 1869.

HENRY SCHOMAKER. Among the practical and thrifty farmers of Avoca Precinct who have made a specialty of stock-raising, the subject of this sketch occupies a good position and is quite an extensive property holder, being the owner of a fine farm of 320 acres on sections 1 and 14. The greater part of the land is in productive condition, well watered, and with good buildings. The whole forms a pleasant picture of country life, and suggests the idea of plenty and comfort where it would seem that that rare article—happiness—might contentedly abide.

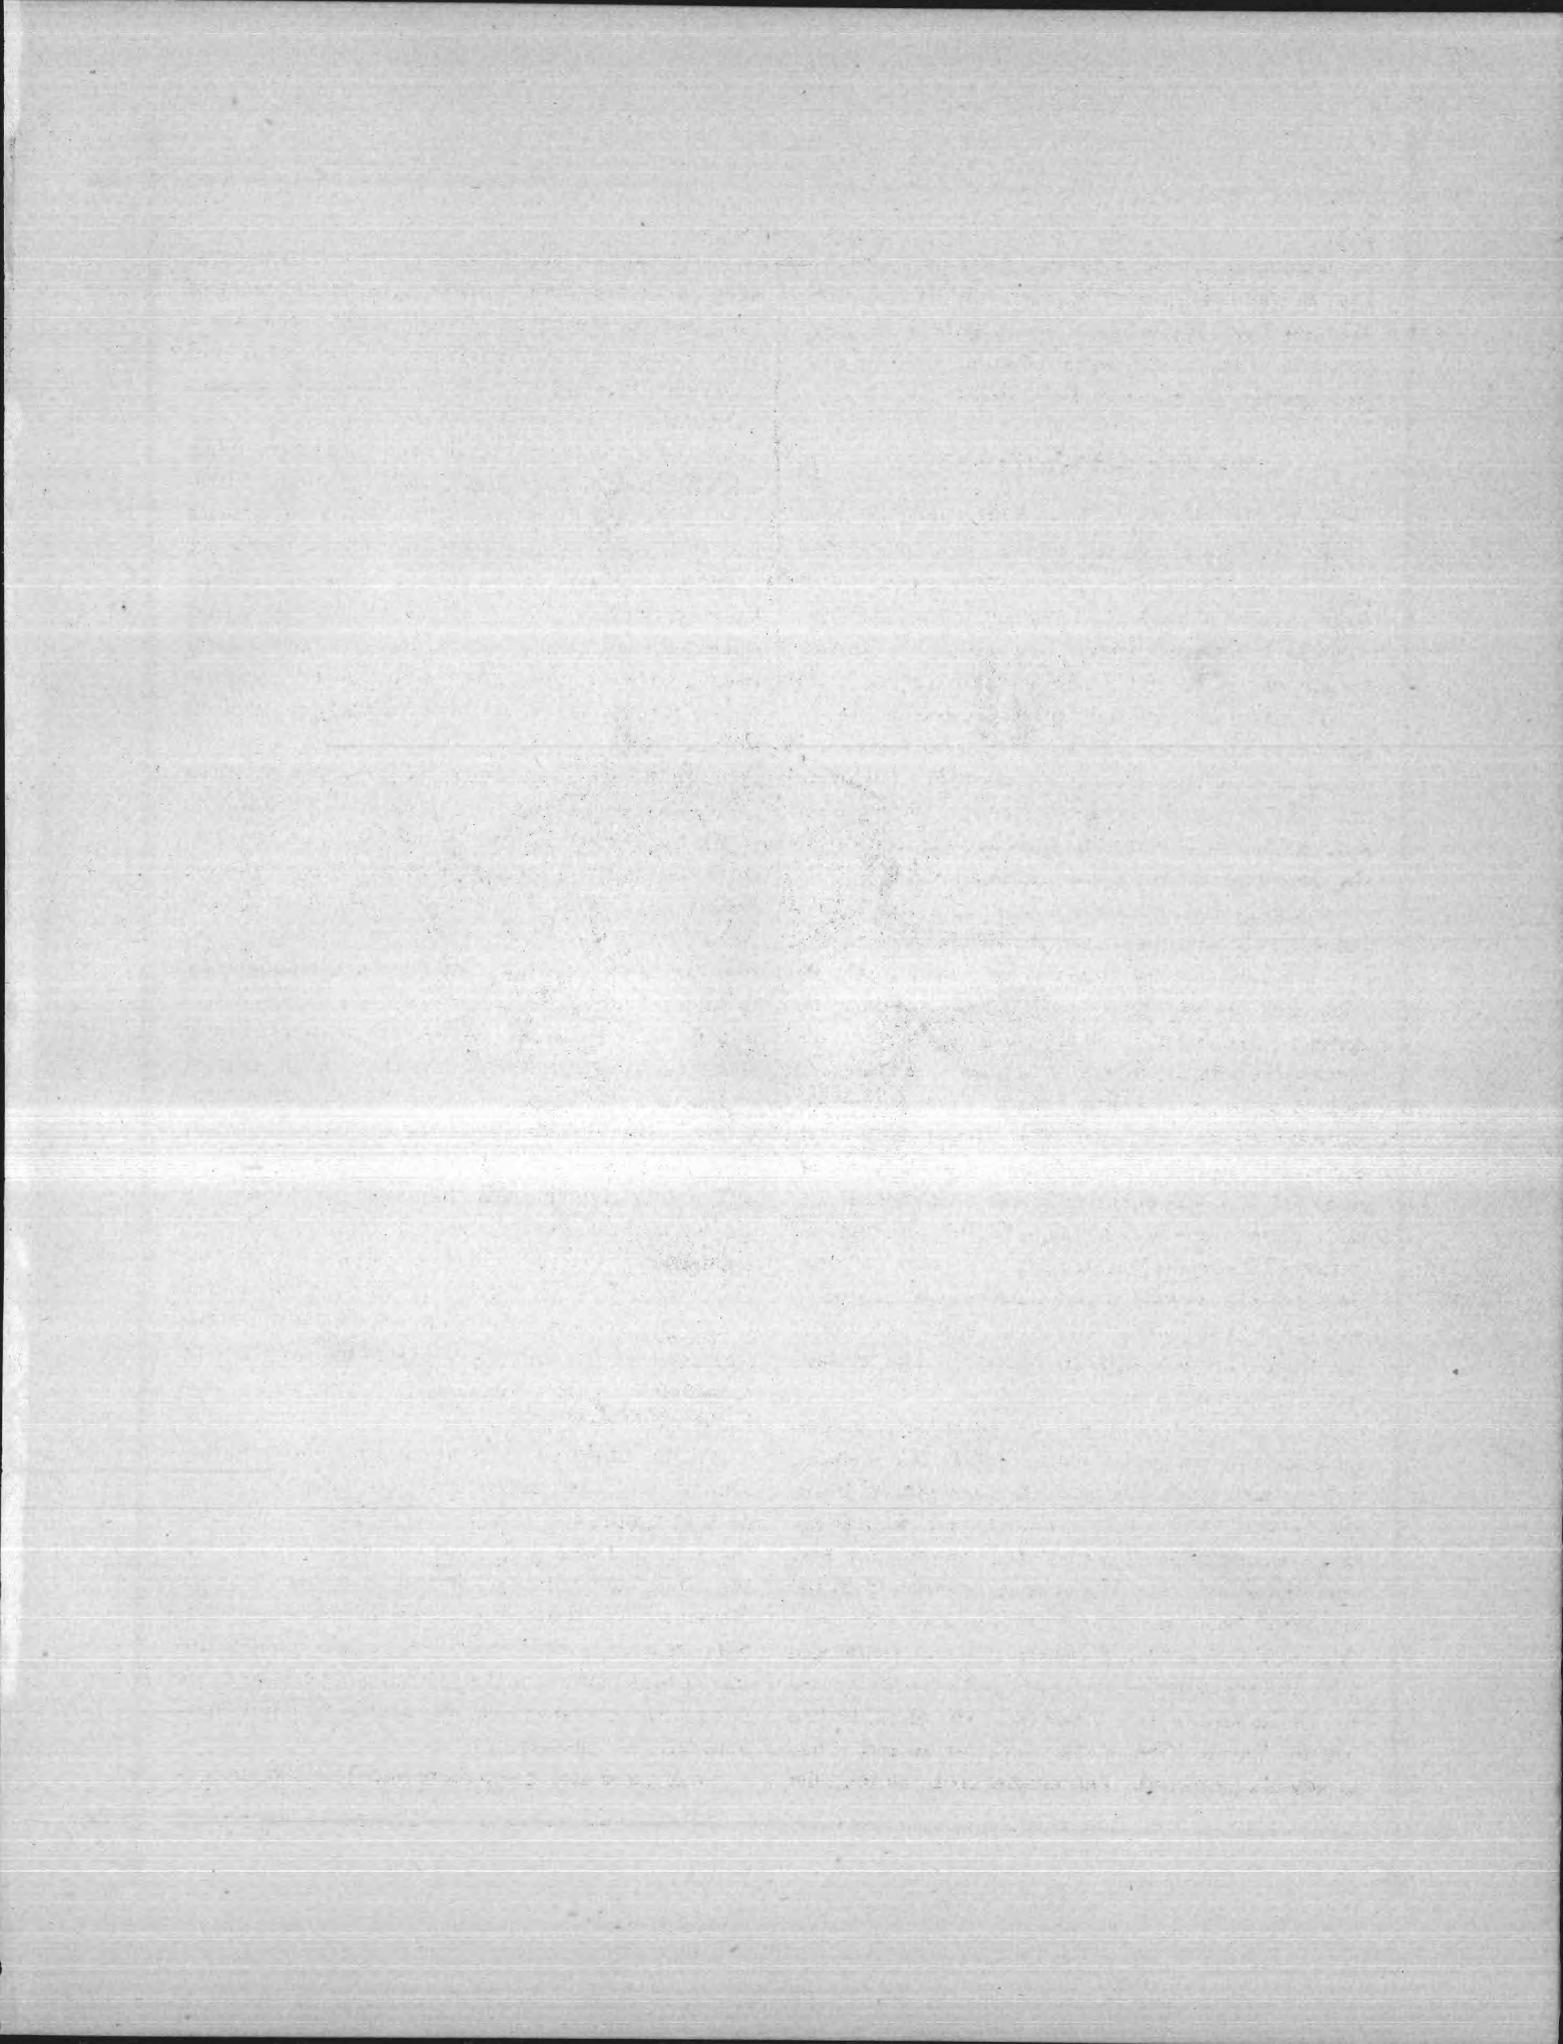

Mr. Schomaker may properly be numbered among the self-made men of Southern Nebraska, having come here comparatively without means, and commenced in a modest way to build up a home and a competence. His first purchase was 160 acres of land, to which he has added by degrees, and such has been his career both as a thorough farmer and a reliable citizen, that he occupies an enviable position socially and financially. He has been a resident of Avoca Precinct since the summer of 1871. In June of that year he crossed the water from the Fatherland with his mother and other members of the family, all of whom settled in this locality, where they now have comfortable homes. They are not ashamed to admit that they were as poor as "church mice" when they landed in the United States, and their career has been an admirable illustration of the result of perseverance, industry and honesty. There are now no more highly respected residents in the county than the family of Schomakers.

A native of the Duchy of Sleswick-Holstein, the subject of this sketch was born Sept. 7, 1851, and is the third child and second son of Peter and Anna C. (Lau) Schomaker, who are both now deceased; the father died in his native Germany in 1849, at the age of fifty-nine. He is remembered by his sons as a kind-hearted, honest and intelligent man, one whose lot in life it was to be poor in purse and who made his living by hard labor. The mother after the death of her husband came to America with her four younger children, namely: Henry (our subject), Christian, Margarette and Herman. They settled in Avoca Precinct, where the sons contributed to the support of the mother, and where they all lived together until her death, July 25, 1880; she was then fifty-nine years of age. Both parents were members of the German Lutheran Church.

Mr. Schomaker, our subject, landed in America about the time of reaching his majority, and later found a bride in Avoca Precinct, being married, Dec. 20, 1877, to Miss Minnie Carsten. This lady was born in Cass County, this State, Sept. 20, 1861, and is the daughter of Frederick and Sarah (Storm)

yours truly
W. H. Pickens

Dec. 8, 1869, and Albert A., Oct. 14, 1871. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wetenkamp are members in good standing of the Presbyterian Church, and our subject, politically, is a solid Republican.

JAMES SEARS. Among the men of note and public-spirited citizens of Tipton Precinct, this gentleman occupies a position in the front ranks. Although not an old resident, he has become widely and favorably known on account of his enterprise and intelligence. He is well educated and well informed, and in all respects a citizen calculated to assist in the social and moral advancement of his community. He owns and operates a well-regulated farm of 160 acres on section 36, and makes a specialty of live stock, shipping one or two carloads annually.

In noting the career of a man who has raised himself to a prominent and worthy position in life, it is the most natural thing in the world to glance backward at the place and people whence he sprang. Mr. Sears is of an excellent family; his parents were both natives of the Empire State, his father, James, Sr., born in Orange County, and the mother, in her girlhood Miss Hester Rutan, in Sullivan County. The paternal grandfather, also named James, was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., and moved later to Chenango County, during the period of its earliest settlement. He cleared a farm, established a sawmill, accumulated a good property, and lived to the advanced age of eighty-six years. He traced his ancestry to Ireland. The Rutans were of German descent.

The father of our subject was reared to manhood on a farm in his native county, and upon starting out for himself in life took up his abode in Sullivan County, N. Y., where he engaged extensively in agriculture, and like his father before him, also operated a sawmill. He became prominent in the affairs of Sullivan County, represented his township in the Board of Supervisors many years, and after the organization of the Republican party was one of its most active members. He departed this life in March, 1888, at the old homestead, when ninety-six years old. The mother had preceded her aged partner only a few weeks, dying in February of that year, at the age of seventy-eight. She was a good woman in the highest sense of the term, and a conscientious member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

To the parents of our subject there were born ten children, namely: Margaretta, Abigail, Elizabeth, Isaac, Deborah, James, Mary, Alfred, Charles and William. Charles died when about thirty-six years old. James, of our sketch, was born at Phillipsport, Sullivan Co., N. Y., April 15, 1838, and remained a member of his father's household until twenty-six years old, assisting in the employments of the farm, and for two or three years worked on the Delaware & Hudson Canal. He was married, Sept. 7, 1865, to Miss Lucretia Crossman, a native of his own county, and a lady of fine education.

Mr. Sears soon after his marriage purchased 100 acres of partially improved land in Sullivan County, N. Y., upon which he operated seven years. There was a blue stone quarry in the county, which promised excellent results to any man who could work it understandingly, and of this Mr. Sears determined to become the possessor. He accordingly sold his farm and invested a portion of his capital in the quarry, which he began working, and shipping the product thereof to the various cities East. The young State of Nebraska, however, seemed to offer better inducements than even the blue stone quarry, and accordingly, selling out once more he crossed the Mississippi, and a few weeks later we find him settled on a farm in Otoe Precinct, Otoe County, this State, which he conducted until the spring of 1882, when he changed his residence to this county, purchasing the farm which he now occupies.

All the improvements which we behold to-day around the Sears homestead were effected by the present proprietor. The fences are all of his building and the forest and fruit trees of his own planting. The land is finely watered by a branch of the Nemaha. In addition to his cattle and horses Mr. Sears is considerably interested in full-blooded Poland-China swine. His farming operations are carried on in that systematic manner which is characteristic of the man.

To Mr. and Mrs. Sears there were born two daugh-

Carsten, the father a native of Mecklenburg, Germany, and the mother of Elsass. They emigrated to the United States about 1850, coming to Nebraska and settling in Otoe County, where the father died July 23, 1883, when ripe in years. He had been a good citizen and a successful farmer, and at his death left his wife and three children a good property. They are all living, the mother making her home with her son, Louis Carsten, in Berlin Precinct, Otoe County, and being now about fifty years of age.

Mrs. Schomaker was reared to womanhood in Cass County, and remained a member of the parental household until her marriage. She is now the mother of three children, viz: Frederick, Bertha and Eda. In politics Mr. Schomaker is a staunch Republican, and both he and his excellent wife are members in good standing of the Lutheran Church.

WILLIAM WETENKAMP, who is well and favorably known throughout Plattsmouth Precinct and vicinity, is numbered among its most successful German farmers, possessing all the industry and perseverance of a substantial ancestry. A native of Hanover, Germany, he was born while it was under the rule of its own King, Dec. 29, 1833, and was there educated and reared to man's estate. His parents were Albert H. and Margaret (Schwers) Wetenkamp, and spent their entire lives upon their native soil. They were of pure German stock.

To the parents of our subject there were born eight children, seven of whom are in the United States. William emigrated to America in the spring of 1857, when a young man in the twenty-fourth year of his age, crossing the ocean on the sailing vessel "Republic," and after a voyage of twenty-seven and one-half days landed in New York City. Thence he proceeded to Wisconsin, settling near Manitowoc, where he lived two years, and engaged in milling. Then he came to Nebraska Territory, and commenced working by the month on a farm in Cass County. He was thus employed for two years, and then was given the post of overseer of a train of twenty-five wagons, and began freighting to Denver and the mountains, being thus employed a period of seven years.

The wild frontier experience of Mr. Wetenkamp is one which he will remember vividly all his life. The Indians were numerous and troublesome, and Mr. Wetenkamp and his men were often obliged to skirmish with them in order to protect their goods and animals. He withdrew from this contract with a reasonable amount of money. His homestead embraces 400 acres, which he has brought to a fine state of cultivation, erecting thereon substantial modern buildings, and gathering about him the comforts and conveniences required by the progressive agriculturist. He has besides this 240 acres of prairie land, and fifteen acres of valuable timber.

Mr. Wetenkamp came to this county without means. His career is an admirable illustration of what may be accomplished by perseverance and industry. It has taken years of labor and thousands of dollars to bring his farm to its present condition. The handsome brick residence now occupied by the family was put up in the summer of 1879, at a cost of $4,000, and among his other buildings is a brick structure for the purpose of packing meat, and which proves an admirable repository for this product. The corn cribs, cattle sheds and improved farm machinery, with the herds of cattle and swine, and the fat horses always associated with the thrifty German farmer, give to the homestead that air of comfort and plenty which is delightful to contemplate.

Our subject usually raises about twenty-five head of cattle annually, and feeds upon an average fifty head for market. He also keeps a herd of about 100 hogs, and feeds to his stock most of the grain raised upon his farm. His labors and struggles have been shared by one of the most estimable of ladies, who in her girlhood was Miss Mary Long, and to whom he was married in this township, July 8, 1868. Mrs. Wetenkamp is the daughter of S. I. and Elizabeth Long, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Of her union with our subject there have been born three children, one of whom, Elmer W. died at the age of six years in 1880. The survivors are: Grant, born ters and one son, namely: Bertha M., Olive L. and Elmer. Bertha is the wife of Joseph H. Clapp, a well-to-do farmer of Tipton Precinct, this county; they have two children, Leslie and an infant unnamed. The other daughter is at home with her parents, as is their son Elmer. Mr. and Mrs. Sears are members in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. S., politically, votes the straight Republican ticket, as have all the male members of the family so far as he has any record of them. He takes satisfaction in the thought that he cast his first Presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. He frequently has been sent as a delegate to the various State and County Conventions, has served on the Petit and Grand Juries, and is a man of decided views, whose opinions are generally respected, as they are the outgrowth of his honest convictions.

WILLIAM H. PICKENS has for some years actively promoted the growth of Platts-mouth in his capacity of contractor and builder, he ranking among the first in that business in Cass County. He has been very successful in pursuit of his vocation since coming here, and has accumulated much property, from which he derives a good income.

Mr. Pickens is a worthy descendant of an honorable ancestry, some of whose representatives have been prominent in the public life of this country. He is a native of Ireland, although of Scotch parentage, and his birth took place in the city of Belfast, July 4, 1848. His parents, Arthur and Ann (Clark) Pickens, were natives of Glasgow and Edinburgh, Scotland, respectively. His paternal grandfather, Andrew Pickens, was born in Berks County, Pa., as was also his great-grandfather, Gen. Andrew Pickens. The latter took an active part in the American Revolution, and was one of the youngest and bravest of the Generals under Washington. He distinguished himself in the battles of Cowpens, Eutaw Springs, Thickety Creek and Ft. Harrison. After the war he was elected to Congress from South Carolina, and served with distinction in that body. He was of French parentage, and went to the home of his fathers, loaded with years and honors, to die. His wife was a sister of Senator Carr, of South Carolina. The grandfather of our subject grew to manhood and married in his native State, and then crossed the water to Scotland and settled in Glasgow, where he worked at his trade of stonemason, and there died. His son Arthur, father of our subject, was reared in his native city, and in his youth learned the trade of weaver. Some years after marriage he moved to Belfast, Ireland, where he operated a linen factory until his death in 1849. His wife survived him but a few years, dying in Belfast in 1857. There were four children born of their marriage: Lucy married John Adams, and lives in Belfast; Margaret married R. C. Montgomery, and lives in Chicago; John, who was an engineer, was killed in a collision in California in March, 1888.

The other son, the subject of this notice, was one year old when he was deprived of a father's care, and was nine years old when the sad event of his mother's death left him an orphan. In March, 1858, he accompanied his brother and sister to this country, and as soon as he arrived went to live with Lyman Trumbull in Hyde Park, Ill. He made his home with that gentleman until he was fifteen, and then commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, serving three years, and acquiring a thorough, practical knowledge of his work in all its details, as he had a natural aptitude for handling tools. He subsequently did journeywork for a year, and then established himself as a contractor and builder, with one shop in Chicago and another in Hyde Park. He continued in business in those places until November, 1873, and on the thirteenth day of that month he enlisted for five years as a soldier in the regular army, becoming a member of Company E, 5th United States Cavalry. He thus had an opportunity to see the greater part of our western territory, and became quite familiar with the great plains, from British America on the north to the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and from the Mississippi on the east to the Rocky Mountains on the west, as he was at different times stationed in Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana, Dakota, Utah, Nevada and Texas; and he also saw something of the Pacific Coast, as he was at one time stationed in California. He met with many stirring adventures, and one listens to him with pleasure as he recounts tales of his soldier life. He was with Gen. Crook in Dakota at the time of the terrible Custer massacre, and his regiment was at the same time under orders from Gen. Sheridan to march for the place where the massacre occurred, at the junction of the Big Horn and Little Big Horn Rivers. While they were encamped on Rosebud Creek the only survivor of Custer's command came into camp and announced the direful fate that had befallen the beloved and gallant commander and his men. Two days later our subject and his comrades were on the battlefield, where they took up the Indian trail to Yellowstone River. While on that expedition the soldiers had lived fourteen days on horse meat, without any salt for savor. In 1874 Mr. Pickens took part in the battle of Tonto Creek, Ariz., and after the battle was promoted to the rank of Corporal by order of Gen. Crook, for personal merit and bravery in action. In 1877 he was on the Wind River expedition, under Gen. Wesley Merritt, and in the month of July he received promotion to the office of Sergeant, and also served as Quartermaster-Sergeant and Sergeant-Major. While in the army he was with his regiment in all of its marches and engagements, and took part in more than fifty encounters with the Indians. At the expiration of his term of service he was discharged at Ft. McKenney, Wyo., and returned to Chicago in November of the same year. The December following found him in Omaha, and in July, 1879, he came to Plattsmouth from that city, and at once established himself in his business as contractor and builder. In 1879 he bought a lot in a desirable residence portion of the city, and in 1881 erected the neat and commodious dwelling in which he and his family make their home. In 1883 he bought more land, and built another house, and since then has erected three other residences in Vallery's Addition. He now owns five houses, several vacant lots, and ten acres of improved land with buildings, joining the city.

Mr. Pickens was married, Oct. 12, 1880, to Miss Emma A. DeSpain, and their pleasant home is gladdened by the presence of two children—William Edward and Janetta. Their son Arthur John died at the age of six months. Mrs. Pickens was born in McDonough County, Ill., a daughter of William J. DeSpain, who was born in Green County, Ky., March 19, 1812. His father, Peter DeSpain, whose birthplace is unknown, was of French ancestry. He was a Revolutionary soldier, serving under Washington, and after the war he settled in Kentucky, and was a pioneer of Green County, where he cleared a farm from the wilderness, and there his days were lengthened out far beyond Scriptural limits, one hundred years having passed before his vigorous constitution yielded to death. Mrs. Pickens' father grew to manhood in his native county, and there learned the trade of carriage and wagon maker. He went to Illinois when a young man, and located near Decatur, where he plied his trade. Later he was a resident of Sangamon and McDonough Counties. In 1855 he moved to Schuyler County, Mo., and buying a tract of wild land there, devoted most of his time to its improvement, living there until 1860. He next made his home in Iowa for four years, and then became identified with the business interests of Plattsmouth, erecting a shop here and following his trade for awhile. He was elected Police Judge in 1876, and was re-elected in 1877, dying while still an incumbent of that office, Dec. 22, 1877, being the date of his death. He was an incorruptible Judge, and his sterling worth made him an invaluable citizen, whose death was a severe blow to the community.

The maiden name of William DeSpain's wife was Janetta Eaton, and she was born in Woodford County, Ky., Oct. 31, 1815. Her father, George H. Eaton, was born in the same county, and his father, Joseph Eaton, was a descendant of one of three brothers who came from England in the "Mayflower." He was one of the first settlers of Woodford County, Ky., where he improved a farm and spent his last years, dying at the age of eighty-seven years. The grandfather of Mrs. Pickens was reared and married in Kentucky, and in 1830 moved with a team to Illinois, and became a pioneer of Macon County. He settled five miles from Decatur, and three years later his death occurred in his new home. The maiden name of his wife was Mary Shannon, and she was a Pennsylvanian by birth. Her father, Joseph Shannon, was a European, who, coming to America, settled in Pennsylvania, and during the war of the Revolution served in the Continental Army as teamster. He subsequently became a pioneer of Woodford County, Ky., and there died. Mrs. Pickens' mother was left a widow with ten children by the premature death of her husband, but she bravely toiled for their sakes, and kept them together until they were grown and able to care for themselves. She passed her last years peacefully in the homes of her children in Sangamon County. There were ten children born to Mrs. Pickens' parents, all of whom grew to maturity, namely: Augustus S., Mary F., Oscar H., Columbus, Amanda, Eliza, Albert, Emma, Nettie and Belle. Oscar served in the late war as a member of a Missouri regiment.

Mr. Pickens is a man of calm, clear intelligence, just and generous in his treatment of others, and his force and stability of character commend him to those with whom he associates as one to be relied upon in any and all cases. A fine portrait of Mr. Pickens is given on an accompanying page.

ISAAC N. WOLF, Assessor of Greenwood Precinct, is also numbered among its steady-going and well-to-do farmers, and represents a good property lying on sections 34, 11 and 9. A man beginning life at the foot of the ladder, he has made a good record, struggling amid the difficulties which fall to the common lot of man, and better than all, has gained the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens. His snug home is suggestive of peace and comfort, without any pretensions to elegance, and it is quite possible that the inmates enjoy life's blessings in as large a degree as many others who are possessed of a greater amount of land and gold. Aside from his present office, Mr. Wolf has been quite prominent in public affairs, and is a man enjoying in a marked degree the good-will of those around him.

Mr. Wolf comes from excellent Pennsylvania stock, his parents, Martin and Elizabeth (Clouse) Wolf, being natives of the Keystone State. They removed, before their marriage, to Ashland County, Ohio, settling in Lake Township on a farm, where the subject of this sketch was born Aug. 7, 1839. Martin Wolf was a carpenter by trade, but was also fond of farming pursuits, which he followed almost exclusively the latter part of his life. From Ohio the family finally removed, in 1855, to Indiana, and thence a few years later they came to Nebraska, where the death of the father took place in Greenwood Precinct, in March, 1877, when he was seventy-five years old. The mother is still living, and makes her home with her daughter, Mary S. Wolf, in Greenwood Precinct. She is now aged eighty-three, one of the oldest ladies in the place. The parental household included nine children, all of whom are living, making their homes mostly in Nebraska. They are named respectively: George W., Jacob, John C., Elizabeth, Martin V., Isaac N. (our subject), Mary S., William S. and Eliza, deceased.

Mr. Wolf accompanied his parents in their removal to Indiana and Nebraska, and in Michigan made the acquaintance of Miss Margaret Ann Clouse, to whom he was married in Dover Township, Lenawee Co., Mich. Mrs. Wolf is the daughter of Jacob and Barbara (Wolford) Clouse, who were natives respectively of New Jersey and Ohio. In the latter State Mrs. Wolf lived until a girl of twenty-one years of age, then removed with her parents to Michigan. Mr. Clouse was considerable of a traveler, delighting in going from one place to another and learning what he could of different sections of the country. The family were afterward residents of Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska. Mr. C. died at the home of our subject, in this State, Dec. 20, 1884, when eighty-two years old. The mother had died some years before, aged forty-five.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wolf lived for a time at Clayton, Mich., where Mr. W. was in the employ of the Michigan Southern Railroad Company a period of three years. In the spring of 1869 he came to this county and homesteaded eighty acres of land in Greenwood Precinct. Their first dwelling was a box house, in which they lived in a style similar to the people around them until they could do better. The plodding industry of Mr. Wolf in time resulted in the cultivation of the greater part of his land, of which he still retains possession. He has been a man more than ordinarily public-spirited and liberal, uniformly willing to assist by the best means in his power the projects calculated for the good of the community around him. He is a staunch Republican, politically, and is serving his third term as Assessor. In 1880 he was the Census Taker of Greenwood Precinct, and has frequently served on the Petit Jury. He has been active in the councils of his party in this section of the county, and frequently been sent as a delegate to its various conventions. Upon the organization of his school district he was chosen a Director, serving as such many years. He organized the second school in his precinct. In religious matters, both he and his estimable wife belong to the Free-Will Baptist Church. They have two children only, Mary E. and Nancy L., who continue under the home roof.

JOHAN M. LLOYD is a practical farmer and stock-raiser of Liberty Precinct, and he is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits on a fine farm of 160 acres on section 34. It is well located and has on it an elegant residence, very commodious and comfortable, beautifully situated on a knoll overlooking a fine scope of country.

Our subject is a native of Lycoming County, Pa., his birth having occurred March 8, 1857. His father, Edward Lloyd, was a native and lifelong resident of the same State, his death occurring when our subject was a boy eleven years old. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Montgomery, is still living, and is a very intelligent, thoughtful woman of less than threescore years.

J. M. and his twin brother, Harrison W., a farmer in Liberty Precinct, are the youngest but one of the members of the family. His brother is a married man, having taken as a wife Risa Bingham, of Pennsylvania. He of whom we write was carefully reared by his mother, and was partly educated in his native State. He was a self-reliant lad, of more than ordinary push and intelligence, and when fifteen years of age came to Nebraska, making his home in Otoe County the first year.

He was in the employ of the Government as a star route agent between Nebraska City and Ashland, Neb. He was later engaged as a cattle herder for some time, and finally took up his home in Liberty. He was subsequently married in Liberty Precinct at the home of his bride, Mrs. Maria R. Compton, nee Reed. She was born in Fountain County, Ind., Nov. 7, 1846, being a daughter of Hiram and Sarah A. (Lyon) Reed. Her father is now deceased, having died at Covington, Fountain Co., Ind., in December, 1883, at the age of sixty-four. Mrs. Reed is yet residing in Covington, and, although sixty-nine years old, is still hale and hearty. Hiram Reed was a native of Pennsylvania, and came of a good old Pennsylvanian family. He was a farmer, and when a young man went to Indiana to pursue his calling, and he was there married, his wife coming from Ohio, her native State. Mrs. Lloyd, of this notice, was reared in Fountain County, and received an excellent education, which well fitted her for the vocation of teacher, which she followed with success a short time before her marriage, in her native county, to John Compton, also a native of Fountain County, he having been born near Hillsboro in July, 1846. He was a son of Terry and Mary Compton, who are still living in Fountain County in the enjoyment of a serene old age, having retired from active life as farmers. Immediately after marriage Mr. and Mrs. Compton made a trip to this State and settled on the farm in Liberty Precinct, Mr. Compton having previously obtained it some years before. It was the year 1875 that they settled in their new home and began life as farmers with every prospect of future success. But two years later death invaded the little home and removed the husband. His marriage had been blessed to him and his wife by the birth of one child, Lulu, who died some months after her father's death.

Since Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd were married, Nov. 17, 1878, they have spent three years in Fountain County, Ind. After their return to this State they settled on the farm which had belonged to her first husband. Since it has come under our subject's management, by a judicious expenditure of money and labor he has made extensive improvements, and has greatly increased the value of the estate, which may now justly be ranked among the model farms of Cass County.

Of the happy marriage of our subject and his wife five children have been born, as follows: Hiram Reed, Henry L., Elizabeth M., John M. and Grace.

Mr. Lloyd is a young man of high standing in the farming community of Cass County, his enterprise, independence and capacity for work making him a valued citizen. He is a close and intelligent observer of the political aspects of the day, and gives his hearty support to the Republican party.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSON is a popular, highly respected citizen, residing in Salt Creek Precinct, where he owns and operates a valuable farm of 400 acres on section 15. He is the son of Abraham and Nancy (Carney) Johnson. Both of his parents were natives of New York State. His father was a laboring man, and leaving his native State he moved westward and settled in Ohio, where he lived a consistent life, displaying a marked individuality and morality. He died in 1876, seventy-seven years old. The Carneys were among the celebrated Knickerbocker families of New York, so graphically described by the famed author, Washington Irving. The mother died at their home in Ohio in October, 1868, aged fifty years, leaving a family of six children, named: Margaret A., Mary, William A. (our subject), Georgiana, Eliza J. and Cornelius. After the death of the mother, the father contracted a second marriage, and was the father of one child, Sadie.

The subject of this sketch was born in Tompkins County, N. Y., in 1841. His earliest recollections of life extend back to the journey westward to Ohio, during which his father had a violent quarrel with a dishonest boatman. Their home was in the heavily timbered district of Ohio, and at an early age he was taught to swing an ax. At the age of fourteen our subject made his father an offer as follows: That if he would give him his time until he was twenty-one, he would give the father in return one-half of his earnings, to which the parent consented. He then worked out on a farm by the month for six years. He did not attend school six months altogether in his life, and the great store of practical knowledge which the gentleman possesses at this time is the direct result of the study and close observation of events as they transpired about him.

Our subject enlisted as a soldier in Company II, 80th-Ohio Infantry. He accompanied his regiment to the seat of war in the South, and participated with them in many skirmishes and engagements. In looking over a list of the battles in which he took part, the names are found of Farmington, Ky.; Corinth, where, in 1862, he received a wound in the knee; Coldwater, Holly Springs, Tallahatchie, Memphis, Helena, siege of Vicksburg, Raymond and Jackson. In the latter engagement he was severely wounded in the left side. Here the rebels came up and captured him. One of them tapped him on his shoulder and said: "What do you think of Vallandigham? He is in our lines now, and is going to be Governor of the State of Ohio." He thought that if such feelings and sentiments were expressed by the rebels, he could no longer be a Democrat, and it was at Jackson, Miss., that he was converted to the Republican faith, which he has to this time steadfastly maintained.

Our subject pursued the following line of reasoning: Here is a man who has been tried for treason, given every advantage and technicality under the law of the land he has sought to betray, has been found guilty, and banished to the side that held his sympathy, yet in the face of all this he was taken up by the Democratic party, and put forward as one of its principal leaders. I can never swallow that dose, and reclining backward, the wound that was made by the rebel sharpshooter allowed the escape of the last drop of Democratic blood in his organism. From this battle-field he was taken to Libby Prison, where he remained until he was paroled, and he was finally exchanged at Columbus, Ohio, in October, 1863. He then rejoined his regiment at Stevenson, Ala., and took part in the battles of Mission Ridge and Huntsville, Ala. At Paint Rock River his right leg was broken while assisting in building a stockade. He was sent to the hospital at Chattanooga, Tenn., where he was examined, and then sent back to Knoxville marked "discharged," and sent to the Louisville Hospital, thence to New Albany, Ind., from where he went to the soldier's home at Indianapolis. Desiring to obtain a furlough he applied to Gov. Morton, of Indiana, who at all times and in all things was the soldiers' friend, and he procured it for him.

At the expiration of the furlough our subject was appointed on the Secret Police by Gov. Morton, and rendered the State valuable service in that capacity, assisting in the detection and capture of several desperate characters, who were opposed to the Union cause. He was instrumental in ridding the city of Indianapolis of the notorious "Knights of the Golden Circle." From his earliest boyhood days he was a true patriot, and his heart was imbued with an intense love of his country. While a young man he was called upon to climb to the top of a liberty pole in West Bedford, Ohio, to arrange the rope for hoisting a flag. His father was strenuously opposed to his enlistment in the service, as he was a Democrat of the old school. After his enlistment members of the Democratic party tried to bribe him to desert and fly to Canada, but his honor as a man and a soldier would not permit him to so disgrace himself. He is now proud of the record he made in the army, and of the assistance he gave his country in her time of need, and he is certainly justified in all he feels.

While at home on his furlough our subject was married to Miss Rachel Loder, July 7, 1863. This lady is the daughter of James and Ann (Polick) Loder. She was born in Coshocton County, Ohio, where they made their home for the six years following the close of the war, when he removed to Hancock County, Ill., where he resided on a farm until 1881, when he moved to Nebraska and purchased eighty acres of land. He prospered, and has at various times added to his original purchase, until he now owns 400 acres of choice, eligibly located farm land, which he devotes largely to raising cattle and hogs for the general market. He has now 280 head of cattle and 140 head of hogs. The buildings on his farm are of the most substantial and extensive character, conveniently located, and complete in all their appointments for the purposes for which they were designed. The farm is divided into fields of convenient size by substantial hedge and wire fences; an orchard of choice varieties of fruit and a large number of ornamental trees add to the beauty and value of his property. His home is nicely located, is neatly and tastefully arranged, and well furnished throughout, and his wife takes especial pride in maintaining her home as one of the nicest of the many in the precinct. They have become the parents of nine children, of whom the following are living: John Thomas, Richard, James, Louis and Minnie.

Mr. Johnson has been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since he was fifteen years of age. He has been Superintendent of the Union Sunday-school in Salt Creek Precinct, Neb. He is a member of Greenwood Post, G. A. R., and also holds a membership in the Odd Fellows' Lodge at Ashland, and is a leading member of the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is now and forever a Republican. He is a progressive, wide-awake citizen, a hard worker, popular among his fellowmen, deserving and holding the respect of all who know him. He is an earnest and hearty supporter of every plan devised to further the best interests of the community in which he lives.

JOHAN KRAEGER is one of those earnest, hard-working German-American citizens who have contributed so largely by their perseverance and skill to make the State of Nebraska the fruitful garden it is to-day. He resides on his fine farm of 320 acres located on section 2 of Mt. Pleasant Precinct. He is a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, where he was born April 5, 1854. There he lived with his parents, John and Eve Kraeger, attending school until he reached the age of fifteen years, when he began learning the trade of stonemason, which trade he followed for six years. His life from that time to the present has been passed in farming. In the fall of 1864 he took passage for America in a sailing-vessel from the port of Bremen, and after a voyage of thirty-one days landed at New York City.

After he had reached that city our subject went direct to Tazewell County, Ill., where he lived until 1878, in which year he came to Cass County, Neb., where he has since lived. He was married to Sophia Orth, Nov. 15, 1870, in Illinois. The lady was born in Germany, June 16, 1848, and is the daughter of Peter and Elizabeth Orth. She came to America with her parents when she was five years old, and settled with them in Canada, where the parents still reside. In 1867 she came alone to Illinois. They have become the parents of nine children: Elizabeth was born Aug. 27, 1871; George, Jan. 12, 1873; Adam, June 8, 1875; John, Jan. 9, 1877; Annie, Jan. 9, 1879; Louisa, Nov. 8, 1882; Jacob, Dec. 28, 1884; Mary, Nov. 6, 1886, and Henry, in 1887.

Mr. Kraeger emigrated with his family to Cass County, Neb., in the spring of 1878, and settled on the farm where he now lives, to the improvement of which he has from that time to the present devoted his every energy. His buildings, provided for general farm purposes, barns, sheds, etc., are among the best in the precinct; his residence is large and tastefully designed and handsomely furnished. The grounds about the house are ornamented with evergreens and shrubbery. A thriving orchard of choice varieties of fruits, and both natural and planted groves, add value to the premises.

When our subject arrived in America he had no means with which to help himself. He contracted a debt of $20 to tide him over his necessities until he could settle down to work at something. He is truly a self-made man, and in gathering the fine property together which now surrounds him, he has shown an immense amount of energy and perseverance. In all things he has been ably assisted by his wife, who has at no time ever hesitated to assume any responsibility or enter upon the discharge of any duty, however hard or unpleasant it might be, that would forward the interests and welfare of husband and family, and now having attained the fulfillment of their hopes and desires, they are enjoying a full competency, which they have striven so long and hard to reach, and have been so richly rewarded.

The friends and neighbors of the subject of this sketch have frequently solicited him to accept official positions at their hands, which he has invariably refused, except the office of School Director, in which position he felt that he could accomplish the greatest amount of good, and the duties of which office he has filled in a highly acceptable manner. Himself and wife are valued and honored members of the Lutheran Church. He is a Republican in politics, and is an earnest worker in behalf of that party. He is one of the leaders in the social life of the precinct.

A SA COLMAN, of Liberty Precinct, has been one of its solid institutions for many years, and occupies his father's old homestead, which comprises 220 acres of valuable land, pleasantly located on section 6. The elder Colman homesteaded this during the pioneer days of this county, and was numbered among its most valued citizens. The modern improvements, however, have been effected mostly by the present occupant. A stream of living water runs through the farm, adding greatly to its natural fertility, and aiding in producing some of the finest crops in Southern Nebraska.

Mr. Colman has been a resident of this county since November, 1858, having come here at that time with his father's family when a youth of nineteen years. He has since also continuously resided in Liberty Precinct on the old farm. He was born in Noble County, Ind., Oct. 10, 1839, and is the son of Hartwell and Elizabeth (Engle) Colman, who were natives respectively of New York and Ohio. Both the parents became residents of Noble County, Ind., in their youth; they were married in Ohio, and began life together on a farm in Noble County. Both the maternal and paternal grandparents of our subject were among the pioneer settlers of Noble County. The brothers and sisters of our subject were mostly born in that county. The family in the fall of 1851, leaving Indiana, moved across the Mississippi into Jones County, Iowa, settling on a tract of new land. The father effected considerable improvement, with the aid of his sons, then sold out once more and resolved to cast his lot with the pioneers of Nebraska. Coming to this county he selected land on section 6, Liberty Precinct, which he took up from the Government, and here with his estimable wife spent the remainder of his days. He was born in 1800, and died in December, 1864, being sixty-four years of age. The wife and mother continued to live a few years at the homestead here, but finally returned to Indiana, and spent her last days at the home of her daughter in Tippecanoe County, where her death took place about 1878, after she had reached her threescore years. She was a good woman, and a member of the Methodist Church.

The subject of this sketch spent his boyhood and youth upon the pioneer farm in Noble County, Ind., and accompanied his parents in their subsequent removals, first to Iowa and then to Nebraska. In due time he made the acquaintance of Miss Eliza Cople, of Rock Bluff Precinct, to whom he was married at her home there in January, 1865. Mrs. Colman was born in Barry County, Mo., Sept. 10, 1849, and came with her parents to Nebraska during the progress of the Civil War. They settled first in Rock Bluff Precinct, but later sold out and moved to Weeping Water, where the parents are now living, retired from active labor.

Mrs. Colman was reared under the home roof, and educated in the common schools. Of her marriage with our subject there were five children, as follows: Ida M. is the wife of Oliver Murdoch, and they live on a farm in Gosper County; Delmer S., Varrow H., Grace E. and Ray are at home with their parents. Mrs. Colman adheres to the religious faith of her excellent mother, being a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Colman, politically, is a sound Republican.

MRS. LOUISA MATHEWS, an accomplished, intelligent, self-reliant woman, of rare executive ability, is the owner of 240 acres of land on section 30, Stove Creek Precinct, where she has resided for a score of years, and which she has managed with unusual skill since the death of her husband, showing excellent judgment in all her business transactions, and a thorough knowledge of the duties devolving upon her. She was born in Freedom, Beaver Co., Pa., Nov. 10, 1841, and is of mingled Scotch and German descent, her paternal grandfather, William Graham, who was a farmer of Pennsylvania, having been of Scotch origin, though a native of the Keystone State. He was a strong Presbyterian, and adhered tenaciously to the faith of that church. His son Joseph, father of Mrs. Mathews, was born in Butler County, Pa., where he married Henrietta Ghost, a native of the same county. Her father, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was born in Germany, but emigrated to America and settled on a Pennsylvania farm. Mrs. Mathews' father was a gunmaker by trade, and erected a gun factory in Freedom, Pa., and carried on his business there on a small scale. In 1855 he sold his factory and moved to Iowa, becoming one of the pioneers of Scott County. He located twenty miles east of Davenport, taking up 160 acres of land, which he improved, and to which he has since added by purchase, until he now has one of the largest farms in Scott County, where he still resides at the advanced age of seventy-three years. His wife died in 1849, at the early age of thirty-five years. They were the parents of three children, namely: Louisa; Catherine, of Moline, Ill., and Susan, deceased.

Our subject received a good education in her native town, remaining there until fourteen years of age, when she removed with her father to Iowa, and remained under the parental roof until her marriage, Sept. 1, 1862, to Mr. J. M. Mathews. He was born in Washington County, Ohio, Aug. 8, 1833, and was a son of William and Mary Ann Mathews, early settlers of Ohio, born in 1808 and May 2, 1812, respectively. His father was a stone-cutter by trade, and also carried on a small farm, continuing thus employed until his death, Dec. 12, 1863, at the age of fifty-five years. His mother is still living in Ohio. Of the children born to them two are still living, Charles W. and Alpha C., both in Ohio. J. M. Mathews, husband of our subject, was a diligent scholar, who, improving every opportunity for study, acquired a very good education in early life. When fourteen years of age he was put in sole charge of the farm, his father having work at his trade, and he remained thus engaged for four years. In 1851 he went to Scott County, Iowa, and worked on a farm until the time of his marriage with our subject. Two weeks later, filled with patriotic enthusiasm, and inspired by the loyal courage of his bride, he enlisted in the defense of his country in the 20th Iowa Infantry, and was mustered into service at Clinton. In the fall of that year he was sent into Missouri, and afterward took an active part in the battle of Prairie Grove, Ark., where he was shot in the breast, the ball coming out below his arm, and was obliged to spend the winter in the hospital, not being able to join his regiment again until the following March. Mrs. Mathews was sick at the time and was unable to care for him. He afterward participated in the siege of Vicksburg and the battle of New Orleans, subsequently joining Farragut's expedition to Mobile and Ft. Fisher, and at the close of the war was mustered out of the service at Clinton, Iowa, receiving an honorable discharge in July, 1865, having served two years and eleven months. After resuming his duties as a private citizen Mr. Mathews rented land for three years, and in the fall of 1868 he removed with his family to Cass County, Neb., and located on the present homestead owned by his widow, taking up only eighty acres at first. The land was entirely uncultivated, and he set out trees, planted an orchard, and put up a dwelling, 15x12 feet, at a cost of $200, the lumber for which he hauled from Nebraska City. He met with the usual luck of settlers in a new country, suffering at times from the wind or drouth, and during the grasshopper raid met with severe losses. By his energetic labors and perseverance, coupled with wisdom and thrift in management, he succeeded in evolving a fine farm from the raw prairie land, to which he afterward added 160 acres on section 31, which he bought of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company. The farm is all improved, and surrounded by hedge or wire fence, and has a 10-acre orchard containing 600 trees of various kinds. It is all well watered, has a windmill, tanks, and various other improvements. The original house has given way to one of a more modern construction, and new barns and out-buildings have been erected. In all of these improvements Mr. Mathews took great pride, and since his death, which occurred Feb. 10, 1886, our subject has paid equally good attention to its management. In politics he was a good, honest Republican, firmly adhering to the principles of that party. He was a member of the United Brethren Church. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Mathews was blessed by the birth of eight children, namely: Charles W.; Ella B., wife of A. B. Lewton; Amelia M., wife of George Whisleman, of Stove Creek Precinct; Rosa E., Laura B., George W., Mamie A. and Jessie.

Our subject, though still living on her farm, expects soon to retire from active life and locate in the beautiful residence that she has built in Elmwood. She is a large-hearted woman, of genuine refinement, noted for her courteous and hospitable manners, and her love of the beautiful is indicated by her surroundings. She is a kind neighbor, sincere friend, and true Christian, exemplifying in her daily walk the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she is a member.

Mr. Mathews' uncle, Daniel Mathews, was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years, and was the first white child born in Washington County, Ohio.

ROBERT MCGILL, a pre-emptor of 1857, and a resident of Avoca Precinct for a period of thirty-one years, is now living with his son-in-law, William Case, on section 2, where they own together 160 acres of land. This constitutes one of the finest farms in this part of the county, with excellent improvements, more than ordinarily good farm buildings, and a fair assortment of live stock. The farm is watered by a living stream from Spring Creek, and yields to its owners annually a handsome income.

County Down, Ireland, was the native place of our subject, and he was born May 24, 1819. He has consequently attained nearly his threescore years and ten. The family is of Scotch ancestry, being among those who fled from their native land to the North of Ireland during the religious wars. His grandparents on both sides of the house were of pure Scotch blood. His father, Robert McGill, Sr., a well-to-do farmer of County Down, married Miss Mary McKnight, spent his entire life in his native Ireland, and attained to the advanced age of over eighty years. He was a lifelong Presbyterian, and had been a prominent man in his community, occupying many positions of trust and responsibility.

The mother of our subject, after the death of her husband, came to America with her son Robert, in 1848, and died in Akron, Summit Co., Ohio, when over seventy years of age. Robert, Jr., attained to his majority in his native county, learning the trade of weaver, an industry which was very generally prosecuted in that region. He was married there to Miss Isabelle Young, who was also born and reared in County Down, and was of Irish ancestry. Mr. McGill preceded his wife and little daughter to America, they joining him in Summit County, Ohio, in 1849, when little Mary was four years old. Mr. McGill upon coming to the United States secured employment in a stove foundry at Akron, Ohio, where he continued until coming to the farther West, in the spring of 1857. In the meantime Mrs. Isabelle McGill, his wife, had died in Akron, Ohio, about 1854. Our subject was thus left with two young children, one of whom he took care of as best he could, and the other was taken into the home of a Mr. Walton, of Tallmadge Centre, Summit Co., Ohio, who gave her a college education. She was treated as their own child, and is now the wife of a gentleman formerly living in Summit County, but now a successful nurseryman of Washington Territory.

Miss Mary McGill remained with her father until her marriage with William Case, a native of Ohio, who later removed to Iowa, and finally to Nebraska with his father, Augustus Case, one of the earliest settlers of Rock Bluff Precinct, this county. Here William Case was reared to manhood, and is now the owner of eighty acres of land adjoining that of his father-in-law, our subject, which they have constructed into one farm, and which they operate with a mutual interest. Mr. Case is securing by homestead claim 160 acres in Lincoln County, he having been a soldier of the Union Army during the late war, belonging to the 1st Nebraska Cavalry. He was in several skirmishes with the Indians, and upon one occasion seriously injured by the falling of the horse upon him, and in consequence was confined in the hospital at Cottonwood Springs for some time. Both Mr. McGill and his son-in-law are staunch Republicans, politically, and Mr. Case is a gentleman highly esteemed in his community, holding some of the local offices, and otherwise identified with its interests.

To Mr. and Mrs. Case there have been born eight children, one of whom, a son, Bertie, died when a little over three years of age. Those surviving form a most interesting and intelligent group. The eldest daughter, Bessie, is an interesting young lady of twenty years; Robert is a promising youth of eighteen; Leora is aged sixteen; Fannie thirteen; Guy ten; Roy seven, and the baby, Maude.

EZRA MURPHY has one of the finest stock farms in Cass County, which he is managing with great skill and with satisfactory pecuniary results. It has a very fortunate location on section 7 of the fractional part of Liberty Precinct, and embraces 240 acres of land especially adapted to stock purposes, as it has good living water on two "eighties" and has excellent facilities for pasturage; and it is also well fitted for other purposes, Mr. Murphy also paying considerable attention to other branches of agriculture besides stock feeding.

Our subject is descended from one of the old pioneer families of Indiana, and is a native of that State, having been born in Madison Township, Washington County, July 1, 1852. His father, George Murphy, likewise a native of the Hoosier State, was born, reared and married in Washington County. He was the son of David Murphy, who was born and reared in Virginia. He was married in his native State to Mary Hinton, and in the vigor of early life they sought a home in the wilds of Indiana during Territorial days, going there about 1812, and as pioneers doing their share in developing it and promoting its growth. They settled in Washington County, and there spent the remainder of their wedded life, rounding it out to a lengthy period, both dying well advanced in years. They were typical pioneers, of hardy, resolute natures, with strong powers of endurance, and capable of any sacrifice that they might build up a comfortable home for their children, and they were also true Christians. The father of our subject married Eliza Rutherford, a daughter of H. H. Rutherford, who had settled in Washington County with his parents in a very early day, having come from North Carolina. He married Catherine Clawhammer, also a native of North Carolina, whose parents were early settlers of Washington County. She and her husband spent many years together, and both died in Washington County, Mr. Rutherford at the age of eighty-two and his wife aged about seventy. George Murphy and wife began their wedded life on a farm in Madison Township, in the county of their nativity, and made their home on their homestead until their death in the prime of life, Mr. Murphy dying in 1861 at the age of forty-two, and the mother in 1871 when she was forty-five years old. She was a lifelong member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was in every respect a most exemplary woman. Mr. Murphy was a good man, whose conduct in the affairs of life commended him to the respect of his fellowmen, and he occupied a warm place in the hearts of those who knew him. He was a Jackson Democrat in his political beliefs, and held unswerving allegiance to his party.

Our subject is the youngest of the two sons and three daughters born to his parents. His brother Franklin died in infancy. Two of his sisters were married, Mattie, now deceased, who was the wife of Robert Maxedon, M. D., a practicing physician of Hardinsburg, Ind., and Mary, who is the wife of Henry Rawlins, a farmer near Hardinsburg. Ezra Murphy was reared on his father's farm in Madison Township, and there received the benefit of a substantial education. He lost his parents before he was very old, and he and his sister Emily have since lived under the same roof, and have never either of them been married. In 1880 they came together from Salem, in their native State, to Otoe County, this State, and after living there two years came to this county, and have resided on this farm since 1883. They have a cozy home, replete with all the most desirable comforts, and its hospitable board is often set for the entertainment of the stranger who happens under their roof or for the numerous friends that they have gathered about them by their kindly and pleasant social ways since taking up their residence here. Mr. Murphy is a man of steady habits and excellent principles, with a good fund of sound common sense and natural shrewdness. As a good citizen, he is, of course, interested in the political situations of his country, and his influence is used in favor of the Democratic party.

GUSTUS HENRY WIEDEMAN. Among the goodly land-holders of the county, and a gentleman respected for his sterling worth and integrity, is the subject of this sketch. He resides on his farm of 640 acres, being the whole of section 15, in Greenwood Precinct. He is a typical German-American citizen, and was born April 11, 1850, near Berlin, in Germany. At the age of three years he came with his father to America, and located in Niagara County, N. Y., where he lived until 1861, when he moved with his father to Des Moines County, Iowa. From the latter county he moved to Montgomery County, Iowa, where he lived for four years, then going back to Des Moines County, Iowa. In 1883 he came to Cass County, Neb., where he had bought his farm two years prior to his settling on it. He paid $20 per acre for the land; the improvements consisted of two frame shanties of but little value.

During the residence of our subject in Des Moines County he was married to Miss Mary Schearbaum, Feb. 24, 1876. This lady is a daughter of Henry Schearbaum, a farmer living in Des Moines County. Her father was a native of Germany, and came to America about the same time our subject did. Mr. Wiedeman is the second oldest in a family of seven children. His sister Clara is older, and Hannah, Charles, Elias F., Henry and Herman. Clara is the wife of Herman Gerbeling, a farmer of Des Moines County; Hannah is married and lives in the same county; Elias F. married Miss Julia Kampmyre, and follows the occupation of carpenter in Des Moines County; he was born in Niagara County, N. Y., in 1854. Charles was married to Miss Olive Davis, daughter of Benjamin Davis, and now lives on section 14, Greenwood Precinct; he was born in Niagara County, N. Y., in 1858. Henry was born in Niagara County, and lives with his mother on section 15, this precinct. Herman was born in Des Moines County, Iowa, in 1862, and lives with his mother and brother Henry in this precinct.

The father of our subject, Herman, was born near Berlin, Germany, Aug. 20, 1812. He made his home in the mother country until 1853, when he with his family emigrated to America, where he located in New York State. The mother was born in 1816, in the same Province of which her husband was a resident. Both parents are descended from the oldest German families of the Province. Their friends and relatives have taken a prominent part in the life of their country, and the names of many can be found on the roll of honor which contains the names of her heroes, soldiers and statesmen. In America, where everyone stands on his own merit, and official distinctions and castes are unknown, where every peasant, so long as he is law-abiding, is a peer to any in the land, our subject can refer with gratification and pride to the long line of honored ancestors which has preceded him.

Our subject and his good wife are the parents of five children—Henry, John, Edward, Arthur and Walter. They are all at home with their parents. They possess the strong, rugged constitution which is characteristic of their German origin, and are of the same material of which the American citizen is made. They are attending the excellent schools of the neighborhood, and are availing themselves of every advantage to secure a good education. The father attended the public schools of New York State in his earlier years, and in addition he received a good education in German from his parents, who from their knowledge and experience were able to instruct him thoroughly.

When our subject purchased his land it was in a but little better than an absolutely wild state. The two frame shanties that were on the land at that time have given way to a fine, modern built residence. It is handsomely located and presents a nice outward appearance. The interior is fitted with many of the latest improvements calculated to add to the comfort of home. The grounds surrounding the house are ornamented with trees, flowers and shrubbery. The various out-buildings are large, well designed and substantially built, and the barns and cattle sheds are supplied with water by a system of iron piping from a tank filled by a modern wind engine. In addition to his general farming our subject prizes his fine herd of cattle very highly, and it is admitted by all that he has many fine specimens of the bovine tribe. They will not suffer in comparison with other herds that have been exhibited at the different expositions and highly praised by the judges of animals of that class. In addition to the pleasure this branch of the business affords him it proves a source of great profit. His herd is so extensive that he counts them by the hundred. The sheds required to shelter them are immense, and the largest corn cribs in the country contain a sufficient quantity of grain to supply their needs. Taken altogether, from the arrangement of his buildings to the division of his farm into its various fields, his is one of the best appointed and most completely equipped farms in the county. Everything is in such order that he manages the entire place with the least possible help and expense. He is one of those good German farmers of which the old country is so full, and which she has supplied to the New World.

In the person of his wife the subject of this sketch has an earnest, intelligent counselor, and his present successful life is due to a large extent to her valuable assistance and advice. They are proverbially hospitable and social. He has served on the juries of his county impartially and conscientiously. He is Republican in politics, but has never sought or held any public office of trust.

AMBROSE BICKERT is a prominent general farmer in Stove Creek Precinct, of which he was one of the very first settlers. He is in good circumstances, financially, owning a good farm on section 28, which he manages himself, besides attending to quite an extensive business as a carpenter and wagon-maker. He is a veteran of the late Civil War, and has an honorable military record.

Our subject is a German by birth, a native of Hessen, Germany, born Nov. 20, 1835, to George J. and Elizabeth (Faust) Bickert, natives of the same Province. His father carried on farming quite extensively in the old country, and had an estate of some size there. His parents are now dead, his father dying in 1870, at the age of seventy years, and his mother in 1883, also aged about seventy years. They were connected with the Catholic Church, and led good Christian lives. Of their happy wedded life seven children were born, as follows: Joseph, in Germany; John and Theresa, deceased; Ambrose; Gertrude, also deceased; Moniga, in West Virginia, and Johanna, in Germany.

Our subject staid on the home farm in Germany until he was twenty-one years old, obtaining an excellent education in the meantime in the good schools of his birthplace, which he attended until he was fourteen. When he was twenty years old he began to learn the wagon-maker's trade, and worked at that until he was twenty-five. In the spring of 1860 he sought to better his fortunes in the United States, sailing from Bremen in the ship "Charles the Great," and landing in Baltimore forty-two days later. He made his way to Wheeling, W. Va., and thence on the Ohio River to Marietta, Ohio. He there obtained work in a chair factory, and was a resident of that town when the great Civil War broke out. On the first call for troops he dropped his work, and enlisted in Company F, 39th Ohio Infantry, and was mustered in at Cincinnati, Ohio, and was soon despatched to the seat of war with his regiment. He and his comrades did gallant service in the following battles: Lexington, Mo.; Island No. 10, under Gen. Pope; Madrid, Mo.; Ft. Pillow, Pittsburg Landing; Corinth, under Gen. Halleck, the regiment of which our subject was a member being the first in that battle that placed a flag on the rebel headquarters. He took part in other lesser engagements around Corinth; was at Iuka Springs, under Rosecrans, in the second battle of Corinth, at Pulaski; then his regiment was sent to join Sherman at Chattanooga. It was at the battles of Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw, Marietta, Ga., Chattahoochee River, Jonesboro and at Atlanta. The latter, which occurred on the 22d of July, was the hardest battle in which he fought. On that day our subject's regiment was surrounded three times by the enemy, but each time managed to fight its way out with desperate energy. On the 28th of July the right wing of the army, including the 39th Ohio, was ordered to the rear, and then sent back to Chattanooga, and thence to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he and his comrades were honorably discharged. Mr. Bickert then went to Marietta again, and worked there in a wagon-shop until the spring of 1865, when he came to Nebraska by boat, putting up a wagon-shop in Nebraska City, and was actively engaged at his trade until the spring of 1869. At that time he came to Cass County, and purchasing eighty acres of land on section 28, began to farm it, besides giving much attention to carpentering and wagon-making. He broke his land with oxen, planted six acres of groves, an orchard of 300 trees, a willow hedge, and made various other improvements. He built the first frame house in the precinct, having to draw the lumber for the purpose with oxen from Nebraska City. His land is well watered, Stove Creek having its rise on his farm, and it is well adapted to raising stock. He buys and feeds cattle, and has a fine herd of graded stock, and his hogs are among the finest in the neighborhood, as are also his horses, of which he has twelve of standard breeds. He has erected a large house and barns, of which a view is shown on another page, and has one of the finest places in this locality. So successful has he been that he has been enabled to purchase more land, 120 acres on section 28, 40 on section 29, and at another time 80 on section 33, and now has 200 acres of finely improved land.

Mr. Bickert was married in Marietta, Ohio, July 22, 1860, to Miss Magdalena, daughter of Adam and Elizabeth (Eisnach) Scheutelhurd. Her parents are natives of Germany, the father owning a farm in Hessen, where he lived and died, his death occurring in 1841, at the age of forty-seven years; the mother died there in 1859, at the age of sixty-four years. They were the parents of seven children, five of whom grew up—Barbara, Joseph, Mary A., Catherine and Magdalena. The latter, the wife of our subject, was born in Hessen, May 28, 1836, and in 1860 came to America on the same ship as our subject. Their pleasant wedded life has been blessed by the birth of nine children, as follows: Henry, John, George, Lizzie, Mary, Theresa, William, Robert and Julian. Henry and John are engaged in farming in Colorado.

Mr. Bickert, as one of the pioneers of Stove Creek Precinct, takes a lively interest in its advancement, and in him it finds one of its most useful citizens. Besides doing much to develop its agricultural resources and to extend its business interests, he has taken an honorable part in its government, and is at present Supervisor. He is also one of the leading Democrats of Cass County, and has been a delegate to County and State Conventions several times. He is identified with the G. A. R. at Elmwood, Kenesaw Post No. 123. He has served on the Grand Jury two terms. He and his wife are zealous members of the Catholic Church, at Elmwood, and were active in securing the erection of the present house of worship.

HENRY HOWLAND. Among the pioneers of Cass County who have taken part in the upbuilding of Plattsburgh is the subject of this sketch. He is a well-to-do wagon manufacturer, and for more than thirty years has been identified with the industrial interests of this part of the county. He erected the first wagon-shop in this region, and for many years carried on his business in this city. He finally sold out at a good profit, and built for himself another shop on his estate adjoining the city, and is still actively engaged in his trade. He is well patronized, as his wagons are made of good materials and are found to be strong and durable, and he never fails to give satisfaction to his customers.

Mr. Howland was born near Centre Square, Montgomery Co., Pa., Aug. 6, 1826, coming of sturdy New England stock. His father, Isaac Howland, was a native of Rhode Island, and his grandfather, whose name is thought to have been Joseph, was, so far as known, a native of the same State. The father of our subject went to Philadelphia when quite young with an aunt, and he was there adopted by a man named Stover, who took him to his home in Montgomery County. After he was married he engaged in a wood-working establishment, making mast hoops and wagon bows, following that trade a number of years. He was a man of sober, honest habits, and by prudence and thrift saved a competency, upon which he retired in 1865. He died at his home in Montgomery County in October, 1876, leaving behind the precious legacy of an untarnished name. The maiden name of his wife was Ann Neavil. She was born in Montgomery County, and there died in 1861. She was a daughter of David Neavil, a soldier of Revolutionary fame. She and her husband were the parents of ten children, five of whom grew up, namely: Henry, William, Franklin, Joseph and Mary J.

Henry Howland attended school in his youth, and as soon as he was large enough to be useful he commenced to assist his father in the shop, and was thus employed until he was twenty-two. He then went to Philadelphia and found work in a fluid factory, laboring there the ensuing six years. In 1854 he started westward, via rail to Alton, Ill., then the terminus of the railway; from there he went down the Mississippi River to St. Louis, where he embarked on a stage for Glenwood, Iowa, eight days and eight nights being consumed before he reached his journey's end. He found Glenwood to be but a small place, with but two or three stores. His first work there was in a saw and grist mill in the village, and later he helped to construct a mill on the Missouri bottom. In the winter of 1856-57 he worked in a wagon-shop there. He shrewdly foresaw that in the Territory of Nebraska, which had already begun to attract the notice of men seeking land for cultivation, there would be a demand for wagons, and he came to Plattsburgh to locate and establish a manufactory. He made a claim at once to the land he now occupies, and when it came into the market entered it at the land-office at Nebraska City, paying the Government $1.25 an acre for it. He erected a small frame house, 13x15 feet, but has since replaced it by a more commodious dwelling, replete with all the comforts that could be desired. His land, comprising nearly 200 acres, the most of which is well wooded, is, owing to improvements and to its proximity to a flourishing and wealthy metropolis, now a very valuable estate. When our subject came here in 1857 the settlements in the Territory of Nebraska were confined to the region adjacent to the Missouri River, and it was still far from its present advanced state, and a little further west deer and antelope were plentiful only a few miles away. In the month of May he erected the first wagon-shop, and became the pioneer in the manufacture of wagons. His building was of the most primitive style of architecture, consisting of posts set in the ground, and a board roof. That fall he erected a frame building, 16x20 feet, and continued to carry on business in it for twenty-three years, until he sold out and retired to his present manufactory, as before related.

Mr. Howland was married, in April, 1857, to Miss Catherine Kuntz. She was born in Northampton County, Pa., and is a daughter of Jacob Kuntz. Mr. and Mrs. Howland have four children living, namely: Jasper N., Fred G., William and Ann Belle.

Our subject is a man of strong understanding, with a well-informed mind, whose intelligence and unswerving integrity make him a most desirable citizen. His political views are identical with those of the Republican party, of which he is a strong supporter.

WILLIAM A. RHODEN, one of the younger members of the farming community of Rock Bluff Precinct, has a snug homestead of 120 acres, the land of which he purchased in the year 1880, before it had undergone the process of cultivation. His industry has been amply rewarded, he having been successful in his farming operations, and besides raising the products of the soil in their season, he has erected a good set of frame buildings, fenced his land, planted an apple orchard and the smaller fruit trees, and from time to time added the comforts and conveniences necessary to the well-being of the family, and essential to the complete home.

Our subject, a native of Missouri, was born Nov. 6, 1851, in Schuyler County, where his father lived a period of probably twenty-five years, and of which most of the children of the family were also natives. They were named respectively: Josephine, James Allen, Julia, Alexander, Dama, George, Don, Richard and Thomas. The parents left Missouri in the year 1865, coming to Nebraska Territory, and locating on section 17, in Rock Bluff Precinct, where there were added to the household circle Mary and Lily, the latter of whom died in infancy. Of this large family of thirteen children eleven are living. One son, Alexander, was shot by Indians in Idaho Territory, Nov. 23, 1877, while at work on a ranch. William A. Z. and Nancy (Arnold) Rhoden, the parents of our subject, were natives respectively of Indiana and Schuyler County, Mo. The father left his native State when a young man, stopping for a time at Galena, Ill., and later migrating to Schuyler County, Mo., where he was married. The paternal grandfather, James Rhoden, married Miss Elizabeth Lashbrook. He was a farmer by occupation. The great-grandfather was named William Rhoden. William A. Z. Rhoden departed this life Feb. 18, 1885, at his home in Rock Bluff Precinct. The mother is still living, making her home with her children in this county. William A., our subject, was married, Nov. 24, 1881, to Miss Josephine, daughter of Harvey and Agnes (Simmons) Carper, and they have three children—William, LeRoy and Jessie. Mr. Rhoden, politically, is a Democrat, and has served a number of times on the Election Board. Socially, he belongs to Lodge No. 6, A. F. & A. M., of Plattsmouth. He has many friends in this vicinity, and is numbered among the men who have a decided influence in building up their community socially, morally and financially.

FRANK FETZER. In the subject of this record we have a man who has ever been willing to put his shoulder to the wheel in the busy walks of life, and who, after performing his part in the strife, has now retired from active labor, and is enjoying the comforts of a pleasant home in the town of Louisville. He came to this place in 1876, and established a shop for blacksmithing and the general manufacture of road vehicles. He was actively engaged in the prosecution of this business until 1888, giving employment to a number of men and securing a competence. Such was the quality of his workmanship that he had no difficulty in disposing of it at remunerative prices and in the home market. He is a mechanic of no mean skill, and therefore well fitted to superintend the operations of such an establishment.

Mr. Fetzer is a native of Wisconsin, and was born in Manitowoc County, Dec. 22, 1854. He is the youngest of a family of six children, comprising five sons and one daughter, the offspring of Godfrey and Rosa Fetzer, who were both natives of Germany. The parents emigrated to America about 1849, and from New York City proceeded directly to the young State of Wisconsin, which had been admitted into the Union the previous year. The father secured a tract of land, and there both parents spent the remainder of their days, engaged in agricultural pursuits, the mother passing away in 1874, at the age of fifty-four years, and the father in 1886, in his seventy-third year.

Our subject attended the district school until about fourteen years of age, and then began an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade, serving three years. Later he worked as a journeyman with his old employer, Mr. Charles Schumacher, but in the fall of 1874 resolved to seek a home in the farther West. He sojourned at Plattsmouth two and one-half years, then came to Louisville, and established himself in business as before stated. Dec. 22, 1881, witnessed the marriage of our subject with Miss Bertha Heitzhausen, who was born in Mayville, Wis., and is the daughter of Dietrich and Minnie Heitzhausen, who were natives of Germany. The mother lives in Louisville; the father is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Fetzer began their wedded life together in Louisville, where they have since lived, and are now the parents of one child, a daughter, Celia M. Mr. Fetzer owns his residence and shop, the former making a neat and comfortable home, and the latter thoroughly equipped with all the implements necessary for the business, which is now carried on by Charles Siekjost. Besides this property he has a valuable timber tract of 320 acres in Perkins County, this State. He is a solid and reliable citizen, and has contributed his full quota to the industrial interests of his adopted town.

Mr. Fetzer cast his first Presidential vote for Tilden and is an uncompromising Democrat, a warm supporter of the late administration. He has been quite prominent in local affairs, officiating as Town Trustee and serving as a member of the City Council a period of seven years. He is an industrious worker at the time of general elections, never begrudging the time and money spent to carry out the principles of which he has been a supporter for a period of twelve years, when he entered upon the privileges and duties of citizenship.

ANDREW C. FRY, a respected resident of Plattsmouth, was among the gallant defenders of our country during the trying times of the late Rebellion, and is now peacefully pursuing agriculture in Cass County, Neb. He is a native of Franklin County, Pa., where his birth occurred June 2, 1838. His father, George Fry, was likewise born in the Keystone State, and was there reared and married, his wife dying when our subject was a mere babe, leaving eight children. After her death Mr. Fry moved to Allegheny County, Pa., and was there married again. He resided there until after the death of his second wife, then removed to Jefferson County, Iowa, where he died at the home of his son Jacob, in January, 1879. Of his second marriage one son was born.

When Andrew was a boy he went to Stark County, Ohio, to live with his brothers John and Jacob. He staid there two years, and in July, 1853, removed to Jefferson County, Iowa, where he made his home until 1873, excepting when he was in the South fighting for the defense of his country. He was married in that State, Aug. 2, 1860, to Miss Clara Davis, and of their union eleven children have been born, namely: Charles, Ella (now Mrs. Martin Ruby), George, Jennie, Cora, Edward, Clarence, Frank, Anna May, Walter and Harry. Walter is deceased.

In 1862 Mr. Fry felt it to be his sacred duty to cast in his lot with his noble fellow-citizens, and assist them in the defense of the Government under which he had been born and reared, and

*Yours Peraturmely
H. J. Davis*

August 9 of that year he enlisted in Company B, 19th Iowa Infantry. From that time until his services were no longer required he was a brave and efficient soldier, taking an active part in many of the principal engagements. He was in the battle of Prairie Grove, Ark., Dec. 7, 1862; was present at the siege of Vicksburg, and went through the fifty-five days of actual battle unscathed; he fought in the battle of Yazoo City, Miss., in July, 1863; thence his company was sent to Ft. Hudson to reinforce Gen. Banks, from there to Madisonville, where they had an engagement with the enemy; thence to Morganid's Bend, where 300 of his regiment were taken prisoners; from there to Brownsville, Tex., where they had a slight encounter with the rebels. Our subject was then granted sixty days' furlough, and was once more reunited with his family. At the expiration of his leave of absence he hastened to rejoin his regiment in September, 1864, at New Orleans, and from there he was sent with his comrades to Florida. He there took part in the engagements that resulted in the capture of Fts. Morgan and Gaines, and of the Spanish Fort. This latter was the last battle fought by his regiment. Mr. Fry was honorably discharged Aug. 7, 1865, and returned home in sound health except from the effects of exposure.

On March 15, 1873, Mr. Fry came to Hastings, Neb., and in October of the same year his family came to Plattsmouth, where he joined them, and where they have ever since made their home. Mr. Fry is a sturdy, honest, upright man, a good citizen, a kind neighbor, a faithful husband and tender father, in every way worthy of respect and confidence. He is an earnest Republican, and a valued member of McConnie Post No. 45, G. A. R.

HENRY J. DAVIS, actively engaged in the management of his fine, productive farm on section 36, Liberty Precinct, is a good representative of the stalwart men who came here less than a quarter of a century ago, and have in the meantime witnessed the wonderful transformation of this section of the State from a wild, unbroken prairie, sparsely inhabited, to a fruitful farming region, with thriving villages and prosperous towns.

In the development of Cass County our subject has taken an intense interest and given material assistance. He is an intelligent, industrious man, of keen preceptive faculties, and has proved himself a most desirable citizen of his adopted town. His pleasant homestead, which consists of 240 acres of arable land, well watered and under good improvement, with its comfortable house and substantial farm buildings, compares favorably with any in the precinct, and is a credit to his executive ability, skill and good judgment. Mr. Davis gives much attention to the raising of stock, his cattle being principally Durhams. At the head of his large herd is the well-bred bull Jumbo, which comes of a high grade of that breed. Besides his homestead our subject also owns another good farm, principally grass land, lying on section 31 of the fractional township and precinct of Liberty.

Mr. Davis was born in Monongalia County, W. Va., Dec. 21, 1828, being of Welsh origin. His parents, William and Sarah (Pride) Davis, were natives of Virginia, and settled on a farm there, where the death of Mrs. Davis occurred when her son Henry was only four years of age. She was an estimable woman, and a devoted wife and mother. To her and her husband were born nine children. The father of our subject married for his second wife Mrs. Betsy McGill, who died on their Virginia homestead. Of their union one child was born.

Later in life Mr. Davis moved from Virginia to Ohio, and after a stay of two years in that State went to Ottumwa, Iowa, where he remained about a year. He then spent a few months in Boone County, that State, going thence to Des Moines, but did not establish himself in any part of the State, not being as pleased with that part of the country as with Ohio. Accordingly, accompanied by his son Henry J., Mr. Davis started for his old home in the Buckeye State, but was attacked by the cholera while on a steamboat on the Ohio River, and died near Cairo, Ill., in the spring of 1854, and was buried in Vanderburg County, Ind., being then sixty-three years of age. Our subject was at that time but a young man, and the sad scenes of that journey will never be forgotten by him. He was the only member of the family privileged to care for his father in his last moments, and to perform the last sad rites at the grave.

Subsequently the subject of our sketch returned to Iowa, whence he came in 1857 to Nebraska, crossing the Missouri River August 13 of that year, and locating in Nebraska City. The ensuing year Mr. Davis pre-empted 160 acres of land in what is now Wyoming Precinct, Otoe County, selling it a few months afterward, but slightly improved. In 1872 he purchased his homestead property, where he has since lived.

Mr. Davis has been twice married. During his residence in Des Moines, Iowa, he was united to Miss Elizabeth Hughes, a native of Highland County, Ohio. She accompanied her husband to this State, her death occurring during their residence in Otoe County, July 4, 1859. She bore her husband two children, John and William, both of whom are deceased. The second marriage of our subject occurred in Nebraska City, May 28, 1861, when he was united to Miss Irena Barnhill, who was born in Wayne County, in the southern part of Illinois, April 14, 1837. She was reared in that State, and removed to Wyoming, Otoe County, with her parents in 1857, and remained under the parental roof until her marriage with our subject. Her parents, A. H. and Nancy (Walker) Barnhill, were natives respectively of North Carolina and Kentucky. After their marriage they lived several years in Illinois, and then coming to Nebraska, lived in Wyoming, Otoe County, for three years. They subsequently moved to Saunders County, where Mr. Barnhill died in the fall of 1885, having lived beyond the allotted threescore years and ten of man's life. Mrs. Barnhill survives her husband, and is now living in Saunders County, at the ripe old age of seventy-seven years. She is a member of the Baptist Church, and a good Christian woman.

To our subject and his wife have been born seven children, of whom four are deceased, namely: Henry H., Admiral, Elizabeth and an unnamed infant. The three living are Mary Docia, Emmer Elsie and Ina A. They are bright, intelligent children, and are receiving good educational advantages. Mr. Davis is a true gentleman, possessing all the polish and the warm, generous heart, and the high mind characteristic of the Southerner. He and his family move in the highest social circles of their community. In their religious views they have the courage of their opinions, and believe that following the teachings of the Golden Rule, and living a moral, upright life on this earth, will fit them for anything that may come beyond the grave. In politics our subject is a Republican. The portrait of this enterprising citizen is given on an accompanying page, and is that of one of Cass County's best farmer residents.

ISRAEL WARD is a contented and happy farmer living on his original homestead of eighty acres on section 8, in Elmwood Precinct, where he arrived many years ago, after a tedious and wearisome overland journey in company with his wife and little son Albert, then a babe of four months. This gentleman was born in Eden Township, Licking Co., Ohio, Jan. 5, 1839. At the early age of seven years he lost his mother by death. He lived with his parents, for his father remarried, until he was twelve years old, alternately attending school and working upon the farm, when his father removed with the entire family to Ogle County, Ill., in 1851, where they lived the ensuing five years, when his father bought another farm in Marshall County, near Lacon, Ill., to which he removed. From here he removed in 1859 to Muscatine County, Iowa, where they resided three years, and in 1862 they settled in Keokuk County, Iowa, our subject accompanying the family on their various migrations. While residing in Muscatine County, Iowa, he met the lady who is at present his wife, Miss Louisa Ellen Eveland, a half-sister of Peter Eveland, Esq., at present an esteemed citizen of Elmwood Precinct, and whose biography is presented on another page of this book.

This lady is the youngest of a family of three children. Her sister Jeanette and brother Beal Dimmitt are older. She was born in Clermont County, Ohio, where she lived with her father, Joseph, and her stepmother until she was eight years of age, when the entire family removed to Iowa, where, in the public schools of the neighborhood, she laid the foundation for the practical knowledge which distinguishes her. Her mother was Louisa Ellen Dimmitt, who died, when her daughter was only two weeks old. Six years after the marriage of our subject and his wife, he found that he was afflicted with serious lung trouble and he determined to make his home in the West. His brother-in-law, Peter Eveland, having come to Nebraska and settled, and being so well pleased with the prospects about him, Mr. Ward decided that this was the place for him. So he started on his journey westward with a good wagon and team. During the trip he was so unfortunate as to lose one of his horses, which was a serious loss to him; but he repaired it and completed his journey, and he is to-day comfortably situated in his new home. Four children have been born to this couple: Albert was born in Iowa; Mary C., and Florence and an infant, deceased.

The father of our subject, William Ward, and his mother, Abigail Huston, were married in Licking County, Ohio, where the father was a farmer and one of the early settlers. He was a leading member of the community, and was allied with the Abolitionist party, taking a strong and active interest in its purposes. The mother was a native of Ohio. She died in 1846, aged twenty-nine years. Grandfather Ward was born in Pennsylvania. The great-grandfather, William, was a silk weaver, and was born in England. A family consisting of four children were born to the parents of our subject—Israel, Elizabeth, John and Howard. Elizabeth is the wife of John W. Torrey, and resides in Russell County, Kan.; John and Howard reside in Cass County, Neb.

Mr. Ward is a wide-awake and progressive farmer, and believes in enjoying life as it passes, as is shown by the improvements which he has completed and projected on his farm, which at present embraces necessaries and many of the comforts, often only found on farms that have been cultivated much longer than that of Mr. Ward. He values a good education for his children as being paramount to all other advantages; he therefore provides every facility for them to obtain the highest place, and they certainly deserve it. He is notably one of the happiest dispositioned men of the precinct. He claims that by treating his fellow-men well and honestly, and living soberly and uprightly, to be the prime source of his extreme contentment. His wife is a sister of Peter Eveland, a farmer of Elmwood Precinct, is an educated and refined lady, and a model housekeeper. Mr. Ward, with his wife and eldest daughter, Mary, who is by common consent admitted to be one of the handsomest young ladies in Elmwood Precinct, form an important factor in the social circles of the neighborhood. Our subject and his two brothers were among the earliest grain threshers in Elmwood Precinct, and none were considered to do their work any better. He was with Mr. Eveland on the buffalo hunt when the latter met with the misfortune referred to in his biography, which crippled him for life.

Our subject has always taken a lively interest in the public affairs of the precinct, especially in educational matters. He assisted in the organization of School District No. 61, and has discharged the duties of a Justice of the Peace in a highly acceptable manner. Both himself and wife are consistent members of the Congregational Church. In politics he is a straight Republican.

—+•+•+•+•+•+•—

CAPT. EDWARD DONOVAN has a distinguished military record as an able and gallant officer in the Civil War, and later in the regular army in its campaigns on the north-western frontier and in Texas. He is now a resident of Plattsmouth, where he is engaged as accountant with the Burlington & Missouri River Railway Company. He has a lovely home in this city, beautifully located on high ground, commanding a fine view of the surrounding country. The house was built by him in Oreopolis, and moved to its present location. He has spent much time in beautifying the grounds, which are neatly and tastefully arranged, and he raises plenty of small fruit for himself and friends.

Our subject comes of an old and respected Irish family, and was himself born in Ireland, the city of Dublin his birthplace, and June 7, 1833, the date of his birth. His father, the Rev. George Donovan, who was a learned and polished gentleman, was born in Ballymore, County Wexford, Ireland, and was a son of Richard Donovan, a native and lifelong resident of the same county. The father of our subject was reared in his native county, and was given the advantages of a liberal education. He was graduated from that famous institution of learning, Trinity College, Dublin, and was soon afterward ordained to the ministry, taking orders in the Church of England. He first preached at Camolin, County Wexford, and was then given a pastorate at Castle Knock, County Dublin, and later had charge of a church at Leixlip, County Kildare, eight miles from Dublin. And there his useful and honored life was brought to a close, and he now lies peacefully sleeping his last sleep in the quaint old churchyard of the church to whose members he used to minister the consolations of religion. His good wife lies by his side. She was a native of County Dublin, and her maiden name was Catherine McKenna. Eleven children were born to this worthy couple.

The son of whom we write was fourteen years old when his father died. Prior to that time he had always attended school, as his parents were anxious to give him a good education, but that sad event changed the course of his life, as the family were then scattered, and our subject was apprenticed to a druggist in the town of Carlow, County Carlow. He served five years, and then went to Dublin to attend lectures on pharmacy, and received a certificate as assistant apothecary. In the month of May, 1855, he left the shores of his native isle, and proceeding to Liverpool, secured a position as apothecary on board of an American-bound vessel, and five weeks later disembarked at New York City. The second day after his arrival he found employment in McKesson & Robin's wholesale drug-store, and remained with them six months. We next hear of him far away from there in a Southern city, he having gone to New Orleans, where he was engaged as a manufacturing chemist in G. N. Morrison's wholesale drug-store. Six months later he tried life in Chicago, and was with a firm of wholesale druggists for a time. He then entered into business on his own account, opening a drug-store at Evanston, a few miles from Chicago. He there met Dr. Evans, who was then booming the town of Oreopolis, in this county, and that gentleman persuaded him to accompany him to Nebraska in the fall of 1857. Oreopolis was situated one and one-half miles from Plattsmouth, and at one time had a much better class of buildings, and much brighter prospects of a prosperous future than this city, but in the mutations of time the situation has been reversed, and Plattsmouth has shot ahead of its ancient rival. Our subject manfully took whatever work came to hand, and one winter chopped wood. He lived in that town until 1861, when the Rebellion broke out, and he was among the first to volunteer for the defense of the institutions of his adopted country, and in the trying years that followed none of his comrades displayed more unflinching courage in the face of danger, more patient endurance, heroic daring, or faithful service than he. He was a member of Company A, 1st Nebraska Infantry, enlisting in April, 1861, and was mustered into the ranks at Omaha as a private. His regiment was ordered to Missouri, and thence to other places, where he took part in several important battles and minor engagements. He was present at Ft. Donelson and Shiloh when they surrendered, and at the siege and capture of Corinth and Cape Girardeau, and for a long time followed and fought the bushwackers and guerrillas in Arkansas and Missouri. He veteranized in the winter of 1863-64, and served until July, 1866. He was commissioned Second Lieutenant Jan. 2, 1862, and at the battle of Shiloh he commanded his company, the First Lieutenant and Captain not being present, and for gallant and meritorious conduct during that hotly contested battle he was promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant, his commission bearing the date of June 1, 1862. He received his commission as Captain Oct. 11, 1865. After the war closed his regiment was sent to the north-western frontier; here he was for a time Assistant Inspector General. While holding that office he had to travel from Ft. Sedgwick to Omaha and return each month, and thus had a stage ride of some 400 miles, and each two months he had to go to Dakota City, Neb., where he received his discharge with his regiment in July, 1866, and then returned to Plattsmouth. He was engaged in the drug business in Omaha until 1867, when he obtained a commission as Second Lieutenant in the regular army, and was attached to the 41st Regiment, which was afterward consolidated with another, and became the 24th Regiment. In 1869 our subject was made Adjutant of the regiment, and served in that capacity three years, when he resigned the position, and subsequently he served with his command the greater part of the time in Texas until his resignation from the army in 1878 to accept his present position.

Capt. Donovan was married, in 1856, to Catherine Keife, a native of County Dublin. She was a woman of many lovable qualities, who held a warm place in the hearts of many friends, and her death in 1882 caused sadness in other households besides that of her own family. To her and her husband four children were born—Robert, Katie, George and Flora C. Katie married John M. O'Grady, and died in Plattsmouth at the age of twenty-two. Our subject and his family are all communicants of the Episcopal Church. The Captain combines the quick wit, the warm and generous heart, and the never-failing courtesy and tact, of the true Irish gentleman, and he is popular with all.

CHRISTOFF MEYER. The enterprising German citizen is to be found all over the United States, pushing his way into new sections, and, planting his stakes, usually abides, distinguishing himself for his thrift, industry and prudence, and so laboring as usually to obtain a competence. His children who come after him will proudly repeat the story of his life, and thus he has his reward.

The subject of this sketch, a true son of the Fatherland, is substantially located on a good farm on section 4 in Avoca Precinct, where he has now 158 acres of thoroughly cultivated land. His original purchase embraced 165 acres, a portion having been cut off by the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs across a corner of his farm. He settled here when the land was in its primitive condition, without a building upon it, and unfenced. The labor of years has resulted in one of the most finely improved farms in this section, with an imposing two-story stone dwelling, erected in 1880, and the out-buildings naturally arising to meet the requirements of the modern farmer who keeps track of the improvements of the day, and operates accordingly. None but he who has performed it can gain a correct idea of the labor involved in the construction of the well-regulated farm, and in addition to this there has been no small amount of hard cash expended in connection therewith. This, however, has proved a safe investment for capital, being out of the reach of the defaulting bank cashier.

The Atlantic Ocean separates Mr. Meyer from the home of his childhood, he being a native of the Empire of Germany, and born Dec. 23, 1824. He was reared under the paternal roof, and received an excellent education in his native tongue. At an early age he distinguished himself as a natural mechanic, being able to handle all kinds of tools with facility, and this gift has been the means of saving him hundreds of dollars in connection with his farming operations.

The parents of our subject were Charles and Lucy (Newe) Meyer, also natives of the Empire of Germany, and who spent their entire lives in their native land, dying at a ripe old age. Their family consisted of two sons and four daughters, of whom Christoff, our subject, was the only one coming to the United States. He was unmarried at this time, making the journey in the summer of 1854. Soon after landing upon American soil he proceeded to Washington County, Wis., settling among strangers and without means. His honest face and evidently correct habits soon procured him friends and employment, and he lived in Wisconsin until the spring of 1860. In the meantime he was married, Sept. 18, 1858, to Miss Ellen Halmas.

Mrs. Meyer, also a native of Prussia, was born April 24, 1841, and came to the United States with her parents when a young girl of thirteen years. They also located in the Badger State, living in Oconto County until after the marriage of their daughter Ellen. Later they removed to Chicago, Ill., where the father died in middle life. The mother subsequently came to Nebraska, and died at the home of her son Nicholas, in this county. She was about seventy-four years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Halmas were the parents of five children, all of whom are living and located mostly in the United States.

To Mr. and Mrs. Meyer there have been born thirteen children, two of whom, Lucy and John, died at the ages of one and six years respectively. The survivors are Nicholas, Mathias, Mary, Margaretta, Susanna, Peter, Charles, Lizzie, August, Henry and Joseph. Mathias is married and living in this county; Mary, Mrs. Jergonson, is a resident of this county; Margaretta is the wife of J. Denne, and makes her home in Otoe County. Mr. Meyer, politically, is a staunch Democrat, and both he and his estimable wife are members of the German Catholic Church. They are people of standing and importance in their community, and are amply worthy of representation in the ALBUM of Cass County.

DR. JOSEPH E. HALL, a regular practicing physician and surgeon of good standing in Weeping Water, located at this place about 1881, and during his seven years' residence has built up a remarkably fine business. He bears an excellent reputation as a citizen and a practitioner, and enjoys in a large degree the confidence and esteem of the people of this vicinity. He is a gentleman of marked ability, a close student, and conscientious in the discharge of the duties of his profession.

Dr. Hall first set foot upon the soil of Nebraska June 17, 1881, and at once took up his location in Weeping Water, of which he has since been a resident, attending strictly to business. In 1887 he completed a fine residence on South Randolph street, which, with its surroundings, forms one of the attractive homes of the city. In its enterprises and improvements he has taken an active part since becoming a resident here, serving on the School Board three years, and has held the office of County Physician two years, also for two years that of surgeon of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company.

Socially, he is a K. of P., and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, holding various official capacities in his lodge at Weeping Water.

Dr. Hall was born in Alexandria, Ind., April 24, 1858, and lived there until he was a young man twenty years old. He had in the meantime received a good preliminary education, and now began the reading of medicine with Dr. J. W. Perry, of the same place, continuing with him one year, and spending the year following with Drs. Chittenden & Jones, of Anderson, Ind. Later he entered upon a course of lectures in the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis, from which he was graduated with honors March 3, 1881. He still belongs to the Sydenham Society of that college, and is also prominently connected with the State Medical Society of Nebraska, and the Railroad Surgical Society of the State.

Dr. Hall, after being graduated, established himself at once in Weeping Water, where he has one of the finest equipped offices in the city, and a remarkably complete assortment of surgical instruments and appliances, together with a library and everything else needful for the successful prosecution of his practice.

Our subject, on the 4th of May, 1882, was united in marriage with Miss Rosetta J. Blake, of Alexandria, and they are now the parents of three children, two sons and a daughter, namely: Virgil, Ethel and Homer. Mrs. Hall was born March 27, 1858, in Markleville, Ind., and is the daughter of W. P. and Isabella (Williams) Blake, who are now living upon a farm in the vicinity of Alexandria. She was carefully trained and educated, and taught school a period of four years before her marriage. They have a snug home in the central part of town, and enjoy the society of many friends.

Jesse H. Hall, the father of our subject, was born in Highland County, Ohio, Nov. 22, 1822, and lived there until a lad of eight years. He then removed to Indiana with his parents, they settling in Madison County during its pioneer days. Upon reaching man's estate he was married to Miss Elizabeth Ellis, and they became the parents of thirteen children, eleven of whom lived to mature years, and six sons and two daughters are still living. Mr.

Hall was successful in his labors as an agriculturist, and carried on farming extensively in his adopted State during the latter years of his life. In early manhood he was engaged as a teacher a period of twelve years. He is a very intelligent man, one who keeps himself well posted upon current events, and is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, in whose principles he trained his sons, and of which our subject, the Doctor, is an equally ardent advocate. Both parents have been for many years connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and from their sterling worth and integrity of character stand high among the people of their community.

Joseph H. Hall, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was a native of Ohio, whence he removed to Indiana about 1830, where he spent his last days, dying at the old homestead in Madison County, in February of the year 1872, when sixty-six years old. Dr. Hall's wife is a member of the Baptist Church in Weeping Water, of which they are regular attendants, and to which they contribute a liberal support.

GEORGE OBERLE, a well-known and successful agriculturist of Tipton Precinct, has a well-regulated farm pleasantly located on section 30, and which embraces 250 acres of good land. Upon it are neat and substantial buildings, including a fine new residence, commodious and built in modern style of architecture, which has been but recently completed, and is the admiration of the country around. Our subject belongs to that nationality to which the Great West is largely indebted for its growth and development, and was born on the beautiful Rhine River, near the village of Ottenheim, March 9, 1840.

Mr. Oberle spent his boyhood and youth in his native Province, acquiring, in common with the young people of Germany, an excellent education in the public schools. Afterward he employed himself mostly at hunting and fishing, remaining on his native soil until 1867. In the meantime he entered into partnership with his brother and other men, they being engaged in building a stone wall on the River Rhine, to protect the land. In 1866 our subject entered the army during the war between Germany and Austria, and was under the enemy's fire in many a battle. After a service of six months he returned to his old business, but in the April of 1867 resolved to seek his fortunes on the other side of the Atlantic. Repairing to Havre, France, he made his way by steamer to Liverpool, and there embarked on the ocean vessel "Walda," landing in New York City after a voyage of eighteen days.

Our subject tarried a very little while in the metropolis, then proceeded westward to St. Clair County, in Southern Illinois, and in the vicinity of Belleville found employment as a farm laborer, and sojourned in that locality a period of five years. In the spring of 1872 he made his way west to Nebraska City, and the year following came to this county and homesteaded a tract of land in Tipton Precinct, which is included in his present farm. He commenced at first principles in the construction of a homestead, there having been no attempt, whatever, at improvement. His first business was to cultivate a portion of the soil, after which he commenced fencing his land, putting up buildings, planting trees in groves and orchards, and gradually gathered around himself the comforts and conveniences which have made his homestead a noticeable feature of his precinct. Later he added to his first purchase as follows: Fifty acres on section 29, eighty on section 30 and 130 on section 31. It has all been brought to a productive condition, and is amply watered by the Little Nemaha. Mr. Oberle gives considerable attention to stock-raising, producing excellent grades of horses, cattle and swine, having usually a herd of forty cattle, sixty hogs and ten head of horses.

Mr. Oberle was married, in Nebraska City, March 15, 1873, to Miss Mary Stolz, a native of the same Province as her husband, and born in April, 1847. Mrs. Oberle came to America in her girlhood with friends. She is the daughter of George Stolz, who was of German ancestry, and whose family consisted of four children. Three of these are living, located in the old country. The parents are deceased.

To Mr. and Mrs. Oberle there have been born five children, namely: George, Jr.; Carl, who died when about six years old; Frederick, Rudolph and Emil. Mr. and Mrs. O. are Lutherans in religion, and our subject, politically, is a solid Republican. His parents were Deibold and Anna (Hauser) Oberle, who were natives of the same place as their son. They spent their entire lives in their native Germany, and the father was by occupation a fisher, hunter and trapper. He served for a time in the German Army, and after rounding up a ripe old age passed away in 1880. The mother survived her husband four years, dying in 1884. They were members of the Evangelical Protestant Church. Their family consisted of eight children, of whom our subject was the fourth child born. They were named respectively: Deibold, George, Carl, Frederick, Annie M., Kate, Christina (who died when about thirty years old) and Lena. Three sisters of these came to America.

ALBERT E. LEWIS is a prosperous young farmer who came to Nebraska in February, 1880, and settled on eighty acres of land on the southern half of the northwest half of section 31, Elmwood Precinct, to the improvement of which he has devoted his entire time and attention. Coming to Nebraska without any great financial means, in fact, a poor man, he has done exceedingly well, and the various improvements which he has planned and begun making bespeak a future replete with comfort and happiness, should his life be spared to realize a full fruition of all his hopes.

Mr. Lewis was married in the fall of 1880 to Miss Lydia E. Hite, the daughter of David and Mary (Curry) Hite. Her father was a native of Ohio, and her mother of Virginia, and she was one of a family of nine children born to her parents: John M., now deceased; James Alva, Theodore J., Flora B., Charles F., Lydia E., Nellie M., Lenora M. and Alice M. Mr. Lewis is the youngest of three children. The other two were named Elizabeth and William R. He was born on the 28th of July, 1850, in LaSalle County, Ill. He evinced a great love for study and books at an early age, and never lost an opportunity of attending the schools near his home. The father of Mr. Lewis came to Illinois in 1838. He died in 1871, sixty-five years of age. The mother, Eliza A. (Holder) Lewis, died at the age of forty-one years.

Mr. Lewis is a man who aspires to attain the highest place among his fellows, and should he continue to live in the years to come as he has lived in years that have gone, there is no question but that the fondest aspirations of his heart will be fully realized in this direction. He has been in his present location eight years. During that time, by strict integrity of purpose, and a close attention to all the details of farm life he has been enabled to build a snug little home. Although small in extent, there are none showing a greater amount of happiness and home comfort, and giving a better promise of brighter days in the future. All the avenues leading to a snug competency are open to him, and we find him most zealously pursuing his way to reach that goal. In his wife he has a true and in fact a genuine helpmate, always ready and anxious to share every burden and every care, and bestow every joy and comfort of which she is capable. A lady of refinement and taste, her home shows evidence of her skill as a housewife. Together they are a most estimable couple, and deserve all the good things that can come to them. In politics Mr. L. acts with the Democratic party. For a sketch of the lady's ancestry see the history of David Hite, Esq. As to the ancestry of the gentleman's mother, refer to the sketch of William R. Lewis.

WILLIAM MARSHALL, manager of the boot and shoe house of Charles Marshall, in Weeping Water, has charge of one of the largest concerns of the kind in the city. The business was established by the father of our subject in September, 1872, and has been familiarly known as Marshall's Shoe Store ever since that time, although having been owned by different members of the same family. Its success is indicative of the good judgment and discretion which have characterized its management from the beginning.

The subject of this sketch was born in Yorkshire,

England, April 17, 1862, and came to America with his parents when a little lad ten years of age. After landing upon the soil of this continent they made their way directly westward to this county, settling in Weeping Water, where the father engaged in the boot and shoe trade, and where our subject was reared to manhood. Here also he completed a practical education, and spending much time during his youthful days in his father's store, became at an early age familiar with all the details of the business. He assumed the management in July, 1886, and is keeping up the reputation of the family and the house in the old-time manner.

Mr. Marshall was married, Nov. 19, 1885, to Miss Ella B. Savage, who was born in McDonough County, Ill., Dec. 16, 1863. James Savage, the father of Mrs. Marshall, was one of the solid farmers of that county, his property being located within the township limits of Macomb. He came to Nebraska about 1882, and purchased land in Hamilton County, where his death took place in July, 1884. Mrs. Savage is still living, and makes her home with her daughter Ella in Weeping Water. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall are the parents of one child, a son, Spencer J., who was born Sept. 4, 1886. Mr. M. belongs to the I. O. O. F., the K. of P. and the Modern Workmen of America.

John Marshall, the father of our subject, was born in Yorkshire, England, April 18, 1830, and lived there until 1872. He married Miss Charlotte Day, a native of Worcestershire, and they became the parents of ten children, six sons and four daughters, who, with one exception, all came to America with him. Weeping Water at the time of his settlement here was a little town of 400 or 500 people, and he established his shoe store on the corner of Randolph and I streets, where it still remains. In due time there was a sign put out having upon it Marshall & Son, and later, as the father withdrew from the active business, and the sons took his place, it was changed to Marshall Bros. The first two brothers assuming charge of the business were John T. and William. Next the former withdrew and William and Arthur U. conducted the business. It is now the property of Charles Marshall, who makes his home in Syracuse, Neb.

John Marshall and his sons are equal to several full teams in their advocacy of the principles of the Republican party. They meddle very little with politics, but keep themselves thoroughly posted upon State and National events, and wield a silent influence which has its weight. They are first-class business men, attending strictly to the details of their trade, are prompt to meet their obligations, and in both the business and social circles of Cass County are marked A No. 1.

NICHOLAS HALMES, one of the most liberal and public-spirited citizens of Platts-mouth Precinct, is pleasantly located on a good farm occupying a portion of section 8, and may be properly ranked among the self-made men of Cass County. Of German birth and ancestry, he is a native of Prussia, where he was born Aug. 15, 1831. His parents were Martin and Mary (Newell) Halmes, the mother a native of the same Province as her son; they spent the latter part of their lives in Wisconsin and Nebraska. Both are now dead.

Martin Halmes, Sr., the grandfather of our subject, was born in the Province of Elza, France, where he married, and where Martin, Jr., was also born. The latter in 1814 joined the French Army, and the year following was taken prisoner by the Prussians into their country, and subsequently served in the ranks of the Prussian Army a period of three years. At the close of the war he married a Miss Newall, and was a resident of Prussia until the year 1853.

In the year above mentioned Martin Halmes, Jr., accompanied by his wife and five children, emigrated to America, and proceeding westward located in Wisconsin, where he followed farming until 1857. He then retired from active labor, and was making his plans to come to Nebraska and live with his son, our subject, when his death occurred in 1860, after having spent a few months in Chicago with his daughter, Mrs. Margaret Craig.

After the death of his father our subject brought his mother home, and she lived with him until her death, which occurred in the year 1878. Mr. Halmes came to Nebraska Territory in 1857, locating in the vicinity of the present town of Weeping Water, pre-empting 160 acres of land, which he occupied until 1866. Then selling out he removed to his present home on sections 7 and 8. Here he purchased 200 acres, twenty acres of which had been broken, but further than this there was little improvement. He at once put up a stone house and began farming. He prospered in his labors, and invested his surplus capital in additional land, being the possessor of 1,010 acres, all of which is in a productive condition.

For a man who landed upon the soil of Nebraska with a capital of $5 in his pocket, Mr. Halmes has certainly made a good record. A part of this he invested in a pair of boots, and then began working for the farmers around. The first $300 which he made he lost, being the victim of misplaced confidence. He secured unto himself a wife and helpmate in 1860, being married to Miss Henrietta Obernolte, of Plattsmouth. Of this union there were born seven children, namely: Mary, Nicholas, Peter, Lena, Rosa, George and Joseph. Mrs. Henrietta Halmes departed this life in 1880.

The present wife of our subject, to whom he was married in 1881, bears the name of Henrietta Plager. This lady, as was the former wife of our subject, is a member of the Lutheran Church, while Mr. H. belongs to the German Catholic. He is a man of decided ideas and votes independently, aiming to support the men whom he considers the most trustworthy and efficient for office.

ROBERT EMENS is a member of the firm of Gerardet, Boone & Emens, pioneer dry-goods, grocery and notion merchants of the city of Weeping Water. These gentlemen are young, active and enterprising, and have a bright and promising future before them.

Our subject was born in New Jersey, May 21, 1857, a son of Abraham Emens, who was born in the same State in 1830. The father was in business in Dayton until middle age, and there married Anna Van Arsdale, a most estimable woman, and a member of the Reformed Church. They are the parents of two children, Gertrude and our subject.

Their daughter is now Mrs. F. E. Adams, of Pekin, Ill. When Mr. Emens was about forty years of age he abandoned his native State, and the home of his birth, with all its associations, to begin life again in the Prairie State, and settling in Pekin, Ill., established himself in the mercantile business, which he carried on for three years with good success. After that he turned his attention to farming, and he now owns a fine farm eight miles west of Pekin, where he and his wife make their home. He is a man of prominence in that locality, and has held several township and county offices. His father, Jonathan Emens, was a native of New Jersey, where he carried on farming and was also engaged in other business.

Robert Emens was twelve years old when his parents became residents of Illinois, and he completed his education in the excellent High School of Pekin. After leaving school he engaged with his father on the farm until he attained manhood, and he then started out in life for himself. He remained in Illinois until 1882, when he came to Weeping Water. For some years he acted as clerk for different merchants in this State, a part of the time for Mr. Gerardet, his present partner, who was then manager for Wessel & Kohn, of Nebraska City. After the big fire of 1887 our subject, with other members of the firm, opened a new store, the doors being first opened to the public Jan. 10, 1888, since which time they have done a good and promising business. Their establishment is well fitted up and neatly arranged, and every department is well stocked with goods, the best in the market, and at reasonable prices.

Mr. Emens was married to Miss Cora Boone, of Utica, Neb., Nov. 26, 1884. To this union have been born two children—Sterling, Jr., and Hazel. Mrs. Emens was born in Manito, Ill., in 1863, and is a daughter of Thomas and Harriet (Robinson) Boone. Her father was a native of Pennsylvania, and in later life he moved to Illinois, where for some years he was engaged in farming, and there his death occurred. His widow moved to Utica, Neb., where she lived until the marriage of her daughter Cora, and is now living here with her.

Our subject is a wide-awake man, of good business principles and exceptional habits, and his sense of honor and honesty is held in such high respect by those with whom he has dealings that his word is as good as a bond. He avoids all politics, except so far as duty calls him to the polls, where he votes with the Republican party. He is prominent socially, and is a K. of P.

CHARLES H. WARNER, of Plattsburgh Precinct, came to this county without means in 1876, but is now the possessor of a good property embracing a fine farm of 150 acres, which he has brought to a good state of cultivation, and upon which he has erected neat and substantial frame buildings. He is a man highly esteemed in his community, a Republican in politics, and with his estimable wife a member in good standing of the United Brethren Church. He has been quite prominent in local affairs, serving as School Treasurer in his district two terms, and is at present a Director.

Mr. Warner is a self-made man in the strictest sense of the term, having been thrown upon his own resources when a mere child, and obliged to look out for himself. He was born in Woodford County, Ill., Dec. 25, 1853, and is the son of Calvin and Nancy A. (Clark) Warner, who were natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Ohio. The paternal grandfather, John S. Warner, was a native of Pennsylvania, and the great-grandfather of our subject a native of Germany. The latter emigrated to the United States at an early day, settling in Pennsylvania, where it is supposed he spent the remainder of his life.

John Clark, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was of Scotch ancestry, and possibly born in the "land of the thistle." It is known, however, that he was one of the earliest settlers of Wayne County, Ohio, where he spent his last days. Calvin Warner took up his abode in Woodford County, Ill., when his son Charles H. was a small boy. He was born in 1817, and departed this life at his home in Woodford County, Ill., May 15, 1862. Mrs. Nancy A. (Clark) Warner survived her husband a period of twenty years, and also passed from earth at her home in Woodford County, in 1882, at an advanced age. The parental household included five sons and two daughters. Six of these children are living.

Our subject was the fifth child of his parents, and was only seven years of age at the time of his father's death. He was then taken into the home of his uncle, Reuben Skinner, who married a sister of our subject's father. The boy lived with them until fourteen years old, then starting out for himself, made his way across the Mississippi to Nebraska Territory, and thence a short time later to Texas. He was a resident of the Lone Star State a period of five years, employing himself at whatever he could find to do, and then returned to his old haunts in Illinois. From there he came back to Nebraska in 1876.

Mr. Warner was married, Dec. 25, 1879, to Miss Barbara E., daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth (McCorkle) Wiles, of Plattsburgh Precinct. They commenced the journey of life together here, and are now the parents of three children—Alta G., Millie M. and Frederick M. The eldest of these is seven years of age, and the youngest two.

PETER PETERS. The name of this gentleman is entirely familiar among the leading farmers and stock-growers of Cass County, with whose agricultural interests he has been closely identified for many years. His history is not widely different from that of many of the prosperous men around him, he having crossed the Mississippi poor in purse and dependent upon his own resources. He now represents a fine property, and during his twenty-five years' residence in Cass County has continuously made his home in Avoca Precinct, and has built up a reputation second to none in the county as a skilled agriculturist and an upright business man. His farm of 160 acres is under a high state of cultivation and improved with substantial buildings, while his live stock is first-class, including horses, cattle and swine, he making a specialty of the two first mentioned.

Prior to becoming a resident of Nebraska Mr. Peters had sojourned in Lake County, Ill., for some years. He had emigrated to the Prairie State from Missouri, where he located when coming a stranger to a strange land. He was born in the Duchy of Holstein, Germany, in 1833, and was the fifth child and fourth son of Teis and Sophia Peters, the latter of whom died when he was a small child, and he consequently knows very little of her family history. The parental household consisted of five sons and three daughters. Teis Peter, also a native of Holstein, was reared in the agricultural districts, and upon approaching man's estate was in the Government service of Denmark for some time, and during the progress of the Danish and Prussian War. He spent his entire life afterward in his native Holstein, where his death took place when he was about fifty-five years old.

Young Peters, in common with the youth of Germany, was placed in school at an early age, where he acquired the rudiments of a practical education in his native tongue, and being a bright and observant boy, he early in life began to lay his plans for the future. Not being satisfied with the prospects in the Fatherland, he before attaining his eighteenth year set out alone for the United States, embarking on a sailing-vessel from the port of Hamburg, and arriving sixteen weeks later, in 1850, in New York City. Thence he proceeded to Chicago, Ill., by water and rail, and soon found employment on a farm in Cook County. He remained there long enough to have his heart ensnared by Miss Magdalena Schomaker and they were married in Cook County, Aug. 16, 1858.

Mrs. Peters, like her husband, was a native of Holstein, and born Feb. 23, 1826. She was the youngest of half a dozen children, the offspring of Michael and Anna (Johaken) Schomaker, who are both now deceased. The father died in Germany when his daughter, Mrs. Peters, was a child five years of age. Later the mother emigrated to America with her little family, settling in this county. Her last days were spent at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Timm, in Avoca Precinct, where she died when nearly seventy-five years old. Both parents were Lutherans in religion.

Mrs. Peters was reared to womanhood in her native Empire, and was about eighteen years old when coming to this country with other members of the family. She has become thoroughly Americanized, and is a lady in every respect praiseworthy as a wife, mother and neighbor. Of her union with our subject there have been born eight children, all of whom are living: Sophia C. W. is the wife of Richard Francen, a farmer of Valley County, this State; T. J. William married Miss Sophia Buck, and they live on a farm in Avoca Precinct; Herman O. F. B. married Miss Anna Betts, and is conducting a saloon in Avoca; H. C. Louis married Miss Ettie Bozard, and resides at Cook Station in Otoe County; A. Amelia H. is the wife of Louis Lence, a farmer of Valley County; P. George A. remains at home assisting his father in the management of the farm; Emma C. C. and Alvina A. M. (twins) are also at home with their parents.

Mr. Peters upon becoming a naturalized citizen identified himself with the Democratic party, and cast his first Presidential vote for Douglas. He has held the various local offices and signalized himself as a member of the community, thoroughly interested in its progress and welfare. Both he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the German Lutheran Church, attending services at Avoca.

HENRY F. TAYLOR is one of the most prominent of the energetic and successful farmers and stock-raisers who have been instrumental in placing Cass County among the first counties of the State by the development of her wonderful resources, and he is now among the foremost in sustaining her material prosperity. He has a large and very valuable farm, lying partly on section 25, and partly on section 36, Liberty Precinct, his residence being on the former section. Everything about the farm shows the presence of the master mind and hand, and in all its appointments it is a model estate. Mr. Taylor came to Cass County in 1864, and after being employed for a year in breaking prairie and teaming logs, he made his first purchase of 160 acres of land included in his present farm, and has ever since been actively engaged in improving and adding to it. His home farm comprises 500 acres, and the sum total of his land is over 1,000 acres. In 1876 he turned his attention to raising mules, and has since been extensively and profitably engaged in that branch of business, keeping three animals of choice breed for the purpose all of the time, and he can boast of supplying the county with as fine a lot of mules as there is in the State.

Mr. Taylor was born in Bedford County, Va., Sept. 11, 1837, and his father, Henry Taylor, was also a native of the Old Dominion, coming of Scotch parents, who were American-born. The father of our subject was reared in Bedford County, his place of birth, and was reared to the calling of farmer. He was married to Jane Agnew, a native of the same county as himself, and although her parents were American-born, they were undoubtedly of Scotch descent. After marriage Henry Taylor and wife lived in Bedford County until 1848, when, with their family, they took up their abode in Meigs County, Ohio. They settled on a farm in that county, and there some of their children were born. At the time of their settlement Meigs County, especially the part in which they located, was still in a wild state, and theirs was the pioneer task of aiding in its development by clearing a farm from the surrounding primeval forests, and in the home in Salem Township that they thus built up, with the attendant hardships and struggles of pioneer life, Henry Taylor and his wife died, he April 13, 1863, at the age of sixty-five, and she March 1, 1884, aged seventy-six. Their old farm is still in possession of their sons.

The subject of this sketch was the fourth child and third son of the family of ten sons and two daughters, nine of whom lived to maturity, six of whom are yet living, and five of these are now married. He was reared on the old homestead in Ohio, having been a boy of nine years when his parents left their Virginian home for the one in Ohio. He was a quick, self-reliant, helpful little lad, and he was obliged to assist his father in developing his farm, so that his school privileges were very meager, but he managed, nevertheless, to pick up enough of an education to make him a good business man, and make life a success. After he became of age he left Ohio, and started for the West in 1860, and arriving at St. Joseph, Mo., he and seven others formed a company to cross the plains to the Rocky Mountains in search of gold. He and his comrades crossed the Missouri River April 20, 1860, and after a long and weary journey over the plains reached their destination in Colorado Territory. Mr. Taylor worked at mining in Russell Gulch for one season, and in the vicinity of Pike's Peak the rest of the time, where he had an interest in the Lode claims. He met with fair success, but owing to Indian troubles springing up, he having considerable property in teams and wagons, considered that his chances of retaining them were very slim on the plains or in the mountains, where the redskins might seize them at any moment, so he disposed of them, and selling out all his interests in mines and claims, retraced his way back until he arrived in Nebraska, and, as we have seen, subsequently settled on his present farm.

That same year, 1864, our subject was married in Liberty Precinct, October 23, to Miss Barbara A. Lynn. She was born in Pennsylvania, Aug. 24, 1849, and is a daughter of Joshua and Sarah (Truax) Lynn, who are now living near Union, in this county. Mr. Lynn is a well-known, prosperous old settler of this county, he having crossed the Missouri River about 1857 or 1858, and has ever since made his home where he now lives on section 23. Mrs. Taylor was only a year old when her parents moved from her native State to Ohio, and later to Southern Illinois, where they lived five years. From there they moved to Fremont County, Iowa, and one year later to Nebraska, and began life on an unimproved farm, her parents then being very poor. Mrs. Taylor was trained to a thorough knowledge of domestic work, is a fine housekeeper, looks well to the ways of her household, and is a devoted wife and mother. To her and her husband twelve children have been born, two of whom, Thomas and Ida, are dead. Those living are: Emma J., the wife of Charles Morton, a farmer in Liberty Precinct; Eva L., wife of A. L. Becker, a farmer in Liberty Precinct; the others are all at home, and are receiving good educations in the public schools, their names being as follows: William, Mary, Andrew, Louisa, Callahill, Luella, Minnie and Elsie B.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are among the active and energetic people of this county, have done their share toward its improvement, and have had no unimportant share in its present wonderful development. Mr. Taylor is a sound Republican, and takes an active interest in local politics.

ISAAC N. APPLGATE is prominently identified with the local interests of Liberty Precinct, and is one of its leading farmers and stock-raisers. His farm on which he resides is undoubtedly as well improved and under as good a state of cultivation as the best in the neighborhood, and its broad, fertile acres yield him a fine annual income.

Our subject was born in Mason County, Ky., March 17, 1832, being a descendant of some of the brave, sturdy pioneers of that State. Richard Applegate, the grandfather of our subject, was a patriot of the Revolution, and also fought in the War of 1812. He was a native of Virginia, and a farmer by occupation. He was reared to a strong and vigorous manhood in the Old Dominion, and was there married to a lady whose maiden name is thought to have been Wall. They afterward moved to near Washington, Mason Co., Ky., and were very early settlers of that part of the State. They improved a farm in the wilderness, and after many long years they died of old age, and all that is mortal of their remains is reposing in the old family graveyard on the old homestead, which is still in possession of some of their descendants.

Their son Vincent, the father of our subject, was the youngest son of a family of four sons and three daughters, all of whom are deceased. He was reared to manhood in Mason County, and after he attained his majority he went to Ripley, Brown Co., Ohio, and was married to Ann Lemon. She was a native of Maryland, as were her parents, who had moved to Ohio when she was young. Her father, Hugh Lemon, and her mother spent their declining years in Brown County, where they died at an advanced age. After marriage Vincent Applegate returned to his native county in Kentucky, and lived there for some time. He subsequently went back to Ohio with his family, and settled in Brown County, and there he and his wife lived to build up a comfortable home and to rear a family of eight children. In November, 1869, the father closed his eyes to the scenes of earth, having rounded out a busy life of seventy-four years. His wife survived him until May 12, 1881, when she too passed away, having attained the venerable age of seventy-seven years. They were both upright, Christian people, the mother being a member of the Methodist Church.

Our subject was the fourth child and third son of those worthy people, and he was quite young when they took up their residence in Brown County, Ohio. He was there reared and educated, and after he became of age, attracted by the many inducements for settlement in the Great West, held forth to stalwart, energetic, self-reliant young men like himself, who wished to build up comfortable homes, he made his way to Iowa, and the next fourteen years of his life were spent there, three years in Fremont County and eleven years in Montgomery County. In the latter county he improved a farm, which he sold on coming to this State. In 1865 he visited Cass County and purchased his first land (160 acres, which he has given his son), but did not live on the place until 1868, or attempt any improvements until that time. His farm now comprises 320 acres of land, nearly all well watered, and admirably adapted in every way to raising stock, to which he pays special attention, with great success, and he has his farm well stocked with cattle of good grades. He has provided it with comfortable buildings.

During his residence in Iowa Mr. Applegate was married, Nov. 28, 1855, to Miss Margaret Carlisle. She was born in Highland County, Ohio, May 23, 1837. Her father, James Carlisle, was born in Virginia, of Virginian parentage; he was reared in his native State. He was married there, in Adams County, to Miss Abigail Wade, and they subsequently began their wedded life in Highland County, where he engaged in farming. In 1852 they moved to Iowa with a family of eight children, and settled permanently in Montgomery County, being among the early settlers of that part of Iowa. Mr. Carlisle pre-empted land, and with the assistance of his wife, built up a home from the wild prairie. They died on the homestead, the mother Aug. 13, 1869, at the age of sixty-six years, and the father in December, 1878, being then fourscore years old. Mrs. Applegate was in her girlhood when her parents moved to Iowa, and there she became of age. Since their marriage she and her husband have devoted their earnest efforts to making a comfortable, happy home. They have one child, LeRoy, who is at present engaged at his trade of blacksmith, at Nehawka, where he has a smithy, and is carrying on a flourishing business. He married Ida F. Warfield, and they have three children—Joy R., Clee and James C. Mrs. LeRoy Applegate was born in Rochester, Mo., Dec. 9, 1861, and is the daughter of Samuel and Emma (Elkin) Warfield, now residents of Broken Bow, Custer Co., Neb., where Mr. Warfield is conducting the tinner's trade. Our subject is gifted with much sagacity, foresight and practical tenacity of purpose. In his political views he is an independent Democrat.

CYRUS RODNEY ANDRUS, a homesteader of 1869, took up the southeast quarter of section 26, in Tipton Precinct, in the fall of that year, and has since given to it his best efforts in the construction of a farm. In noting his surroundings to-day the traveler is impressed with the fact that the labors of Mr. Andrus have met with ample reward. His land has been brought to a good state of cultivation, and improved with neat and substantial buildings, and the whole premises very nearly approach the modern idea of the complete country home. Mr. Andrus has now reached his fifty-first year, but is strong and robust, as the result of temperate living and correct habits, and would pass for a man many years younger.

The career which our subject marked out for himself in his early manhood and which he has endeavored to follow, has been such as to commend him to the good opinion of his fellow-citizens, who regard him with the highest confidence and esteem. He comes of an excellent old New England family, being the son of Thomas and Eliza (Beardsley) Andrus, the father a native of Rutland, Vt., and born in 1803, and the mother born in Hartford, Conn., in 1808. The paternal grandfather, also Cyrus Andrus, was a Vermont farmer in good circumstances, but finally left his native State and migrated to Pennsylvania, where he continued the pursuit of agriculture until his death, after he had arrived at the advanced age of eighty-six years. The great-grandfather of our subject was a man of property, being owner of the entire marble quarry at Green Mountain, Vt. On the mother's side Grandfather Isaac Beardsley was born in Connecticut, whence he migrated to Pennsylvania, engaged successfully in farming, and rested from his earthly labors at the age of eighty-four years.

Thomas Andrus, the father of our subject, leaving New England when a boy, settled with his parents near Seneca Lake, New York State, and was reared to manhood on a farm. At this period of his life he became interested in the lumber business, engaged in making shingles, and otherwise became identified with this industry in the Empire State. There also he was married to Miss Beardsley, and not long afterward they removed to Pennsylvania, joining the parents on both sides of the house. Mr. Andrus took up a tract of timber land in Bradford County, and before leaving the Keystone State had cleared three farms.

In the fall of 1867 Thomas Andrus decided to go beyond the Mississippi, and see something of the Great West. The end of his journey found him in Muscatine County, Iowa, where he settled and remained two years. Not quite satisfied with the prospect, he again changed his residence, coming in the fall of 1869 to this county, and homesteading eighty acres of land in Tipton Precinct. He was fairly prosperous in his labors of opening up a farm, and operated with his usual industry until advancing years admonished him it would be wise to retire. He, with his estimable partner, made his home with his son Cyrus, our subject, where he died Dec. 27, 1888, aged eighty-five years, seven months and sixteen days. Prior to coming to this State they had been for many years identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which Mr. Andrus was a chief pillar, officiating as Class-

Leader, and holding other positions of trust. Since coming to Nebraska they have been connected with the United Brethren.

To the parents of our subject there were born eight children, namely: Jane and Mabel, who died when eighteen and forty-six years old; Marietta, a resident of Pennsylvania; Truman, living in Oregon; C. Rodney, our subject; Thomas J. and Hiram, deceased; and Susan, a resident of Nebraska. Truman and Thomas served as Union soldiers in the late Civil War, the former three years, and the latter nearly four. Thomas died from the effects of hardships and exposure in Pennsylvania.

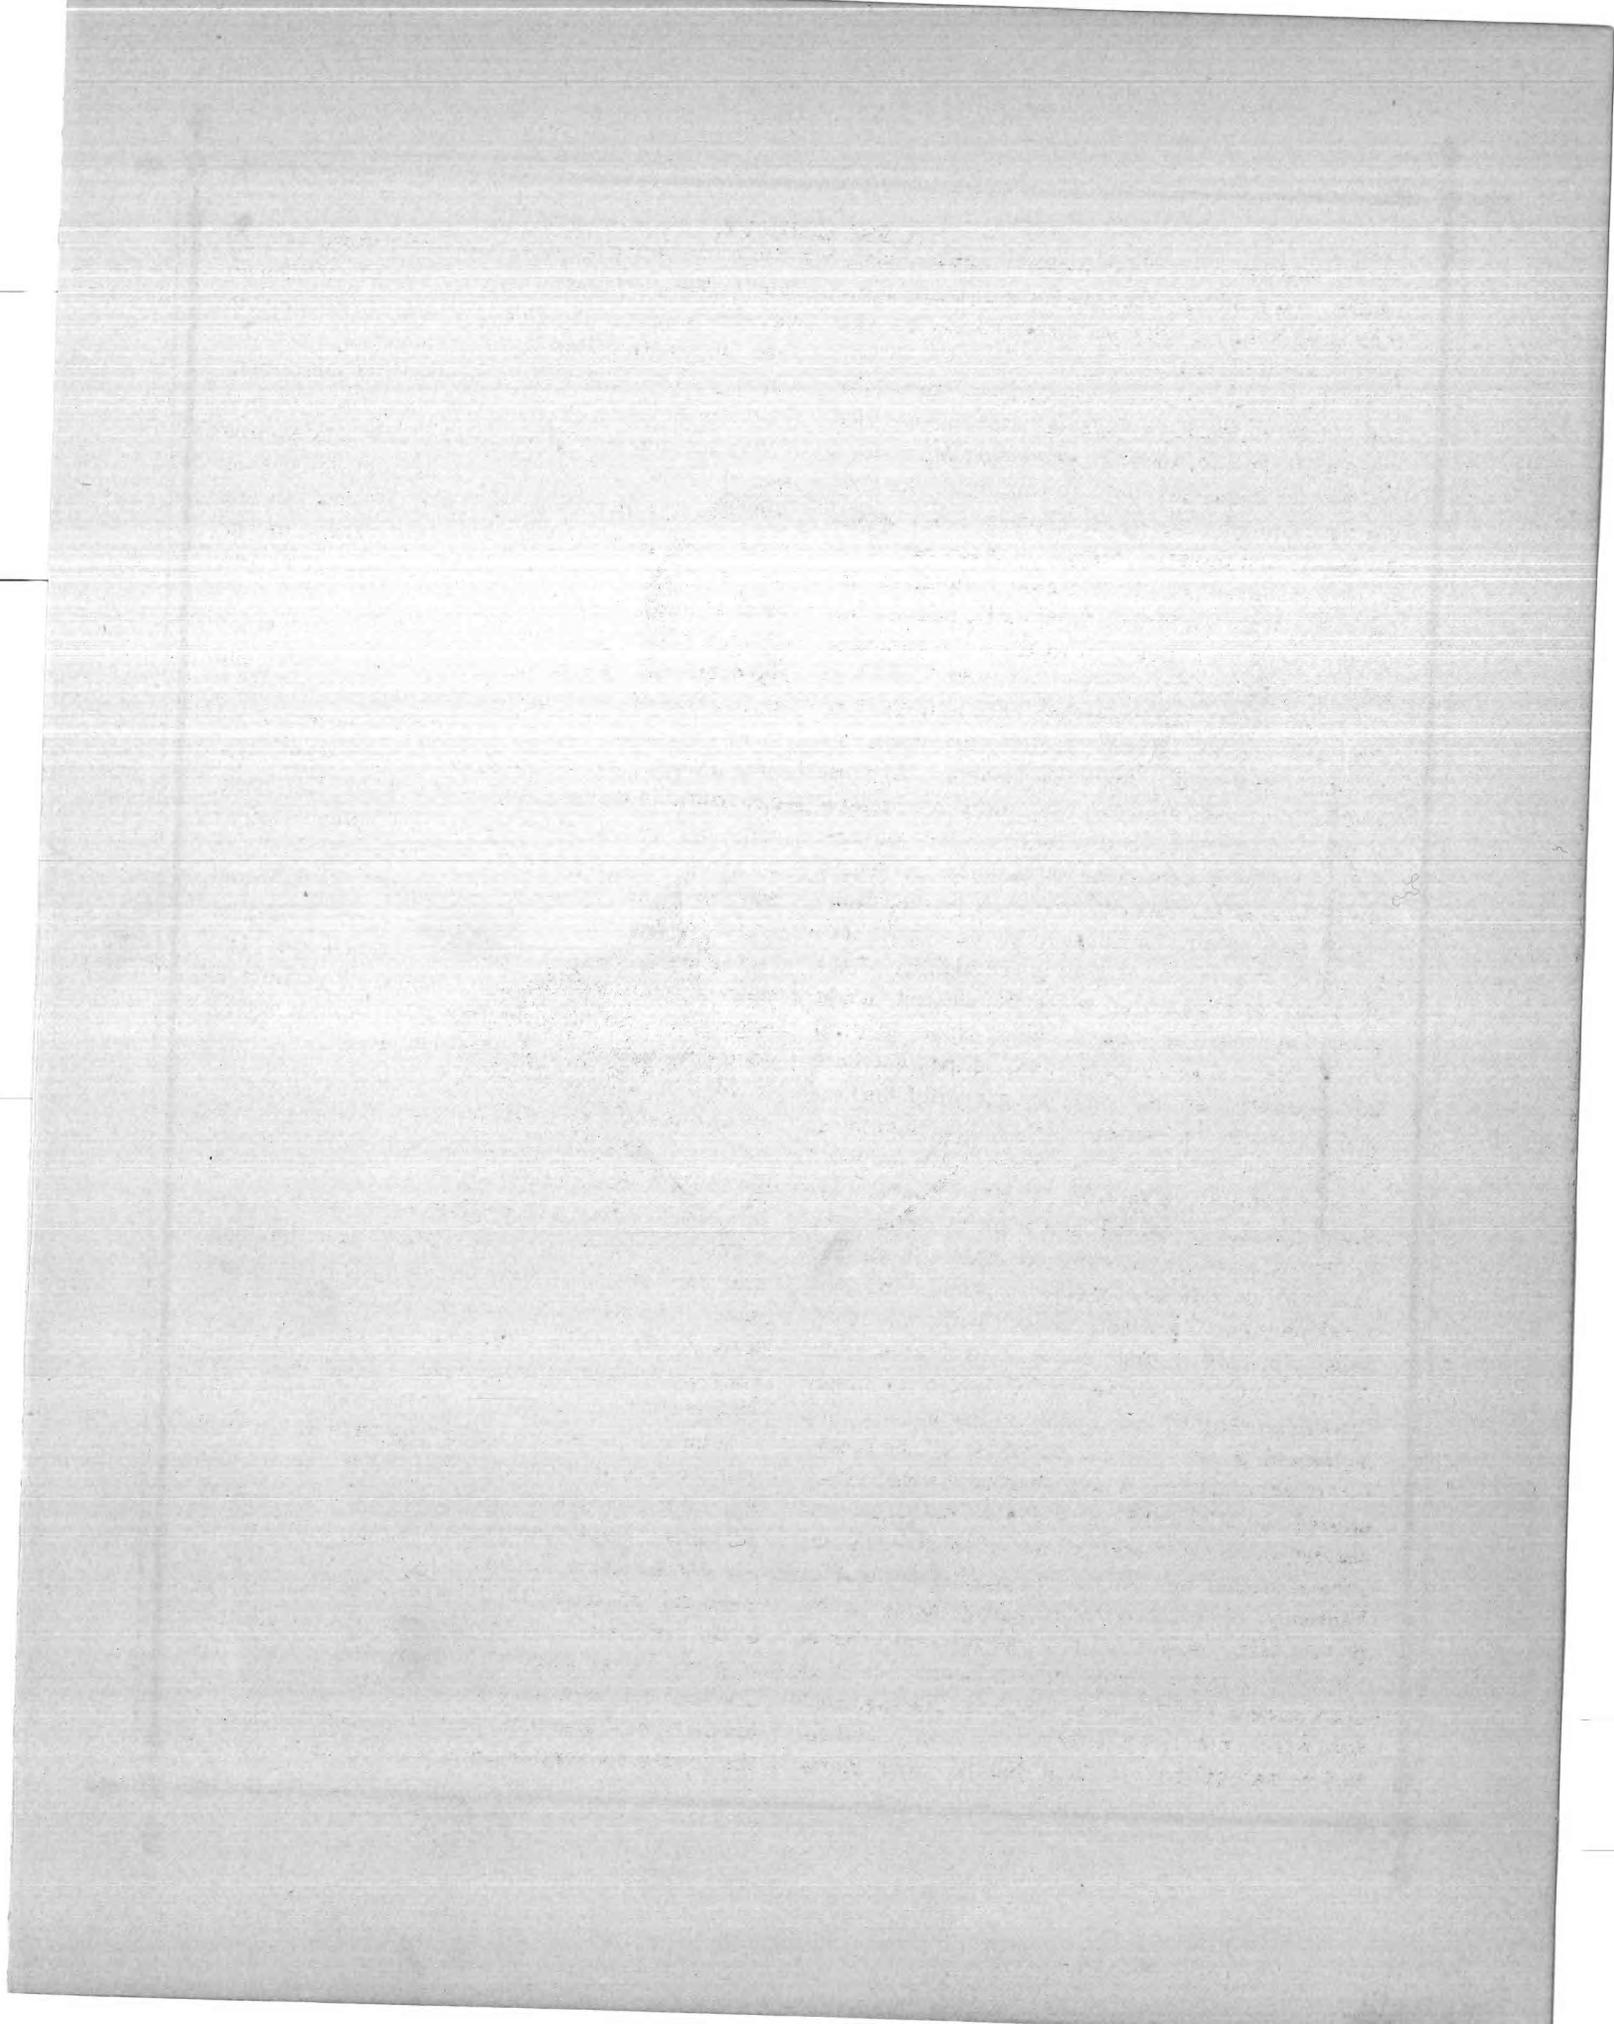

The subject of this sketch was born near Canton, Bradford Co., Pa., March 17, 1838, and spent his boyhood and youth after the manner of most farmers' sons. He attended the brief winter season of the district school until seventeen years of age, and continued a member of the parental household until reaching his majority. At this period, desirous of starting out for himself, he purchased seventy-five acres of timber land in the vicinity of the old homestead, a part of which he cleared, made good improvements, and remained upon it until 1867. He had in the meantime visited the State of Iowa, and after that could not get rid of the idea that he was on the wrong side of the mountains. He accordingly, in 1867, disposed of his property in Pennsylvania, and returning to Muscatine County, Iowa, operated on rented land there two years. In the spring of 1869, deciding to push still further westward, he gathered together his family and personal effects, and started overland with two mule-teams for the young State of Nebraska. Mr. Andrus made the journey to Nebraska in better style than many of his compeers, having sent his household goods by rail, therefore to the family it was rather a pleasure trip than otherwise. They crossed the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, and proceeding to the southwest corner of this county our subject pitched his tent in Tipton Precinct, and in February, 1869, homesteaded eighty acres of his present farm. Upon it there had been no attempt whatever at improvement, and he could not even see a human dwelling from his place. His first business was to put up a shelter for the family, and for this he was obliged to haul lumber from Plattsmouth, thirty-five miles away. There were then no paved streets or even a macadamized road, and the task of transporting building material over the country can better be imagined than described. The men of that time, however, were well equipped with resolution and perseverance, and Mr. Andrus was in nowise lacking in these qualities. It never occurred to him to look back after he had put his hand to the plow, and he surmounted this as well as the scores of other difficulties which presented themselves from time to time.

After effecting the most urgent arrangements for the comfort of his family our subject began the cultivation of his land, the planting of fruit and forest trees, the fencing of his fields, and the erection of additional buildings as he had need. He has now a flourishing apple orchard of 380 trees, and a fine grove. The land is plentifully watered by a running stream, and the fields are enclosed with hedge and wire fencing. Mr. A. in due time added to his real estate by the purchase first of eighty acres, his father's homestead, and later 160 acres of well-improved land besides. The farm is largely devoted to stock-raising, Mr. Andrus having good grades of cattle, horses and swine.

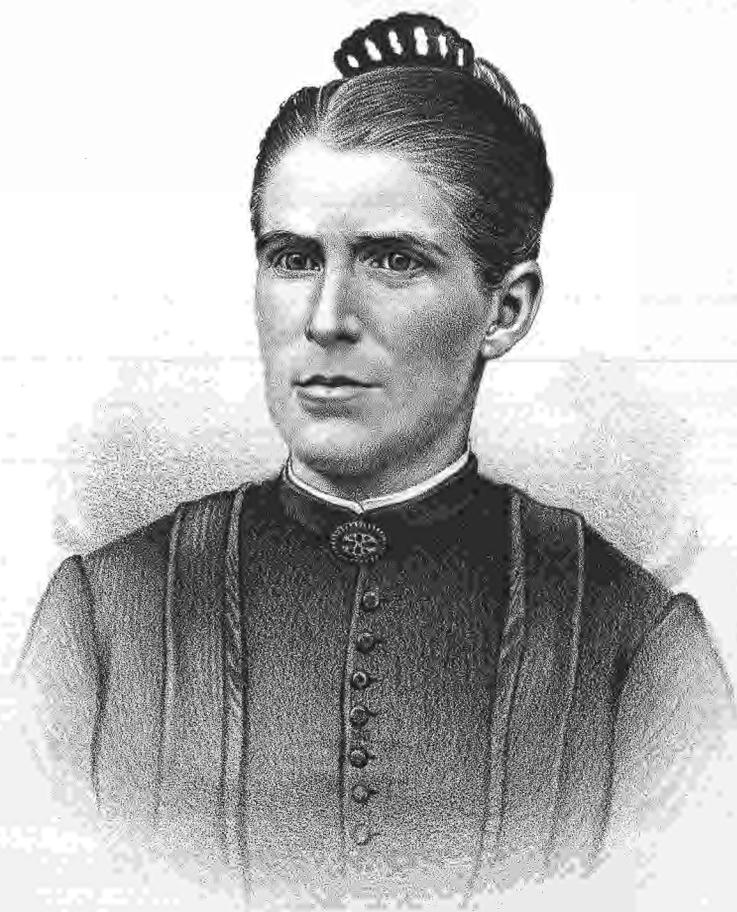

Our subject prior to leaving his native State provided himself with a wife and helpmate, Miss Anna Matson, their marriage taking place at the home of the bride in Bradford County, Pa., Feb. 1, 1860. Mrs. Andrus was born in May, 1841, in Ohio, and is the daughter of James and Mary (Kels) Matson, who were natives of Vermont, and are now in New Jersey. Of her union with our subject there were born, in 1861, twins, who died not long afterward. They have since had no children. They have, however, performed the part of parents to a boy known as John Andrus, who is now living on his homestead claim in Lincoln County, Neb. In that county also Mr. Andrus has a tract of 160 acres of timber claim.

The first Presidential vote cast by Mr. Andrus was for Abraham Lincoln. In view of this fact it is scarcely necessary to add that he is a Republican of the first water, and he has assisted in the election of every Republican President since that time. He has been active in the support of the principles of his party in this section, officiating as a delegate to the county conventions, and laboring as he has had opportunity to further its interests. He has been, most of the time since coming here, a member of the School Board of his district, served as Justice of the Peace two years, and has represented his precinct in the County Board of Supervisors. Both he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the United Brethren Church, attending services at Union. Mr. Andrus officiates as Class-Leader, and is Assistant Superintendent of the Sunday-school. In this brief summary of his life it will be seen that he has been a good and useful citizen, and one whose name will be held in remembrance long after he has been gathered to his fathers.

Asgil S. Will

Barbara E. Will

ASGIL S. WILL. There is no pleasanter picture to be found on the face of the globe than a well-regulated country estate, with fields of green and gold, with well-fed cattle, horses and swine, substantial farm buildings, groves of forest trees and orchards of fruit trees, and the air of plenty and comfort which surrounds the ideal homestead. These thoughts were suggested in a most forcible manner as the biographer strolled over a portion of the farm belonging to the subject of this sketch. He found him comfortably located on section 1, in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and the owner of 400 acres of land, of which he became the possessor in February, 1883.

During the early settlement of Nebraska, and before making his present purchase, Mr. Will had for some years operated on rented land, and thus acquired the capital with which to secure his first quarter-section, which lay in Rock Bluff Precinct. In the spring of 1886 he added to his real estate, and by subsequent purchase has become the owner of 400 broad acres, which, under his wise management, makes an estate of great value. The improvements are first-class, the dwelling being convenient and substantial, and the barn and other out-buildings suitably arranged for the storing of grain and the shelter of stock. Of the latter Mr. Will keeps about 200 head of cattle alone; he is, in fact, one of the largest stock-feeders in this locality. By close attention to business this industry has been to him the source of a fine income. The Will homestead, with its appurtenances, is one of the distinctive features of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and reflects great credit upon the perseverance and industry of him by whom it was inaugurated and is being perpetuated.

A native of the Old Dominion, our subject was born in Highland County, April 23, 1848, and is the son of Washington W. and Elizabeth (Arbogast) Will, the former of whom died about 1877. They also were natives of Virginia, and traced their ancestry to England. The paternal grandfather settled in Virginia during its early days, and there spent the remainder of his life. On the mother's side of the house the family were among the pioneers of Highland County. The parental family included seven children, six of whom are living. Of these Asgil S., our subject, was the eldest born son. Susan is the wife of Josiah Palmer, of Highland County, Va.; Swope H. came to the West about 1883, and lives in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, this county; Virginia married J. A. Harold, and they continue residents of West Virginia; Molly, the wife of Isaac Eckard, also lives there; William came to Nebraska about 1887. The mother is still living, being now nearly seventy years of age, and continues a resident of her native State. She is a good woman in the broadest sense of the term, and is held by her children and neighbors in the highest regard.

Mr. Will was reared to man's estate in his native county, where he was early trained to habits of industry, and received but a limited education. He, however, availed himself of every opportunity to gain useful knowledge, and there are few men possessed of more practical information, and with whom it is more pleasant or profitable to converse. He found his bride in his native county, being married, Jan. 16, 1870, to Miss Barbara, daughter of Miles and Catharine (Waybright) Harold, who were also Virginians by birth, and who are now living in that State.

Mr. and Mrs. Will commenced their wedded life together in Highland County, Va., and there became the parents of three children. Their household finally numbered seven, four sons and three daughters. These were named respectively: Frederick S., Jasper N., Blanche, Nora B., Thomas, Minnie and Grover. Mr. Will cast his first Presidential vote for Horace Greeley in 1872, and has since continued a strong supporter of Democratic principles. He is at present serving as a School Director in his district, and lends a helping hand to those projects designed for the general welfare of the community. A man prompt to meet his obligations, and one scorning a mean action, he is a typical Virginian, with decided ideas, and one who, while having a thorough respect for the old usages, avails himself also of the new methods, and takes advantage of the age of progress, reducing to practice the theories which commend themselves to his judgment and understanding. In the management of his farm and business interests he displays the practical good judgment which is invariably crowned with success, and thus we find him surrounded by all of the comforts and many of the luxuries of life.

Portraits of our subject and his estimable wife appear on adjoining pages, and elsewhere in this volume will also be found a view of his fine residence, which is a feature of the precinct.

JOSEPH T. MILLS, a prosperous farmer and leading citizen, resides on section 8, Elmwood Precinct. He was born July 19, 1838, in the town of Argyle, Washington Co., N. Y., where he lived with his parents until reaching the age of twelve years, when the family removed to Peoria County, Ill., where his mother died in 1880, aged seventy years. He was the eldest son in a family of ten children, four sons and six daughters, born to his parents. His father now resides on section 4, in Elmwood Precinct, seventy-seven years old. The early years of our subject were spent in the ordinary farm duties of the time, and for many winters he drove oxen, hauling sawlogs and other similar work, in which he became an expert, having driven as high as nine teams of oxen at once. He pursued this life until the Civil War opened, and he at the age of twenty-four enlisted, Aug. 11, 1862, in Company E, 77th Illinois Infantry. He was mustered into the service at Peoria. From Peoria the regiment was sent South, and was attached to the 1st Brigade, 4th Division, 13th Army Corps. They first encountered the rebels in the swamps of the Yazoo River, before the battles of Vicksburg. They also participated in the engagement at Arkansas Post.

The regiment of which our subject was a member was engaged in digging the canal that was designed by Gen. Grant to turn the floods of the Mississippi River, and leave Vicksburg an inland town. They took an active part in the siege of that city, and had a fierce and bloody encounter with the rebels at Champion Hills. In 1863 they were in the Louisiana campaign; in the autumn of the same year were in the Matagorda Bay expedition. In the spring of 1864 he was in the Red River campaign. In the desperate battle at Sabine Cross Roads or Mansfield, he and many other comrades were taken prisoners by the rebels and taken to Camp Ford, as the prison at Tyler, Tex., was known. At this place they suffered everything but death. The second night after arrival they had only raw cornmeal and salt meat to eat, and no water to drink. After suffering similar hardships for a long time, Lieut. Henry L. Bushnell and our subject planned to escape, and on Feb. 12, 1865, they were successful in getting away, and they eluded their pursuers until they reached Louisiana, when they were recaptured and placed in the bull-pen at Shreveport, La. The adventures and experiences had by the comrades were at once hazardous and romantic. Being pursued, and right in the rear of the rebel army, making their way slowly onward, suffering every hardship and hunger, cold and exposure, and their final recapture, would furnish an inexhaustible theme for the pen of the novelist.

In April, 1865, they were removed from Shreveport to Tyler, Tex., and confined in their first prison. For many weeks and months he, with his comrades, eked out a miserable existence in this Southern hell. While there the last time he became acquainted with John T. Roberts, of Lieut. Earl's United States Secret Service, who had been taken prisoner while out on a scouting expedition up the Mississippi River, and taken to Shreveport, La. Here also he met Confederate Maj. Robinson, who proved to be a loyal man at heart, although forced to serve in the Confederate Army. Upon conversation they found they were both born near the same place in New York. The Major gave our subject a blanket and woolen shirt, which he needed very badly. While traveling in New York State a year or two ago he was happily surprised to meet the Major, and they passed many hours recalling the life in Tyler. The soldier Roberts, above referred to, did not dare reveal his identity, either to the prisoners or the Confederates. Had he done so he would have been tried and executed as a spy. He passed himself off as being a member of the 2d New York Cavalry.

Our subject was the only man who gained his confidence to such a degree that he told him his real character and the branch of the service to which he belonged, and when captured was out on an expedition as special spy. Roberts was an interesting character, and it would have been pleasant to have continued the friendship formed under such trying circumstances, but Mr. Mills has lost track of him since he parted with him at New Orleans, at the close of the war. "Roberts of Natchez," as he was usually called, was a Southern born man, but a loyal Union citizen. He was offered a commission as Lieutenant Colonel if he would enter the Confederate service, but he hated the rebels and their cause, and to all their overtures he replied: "The stars and stripes shall be my winding sheet." They tried to make their escape in many ways. A second attempt was unsuccessful; they were quickly discovered and brought back to the prison. While in that prison our subject saw deeds of cruelty that would make one's blood run cold. Although they were often defeated in their attempts to get away they were determined to try again, and were always on the watch for something to turn up that would be to their advantage, and it was not long until the opportunity came. One day twenty prisoners were out in the woods for the purpose of gathering brush for fuel. Roberts and our subject met a disabled prisoner from the 6th Kansas Cavalry. Arrangements were made at once to have him go back to prison in order to make the number twenty, and let Roberts escape, and Roberts was to wait until Mills could make his escape and meet him. Like a flash this plan suggested itself: Twenty more of the boys would be let out in the afternoon to gather brush, and it was his plan to jump over the stockade while the guards were not looking. In this hazardous undertaking he was singularly successful, and the same afternoon he joined Roberts at a ravine west of the graveyard, as previously agreed upon.

Mr. Mills and his comrade Roberts now being out of the stockade, laid their course toward the Sabine River. They had no arms or means of defense but a dirk knife. They put asafetida on their feet so the hounds might not trace them. At length, after enduring many hardships and privations, they reached the river. They ingeniously constructed a raft from sassafras poles that had been used in a trap to catch wild hogs. Mounting their raft away they went down the river, until finally the raft, began to sink, the wood having absorbed so much water, and they were obliged to abandon it. Scouting along the river bank they finally discovered a flat-bottom boat, which they appropriated to their use, and continued their journey down the river for a distance of 400 miles. It would require a volume to describe this journey with all its incidents, narrow escapes and dangers. They traveled at night and camped in the daytime, when they would conceal themselves and their boat. At one time they were lost in one of the numerous bayous.

For the first time in their journey they were not able to agree—Roberts wanted to leave the boat and Mills wanted to keep it. Roberts was of a very nervous disposition, and he broke down entirely. Being lost in a dismal place and at the point of starvation, and at the constant risk of being recaptured, were things that would test the bravest heart. Roberts swore, prayed and cried alternately. Mr. Mills finally succeeded in persuading him to stick to the boat, and carefully watching the current of the water, they were, in the course of an hour afterward, in the main channel of the Sabine River. Their objective point was the United States gunboats, which they knew were on the coast in the Gulf of Mexico. They had but little food for several days, and were now growing desperate. The small amount of parched cornmeal and sugar Mr. Mills had received from the boys, which he had stored away in his haversack while in the prison, was exhausted. Roberts declared he would sooner starve than be caught in attempting to procure food, but a hungry man will undertake almost anything to relieve his sufferings. One night about 12 o'clock they came to a large plantation. Roberts at first thought it would be advisable to kill a mule with their knife, but finally they came to a place where a lot of hogs were confined. He got a piece of a rail and raised it to strike a porker on the head, but the blow took effect on a beam overhead. This aroused the hogs of course, so he came down to the river again, as he had left it, without any food.

There was a fine cypress canoe belonging to the plantation, which they decided to take in exchange for their old friend, the flat-bottom boat. After a little consultation they formed the following plan: Mills should go up again to the plantation and make an effort to get some corn out of the crib, and if he was detected he should run back to the canoe, get into it and float down with the current. He was to lie flat on the bottom of the boat so he could not be hurt should he be fired at. This was a good plan, and its fulfillment undoubtedly saved his life. He approached the corn-crib very carefully, as he thought, but not so still but that he awakened a pack of hounds, who came rushing at him. He, thinking discretion the better part of valor, made for the canoe with all the speed of which he was capable. By the time he reached the boat twenty of the dogs were on the bank ready to attack him, he having escaped them by a very small margin of safety. Entering the boat with Roberts they resumed their journey down the stream. Their search for food in this instance proved unavailing.

As morning was approaching they turned their boat into a bayou for the day's rest, and both being exhausted they fell soundly asleep. Our subject awakening from a frightful dream heard strange noises. Climbing to the top of a burr-oak tree he could see a large plantation in the distance. The noise which awoke him were the yells of a colored woman who was being terribly whipped. He aroused Roberts and told him of their dangerous situation. Without another word they got into their boat and moved down the river, seeking a more secluded place, which they found, and where they landed and concealed their boat. They had just got the boat hidden and themselves into shelter, when three white men, armed with guns, rowed down the river, evidently looking for our refugees. They apparently belonged to the plantation where the hounds had made the racket the night before. This was one of the many providential escapes and deliverances which occurred during this eventful journey. For two days more they had nothing to nourish them but sweet-briar root. Every night they would pass from two to four rebel boats. In such instances they rowed alongside of the rebels, so the men on board those boats could not see our wanderers, who had procured and wore the rebel uniform. If they had rowed on the opposite side of the stream they would have been seen and detected. During all the journey they spoke only to negroes, and when they got food or other supplies from them they swore them into eternal silence.

Mr. Mills says he will never forget one full-blooded African he met. One night, driven by hunger, they stopped at a large plantation and went up to arouse one of the negroes, and if possible procure something to eat. Of course this was a great risk. He succeeded in arousing a colored man and making him swear that he would never tell on him, and that he would support Abe Lincoln's government, and much more on the same line, to which the colored man eagerly assented, and faithfully gathered up all the crumbs and food left from the previous evening meal, and a quantity of corn meal, which he gave Mr. Mills. The old darkey was loyal to the heart's core, and he pleaded that he might go with our subject, promising him that he would assist him all he could, and when the war ended he would live with him all his life. They did not take him with them, but sped on their journey down the river.

The rebels were stationed close to Sabine Lake, near which the refugees must pass. There they sunk their boat and concealed themselves in the rushes, having no weapons but oyster shells to protect themselves from the alligators, which abounded in the water. Resuming their journey at nightfall they repeated the experience the following day. On a large beech tree they cut their names; our subject says he would give $50 for a small piece of, that tree if he could get it now. They pushed their way onward, and soon found themselves at the delta of the Sabine, which they found to coincide exactly with the information they had received from the colored man who was so anxious to accompany them. The next problem that presented itself for solution was to pass the rebel fort without being discovered. After having suffered so much they were now confronted by one of the gravest difficulties. At the hazard of their lives they rowed past the piling along the side of the fort. It seemed as though their hearts were in their throats, and that they would never get past it, although they pulled at the oars like madmen.

Having successfully passed the fort a new and hitherto unthought-of difficulty presented itself. They had no water to drink; the body of water on which they were was brackish, made so by the salt waters from the Gulf, so that they were enduring not only the pangs of hunger but of thirst also. They passed the wrecks of the steamers "Sachem" and "Clifton," that were wrecked by the rebels, the crews of which they had seen while imprisoned at Tyler, Tex., the place they were now fleeing from. After suffering everything but death in their perilous journey of sixteen days and nights, they at last beheld the United States man of war, named "Owasco," commanded by Capt. Pennington, lying some four or five miles out to sea. The wind blew a gale and the waves rolled fearfully, yet not to be deterred by these, they started directly toward the ships. As the waves would raise them to the crest they signalled the ships, a lifeboat was lowered from one, uniformed men and officers starting out to meet them.

By this time our subject and his companion were so seasick and exhausted from their privations that they could not lift an oar. They were clothed in Confederate gray, and when they met the rescuing vessel the Captain greeted them thus: "Hello, Johnnies!" Roberts said: "Damn you, we are not Johnnies." Captain: "Well, who the devil are you then?" Roberts: "We're live Yankees from Tyler, Tex." Captain: "Do you know the officers of the "Sachem" and "Clifton?" They replied that they did. Our subject was so sick and weak he could scarcely climb the ladders lowered to the boats. He was so emaciated he could have easily spanned his waist. Upon stepping on board the vessel the reaction from the long-continued suspense was so great that Mr. Mills trembled violently, the first time in his life he had ever experienced anything of the kind. The ship on which they were received was the man of war "Owasco," commanded by Capt. Pennington.

Our subject says his conception of heaven is no sweeter than the feelings he experienced when he found himself on board the "Owasco," after passing through the many perils and dangers in his journey from Tyler to freedom. The officers and soldiers on board the vessel vied with each other in showing deeds of kindness. Their clothing, which they had worn so long, was infested with vermin. It was taken away, and after a luxurious bath, and passing through the barber's chair, where they were shaved and had their hair cut, Mr. Mills and Mr. Roberts were provided with nice flannel shirts and officers' clothing. They were daily tendered princely receptions, and were allowed the freedom of the boat. After living this life for sixteen days, the United States mail steamer "Augusta Dinsmore" took them on board, and landed them in New Orleans, where they met the members of their old company who had been with them in Tyler, who had been exchanged and had arrived in New Orleans six days before our subject and his companion. Here our two companions in misery, Mr. Mills and Mr. Roberts, were obliged to separate, and they have never met since that time. Mr. Mills was mustered out of service and honorably discharged at Springfield, Ill., in June, 1865. Upon his arrival at New Orleans he had written to his home at Peoria advising of his safe return, the receipt of which was like a message from the dead, and many sad hearts were made happy.

Mr. Mills was married, in 1867, to Miss Frances Morris, a native of Indiana. After their marriage they made their home for one year in Henderson County, Ill., where they rented a farm. Like many other old soldiers he came to the growing State of Nebraska; in 1868, and settled in Elmwood Precinct. Their experiences were common with all other early settlers in this State; their hardships were no greater and no less. They have an interesting family of five children—Lizzie, Hattie, James M., Joseph T. and Mabel. In 1869 Mr. Mills sold his homestead to Mr. Towle, and the same year purchased his present farm on section 8, where he has prospered and done well. Both himself and wife have worked hard and long, and in consequence they find themselves surrounded with comforts and a competency that will carry them through to the end.

The father of our subject, James Mills, as well as his mother, were natives of Washington County, N. Y. Grandfather Mills served in the American Army during the War of 1812. The ancestors of both parents came to New York from Ireland and Scotland.

Our subject has just purchased another tract of eighty acres of land, making him the owner of 280 acres in all. His farm is very valuable on account of its favorable location, as well as the many improvements thereon. He has planted a fine orchard, large quantities of shrubbery and ornamental trees, has two fish ponds well stocked with carp. His residence is large and roomy, his barns and cattle sheds are first class, and taken altogether, it shows that the gentleman is well informed and abreast of the times in the science of agriculture. He is a member of the G. A. R., and a strong Republican.

JOHN WOLPERT. In the record following we have that of a man who has seen much of pioneer life, and has performed his part in the development of a section of land in this county. Self-made in the strictest sense of the word, he from the beginning was dependent upon his own resources, acquiring early in life the habit of industry and perseverance, which served him so well in later years. He came to this county in the summer of 1871, and for a time worked around among the farmers, gaining among them a reputation for honesty and industry, which made friends for him wherever he went. In the spring of 1874 he settled upon the land which he now owns, and which, under his good management, soon began to assume the proportions of a comfortable homestead.

A native of the Province of Baden, Germany, our subject was born Jan. 15, 1831, and is the son of Sebastian and Margaret (Kuhngamberger) Wolpert, who were also of German birth and ancestry. The father was a farmer by occupation, and the parental household was completed by the birth of six children, of whom the following survive, namely: Michael F., a resident of Detroit, Mich.; John, our subject, and Sebastian, Jr., of LaSalle County, Ill. The parents are deceased.

Mr. Wolpert continued in the Fatherland until reaching man's estate, receiving a good practical education in the public schools of his native Province. March 23, 1852, he took passage at Havre on a sailing-vessel bound for the United States, and after an ocean voyage of thirty-two days landed safely in the city of New York. He was accompanied by neighbors, and after a very brief sojourn in the great metropolis, set out for Southern Ohio, and for two months was employed at gardening in the vicinity of Cincinnati. Later he migrated to Indiana, and spent about one year in the city of Indianapolis and vicinity. During his migrations he was by degrees learning to speak and read in the English language, and made very good headway. Finally returning to Ohio, he went up into the northeastern part of the State, and for a short time worked on a farm near Sandusky City. We next find him in Chicago, Ill. He there employed himself at whatever he could find to do, and later sojourned in various parts of the Prairie State, whence he finally came to Nebraska.

It will thus be seen that Mr. Wolpert has traveled over a considerable portion of the West, and in his migrations he kept his eyes open to what was going on around him, gaining a good idea of the people of the United States, and the manner in which they carried on business. After becoming a resident of Nebraska, and ready to establish a fireside of his own, he was united in marriage with Miss Annie Exmaker, the wedding taking place in Cass County,

Feb. 10, 1874. Mrs. Wolpert, like her husband, was a native of Germany, and a lady possessing all the womanly virtues, being a faithful and devoted wife, a true and careful mother. There were born of this union three children, namely: Joseph, Nov. 21, 1874; Maggie, March 22, 1878; and Katie, April 17, 1880. Mrs. Annie Wolpert departed this life at the homestead in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, Dec. 14, 1884, leaving a most affectionate family to mourn their loss. They have sadly missed her since she passed away, and her name will ever be held in the tenderest remembrance.

The farm of Mr. Wolpert was a raw prairie when he first took possession, without buildings or other improvements. In his career have been finely illustrated the thrift and prudence inherited from his ancestry. To the German nationality, Nebraska, as well as other Western States, is largely indebted for the development of her resources, and the subject of this sketch has in nowise been behind his countrymen in contributing his quota to the best interests of his adopted country, as a representative of her thrift and intelligence. Mr. W. cast his first Presidential vote for Fillmore, and is an unwavering supporter of Democratic principles. In religious matters he belongs to the German Catholic Church.

JOHAN G. HANSEN. The large and well-cultivated landed possessions of the subject of this sketch are finely located on section 11 in Avoca Precinct, to which the proprietor came and selected his claim when there was not a white man within sight. He was in fact the very first settler in this part of the county, and has been a resident of Cass and Otoe Counties since 1854—a period of thirty-four years. He pre-empted his present homestead of 160 acres in the fall of 1857, and for thirty years has given his time and attention to its cultivation and improvement. It is one of the finest bodies of land along the southern line of the county, amply watered by a branch of the Weeping Water. The home farm of our subject by no means comprises the extent of his possessions, for he is one of the largest land-owners in Cass County, his property probably embracing an area of nearly 800 acres. The most of this is very fertile, and largely devoted to stock-raising. At the homestead proper is a substantial stone residence, flanked by the other farm buildings indispensable to the modern agriculturist, together with the other surroundings of modern country life.

A native of the Duchy of Holstein, Germany, our subject was born Sept. 18, 1828, of parents who were of pure German ancestry. His father, Peter Hansen, was a highly educated gentleman, and for years a teacher in the public schools of the Fatherland. Later he turned his attention to farming, and spent his entire life upon his native soil, passing away in 1846, when fifty-two years old. He had married in early manhood Miss Catherine Huesman, who is still living, and has now reached the advanced age of ninety-two years. She continues a resident of her native Holstein, and for some time has been afflicted with blindness. The household circle included nine children, four of whom are living, and residing mostly in Germany and the United States.

Mr. Hansen began his early education in the schools of his native land, and when reaching man's estate joined the army, and participated in the Revolution of 1848. Later he was a soldier of the regular army of Denmark, and during those years of his military service saw considerable active fighting. He was still unmarried when in April, 1853, resolving to seek his fortunes on another continent, he took passage at Hamburg on the sailing-vessel "John Hermann," Capt. Hickman commanding. He had an unusually smooth voyage of six weeks and three days, and landed upon American soil in the city of New York. Thence he proceeded to Davenport, Iowa, where he employed himself as a farm laborer. He had been thrown upon his own resources early in life, and came to this country a poor man. After reaching Iowa he labored with genuine German thrift, prudence and industry, and in due time found himself in a condition to operate as his own man.

Mr. Hansen decided to commence farming for himself on the soil of Nebraska, and coming to this county, July 3, 1854, began operating on land which he pre-empted. He kept bachelor's hall until the summer of 1861, but on the 17th of June of that year secured unto himself a wife and help-mate in the person of Miss Wilhelmina Obernolte. This lady was born in the town of Detmold, Germany, Nov. 8, 1843, and is the daughter of Christ and Henrietta (Kahee) Obernolte, who came to America with their family in May, 1859, locating first in Cook County, Ill. Later they sought the farther West, and settled at Plattsmouth, this State, in 1860, where the father died the year following, aged sixty-eight years and nine months.

The father of Mrs. Hansen was a bricklayer and stonemason by trade, at which he was employed from early manhood until his decease. The mother survived her husband many years, spending her last days with her daughter, and passing away Sept. 7, 1887, when nearly sixty-nine years old. Both parents were members of the Lutheran Church. Mrs. Hansen was a maiden of sixteen years when she came to the United States, and she remained under the home roof until her marriage. Of her union with our subject there have been born nine children, one of whom died in infancy; Peter C. married Miss Maggie Burdis, and is farming in Cass County, Neb.; Emma C. is the wife of Henry Obernolte, and they live on a farm in Sibley County, Minn.; Simon, E. George, Helena A., Augustus F., Charles W. and Anna M. H. are at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen are Lutherans in religion, and our subject, politically, votes the straight Republican ticket. In the construction of one of the finest farms of Cass County he has thus contributed to its general development and progress, and should by no means be left unrecorded in a work of this kind.

ELAM K. PARMELE, proprietor of a livery, feed and sale stable at Elmwood, is one of the oldest settlers of Nebraska, coming here in 1857, and he has spent all but four years in this State since that time. He may be denominated a pioneer of this town, to whose upbuilding he is contributing much by his enterprise. He has quite an extensive livery establishment here, and is doing a thriving business.

Our subject is a native of New York, born near Buffalo, March 1, 1833, and his early years were passed in the place of his birth, gleaning an education in the public schools. His parents, Quortus and Martha (Kincaid) Parmele, were natives of Pennsylvania, of English and Scotch descent respectively. The paternal grandfather was a farmer in Pennsylvania. The father of our subject studied medicine, and was graduated from some school, from which he received a diploma. He was a finished scholar, and subsequently adopted the profession of teacher. He was also a talented musician, one of the finest singers in New York State, and at one time taught singing school. He afterward entered the mercantile business, having a dry-goods store in Rochester, N. Y. His establishment was burned at the time of the Rochester fire, and he did not resume business in that city. In 1847 he moved to Chicago with his family, going from Buffalo on a sailing-vessel, the "Sandusky," by the lakes. In that city he was employed two years keeping books. At the end of that time he took up his residence in Mackinaw Township, Tazewell Co., Ill. His death occurred in that town in 1853. He was a man of good parts, of a vigorous mentality, and was in his day a man of prominence in his community. He was gifted with oratorical powers, and was a noted stump speaker in his native State, being a leader in the Whig party. To him and his wife were born eight children, as follows: Lydia, who died in Illinois; Calvin H., a banker in Plattsmouth; Ellen, now Mrs. Hutchinson, of Lincoln; Elam K.; Sarah, who died in Plattsmouth; Coraline and Martha; Allie lives in Weeping Water.

Elam K was fourteen years old when his parents moved to Chicago, and he attended the public schools in that city until the removal of the family to Tazewell County, two years later. When nineteen years of age he began life for himself, securing work in a foundry, and was in the employment of Mr. D. W. Wizner, driving a four-horse team for three years. He then went to Oskaloosa, Iowa, in the interests of a lightning rod agency, and was thus engaged for the ensuing five years.

While in the employ of Mr. Wizner, who operated a sawmill, our subject drew the first load of timber to Bloomington that went into the Illinois Central Railway depot at Bloomington, Ill.

In 1857 he came to Plattsmouth, finding it but an insignificant place, amid wild surroundings, with a few rough houses, and the one store kept in a log house. He went into partnership with his brother in the livery business. They remained together one year, and then his brother disposed of his share to him, and our subject continued business alone, doing a prosperous business. In 1861 he went back to Marion County, Iowa, and established himself in the same business in the town of Knoxville, putting up a livery barn. He had it well fitted up with a good supply of horses, and was doing well, when a fire occurred in 1864, and everything was destroyed, barn, teams and all. This was a severe loss, and nearly ruined him financially, but with characteristic pluck, he was soon up and at it, setting up another stable, and gradually picked up his old trade. In the spring of 1865 he returned to Nebraska, driving across the country, and again opened a livery stable in Plattsmouth. He continued there until 1879, when he sold out, and moving to Saunders County, purchased 120 acres of wild land, a part of it improved, near Ashland. He there engaged in farming and stock-raising. But that venture did not prove successful, so at the end of two years he disposed of his property, and once more took up his residence in Cass County. He bought a farm of eighty acres in Elmwood, which was well improved, and had a large orchard. He managed it for two years, and did well financially. In 1874 he traded it for a livery stable in Greenwood. He went into partnership with another gentleman, but their connection proved disastrous, and in 1876 Mr. Parmele sold out, and in the month of April came to Elmwood to reside and do business. He soon erected his present commodious barn, 36x80 feet, with a windmill attachment to the well, sixty-three feet in height, and all the other appointments of a first-class livery stable, and he is doing an extensive business. He has erected one of the finest houses in the town, the one in which he resides, pleasantly located; it is well built and well furnished, and is provided with the modern conveniences.

To the lady who presides over this beautiful home our subject was married in Iowa in 1858. She was at that time Miss Emily Marks, a native of Me-

Connellsville, Ohio. She is a woman of fine tact and education, and pleasing disposition. To them two children have been born: Matt, who died in Plattsmouth at the age of two months; and Paortus, who was born in Cass County, March 19, 1870, and is at home with his parents.

Mr. Parmele is well endowed mentally and physically, and his frank, obliging manners have drawn to him many warm friends, and he and his estimable wife move in the best society in this community. She is a sincere member of the Christian Church, and he contributes very liberally toward its support. He has a good capacity for business, and conducts it by strictly honorable methods. He is a straight-out Republican, and is influential with his party, acting as delegate occasionally at County or State Conventions. He has served on the Grand and Petit Juries in the court at Omaha, under Judge Dundey. Mr. Parmele is identified with the I. O. O. F., having joined the order at Knoxville, Iowa, during the war.

— — — — —

FREDERICK SCHOMAKER. One of the finest farms of Avoca Precinct is located on sections 1 and 12, and is well known as the property of Mr. H. H. Timm, uncle of our subject. The latter is one of the most successful stock-raisers in the county, and owns 160 acres of good land in Berlin Precinct, Otoe County, which he purchased in the spring of 1881. He came to the young State of Nebraska in May, 1867, and has since made his home with his uncle, Mr. H. H. Timm, a prominent citizen of Avoca, and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Schomaker came to this country a poor boy, "worse off than nothing" as he expresses it, having had to borrow money to pay his passage across the Atlantic. This debt was liquidated long ago, and his steady perseverance and industry have constituted him one of the prominent property-holders in this part of the country. He was born in Holstein, Germany, Jan. 31, 1849, and is the eldest son and second child of Peter and Anna (Lau) Schomaker, who are both now deceased. The father died in his native Holstein, in 1869, at the age of fifty-two years. The mother after the death of her husband came to the United States with her four younger children, and they located on section 1 in Avoca Precinct, where the mother died July 25, 1880, at the age of fifty-nine years. They were good, honest people, although it was their lot in life not to be able to accumulate much of this world's goods. The father during his early manhood served as a soldier in the standing army of Denmark, and received the education common to the youth of Germany, being placed in school at an early age and pursuing his studies until master of them. He is remembered by his children as a kind and indulgent parent, and a man generally respected by his neighbors.

Mr. Schomaker, our subject, received a very good education in his native Germany, and was a youth of eighteen years when coming to the United States. He took up his residence with Mr. and Mrs. Timm, with whom he resided and married their adopted daughter, Miss Christina Baumgartner. This lady was born at the homestead where she still lives, Jan. 22, 1860, and was the only child of her mother, who died when little Christina was but two years old. That excellent lady, Mrs. Timm, proved to her a true mother, and she was reared to become a good and intelligent woman. Of her union with our subject there have been born two children—Katy M. and Edwin H. Mr. and Mrs. Schomaker are Lutherans in religion, and politically, Mr. S. uniformly supports the principles of the Republican party.

JACOB SCHLANKER is a fine representative of the farming community of Cass County, who has been instrumental in advancing her agricultural interests, owning and managing a large farm on sections 34 and 35, Stove Creek Precinct, with a substantial home on the former section, and neat barns, other out-buildings, stock-yards, etc., on the other section, across the street from his house. He was a pioneer of this precinct, and one of the first settlers on the prairie where he still lives, and in him this community has found one of its most trustworthy public officials.

Our subject is derived from good German and French stock. His father, Jerard Schlanker, was born in the vicinity of the beautiful, famous Rhine River, in one of the German Provinces. His mother was a native of Holland, but was married in Germany. The paternal grandfather of our subject, Mathias Schlanker, was born in France, and when he became of suitable age he entered the French Army and fought under the illustrious Napoleon during the memorable Russian campaign. He was a blacksmith, and after leaving the army he followed that trade, and became well-to-do. The father of our subject was also a blacksmith, as well as a farmer, and did very well at both callings. He likewise did military service, but with the Prussians, serving in the army seven years. On account of religious beliefs, he determined to emigrate to America, where he could have more freedom, and exercise his reason as he chose. Accordingly, in 1848, with that end in view, he embarked with his family at Amsterdam for Liverpool, where they boarded an American-bound sailing-vessel, and a few weeks later landed in New York. He and his family proceeded to Iowa, going by way of Chicago to Freeport, thence on to Clayton County, Iowa, where he located near Clayton Centre, above Dubuque. Mr. Schlanker bought wild land, he being a pioneer there, cleared it and improved a very good farm with the necessary buildings, etc. He also set up a smithy, and was actively engaged at his trade for a number of years. In 1864 he sold out all his property in that place, and moved to Dubuque, where he lived in retirement until his death, at the advanced age of eighty years, he having accumulated sufficient money to enable him to spend his declining years in ease. His wife died in Clayton County, Iowa, in 1853. He was a man of liberal and progressive views, and was tolerant of others' opinions while holding tenaciously to his own convictions. He and his estimable wife lived respected and died regretted, as they were people of great worth. They were the parents of the following children: Peter and Catherine (deceased), Annie, Agnes, Paul, Verona and August B. (deceased), Jacob. August was a veteran of the Mexican War, in which he served until its close, and during the late Rebellion he offered his services again to his adopted country, enlisting in Dubuque in 1863, and operated there successfully as a farmer, and effected vast improvements in the condition of the property, putting out orchards and trees of the smaller fruits, planting hedge, erecting the necessary buildings, and bringing the land to a good state of cultivation.

In the fall of 1874 Mr. Woodard sold his farm property, and thereafter was a resident of Platts-mouth a short time. Near the close of the year, however, he came to Weeping Water, and until 1876 was connected with the mercantile house of Reed Bros. We next find him operating as "mine host" of a hotel, the Weeping Water House, the first institution of its kind in the place, and not long afterward he established the livery stable which to-day is the leading institution of its kind in this section. He withdrew from the hotel business in 1878, and turned his entire attention to that in which he is now engaged. He keeps first-class road horses, with a tasteful assortment of vehicles, and receives the patronage of the best people of Weeping Water and vicinity. In the spring of 1885 he completed a fine residence south of the creek, which, with its surroundings, forms a most beautiful home.

Mr. Woodard was the Constable of Louisville two years. He cast his first Presidential vote for Lincoln, and uniformly supports the principles of the Republican party. Socially, he belongs to the I. O. O. F., and is a member of the Masonic fraternity, also the K. of P. He has been prominent as an office-holder in his lodges, and takes a warm interest in the principles of the orders. He is a man genial and companionable, prompt in his business obligations, and in fact one of the representative men of the flourishing little city of Weeping Water.

Mr. Woodard was married in early life to Miss Oretta Rhodes, of Toulon, Ill., who died while still a young woman, leaving two little daughters, Eva and Ella. The younger makes her home with her father, and the elder is the wife of Daniel Rockwell, of Centre Precinct. Mr. Woodard, about 1876, contracted a second marriage, with Mrs. Mary E. Dunn, who was born in New York, Dec. 14, 1839. She came to Nebraska with her children about 1870. Her parents are deceased. Of this marriage there are no children. Mr. Woodard has given to his two daughters a good education.

Martin Woodard, the father of our subject, is supposed to have been a native of New York State. He married Miss Lydia Shaw, and they became the parents of three children, who lived to mature years. The father died when his son David was a little lad of seven years, and as he remembers him he carried on farming and shoemaking combined in Saratoga County, N. Y. He spent his last years at the farm, where the mother remained until her second marriage, to Joseph Flansburgh. They are now living in Platts-mouth, Neb. Silvenous A., a brother of our subject, accompanied him West, and located on a farm on section 22 in Elmwood Precinct. He died about 1878. His sister Hannah, Mrs. Rockwell, is a resident of Louisville, this county, where her husband is engaged as an attorney-at-law.

ALFRED HAWKINS, of Tipton Precinct, and a gentleman numbered among its most useful and prominent men, owns and operates a snug farm on section 32. He believes thoroughly in the theory of Horace Greeley that a small farm well cultivated is more desirable than a larger extent of land partially neglected. He has neat and substantial buildings, and all the adjuncts of a good home. A soldier of the Union Army during the progress of the Civil War, he came out of the struggle with his health greatly impaired, and from the effects of which he never expects to recover. As a pioneer settler of his precinct, he is accorded that tacit respect naturally given to those who looked upon Nebraska in its pioneer days, and who, in the building up of a good homestead, have contributed so much to its general prosperity.

Our subject is the son of William and Elnora (Hill) Hawkins, who were both natives of Washington County, Pa., the father being born in 1813, and the mother in 1816. The paternal grandfather, Thomas Hawkins, also a native of Washington County, was of Holland-Dutch descent, and a farmer in good circumstances. He left his native

State for Columbiana County, Ohio, in 1835, and there spent the remainder of his days. On the mother's side Grandfather James Hill was born in Ireland, and crossed the Atlantic at an early day, settling in Washington County, Pa., in time to take a hand in the Colonial and Indian Wars and in the War of 1812. He died when ripe in years in Washington County.

The father of our subject settled in Columbiana County, Ohio, at an early day, and, purchasing a tract of timber land, felled the trees and improved a good farm. In 1848 he changed his residence to Shelby County, settling in the vicinity of the present flourishing town of Sidney, where he prosecuted agriculture until his death, March 14, 1854. The mother continued at the old homestead until the fall of 1865, then, coming to Nebraska, settled with her family near Peru, in Nemaha County, where she at present resides, surrounded with all the comforts of life. She is a member in good standing of the Protestant Methodist Church.

The parental household of our subject included six children, Alfred being the eldest. The second son, Freeman by name, died when about twenty-two years old; Lyman, Madison and Mary A. are all residents of this State. Freeman, during the late war enlisted in the 20th Ohio Infantry, which was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, and died at Shiloh, and was buried there. Lyman was a member of the Home Guards in Shelby County.

Alfred Hawkins, our subject, was born in the vicinity of Georgetown, Columbiana Co., Ohio, Nov. 12, 1837, and was a lad of eleven years when his parents removed to Shelby County. He completed his education in the schools of that county and was a youth of seventeen years at the time of his father's death. Being the eldest of the family, he necessarily was obliged to take upon himself many responsibilities. He assisted his mother in keeping the family together, and remained with her until the spring of 1860. Then, desiring to see something of the farther West, he journeyed to Gentry County, Mo., where he worked for a time on a farm, but there being more laborers than work to perform, he proceeded on his way westward, and landed in Nemaha County, this State, in June of that year. Here he found employment in the vicinity of Peru, cradling in the harvest field at $1 per day. He sojourned there until December, 1861. Next we find him experimenting as a soldier in the New Mexico Brigade, which was consolidated at Ft. Leavenworth with the 8th Kansas Infantry and sent to Ft. Riley. A month later they were ordered back to Ft. Leavenworth, and then south to Corinth, Miss. They afterward saw the smoke of the battles of Holly Springs, Iuka and Florence, Ala., and then entered upon a forced march to Louisville in order to head off the rebel General, Bragg, in which expedition they succeeded. Later they participated in the engagements at Perryville and Nashville. Mr. Hawkins was finally detailed to one of the pioneer corps, becoming a member of Company K, in the 2d Battalion, which followed Gen. Bragg to Stone River. Near the close of the war he joined his old regiment at Atlanta, participating in the siege of the city, then followed Hood to Nashville, and took part later in the battles at Franklin and Spring Hill.

Up to this time Mr. Hawkins had not been in an ambulance or hospital, but now succumbed to the hardships and privations which he had endured. He was sent to the hospital at Nashville, afterward transferred to Louisville, and finally to Jeffersonville, Ind. Upon recovering he rejoined his regiment at Huntsville, Ala., and not long afterward, in January, 1865, received his honorable discharge at Louisville, Ky.

Upon retiring from the army our subject returned to his old haunts in Shelby County, Ohio, and thence, in the spring of 1865, returned to the West. He first worked on a farm in Nemaha County, this State, but in the fall of 1866 purchased land in that county, which he operated until the spring of 1869. Then, selling out, he took up his abode at his present home in Tipton Precinct. It was then a tract of uncultivated land, and his first shelter was a dugout, which he occupied for five years. After getting in the crops of the first season here, he commenced making fences and planting trees. The lapse of a few years has effected a remarkable change in the condition of his property. The present residence was erected in the spring of 1874. Adjacent to it is a spring of living water, an excellent orchard of 150 bearing apple trees, and a grove of three acres of forest trees. The fields are mostly enclosed with wire fencing. Mr. Hawkins makes a specialty of cattle and swine, and has a number of fine horses.

Upon coming to Nebraska, like many of the men around him, Mr. Hawkins had many difficulties to contend with, the most serious being the state of his health, as he was scarcely able to walk. His career is a fine illustration of the result of determination and perseverance. To the lady who has been his faithful partner and companion for a period of fourteen years, and who in her girlhood was Miss Ruth Marrs, our subject was married, in Whitley County, Ind., March 11, 1874. Mrs. Hawkins was born March 11, 1829, in Champaign County, Ohio, and is the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Johnson) Marrs, who were natives respectively of Kentucky and Virginia. They emigrated to Indiana at an early day, and there spent the remainder of their lives. Of this union there are no children. Mr. Hawkins, politically, is a sound Republican, and has been quite prominent in local affairs, serving as a Road Supervisor and Constable, and holding other positions of trust. He is also a member of the G. A. R., belonging to Masfield Post, at Palmyra. He is a charter member of the United Brethren Church, to which his excellent wife also belongs, and has officiated as Superintendent of the Sunday-school a number of years. His choice, however, would be with the Methodists, but there being no society of this denomination convenient he has been willing to cast his lot with the United Brethren.

WILLIAM J. MONROE. The livery, feed and sale stable interests of Weeping Water are creditably represented by the subject of this sketch, who operates the largest business of the kind in the central portion of Cass County. His arrival in Nebraska dates from March, 1869, when he came from Omaha to Centre Precinct, this county, and purchased 160 acres of new land, comprising the southwest quarter of section 25. Upon this not a furrow had been turned; neither were there any other signs of improvement. His first business was to put up a dwelling, and then he began breaking the sod, setting out trees, and adding from time to time the other buildings necessary for his comfort and convenience. Upon this farm he lived and labored a period of eleven years, during which time he brought the land to a high state of cultivation, and constructed a homestead which bore the reputation of being one of the most valuable for its age in that section of country.

In March, 1880, Mr. Monroe sold this farm and purchased another nearer town, in Weeping Water Precinct, upon which he lived four years. In the meantime he proceeded as he had done before, making improvements, and brought this property up to the status of the first. This he traded in 1884 for his present business—a change which he has had no reason to regret. His livery stock consists of a goodly number of driving horses and several “boarders.” He has one very fine English full-bred coach horse, a registered animal, “Buckshales,” No. 1438 (Hackney Stud Book), imported from England in July last. He is a magnificent animal, of perfect symmetry, and possessing some of the finest points of his race. Mr. Monroe is a good judge of horseflesh, understands fully the care and keeping of equines, and takes pride in having the best establishment of its kind in this part of the county. It is hardly necessary to state that he enjoys the patronage of its best people.

Mr. Monroe was born fifty-one years ago, Oct. 1, 1837, in Chautauqua County, N. Y., and when six years old went with his parents to Lagrange County, Ind., where he lived until coming to Nebraska. He was given a practical education, completing his studies in Lagrange Collegiate Institute, after which he occupied himself in farming until embarking in his present enterprise. He is a prominent man in his community, and has held the various local offices, although making no pretenses to be a politician. He keeps himself well posted, however, upon current events, and uniformly votes the Republican ticket. Socially, he belongs to the K. of P.

While a resident of Indiana Mr. Monroe was united in marriage with Miss Mary J. Fuller, Oct. 6, 1860, the wedding taking place in Lagrange. Mrs. Monroe was born June 10, 1840, in Gilead, Mich., and is the daughter of E. W. and Katurah (Sanders) Fuller, the father a native of Genesee County, N. Y., and the mother of Virginia. They settled first in Branch County, Mich., then removed to Lagrange County, Ind., where Mr. Fuller is still living. The wife and mother died many years ago, about 1849. To Mr. and Mrs. Monroe there have been born three children, the eldest of whom, a daughter, Helen M., is the wife of E. A. Sackett, who is engaged in the hardware trade in Weeping Water; they have one child. The younger daughters, Hattie E. and Jessie W., are at home with their parents. They all have been carefully trained and educated, and hold a good position in the social circles of their community.

James Monroe, the father of our subject, was born in Paulet, Rutland Co., Vt., Jan. 28, 1808, where he spent the days of his boyhood and youth. Upon leaving New England he emigrated to Chautauqua County, N. Y., where he married Miss Harriet Joyce. The young people settled in the wilderness on a tract of timber land, from which the father felled the trees, prepared the soil for cultivation and built up a good homestead. There their two children were born: William J., our subject, and his sister Hattie, who died when a young child.

James Monroe, about 1844, changed his residence from the Empire State to Lagrange County, Ind., and only lived five years thereafter, his death taking place at the farm, July 14, 1849. He was a man of more than ordinary intelligence, an old-line Whig in politics, and a member in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Possessed of great perseverance and industry, he improved two farms, and wherever he lived was regarded as one of those solid and reliable men whose word is as good as their bond.

WILLIAM P. BAILEY, a substantial English-born citizen, now of Plattsmouth Precinct, occupies a good position among the agriculturists of this county, to which he came in September of 1879, and purchased 280 acres of land on sections 3 and 4, Plattsmouth Precinct. Upon it there was a small house, and an embryo orchard planted by some discouraged settler, who had abandoned his enterprise and moved to another locality. Mr. Bailey thus from this small beginning commenced to build up a homestead, and his present surroundings would indicate that his labors have been amply rewarded. He has now a substantial residence, with stables, corn-cribs and the other necessary out-buildings—in fact, is surrounded by all the comforts and conveniences of farm life.

The infant years of the life of our subject were spent in Yorkshire, England, where his birth took place June 25, 1815, under the modest roof of his parents, Abraham and Sarah (Powell) Bailey. They were of excellent English stock, and the father was a cabinet-maker by occupation. The latter, not being satisfied with his condition and prospects, decided to emigrate to the United States, and accordingly set sail for the land of promise in the year 1818. Landing in New York City, the father began work at his trade, and conducted the business of cabinet-making about two years, when his death took place at Schenectady, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1820, leaving his wife and one child, William P. The mother was subsequently married to Ahasuerus Van Slyck, and spent the remainder of her life in Schenectady, dying Feb. 12, 1865.

Our subject was reared in Schenectady, N. Y., receiving his education in its common schools, and upon approaching manhood learned the carpenter's trade, at which he was engaged until 1879. There also he was married to Miss Angelica Van Slyck, Sept. 25, 1839. They became the parents of eleven children, eight of whom survive, namely: Sarah, now Mrs. A. Howland; Jane, Mrs. D. Haltz; William P., Jr.; Nicholas; Angelica, Mrs. Irwin Howland; John D.; Harriet N., Mrs. Horace G. Garrison, and Charles H. The deceased are Jane, Abraham and Henry.

Nicholas and Jane (Smith) Van Slyck, the parents of Mrs. Bailey, were natives of New York and England respectively, and were married in the Empire State, where their eight children were born and reared. Of these Mrs. B. was the eldest daughter, and but three are now living. Mr. Van Slyck died in his native State of New York, Nov. 12, 1864. The mother had emigrated to the United States with her parents when a little girl ten years of age, and her father died soon afterward. She is now deceased, having died in 1863.

Mr. Bailey is a quiet and unobtrusive citizen, pursuing the even tenor of his way, confining his attention mostly to his farming pursuits. In politics he is a lifelong Democrat of pronounced ideas.

AMMI B. TODD, a retired farmer, is a prominent citizen of Cass County, and has borne an honorable part in its public life. He is a son of one of Cass County's pioneers, and, coming here when a boy of fifteen, the remaining years of his youth were passed here, and he has thus witnessed almost the entire growth of the township and county, and it has been his privilege to aid in their development. He was born in the town of Chautauqua, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., April 9, 1842, to Thomas Jefferson and Mary (Smith) Todd, natives of Herkimer County, N. Y. His paternal grandfather, the Rev. Caleb Todd, a native of Vermont, was a pioneer of Herkimer County. He moved from there to Chautauqua County in 1818, with a colony, the removal being made with teams through the wilderness, where they had to cut down trees in some places to make a road. He bought a tract of land of the Holland Patent, which was heavily timbered. He cleared a fine farm of 300 acres, beautifully located on the banks of Chautauqua Lake, opposite Fair Point, and he resided there until his death.

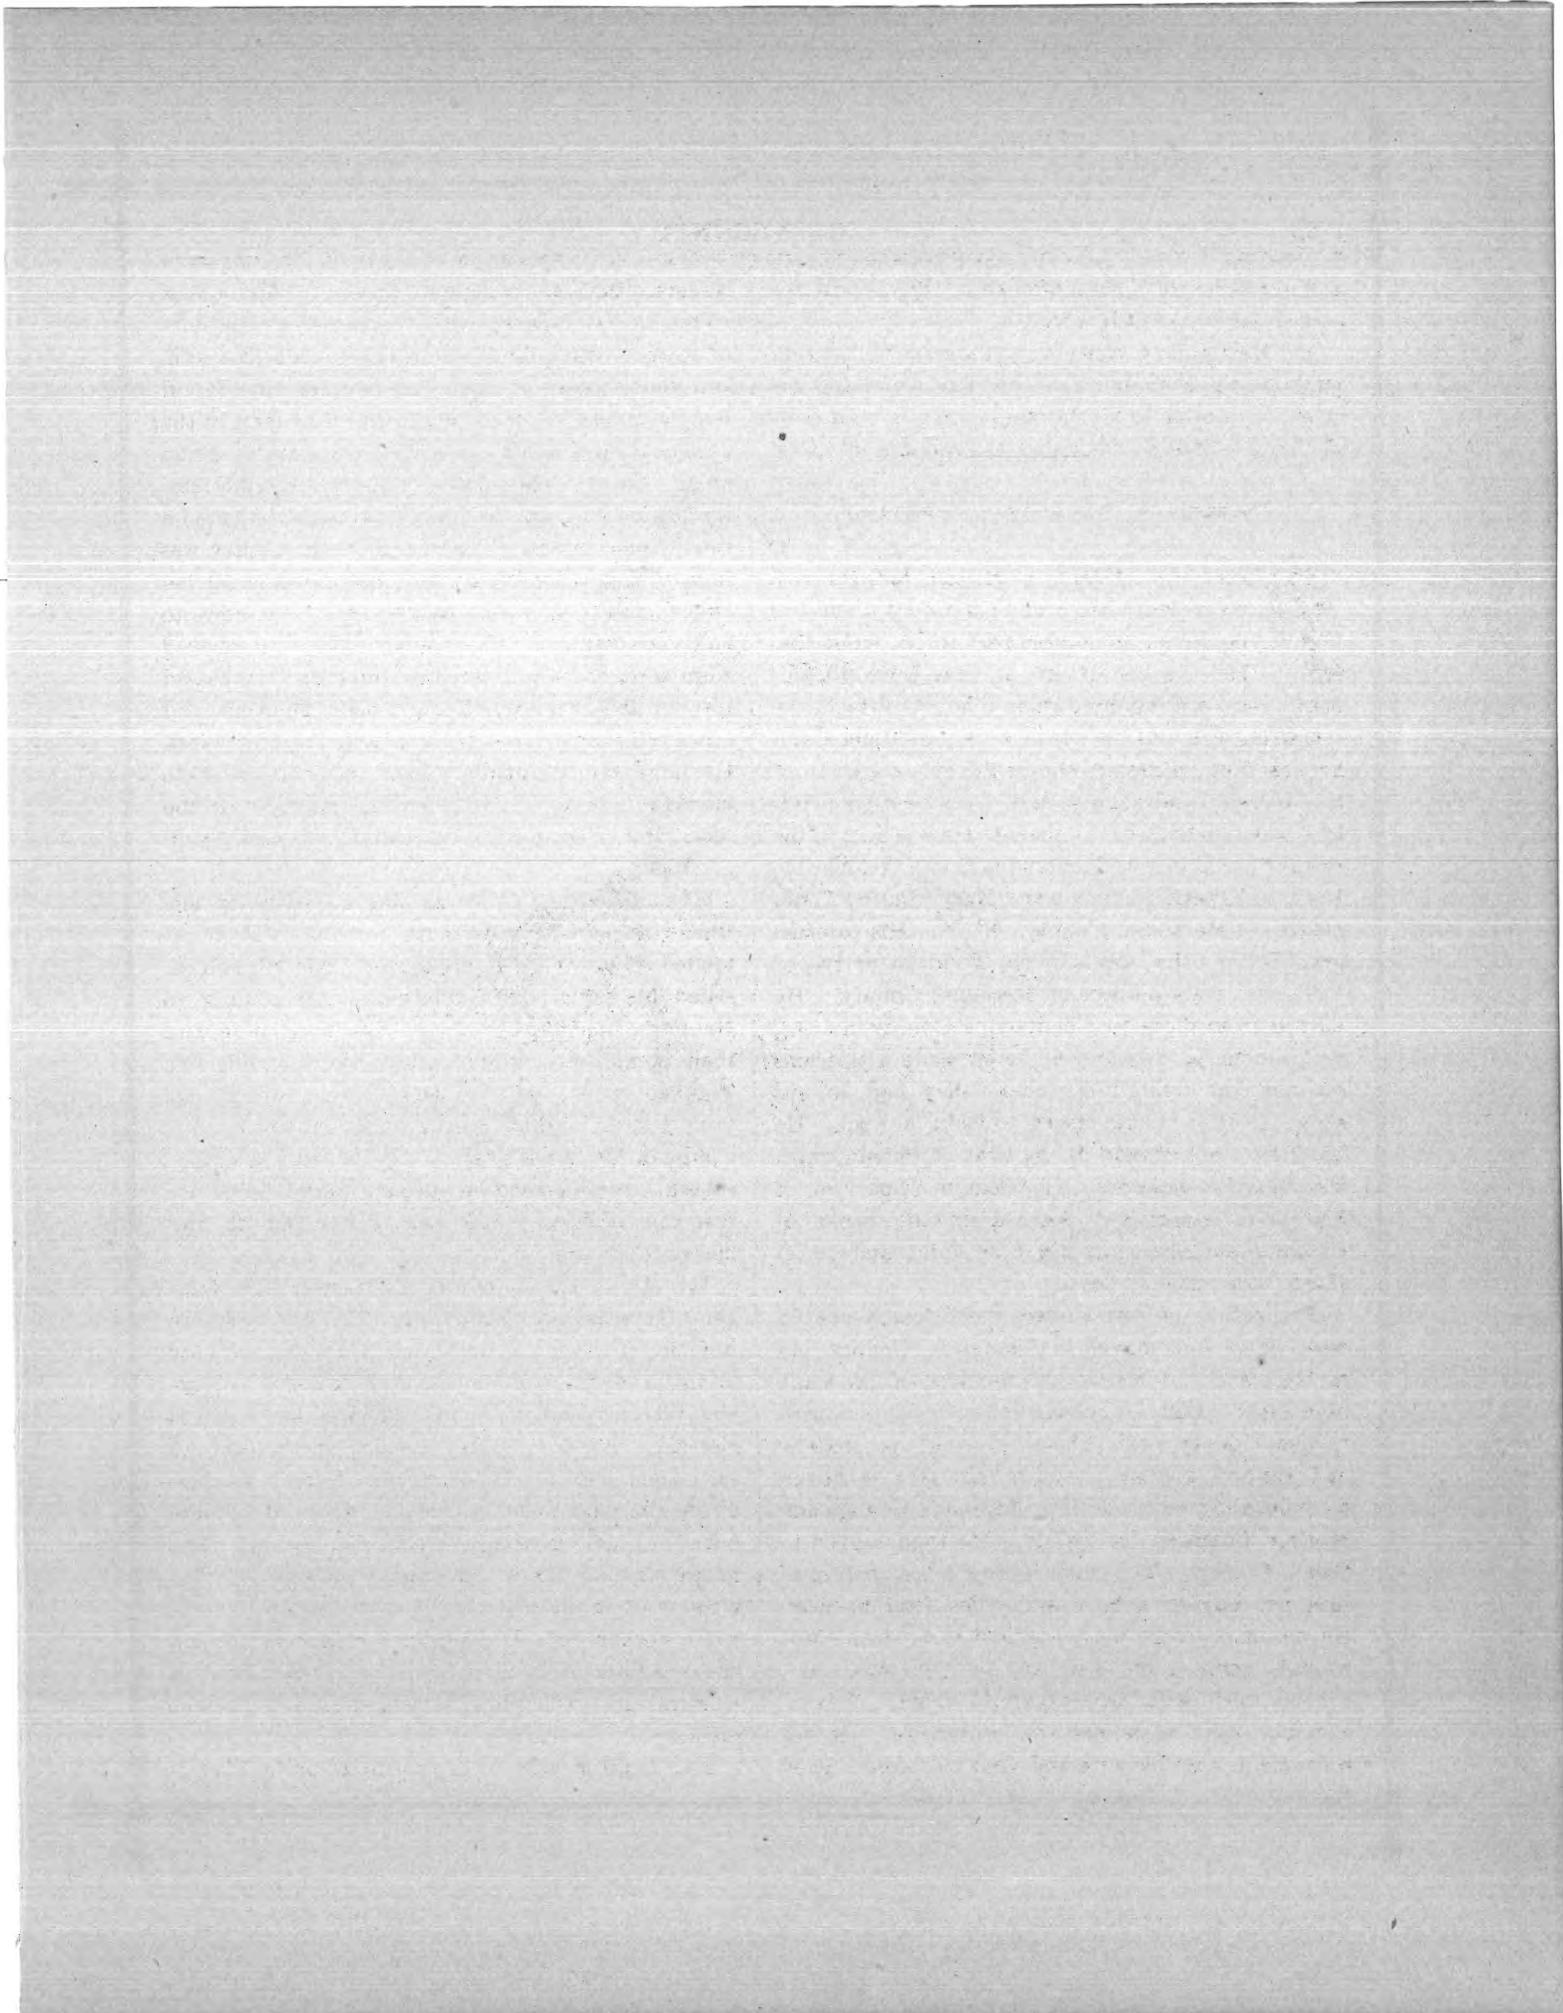

The father of our subject was fifteen years old when his parents moved to Chautauqua County, and he there grew to manhood. He learned the trade of cabinet-maker, and continued to reside in Chautauqua County until 1845. During that time he had studied medicine, and in that year he moved to Ohio, and practiced his profession in Geauga and Monroe Counties for awhile. He then moved to Owen County, Ind., and turned his attention to farming, buying a farm six miles from Spencer. He was thus prosperously engaged there until 1857, when he came to the Territory of Nebraska, starting in April with two wagons, two pair of oxen, and one pair of horses and a carriage. He was accompanied by his wife and four children. They traversed the State of Illinois, crossed the Mississippi River at Ft. Madison, and thence across the State of Iowa, crossing the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, and thus arrived at their destination. Mr. Todd bought a claim to some Government land in the precinct, four miles from the city, paying $1.25 an acre for it. He built a dugout, which the family occupied until the fall, and he then erected a small frame house. The surrounding country was in a wild state, settlements being few and far between, and but little attempt had been made to cultivate the land. The Indians had been removed from here, but were frequent callers as they passed through the country. Deer, prairie chickens and other wild game, were plentiful a little farther west. He improved a valuable farm, and continued to manage it until 1879, when he moved into the town, and lived in retirement until his death, Aug. 11, 1880.

The subject of this sketch was six years of age when his parents moved to Indiana, and he attended school there as opportunity offered, and assisted his father on the farm. After coming to Nebraska he attended school two terms here, and then completed his education by attending the Waubansay School, in Mills County, Iowa, one term. After he had grown to manhood he took charge of his father's farm until his marriage. He subsequently engaged in farming until 1882. He then rented his farm and came to Plattsmouth, and has resided here since.

Mr. Todd was united in marriage to Mrs. Margaret Thomas (nee White), in 1872. She was born in Ohio, and, her parents dying when she was very young, she was adopted by the Rev. Mr. White. She was married to W. L. Thomas, and came to Nebraska in 1861. They resided in Plattsmouth for a time, and then removed to a farm in the precinct, where he died in 1869. Two children were born of that marriage, Lelia and Harry. The happy married life of our subject and his wife was terminated in February, 1888, by her death. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was faithful to all that belongs to true Christian womanhood, leaving behind her a sweet and pleasant memory.

Mr. Todd is held in high estimation by his fellow-citizens, and in him they find one who is always ready to co-operate with them to advance the interests of the city or county. He was elected County Commissioner in 1882, and was re-elected to that important office in 1885, and again in 1888. While acting in that capacity he paid close attention to the duties devolving upon him, discharging them in such a manner as to give general satisfaction, and his official career is without a stain. He is a leading Republican in Cass County, and he has been a delegate to numerous conventions of his party. He cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, and has since been a staunch supporter of the party.

Yours Truly
J. F. Stull

JOHAN FREDERICK STULL. (This name was always spelled in the German language by his ancestors, Stoll. His father also spelled it Stoll, but John F., our subject, changed the spelling to Stull, after he became old enough to do business for himself. When he writes in German he spells it Stoll, in English, Stull—hence this explanation). Mr. Stull was a pioneer of Nebraska, and to him and men of like decision, courage and practical energy, Cass County, of which he was an early settler, is greatly indebted for its high rank among its sister counties in regard to commerce, agriculture, and the various interests that go to make up a prosperous and wealthy community. He is prominently identified with the farming and stock-raising interests of Plattsmouth Township, where he has a large and valuable farm and a pleasant, commodious home.

Mr. Stull was born in Germany, May 13, 1831, and in October, 1834, he came with his parents, Henry and Elizabeth (Degen) Stoll, to the United States. They were likewise natives of Germany, as had been their ancestors as far back as known. They located in Pike County, Ohio, where the mother, a woman of genuine worth, passed away from the scenes of earth Oct. 20, 1840. After her death our subject and his father kept house alone for two years, when the father married Magdalena Spohn. Two years later John Frederick and five brothers and sisters went out in the world to earn their own living among strangers. Our subject at that time began to learn the trade of blacksmith at Piketon, Ohio, with Louis Rogers and Horatio Adams, serving an apprenticeship of two and one-half years. He subsequently opened a shop for himself two miles out of town, and continued in business for himself there for two years. In 1849 he went to Kentucky, but after a stay of two years there he returned to Ohio, and lived in Columbus for a time. From there he went to Illinois and worked awhile at his trade, and then he sought Council Bluffs, Iowa, in the fall of 1855, finding it only a small town, with but few houses. He met there a Mr. Sayers, agent for the Western Stage Company, whom he had known in Ohio, and that gentleman wanted to employ him to shoe horses for the company, he having previously worked for that company in Ohio.

Mr. Stull was thus engaged for a short time, and then took a trip into Nebraska, on a sort of exploring expedition, going as far west as Salt Creek, thence south about 100 miles, where he embarked on the Missouri River and came to Plattsmouth, arriving here Feb. 28, 1856, at which time there were but three shanties in the place. Here he was offered twelve lots in the business part of the town if he would put up a smithy, the contract being that he keep the shop open for business one year before receiving the deeds. He was also offered eight lots in Omaha, and four lots in Council Bluffs, with a shop and stock, if he would locate in either of these places. But he liked this point so much better than other parts of the Territory that he decided in favor of Plattsmouth, on account of the quality of the land, and erected the first blacksmith-shop in the county. The City Board of Plattsmouth was in Glenwood, Iowa, and at the end of the year, when he was to get his deeds for his lots, they had so risen in value as to be worth from $500 to $1,000, so that he got but one lot. He sold out his shop and claim for $1,500 one month before the year expired, and took up a pre-emption claim of 320 acres on the land where he has made his home ever since, and became the first actual settler on the Platte River bottom. He built a frame house, arranging the planks perpendicularly, and then a wall of sod two feet thick and planks outside of that, building in that fashion as a means of defense against the Indians, putting holes through the thick walls so that he might shoot at them if he were attacked. In the same summer (that of 1857) the Indians threatened to kill all the white settlers at Plattsmouth, and the women and children were shipped across the river to Glenwood, Iowa. But Mrs. Stull, with dauntless heroism, resolutely refused to accompany them, saying that she would not leave her husband, and if he died she would die too. Therefore they braved together the horrors of living in a region where life was made uncertain on account of the treacherous redskins, and bravely staid on in their gunboat, styled house.

A Frenchman at St. Mary's, Peter A. Sarpy, for whom Sarpy County was named, who was an agent employed by the Government, scared the Indians out of their first threatened raid by showing them some mowers which had been shipped up the river, and told them they were cannon that the Government had forwarded with orders to kill the "red devils" if they did not behave themselves, and the Indians were thus quieted for a time. They were very troublesome in other ways, however, as they would beg or steal everything they saw. Mr. and Mrs. Stull passed through those trying days with better success than some of their fellow pioneers, and with the growth of the county, which they have witnessed and aided, their prosperity is deservedly insured, and they are now numbered among the substantial and well-to-do citizens of this township, where they have made their home for so many years. Mr. Stull has a fine farm comprising 400 acres, with all the necessary improvements, and beraises all the stock that the farm will carry, feeding all his grain.

In 1866 Mr. Stull, having incurred many expenses through the long illness of his wife and the resultant doctor's bills, took a trip across the plains as a teamster with others, in order to make money more rapidly than he could at home, he having his own team. They journeyed through the heart of the country where the Indians were the most troublesome, and while on the frontier were pursued many times, quite often having slight encounters with the savages. On their return the towns and settlements were burned and the inhabitants killed in their rear, our subject and his companions being only a day ahead of the Indians, who were on the warpath. On his return from the trip across the plains a Mr. Davis accompanied him from the northwestern part of Nebraska, near Cottonwood, to Salt Creek. That gentleman had some $80,000 in gold and bonds in a belt, and he asked Mr. Stull to let him travel with him in his wagon, as he did not want his men to know that he had so much money with him for fear they would kill him for it. He and Mr. Stull took out the thimbles of wagons that the Indians had burned, and filled them with gold and bonds, and thus concealed them. Mr. Stull remembers very clearly about the murder of the Johnsons and a Mr. Kelly in 1857, and he is under the impression that they were killed for their money by a mob of about nine men, who were very likely citizens of this county, and that they threw their bodies into the Missouri River. He speaks of this, as it has been previously written that "we, the citizens of Cass County, put the murderers across the river," while, in fact, it was only a mob who did the whole work, beyond a doubt.

In 1857 Mr. Stull broke and cleared forty acres of land on his 320-acre claim at a cost of $5.50 an acre for breaking, and he erected a small house thereon, at a cost, for the lumber, of $85 a thousand feet. He also planted a large orchard on it and made other improvements, but the man who had pre-empted the land for him sold it to a speculator, and our subject had to leave and begin life anew, having lost all that he had previously saved, amounting to $3,000. However, he did not lose his pluck and ambition, but by honest endeavor, incessant and well-directed toil, aided and encouraged by a good wife, he retrieved his fallen fortunes.

Mr. and Mrs. Stull were united in marriage Dec. 25, 1856. She was formerly Agatha Hengstler, and was born in Baden, Germany, on the 17th of January, 1836. They have six children living, namely: John J., John F., C. Laurence, Amelia, Henry and Agatha. Mr. Stull and his wife are deservedly held in high esteem by the many true friends that they have gathered about them in their many years' residence here, not only as early settlers of this township, in whose upbuilding they have had a hand, but on account of their many good qualities of head and heart. They were reared in the Lutheran belief, but as there is no church of that denomination here they have united with the Presbyterian Church, and are faithful and zealous workers in the cause of Christianity. Mr. Stull is a wide-awake, intelligent, well-informed man, and is deeply interested in any scheme for the advancement of his adopted township. Especially is this true concerning educational matters, and for twenty-eight years he has been identified with the local School Board in various official capacities, and he has done all that lies in his power for the education of the young. In politics he is a Democrat.

The portrait of this pioneer settler of Cass County, and well-known and highly* respected citizen, appears on an adjoining page.

RICHARD DOUGLAS JONES, one of the thrifty and intelligent farmers of Cass County, is living pleasantly on his farm on section 18, Liberty Precinct. He owns 160 acres of land, which is admirably tilled, is under good improvement, and is well stocked. Our subject is in prosperous circumstances, owing not only to his own skill as a farmer and to his wise and judicious management of his property, but also to the fact that during his wedded life of forty years he has been ably assisted by a good and true wife in the building of the cozy and substantial home in which they are spending their declining years, surrounded by every comfort that heart could wish. Mr. Jones has been identified with the agricultural interests of Nebraska since 1867, and for two years and a half was a resident of Custer County, where he owned 320 acres of fine farming land.

Mr. Jones is a native of Tennessee, born in White County, March 4, 1825, coming of Southern parentage. His father, Ebenezer Jones, was of Welsh descent, and was a native of North Carolina. He was reared to a farmer's life in his native State, and was married there to Elizabeth Cass, a native of that State, who came of similar parentage as her husband. They subsequently moved to Tennessee in pioneer days, and settled on a tract of land in the unbroken forests of White County, not far from the Cumberland River. They built up a good home, and improved a fine farm, from which they derived a comfortable income. They spent most of their wedded life amid the scenes where they had been pioneers, but after they became quite old they moved over into Warren County, the same State, and lived with their son, E. Jones, Jr., until their long pilgrimage of nearly fourscore years on this weary earth was over. They were people of rugged and stalwart virtues and strong natures, and their simple, unostentatious lives were above reproach. They were Cumberland Presbyterians, and were charter members of the first church of that denomination established on the Cumberland River, and as its members were dissenters from the old-school Presbyterians, they called their church by the name of the river near whose waters it stood, and the name is still retained to designate a branch of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Jones was particularly active in the organization of that church, being one of the four who planned it, and he was for years one of its Elders, and was otherwise prominent in religious circles in his community.

Our subject was the youngest of the seventeen children, thirteen sons and four daughters, born to his parents. It is rather a remarkable circumstance that the parents lived to see every child of this large family grow to maturity, marry and settle in life. There are only three of the family now living: John, who resides in Arkansas, at the age of eighty years; Andy, who lives in Warren County, Tenn., and is sixty-seven years old, and our subject. The latter was reared and educated in Tennessee, and was married in his native county to Miss Elizabeth Weaver, the date of their wedding being Feb. 7, 1849. Mrs. Jones was born Nov. 9, 1831, in White County, Tenn., to William and Fanny (Hampton) Weaver. Her father was a farmer by occupation, and he and his wife died on their homestead in Tennessee. Mrs. Jones was reared in the home of her birth, and she was one of a family of six children, two sons and four daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Jones removed from their native State in 1851, and as their parents had done before them, became pioneers in a new State, settling in Iowa, and in Polk County, that State, Mr. Jones was actively engaged in farming. In 1867 he sought "greener fields and pastures new" in Nebraska, and two years and a half later pitched his tent in Cass County. When he first purchased this place it was but slightly improved, and although Mr. Jones was not among the first settlers, he may be classed among its pioneers for the work that he has performed in developing his farm, and so adding to the large agricultural interests of the county. Since coming here he has put up a first-class set of farm buildings, and in 1870 built his present residence, a neat and substantial brick house. He is a man of more than ordinary sociability, geniality and tact, and has inspired a warm friendship in the hearts of many in this community, as he treats everyone with that degree of respect that makes them feel proud of his company. He and his wife, who is held in equal esteem by their mutual friends, are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of Union, of which he is an Elder, and they ever hold firmly to the faith of their fathers. Mr. Jones is strongly in sympathy with the Democratic party in his political sentiments.

WILLIAM P. C. CRITCHFIELD, an agriculturist of energy, ability and enterprise, residing on section 24, Centre Precinct, operates a fine farm, which shows for itself the amount of time, judicious labor and skill, which have been used in bringing it to its present condition. Our subject was born in Holmes County, Ohio, Nov. 15, 1857. His parents, Lewis H. and Harriet (Shreve) Critchfield, were also natives of the same State. (For further parental history, see sketch of Mrs. Harriet Critchfield).

William was reared in his native town and received a good common-school education. Being brought up on a farm, where he assisted his father, he early became acquainted with the duties and details connected with the tilling of the soil, and concluded to make farming his life occupation. He remained at home until the spring of 1881, when he came to Nebraska with his family, and settled on the farm in Centre Precinct where he has since lived. The land was at that time uncultivated prairie, with scarcely any improvements. But Mr.

Critchfield at once went to work with a will to evolve a farm from the raw land, and in all his undertakings he has met with success. He is a worthy representative of the sturdy yeomanry of this section of the country, who, commencing life with no heritage save that of strong hands and willing hearts, have won for themselves substantial positions and fair competences.

The marriage of our subject with Miss Jessie Price, of Valparaiso, Ind. was celebrated Sept. 10, 1878. She is a native of the Hoosier State, born in Porter County, Oct. 16, 1856. Her early days were spent in her native town, where she received a good education, and was initiated by her excellent mother into the mysteries of housekeeping, so that, since marriage, she has been able to be a true help-mate to her husband and to aid him by her thrift and good management in his varied duties of developing a farm from the wild prairie. Of her marriage with our subject four children have been born, namely: Edith, Otto, Maud and Day. Mrs. Critchfield's father, James A. Price, is Deputy Recorder of Cook County, Ill., and lives in Chicago. He married Miss Eunice House, by whom he had one child, Mrs. Critchfield. The latter's mother died when she was three years of age.

Our subject is a man of much force of character, is well thought of in his neighborhood, and, making many friends, retains them all by his frank and cordial manners. Socially, he is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

JOHN DOMINGO is an enterprising, industrious farmer, of good business capacity and great intelligence, who resides on section 25, township 11, range 11, Centre Precinct. He was born in Denmark, May 5, 1854, and was there reared and educated. His parents, Jorgen (in English called John) and Ellen (Christenson) Domingo, spent their entire lives in Denmark, his father dying there in 1861, and his mother in 1872. They were industrious, well-educated people, holding an important position among the citizens of their town. Of their union four children were born, three of whom are now living, one of them on the home farm in Denmark, and two of them in this State (see sketch of Jacob Domingo.) Mr. Domingo owned his farm in Denmark, he having lived and died on the same one on which he was born. He was a prudent, thrifty farmer, who gave his sons good educations and some money to start life with.

Our subject was educated in his native country, and at the age of eighteen years emigrated to this country alone. He at first located in Bloomington, Ill., staying there until 1881, and the same year bought the farm of 160 acres where he now resides. It was then under cultivation, and some buildings had been erected. With characteristic energy our subject set to work to build for himself a home, and in the few years that have since elapsed he has effected a vast improvement in his property. He has fenced his entire farm, and has a good bearing orchard, and has quite a large grove of fine forest trees. He has erected a good set of farm buildings, having just completed an elegant frame house, 26x26 feet, two stories high, which is a model of convenience and taste, and would be an ornament to any village or city. The pasturage on his farm is all tame grass, being especially adapted to stock-raising, to which he pays much attention. His herd of Short-horns, 100 in number, is of great value and very fine. He also raises a large number of horses and hogs, finding stock-raising of all kinds to be a lucrative business.

Mr. Domingo was married, June 7, 1881, to Miss Lottie Wiuff, who was also a native of Denmark, born June 7, 1864, and who came to America in 1880. Her parents, Jesse and Metta Maria (Anderson) Wiuff, natives of Denmark, are now living in Humboldt, Iowa. They have had eight children, five of whom grew to maturity. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wiuff are members of the Lutheran Church. The union of our subject and his wife has been blessed by the birth of three children, namely: Ellen, born April 28, 1882; Jesse, Sept. 13, 1883; Laura, June 7, 1886, her birth having occurred on the anniversary of her mother's birth and wedding.

Mr. Domingo is a man of sterling worth and ability, and is highly respected by his fellow-citizens. By his industry and thrift the small sum of money that he had when he came here has been gradually increased, and by using it advantageously he has now a good income, a fine homestead, and is as pleasantly situated as any man could desire. Our subject uniformly casts his vote with the Republican party, but has all the business he can attend to without desiring to take upon himself the responsibilities of office. Both Mr. and Mrs. Domingo are members of the Lutheran Church, and contribute generously toward its support.

FRANCIS G. KENDALL. Numbered among the practical and progressive agriculturists of Cass County is the subject of this brief biographical history, who is prosperously engaged in his independent calling on section 12, Liberty Precinct, where he owns 160 acres of well-improved land, which he entered in 1857 from the United States Government under the pre-emption law.

Our subject was born Sept. 10, 1835, in Erie, Erie Co., Pa., where his paternal grandfather, Frank G. Kendall, was an early settler and spent his last years. Robert Kendall, father of our subject, was married in Erie, Pa., to Miss Anna McNair, whose father, Col. David McNair, was originally from near Pittsburgh, and was one of the original settlers of Erie County, and platted the city of Erie, where he built the first distillery and brewery in the county. He took an active part in the sieges of the War of 1812, and spent his declining years in Erie, where he had prominently identified himself with all its interests. Robert Kendall and his wife remained in Erie County until their removal, with their family, to Monmouth, Ill. There they acquired considerable property, and lived until well advanced in years. Both were active members of the United Presbyterian Church, and donated liberally toward its support and to the college of that denomination in that place. They had six children, three of whom are now living: David M., the eldest son, lives at Monmouth, Warren Co., Ill.; Francis G.; Margaret, wife of Amos Buford, a prominent farmer and stock-raiser of Monmouth Township, Warren Co., Ill.; William E. died at the age of twenty-one years; James died at the age of ten years. Clark A. was a graduate of Monmouth College, and a noble and promising youth; he lost his life in the battle of Ft. Donelson. He was a member of Company F, 17th Illinois Infantry, a brave and ambitious soldier, and a favorite among his comrades, by whom his early death was lamented.

Francis G. of our sketch received a good education in his native town, remaining there until the removal of his parents to Illinois, in March, 1853. In 1857, desiring to try his fortune in some other part of the country, Mr. Kendall came to Cass County, bringing with him a sawmill, which he had bought in Chicago and shipped to Muscatine, Iowa, and thence here in wagons, and set it up in Liberty Precinct. It was the first mill of the kind in the precinct, and he operated it for two years, then sold it. He subsequently visited Colorado, and spent a few months prospecting among the mines of the Rockies, but returned to Nebraska, and in June, 1861, enlisted in defense of his country at Plattsmouth, joining Company A, commanded by Capt. Livingston, 1st Nebraska Infantry, the regiment under command of Col. John M. Thayer. The regiment was ordered to the front, and Mr. Kendall was with it in the battles of Ft. Donelson, Pittsburg Landing and many other minor engagements, being once thrown from his horse and severely injured. He was then sent home on a sick furlough, but afterward returned to the ranks, and was honorably discharged with the rank of Corporal at Omaha, having served with honor three years and three months. He afterward secured a position as Captain of the Guards at the Government corral at St. Louis, Mo., which was a depot of supplies for receiving and branding horses.

After the war closed Mr. Kendall went to Monmouth, Ill., and spent a year, then returned to his farm in this State, which he has since occupied. He has worked hard, and made all the necessary improvements to place his homestead among the finest in the locality. It is well watered, very productive, and stocked with horses and cattle of good grades. A stream of running water heads about 100 rods from his house from springs on his farm, and meanders through his farm, crosses his feed lot, and gives an ample supply of water the year around for stock purposes.

Mr. Kendall has been twice married. His first wife, whose maiden name was Rachel Allison, was a native of Washington County, Pa. Of that marriage three children were born—Birdie, deceased; Robert C. and Mary. The second marriage of our subject took place in Nebraska City, where he was united to Mrs. Virginia Ballinger, nee Jones. She was born in Missouri, May 28, 1843, and is a daughter of John C. and Maria (Brinker) Jones. Her father, who is now living in Arkansas, was born more than four-score years ago in White County, Tenn. When a young man he moved to Missouri, where he was married. His wife was a native of St. Louis, where he was a merchant for a time. In 1845 Mr. and Mrs. Jones moved with their small family to Des Moines, Iowa, where he became one of the pioneer dry-goods merchants, and for many years carried on the mercantile business on what is now one of the busiest thoroughfares of that city. Mrs. Jones' death occurred during their residence there in 1853. Mrs. Kendall, the wife of our subject, was only two years of age when her parents moved to Des Moines, where she was reared and educated. She presides with hospitality over the household of her husband, and they lead a pleasant and social life. Mr. Kendall was a brave, gallant soldier, who served his country well in time of war, and now, in time of peace, does his duty equally well as an intelligent, patriotic citizen. In politics he is an active Republican, and stands firmly for the principles of the party.

MRS. SINA WILBERN is a lady of worth and refinement, holding a prominent place in the social life of Salt Creek. She is the widow of Robert Wilbern, who settled on the site of her present homestead in 1872. This lady was born Dec. 24, 1824, in Gallatin County, Ill., on the banks of the Ohio River, near Shawneetown. Her father was Robert Henderson, and her mother was Cassandra (Taylor) Henderson. Her father was born in Brandenburg, Ky., and went to Illinois with his parents when he was seventeen years old, in the early Territorial days of that now proud State. The Henderson family were among the first settlers in Kentucky, originally settling among the Shawnee Indians. Her father died in Kentucky, in 1828, aged twenty-eight years. Her mother died near East St. Louis, Ill.; when about seventy-five years old. She was a native of Virginia, and was born in 1807.

The mother of the subject of our sketch bore two children by her first marriage, Sina and Maria. She was married the second time, and became the mother of six children, four boys and two girls, all of whom are living. Mrs. Wilbern attended the public schools of Union County, near Morganfield, and was in a Catholic convent at Morganfield for the period of three years. She removed with her parents to Sangamon County, Ill., in 1840, and there became acquainted with Robert Wilbern, whom she afterward married. This gentleman was born in Kentucky, and was four years old when his parents went with their family to Illinois in 1818, and settled in Sangamon County. Mrs. Wilbern and her husband were married in 1842, and resided in Sangamon County, Ill., until they came to Nebraska, and settled on their present homestead in 1873. They were the parents of eight children, named: Robert, Thomas J., Elizabeth, Jennie, Charles, Eddie, Lottie and John W. Charles and Lottie are dead; Robert resides in Decatur County, Kan., where he is a farmer; he is married to Miss Doom, and is the father of five children—Myrtle, Robert, Gordon, Mollie and an infant unnamed. Our subject's son Thomas J. married Miss Lena Chapin (see sketch elsewhere in this volume); Elizabeth is now the wife of W. J. Maston, a merchant living in Oxford, Harlan Co., Neb., and is the mother of three children—Sina, Robert and Addie; Jennie is now the wife of N. B. Hamilton, an enterprising hardware merchant, and resides in Emporia, Kan., and is the mother of one child, Lottie; John W. is at home and manages his mother's interests on the home farm; Addie is the wife of F. C. Baldwin, and resides in Salt Creek Precinct.

Mr. Wilbern was during his life an earnest and conscientious member of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Wilbern is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Greenwood. She is widely and favorably known as a lady of large heart and generous impulses, ever ready to assist in a substantial manner any who come to her in need. Her life is a bright and shining example of Christian devotion, which is not without its effect for good on the people among whom she lives.

WILLIAM ROSE. Imagine that you see a tailor by trade, poor in purse, dressed up in a style suggestive of his calling and circumstances, starting out from the city of St. Joseph, Mo., with a diminutive road wagon loaded up with a small outfit of household supplies, among which is a pleasant looking little woman. To this wagon is attached a yoke of ancient and very small oxen, worth about $4.50 each, and the owner working about as hard as they in order to continue them in their slow locomotion and hasten them if possible. They started out over a new and lonesome looking country toward the West, and in this manner pursued their way for some days. They finally "squatted" on a piece of land lying along the banks of the Weeping Water River, in what is now Avoca Precinct, this county. The above furnishes the outline of the first appearance of the subject of this sketch in Cass County. It is hardly necessary to state that under these circumstances he was, as he says, the "greenest kind of a farmer." His later life has exhibited in a remarkable manner the large amount of energy and perseverance with which he was endowed by a kindly Providence. He is now called "a big-hearted and successful farmer and stock-raiser," and few men are more popular in his precinct. He still retains the land where he first settled, although he has added to its boundaries, and his labors have resulted in the construction of one of the most valuable farms in this region, and lying on section 13.

The first arrival of Mr. Rose in this county dates from the fall of 1857, when he pre-empted his land, but did not settle on it until 1861, being employed in the meantime as a tailor. In the year last mentioned, he, with his little family, took possession of a plank house, when his neighbors were few and far between, and the face of the country gave little indication of the presence of the white man. His subsequent record is that of hundreds of other pioneers of Cass County, whose experiences are detailed over and over throughout this volume. His possessions now embrace 480 broad acres, the greater part under a high state of cultivation, and embracing very little waste land. He has erected convenient and substantial buildings, and at the same time made for himself a record as an agriculturist and a citizen second to none in the county.

In view of the facts above noted it will not be surprising to learn that Mr. Rose is a native of Germany, born in the Duchy of Brunswick, Sept. 15, 1832. He is of unadulterated German stock, and of a good family, being the son of Henry Rose, who was a skilled mechanic, and who, with his estimable wife, in her maiden days Miss Christina M. Muehe, spent his entire life in his native land, both passing away in middle life. They were the parents of two children.

The subject of this sketch acquired a good education in the German language, learned the trade of tailor, and when a youth of eighteen years left home, and journeying to London, England, sojourned in that city three and one-half years. Upon leaving England, in August, 1854, he set sail for the United States, landing in New York City, and worked there and at other places in the East for some years. We find him in Missouri about 1857, and later he established a shop in Elmwood, Kan., which he conducted until September, 1861. Then selling out he resolved to cast his lot among the pioneers of Nebraska. He had prior to this secured his land in this county, upon which he settled in the fall of 1861.

Commencing with scarcely any knowledge of agriculture, Mr. Rose had more than the ordinary amount of difficulties to contend with in a new settlement. He, however, after a few seasons had learned much from experience, which, after all, is the most practical and useful teacher a man can have. What he lacked in the practical knowledge of farming he made up in industry and persistence, and his labors in due time met with their legitimate reward.

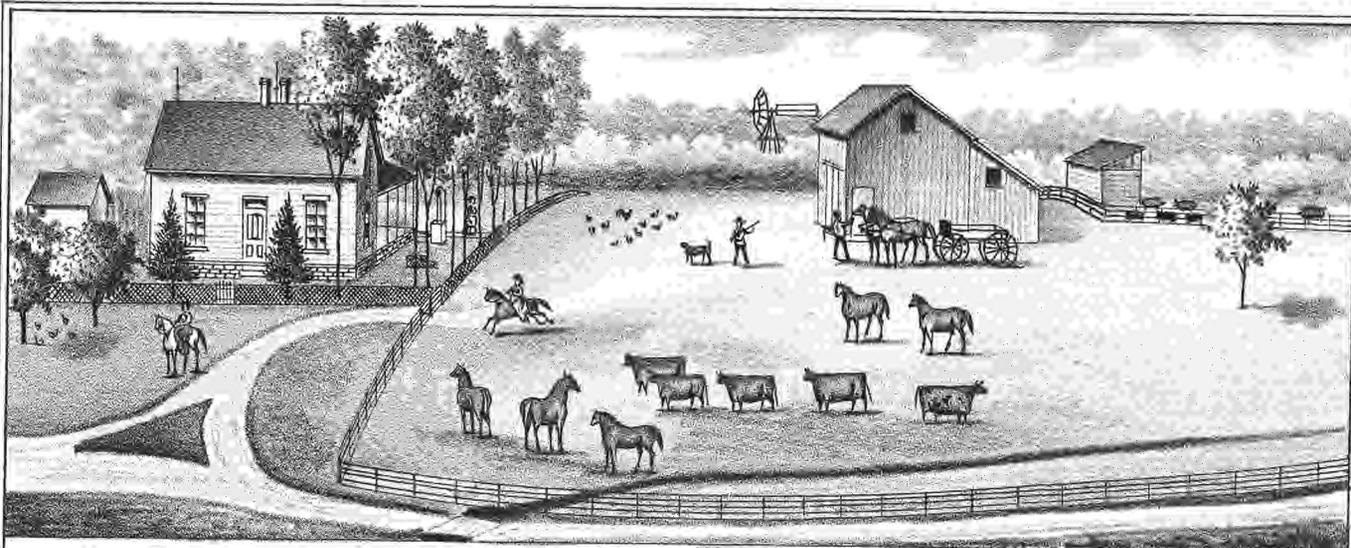

During his sojourn in St. Joseph, Mo., our subject was united in marriage with Miss Kersten Peterson, the wedding taking place Sept. 27, 1859. Mrs.

Rose was born in Norway, June 16, 1834, and came to this country in her girlhood with her mother, her father having died in his native Scandinavia. She was then a young girl of fourteen years, and the family located in the vicinity of St. Joseph, where they made their living by farming, and where the mother remained until her death. Their family consisted of three children, who are now in Norway and the United States.

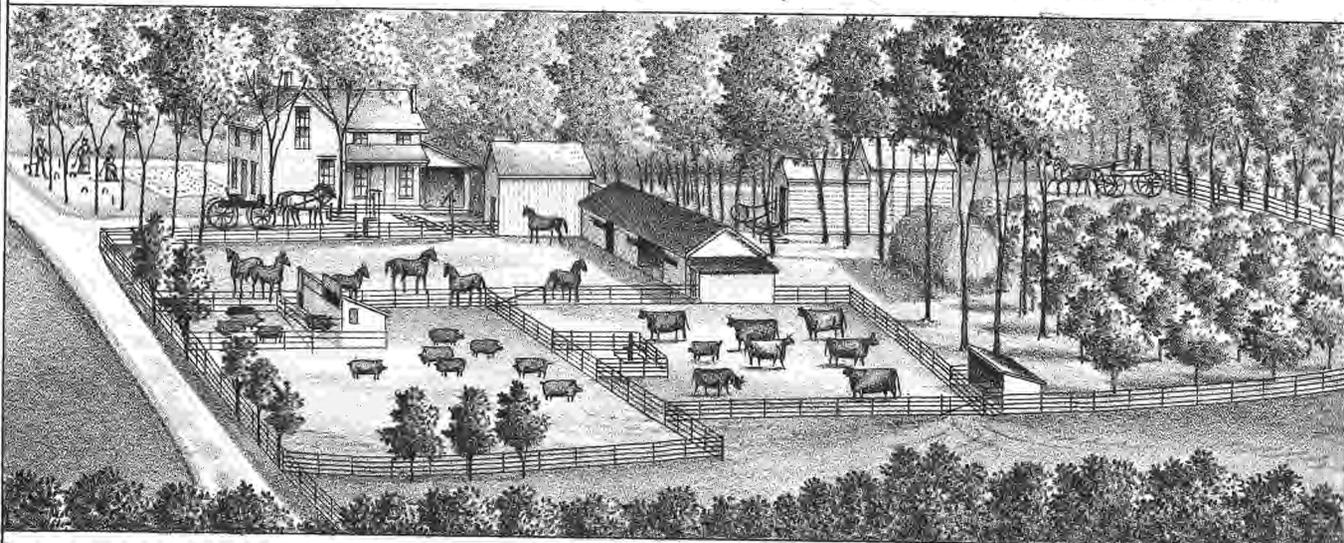

We have already gained an idea of the manner in which Mr. and Mrs. Rose commenced the journey of life together. They have labored side by side in the accumulation of their property and the building up of their homestead, the wife and mother performing her duties in her sphere as faithfully and conscientiously as has her husband in his. They became the parents of six children, three of whom are deceased—Ida M., Ellen K. and an infant unnamed. The survivors are: Anna H., the wife of Elsworth Norris, a farmer of Avoca Precinct; William A., unmarried, and operating a farm not far from the homestead, and Fred P., who remains with his parents. Mr. Rose, politically, is a sound Republican, and both he and his wife are Lutheran in religion. Mr. R. is a man of intelligence and ability, and is prominent in local affairs.

WILLIAM W. DAVIS. This enterprising and public-spirited citizen is a farmer and stock-raiser on the northwest quarter of section 14, Weeping Water Precinct. He is the eldest in a family of ten children. He was born in Mercer County, Pa., April 2, 1830, and lived at home until he was twenty-eight years old. He attended the common schools of the neighborhood, but his other sources for education were quite limited, for when ten years of age he began working on his father's farm, among the roots and stumps of Pennsylvania. His grandmother helped to start the plow, and from that time on he almost ran his father's farm without other assistance. When twenty-three years of age, in 1853, his father moved to Tama County, Iowa, where he took up a large tract of land. Our subject took charge of it, broke the virgin soil, using three yoke of cattle, set out the grove and orchard, and built the fences, houses and stables; he persevered in this work until 160 acres were brought under a high state of cultivation, remaining here until his twenty-eighth year. In 1858 he went to Toledo, in the same county, where he started a dry-goods store, which he operated for four years and was eminently successful; he was in partnership with his cousin, who got away with most of the assets, and left our subject at the foot of the ladder ready to begin again.

RESIDENCE OF G. W. GRIMES, SEC. 19. (10-14) LIBERTY PRECT. CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF H. G. HAWLEY, SEC. 31. M<sup>Y</sup> PLEASANT PRECT. CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF AMBROSE BICKERT, SEC. 28. STOVE CREEK PRECT, CASS CO.

In 1862 our subject bought 120 acres of land in Tama County, which he improved and operated until 1873, when he sold it and determined to try his luck in Nebraska. He came overland with three teams, crossing the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, coming on to Weeping Water, where he left his stock and went to Red Cloud, Kan.; not liking it there he came back to Weeping Water, and bought 160 acres in Avoca Precinct, improved it, and made it his home until the spring of 1878, when he sold it and moved to his present home, on 160 acres of section 14. Only seventy acres of this was under plow when he purchased it. He has made all other improvements, set out fifteen acres of grove and an orchard of 600 trees, planted hedge and built wire fences to divide the farm into convenient fields. He hauled all the lumber from Nebraska City to build the various houses and barns and other improvements necessary to the successful and profitable operation of the farm, which he devotes to general farming, raising cattle, and dairy purposes. The Short-horn breed of cattle are his favorites, of which he has a fine herd of high-grade animals, and which certainly reflect high credit on the proprietor, showing care and strict attention as well as a thorough knowledge of the business. The herd is headed by two thoroughbreds. He has six handsome horses, Hambletonians.

The father of this gentleman, John Davis, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa. The mother was Mary Tice, born in Canada. Grandfather Davis was in the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812, was a farmer in easy circumstances, and was of German descent. Grandfather Frederick Tice was born in Canada, of German parentage, was in the British Army, and during the War of 1812 he deserted and joined the Americans. He had a large amount of property in Canada, but never dared return to claim it. The father and mother were married in Mercer County, Pa. The father was a brickmason and stone-cutter. He also owned a farm, and lived in Mercer County until the fall of 1853, when he disposed of his property and removed to Iowa, where he bought more than a section of land in Tama County. He was one of the pioneers in that section, being the fourth man to settle in the county. Here he turned all his attention to improving his property until he died. He enlisted in the 28th Iowa Regiment, but was objected to on account of physical disability. He died in 1879, sixty-seven years of age. The mother died in Weeping Water in 1885, seventy-three years old. He was the eldest in a family of ten children, many of whom are dead, and the remainder are widely scattered. Mary, John H., Frederick T., Jesse and Frank are in Weeping Water; Sarah A., in California, while Elizabeth, Richard and an infant unnamed are dead. The brothers, J. H. and Jesse, served creditably in the late Civil War, in the 28th Iowa Infantry. They were mustered into the service at Iowa City in 1861, and served until the close of the war, when they were honorably discharged. J. H. was severely wounded, being shot through the thigh, but has recovered.

Our subject and Miss Jennie Parker, daughter of Harrison and Lucia (Strickland) Parker, were married in Tama County, Iowa, Feb. 28, 1856. The lady's father was a native of Mentor, Lake Co., Ohio. Her mother was born near Boston, Mass. Grandfather Strickland was a native of England. Grandfather Parker was born in Virginia. The lady's father and mother were married in Massachusetts, and went to Mentor, Ohio, where he farmed and traded with the Indians. They removed from there to Constantine, St. Joseph Co., Mich., where they bought and improved land. The father sailed on the lake during the summer season, trading with the Indians. In the spring of 1855 they removed to Iowa, where he farmed 160 acres of land, and in 1860 he went to Nodaway County, Mo., also farming there, where he died in 1872, fifty-eight years old. The mother is still living in Avoca, and is seventy-three years of age.

The wife of our subject is the fourth child in a family of twelve; she was born in Mentor, Lake Co., Ohio, Sept. 15, 1841. This couple have a family of nine children: Ida, now married to Mr. L. McDermid, residing in Weeping Water, has four children—Glennie, Verie, Elmer and Jennie. The remaining children of the family of our subject are Allen and Alfred (twins), who died when eight months old; Frederick died aged ten months; William died at six months; Jessie, Lottie, Stewart and Elsie are at home. The gentleman has occupied various positions of trust and confidence reposed in him by his neighbors, served on the School Board six years, was Supervisor of Roads for ten years, is an esteemed member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Weeping Water, and has served as Trustee of that society. In politics he is a strong Republican.

EDWARD POST, the third homesteader of Tipton Precinct, and one of its first actual settlers, has been a man of note in his community, a man second to none in assisting Cass County to its development and prosperity. An old army veteran, he saw hard times in the late war, from which he came out so seriously crippled as to be unable to accomplish much manually, but Providence endowed him with a large and generous spirit, and his influence has been felt amid the various causes and enterprises which have received the commendation and encouragement of good men. Inasmuch as the pen has been designated as mightier than the sword, so the influence of a single man in a community may enter very largely into its development, and in establishing its standard of morality. The record of Mr. Post has been one of which his descendants can never be ashamed. He is at present living in a pleasant home, surrounded by all the comforts of life, his companion an amiable and intelligent lady, and his friends surrounding him by the score. His farm property lies on section 10, and comprises 160 acres of good land with modern improvements.

Mr. Post comes of good ancestry, who settled in New England during the Colonial days. His father, Martin Post, was born in Hebron, Conn.,

March 20, 1805, and married Miss Abigail Hendrick, also a native of that State. The paternal grandfather, Daniel Post, also born in Connecticut, was reared to farming pursuits, and finally emigrated, about 1808, to Chenango County, N. Y. He purchased land from the Government, from which he constructed a good farm, and there spent the remainder of his days.

The paternal great-grandfather of our subject, in company with four brothers, came over from England prior to the Revolutionary War, in which they all served as soldiers. They enlisted from Connecticut, and after the war became scattered, one remaining in Connecticut, another settling in Vermont, a third locating in New Jersey, and the two others were lost track of. Edward, our subject, is a descendant of the one who settled and remained in the Nutmeg State. On the mother's side grandfather Joel Hendrick, a genuine Connecticut farmer, finally left New England, and also, like the Posts, took up his residence in Chenango County, N. Y. He served in the War of 1812 as a commissioned officer.

Martin Post, the father of our subject, was but three years of age when, with his parents, he took up his residence in Chenango County, N. Y. At an early age he developed much skill as a natural mechanic, and his mind was given to scientific researches. He was a lover of books, and employed his leisure hours among them. Upon approaching manhood he started out for himself and engaged to work by the month for Mr. Hendrick, who in due time became his father-in-law. At the age of twenty-one years he was married, and purchased land in Chenango County, from which he cleared a portion of the heavy forest, and put up one after another three sawmills, two having been burned.

The father of our subject in 1850 disposed of his interests in the Empire State, and rented land one year in the same State. After the death of his father he purchased the interest of the heirs in the old homestead, and carried on farming there until 1874. Then selling out and retiring from active labor, he made his home with his children until his death, which occurred at Afton, N. Y., April 17, 1877, when he was seventy-two years old. The mother had died July 3, 1871. Both were active members of the Baptist Church at West Bainbridge, N. Y.

To Martin and Abigail Post there were born eight children, namely: Celestia; Edward, our subject; Lucina; Fidelia; Ellen, who died in 1842; Lydia, Eliza J. and Hubert. Edward was born near Bainbridge, in Oxford Township, Chenango Co., N. Y., Feb. 8, 1833. His childhood and youth were spent at the old homestead, and he was at an early age trained to habits of industry and economy. He assisted his father on the farm and in the sawmill, and attended the first school established in the district. He remained a member of the parental household until reaching his majority, then began farming on his own account.

In the fall of 1854 our subject migrated to the vicinity of Grand Rapids, Mich., and purchased in Allegan County eighty acres of land, which he cleared, and upon which he effected some improvements. There also he found his wife, being married, Aug. 10, 1856, in Michigan, to Miss Marilla Hanor. Mrs. Post was born in Oakland, Mich., Aug. 20, 1835, and departed this life at her home in Michigan, Nov. 18, 1865, after having been the companion of her husband a period of nine years.

Mr. Post continued on his Michigan farm until the spring of 1861. In the meantime he purchased other land, which he improved and sold, and thus built up three different farms, selling all. The second year of the war he enlisted as a Union soldier in Company E, 114th New York Infantry, being mustered in at Norwich, his regiment assigned to the Army of the Gulf. They were first sent to Baltimore, and later joined Gen. Banks' expedition in the Southwest, doing duty along the railroads in Texas, and Mr. Post frequently assigned to detached service. He was often given responsible positions under the Government.

In the spring of 1863 this division of the army was sent to Southwestern Louisiana, and met the enemy in some of the most important engagements of the war. On the 14th of June, 1863, Mr. Post was wounded in the right thigh by a minie ball, and in the left arm by a double buckshot. This laid him up for several months, and when convalescent he returned to camp. In the spring of 1864 he joined the Red River expedition, meeting parties of the Confederates nearly every day, skirmishing along the line until the serious engagement at Sabine Cross Roads, when they fell back to Pleasant Hill on account of being out of provisions. Afterward they took boats to New Orleans, expecting to join the Army of the Potomac, but at Ft. Monroe were ordered to Washington for the defense of the capital. They arrived there in time, remaining as long as it seemed necessary, then repaired to the valley of the Shenandoah, joining the command of Gen. Sheridan. Later followed the battle of Winchester, Sept. 19, 1864, when Mr. Post was shot in the right ankle, entirely shattering it. He was placed in the hospital, and the entire limb swelled to the size of a barrel. It was four days before the ball was extracted, and then it was found wedged into the bone so tightly it was almost impossible to withdraw it. He remained in the hospital at Winchester until the close of the war, being then unable to bear his weight on his foot. He received his honorable discharge at Chestnut Hill Hospital, Pa., April 4, 1865, and returned home.

Mrs. Marilla Post departed this life at her home Nov. 18, 1865. A few months later the family was broken up, and Mr. Post, removing to St. Clair County, Ill., engaged as clerk in a general store nearly two years. Then returning to Michigan he sold his farm of 120 acres. He then went back to New York State, and in the fall of 1867, turning his steps southwestward, he established himself in Macon City, Mo., where he spent that winter. In the spring of 1868 he came to Nebraska overland on horseback, landing in Nebraska City on the 1st of June. Later he returned to Macon City to cast his Presidential vote for Gen. Grant, and this done, bent his steps toward Tipton Precinct, this county.

Mr. Post on the 6th of June, 1869, homesteaded eighty acres of land, which is included in his present homestead. He hired a breaking team, and after paying for his papers and breaking his land, he had left $5 in money. He now went back to Nebraska City, where he lived until his money was gone, and when hardly able to walk went to work for a Mr. Pendleton near there, remaining with him during the harvest season. Later he secured a job at husking corn on Cascade Creek, at five cents per bushel. In the spring of 1869 he went out to his homestead, purchased a "plug" team, commenced breaking more land, and planted his first crops on his own property. He had in the meantime sheltered himself in a dugout, but in the fall put up a house and set out trees. He took out the remaining papers for his homestead in Tipton, and purchased eighty acres of land adjoining, of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company. He was fairly prospered in his labors as a tiller of the soil until 1874, when the grasshoppers came along and destroyed his crops. The season of 1877 he rented his place for a term of five years, the consideration being $100 per year.

This furnished our subject with money to buy land, and he took up his residence in Anderson County, where he purchased 160 acres and farmed there five years. Later he returned to the farm in Tipton Precinct, and turned his attention to stock raising. He gathered together a herd of good cattle, Polled-Angus mostly, and also swine, with blooded English horses, of which latter he now has ten head. He has by his own industry effected all the improvements which we find upon his place to-day, including substantial buildings, a grove of three acres of forest trees, an orchard of 100 apple trees, with good out-buildings, windmill, water tanks, and the necessary machinery for carrying on agriculture successfully.

Mr. Post was married the second time, in Elmwood Precinct, this county, Aug. 8, 1870, to Miss Jane Brittain, who was born Aug. 8, 1833, in Trumbull County, Ohio. Mrs. Post received careful home training in her youth, and a good education, developing into a school teacher, which profession she followed before her marriage. Of this union there have been born three children, namely: Merrett M., who died when fourteen months old; Lulu, also deceased, and Francis, who was born Sept. 2, 1875, and is at home attending school. The two children of Mr. Post by his first marriage were Judson and Ardilla. The former is farming in Hitchcock County, Dak.; Ardilla is the wife of Albert A. Hardy, and lives in the vicinity of Victoria, this State.

Mr. Post was the first Justice of the Peace in Tipton Precinct, and officiated at the first marriage taking place here. He was also the first Postmaster at Sunlight, holding the position four years. He has occupied other positions of trust and responsibility, and has made the record of an honest man and a good citizen. Socially, he belongs to Kenesaw Post No. 123, G. A. R. at Elmwood. Both he and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the Congregational Church at Eagle, in which Mr. P. has officiated as Deacon for the last three years. To this, as to other laudable enterprises, he has contributed liberally, and in politics, it is hardly necessary to add is a straight Republican.

JOHAN W. WILBERN. This gentleman is, perhaps, one of the youngest of the many energetic citizens represented in the pages of this volume. He was born in Christian County, Ill., April 14, 1862, forty miles from Springfield, the State capital. His educational advantages were excellent, and he improved them to the fullest extent and when a boy of twelve years he came to Nebraska, coming to Salt Creek for the first time with his father, who then purchased a tract of 160 acres of land in Salt Creek Precinct from Curtis Sheffer.

After the return of our subject with his father to Illinois, he was general chore boy at his father's side in making the preparations for their removal from Springfield to Greenwood. Finally all work was completed, and the journey was begun, with five wagons loaded with goods, and seventeen loose horses in the procession; they brought no cattle with them. It was a trip he will never forget. He bore his part of the work, and care incident to the management of that amount of property, without a complaint. After they arrived in Nebraska, for many long weary days John followed cattle herding until the death of his father, when he took charge of the homestead, and for years after cultivated the same fields. During his earliest years in Nebraska he was given the opportunity of attending the country schools and the graded school at Greenwood. He early acquired a taste for reading and study, and in addition to the advantages for obtaining a school education that were afforded him, he has made a close study ever since of the papers and many good books which are now within the reach of everyone.

We now find him in charge of 200 acres of land, 160 of which belongs to his mother, with whom he lives. He takes rank as one of the most prosperous young men of Salt Creek Precinct, and it is safe to prophesy that he has a brilliant and successful business career before him. He is well and favorably known as being a hard-working, temperate, energetic young man. The mother with whom he lives is a lady of great worth and refinement. She takes the greatest comfort in the company of her son, and finds in him the most intense devotion to her interests and welfare, and there is no doubt but that the gentleman will, in the years to come, receive at the hands of his fellowmen a continuation of the esteem which he now holds, and that he will fill his place in life with honor and credit to himself and benefit to the people about him, and that he will at the end of life be able to say, "I have finished the work and I hope the world is better for my having lived in it." In politics he is a Democrat.

FRANCIS H. WILLIAMS has been identified with the farming and industrial interests of Stove Creek Precinct since 1875, formerly owning an extensive farm here, which he managed, while at the same time engaged in the manufacture of wagons. He is now in the evening of life, mostly retired from its cares, being an invalid, although he still makes his home on what has remained of his farm after providing for each of his children. By a life of well-directed toil, and by the excellent management of his affairs, he now has an ample income, and is classed among the substantial, well-to-do men of this precinct.

Our subject was born in Monmouthshire, Wales, June 27, 1810. His parents, Thomas and Ann (Roberts) Williams, were natives of the same county, and were there married. The father was a master blacksmith, having a shop of his own, besides a house and lot. He did well in business, and at the time of his death, in 1830, at the age of sixty years, he had accumulated a competency. His wife died in Wales in 1858, at the age of seventy years. They were devoted members of the Episcopal Church, and for their good and virtuous lives and many acts of kindness were held in respect and affection by their neighbors. Unto them were born ten children, four of whom grew to maturity, but three of them are dead—Morgan, Thomas and James, the two latter twins.

Their son Francis H., of whom we write, remained an inmate of the home of his birth until he was sixteen years old, and was then apprenticed to gain a knowledge of the wagon-maker's trade, being bound under the Government for seven years, his father being his bondsman. Our subject served his time, and became a first-class wagon-maker, and then worked at his trade in different places, finally putting up a shop in his native shire, and erected a house. Besides carrying on the manufacture of wagons he also did cabinet work and made furniture. He continued in that business in Wales until 1850, when he determined to try his fortunes in America, and sailing from Newport to Bristol on a packet, there embarked on the ship "Mary Ann Peters," and after a voyage of eight weeks, in which severe storms were encountered, he landed safely in New York. He went to Utica, N. Y., and worked at building there for a year and a half. After that he followed the same vocation in Racine, Wis. He established his home there, but was often engaged in Chicago a part of the time, in the employ of the Chicago & Galena Railway Company, building bridges, and he worked on the bridge of that company that spans Rock River at Rockford, Ill. A year later Mr. Williams removed to Allamakee County, Iowa, of which he became a pioneer, purchasing 140 acres of wild land from the Government. It was partly timbered and partly prairie land, and with infinite toil he converted it into a well-improved farm, with a good set of buildings, and there lived in his comfortable home until the spring of 1865, when he sold out, having decided that Nebraska possessed superior advantages and attractions, and wishing to avail himself of them. He and his family came by rail to Plattsmouth, and he was soon settled on his present place, having about 320 acres of arable land on the Burlington & Missouri River Railway. There were no improvements on it, and not a stick of timber where he now has fine groves of forest trees and a good orchard, all of which he planted himself, or had them put out under his supervision. He built a large house, ample barns, and other necessary buildings, and before his retirement in 1882, had as fine a place as any in the vicinity. His farm is well supplied with running water, and is admirably adapted to both raising grain and stock. He has now given all but 120 acres to his sons and daughters.

Mr. Williams was married, in Monmouthshire, Wales, Sept. 29, 1833, to Miss Ann Harris, daughter of William and Margaret (Lewis) Harris, natives of Wales. Her father was extensively engaged in farming in his native land until his death, in 1826, at the age of eighty-four years. He was a member of the Episcopalian Church, and his wife, who died in 1858, at the age of seventy-five, belonged to the Baptist Church. They were the parents of five children, namely: William is a resident of Wales; John, Henry, Ann, and Margaret, deceased. Ann, the wife of our subject, was born in Monmouthshire, Wales, March 7, 1810. To her and her husband seven children have been born, as follows: Margaret, Ann E., Emma C., Louisa P., William H., Mathew B. and Sarah J. Margaret married Thomas W. David, who is at present farming in Allamakee County, Iowa; Ann E. married H. Harris, a farmer of Allamakee County, and they have one child, Ida S; Emma married S. Oxley, a farmer in Winneshiek County, Iowa, and they have four children, namely: Ida N., Ernest S., Alden and Nellie. Louisa married Silas Green-slate, a merchant of Elmwood, and they have five children, namely: Delbert, Bertha, Ellis, Fern and Dean. William, who is farming in Colorado, is married and has one daughter, Maud; Mathew, a farmer in Stove Creek Precinct, is married and has two children, Silas B. and Lottie M; Sarah married James Turk, a farmer in Stove Creek Precinct, and they have one child, Alden.

Our subject and his wife are regarded with feelings of sincere respect and veneration by the whole community, where all are their friends. To them it has been given to pass more than fifty years of their life in happy wedlock, mutually sustaining and sympathizing with each other in the joys and sorrows that come to all. On the occasion of the golden wedding that marked the anniversary of that other marriage ceremony, performed so long ago and so far away, amid the beautiful scenes of their native land, their children and friends in commemoration of that event gave them each a gold-headed cane, gold-mounted glasses, and other presents. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are sincere Christians, and he is a member of the United Brethren Church, and she of the Christian Church at Elmwood. In his political sentiments he is a firm adherent of the Republican party. They are very pleasant, hospitable people, making the stranger feel at home within their gates.

ALLEN CRABTREE. This gentleman is numbered among the younger members of the farming community of Tipton Precinct, where he settled in the spring of 1880. He owns and operates 110 acres of land lying on sections 30 and 31, and while being acknowledged as a thorough and skillful agriculturist is at the same time a man popular among his neighbors, possessed of sound sense and good judgment, correct in his business transactions, and thus occupies an honored position in his community. He has for his wife and helpmate a lady of more than ordinary intelligence, educated and refined, and who is the encourager of her husband in all his worthy efforts. With these elements there has been built up a home pleasant both within and without, and one which is the frequent resort of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Our subject was born in Portsmouth, Jackson Co., Ohio, in August, 1849, and four years later his parents removed from his native State to Polk County, Mo. The journey was made in pioneer fashion, mostly by water. Allen G. lived in that State until the fall of 1854, then accompanied his parents northwest into Nebraska, crossing the Missouri River at Kenosha, and taking shelter their first night in the Territory at that point. Mr. Crabtree distinctly remembers the first night spent in Nebraska and many other incidents connected with the journey and the after settlement of the family. The country around them was wild and new, and they experienced the hardships and privations common to the lot of the pioneer.

Mr. Crabtree grew to manhood at his father's homestead in Rock Bluff Precinct, Cass County, making himself useful at an early age in the cultivation of the soil and the development of the homestead. His educational advantages were exceedingly limited, and he started out in early life to make his own way in the world, leaving home at the age of fourteen years. He first joined a train of freight wagons going across the plains to Denver, Col., making two trips. Later he returned home and lived on the farm until reaching his majority. For the next four years he was engaged in teaming and herding in Lancaster County, having charge of 600 head of cattle from the spring of 1876 until 1879.

Mr. Crabtree made his first purchase of land in the fall of 1878. He rented this a year, moving upon it in the spring of 1880. There were then no buildings, and his first business was to secure shelter for his family. He was obliged to haul lumber from Lincoln fourteen miles away, and after putting up his house he commenced fencing his land and planting trees. He has now a fine grove and an apple orchard, besides trees of the smaller fruits, and his land is well watered by a branch of the Nemaha. He keeps good grades of cattle, horses and swine, making quite a specialty of the breeding of stock.

Our subject was married in Elmwood, Dec. 25, 1879, to Miss Eliza, daughter of Henry and Anna (Herter) Umland. The father of Mrs. Crabtree is a prominent citizen of this county, and a sketch of him will be found elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Crabtree was born in Mascoutah, St. Clair Co., Ill., Nov. 16, 1857, and when twenty years of age came with her parents to Nebraska. She is now the mother of four children—Ettie N., Henry R., Clara M. and William A. The eldest of these is eight years of age, and the youngest three. They are pursuing their studies.

Mr. Crabtree, politically, uniformly votes the Democratic ticket, and has been quite prominent with his party in this section, being sent as a delegate to the various conventions and otherwise laboring for the principles in which he believes. He has been a member of the School Board in his district for a period of six years, and socially, belongs to the K. of P.

Our subject comes of a good family, being the son of Abel and Elizabeth (Clemons) Crabtree, who were both natives of Ohio, and the father was born in Jackson County. The paternal grandfather, James Crabtree, was also a native of the Buckeye State, and carried on the business of farming and milling combined, being the owner of mill property. The maternal grandfather, familiarly known as "Capt. John Clemons," was born in Ohio in 1812, the same year in which it was admitted into the Union as a State. He served valiantly in the Mexican War, wherein he obtained his commission of Captain. When quite well advanced in years he emigrated to the West, being among the pioneer settlers of Cass County, Neb., and one of the first white men to locate on the Missouri River. He employed himself in freighting across the plains a number of years, and accumulated a good property. He spent his last years in Rock Bluff Precinct, dying in July, 1880, at the age of seventy-eight years. His good wife survived him until 1882, and passed away at the same age.

William Clemons, the maternal great-grandfather of our subject, was of English descent but American born. He also came to Nebraska, and died in Rock Bluff Precinct. Abel Crabtree, the father of our subject, was a collier by trade and also carried on farming. In the fall of 1853, removing from Ohio he took up his abode in Holt County, Mo., but the year following came to Nebraska and took up a claim in Rock Bluff Precinct, this county. His land lay along the banks of Rock Creek, and after making some improvements he sold out and secured land in another part of the same precinct, upon which he farmed successfully, and to which he added until he became the owner of a quarter-section. He is still living at the old homestead, being now sixty-eight years old. The mother died July 31, 1886, aged sixty-two. Both parents were members in good standing of the Christian Church, and were people careful and conscientious in their lives and highly respected in their community.

The seven children of the household were named respectively: Allen, Noah, Ross, Travis, Elsie, Silas, and Abel, who died when one year old. Those living are located in Cass and Lancaster Counties, Neb.

MRS. FRANCES JANE SMITH, widow of Francis Smith, is a representative of the noble, self-sacrificing pioneer women of Cass County who have contributed their share toward its upbuilding. She is a woman of marked decision of character, and of superior capacity, who has shown by her able management of her property great sagacity and far-reaching foresight, so that she is now in comfortable circumstances, and has retired from active labor, renting her farm on section 34, Stove Creek Precinct.

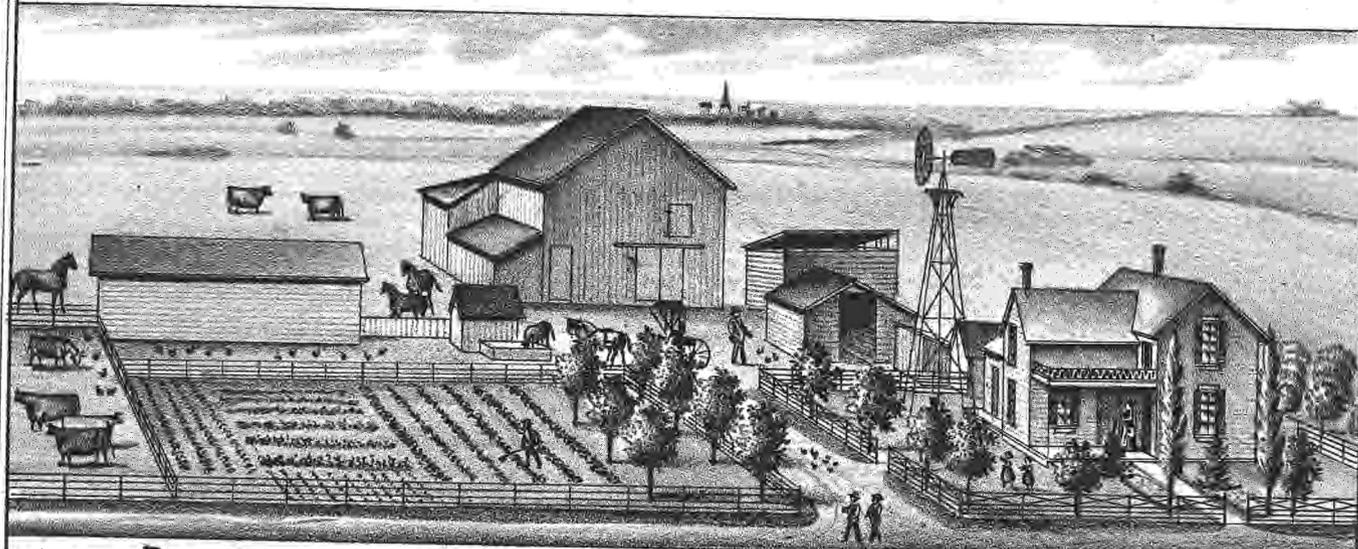

The parents of our subject, Robert and Mary (Chesman) Clark, were born in Durham, England. Her grandfather, Thomas Chesman, was a farmer in England, and lived to the advanced age of eighty-seven years. The father of our subject was a miner during his youth, and when he was twenty-one he enlisted in the English Army, and served twenty years, and during that length of time witnessed and took part in many famous battles, was present at the battle of Waterloo, and saw much of Europe, was all through France, Portugal, Spain, Italy, etc. He finally retired from the service on account of ill-health, his sister buying him off. He was married, and began mining, becoming overseer in some mines, which position he held until his death in 1851, at the age of fifty-six years. He was a man of much stability of character, one in whom his fellow-citizens placed implicit confidence, and he was devoted to his employers' interests, and at the same time was kind and considerate to the men under his charge. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His widow survived him a few years, dying in 1861, at the age of sixty-three. She was a woman of much worth, and her memory is cherished by her children, of whom she had seven, as follows: Elizabeth, in Illinois; Thomas, in England; Jane Frances; Mary and Sarah, both in England; Robert and George, deceased.

Our subject was born June 20, 1823, in Newcastle, Durham, England. March 20, 1842, she was married in the town of Atchester, England, to Mr. Francis Smith, son of Adam and Margaret (Brown) Smith. He was the second child of the family, and was born in the town of Newcastle, Sept. 8, 1818. When a boy of seven years he was obliged to go into the mines to work to assist in the support of his family, but he managed to glean an education in the night schools, at which he was a faithful attendant. His steadiness and good habits made a favorable impression on his employers, and they raised him to the position of overseer of the mines, and he continued in that office until 1852, when he and his family emigrated to America, setting sail from Liverpool on the ship "Columbus." After a long and stormy voyage of six weeks and two days, they landed in New York, and proceeded to Detroit, Mich. Mr. Smith obtained a position as copyist in a lawyer's office, and they resided in that city eight months. We next hear of the family in Kingston, Ill., where Mr. Smith secured the position of overseer in the coal mines. A year later the ague drove them away from there to Peoria, in the same State. They lived there one year, and Mr. Smith worked in the mines as carpenter. In 1857 he was almost crippled by the fall of some rocks, and was never very strong after that. He then moved to Marshall County, bought a small piece of land, and mined drift coal, staying there until 1870. He then concluded to invest his money in land in Nebraska, that he might enjoy the benefit of its salubrious climate and other natural advantages. He and his wife and children came all the way with a team, bringing their belongings that they considered indispensable with them. They crossed the Missouri at Plattsmouth, and in Stove Creek Precinct Mr. Smith took up an 80-acre tract of land under the provisions of the Homestead Act, and with the able assistance of his wife he began its improvement. He had to hire the land broken, as his health was so poor, and upon Mrs. Smith devolved the task of setting out the trees of the grove and orchard, and planting the small fruits, of which there is an abundant supply, and she also had to look after the payments on the homestead, and to prove up on it in 1877, after her husband's death. They managed to hold on to their claim through the grasshopper raids, in which many were ruined and had to abandon their land. The farm is now provided with good and comfortable buildings, is neatly fenced with hedge and wire, and is well watered by the waters of Wolf Creek, and is one of the most substantial and attractive places in the neighborhood. Mrs. Smith managed it with marked success some years after her husband's death, and is now living in the enjoyment of an income ample for all her wants, having rented her farm.

STORE & RESIDENCE OF O. M. ANDRUS, SEC. 35. TIPTON PRECINCT, CASS CO.

RESIDENCE OF A. L. VAN DOREN, SEC. 17. SALT CREEK PRECINCT CASS CO

RESIDENCE OF EDWIN F. RICHARDS, SEC. 24. ELMWOOD PRECINCT, CASS CO

As before mentioned, Mr. Smith had been quite out of health for several years, and Feb. 8, 1876, death came to his release. This precinct then lost one of its most useful and honored citizens, one whose probity of character, sound business principles and clear head, gave him weight and influence with his fellowmen. He took an honorable part in public affairs, held the office of Justice of the Peace, and was a staunch ally of the Republican party. Of his marriage with our subject ten children were born, three of whom lived to maturity: of these, Sarah J. is now Mrs. William James; her husband is a farmer in Stove Creek Precinct. Francis W. and Henry R. are dead.

In the many sorrows that have come to our subject in the death of husband and children, she has been sustained in the darkest hour by her strong religious faith, she being a devoted member of the Baptist Church, and is serenely awaiting reunion with her loved ones on the other shore. She is active in the interests of church and society, and her kindness and benevolence are too well known to need any further mention here.

 PETER EVELAND is the name of a man well and favorably known through Elmwood Precinct and through Cass County. He was born March 11, 1846, in Moscow Township, Muscatine Co., Iowa, where he was brought up on the farm. The duties required of him in his farm life were so onerous as to require all his time to such an extent that his opportunity for acquiring a scholastic education was very limited in extent, but by diligent application to study at his own fireside, and a close observation of events as they transpired about him, he has been able to overcome the effect of his earlier disadvantages, and is now one of the best informed and leading men of the county.

The father of the subject of our sketch was married twice. Two children were born to him as the result of the first marriage: Jeanette Hopkinson, living in Muscatine, Iowa, and Louisa Ward, who now lives in Elmwood Precinct. Fourteen children were born to the couple as the result of the second marriage, seven of whom reached the age of maturity. Among them was our subject, his sisters, Martha and Sarah N., and his brother Herman were older; and his sister Hester M., Katuraha, and brother, Frank P., were younger. He lived at home with his parents on the farm until he was sixteen years old, when he enlisted in Company E, 18th Iowa Infantry, July 20, 1862. He first went into camp at Clinton, Iowa, where the regiment was instructed in various military tactics, and whence they were sent to Sedalia, Mo., in 1862. From there they were ordered to Springfield, where he saw blood shed for the first time in his life. For a season after this the time of the regiment of which he was a member was quite busily employed, occupying among other places the towns of Fayetteville and Van Buren, Ark., Prairie Dean, Poison Springs and Jenkins' Ferry. At Ft. Smith, Ark., he was promoted to the post of Corporal. They went into winter quarters at that fort. In July of 1865 our subject was at Ft. Smith, at which place they were at the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged from service at the age of nineteen years—undoubtedly the youngest soldier serving in the ranks of the Union Army.

After his discharge from the army in August, 1865, our subject returned to Muscatine, Iowa, after having served for three years in one of the bloodiest wars the world has ever known, and resumed his home occupation. In the fall of 1866 he was married to Miss Sarah A. Metteer, the daughter of Robert and Chloe Metteer. The lady was born in Pennsylvania, going to Muscatine with her parents in 1863, where she met our subject after the close of the war. She was one of a family of six children. Her father and her brother reside in Plattsmouth, and one brother resides in Weeping Water Precinct.

In 1867 Mr. and Mrs. Eveland, just one year after their marriage, came to this precinct, settling on a farm on section 20, which he proceeded to improve for their home. In 1888 he built a full two-story residence, complete in all its appointments, an ideal home, by planting groves and setting out an orchard of choice varieties of fruit. He was here during the time when the grasshoppers devastated the crops of the country, which rendered him poor. In the years 1870-71 he worked on the railroad as a builder. During this time he had a leg broken by the caving in of an earth bank, but from which injury he fully recovered. In 1874 he went out on the plains on a buffalo hunt along the Republican River. Mr. Ward, his brother-in-law, was with him. His gun was accidentally discharged, and the charge took effect in his right arm, injuring the muscles so much as to make his right hand almost useless for all time to come.

In Colonial days four Eveland brothers came to New Jersey from Scotland and took part in the Indian Wars of that time. From one of them our subject descends. His mother was descended from an early English family, a resident of Virginia; the father removed with his family to Ohio, thence to Iowa, and settled in Muscatine County, where he lived and farmed until the time of his death in September, 1884, when he was seventy-four years old. The mother still lives in Iowa, and is now seventy-three years old.

Mr. and Mrs. Eveland have a family of eight children: Laura F., born in Iowa, died in Nebraska at the age of nineteen months; Melinda N.; an infant boy unnamed, deceased; Leonora M., Davonia D., Chloe Myra, Blanch E. and Gertie. The children living at home with their parents are exceptionally bright and intelligent, and are a source of great pride and comfort to their parents. The home farm of Mr. E. embraces a tract of 240 acres—the eighty acres on section 20 is the original homestead on which he settled on his arrival in this State—and 160 acres on section 17; it is finely located, and supplied with an abundance of good water, and possesses many natural advantages. All these broad acres are brought to the highest state of cultivation under the skillful direction of our subject. In addition to the system of general farming which he follows, our subject takes a special interest in the development of thoroughbred Clydesdale horses. The great pride which he takes in this branch of his business is certainly pardonable, and an examination of the stable of these fine animals owned by him reveals to the observer indisputable evidence of the good judgment exercised by their owner in raising them.

Although our subject takes a special pride in his horses, it is not to the neglect of other animals—cattle and hogs—of which he has a large number, the best of their class obtainable. His experience pertaining to agriculture and horticulture has been so varied and broad that his judgment in these matters is deferred to, and accepted by his neighbors as being correct, and those who follow his advice seldom fail to attain the end desired. With his wife and his most estimable daughter, Melinda N., he occupies and fills to perfection a high place in the social circles of the county. There is no social circle that is considered complete without the presence of some member of this family. They are so hospitable in their own home that a stranger visiting them is made to feel that the home is his and the family are the visitors. They have the welfare and interests of the neighborhood so close at heart that there is no religious, social, educational or political matter undertaken but what some one or more of the family takes an active and important part.

Mr. Eveland is ever ready to engage in the discussion of any question which may interest the people, and it is an hour well spent to listen to him recall the many incidents and anecdotes and thrilling experiences which came to the early pioneers of the State, and he has a large fund of such to draw upon and all are based upon facts. He recalls the time when he played base ball with Gov. Butler, Mr. Gillespie and others, afterward leading citizens of the State, one day in Lincoln, where they were attending a sale of town lots. He is gifted with a constitution of iron; it is simply wonderful to those who know him, how he has been able to accumulate so large a fortune, and discharge such a vast amount of labor, both physical and mental, as was necessary to attain the position he now holds. He is in truth and in fact a self-made man. Other men of less energy and determination would have given up in despair after having met with such an accident as crippled him for life; but our subject, however, improved the time that others would have lost by adding to his storehouse of knowledge.

In looking back over his ancestry we find him descended from the best old Scotch and English stock, seeing no stain upon their names, but to the contrary, possessed of that stern sense of right which we see exemplified in the person of our subject. There is no man of any rank who possesses a brighter and more brilliant army record than our subject. Coming home from the bloody fraternal war when only nineteen years of age, having served his country faithfully and well, passing unflinchingly through many terrible engagements, and encountering the many dangers which are incidental to a soldier's life, we find him settling down, enjoying the peace and quietude which he has so richly earned. In viewing the character of the man we do not lose sight of the brave woman who has stood unwaveringly by his side and lent him strength by her presence and counsels. Coming to the West, away from home and friends, settling down on a homestead with no near neighbors, and with but very few of the necessaries of life and none of the comforts, seconding her husband's efforts in every possible direction, she deserves the full complement of praise; sharing with him every struggle, bearing more than her share of every burden, and directing and guiding her children in the ways of uprightness and virtue, she has proved to be a helpmate to her husband in every sense of the word, and has richly earned the years of rest and content which she is now able to enjoy.

Our subject has served the people in various public capacities, all with honor and credit to himself and benefit to his constituents. He helped organize the school at Bushberry, District No. 44. He is now a member of the South Calahan District

No. 89; he has served as school officer in various districts for the last seventeen years, was Assessor for two terms, and has been Justice of the Peace. He has repeatedly been a delegate to the different County, State and Congressional Conventions of the Republican party, and as a delegate voted for the nomination of Govs. Dawes and Thayer. He is a prominent member of Kenesaw Post No. 128, G. A. R., at Elmwood, where he has served as Chaplain since the date of its organization. Both himself and wife are valued members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Calahan Corners; he is a charter member of the society, has served on the Building Committee, and is Trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Wabash.

PETER VOLK. Among the well-regulated farms of Eight Mile Grove Precinct that of the subject of this biography is particularly noticeable, as having been subjected to that careful cultivation which has made the land valuable and productive. It is embellished with neat and substantial buildings, the fields are enclosed with good fences, the live stock and machinery are creditable to the proprietor, and the whole premises, with its appurtenances, forms a lasting monument to the industry and perseverance of Mr. Volk, aided by his estimable wife. This lady has in her sphere probably performed her part as effectually as has her husband. The farm lies on section 28, and has about it the air of comfort and plenty which is pleasing to contemplate.

A native of Tazewell County, Ill., Mr. Volk was born Feb. 26, 1847, and lived there until reaching manhood. His parents, Nicholas and Maggie (Urich) Volk, were born in Germany, where the father lived until a man of twenty-five years. He then emigrated to America, and was afterward married. The mother was a child of two years when she was brought by her parents to the United States, they settling in Tazewell County, Ill., where she formed the acquaintance of and married Nicholas Volk.

To the parents of our subject there were born thirteen children, of whom the following survive, namely: Peter; Mary, the wife of Charles Hennings; Elizabeth, the wife of Jacob Tritsch; Jacob, all residents of this county; Eve, Mrs. Martin L. Freidrich, of this precinct; Bals, in this precinct; Nicholas, of this county; Lizzie, John, George and Philip, in Tazewell County, Ill. Caroline died when about twenty-three years old. The parents still continue residents of the Prairie State, and are well advanced in years. They settled in Tazewell County during its pioneer days, where the father battled with the elements of a new soil and built up a good homestead. Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Volk in their declining years are surrounded by all the comforts of life. Mr. Volk is the owner of a valuable farm, and has been quite prominent in the affairs of his township. He is numbered among the solid men of Tazewell County.

The subject of this sketch received a limited education, not having the advantages of many of the young men of to-day. He, however, has been one who has kept his eyes open to what was going on around him, and, by his natural sagacity and industry, has accomplished what perhaps a college education would not have enabled him to do. He left his boyhood home in the spring of 1872, coming to this county, where he sojourned two years, and employed himself as a farm laborer. In the meantime he purchased 160 acres of land, for the consideration of $16 per acre, and which now forms his homestead. In 1874 he returned to Illinois, remaining there about a year, then came back to Nebraska, and here has since been content to remain.

Mr. Volk settled upon his present land when it could by no means be called a farm, as there were no fences or buildings, in fact there had been no attempt whatever at its improvement or cultivation. He thus began at first principles in the construction of his homestead, and has been amply rewarded for his labors. He battled with the usual difficulties of pioneer life in Nebraska, and occupies a position in the front ranks of the successful men around him. After deciding to become a resident of this county he was married, Jan. 1, 1873, in Cass County, to Miss Elizabeth Nolting. They commenced the journey of life together on the new farm in a manner corresponding with their means and station, and labored hand in hand to rear their children, and provide for them the necessities of life, and as much beyond as they could. The household circle in due time included three daughters and four sons, six of whom are living. The eldest, Maggie, was born Nov. 25, 1873; Bals, May 9, 1875; George, Feb. 12, 1876; Henry, Nov. 12, 1877; Lizzie, born Aug. 9, 1882, and died Sept. 9, 1883; Edwin was born Oct. 29, 1884, and Mary July 4, 1887.

The wife of our subject was born in Jefferson County, Wis., Feb. 16, 1852, and was the daughter of William and Elizabeth Nolting, who were natives of Germany. They emigrated to America in 1852, and settled at once in Jefferson County, Wis. The father carried on farming, and died about 1882, in Cass County. The mother passed away in 1855, in Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Volk were reared in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church, and have been members of this body a number of years. Mr. V., politically, affiliates with the Democratic party. He is a man in whom his neighbors have confidence, and is serving his second year as Road Supervisor of District No. 12.

Mrs. Volk was one of the two children of her father's first marriage. Her sister Rachel is the wife of Leonard Bourne, of Cass County. Mr. Nolting by his second marriage became the father of several children, the eldest of whom, a daughter, Minnie, is the wife of Adam Kaffenber, of this precinct; Henry Yasper is farming in this county; Bertha, August and Frederick live at home with their mother. Mr. Nolting came to this county about 1866, while Nebraska was a Territory, and settled among the pioneers of Plattsmouth Precinct, where he died in 1882.

— — — — —

LEWIS H. YOUNG, an energetic and thriving farmer, and one of the pioneers of Cass County, residing on section 24 of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, was born Dec. 24, 1852, in Smith County, Va.; in the spring of 1867, in company with his parents, he came to Cass County, Neb. From his early boyhood our subject has been reared on a farm, amid the scenes of pioneer life, and has observed this country develop from a raw, wild and primitive condition, into the splendid garden of the West that it now is. Valuable farms have grown as if by magic, school-houses and churches thickly dotting the country as an evidence of the advance of civilization, and it is a matter of pride with him that he has taken no unimportant part in producing this magnificent change.

Having assisted his father in his pioneer labors in Ohio, as well as in Nebraska, he has a full conception of the life of a pioneer. He was married to Sarah Shryder April 9, 1873. This lady was born in Peoria County, Ill., Dec. 9, 1854. She is the daughter of George F. and Margaret (Parr) Shryder. Her father was a native of New York State. Her parents came to Nebraska, bringing her with them, in 1856, settling here among the very first families that made this State their home. They were the parents of six children, three of whom are living: Sarah, the wife of our subject; Ida, the wife of R. A. Young; and George L. Both parents are members of the United Presbyterian Church, are widely and favorably known, and enjoy the esteem and confidence of all their neighbors.

Our subject is the son of Lewis M. and Levniah Young. The father is a native of Virginia, and of Scotch descent. The mother died March 18, 1873, leaving behind a wealth of love and affection, and many friends who sincerely mourned their loss. The father is now living at an advanced age in Keya Paha County, Neb., where he went in 1885. A family of seven children was born to the parents of our subject, six of whom are living: Mary, the wife of Asher Tanner; George W.; Robert A. resides in Mt. Pleasant Precinct; Lewis H.; Sophia, the wife of G. W. Carroll, resides in Keya Paha County; Julia A., the wife of Charles Troop, residing in Rock Bluff Precinct; Vacey J. is deceased. There have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Young two children: Johnnie was born March 26, 1874; and Christmas C. was born Dec. 25, 1876. They are very bright and intelligent children.

Mr. Young owns a splendid farm of 160 acres of land, having made all the many valuable improvements thereon himself, and when he looks over his broad and well-tilled acres it is with the consciousness that their present condition is the direct result of his energy and application. His dwelling is neatly furnished, and his good wife is supplied with all the labor-saving appliances that will in any way lessen her household cares. The accommodations that he has provided for the protection of his stock, and the care of the crops raised, are conveniently arranged and sufficiently extensive to meet his present requirements.

In politics our subject is an earnest worker in the ranks of the Republican party. He has never held any office of public trust, feeling that he was better content to pursue the even tenor of his way in improving his farm and home, feeling also that the remuneration received would fall far short of compensating him for the vexations and cares incident to the public service.

MATHIAS A. JOHNSON, deceased, was numbered among the shrewd, practical men of Cass County, who have been important factors in developing its great agricultural resources, and in his death it lost an honored and useful citizen. He was a member of the farming community of Liberty Precinct, and he had a good farm there, with many substantial improvements. The widow of our subject and her sons, Walter A., Rudolph, Antone and Julius A., occupy the homestead, and are among the most highly respected residents of this community.

Mr. Johnson was a native of Germany, his birth occurring Dec. 24, 1834. He came of respectable and honest German parents, from whom he inherited good traits of character, and he was given the benefits of a sound education in both German and English branches, acquiring a knowledge of the latter after coming to this country. When he was sixteen years old he came to the United States. His parents died in the Fatherland.

Mr. Johnson's first seven years in this country were spent in Iowa, and from there, in company with three others, with teams, he crossed the plains to California some time in the fifties. He spent four years in the Golden State, prospecting for gold in the mining region with fair results. He was finally taken severely ill with a fever, and was obliged to leave the Pacific Coast. He went to New York by way of the water and isthmus route, and there embarked on the Atlantic for his old home in Germany. He spent some time amid the familiar scenes of his youth in order to recuperate, and with renewed health once more crossed the ocean to his adopted country. He located in Jackson County, Iowa, and some years later removed to Fremont County, in the same State, and there, when he was thirty-two years old, was married in Plum Hollow, Nov. 7, 1867, to Mrs. Amanda Surber, nee Wolf. She was born in Johnson County, Ind., July 4, 1843, to Peter and Rhoda A. (Kelly) Wolf. Her parents died about the year 1850 in Illinois, near St. Louis, Mo., they having gone to Western Illinois two years before, from Indiana. The father was a farmer by occupation, and a good, honest, hard-working man, and he and his wife were in the prime of life when death terminated their mortal existence. Mrs. Johnson of this notice was the youngest but one of the family, and she was very young when her parents moved to Western Illinois, and was but seven years old when she was bereaved of their care. Two years later the little orphan was taken by a family of the name of McDonald, in Missouri, and reared by them to womanhood. She afterward went to Tabor, Mills Co., Iowa, and later still to Nebraska City, Neb. There her first marriage took place Dec. 18, 1864, John Surber becoming her husband. He was a native of Switzerland, and came to the United States when sixteen years of age. He made his home in Indianapolis, Ind., for four years, and was there engaged as an engineer in a foundry. He lost his health, however, and finally after marriage located in Fremont County, Iowa, where he was extensively engaged in the sawmill business until his death, nearly two years after marriage. To him and his wife had been born one daughter, Rachel, who was a bright, interesting child, and her death at the age of fourteen was a severe blow to her mother.

After Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were married they settled in Fremont County, and he was engaged in running a sawmill there until he came to Nebraska with his family, and located on 160 acres of land on section 33, Liberty Precinct, which he had taken up as a pre-emption claim before he went to California. He labored hard to improve his land, and during the ten years that preceded his death he had wrought a great change in the tract of wild prairie on which he settled, had it under good tillage, and otherwise well improved. His death occurred here Feb. 3, 1877, while yet in the prime of life, and many sincerely mourned his death with his bereaved family. To him and his wife four sons had been born. Mr. Johnson was a man of high manly character, with a warm heart and kindly nature. His neighbors placed implicit confidence in his word, and none knew him but to trust him. He was a devout Lutheran in his religious belief, and in his political faith a staunch Republican, and his sons are also supporters of that party.

ALFRED S. COOLEY, one of the leading farmers and stock-buyers of Tipton Precinct, was born in Johnsonville, Trumbull Co., Ohio, June 7, 1846, where he lived with his father on the home farm until he was eleven years of age, when the family removed to Wisconsin, where he continued on the farm with his parents, and went to school. When he was twenty-one years old he began the operation of his father's farm on his own account. He continued there, working his father's place, until 1872, when he started for the West. He first located in Ringgold County, Iowa, where he bought 120 acres of land, which he cultivated for seven months. He did not like the location, so he sold out in the fall of 1872, and came overland with teams to Nebraska, crossing the Missouri River at Nebraska City, and, coming to Tipton Precinct, he located on his present place, where he homesteaded eighty acres, and purchased eighty acres more, for which he paid $1,000, which gave him a tract of 160 acres of choice, eligibly located farm land.

Having secured his land, our subject set to work with a will to improve it by building a sod house, in which he and his family lived the first winter. During this time he suffered intensely with the ague; his wife taught school until spring. The next spring he hauled lumber from Lincoln, and built a comfortable house. The loss of the crops in 1874-75, on account of the grasshoppers, compelled him to mortgage his farm. After the years named above he was exceedingly prosperous in his farming operations. Recognizing the advantages and future value of the land, he set about increasing his possessions. In 1879 he bought 160 acres of land from the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, for which he paid $5.50 per acre; in 1882 he bought 160 acres more, for which he paid $12 per acre, both tracts on section 9. Abundant water is supplied to his farm by Camp Creek, and a good quantity of native timber is growing on his various tracts. The property is enclosed and cross fenced by substantial wire and hedge fences.

Mr. Cooley is one of the most extensive buyers and shippers of stock in the county, buying cattle, hogs, horses and sheep, which he ships to the general markets at Lincoln and Omaha. He makes a specialty of raising hogs and horses, raising and shipping four or five cars of hogs each season. His horses are graded Normans; he has twenty-four head in all, and they certainly reflect great credit on their owner, evidencing the great care and skill and thorough knowledge of the business possessed by him. The barns provided for the care and protection of his stock are exceedingly comfortable, and conveniently arranged for the proper care of the different classes of animals for which they were designed. Water is supplied in the barnyard by a system of piping from a water tank, which is filled by pumps operated by a large windmill.

The subject of this sketch is one of the youngest of a family of eight children. His sisters Mary J. and Rhoda L., and his brothers, Franklin B., Roswell D. and Richard S., being older, and his brothers Timothy M. and Edward L. being younger. His brother Richard S. served during the late war in the 6th Ohio Cavalry, enlisting when only nineteen years old. His regiment was with the Army of the Cumberland, and accompanied Gen. Sherman in his famous march to the sea. In different engagements in which he participated he had two horses shot from under him. While out on a scouting expedition from Sherman's army he was taken prisoner by the rebels and sent to Libby Prison, thence to Belle Isle, from which latter place he was exchanged and restored to the service with his regiment. He was honorably discharged in Washington in 1865.

Our subject was married to Miss Rosalie M. Smith, the daughter of Franklin and Mary E. (Parker) Smith. This lady was born in Stafford Hollow Township, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Jan. 31, 1847. When she was nine years old her mother died, after which she made her home with an aunt. When she was eleven years of age she removed with the other members of her family to Forreston, Ogle Co., Ill. From there they removed to Platteville, Wis., where she attended the Normal School for three years. After completing her course in this institution she taught school for six years. She is one of a family of nine children. Her brothers, Franklin D., William S. and Andrew J., and her sisters, Anna L. and Abbie A., being older; and her sisters, Ruth H., Ella A. and Mary E., are younger. The latter two are deceased. Her brothers Frank and Andrew were in the late Civil War. Frank served as Second Lieutenant, and Andrew as First Orderly Sergeant. Both served through the war, and were honorably discharged at its close.

The lady's father was a farmer in Connecticut. He removed with his family to Onondaga County, N. Y., where he cultivated a farm, and also built a sawmill, and operated the same for many years. He is at present living in Port Byron, N. Y., now over eighty years of age. Her mother died in 1855, aged forty years. Her grandfather Parker was a lumberman and farmer in Vermont, where her mother was born. He removed with his family to New York State, and there his decease occurred. Her grandfather, Ira Smith, was a soldier during the Indian War, moved to Onondaga County, N. Y., and from there to near Charlotte, Mich.

The father of our subject was Sherman Cooley, a native of Connecticut, where he was born in 1806, near Granby, Hartford County. He farmed there until 1832, when he removed to Ohio, and located on a farm in Trumbull County, being one of the first to settle in that county. The mother, Diana Day, is still living, in Lima, Grant County, at an advanced age. She was born in Vermont, in the year 1811, and is an active member of the Christian Church. Grandfather Cooley was a native of Connecticut. After his marriage in that State he removed, in 1882, to Ohio, locating in Trumbull County, in that State. He was one of the earliest settlers in that part of the State, where he bought 160 acres of Government land in the midst of a heavy forest, which he cleared up. He was Justice of the Peace for a number of years; as a civil engineer he acted as County Surveyor, but paid most of his attention to his farm. In 1856 he sold the farm and went to LaFayette County, Wis., where he bought wild land, improved it, and engaged in farming and stock-raising. Here again he was elected Justice of the Peace and Town Clerk, also a member of the Board of Supervisors. He bought 100 acres of land in Grant County, Wis., to which he removed in 1880, and where he lived until his death, which occurred Feb. 20, 1888. He could trace his ancestry back to the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. Grandfather Giles Day, a native of Vermont, was a blacksmith by trade, and could trace his ancestry back to the Puritans of Plymouth Rock.

A family of seven children has been born to our subject and his estimable wife, who were named respectively: Sherman, Harold O., Archie B., Ferris F., Ora A., Florence P. and Hazel, all at home with their parents; two are dead. The gentleman whose name heads this sketch is known throughout the country as a man having an unlimited amount of push and energy. Such is his reputation in this district, that, whenever any work is to be accomplished requiring an extra amount of vim, he is the one called upon to take charge of it, and success generally crowns his efforts. If a question of vital importance is to be voted upon at any election, he is indefatigable in his efforts to secure the attendance of a sufficient number of voters to carry the measure in question. He carries the same amount of energy into his everyday life, and during the busy season his farm presents a lively appearance, everyone employed receiving inspiration from its proprietor. In politics he is a strong and aggressive Republican. During his busy life he has found time to serve his neighbors in various official capacities; has held the office of Postmaster at Eagle for six years; District Treasurer, Constable, was a member of the Republican County Central Committee, and has been a delegate to the various State and County Conventions. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and I. O. G. T., and was an active member of the Grange. He is a strict and conscientious member of the Episcopal Church. He is Past Commander of the Knights of Pythias.

JACOB FORSYTH, an honored and respected citizen of Tipton Precinct, was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, April 25, 1836, where he lived with his parents until he was fifteen years of age, working on the farm with his father and attending the common schools of the neighborhood. In 1851 he went with his father to Scott County, Iowa, where he lived with the latter until reaching the age of twenty-six years. Aug. 25, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, 20th Iowa Infantry, and was mustered into the service at Clinton, Iowa.

The regiment of which our subject was a member went southward into Missouri and took part in the battle of Prairie Grove. In June, 1863, they were sent to Vicksburg, where they remained until the final surrender of that city, taking an active part in many battles and skirmishes about that place. After the surrender the regiment was sent down the river to New Orleans; from there they went into Texas, taking an active part in the engagement at Brownsville. After being in Texas one year they were ordered northward, were present at the siege and capture of Ft. Morgan, in Alabama, then north into Arkansas, where they went into winter quarters; the following spring they were sent by water to Pensacola, Fla. From there they were ordered to Mobile, Ala., where they took part in the storming and capture of Ft. Blakesley. Our subject passed through the war unscathed by wounds, but he was sick for two months and a half in the hospital. During his term of service he was granted but one furlough to visit home. After serving his time, till the close of the war, he was mustered out of the service and honorably discharged at Clinton, Iowa, Aug. 24, 1865.

For three years after his return home Mr.

Forsyth engaged in breaking prairie and threshing grain. He then began farming on rented land in Scott County, which he followed for three years more. In the spring of 1874 he came to Nebraska overland with teams, crossing the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, coming into Tipton, where he rented land for the following five years. During this time he had bought eighty acres of land from the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, and in the autumn of 1880 he removed to it, and immediately proceeded to improve it, building a house, barn, setting out a grove of five acres, an orchard of thirty trees, and a large number of cedars. The entire farm is well fenced by substantial wire fences.

From the time he moved to this farm our subject has devoted his time and attention exclusively to its cultivation and improvement, raising corn and hogs, and he has been eminently successful. In the spring of 1888 he erected a new residence as large as any in the precinct, conveniently arranged for the comfort of his family. He uses five head of graded horses in the operation of his farm.

Our subject was married in LeClaire, Scott Co., Iowa, Nov. 25, 1870, to Miss Ellen F. Stopher. This lady possessed a most estimable character, and was highly honored by all who knew her. Her death, which occurred but recently, May 7, 1888, was a sad affliction to her husband, who was devoted to her. He feels her loss greatly, and the blow was especially heavy, coming at the time when they had everything gathered around them to be comfortable and enjoy life, which result was due in a great measure to her earnest and devoted assistance. She was born in Scott County, Iowa.

The subject of this sketch was the second eldest in a family of seven children; his brother Jasiel was older; and his brothers William, John, Luther, Jasper and Jesse, were younger. John served four years in the 13th Iowa Infantry, during the late war; Jasper served three years in the same regiment; Luther served in the 21st Iowa for three years, and William served one year on detail in Davenport, Iowa. All the brothers were honorably discharged.

The father of our subject was John Forsyth, a native of Virginia. He settled with his parents in Muskingum County, Ohio, when a boy. He bought Government land in that county and cleared a farm on which he lived until 1851, when he removed to Scott County, Iowa, where he remained one year. He then removed to Clinton County, where he bought 400 acres of land, and remained there one year; then moved into Princeton, Scott County, where he built a sawmill on the banks of the Mississippi River. In this venture he was very successful. He sold his mill and bought eighty acres of land near Princeton, which he rented. He lived in the town of Princeton until his death, which occurred in February, 1885, aged seventy years. His wife, the mother of our subject, died in 1881. Both parents were of English descent, and were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Forsyth is a member of Kenesaw Post No. 103, G. A. R. In politics he is a thorough-going Republican, taking a lively and active interest in the councils of that party. He is a man of considerable prominence in the community in which he lives, and has the esteem and good opinion of all who know him; kind, generous and open-hearted, he has a welcome for each and every one. He is always glad and happy to meet an old army comrade, and live over again the scenes and incidents of a soldier's life.

DANIEL W. FOSTER represents both the industrial and farming interests of Liberty, and he is a man of prominence in this precinct. He is a very skillful mechanic, and also a practical agriculturist, owning a farm of which eighty acres are on section 26, this precinct, and eighty acres in Otoe County. It is well watered, is provided with substantial improvements, and has every facility for conducting farming. On the home farm is a fine bearing orchard of 270 choice fruit trees, the place is well stocked, and our subject has some fine horses. He is prominently identified with the Wyoming & Liberty Stock Company, having been officially connected with it as Secretary. The head of the horses of high grade owned by the company is "British Lion." He is a stock for five years, when he sold out and removed to Skaneateles in the same county, where he bought a house and lot. He remained there a couple of years, engaging in the tobacco trade. In 1868 he sold out and removed to Nebraska, coming by rail to Nebraska City, thence by team to Stove Creek Precinct, where he settled on a homestead on section 34, taking up eighty acres of raw land. He broke this prairie with three yoke of oxen, planting a grove of ten acres, and an orchard of 200 fine trees, set out by himself. He lived on this farm for five years, then proved up and moved to Lincoln, Neb., where he engaged in the grocery and dry-goods business, in partnership with his brother. They carried on the business for two years, losing money on account of the grasshopper plague, there being no crops, and consequently no money coming into the country.

The appointment of head janitor in the Peru Normal School was given Mr. Clements in 1875, which necessitated the removal of his family to that place. He held this position for five years. In 1880 he determined to try farming again, having in the interim bought an addition of 160 acres, making a tract of 240 acres for cultivation.

Once more on his farm Mr. Clements devoted his attention to general farming and the raising of hogs and cattle. In this he was very successful, and carried it on until 1886. During the two years prior to 1886 he served as County Commissioner, which occupied about one-half his time, consequently he simply superintended the operations on the farm. He served as County Commissioner, the highest and most responsible office in the county, until January, 1887. In 1886 he moved into Elmwood, where he bought eighty acres adjoining, forty of which he laid out as an addition to that town. In August, 1886, the railroad was built through the town, which gave the real-estate business in which our subject was greatly interested a great impetus. He has built three large store buildings on D street, besides the large building occupied by the firm of which he is the senior member, devoted to the furniture and implement trade, which he began in 1887 under the firm name of Clements & Elliott, which firm was dissolved in June, 1887, he then taking his son into partnership, under the firm name of Clements & Son. He is at present engaged in the purchase and sale of real estate, and has large interests in Lincoln, the capital city. He still owns the old home farm, but rents it. After the sale of the first addition he platted and sold the other forty acres adjoining Elmwood.

The father of our subject was George Clements, born in Somersetshire, England; his mother was Harriet Richards, also born in Somersetshire. His father was a farmer, and came to America in 1842, settling in Marcellus, Onondaga Co., N. Y., where he bought 400 acres of improved land, which he operated until the fall of 1864, when he moved into Marcellus, where he lived until 1888. He and his wife are now living with one of his sons on the old homestead, and have reached the advanced age of eighty years. Both are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Our subject is one of a family of six children: Infant brothers, Thomas and Charles, are deceased; and Thomas, the second, lives in New York State; I. N. and Ephurem G., in Lincoln, are younger. Isaac N. and E. G. served in the 122d New York Infantry during the late war. The scene of their service was laid in the Peninsula, participating in the battles of Chancellorsville, the Wilderness and Antietam. E. G. was honorably discharged at Alexandria, Va., on account of physical disability. I. N. served as hospital steward, was shot through his ankle during the battle of the Wilderness, was taken prisoner by the rebels, who amputated his leg and sent him to Libby Prison, where he remained six months a prisoner of war, when he was paroled and exchanged. Upon reaching Annapolis, Md., he was honorably discharged. He is at present Principal of the seminary at Cazenovia, N. Y.

Mr. Clements was married in Marcellus, N. Y., March 12, 1857, to Miss Sarah J. Barnett, the daughter of William and Maria Barnett. She was born in Marcellus, N. Y. Five children have been born to our subject and his wife, namely: Hattie; Sanford and Samuel, twins, deceased; Byron I. and Albert are living. Byron I. married Miss Minnie Bailey, and is the junior partner of the firm of Clements & Son. Albert is at home with his parents.

The beautiful home of Mr. Clements is situated on the corner of F and Second streets. The house is 32x48 feet, the finest in the town; water is supplied throughout by a system of pipes from a large reservoir tank which is filled by the operation of a large windmill, and otherwise arranged in the interior with every appliance to add to the comfort and well-being of the inmates. The lawn is nicely arranged, and taking the home both inside and out, is the most beautiful place in Cass County, and does great credit to the liberality and enterprise of the owner. But few homes in our cities are better adapted to the giving of pleasure and comfort than that of our subject.

The citizens of Elmwood are indebted as much if not more to this gentleman than to any other for the prosperity of their town. It is owing mainly to his efforts and zeal that the Missouri Pacific Railroad was built through the town. After the two surveys had been made, neither of them going through the town, our subject, with Dr. Hobbs, C. D. Clapp, C. Alton and John Hart, formed a corporation between themselves, and after corresponding with and interviewing the Superintendent of the road, and by raising $1,200 in cash, and giving the right of way and one-half of 160 acres of the town site, they induced the company to abandon the proposed route and lay the road through Elmwood. The $1,200 was raised by subscription; the eighty acres of land donated the road was given by the five men mentioned, Mr. Clements giving one-fourth, or twenty acres of the amount. The road was completed in 1886.

In all matters pertaining to the welfare of the people among whom he lives Mr. Clements has taken and occupied a foremost position, being always on the alert to secure for himself and neighbors all and every advantage that could possibly be secured by energy and push. He has received and deserved at the hands of his fellow-citizens the most complete confidence and regard, being placed by them in many positions of trust, serving for three years as County Commissioner, which is the highest and most responsible local office within the gift of the people of the county. He is at present Justice of the Peace and Notary Public, a member of the Board of Trustees of Elmwood, and a member of the A. F. & A. M., of Plattsmouth. He is Past

Chancellor of the K. of P., of Elmwood, and a valued member of the A. O. U. W., of that place. Both himself and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He donated the site for and contributed largely to the building of the church edifice. Always generous, large-hearted and genial, he is the ideal citizen of the West.

In politics Mr. Clements is a strong Republican, a delegate to the State and County Conventions of that party time after time, a conscientious and conservative member of both the Grand and Petit Juries. He can rejoice in the fact of every duty well and faithfully performed.

WILLIAM HEROLD is the oldest merchant in Plattsmouth, and he has a well-kept establishment, with an extensive patronage among the best class of people. He represents both the business and public interests of the city, and is numbered among its most enterprising and substantial citizens.

Our subject was born in Bustadt, Saxe-Weimar, Germany, and his father, Gotleib Herold, was a native of the same place. His grandfather, Frederick Herold, was born and reared in France, and served in the French army under Napoleon. He was with that great leader in the raid on Moscow, and in the subsequent terrible retreat through the winter snows. Mr. Herold proved to be so courageous and efficient a soldier that he was made an officer in the army, and he used often to be sent to Russia to buy horses. He was a great admirer of the great commander under whom he fought, and he used to tell his children many anecdotes concerning him, and also concerning the campaigns in which he himself took part. After his retirement from the army he opened a hotel one mile from the county seat of Saxe-Weimar, and was for many years profitably engaged as "mine host." He spent his declining years with the mother of our subject, dying at the ripe old age of eighty-four years.

The father of our subject was reared in his native place, attended school in his youth and subsequently learned the trade of butcher. He owned a farm which he managed himself, besides keeping a meat-market in town. He died while yet a young man, and left a wife and four children, the names of the latter being Adam Bernhard, William, Gustave and Herman. The mother of our subject spent her whole life in her native country. Being left a widow thus early she faithfully performed the duty of rearing her children to honest and useful lives, thus making them good citizens of their adopted country, for they all came to America in after years.

William Herold was eight years of age when his father died. He attended school quite regularly until his sixteenth year, and obtained a sound education. He then bought his time of the Government until he should be of age, and through his uncle purchased his freedom from military service, and then he and his brother Gustave set sail from Hamburg in the fall of 1849 in an American-bound vessel. They encountered high winds in mid-ocean, and the ship was driven from its course, and the provisions becoming scarce, all on board lived on rice and molasses for two weeks. At length, after a perilous voyage of sixty days, they landed in New York. They went directly to LaSalle County, Ill., and our subject found work there with a butcher, receiving $8 a month in payment for his services. At the expiration of a year he left Illinois, crossing the Mississippi to St. Louis, where he worked at the butcher's trade for one year. In 1851 he engaged to go with a man from Illinois to California, to assist him in driving a herd of cattle across the plains and mountains. They started from Independence, Mo., in the spring, and made the journey across the wild prairies of the unorganized territory now comprising Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, etc., to their destination in Marysville, arriving in October. The traveler of the present day can scarcely realize, as he speeds along over the iron rails in luxurious palace cars, that such an undertaking in those days involved many weary days and months of slow traveling across the mountainous plains and the rugged mountain passes, through a country infested by Indians (who were, perhaps, hostile), and wild animals, such as deer, elk, antelopes and buffaloes.

Mr. Herold engaged in butchering in San Francisco for other parties, and remained there a year. We next hear of him in Drytown, Amador County, where he opened a meat-market, which he managed with great profit for two years. He then left California and returned home by the Nicaragua route to New Orleans, and thence up the Mississippi River to Muscatine, Iowa, where he took the stage for Council Bluffs. He then bought two yoke of oxen and pushed on to Omaha, which he found in an embryo state, it having just been platted, and containing only from fifteen to twenty houses. He engaged there in breaking the prairie with his teams, receiving $8 an acre for his work. All the land in Nebraska was then owned by the Government, and for sale at $1.25 an acre, and Indians still inhabited that section of the country. In the fall of 1855 he came to Plattsmouth, which he found to be an insignificant hamlet, with about fifteen houses, about half of which were log structures, and the remainder small frame buildings. He continued on west of that town and took up a timber claim one mile southwest of the present site of Louisville. After entering his claim he went to Glenwood, Iowa, and opened a general store there. In 1857 he established a branch store at Plattsmouth, and thus became one of the pioneers in the mercantile business in this city. In 1859 he sold out at Glenwood and settled on his land near Louisville, and commenced to improve a farm. In 1862 he came to Plattsmouth to engage in business, opening a general store, which is now the oldest in the city. He has prospered exceedingly, and has built up an extensive and paying trade.

Mr. Herold was married, March 2, 1858, to Miss Elizabeth O'Neil, a native of Hocking County, Ohio, and a daughter of James and Rachel (Aubery) O'Neil, of whom see sketch. Four children have been born of this marriage, namely: James, who married Mary Clark, and is in business in Boston; Emma, who is the wife of Frank Hager, of Plattsmouth; Henry and Dora, who are at home with their parents.

Mr. Herold is a self-made man in the truest sense of the word, owing his good fortune solely to the exercise of his own powers. His conduct in life is guided by good principles, and in all of his transactions he is found to be fair and upright. In him the Episcopal Church has a devoted member. As a good citizen he is deeply interested in the welfare of the city whose growth he has witnessed and promoted, and as one of the Board of Councilmen for two years, has heartily entered into all schemes looking to its advancement. Politically, he is a Democrat, firmly believing that the policy of that party, if carried out, would stimulate the various industries of the United States to an unprecedented activity. Socially, he is identified with the A. F. & A. M., Plattsmouth Lodge No. 6, and the I. O. O. F., Plattsmouth Lodge No. 7.

JOHN W. SHANNON, now deceased, was one of the earliest settlers of Plattsmouth, coming to this region when there was little indication of the present wealth and prosperity of this flourishing city. A native of Colborne, Northumberland County, Province of Ontario, Canada, he was born in 1821, where he was reared and received a common-school education. Upon approaching manhood he learned the trade of a tailor, at which he was occupied until 1852, then migrated over into the States, and worked at his trade in New York and Ohio for a period of seven years.

About this time the gold excitement at Pike's Peak attracted thither a large number of men desirous of bettering their condition financially, and Mr. Shannon, joining the caravan setting thitherward, made the journey overland across the plains. He at once entered the mines, and met with very good success. He afterward decided to seek another locality. In the meantime he had made the acquaintance of George Gilpin, who gave him a letter of introduction to Kit Carson, at that time Indian Agent at Taos, New Mexico, whither he repaired. He did not remain long, however, in that region, but returning east as far as the present site of Plattsmouth, concluded to locate here, and here he spent the remainder of his life.

Mr. Shannon is a man of great energy and enterprise, and after concluding to make Plattsmouth his headquarters, gathered together teams and other equipments and commenced freighting across the plains to Denver, and other important military posts in the West. He was thus occupied until in 1864, when, settling down in Plattsmouth, he established in the livery business, and was thus occupied until in 1886. Being now near his three-score years and ten, he decided to retire from active business and accordingly sold out. His death took place Sept. 8, 1888.

On the 2d of February, 1873, Mr. Shannon was united in marriage with Miss Martha J. Erway, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride. Mrs. Shennen was born at Three Rivers, St. Joseph Co., Mich., and is the daughter of Albert H. Erway, a native of Tompkins County, N. Y. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. S. were Charles and Susannah (Corchit) Erway. They settled in St. Joseph County during its pioneer days, and Albert H. remained with his parents until approaching manhood. His business career commenced as a clerk in a store of general merchandise. So great was his application to his duties, his honesty and integrity, that he not only made many friends, but managed his finances wisely that he was enabled to purchase the business of his employer, which he conducted afterward for a period of thirteen years.

In 1852 Mr. Erway started for California, making the journey via the Isthmus, and landing in San Francisco on the 7th of April. He first engaged in mining on Mormon's Island. The winter following, associating himself with a partner, he purchased a stock of goods in San Francisco, and established himself in business at a place called Fiddletown, and remained there until after the destruction of Sacramento by fire. He then engaged in freighting from Stockton to the mines, making his headquarters at the former place.

In 1855 Mr. Erway returned to Michigan, and locating in Cass County, occupied himself there until in 1860. He then crossed the Father of Waters again, locating in Iowa, but a year later sought Nebraska Territory, and for a year thereafter occupied himself as a hotel-keeper. We next find him in the young city of Denver, where, however, he sojourned but a short time, but migrating farther northwest resumed his old business of freighting, transporting goods from Walla Walla to the mines in Idaho.

In 1863 Mr. Erway again sought the Pacific Slope, and began freighting to the mountains.

Later he purchased a ranch sixteen miles below Sacramento, where he lived until 1868; then went to Nevada, and again became interested in freighting, doing an extensive business. Here, however, his usual prosperity seemed to have deserted him, as he finally lost the accumulations of years and was obliged to start anew. His perseverance and resolution, however, brought him out a victor from the struggle, and in the course of eighteen months he had accumulated $3,000. A part of this, in 1876, he invested in a ranch in Esmeralda County, the Mason Valley, where he engaged extensively in stock-raising, built a beautiful home, and there spent his last days. He closed his eyes upon earthly scenes on the 8th of March, 1886.

Mrs. Abigail Jane (Phillips) Erway, the mother of Mrs. Shannon, was born in Kentucky. Of this union there were eight children, namely: Benjamin, James, Amanda, Emma, Mark, Martha, Edward and Charles. Mr. Shannon was a member of the Masonic fraternity.

THOMAS T. YOUNG. Among the many valuable farms which make South Bend Precinct a veritable Garden of Eden, there are none that present to the eye a finer appearance, or are under a higher state of cultivation, than the home farm occupied by the gentleman whose name heads this sketch. He owns and operates a farm of 240 acres on section 32, devoting it to general farming and stock-raising. He is a native of Ohio, being born in Pickaway County, June 29, 1844, the youngest child in a family of four, having three sisters older, named Sarah J., Mary E. and Allie A. They are the children of Thomas and Sarah (Cole) Young. The father was born in Pennsylvania, and the mother in Pickaway County, Ohio. The parents lived for many years in the northern part of Ohio, when they removed to Iowa in 1852, where they settled on the land in what is now Mt. Pleasant. The father died at the present home of our subject in 1874, aged seventy-five years. The mother still lives in Greenwood, and is now eighty-two years old.

Our subject was taken to Allen County, Ohio, by his parents, when he was eight years old; he attended the Union Schools while living in that county, and after his parents migrated with their family to Iowa, he took a course in the Iowa Wesleyan University. After leaving this school, he engaged in business in Iowa as a clerk. Not feeling satisfied with the possibilities of his position, and hoping to advance his interests favorably, he went to Colorado in 1864, where he engaged in farming in El Paso County. The results of this venture did not entirely satisfy him, and after five years' experience he came in 1869 to Eight Mile Grove Precinct, this county.

Mr. Young was married to Miss Susie Creamer, a daughter of Cyrus and Sarah Creamer. This lady was born in Indiana, and at the age of three or four years, her parents moved to Bloomington, Ill., where they resided for several years, when they again moved, this time from Illinois to Nebraska, where they finally settled in Eight Mile Grove Precinct. This lady was then about twelve years of age. She resided at home with her parents, taking her part in the various household duties pertaining to their home, attending school, and otherwise preparing herself for a life of usefulness. She has become the mother of eight children, five of whom are living, named: Eva M., Mary E., Frank T., Alice E. and Myra B. Her parents were natives of Indiana.

Since his final settlement on his present farm, Mr. Young has devoted his time and attention to the improvement of his land, and the raising of stock for the general market. The improvements which he has from time to time placed on his farm, are of the most substantial and solid nature, and built with a view of being permanent and lasting. He has good barns which are models of their class; large and roomy, they are admirably arranged for their intended use. His cattle sheds, corn cribs, granaries, and the sheds for the protection of the various farming machinery, are first class in every respect. He feels that successful farming depends largely on taking proper care of the animals and implements on a farm. He is wide-awake, pushing, and well informed in his business, possessing an eminently practical knowledge, derived from experience and observation, of all the details pertaining to farming and stock-raising.

The fine frame residence in which our subject resides occupies a commanding location, and is one of the most tastily built residences in the precinct, is nicely furnished throughout, and contains the latest improvements for reducing the labor of housekeeping to the smallest possible amount. His wife, who is at the head of his domestic establishment, is a handsome and most excellent lady in all respects. She takes a pardonable pride in the internal arrangements of her home, which is certainly justifiable, for it reflects great credit on her judgment and artistic taste. She is genial and hospitable, which qualities make her a leading spirit in the social life of the locality. Herself and husband are earnest and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They carry their religion into their everyday life and live fully up to their conception of what a true Christian should be. Mr. Young has filled acceptably to his neighbors and with credit to himself various public offices, being elected Assessor for two terms, was also from 1871 to 1880 an active member of the School Board. He served on the Grand and Petit Juries of the county, in which latter position he discharged his duties in an impartial manner. In politics Mr. Young is a Republican.

NICOLAS YOUNG has a farm of 200 acres very pleasantly located, partly on Weeping Water Creek, on section 27, Liberty Precinct. It is well watered, well stocked, and well improved, comparing favorably in all respects with the best of the many fine farms in this section of Cass County. Our subject is a representative farmer and citizen of his precinct and county, and is eminently worthy of a place in this biographical work.

He was born in Berlin, Germany, May 3, 1826, and was reared and educated in one of the Rhine Provinces, some fifty miles from that capital. His father, Simon Young, was a laboring man, and worked in a tobacco factory. He married a lady of the same town as himself, and they are both now deceased, he dying at the age of sixty-six and she in the prime of life, when our subject was but six years old. They were both people whose blameless lives and honest, industrious habits gained them the respect of their neighbors. Mr. Young was a Lutheran in his religious belief, and was ever faithful to the tenets of his church. In early manhood Mr. Young, of whom we write, sought the United States of America, this Mecca of so many of his compatriots, after having plied the trade of stonemason in the Fatherland nine years, hoping to secure more profitable wages here in return for his labors. That was in the year 1854, and he made his way to St. Louis, and followed his trade in that city more or less until he came to Nebraska and turned his attention to farming in 1856. He spent the first year after his arrival in Wyoming Precinct, Otoe County, and in 1859 came to Cass County. He pre-empted eighty acres of land, and immediately entered upon the labor of improving it, and later he bought the 120 acres where he now resides, and has 200 acres of well-tilled land, provided with buildings and everything needed for successfully prosecuting his work.

July 5, 1860, our subject took one of the most important steps of his life, in his marriage with Miss Maria Schmitz, who has ably assisted him in building up their comfortable home. She was born in Germany, Sept. 17, 1833, and is the daughter of John and Catherine (Bonsen) Schmitz, now both deceased, her father having died at a good old age, and her mother in the prime of life, when her daughter, Mrs. Young, was a child of three years. Mr. Schmitz was a tailor by trade. Mrs. Young was reared and educated in Germany, and was twenty-three years old when she came to the United States and took up her home in Nebraska. She is the mother of nine children, four of whom are dead—John W., Andrew, Henry and Peter. The remaining children are Fred W., Simon, Anna M. and Anna Frances (twins), and Charles E., and all are at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Young are Lutherans in their religious belief, and are active in the church. Mr. Young is independent in politics, always exercising his reason in casting his ballot, and voting for those men whom he thinks will best serve the country, without regard to their political affiliations.

Yours Truly
F. R. Guthmann

FRANCIS R. GUTHMANN, a capitalist of Plattsmouth, is numbered among the wealthy and substantial citizens of Cass County. He has now practically retired from business, although he still supervises his extensive interests. He has contributed largely to the upbuilding of the city, and has a great deal of property here, including a handsome residence, the best hotel of the place, and two smaller ones, besides stores and other buildings. Mr. Guthmann was born in the village of Waldhausen, near Buchen, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, husband, and ten of them grew to maturity. Caroline married Peter Rauen; Helen married Valentine Egenberger; Charles, who served in the 3d Missouri Regiment under Gen. Sigel for four years, and afterward settled in Lancaster County, Neb., died at the home of our subject in 1882; Maria L. married Benjamin Hempel; William, who served in the German Army, died in Plattsmouth in 1884; our subject was the next in order of birth; then Maria Catherine, who married J. V. Weckbach, of whom see sketch on another page of this book;

RESIDENCE OF F. R. GUTHMANN, CORNER OF FOURTH AND LOCUST STS., PLATTSMOUTH, NEB.

Germany, July 2, 1841. His parents, Francis and Anna Maria (Gramlich) Guthmann, were natives of the same place, as were also their parents. The paternal grandfather of our subject owned a farm there and was a lifelong resident of that place. His father, Francis Guthmann, was reared to agriculture, which he pursued in his native land until his death, Nov. 26, 1875. His wife, Anna Maria, was born in a village near her husband's birthplace, and spent her last years in the home where all of her married life was passed. She died Dec. 11, 1860. There were fourteen children born to her and her

John F. M. died in his native village; Fred and Oswald are the youngest members of the family. Seven of these are living in Nebraska, and all in Cass County, with the exception of Fred, who is a resident of Seward County.

Francis R. received an excellent education in the Fatherland, attending school pretty steadily in his boyhood until he was fourteen years of age. He then assisted his father in the labors of the farm until the month of December, 1856, when he and one of his sisters set sail from London, and landed in New York Feb. 9, 1857. Another brother and sister had preceded them, and they joined them in Davenport, Iowa, where they had settled. Our subject had come to America with but little means, and he immediately set about procuring work that he might better his financial condition. The first year of his stay in this country he was employed at the saddler's trade. In 1859 he started with a party bound for Pike's Peak in search of gold. Going from Davenport with teams, they traversed the wild prairies of Iowa, and crossing the Missouri River at Plattsmouth, then an insignificant hamlet, they pushed on across the plains through the Territory of Nebraska to near Ft. Kearney, where they were stayed in their course by meeting many weary and disappointed emigrants returning from Pike's Peak with very discouraging reports, so the party concluded to abandon their purpose. Our subject's brother decided to take up a claim in Nebraska, and selected a tract of land in Lancaster County, about ten miles east of the present site of Lincoln, which was then a wild, open prairie, owned by the Government, and for sale at $1.25 an acre. Indians still lingered in that part of the country, and deer, elk and wolves roamed at will over the plains. Our subject was then too young to make a claim to some land, so he returned to civilization. He spent two months in St. Louis, and then went to St. Joseph and worked in a bakery. After thoroughly mastering that trade, he engaged in pantry work in the Pacific House in that city, remaining there until 1863. He then crossed the plains to Denver, and there engaged as pastry cook in the Planters' Hotel, then the leading hotel in Denver. Ten months later, in February, 1864, he left that place, and, with others, started with six wagons for that part of Idaho now included in the Territory of Montana. While traveling in the mountains the party encountered severe storms and nearly perished. In one place they were five days making seven miles, and one night the wolves killed and devoured one of the mules. On the 15th of May the party arrived at Virginia City, and there learned that it had been reported that they had all perished in the mountains. Mr. Guthmann opened a bake shop and boarding-house in that city, but his residence in that part of the country was of short duration, as in the fall of 1864 he came to Plattsmouth to invest his money in city property, and made arrangements to erect a store building. In 1865 he returned to the mountains and established a bakery and boarding-house in Blackfoot City, Deer Lodge Co., Mont., conducting both with good financial success until 1868, when he again came to Plattsmouth. He engaged in the bakery business here, and the following year added pork packing. In 1870 he opened a billard hall, and in 1871 a grocery store, giving his personal attention to these varied enterprises until 1874, all the while carrying on his bakery. He then sold the grocery store, but continued to manage the billard hall until 1881. Since that time he has not been engaged in any actual business, but devotes himself to the supervision of his multiplicity of interests, from which he derives an ample income. Mr. Guthmann is a man of great enterprise; he has a clear head for business, and displays much tact and shrewdness in his various undertakings. He has done much toward building up Plattsmouth, having erected two dwelling-houses and three stores, besides other buildings. The brick house which he occupies with his family is one of the finest in the city, and was erected in 1886. Mr. Guthmann is a stockholder in the Citizens' Bank, also in the Bank of Cass County, and also in the Plattsmouth Canning Factory, of which he is President. He has taken an honorable part in public affairs, having been a member of the City Council. He has always been identified with the Democrats in his political affiliations.

Mr. Guthmann was united in marriage to Anna M. Pankratz, Jan. 10, 1878, and to them have been born four children—Nellie, Charles F. M., Henry A. J. and Minnie T. They have also an adopted daughter, Annie. Mrs. Guthmann was born in Manitowoc County, Wis., Nov. 24, 1860, and is a daughter of Joseph and Katrina (Bruner) Pankratz, natives of Bavaria. They were reared and married in that country, and resided there until 1853. In that year they crossed the water to the United States, and located in Manitowoc County, Wis., being early settlers of that part of the country. Mr. Pankratz bought a tract of timber land, and first erected a round log house to shelter his family, and then commenced to clear a farm from the wilderness. Later he erected a substantial, two-story, hewed log house, and other necessary farm buildings, and resided there until his death in 1863. His widow is still living on the old homestead. There were eight children in their family, as follows: Anton, who died at the old home in 1888; Mary, who married Joseph Lemberger, is now deceased; Katrina, who married John Steiner, and lives in Manitowoc County, Wis.; Theresa, who married Henry Fetzer, and lives in Lancaster County, Neb.; Frances, who married Fabian Heitzmann, and lives in Gage County, Neb.; Joseph, who lives in Manitowoc County; Mrs. Guthmann; Maggie, who married John Smith, and lives in Manitowoc County, Wis.

The life of Mr. Guthmann has been an active one, full of enterprise and stirring incident, and through all he preserved the cool headedness and good judgment which enabled him to acquire the fortune he is now enjoying. On an adjoining page appears an excellent portrait of this well-known resident.

HON. A. M. ROSE, an honored resident of Union Village, occupies an honorable place among the prominent pioneers of Nebraska, who were its earliest settlers. He settled in Nebraska City before it was surveyed, and at the time there were but very few settlements of whites in the whole Territory, it then being the home of the Indian. Mr. Rose is thoroughly conversant with the early history of this portion of the great West, and converses very interestingly of his experiences here at the time, and of the many pioneer incidents that fell under his notice. It was the custom for settlers coming here then to pay tribute to the Indians for the noble privilege of settling on this side of the Missouri River. This was to prevent thievery by the redskins, as there was then no law to protect the property of the white settlers in Indian Territory, and the sum of money exacted was $10 for the men who had stock and $5 for those who did not.

When Mr. Rose first crossed the Missouri at Nebraska City he found only a few buildings besides the abandoned forts of the Government, and a wild and desolate country surrounding the town, which was then known as Ft. Kearney. It was at about that time that Maj. Gatewood, Indian agent for the Otoes and other Indian tribes on this side of the Missouri River, acting under instructions from the United States Government, ordered the settlers off their lands in this State. This order, however, was never executed, as Maj. Gatewood himself did not favor the idea, and through Maj. Downs succeeded in circulating the report that the settlers would leave, and that seemed to satisfy the authorities at Washington. Maj. Downs, who was one of the original settlers of Nebraska City, and once owned a large part of its present site, had charge of the abandoned forts of the Government at that point. He was one of the most prominent men in the Territory, and he and his wife were particular friends of the natives and exerted great influence over them, understanding their language and customs, and the Indians placed implicit confidence in them and would swear by them. This trust proved of great advantage to Mrs. Downs, as at one time her rights to a claim that her husband had taken were threatened by a quarrelsome man who lived on the Iowa side. But by the aid of her savage allies Mrs. Downs was enabled to hold her own despite his attempts to wrest her land from her. All such incidents in the early history of Nebraska are perfectly familiar to Mr. Rose, as he was acquainted with every man (official or civilian), woman and child for miles around. He carried the chain for Charles Pierce and Dr. Dewey, the gentlemen who made the first survey of the city. In Territorial days our subject took a conspicuous part in the management of public affairs, and in 1855 represented Cass and Otoe Counties in the Second Territorial Legislature that was convened in Nebraska.

In the spring of 1859 Mr. Rose returned to his old home in Trumbull County, Ohio, and remained there six years. On his return to this part of the country a second time he settled on land in Cass County. On his first arrival in Nebraska he entered land that is now occupied by the packing-house. He afterward sold that place, and coming to Liberty Precinct, purchased a farm on the banks of Weeping Water Creek, not far from its mouth.

that pertaining to the relations between capital and labor, in which subject Mr. Higgins is especially interested. He is a man of good sound sense, self-educated, and has had a practical experience in life, which enables him to take a practical view of those interests most nearly affecting the common people.

A native of Franklin County, Ohio, our subject was born near the city of Columbus, then in its infancy, Nov. 22, 1826. His parents were Samuel and Permelia (Patrick) Higgins, the former a native of Prince George County, Md., and the latter born near Petersburg, in Virginia, in 1803. The paternal grandfather, Samuel Higgins, Sr., also a native of Maryland, emigrated to Ohio soon after it had been admitted into the Union as a State, and prior to the War of 1812. He converted a portion of the wilderness into a well-regulated farm, became prominent as a stock-raiser, and there spent the remainder of his days. He was a substantial citizen in all respects.

Grandfather Thomas Patrick was a native of Ireland, and upon emigrating to America settled first in the Old Dominion. Thence he too emigrated to Franklin County, Ohio, and carried on agriculture successfully until resting from his earthly labors. Samuel Higgins, the father of our subject, was a lad twelve years of age when he went with his family to Ohio, and was reared among the pioneer scenes of the Buckeye State. He possessed a large portion of the business talents of his father, speculated considerably in lands, and also operated as a stock-buyer, at the same time carrying on the cultivation of his farm, which he cleared from the wilderness. He was at one period in his life the owner of a fine property, but by an unfortunate venture lost the whole of it. He only lived to be middle aged, dying in 1843, when forty-two years old. He was a man of strong character and decided views, and was regarded as one of the shrewdest business men in Franklin County.

The mother of our subject survived her husband a period of forty-five years. She was a second time married, to Jacob Myers, who died in 1858. After his death she remained a widow until her death, in March, 1888, at the home of our subject, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. The parental family included five children, namely: James Madison, our subject; Tabitha A., who died when forty years old; John, a resident of Jefferson County, this State; Sarah and Samuel, who died in infancy. John during the late Civil War served in the Missouri State Militia.

Our subject pursued his first studies in the subscription schools of the Hawkeye State, and at the age of fifteen entered the academy at Columbus, where he spent two years. He made his home at the farm until reaching his majority, and being a bright and observant youth became possessed of a fund of useful information, which paved the way to his future success. At the age of eighteen he officiated as a pedagogue three months, and afterward, going to Columbus, began an apprenticeship at the carpenter trade. He worked at the bench, however, only about eighteen months, then resumed teaching, but later worked as a carpenter during the summer season and taught school in winter for several years thereafter.

In the spring of 1847 Mr. Higgins was given the post of superintendent of repairs and bridge builder of the Mad River & Lake Erie Railroad. This occupied his time for three years. In the meantime he put up the first depot in the present flourishing city of Springfield, Ohio, among other structures of note at that time. Later we find him a contractor in connection with the county courthouse, and in the winter of 1850 he taught school in Marion County, Ohio. The spring following he was married, and settled upon a farm in Marion County, pursuing farming and carpentering for the four years following.

In the spring of 1854, determined upon seeing something of the Great West, Mr. Higgins started overland with a team for Iowa, and distinguished himself as one of the first settlers of Clark County. He purchased in the forest 320 acres of Government land, constructed a sawmill on Long Creek, speculated in land, and sojourned there until the outbreak of the war. He watched the course of the struggle a year, and then, seeing no prospect of its termination, proffered his services as a Union soldier in Company B, 18th Iowa Infantry, and was assigned to the Army of the West and operated on the frontier. Later they were ordered to join Sherman's army at Cairo, Ill., whence they proceeded to St. Louis and from there to Springfield, Mo.

At this point a corps was organized, and they proceeded to do battle with the rebels and guerrillas in that vicinity, during which time Mr. Higgins was assigned to provost duty at Springfield, Mo., for a period of eleven months. In the fall of 1863 he went with his regiment after the rebel General, Price, in the northern part of the State, driving him across the Arkansas River, then proceeded to Ft. Smith, remaining there on post duty until April, 1864.

The regiment of our subject was now assigned to the command of Gen. Thayer, and sent to the vicinity of Camden, Ark. They skirmished thirty days toward Camden, and were nearly starved to death on account of failure of expected forage. About that time was fought the battle of Parsons Springs, when the regiment was nearly cut to pieces, but Mr. Higgins fortunately escaped with a few others to Camden. Thence they were sent back to Ft. Smith, where they remained until the close of the war, being mustered out on the 26th of August, 1865.

Our subject now proceeded homeward as rapidly as steam could take him, and resumed the peaceful pursuits of agriculture and carpentering, combined with stock-raising. He had in the meantime established a sawmill in Clarke County, which he now sold, together with other property, and changed his residence to Page County. In this latter he purchased 160 acres of land, upon which he effected considerable improvement, and rented 400 acres besides, operating thus an area of 560 acres. This employed his time and attention until the spring of 1878.

Mr. Higgins now disposed of his interests in the Hawkeye State and started for Nebraska overland with teams, crossing the Missouri at Nebraska City and made his way to Tipton Precinct, this county, locating shortly afterward on section 11, securing 120 acres of land, which he still owns and occupies. Upon this not a furrow had been turned, and there was no evidence that its soil had ever been pressed by the foot of a white man. After providing a shelter for his family Mr. Higgins began planting fruit and forest trees, and erected, as his means justified, the buildings, one after another, necessary for his comfort and convenience. A noticeable feature in the homestead is the fine grove of 150 maple and cottonwood trees, which retain their living green in winter and summer alike, and serve to make a most pleasant picture in the landscape. A large portion of the farm is enclosed with hedge fencing, and for the last few years Mr. Higgins has given his attention largely to stock-raising, keeping about twelve head of horses and a goodly assortment of cattle and swine. The present residence was completed in the spring of 1878, and is in every respect suitable to the requirements of the modern household.

The marriage of Mr. Higgins with Miss May Stiverson took place in Marion County, Ohio, March 28, 1851. This lady was born in that county, in 1827, and is the youngest of seven children, the offspring of David and Mary (Barnes) Stiverson, who were natives respectively of Kentucky and Ohio. The father was numbered among the well-to-do farmers of the Buckeye State, and with his estimable partner, is now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Higgins there were born nine children, the eldest of whom, Byron, is farming in Page County, Iowa; Elon is the wife of David Edwards, a well-to-do farmer of Washington County, Kan.; John, who has inherited a large portion of his father's enterprise, is stock-buyer for the Occidental Provision Company, at Lincoln, this State, where he resides; William M. is residing in Tipton Precinct, this county; Mary J. is the wife of D. Allen, a farmer of Custer County, this State; James M., Jr., is farming in Dundee County, together with his brother Frank; Charles is at home with his parents; Permelia died when three years old.

Mr. Higgins in the spring of 1882 consented to become the candidate of his party for the State Legislature, being on the minority ticket, but was defeated by a small majority. Two years later he again ran on the Democratic ticket, and was elected a member of the Nineteenth General Assembly, serving with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. In 1886 he was made a State Senator. Prior to this he had frequently been sent as a delegate to the various conventions of his party, in which he has been an industrious worker. He is one of the oldest members of the Masonic fraternity in this county, with which he identified himself in 1856 while a resident of Iowa. He also is a member of the R. A. M., and of the G. A. R., at Elmwood. Religiously, he is an adherent of the Baptist Church.

Mr. Higgins entered the army as a private, but upon the organization of his company was made an Orderly Sergeant, in which capacity he served five months, and was then promoted to the rank of Second Lieutenant. He was mustered out of this company as such and mustered into the same company again as First Lieutenant. Later he was tendered the office of Captain, but preferred to operate as First Lieutenant. Later he was detailed as Regimental Quartermaster, serving as such until the close of the war. His army record was creditable in the extreme.

JACOB DOMINGO, an energetic and prosperous farmer, resides on the highly improved farm on section 30, Mt. Pleasant Precinct. He is a native of Denmark, where he was born March 16, 1856, but is now an American citizen, through and through. He is a son of John and Ellen Domingo, both natives of Denmark, and is one of a family of four children. Mincus is at home in the old country; Christian is deceased; John lives in Centre Precinct, Cass Co., Neb., and Jacob, our subject. The early years of his life, until he attained his majority, were passed in his native country, where he received a good education in his native tongue. When he arrived in America he possessed no knowledge of the English language, but by close application he has mastered it to such an extent that he can speak it very fluently. He is well informed on current events.

The life of our subject, when not in school, was passed on a farm, where he took his full share of the labor and duties. After he had obtained his education he felt there would be a greater scope for his powers in the New World, and in consequence of this decision, in the autumn of 1877, started for America, taking passage from Copenhagen on November 3d, in a steamer of the Anchor Line, which landed him in New York City November 17th of that year. He at once came westward to Ford County, Ill., where he farmed as a renter for several years. In the spring of 1882 he came to Nebraska and settled on his present farm, where he has resided ever since. He owns 160 acres of good land, which he has brought to a good state of cultivation. When he bought the land there were no improvements on it, but by energy and hard labor he has so improved it that it is now in excellent condition, considering the length of time which he has owned it.

Our subject has begun his improvements in a systematic manner, and has a well defined plan which he is putting into effect as fast as time and circumstances will allow, and, when completed, no farm in the State will be better arranged or more convenient than his. With the exception of some $400 which he received from the estate of his father, he has had no assistance from any source whatever, having to depend entirely on his own efforts to reach the desired end, which makes him in all respects a truly self-made man.

Mr. Domingo was married to Annie M. Anderson, Nov. 20, 1884. The lady was a native of Wisconsin, where she was born Nov. 3, 1862. She is the daughter of Peter and Annie M. Anderson. Her father is a native of Denmark. He located in Wisconsin for a time after coming to America, then removed to Ford County, Ill., where he now lives. The lady's mother was a native of Denmark, and is now deceased. Her father was married the second time, and is the head of a family of twelve children, eight of whom are living, named: Andrew, Annie M., Peter; Christiana, who is now the wife of Nelse Robison; Annie, Jennie, Lizzie and Lena. To our subject and wife there has been born one daughter, Annie E., Dec. 15, 1887.

Our subject and his wife are active members of the Lutheran Church, conscientious and consistent in their profession. They take an important part in all social matters of their neighborhood. In politics he is a Democrat, is wide-awake and progressive, believing in the greatest good for the greatest number, and enters heartily into any project that is intended to elevate or benefit the people. He ranks high among the leading, intelligent Danish-American citizen, of which there are a large number in Cass County. He is widely and favorably known for his integrity of character and industrious habits.

JOHN MURDOCH. Thirty-four years ago, Dec. 1, 1854, Mr. Murdoch made his way to the Territory of Nebraska, and three years later settled on a tract of wild land in the southeastern part of this county, and which has been familiarly known since Liberty Precinct. His farm is in the northwest corner of the precinct. He secured by pre-emption the northwest quarter of section 6, and in the year 1859 entered upon its improvement and cultivation. It is now one of the most attractive homesteads in this part of the county, having neat and substantial buildings, good fences and farm machinery, the land assisted to fertility by a branch of the Weeping Water, and its natural resources more than ordinarily abundant. This, together with the judicious care exercised by the proprietor in its cultivation, renders the farm exceedingly valuable.

The property of Mr. Murdoch is the result of his own industry and perseverance, he having come to the West without capital, having only his stout muscles and courageous heart. He worked several years as a farm laborer before purchasing his land, and two years afterward operated in the same manner before settling upon it. As time passed on, and he found his means accumulating, he wisely invested in additional land, and is now the owner of 400 acres, all lying in Cass County. A quarter-section of this is in Rock Bluff Precinct, and eighty acres in Mt. Pleasant. The whole is in a good state of cultivation.

The boyhood home of our subject is in Franklin Township, Richland Co., Ohio, where he was born April 17, 1834. His father, Samuel Murdoch, was a native of Maryland, a miller and millwright by trade, and emigrated to Ohio when a young man. He was married in that State to Miss Susan Poisel, who was born in Ohio, and whose family, like the Murdochs, were of Scotch ancestry. The parents of our subject began life poor in purse, and it was their lot to remain thus. They became the parents of nine children, and died in Richland County, Ohio, in middle life, and within a few months of each other.

Our subject was a little lad only eight years of age when he was orphaned by the death of his parents. He was the youngest of the household, and made his home with his brothers and sisters until able to earn his own living. He then started out to work for the farmers in his neighborhood, and continued a resident of his native State until coming to Nebraska. He found a bride in this county, being married Oct. 27, 1861, in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, to Miss Sarah H. Oliver. This lady was born in Edgar County, Ill., April 17, 1843, and is the daughter of Rev. Lutheran and Cyrene J. (Rounsavell) Oliver, who were natives respectively of Vermont and Ohio. They emigrated to Illinois in their youth, and were married in Edgar County. The father later entered the ministry of the Methodist Church, and after a few years' sojourn in Illinois, crossed the Mississippi River into Wapello County, Iowa, where he took up his abode on a farm, but continued his pious labors as a local preacher from 1844 until 1859. The family then all came to Nebraska and settled on a tract of new land in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, this county, where the father still labored as a farmer and "circuit rider." He exerted himself industriously for the comfort of his family, and deemed no sacrifice too great to insure their well-being and happiness. At the same time he was also a public-spirited citizen, and evinced an interest in the moral and religious welfare of the people about him.

Mr. Oliver after a sojourn of some years in this county changed his residence to Seward County, taking up a homestead and settling once more upon a tract of new land, still continuing as a farmer and a preacher, and traveled over a large portion of Western Nebraska in the pursuance of his pious duties. Finally, worn out from hard labor, he was persuaded to take up his abode at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Murdoch, where he spent his last days, passing away Nov. 15, 1884, at the ripe old age of seventy-four years. He was quite helpless during the last few years of his life from age and infirmities. The faithful wife and mother had preceded her husband to the land of the hereafter nearly twenty years, her death taking place in June, 1865, at the age of forty-six. She was a lifelong member of the Methodist Church.

Mrs. Murdoch was the eldest of seven children, one son and six daughters, and was reared under the home roof, acquiring her education in the common school. Under the training of her excellent parents she became imbued with those principles which have constituted her one of the truest women ever becoming the helpmate of a good and worthy man. Of their union there have been born eight children, one of whom, a little daughter, Julia E., died April 13, 1874, when only eighteen months old. Of the survivors the record is as follows: Oliver S. married Miss Ida M. Coleman, and they are living on a 160-acre farm in Gosper County, this State; Henry married Delia Colvin, is also a resident of that county, engaged in the same calling, and is the owner of a fine tract of land of a like extent; Mary is the wife of Scott Norris, and they live on farm in Antelope County; G. Albert, John W., Cyrene and Ruth O. are at home with their parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Murdoch are members in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, attending services regularly at Mt. Pleasant. The two eldest sons, departing somewhat from the religious bias of their parents, belong to the United Brethren Church. Mr. Murdoch is a Democrat of pronounced ideas.

The first studies of Mr. and Mrs. Murdoch, as children, were conducted in the log school-houses of the olden times, structures widely different from those in which is carried on the education of the present generation. Then the temple of learning was built of logs, with a wide fireplace occupying nearly one end of a cabin probably 12x16 feet square, and the chimney built outside of earth and sticks. Light was admitted through a few small panes of glass or greased paper, and the floor was made of puncheon—a log riven and placed with round surface downward. The roof was probably of clapboards held in place by weight poles. The system of learning corresponded with the other surroundings, and the books utilized descended from the elder child to the younger as long as they would hold together. Children in those days were taught to be useful as soon as old enough to labor, and while their hardships were plentiful, there were still many simple sources of enjoyment, and people were probably happier in those times than many are at the present, surrounded with comforts and luxuries. There is an air of romance woven within the history of the old pioneers, which forms a tale ever listened to with readiness and attention both by old and young. Few can relate a more interesting story than the subject of this sketch and his interesting wife.

The year after the outbreak of the Civil War, although in the midst of his labors and plans in his new home, Mr. Murdoch felt it his duty to lay aside his personal interests, and on the 18th of November, 1862, enlisted in Company H, 2d Nebraska Cavalry, under Capt. Marshall, the commander of the regiment being Gen. Sully. They were assigned to the Army of the Northwest, and operated mostly along the White Stone Valley, Dak., keeping the Indians in subjection, and during which time Mr. Murdoch was under fire in two active engagements. He saw his fill of life on the frontier, and when his services were no further required received his honorable discharge, in December, 1863, at Omaha, and soon thereafter, returning home, he resumed his farm labors, which have since been comparatively uninterrupted.

—•••••

ALBERT A. MILLER, senior member of the firm of Miller & Olmstead, is with his partner conducting a prosperous trade in clothing, hats, caps, trunks and general furnishing goods, forming a house which occupies a leading position in trade at this point. Their headquarters are in a fine brick structure, the I. O. O. F. building, and they number among their friends and patrons the best people of Weeping Water and vicinity.

Mr. Miller first set foot upon the soil of Nebraska in 1869, less than two years after it had been admitted into the Union as a State, on his way to the Pacific Coast. While pleased with the face of the country he did not locate here until about 1881, when he began business as one of the firm of Reed Bros. & Co., of whom mention is made in the sketch of E. L. Reed, found elsewhere in this volume. That partnership continued a period of three years. The career of Mr. Miller in this county has been uniformly fortunate, and he has invested considerable capital in town property, putting up two good residences, one of which he sold at a round sum.

The firm of Miller & Olmstead was established in October, 1888, and both partners are men of first-class business capacities. Mr. Miller started out in life dependent mostly upon his own resources, but Providence endowed him with that genial and courteous manner and fine integrity which has gained him the friendship and confidence of those with whom he has been associated. He is a staunch Republican politically, although having no desire for the responsibilities of office. Socially he belongs to the I. O. O. F. and the Knights of Pythias. In religious matters he is a prominent member of the Regular Baptist Church, in which he officiates as Deacon, Financial Secretary and Trustee.

Mr. Miller was born in Liberty Township, Trumbull Co., Ohio, August 5, 1848, and lived there with his parents until he was about five years old. They then removed to Warren, Ohio, where he completed a good education and whence he went at the age of twenty years to Indianapolis, Ind., where he sojourned a period of twelve years, engaged in business as salesman. Mr. Miller was connected with several mercantile houses and lived in Indianapolis until 1881. In the meantime he was married, Oct. 10, 1872, to Miss Frances Seaman. Of this union there have been born five children, three only of whom are living, namely; Francis, Laura and Clara. They are all at home with their parents and are being given the training and education suitable to their station in life, which will make of them worthy and respected citizens.

Mrs. Miller was born in Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 11, 1853, and is the daughter of Edwin and Cynthia (Crutchfield) Seaman. Her father was engaged in mercantile business the greater part of his life. He was born in Ohio, Sept. 3, 1824, and came to Nebraska in 1881. He now makes his home with his son-in-law, Mr. Miller. He has been a prominent light in mercantile circles. Since coming to Nebraska he has served as a Justice of the Peace in Weeping Water, and like Mr. Miller belongs to the I. O. O. F. and the K. of P. Mrs. Seaman died in October, 1864. Mrs. Miller was her only child.

Reuben Miller, the father of our subject, was born in New Jersey, Jan. 11, 1811. When an infant he was taken by his parents to the city of Washington, D. C., where he lived until a young man of twenty years. Then starting out for himself he made his way to the vicinity of Liberty, Trumbull Co., Ohio, where he was engaged in manufacturing in connection with farming. In the Buckeye State he married Miss Emeline Fuller, and they became the parents of six children, of whom but two are living, Albert A. and Laura M., Mrs. Titus, of Minneapolis. Mr. Miller departed this life at his home in Pennsylvania in February, 1867. The mother had preceded her husband to the silent land, dying in November, 1862. She was born in Orange County, N. Y., August 28, 1815, and was the daughter of Ira and Sallie Fuller. The paternal grandfather of our subject was James Miller.

WILLIAM W. GULLION. Among the many extensive land-owners within the confines of Cass County we find the subject of our sketch, who was one of the earliest of the early settlers in the county. He settled near Plattsmouth in 1854, and on the 14th of June of that year, he and his brother-in-law, William H. Sheffer, both laid the foundations for rude log houses on their respective claims, at a time when there was but one house in Plattsmouth, and that was a trading-house belonging to Samuel Martin, who was perhaps the first settler in Cass County.

The brother-in-law Sheffer built the first house, and our subject helped him, completing his own afterward. At the first election, in the spring of 1855, Mr. Gullion was elected Constable, the first person filling that office in the county. In those days justice was administered in a primitive, yet extremely effectual manner, the entire legal system being exclusively managed by a vigilance committee, and it can be said in favor of those times that justice was generally rendered. He pre-empted a claim of 160 acres adjoining Plattsmouth on the north.

On the breaking out of the gold excitement in 1858, our subject went to Pike's Peak and Denver, where he passed one winter, after which he returned to Plattsmouth and engaged in freighting across the plains, which business he followed with varying success for six years. As he has prospered he has from time to time added to his ownership of land, until he now owns an extensive tract in Salt Creek Precinct. It is not possible to enter into a full history of the earlier years of this gentleman in Nebraska. To do so would require a volume. Coming to the State at the time he did, when there were but very few settlers within what is now the limits of the county, at a great distance from the markets, he had his full share of the discomforts and troubles attending the life of a pioneer, which for a verity, in this case, he was. He possesses a large fund of information regarding the early times of the State, having had an active part in making its history, and none should know it better than he. Then again, it would not be possible for the pen to paint sufficiently vivid word pictures, that would convey to the reader such knowledge as would enable them to comprehend, in all its bearings, the life they were compelled to lead.

Among the least of the dangers our subject was obliged to endure was the treachery of the Indians who were then thickly scattered over the broad domain, which they claimed as their inalienable birthright, and on which they considered every white man to be a trespasser. To appreciate this life one must hear the description from the lips of those who went through it, and it is time well spent in engaging the subject of this sketch in conversation relative to those frontier times, when men and women took their lives in their hands, and dared to undertake that which they knew beforehand to be fraught with untold dangers.

Our subject was married to Miss Mary Elizabeth Mayfield, the daughter of LeRoy and Martha (Baskett) Mayfield. The lady's mother is still living, at the ripe old age of eighty-two years, and makes her home with our subject. Mrs. Gullion was born in 1839, in Monroe County, Ind. Her father died in 1851, aged fifty-two years. Herself and husband are the parents of two children—John Willmer and James E.

Our subject came to his present farm in the year 1879; it contains 240 acres of nicely located land, a large portion of which he has improved. Like many others he has not proved to be a successful financier, but whatever troubles may have come to him from this source, they cannot in any instance, or in any way, be attributed to any failure on his part to act fairly, honestly and uprightly with every man with whom he has had business relations. In fact his honesty and integrity of character have become proverbial, and he is above reproach.

The subject of this sketch is one of the best citizens of the precinct. He is public-spirited and generous to a fault, and every suggestion that has for its object the advancement or improvement of the locality in any sense of the word meets with his earnest and hearty approval. Since reaching years of maturity he has voted at every election, never voting but once outside the State. He was the first Constable and Deputy Sheriff elected in Cass County, the duties of which he performed in a highly acceptable manner.

JOHN CORBET. The sons of Scotland are always pardoned for pride in their nationality. The subject of this record, one of the solid men of Avoca Precinct, was born in Lanarkshire, the land of the thistle, Feb. 2, 1837, and crossed the Atlantic with his parents at an early period of his life, they settling in Trumbull County, Ohio, where he received his education and was reared to man's estate.

Mr. Corbet is now the owner of 240 acres of fine land on section 2, all of which has been brought to a high state of cultivation. It is embellished with neat and substantial buildings and forms the ideal country home. Stock-raising is made a specialty of at this farm, Short-horn cattle taking the lead.

The land became the property of Mr. Corbet in 1859, when it was in a wild and uncultivated state, and he did not settle upon it until eight years later. Upon taking up his residence here in the April of 1868, he began in earnest the cultivation of the soil, the planting of trees, the erection of buildings, and the gathering about him and his family the conveniences and comforts necessary to modern life. No man is more highly respected in his community, and none have contributed in a greater degree to build up its reputation and develop its resources.

While a resident of Trumbull County, Ohio, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Jameson, a native of his own shire in Scotland, and born July 10, 1839. Mrs. Corbet is the daughter of William and Jannett (Hamilton) Jameson, excellent families of Scotch birth and ancestry, who came to the United States about 1842 and settled in Trumbull County, Ohio. They sojourned there until the death of the mother, about 1881. Later Mr. Jameson came to Nebraska and is still living, making his home with A. E. Jameson in Avoca Precinct, and is now quite aged.

Mrs. Corbet was reared and educated in Trumbull County, Ohio, and of her marriage with our subject there have been born four children: Frank is a student of the Commercial College at Lincoln; Robert is attending school; Jannett and Katie are pursuing their childish studies in the district school. Mrs. Corbet is a very estimable lady and a member in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Our subject, politically, is a staunch supporter of Republican principles, public-spirited, high-minded and intelligent, prompt to meet his business obligations, in fact, one of the most valued members of his community.

Robert Corbet, the father of our subject, also a native of Lanarkshire, married a lady of his own county, who died after the birth of three children of whom John, our subject, was the second born. He was only three years old at the time of his mother's death and knows very little of her history. His father was a second time married in Lanarkshire to Miss Catherine Currie. This lady was also of pure Scotch descent, and after the birth of one child by this marriage the family all came to America, being on the ocean four weeks less two days, and landing in New York City. That same year, 1849, they settled in Trumbull County, Ohio, where the father engaged in farming in Fowler Township, of which he continued a resident until within a few years of his death. He then removed to Vernon Township where his death occurred in 1886, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. His last wife is still living with her children in Trumbull County, and is now ripe in years. They were Presbyterians in religion, and the father, after coming to America, identified himself with the Republican party.

Janet, the own sister of our subject, is now the wife of John Cleland, a well-to-do farmer of Crawford County, Pa.; Andrew, his brother, lives on a farm in Berlin Precinct, Otoe County, this State.

SAMUEL RICHARDSON is certainly entitled to take a front rank among the pioneers of two States, being born a member of one of the first families that settled in Ohio, which at that time was wild and unsettled, and coming to Nebraska while it also was in a comparatively new condition. In 1860 he settled on a farm on section 1 of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, where he now resides on his highly cultivated and well-improved farm, surrounded by the comforts and conveniences of life, accumulated by many years of hard and anxious toil.

This gentleman was born in Belmont County, Ohio, Dec. 12, 1827, a son of Thomas and Sarah Richardson. His father was a native of Pennsylvania, and his mother of West Virginia. They were the earliest settlers in Belmont County, and their family, including our subject, were reared amid the scenes of a wild country. He lived there with his parents until he was about seventeen years of age, when he went to what is now known as Noble County. When he was eight years old his mother died, leaving a large family of children, of whom the following named survive: Rebecca is now the wife of John H. Pool, and resides in Cass County; Sophia is now the wife of William Preshaw, and lives in Ottawa, Kan.; and Samuel. The deceased members of the family were named: Margaret, Jane, Thomas A., Mary A., James and Sarah.

The paternal ancestors of our subject were of English-Irish origin; the ancestors on the maternal side were English. As far as can be learned, the Richardson family are supposed to have first located in Pennsylvania, but nothing definite can be ascertained upon this point.

Our subject lived in Noble County, Ohio, until he was married, Nov. 29, 1849, to Jane E. Thomas, who bore him five children, one of whom, Mary E., who is now the wife of J. R. Vallery, and resides in Cass County, survives. The four deceased children were named Sarah L., Melissa J., Margaret E. and Jennie C. The first wife of Mr. Richardson departed this life at her home in Mt. Pleasant Precinct March 24, 1864. She was a model wife and loving mother, and her death was felt to be a great loss to the community as well as to the family.

On Aug. 21, 1864, our subject married Mrs. Mary E. Kennedy, the widow of James B. Kennedy, who was a resident of Cass County, Neb. This lady is a native of Ohio, having been born in Muskingum County, Aug. 15, 1837. She was the daughter of William and Mary (Richey) Colvin.

This lady's parents were both natives of Muskingum County. Her paternal ancestors were English. When she was a child of about five years old her parents removed with their family to Franklin County, Ohio, where they lived until she was sixteen years old, when the family moved west to Marion County, Iowa, where they lived until she reached her maturity, and was there married on Jan. 31, 1857, to Mr. J. B. Kennedy, by whom she had two children: Loran V., now residing in California, and May, now the wife of J. M. Hamilton, Attorney at Law in Lincoln, Neb. James B. Kennedy, her first husband, met his death in Colorado while out with two companions prospecting, under the following circumstances: Being short of provisions he and one of his comrades had gone to the top of the mountain to procure some game for breakfast; while they were looking for game five Indians came and took supper in their tent. The Indians pretended to be going on down to Denver; instead of doing so they hid in the bluff and killed Mr. Kennedy and his companion, a Mr. Shanks of Omaha.

A Mr. Slaughter, who was one of the trio, alone escaped to tell the tale.

The first wife of Mr. Richardson was a daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Thomas. By the second marriage, and his present wife he is the father of four children: William T., now at home with his parents; Lily A., deceased; Frank S., now attending the Lincoln Business College, and Florence E., who is attending school at Lincoln.

In the spring of 1860 our subject came to Cass County and settled on his present farm, which at that time contained 160 acres of land, for which he paid $1,000. The improvements at the time of his purchase consisted of a log cabin and twenty acres of plowed land. From the day of his arrival on his farm to the present, he has devoted his time and energies to the further development of the resources of his property, until he now owns one of the finest improved farms in the precinct. His large and elegant residence, roomy and well designed, is furnished handsomely, and is well equipped with all of the conveniences necessary to make the task of the wife one of pleasure and satisfaction. The grounds surrounding his home are elegantly arranged and beautified with fine ornamental trees, shrubbery and flowering plants.

The large and conveniently arranged barns are models of their kind, designed as they are with a view to accommodate his large herds of stock, and to storing and handling the grain products of the farm economically and to the best advantage. A large orchard of thrifty trees of the choicest varieties of fruit best adapted to the climate, and a number of groves, both natural and planted, add value and beauty to the homestead. He has at different times made additions to his original purchase, until he is now the owner of 320 acres of land.

When the first husband of Mrs. Richardson (Mr. Kennedy) came to Mt. Pleasant Precinct, in 1857, there was not a house between their home and Plattsmouth, and no land had been plowed within that distance. This lady during the life of her first husband, and also since her marriage with our subject, has borne many of the privations of pioneer life with great bravery, and she deserves a proud place in the roll of honor containing the names of the good wives and mothers of Nebraska, and since her marriage to our subject she has contributed largely to their present prosperity by her wise counsel and excellent management.

William T. Richardson, the son of our subject, is now at home. He was for three years foreman in a large lumber-yard in Omaha, and filled responsible positions for the same firm elsewhere, and has traveled over the greater portion of the West, visiting the various States and Territories. He attended the State University at Lincoln one year, and for a time attended the Business College in Omaha.

The subject of this sketch holds a prominent position among the people of the precinct. He has been called upon by them at various times to fulfill certain public duties requiring the highest integrity. He was elected Commissioner of Cass County in the autumn of 1878, re-elected in 1881, serving two terms of three years each, with credit to himself and benefit to his constituents. He has discharged the duties pertaining to the office of Justice of the Peace. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, where he has served as Steward for many years. They both take an active interest in society, and are widely and favorably known, and they stand among the leading and representative pioneer families of Cass County, and we are pleased to represent Mr. and Mrs. Richardson in this ALBUM.

JOHAN HOLSCHUH, one of the most enterprising German farmers of Cass County, first opened his eyes to the light in what was then Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, July 6, 1824. He is the son of J. William and Sophia (Grenc) Holschuh, who were also of German birth and ancestry. He spent the first years of his life in his native country, where he united his fortunes May 24, 1853, with a maiden of his own Province, and the same month in which they were married they started to the United States, landing in New York City on the 6th of August, 1853. They made the voyage on a sailing-vessel, spending fifty-two days on the high seas. Visiting with friends a few days in the metropolis they proceeded on their journey into Franklin County, Ohio, where they arrived August 14, and established themselves in the city of Columbus, where they lived until July, 1885, then gathering together their personal effects, they started once more westward, halting in Washington, Tazewell Co., Ill., where Mr. Holschuh rented a tract of land upon which he operated until the spring of 1857. He now concluded to cast his lot among the people of Nebraska Territory, and accordingly set out with his little family via the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers to St. Louis, thence up the Missouri to Plattsmouth, where they arrived on the 17th of April, and our subject, establishing his family comfortably began working by the day.

Mr. Holschuh had been accompanied from Illinois by Jacob Horn, and the two purchased a lot in Plattsmouth and a team of mules. Later they dissolved partnership, dividing their property, Mr. Horn taking the team and Mr. Holschuh the lot. Our subject traded his property for two yoke of oxen and a plow, and thus equipped began breaking prairie for the settlers around. He managed to save a little money and after a time invested his capital in another lot and put up a house which he sold later. He operated considerably in real estate after this, in a small way buying lots, building houses and selling, and has traded considerably in city property, besides timber land, etc. He at one time cleared quite a tract of timber, then sold the land at a good profit.

Mr. Holschuh finally after years of labor purchased forty acres of land two miles northwest of Plattsmouth, and later added to it sixty more, whereon he made improvements, and finally sold the 100 acres for the snug sum of $10,500. This transaction was completed in May, 1887, and later Mr. H. purchased the farm of 142 acres where he now lives. Of this he took possession in March, 1888. It is one of the finest in the precinct and he has effected various improvements, putting up a barn and corn cribs and making a large amount of fencing. He also in 1888 bought another farm west of his present homestead, in this precinct, of 120 acres.

The wife of our subject was in her girlhood Miss Catharine Michel, and they were married May 24, 1853, in their native Province of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. Mrs. Holschub was born Aug. 31, 1831, and is the daughter of Jacob and Ann (Miller) Michel, who were of German birth and descent, and spent their last years in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. H. have six children living, namely: Mary is now Mrs. G. V. Eigemberger; Hermon; Anna, Mrs. G. V. Eigemberger, Jr.; William; Nettie, Mrs. John Herz; and Rosa. Our subject and family are members in good standing of the German Lutheran Church. Mr. H., politically, is independent, aiming to support the men best qualified for office. He has been Road Supervisor in his district a period of eight or nine years, and is a man of decided views, whose opinions are generally held in respect.

MRS. HARRIET CRITCHFIELD. It gives us much pleasure to place in this biographical volume a brief record of the life of this most estimable woman, the widow of the late Lewis H. Critchfield, who owns a fine farm of 160 acres on section 24, Centre Precinct, where she still resides, surrounded by kind friends and neighbors, by whom she is much esteemed and respected. Our subject was born in Wayne County, Ohio, June 18, 1834, and there lived until the time of her marriage. She is the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Foltz) Shreve. Her father was a native of Ohio, where he spent his entire life, dying at the age of thirty years, when our subject was only six years old. Of his marriage five children were born, four of whom grew to maturity. His widow married again, and lived many years after.

She of whom we write was married to Lewis H. Critchfield, Sept. 9, 1852, and of their union ten children were born, all of whom are still living, namely: Jason lives in Ohio; A. Bird, William P. Cowen and Casper, live in Centre Precinct; Alice, now Mrs. Moore, lives in Ohio; Jenny lives with her mother; Exa lives in Plattsmouth; Wade is at school; Anna and Lorenzo Dow are at home. All have received good educational advantages, and have pleasant prospects for a successful future.

Mr. Critchfield was born in Holmes County, Ohio, April 6, 1832, and was reared and lived for half a century on the farm on which his mother lived from the time she was fourteen years old until her death. He was the son of L. D. and Julia (Humbarger) Critchfield, who reared a family of six children, four of whom are still living. Mr. Critchfield received his education in his native town, and on deciding to establish himself in life, married, and brought his young bride to the old homestead where he had always lived. The young couple were industrious, prudent people, who, by careful economy, energy and frugality, succeeded in bringing up their large family of children in comfort, and giving each a good education. After toiling there for many years, desiring to still further improve their fortunes, they came to Nebraska in the spring of 1882, and purchased the present homestead. The farm was partly improved, a house, barn, and even a cyclone cellar, having been built. Mr. Critchfield continued working on the land, put up a windmill, and made other needed improvements, and by continuous labor succeeded in bringing his property into as fine and productive a farm as is to be found in the vicinity. He raised grain, cattle, horses and hogs, living here prosperously and happily until his death, April 28, 1887. He was a man universally respected for his many worthy traits of character, and his death was deeply regretted by a large circle of friends. Socially, he was a member of the K. of H. He was a member of the Christian Church, where our subject also communes.

LANS H. TIMM. Many of the most thrifty and intelligent agriculturists of this section of Nebraska were born and reared on the other side of the Atlantic, and to Germany especially is Cass County indebted for some of her most enterprising and prosperous citizens. Among them may be numbered the subject of this sketch, who owns a fine body of land in Avoca Precinct, embracing 320 acres each on sections 1 and 12. The homestead proper has been brought to an especially fine state of cultivation, is well stocked with the domestic animals, and upon it has been erected a neat and substantial set of frame buildings, which, with their surroundings, fruit and shade trees, and the various little conveniences having so much to do with the happiness and comfort of the family, form a goodly sight to the eyes. The land is kept in productive condition by the proximity of the Weeping Water. The whole was originally prairie soil. Mr. Timm has planted forest trees which form the purpose of shade and windbreak combined. He has in fact been in no respect behind the other progressive men of his precinct in instituting the improvements which serve to aid in forming the complete homestead.

A pioneer of 1859, Mr. Timm July 4 of that year first set foot upon the soil of Nebraska, eight years before it had been admitted into the Union as a State. He secured eighty acres of land from H. Loz, upon which he settled with his estimable wife, who is still surviving, and they began laboring hand in hand in hope of accumulating something for their declining years. Their first dwelling was a log house, and their surroundings were widely different from those amid which we behold them to-day. With genuine German thrift and prudence they were content to labor early and late, live economically, and in due time were rewarded with the fruits of their industry.

Mr. Timm about 1865 doubled his first purchase by an additional eighty acres, and later purchased another quarter-section of land, all of which at the time it came into his possession had been undisturbed by the plowshare. He had emigrated to this section of the country from Cook County, Ill., of which he had been a sojourner four years. Mr. and Mrs. Timm landed first upon American soil in New York City in May, 1855, and were then approaching middle life, Mr. Timm being thirty-nine years old, having been born June 5, 1816. His first recollections are of his boyhood home in the Duchy of Holstein, Germany, where he was born of respectable parents, and was reared to habits of industry and principles of honor. In accordance with the laws and customs of his native land he was placed in school at an early age and given a practical education. His father was a farmer by occupation, and Hans H. from the time of leaving school until his marriage was employed mostly in Germany at farming. The lady who has for a period of forty years been his faithful and devoted companion was in her girlhood Miss Margaretta

C. Schomaker, and they were married in their native Holstein, April 29, 1849.

Mrs. Timm was born Sept. 26, 1818, not far from the boyhood home of her husband, and is the daughter of Michael and Anna (Youngke) Schomaker, the father a farm laborer who spent his entire life in his native Germany. He did not live to be an aged man, dying when thirty-six years old. The mother came to America with her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Timm, in 1855, and died at their home in Avoca Precinct, April 13, 1870, at the age of seventy-four years. John Timm, the father of our subject, also a native of Holstein, married a lady of his own Province, and they settled upon a farm where they spent their entire lives. John Timm was fifty-six years old at the time of his death, which occurred about 1836. The mother survived her husband a number of years, and attained the age of threescore. They were people more than ordinarily careful and upright in their lives, and consistent members of the German Lutheran Church. Their family consisted of five children, three sons and two daughters, of whom Hans H. was the second son and child. Of these three are living, making their homes in Nebraska and Germany.

Our subject and his estimable wife have been parents of one child only, which was born in Germany and died in infancy. In coming to America they brought with them besides Mrs. Schomaker, the mother of Mrs. Timm, Lena and Elizabeth C., sisters of Mr. Timm. The latter is deceased. Lena is the wife of Peter Peters, of Avoca Precinct. Our subject and his good wife have performed the part of foster-parents to a niece, who before her marriage was Miss Anna C. Baumgarten. This lady was born Jan. 22, 1860, at the Timm homestead, and was deprived of a mother's affectionate care when a little child of one year old. She was then taken into the hearts and home of Mr. and Mrs. Timm. Her father, John C. Baumgarten, is a resident of Chicago, Ill., holding one of the city offices. Anna C. is now the wife of J. Frederick Schomaker, and still lives at the farm, which is operated by her husband. They have two children—Edwin H. and Katherina M.

Mr. Timm after becoming a naturalized citizen and having fully acquainted himself with the general methods of American institutions, identified himself with the Republican party, as meeting his idea of liberty and justice, and has since been one of its most ardent supporters. Both he and his amiable partner were trained in the doctrines of the Lutheran faith, to which they still loyally adhere. There is probably no more hospitable home within the precincts of Cass County than that presided over by Mr. and Mrs. Timm, of Avoca.

WILLIAM T. ADAMS is one of Cass County's enterprising and successful young farmers, who is actively pursuing his calling on the old homestead in Plattsmouth Township, where nearly the whole of his life has been passed. He is a native-born citizen of this place, May 2, 1864, being the date of his birth.

Jacob Adams, the father of our subject, was born in North Carolina in September, 1814, and when very young his parents, William and Rachel Adams, moved to Indiana and cast in their lot with the pioneers of that State, and there the mother died in 1819. A few years later his father emigrated to Missouri and became an early settler of Ottawa County. He subsequently became a pioneer of Mills County, Iowa, and from there came to Plattsmouth in 1862. He staid here only a short time, however, and then returned to Iowa, where he lived for a year. At the end of that time he came back to Plattsmouth, and some months later rounded out a good old age, dying here in September, 1864. He may be said to have spent his entire life on the frontier as a pioneer in four States of the Union.

His son Jacob was thus reared amid pioneer scenes, and grew in strength and vigor to a robust manhood. He adopted the honorable calling of farmer for his life work and pursued it with good success. While a resident of Missouri he met and married Miss Rachel Wiles, a daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Hobson) Wiles, Sept. 8, 1844, being the date of their marriage. In 1864 they came to Nebraska and identified themselves with the pioneers of Plattsmouth, and Mr. Adams became an important factor in the development of its agricultural resources. In 1865 he purchased the farm now occupied by our subject, and in the few years of life left him made many valuable improvements. Jan. 15, 1874, his useful life was terminated by his death, and a valued citizen was removed from our midst. He was a man of good capabilities and industrious habits, and it is the united testimony of those who knew him well that he was upright in his dealings and always true to his obligations. He occupied a good social position in this community, and was a charter member of the Plattsmouth Lodge, I. O. O. F. To him and his wife six children had been born, namely: Elizabeth, now the wife of Judge Samuel Maxwell, of the District Court, a resident of Fremont, Neb.; Mary F., who died April 5, 1849; Lydia E., the widow of John Livingston, who died Aug. 8, 1874, and she is now living on the old homestead with her mother and brother; Rebecca J., who died Nov. 9, 1856; Louviera, now Mrs. Ezra Horning, of York County, Neb.; and our subject.

The latter came to his present home with his parents when he was one year old, and has lived here since. He received a good, practical education, and has an intelligent knowledge of agriculture, so that he bids fair to place himself among the leading farmers of his native county at no distant date. He has bought the interests of the heirs in his father's home farm, with the exception of one share. It is finely located on section 25, and comprises 120 acres of very fertile and highly productive land. It is amply provided with substantial buildings, comprising a large brick house, a stable, corn-cribs, wagon-sheds, etc. The farm is well stocked and is all under cultivation and pasture.

Our subject was married, June 5, 1887, to Miss Ella Cole, a daughter of William T. Cole, whose biography appears in this volume. They have an infant son, William. Our subject still makes his home with his mother, a most estimable woman, who commands the respect of all the community. Mr. Adams is a member of the United Brethren Church, and he takes an active interest in promoting the good work carried on within its fold. He is a sincere and manly Christian, is well endowed mentally and physically, with good powers of observation, and a keen, practical insight into business, and he is undoubtedly well deserving of the high favor in which he is held. In his political beliefs he is strongly Republican.

CHRISTIAN LORENSON, an energetic Danish-American citizen, lives on his well-improved farm on section 30, Mt. Pleasant Precinct, where he, with his family, settled in the winter of 1884. He was born in Denmark, Europe, Oct. 21, 1850. He is the son of Eric and Anna Lorensen, and his mother is still living at the old home in Denmark. When our subject was seven years old his father died, leaving a large family of children. At this early age he was thrown on his own resources, and as a means of livelihood he worked at farming until he attained his majority, when he emigrated to America. A family of five children were born to his parents, who were named: Louis, Jesse, Eric, Christian (our subject) and Ella. Louis and Jesse are in Denmark; Eric is in Nebraska.

Prior to the time he left Denmark our subject spent a year and a half working at wagon making. In 1871 he left his native land for America, sailing in an Anchor Line Steamer from Copenhagen, on June 15, landing in New York one month later, he having taken passage via Glasgow, Scotland. The voyage was entirely uneventful. From New York City he went directly to New Orleans, remaining there but a few months; he then went to Jackson County, Miss., and secured employment in a large shingle mill. He stayed here but two months, when he went to Oson Springs, Miss., where he worked at different occupations for seven months. He then came north to McLean County, Ill., and worked for three years as a farm hand. He then went to Tazewell County, Ill., where he rented land for the next eight years. At the expiration of this time we find him located on his present homestead.

The subject of this sketch was married, in McLean County, Ill., to Anna S. Graves, March 1, 1879. This lady was born in Denmark, Dec. 17, 1848. She is the daughter of Christian C. and Anna M. Graves. She is the oldest child in the family; she came with her parents to America in 1872. Our subject and his wife are the parents of seven children, six of whom are living, namely: Anne M., Jenna G., Etta A., Tena S., Maria A. and Louis.

Mr. Lorensen has brought all his native energy and perseverance into play in opening and improving his farm, working early and late, in fair weather or foul. He has been prospered, and to-day he finds himself the owner of a choice farm of 160 well improved acres, surrounded by the comforts and enjoyments of life. In all his efforts he has found an able assistant in the person of his wife, who has bravely taken her part of the cares and trials of life in a new country, and has found abundant time, and has, by both precept and example, educated their children in the ways of honesty, uprightness and virtue. Himself and wife are identified with the Lutheran Church, and they are foremost in all matters of charity and benevolence. He has never held any public office, feeling that the time required to obtain the position and discharge the duties properly could not be spared from his farm. In politics he is a straight, earnest Republican.

CHARLES W. SHERMAN, editor and manager of the Plattsburgh Daily and Weekly Journal, was born in the village of New Castle, Ohio, June 9, 1841. His father, Henry Sherman, was a native of Shippensburg, Franklin Co., Pa., and his paternal grandfather, Salisbury Sherman, was a native of the State of Connecticut and a descendant of English ancestry, who emigrated to America during the Colonial times.

Grandfather Sherman learned the trade of tool-maker in his native State, and when a young man migrated to New Jersey, where he enlisted as a soldier in the Revolutionary War. He distinguished himself for his bravery, and met the enemy in the battle of Monmouth, besides other important engagements of that memorable time. After the war he settled in Franklin County, Pa., remaining unmarried until forty years of age. He then took for his wife Miss Sarah Whealan, and occupied himself at his trade the remainder of his life, dying in Franklin County at a very great age, said to have been one hundred and twelve years. His wife also lived to be remarkably aged, her death taking place in 1865, when she was one hundred and four years old.

Henry Sherman, the father of our subject, was the eldest of six children, and early in life learned the trade of a blacksmith as well as that of tool-maker. In 1827 he journeyed overland to the young State of Ohio by means of teams, and settled among the pioneers of Richland County. He purchased land near the present site of Ontario, and six miles west of Mansfield, where he first cleared a spot large enough to erect a log cabin and establish a blacksmith-shop, in the latter of which, by means of a charcoal furnace, he made himself remarkably useful to his neighbors for miles around. He was prospered in his labors of farming and blacksmithing combined, and cleared quite a large tract of land. The log cabin in time gave place to an imposing two-story log house, which was weather-boarded outside, and was the admiration of the country around.

The elder Sherman was injured while shoeing a refractory horse, and died Nov. 30, 1844, in his prime, when forty-two years of age. The mother of our subject, Mrs. Mary (Nazor) Sherman, was a native of Pennsylvania, and the daughter of William Nazor, who was born in Germany and emigrated to America in 1801. He settled in Lancaster County, Pa., where he engaged for a time in farming, then changed his residence to the wilds of Richland County, Ohio, where he cleared another farm and spent the remainder of his days.

The mother of our subject lived on the homestead in Richland County, Ohio, until 1858, then joined her children in Knoxville, Marion Co., Iowa, where her death took place in 1880. Of the sons and daughters comprising the parental household seven lived to mature years, viz: Sarah J., Mary C., Salisbury, Jacob, Henry H., Elizabeth and Charlie W. The latter, the youngest child, was but three years old at the time of his father's death. The faithful and devoted mother kept her family together until they were able to go out into the world and do for themselves.

Charles W. Sherman pursued his first studies in the district school, and as soon as old enough commenced to assist in the labors of the farm. When a lad of eleven years he began learning the trade of a brickmaker with his elder brothers, at which he employed himself two summers. During his boyhood days his time was utilized morning and evening cutting wood and splitting rails, while the intermediate time was spent in school. He thus earned money with which he was enabled to start out for himself in 1857, being then a youth of sixteen years. Turning his face toward the farther West and crossing the Mississippi, he joined an elder brother in Winneshiek County, Iowa, where the latter had previously located, and after a brief sojourn with him made his way by rail to the embryo city of Dubuque.

The summer following young Sherman employed himself on a farm, and in the fall joined two other brothers at Knoxville, Marion County, and all three that next winter engaged in cutting timber for sawlogs. In the spring of 1858 Mr. Sherman conceived the idea that he would like to learn the printer's trade, and accordingly addressed letters to parties in various towns in Iowa, receiving in return several very encouraging replies. One of these was from the proprietor of the Nonpariel, of Council Bluffs, and he at once started on foot across the prairie for that office. He walked the entire distance, making the journey in seven days.

Young Sherman served an apprenticeship of two years in the office of the Council Bluffs Nonpariel, and in the year 1860 proceeded thence to Omaha, Neb., and became an employe of the Republican. A few months later we find him in the office of the Nebraskian and Herald, and on the 9th of November, that same year, he assisted in setting up the first telegraphic news ever published in the Territory of Nebraska. This great event occurred in connection with the Omaha Telegraph, which was published in the office above named.

Our subject employed himself as compositor until the spring of 1861, then materially changing his occupation, engaged to drive a team loaded with merchandise across the plains, stopping at different trading-posts on the way. He thus made two trips, and upon the last journey homeward stopped three months at a ranch three miles east of the present site of Kearney. While at that point he received news of the firing upon Ft. Sumter, and in July following started on foot for the States. He had proceeded but thirty miles when he overtook a train of wagons, and there being more teams than drivers, Mr. Sherman made arrangements to conduct a certain number of the oxen into Des Moines. He fulfilled his contract satisfactorily, and again entered a printing-office, where, however, he staid only one week, having heard that his brother Henry had enlisted in Company B, 3d Iowa Infantry, had been killed in Missouri, and his remains sent home for burial, which was to take place the day following, and he started that night for home.

After recovering from the shock and sorrow of this affliction Mr. Sherman was employed in a printing office in Knoxville, Iowa, until August, and then obtaining his mother's consent, he enlisted on the 20th of that month in Company K, 3d Iowa Cavalry, which went into camp at Keokuk, and when receiving marching orders moved to the vicinity of Rollo, and finally to Salem, Mo., where they tarried two months. In the meantime they were scouting in the southern part of the State, harrassing the various rebel bands roaming around in that region, and putting a stop to the recruiting of rebels. In the middle of March, 1862, they joined the command of Gen. Curtis, and fought at the battle of Pea Ridge. Later, in the month of July, they proceeded to Helena, Ark., which was their headquarters until June, 1863.

This regiment was then made a part of Grant's command, and moved to the vicinity of Vicksburg, assisting in keeping the troops of Gen. Joe Johnston from attacking Grant in the rear. On the 5th of July they started for Jackson, Miss., participating in the battle there, then returning to the outskirts of Vicksburg, started thence in August on a raid through the enemy's country in Mississippi and Tennessee, via Grenada to Memphis. From that point they proceeded by boat to Helena, and thence to Little Rock, where the regiment united and moved toward Benton, thirty miles away, and from there to Little Rock, another thirty miles. Here they were engaged in garrison duty until the month of October, 1863, when Mr. Sherman, with seventeen others, was sent home to raise recruits.

In January, 1864, our subject received orders to report to Davenport, and found on his return that the greater part of the regiment had re-enlisted. He and one other man of the seventeen concluded to do the same, and were obliged to make out their own muster roll. At Davenport they received the thirty days' furlough granted to veterans, and at its expiration the regiment re-assembled at St. Louis, whence they proceeded to Memphis and later to Mississippi, participating not long afterward in the ill-fated battle of Guntown. Mr. Sherman in the thickest of the fight came near being captured. The commanding officer finally gave them word to save themselves as best they could, and putting spurs to his horse he made a dash for life and liberty. The enemy was surrounding them, and Mr. Sherman soon encountered another band by whom he was ordered to surrender. He wheeled his horse about and plunged into a creek, which the noble animal swam while the bullets flew thick and fast around them. The horse received a mortal wound, but lived to carry his rider safely out of the reach of the enemy, then lay down and died.

Our subject pursued his way now on foot, carrying with him his accoutrements 160 miles to Memphis. He subsequently participated in the battles of Pontotoc, Harrisburg, Tupelo, Ebenezer Church, Selma, and Montgomery, Ala. On the 16th of April, 1865, his regiment made the last charge in the last battle of the war east of the Mississippi River, at Columbus, Ga. Thence they proceeded to Macon, where they learned of the truce between Gens. Sherman and Johnston. He was mustered out with the regiment in August, 1865, and shortly afterward greeted his friends and acquaintances at home.

In the fall of 1865 Mr. Sherman first established in business for himself, becoming proprietor of the Elizabeth Star, which he conducted one year. At the expiration of that time he became associated with the Burlington Hawk-Eye, and later with the Burlington Merchant. Later he was at Quincy and Villisca. In 1872 he established the Mills County Journal, at Glenwood, which he conducted a period of nine years. That year also he was elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the Iowa House of Representatives, serving acceptably two terms. On the 5th of November, 1881, he established the Plattsmouth Daily and Weekly Journal, which he has since conducted successfully. With him is associated Mr. J. W. Culright.

Mr. Sherman was married, Aug. 27, 1866, to Miss Graeme, who was born in Van Buren County, Iowa, in 1847. This union resulted in the birth of these children, viz: Eva C., Charles S., Mary, Francis M., John, Freddie, Albert and Helen. Mr. Sherman is a member of the McConchie Post No. 35, G. A. R.; also of Lodge No. 84, A. O. U. W., and as a representative of the "art preservative" belongs to the Burlington Typographical Union No. 51, and the Nebraska Press Association.

MARTIN PROPST. The life labors of the subject of this biography, a farmer in good circumstances and a resident of Plattsmouth Precinct, have been crowned with more than ordinary success. He has one of the most beautiful homesteads in the northeastern part of Cass County—a highly cultivated farm pleasantly located, with handsome and substantial stone buildings set in the midst of well kept grounds, fulfilling the modern idea of the complete country home.

A native of Pendleton County, Va., our subject was born Dec., 7, 1830. He is the son of Eli and Sarah (Eye) Propst, who were natives of Virginia and of German descent. They removed to and settled in Scott County, Iowa, engaged in farming, and lived there until they both died. In his native county he spent his boyhood and youth and lived with his parents until twenty-two years old. Then desirous of seeing something of the western country, he started out for the young State of Iowa, and purchasing land in Scott County set himself to work improving his purchase, living there until the year 1868, his parents settling there at the same time. He was married April 7, 1859, at Davenport, Iowa, to Miss Catharine, daughter of Abraham and Susan (Heavener) Snyder, the wedding taking place in Davenport, Iowa. They lived on the farm in Scott County, Iowa, until the year 1868, then selling out. Mr. Propst made arrangements to cast his lot with the pioneers of Nebraska Territory. Upon his arrival in this county he put up a shanty of cottonwood boards which he transported from across the river in Iowa, and the humble dwelling served as a residence for himself and little family for several years. In the year 1876 he was enabled to put up one of the finest residences in the country round—a large stone structure which is the admiration of all who pass by it. Later he added to the attractions of his homestead by the erection of a two-story stone barn, 44x80 feet in area, with side walls twenty-one feet in height above the foundation. The lower story provides shelter for twenty horses and fifty cattle.

The farm of our subject now embraces 480 broad acres, and adjacent to the dwelling are fruit and shade trees, including a fine apple orchard. Mr. Propst makes a specialty of swine, feeding for the market each year about 100 head. There is a fish-pond near the house which is supplied by a never-failing spring of pure water, and in which the highly prized German carp flourishes finely. He has taken out some carp for the table weighing four pounds.

The parents of our subject, Elias and Sallie (Eye) Propst, were also natives of Virginia. The paternal great-grandparents were born in the Duchy of Holstein, Germany, whence they emigrated to America at an early period in the history of this country, settling in Virginia, where their son Daniel, the grandfather of our subject, was born. The latter in coming to Iowa was accompanied by his parents, they settling with him in Scott County, where they spent the remainder of their days, the mother passing away in the year 1870, aged sixty-eight years, and the father in July, 1874, at the age of seventy. Martin was the third of their eight children, six of whom are living and residents of Iowa and Nebraska.

Our subject and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the Baptist Church, attending services at Eight Mile Grove. Mr. Propst cast his first Presidential vote for Stephen A. Douglas, and is a staunch advocate of Democratic principles. The household circle includes three children—two sons and a daughter—John A. Walter L. and Mary S. The eldest is twenty-eight years of age and the youngest twenty. They are all at home with their parents. Another child, William Edwin, died at the age of twenty-one months.

ELIAS S. GILBERT, farmer and stock-raiser, is now a resident of Weeping Water. This gentleman is one of the most prominent and leading citizens of the neighborhood in which he lives, and devotes his time to general farming and the raising of thoroughbred bank stock, horses, hogs and cattle, having twenty-four head of the fine graded Norman horses, a herd of fifteen head of thoroughbred Short-horn cattle, and 200 full blooded Poland-China hogs. He has made a study of the business, and an inspection of his herds of cattle and hogs will convince the most skeptical that he possesses a complete knowledge of the business, for it is but seldom that herds of both classes display so many fine points and so few poor ones as those the property of Mr. Gilbert; besides he buys and feeds from forty to one hundred head of cattle annually for the general market.

The subject of our sketch was born in Ontario County, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1816, where he lived and attended the common schools of the county until his fifteenth year; he then spent three months at Temple Hill, N. Y., then two years at the academy at Canandaigua, N. Y.; when he had completed his course there he went back to the farm. He there purchased the home farm of 400 acres from his father, and began life for himself, about the age of twenty-one. He remained here until he was thirty-five years old; he had done exceedingly well, and in the spring of 1852 sold all his property and moved to Davenport, Iowa, where he bought 120 acres of improved land near the town. He had previously bought a one-third interest in the Moline Water Power, and 260 acres of land in Moline, which comprised about one-half of the town site. He lived in Davenport and attended to his affairs successfully until the crash of 1857 came and swept the entire fortune away, only succeeding in paying his debts. He continued farming and engaged in the fruit business, planting twenty-five acres in orchard, and carried on that business until 1875. In 1876 he removed to Nebraska with his son, and came to Weeping Water and bought their present home of 160 acres in partnership, which was partly improved at the time, and since then has improved the balance, and has now all necessary buildings, house, barn, granaries, to the value of $3,000. He also has six acres in grove and a fine orchard. He has a large improved windmill, which supplies water to four tanks, which is conveyed to the different yards and barns for the use of the stock by a system of piping.

The subject of this sketch has been married twice, the first time in Ontario County, March 4, 1846, to Miss Caroline E. Pitts, the daughter of Hon. Gideon Pitts, who was the first settler in the town of Richmond, Ontario Co., N. Y., and a wealthy farmer; he served several terms in the New York Legislature. Caroline E. Pitts, wife of our subject, was born in Ontario County, N. Y., May 24, 1819, and died in Gilbert, Iowa, Aug. 2, 1862, leaving two children, Cyrus P. and Carra G. Cyrus P. married Miss Emma Kellogg, and is a farmer and grain buyer in Eagle, Elmwood and Weeping Water. His family consists of four children—James S., Chauncey K., Louisa J. and Fanny P. Carra G. is married, her husband being Mr. George S. Jewett, a merchant in New York City. The second marriage of our subject was contracted in Philadelphia, in December, 1864, to Miss Frances J. Lambaert, daughter of the Hon. Charles Lambaert, who superintended the building of the railroad from Philadelphia to Baltimore. She was born near Philadelphia, Pa. One child is the result of this marriage, Anna, now married to Edward E. Howell, an insurance agent in Omaha, Neb.

The father of our subject was Elias Gilbert, who was born in Litchfield, Conn., in November, 1776. His mother was Polly Greene, born in Rhode Island. Grandfather Joseph Gilbert served through the entire Revolution as a non-commissioned officer, was a shoemaker by trade; his father came from England. Grandfather James Greene, a farmer, was of English extraction, and a distant relative of General Greene of Revolutionary fame. The father and mother were married in New York, the father being a farmer as well as a merchant in Ontario County, was also a tanner, currier, harness-maker, saddler and shoemaker, and was in very easy circumstances. He was a merchant at the time the panic swept away his property, but he, by close attention to business, regained it. The parents left New York in 1854, and went to live with their son, our subject, at Gilbert, Iowa. They remained with him until the death of the father, March 4, 1872, aged ninety-five years, three months and five days. Our subject's mother died in Gilbert, Scott Co., Iowa, Oct. 29, 1867, seventy-three years old. Both parents were active members of the Congregational Church. Elias S. was the sixth child in a family of eight children. Horace died when an infant; his second brother Horace, sister Polly, sister Maryette and sister Theodosia, are dead. Sister Amanda is older and brother Warren is younger than our subject. Many positions of trust and confidence have been held by our subject; he was Trustee of the city and township of Davenport, Iowa, for five years, has served several years as school officer and served as Justice of the Peace six years, and was largely interested in the formation and successful operation of the Farmers' Alliance, and it can be said to his credit, the man never sought the office but the office always sought the man. In politics he always was found in the ranks of the Independent or Republican parties, and was frequently delegate to the County and State Conventions of one of those parties. Both himself and wife were active members of the Congregational Church, of Victoria, teachers of the Bible Class, and took a leading part in all good works. The life of our subject presents many changes, many difficulties met and overcome by the exercise of the indomitable will and inflexible integrity, and all embarrassments and troubles which have come to him in business have been brought about by the financial crush of 1857, and it can be safely said that he has never failed in anything he has undertaken to carry through by himself, and he presents to the mind of the reader and to those who know him, the appearance of a man self-reliant, honest, shrewd and ambitious. He always takes an active part in the political canvass of the country, delivering speeches, and doing all in his power to further the interest of the party which claims his allegiance, and in the times prior to the war he was connected with the "underground railroad," and did much toward helping many colored men to the North and freedom.

The nobler impulses of his nature revolted at the system of slavery existing in this country, and he very early assumed a positive stand against it. In fact, when only seventeen years of age he began his vigorous anti-slavery work in Richmond, Ontario Co., N. Y., then a town of 2,000 inhabitants. In those days pronounced opposers to slavery were few, and strange as it may seem, young Gilbert stood alone as the champion of universal freedom in that city. He was aggressive, and by his able discussion of the question threw such light upon it that ere long his copatriots were many, and included the best men of the community. He was the founder of the town of Gilbert near Davenport, Iowa.

A B. KNOTTS, editor and proprietor of the Plattsburgh Herald, one of the best conducted and most popular newspapers in Cass County, has already shown that he possesses ability that will no doubt some day place him in the front ranks of the journalists of the West. He was born in Lumberport, Harrison Co., W. Va., February 9, 1859. His father, Joseph Knotts, was born in Knottsville, W. Va. Sept. 24, 1832, his father, Absalom Knotts, having been born in the same house. His grandfather, the great-grandfather of subject, was born of Scotch parentage either in Scotland or America. He lived in Princeton, N. J., in the early part of his life, and finally went from there to West Virginia, and became an early settler of Knottsville. He bought quite a large tract of heavily timbered land, and built a grist and saw mill, which he operated for many years, spending the remainder of his life there.

The grandfather of our subject succeeded his father in the proprietorship of the mills, continuing to manage them for some years. In 1860 he sold his property in West Virginia, and moved to Warren County, Iowa, where, in company with Messrs. Read and Felton, he bought a tract of land and platted the village of New Virginia. He was a local preacher in the Methodist Church, besides being a farmer, and was quite well known throughout that part of the State in that capacity. He improved a farm in Warren County, but he subsequently disposed of it, and moved from New Virginia to Osceola, Clarke County, where he was engaged in the mercantile business until about 1879, when he removed to Lucas to conduct the same business, which he carried on in that city until his death in 1885. The maiden name of his wife was Matilda Sayre, and she was a native of Taylor County, W. Va. She spent her last years in Osceola, Iowa, and with her husband lies buried in the cemetery of that place.

The father of our subject was reared in his native State, and early in his youth joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and when quite a young man commenced teaching and preaching. He resided in West Virginia until 1860, moving in that year to Iowa, being transferred to the Iowa Conference and assigned to duty in the western part of the State. When the conference was divided he became a member of the Des Moines Conference. In 1865 he was appointed to the pastorate of the Broadway Society in Council Bluffs, and during the two years that he ministered to the people there a church was built under his auspices. But a wider field of usefulness was open to him, and he became agent for the Methodist Church Extension Society, and was actively engaged in the work of that society the following two years. He was then appointed Presiding Elder of Council Bluffs, which position he held for four years, and during that period was delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Philadelphia. The responsibility and work connected with the office of Presiding Elder proved too much for his health, which became impaired, and he was obliged to relinquish his beloved calling. He then turned his attention to book and job printing, and edited and printed the Inland Advocate a number of years, also the Weekly Independent, a political paper. In the fall of 1874 he lost all of his material by fire, and at that time his health was also injured, and the winter of 1874-75 he spent in Washington. Gen. Grant appointed him United States Consul at Chihuahua, Mexico, and while in that country he became interested in some valuable mines, and resigned his Consulship to turn his attention to mining, and was thus engaged until his death in El Paso, Tex., Jan. 23, 1888. He was a man of marked talent, both in the pulpit and as a financier. In him the Methodist denomination suffered a great loss, as he was instrumental in building up a number of churches, and even after he retired from the pulpit took an earnest interest in the work. The maiden name of his wife was Rebecca Hall, and she was a native of Barbour County, W. Va. She now resides at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Seven sons and one daughter were born to them, namely: Edith, now Mrs. Robinson; our subject, T. H., L. G., E. F., James E., Gordon B. and Joseph.

He of whom we write received his education in the public schools of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and was subsequently graduated from the Iowa Business College at Des Moines, in December, 1876. He then went to Texas in the early part of 1877, with the intention of going into the cattle business. At the expiration of six months he was satisfied with his experience of life in that State, and returned to Council Bluffs to resume work in the office of the Nonpareil, where he had previously commenced to learn the trade of printer. He worked there until 1882, and in the fall of that year went to Mexico and took charge of the stamp mills at the mines of Parral in Chihuahua, continuing thus engaged for four months. He then returned to his old home in Council Bluffs, and in July, 1883, bought the Indianola Herald, in Warren County, Iowa. He retained the proprietorship of that paper for three years and three months, and then sold it at a good profit, but continued in the office as one of the staff of the paper until Dec. 1, 1886. At that time he went to Dallas, Tex., and spent the winter in that delightful climate. In the following spring he came to Plattsmouth and bought the Herald, his brother T. H. being associated with him in the purchase, and continuing in partnership with him until July 5, 1888, when our subject bought his interest, and has since conducted the paper alone. He has an easy, pleasant style of writing, and his editorials are marked by vigor, earnestness, and a thorough comprehension of the subjects under discussion.

Mr. Knotts was married, Nov. 1, 1888, to Miss May Russell, a daughter of Judge Russell, of whom see sketch on another page of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Knotts have a very attractive home, and their many friends meet with a cordial reception beneath its roof. Religiously, our subject is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Socially, he belongs to the Indianola Lodge No. 71, I. O. O. F., and to Three Rivers Lodge No. 84, A. O. U. W. His views on the political questions of the day are sound and sensible, and in consonance with those expressed by the Republican party.

ORRIN P. SMITH, a druggist by profession, is carrying on his business in Plattsmouth in connection with Dr. E. W. Cook, having bought an interest in the store of that gentleman. He is a man of education and wide experience, and has a good, practical knowledge of pharmaceuticals.

Mr. Smith is a native of Ohio, born in the town of Marion, Marion County, to Joseph and Elizabeth (Hartman) Smith, natives respectively of Elizabeth and Newark, N. J. His paternal grandfather, Daniel Smith, was born in that State, of mingled Scotch and German antecedents. The great-grandfather of our subject was born in Scotland, and after attaining manhood took up his residence in America, in Colonial times, settling in New Jersey, where he practiced his profession of attorney, and there he spent the remainder of his life. Before coming to this country he had visited Germany, and married a German wife. The grandfather of our subject, who was also a member of the legal profession, moved to Ohio in 1803, and was a pioneer of Franklin County. He became prominent as a lawyer, practicing his profession there, and serving as Justice of the Peace for many years, and as an educator. Through his zeal and influence the first school district was organized in Franklin County, and he taught the first school. His home was eight miles northeast of Columbus, where he spent his last years. The maiden name of his wife was Harriet DeCamp, and she was born in New Jersey. Her father was a native of France.

The father of our subject was young when his parents removed to Ohio, and he was there reared amid the pioneer influences of the early settlers of that State. In his youth he was sent to Columbus to learn the trade of iron moulder, and afterward to Mt. Vernon, to finish learning it. He subsequently established a foundry at Marion, and made the iron for the rolling stock of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Warsaw Railroad. He took his payment in real estate, which afterward depreciated in value, so that he was obliged to assign to his creditors. He was an exceedingly honorable man, with a great dislike for debt, and he did not rest until he was finally able to settle his indebtedness dollar for dollar, and then commenced life again with nothing but his home left. He is now a resident of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he is Superintendent of Whiting's iron works. He has a fine military record, one of which his family may well be proud. He and his six brothers, Aaron, Levi, Elias, Daniel, Hiram and Frank, all served in the army during the late war, and were all commissioned officers. The total service of the seven boys counts up thirty-two years. One brother died in the service; another, Daniel, was shot seven times, but is still living. The father of our subject was an Orderly Sergeant in an Ohio regiment. The parents of our subject have nine children—Oliver H., Edward H., Mary J., Josephine, Commodore P., Benjamin F., Orrin P., William G. and Harry C.

The subject of this sketch was a lad of good abilities, and was bright and apt in his studies. He laid the foundation of his education in the public schools of Westerville, and, so rapid was his progress, that he was admitted to the High School at an unusually early age. When he was only eleven years of age he was engaged in pattern making and drafting for the C. & G. Cooper Manufacturing Company, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and he remained with them three years. When he was fourteen he went to Iowa, and worked on his brother-in-law's farm in Victor for a year. At the expiration of that time he returned to Mt. Vernon, and formed a partnership with his brother Benjamin to buy and manage a drug store in that city. They continued together in that business for five years, and then sold and went to Granville, Ohio, where they embarked in the same business. A year and a half later our subject went to Chicago, and was employed as a traveling salesman for a year, and then was on the open Board of Trade in that city for two years. We next hear of him in Red Cloud, this State, where he was employed as a clerk in a drug store for a year. In 1887, having a fine opportunity to purchase an interest in Dr. Cook's drug store, in Plattsmouth, he came here for that purpose, and was enabled to make satisfactory terms with that gentleman. He is a man of high purpose and fine character, is gentlemanly in his deportment, and prompt and attentive in waiting on customers. Although he has been a resident of this city but a short time, he has favorably impressed those with whom he has come in contact, and has made many friendships. While a resident of Ohio he became identified with the Knights of Pythias, joining Timon Lodge No. 45, Mt. Vernon, and was made a Knight in 1879.

THOMAS J. FOUNTAIN. The pioneers of 1857, coming to Nebraska during its Territorial days, deserve more than a passing notice in a work of this kind. Among them may be numbered the subject of this history, who, in the spring of that year, settled on his present farm, which occupies a portion of section 24, in South Bend Precinct. He secured at first eighty acres, and to this he has given his close attention for a period of over thirty years, building up a good homestead, and bringing the soil to a high state of cultivation. Upon it, as may be supposed, there were no improvements whatever, and his neighbors were few and far between. The contrast between the past and present is one which only those who have marked the transformation are able to realize. To the men who first braved the dangers and difficulties of life on the frontier, is Nebraska indebted for her position as one of the most prosperous commonwealths west of the Mississippi. Mr. Fountain has contributed his full share toward her wealth and prosperity by eliminating from her soil one of her model homesteads, and otherwise performing the duties of an honest man and a good citizen.

Our subject first opened his eyes to the light on the other side of the Atlantic, in Buckinghamshire, England, May 22, 1830. His father, John Fountain, was a prosperous farmer and stock-dealer, and also engaged in merchandising. The mother, Mrs. Ann (Franklin) Fountain, was a native of the same shire as her husband, and they came to America when their son, Thomas J., was a little lad five years of age. They landed in New York City, and thence proceeded to Middletown, Conn., which was their home a number of years, and where the mother died in middle life, leaving six children—four sons and two daughters. They were named respectively: Henry, Esther, Richard, David, Thomas and Ann. Of these, three are living—Thomas and Ann in South Bend, Neb., and Esther in Oregon.

Our subject pursued his early studies in the common schools of Middletown, Conn., and later served an apprenticeship at the blacksmith trade, laboring as a journeyman thereafter for a number of years, and as long as he remained in New England. He was first married in Massachusetts to Miss Abelene Phipps, who became the mother of three children—Jason, Isabelle and Lafayette, and departed this life at her home in South Bend Precinct in 1886. These children are now living in South Bend, Neb.

Mr. Fountain's present wife was formerly Mrs. Mary Ann (Hamilton) Cummings, born in Chariton County, Mo. Later she removed with her husband to Sarpy County, this State. She is the daughter of William Hamilton, who, when leaving Missouri, removed first to Linn County, Iowa. Of her marriage with Henry Cummings there were born three children—Ethleen, Harriet and Erwin, all of whom are married and living—two in Sarpy County, this State, Harriet and Ethleen, and Erwin in Lyons, Col.

The father of our subject left New England in 1858, and came to this county, where he sojourned until his death, which occurred in 1882, after he had arrived at the advanced age of eighty-five years. Mr. Fountain, politically, votes the straight Democratic ticket, and otherwise than serving as Treasurer of the School Board, has carefully avoided the responsibilities of office. He is regarded as a law-abiding and peaceful citizen, one who attends strictly to his own concerns, making little stir in the world, content to work quietly in his own sphere, and forming a worthy factor in the element constituting the bone and sinew of law and good order.

CHARLES H. BEODEKER, an enterprising farmer and stock-raiser, resides on section 24, in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, was born March 30, 1852, in St. Louis, Mo., and is the eldest in a large family: Charles H., Lewis, Adolph F., Henry; Ella, now the wife of George Delezene; Theodore; Minnie, now the wife of Arthur Blackwell; Nora, now the wife of John Dunson; John, Effie and William C., now deceased. When about three years old his parents removed with their entire family to Jefferson County, Wis., where they resided six years, when they settled in Muscatine County, Iowa, where they lived until the spring of 1866, when the entire family, including our subject, came to Cass County, Neb. The educational advantages enjoyed by our subject were limited to the district schools in the neighborhood of his home. He had a natural taste for reading and study, which he has cultivated, and he is now a man well versed in the general topics of the day.

Our subject was married to Miss Sarah J. Hobson, Oct. 19, 1875. The lady was born in Mills County, Iowa, July 16, 1859, and is a daughter of Hadley and Rebecca Hobson. Her father was a soldier during the late Civil War, in which service he died in the hospital, of the measles. The mother married Jasper Bedwell, and now resides in Nodaway County, Mo. She is the elder of two children born to her parents; her brother is Nathan L. Hobson. As the result of the mother's second marriage there are seven children: Effie, the wife of John T. Atkinson; Ida E., now the wife of Price McCoppin; William E., Mary C., Carrie A., Alvin and Lulu.

The subject of our sketch is the son of Theodore and Patience Beodeker, who are now residents of Louisville Precinct. The father is a native of Germany, and came to America when he was about nine years old. The mother is a native of New York State. After various journeyings the parents settled on their homestead in Louisville Precinct, and they were among the first settlers there. They have continued residing on the original homestead from that date. His means were quite limited, and, like all pioneers in starting in a new country, they had continuous hardships and privations. In the summer season he devoted his time to the cultivation and improvement of his land, and in the winter he performed such jobs of freighting as time and occasion offered. In this way he managed to improve his property, until he now has a fine, well-improved farm, and is classed among the leading and representative men of the precinct. In politics he is a Democrat. He was a soldier during the Mexican War, having enlisted when quite a youth. Now, in the evening of life, they are enjoying the fruits of a life well spent.

Our subject has been practically reared to man's estate in this county, and has experienced many of the cares of pioneer life, giving the assistance of his strong right arm to his father in opening their then new farm, and bearing a heavy share of the labor incident to that purpose. Three children have been born to our subject and his worthy wife: Alta M. was born Dec. 17, 1876; Ida E., Dec. 4, 1879; and Willie Glenn, June 10, 1885. Mr. Beodeker settled on his present farm in the spring of 1876, where he has lived ever since. At that time it was perfectly wild. He had devoted himself to the improvement of his land so intelligently and assiduously, that he now has one of the finest improved farms in the county. He has a large and commodious dwelling, which, with the barns and other buildings, commands the attention and admiration of all, and is a continuing monument to the industry and persistent efforts of our subject.

Mrs. Beodecker came to Nebraska with her mother and step-father. She also knows what it is to be a pioneer, and she has faithfully seconded her husband's efforts, and rendered him all the assistance that a devoted wife can extend to a husband. She is a very intelligent, refined woman, and her home displays the exercise of rare taste. Herself and husband are members of the United Brethren Church, and are foremost in all works of charity and benevolence; they hold a leading position in the social life of the precinct.

Mr. Beodeker, the owner of this fine farm, has been very successful in life. He attributes this success to the fact that he endeavors to live in a strict observance of the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as ye would that they do unto you." Honest and upright, he merits and has the respect and admiration of all his neighbors. The family are noted for their generous hospitality and sociability. In politics he is a Democrat. Up to the present he has never sought or held any public office, feeling that he could not forego the quiet of his home that an entrance into public life would destroy. Hence, he has persistently refused to accept any favors in this line, although he is repeatedly requested to allow his name to be used.

JULIUS F. RAGOSS. Among the tillers of the soil of America no nationality has distinguished itself in a more praiseworthy manner than that owing its origin to the German Empire. To this the subject of this sketch, a prominent farmer and stock-raiser of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, traces his direct origin, having been born in Prussia, Sept. 24, 1845. When a youth of seventeen years he emigrated with his parents to America, embarking on a steamer at the port of Bremen, and after an ocean voyage of fourteen days landed safely in New York City. Thence they proceeded directly to Henry County, Ill., where the parents settled, but about 1867 moved across the Mississippi into this county, and took up their abode in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, where they still reside.

Jacob and Epfrasine (Ziebart) Ragoss were also natives of Prussia, and Julius F. was their eldest son. The family included three other children, who are now located in Nebraska and California. Our subject lived with his parents about two years in Illinois, then started for the farther West, and spent some time looking over the country in Missouri, Arkansas and Minnesota, drifting to Nebraska about 1866. He, however, returned to Illinois, not being yet ready to settle in this State, but the year following took up his residence in this county, upon the quarter-section of land which he now occupies, and for which he paid the sum of $8 per acre.

This land, when coming into the possession of Mr. Ragoss, was nothing but a wild, uncultivated prairie, upon which not a furrow had been turned, it being just as the Indians had left it. His first business was to put up for himself a temporary shelter, and then to get in the crops of that season. He had come to this county empty-handed, and endured in common with the pioneers around him the hardships and privations incident to life in a new settlement. He knows how every dollar of his property has been accumulated, and gives due credit to the excellent woman who has been his companion for a period of seventeen years, and has labored equally with him in the building up of a homestead. To this lady, who in her girlhood was Miss Mary Ahl, he was married Feb. 22, 1871, at her home in Cass County, Neb.

Mrs. Ragoss, also of German parentage and ancestry, was born in the Province of Hessen, Jan. 29, 1854. Her parents, John and Catherine (Huff) Ahl, were natives of the same country, and the mother died in Nebraska about 1878. The parents emigrated to America when their daughter Mary was a child a year old, and lived for a time in New York City. Later they were residents of various States, and about 1865 made their way to this county, where Miss Mary was reared to womanhood. The father took up a tract of land in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, where he still lives. He was one of the pioneer settlers of that region, and is an honest and reliable citizen, greatly respected by his community.

Mr. and Mrs. Ragoss began their wedded life together in Cass County, and are now the parents of six children, who were born as follows: Henry H., Feb. 28, 1873; Julius A., Jan. 9, 1876; Edward, Dec. 7, 1878, and who died May 5, 1881; Ida C., Sept. 18, 1881; Olga, June 22, 1884, and Hugo A., Jan. 14, 1887. Our subject and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the German Lutheran Church, and Mr. R., politically, exercises the right of a free American citizen, to support the men whom he considers best qualified for office, irrespective of party. He attended school a short time after coming to this country, and employs himself in reading as time and opportunity permits. He thus keeps himself posted upon the important events transpiring upon both hemispheres, while in the direction of his farming interests he keeps abreast of new methods and modern machinery. The property which he has accumulated forms a standing monument to his industry and perseverance; one which will endure until his children are old enough to appreciate the diligence and forethought which characterized the labors of their honored sire.

ELI SAMSON, Superintendent of the Cass County Farm, Plattsmouth, and of the infirmary connected with that institution, is well fitted by his practical sagacity, sound common sense, and sterling integrity, for the responsible position that he is so satisfactorily filling. He was born in Scioto County, Ohio, Aug. 1, 1833, to James and Margaret (Bradford) Samson. In 1845 his parents, accompanied by their children—our subject, his brother Ezra, his sister Sarah and her husband, R. E. Bennett, embarked on a boat on the Ohio River bound for Missouri, and after a voyage of several days down the Ohio and up the Mississippi, they landed at St. Louis. They proceeded by team to their destination in Andrew County, Mo., four miles south of Savannah Landing, now the county seat, where the father had a short time previously pre-empted some land. Missouri was then in quite a wild condition; the Indians still living there, and wildcats, and other obnoxious animals then common in the sparsely settled regions of the West, were plenty. St. Joseph had but one store, being an insignificant trading-post, kept by a Frenchman of the name of Rubideaux, to whom belongs the honor of laying out the town. Mr. Samson and his children immediately set to work with a good will to build up a home in the wilds of that country, clearing the land from the heavy forest that covered all but five or six acres, which were all ready to cultivate, the tall, old trees having been removed before Mr. Samson purchased it. They succeeded in developing a fine farm, which they fenced, and erected a good dwelling, barn and other necessary buildings. Mr. Samson had a fine sugar camp, and they made all the sugar and molasses that they used. The parents of our subject died in Andrew County, leaving behind them the legacy of a good name and the record of lives well spent.

He of whom we write was a lad of twelve years when he accompanied his parents to Missouri, and there he grew to manhood. He was married in that State to Miss Mary Lyons, in Dec. 1858. They continued to live in Missouri about four years, and then took up their abode in Brown County, Kan. In February, 1863, he enlisted in Co. L, 2d Nebraska Cavalry, and served with bravery and efficiency until Dec. 24, 1863. He took an active part in the battle of White Stone Hill, and was there wounded Sept. 2d by an Indian, the shot penetrating the right leg near the hip, and coming out near the knee, shattering a part of the bone, and it was not removed until eight years later. His eyesight was also greatly impaired while in the service, and at times he is almost blind. Mr. Samson continued to reside in Kansas some sixteen years, spending the last four years in Wabaunsee County. He then returned to his old home in Andrew County, Missouri, where he lived until November, 1877, when he came to Cass County with his family. He first located on a rented farm four miles south of Plattsmouth, but he subsequently bought an eighty acre farm on section 32, this township, to which he removed. At the expiration of a year and a half he sold that at a good advance, having been appointed in March, 1884, to his present position to take charge of the County Farm, the paupers and infirmary. He has been found by the commissioners to be the right man in the right place, and they have made a contract with him to retain the position of superintendent another year. Under his able management the farm is in a very satisfactory condition, and the paupers are well and kindly cared for. Mr. Sampson is indentified with the G. A. R., being a member of McConihie Post No. 43, Plattsmouth. Politically he supports the Republican party, and he has always proved a good and loyal citizen. Mr. Samson and wife have a family of nine children living, viz: David, married Sophia

Marler, they live in Rock Bluff Precinct; William married Mary Goodwin, they reside in Plattsmouth Precinct; Susan, wife of William Moore, lives in Plattsmouth; Lewis, Michael, Thomas, Oscar, Sarah and Ettie, all single.

GA. ROSE is one of the oldest general merchants of the village of Union, and one of the best known business men of Liberty. He established his present store in this village in May, 1887, and S. A. Weimer is associated with him, under the firm name of G. A. Rose & Co. The latter is from Nebraska City, and was formerly engaged, for a period of twenty years, as general merchant, and being an enterprising, progressive man, was successful in his business. Our subject and his partner have a well-appointed store, and carry a full line of general merchandise, with a large supply of everything their trade demands. The stock runs as high as $7,000, and the sales are about double that amount. This is not Mr. Rose's first venture in the mercantile business, as he had a year's experience in the same line in a country store one and a half miles from Union, carrying groceries chiefly. In that he was very successful, but a man of his enterprising and energetic spirit and fine talent for business of course craved a broader field, and as a result he is established here, and is prospering as he deserves. Mr. Rose began life, however, as a farmer, having had a good property on section 30 of the fractional township or precinct of Wyoming. He still owns the old home farm, which comprises eighty acres of fine farming land, the most of which he improved himself and put into a suitable shape for a comfortable home.

Mr. Rose is a native of Ohio, born in the township of Farmington, Trumbull County, Nov. 4, 1847. He is a son of Hon. A. M. Rose. (For further parental history, see the biographical notice of the father of our subject, the Hon. A. M. Rose, on another page of this volume). He was married in Liberty Precinct, this county, in 1868, to Miss Elizabeth M. Douge. She was born in Indiana, Nov. 3, 1848, and is the daughter of N. G. Douge, likewise a native of Indiana. He is a farmer, and has also engaged in various other enterprises. Mr. Douge was married in Indiana to Miss Eliza A. Beaty, who was most likely a native of that State. Some years after marriage Mr. and Mrs. Douge came West, and he engaged in the various occupations of mechanic, merchant, well-digger and farmer. On coming to this State he located near the west bank of the Missouri River, on the boundary line of Cass and Otoe Counties, and that was his residence for some years. He finally sold out his interests in that locality and moved to Saline County, where he is still living, owning and managing a store at Pleasant Hill. His first wife, the mother of Mrs. Rose, died in Cass County in 1882, aged nearly threescore years. Mr. Douge was subsequently married to Mrs. Worth Wright, who is still living. Mrs. Rose was well reared in a good home, and lived with her parents until her marriage. To her and her husband have been born ten children, two of whom, Sidney and LeRoy, died in infancy. The remaining children, all of whom are at home with their parents, are: Vinnie N., Viola M., Orpha B., Edna V., Lliota P., Lena, Fabian and Raymond. Mrs. Rose is a faithful Methodist in her religious belief, and with her husband is of high social standing in this community. Mr. Rose is an active, wide-awake man of business, prompt and decisive in his dealings, of good financial ability, and his credit is of the best. His interest in politics centers in the Republican party, he being an enthusiastic advocate of the policy of that party.

ABEL CRABTREE. Among the early pioneers of Cass County, few have rendered more efficient assistance in the development of its resources than the subject of this biography. He settled upon a tract of new land in the early days, and after years of industrious labor found himself in possession of a good farm and surrounded by all the comforts of life. He has recently sold his farm to his son. It comprises 160 acres of improved land, with good buildings, a fair assortment of live stock, and all the other appurtenances of a well-regulated country homestead.

The family history of our subject is essentially as follows: His father, James W. Crabtree, a native of Virginia, was the son of William Crabtree, who was born in Virginia, and married Miss Sarah, daughter of James and Mary Graham, who it is supposed were also natives of the old Dominion, where the family existed for several generations.

James Graham, Sr., the maternal great-grandfather of our subject, served as a soldier in the Revolutionary War, receiving an honorable wound, and later drew a pension from the Government until his death, which took place in Virginia. Grandmother Graham later emigrated with her son James, the father of our subject, to Jackson County, Ohio, at a very early period in its history, about 1820. He had in the meantime been married, and Abel, their first son, was born May 6, 1821. Grandmother Graham lived a period of over thirty years in the Buckeye State, dying in 1852 at an advanced age.

The subject of this sketch was reared to man's estate in Jackson County, Ohio. In the meantime his father had died, about 1874. Later the mother joined her son Abel in the West, making her home with him and another of the boys about three years. She then returned to Ohio, and took up her abode with her daughter in Scioto County, where she passed away in the spring of 1885, when about eighty-six years old. Their family included eighteen children, seventeen of whom lived to mature years, and were married; and thirteen are still living, and for the greater part are engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Our subject found his bride in the Buckeye State, being married in his native county, July 9, 1848, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. John and Ruth (Peterson) Clemmons. The parents of Mrs. Crabtree were natives of Ohio, and came to Nebraska with their daughter Elizabeth, after her marriage. The father obtained his title of Captain on account of having raised a company during the Mexican War, which he commanded in that struggle. Mr. and Mrs. Crabtree, after their marriage, lived in Scioto County, Ohio, until 1853, when they emigrated to Missouri, making the trip via the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, to St. Joseph, Mo., and thence across the country with teams to Andrew County. After one year's residence there they journeyed overland to this county, and located near the present site of the city of Rock Bluff as early as 1854, in the Territorial days. Indians were encamped all around them, the treaty not having yet been consummated by which settlers could come in and locate land. The Crabtree family were really dangerously situated, but by the most careful conduct and the avoidance of giving offense, they succeeded in living without molestation, until the treaty was completed and the survey effected, the Indians then leaving.

The first winter our subject and his little family spent in Nebraska they were sheltered in a log pen, with both roof and floor of dirt. The cracks were stopped up with leaves, and there was left a hole in the roof through which the smoke from their fire, which was made on the ground, could escape. They had neither fireplace nor stove, the cooking being performed, as the house was warmed, by the fire on the floor. The spring following, however, Mr. Crabtree put up a log house, which the family occupied comfortably several years.

When the land came into market Mr. Crabtree pre-empted 160 acres on section 15 where he now lives. It was then an unbroken prairie, and the habitation of a white man was not to be seen in that vicinity. It has taken years of labor and thousands of dollars to bring the farm to its present condition. In the meantime civilization has been slowly moving westward, and the culture and comforts of to-day form a wide contrast to the toils and deprivations of the pioneer times. The household circle in due time numbered seven children, namely: Allen, Noah, Ross, Tarvis, Elsa, Cyrus and Abel. The last-named died at the age of eighteen months. The others are living and all have homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Crabtree became identified with the Christian Church many years ago, and Mr. Crabtree has officiated as Elder a quarter of a century. In the full faith of this belief Mrs. Crabtree triumphantly passed from earth July 31, 1886, at the age of sixty-three years. She was a lady possessing all the Christian virtues, and her name is held in tender remembrance by her family and a host of friends. Mr. Crabtree cast his first Presidential vote for Harrison, subsequently became a Democrat, prior to the formation of the Republican party a Whig, and is now a Democrat.

THOMAS RUBY is a prosperous farmer who may be classed among the pioneers of this county, having been a resident of the State since 1856. He resides on a well cultivated farm, located on section 10, in Mt. Pleasant Precinct. He was born in Madison County, Iowa, Aug. 12, 1854, where he lived with his parents until 1856, when the entire family migrated to Nebraska and settled on a claim of 160 acres of Government land that his father had pre-empted in Plattsmouth Precinct. From the day of his arrival in Cass County to the present time, he has continuously resided within its limits. His education was obtained in the district schools while a boy; when he entered into business for himself it was as a farmer and stock-raiser, which occupation he has pursued continuously up to the present time.

The subject of this sketch is a son of James and Amy J. Ruby, who were residents of Holmes County, Ohio. His maternal grandfather was a Scotchman, and his grandmother was a Quaker. His paternal grandfather, Isaac Ruby, was born in Maryland in 1801, and now resides in Madison County, Iowa. Our subject's father lived in Holmes County, Ohio, until he had reached his majority. There he married and later removed to Madison County, Iowa, where he resided for some time, when he migrated to Cass County, in 1856. He was the father of two children—Thomas, our subject, and Mary, who is now the wife of Warren Fletcher and resides in Georgetown, Col. Both parents are now residents of Plattsmouth Precinct.

Our subject and Miss Martha Jeffers were married Sept. 27, 1879, in Montgomery County, Kan. The lady was born in Cass County, Neb., Oct. 13, 1857. She is the daughter of George W. and Mary A. Jeffers. Her father now resides in Athens County, Ohio. He is a native of Ohio, as was also the mother, who is now deceased. Her parents removed from Clark County, Iowa, to Nebraska in 1857, and settled in what is now known as Rock Bluff Precinct, where her father pre-empted a claim which he improved and lived upon until 1876, then returned to Ohio. Her mother died Nov. 20, 1883. This lady is one of a family of eleven children, namely: Joseph, Sarah, Mary, Benjamin F.; Martha, the wife of our subject; Charles W., William L., Elenora, Ernest H., and two children deceased. Joseph resides in Washington Territory; Sarah is the wife of O. J. King, and resides in Mt. Pleasant Precinct; Mary is the wife of Isaiah White, and resides in Idaho; Benjamin F. also resides in Idaho; Charles W. lives in Buffalo County, Neb.; Elenora is the wife of Lewis Barker, and resides in Eight Mile Grove Precinct; William and Ernest H. reside in Mt. Pleasant Precinct. Our subject and wife are the parents of three children—Frank R., born Jan. 15, 1881; Bessie, Jan. 10, 1883, and James G., Dec. 28, 1885.

Mr. Ruby has improved his farm by planting an orchard of choice trees, buildings conveniently arranged and well located barns, cattle sheds and granaries, for the comfort of his stock and the economical handling of his various farm products. His residence is nicely located, is comfortably furnished, and is supplied with many of the luxuries of life. It is presided over by his good wife, who is ever ready to lend her aid to the furtherance of the interests of her husband at any and all times. The parents take great pride in their growing family, and the love lavished on their children is fully appreciated and reciprocated. Their home farm is composed of 160 acres of nicely located land, fenced and sub-divided into fields of convenient size and thoroughly cultivated, Mr. Ruby makes a specialty of raising thoroughbred English Shire horses, and is now the owner of several fine graded animals; he takes great pride in them and they certainly show the large amount of attention and care bestowed upon them. He owns one imported horse which is valued at $1,200. He is also the owner of a herd of high-grade cattle and a number of fine hogs.

The subject of our sketch is a man possessing great force of character, and being a public-spirited citizen, he makes his influence felt in all matters pertaining to the advancement of the best interests of the community in which they live. Himself and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and have always taken an active interest in religious matters. They also hold an enviable position in the social circles of the neighborhood. He is a Republican in politics. He has filled no public office except that of School Director, of which he is now the incumbent.

BASIL SWEARINGEN RAMSEY, one of the ablest members of the legal profession in Southern Nebraska, established himself in the city of Plattsmouth in the spring of 1881, and entered upon a most successful career. He comes of excellent Pennsylvania stock, and was born in the vicinity of Frankfort Springs, Beaver County, that State, July 4, 1844. His father, William Ramsey, a native of the same place, was born Jan. 11, 1808, and the paternal grandfather, Samuel Ramsey, was also a native of Beaver County. The great-grandfather, James Ramsey, was a native of either Scotland or Ireland, whence he emigrated at an early day to America, settling among the pioneers of Beaver County, Pa. He was one of the most highly esteemed members of the farming community of that region, where he spent the remainder of his life, building up a good homestead and making for himself a worthy record. His remains were laid to rest in Kings Creek Cemetery, where his son, William, and grandson, William, were also buried.

James Ramsey was the father of fifteen children, and from him probably sprang the people of that name in the United States. Samuel Ramsey also followed farming, and spent his entire life in his native county. His son William, the father of our subject, was reared and educated in his native county, and departing somewhat from the career of his forefathers, chose the profession of law, while at the same time he became the owner of a farm where he made his home and the operations of which he superintended. He thus spent his entire life practicing law and carrying on agriculture, and was a life-long resident of his native county. He rested from his earthly labors in October, 1870.

Basil Swearingen, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was a native of Maryland, and was the son of Samuel Von Swearingen, who was born also in that State. The family came originally from Holland, and were among the earliest settlers of Maryland. The great-grandfather migrated to Beaver County, Pa., about the time of the trouble with the Shawnees, Mingoos and other tribes of Indians along the Ohio River. He being contemporaneous with Lewis Wetzel and others who acquired reputation as skillful Indian fighters. He opened up a farm from the wilderness and there spent the remainder of his days, his remains being laid to rest in the family burying ground on the farm. His son, the grandfather of our subject, also cleared a large farm in that region and lived to be ripe in years. He was buried in a cemetery near Poe, Hanover Township, Beaver Co., Pa.

The mother of our subject, in her girlhood Miss Mary Swearingen, was also born in Beaver County, Pa., Oct. 13, 1813, and surviving her husband a little over ten years, departed this life Dec. 22, 1880. The parental household included eight children, seven of whom grew to mature years. Al-letha married Daniel Standish, a lineal descendant of Miles Standish, the Captain of the Mayflower, and died in Beaver County, Pa.; John came to the West several years ago, and is now a resident of Eight Mile Grove Precinct, this county; Sarah Ann continues a resident of Beaver County, Pa.; Catherine married John Ramsey, of Beaver County; Basil S. was the next in order of birth; William died when eleven years of age; Bella married Dr. J. M. Waterman, and lives in Hay Springs, Sheridan County, this State; Rebecca lives with her sister Sarah, on the old homestead in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Ramsey pursued his early studies in the common schools of his native town, and lived there until the year 1863, when he resolved to seek his fortunes in the West. Coming to Nebraska Territory he settled first at Mt. Pleasant, this county, and for the first two winters employed himself as a school teacher, while in summer he worked on a farm. He was thus teacher and farmer alternately for a time, but finally occupied himself in teaching the year around, until 1874.

In the year 1870 young Ramsey commenced reading law under the instruction of Judge Samuel Maxwell, of Plattsmouth, now on the Supreme Bench, and was admitted to the bar in 1879. He had in the meantime opened an office at Louisville, and practiced there. Later he formed a partnership with A. W. Crites, who is now Receiver of Public Moneys at Chadron, and opened an office in Plattsmouth, of which he has since been a resident. His partnership with Mr. Crites continued until the year 1887, when the latter withdrew to accept his present position.

Mr. Ramsey was married quite late in life, Dec. 25, 1882, to Miss Libbie Crites, daughter of Joseph and Lydia (Darling) Crites. She is the youngest sister of his former law partner, A. W. Crites. Mrs. Ramsey was born in Racine County, Wis. Her parents were natives of Pennsylvania and New York respectively. The mother is deceased. The father is a resident of Plattsmouth. Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey are the parents of one child, a son, Willie Paul, who was born June 30, 1884. Mr. R. has always been a Democrat politically, and in 1885 was elected County Commissioner, receiving a large majority in a Republican county, which sufficiently indicates his standing in his community. He fulfilled the duties of this office three years acceptably. In 1883 he was Journal Clerk of the State Senate.

JAMES COLBERT, an enterprising farmer of Elmwood Precinct, was born in Huntingtongshire, England, Aug. 19, 1833, and was the youngest in a family of six children. The father died when our subject was twelve years old, leaving him alone to shift for himself at that early age. His educational advantages were very limited. At the age of twenty he came to America to join his brother John, who had emigrated to America, and settled in Niagara County, N. Y., two years previously. In 1856 our subject went to Michigan, residing for a time in the counties of Allegan, Barry and Kent. In 1862 he was married to Miss Sarah Jane Van Avery, the daughter of Samuel and Cordelia (Hitcheock) Van Avery. The lady's parents were of Dutch descent, and were natives of Canada, where they lived until the wife of our subject was twelve years old, when they removed to Michigan, where she resided until her marriage with Mr. Colbert.

After his marriage our subject rented a farm in Michigan, but soon realizing the fact that there were better opportunities in the West for obtaining a home of their own, they, in May, 1868, packed their effects in a wagon, and drove off toward the wild West. At the time of starting his final destination was not specifically determined, they intending to travel westward until they discovered the the location most favorable for their purposes. On June 27, 1868, while travelling westward their present homestead came into view. He at once filed a claim on his present eighty acres, unloaded his household goods, and immediately began the improvements, of which the present well arranged and comfortable home is the result. Mr. C. has made all the improvements on the farm, erected a fine new barn, planted an orchard of choice trees, set out groves and ornamental trees, until he has a farm whose improvements rank second to none in utility and convenience.

Mr. Colbert and wife are parents of ten children—William H. (deceased), Elvira B., John W., George Lincoln, Charles Wesley (deceased), Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Elmer, Mary L., Samuel Eugene and Perry Edwin. Elvira, the eldest daughter, is now married to Mr. Edwin H. F. Richards, a thrifty young farmer of the neighborhood, and is the proud mother of one child, Mary, who is the idol of both her parents and grandparents. The son John W. is a respected citizen of Elmwood Precinct. All of the family were born in Nebraska, except the three elder children, whom they brought to Nebraska with them in 1868. Our subject's son John W. was married to Miss Lucy Frisbey, Dec. 18, 1888, at the home of the bride in Weeping Water Precinct; she is the daughter of James and Sarah Frisbey.

Robert Colbert and Sarah, his wife, the parents of our subject, were natives of England, where the father was a laborer, which position in that country was not conducive to the accumulation of great wealth, in consequence he was not able to give the subject of our sketch any substantial financial assistance, and as a result he has had his own way to make in the world from the start, and it is but due to him to say that he has performed his part faithfully and well. Having nothing but his hands and head to depend upon, he made such good and effective use of them that he can now look over his broad well cultivated acres and pleasant and comfortable home, and feel that they are the direct result of the labor of himself and wife. He is highly esteemed by his neighbors, and any enterprise for the good of the people finds in him an earnest supporter. In politics he is a staunch Republican. Himself and wife are both esteemed members of the Baptist Church.

WJ. WARRICK. To anyone acquainted with the business circles of Plattsouth the name of our subject is well known as that of the popular druggist and accurate prescriptionist of that place. He was born in Washington County, Pa., April 20, 1861, and is the son of George M. and Mary (Wilson) Warrick. His father and mother were also residents of Washington County. The family is of English extraction, and the grandfather of our subject, Jonathan Warrick, was born in New England, of English parentage.

Jonathan Warrick was an educated man, and became a civil engineer. He went to Western Pennsylvania as a surveyor in the early days of settlement there, and had charge of the surveying of a large section of the then new country. Many of his field notes are now preserved and kept for reference in Washington, Pa. He located in Washington County, and there spent the latter years of his life. There the father of our subject was reared, and as a young man learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for about ten years, and then engaged in mercantile pursuits. He is now retired from the more active engagements of business, but owns and is interested in two farms in Cass County and one in Otoe County, of this State, and also a farm in Montgomery County, and another in Cass County, Iowa.

The maiden name of the mother of our subject was Mary Wilson. She was born in Taylorstown, Pa., and is the daughter of William Wilson. She has become the mother of five children, who received the following names: Matilda Belle, wife of Thomas C. McCarrell; our subject; John Martin, Rachel Mary and Jennie May.

Our subject was educated in the schools of Washington, taking the High School course, and also that of Duff's Mercantile College at Pittsburgh, being graduated from the latter institution on the 31st of October, 1878, after which he returned to Washington, and attended the classes of Washington and Jefferson College; after leaving this institution he became a drug clerk in one of the leading drug-stores of Washington, remaining there for about two years, and coming to this county in the year 1882. He settled at Plattsouth, and bought a drug-store of O. F. Johnson, and from that time has continued prosperously in that line of business.

On the 5th of April, 1882, Mr. Warrick was joined in matrimony with Annie Poland, who was born in Washington, Pa., and is the daughter of Henry Poland, of Washington, Pa. There have been three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Warrick, and these bear the following names: Annie M. B., who died Dec. 9, 1888; George H. and William J. Mr. and Mrs. Warrick are much esteemed members of the community. Our subject is a member of the Republican party, and is a worthy and loyal citizen, and takes a deep interest in all questions that pertain to the National welfare.

PHILLIP HORN, well known throughout Plattsouth Precinct, is comfortably located on section 17, and bears the reputation of an honest man and a good citizen, a life-long Democrat politically, and with his family members in good standing of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. He has made of agriculture a pronounced success, having a finely improved farm, which forms one of the most attractive features in the landscape of that section of country.

Our subject is of substantial German ancestry, and the son of Peter Horn, a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, who married Miss Anna Katie Kump, and lived in Germany until after the birth of nine children. The paternal grandparents, also natives of Hesse-Darmstadt, spent their entire lives upon their native soil. To Peter and Anna Horn there were born five sons and four daughters, namely: Margaret, Mike, George, Lizzie, Jacob, Margaretta, Phillip (our subject), George P. and Elizabeth. The mother died in Germany when comparatively a young woman, in 1845.

The father of our subject, about eleven years after the death of his wife, emigrated to America, in 1854, locating in Tazewell County, Ill., where his death took place that same year. Phillip and his brother George P. had preceded their father to the United States in June, 1851, making the voyage on a sailing-vessel in twenty-four days. After landing in New York City they proceeded to Cincinnati, Ohio, first by boat to Albany, N. Y., thence across the State, and by lake to Toledo, and thence down the Miami Canal to the Queen City. At that point, embarking on the Ohio River, they proceeded to the Mississippi and St. Louis, and from there to Pekin, Ill., where, securing a tract of land, our subject engaged in farming.

In Illinois Mr. Horn made the acquaintance of Miss Margaretha Schwabel, to whom he was married Feb. 12, 1859, and lived in the Prairie State until 1868. In that year he came to the young State of Nebraska, and purchased his present farm of 160 acres. It could scarcely then be dignified by the name of a farm, as but forty acres had been plowed, and the only building was a small frame house. Under this humble roof the little family took up their abode, and Mr. Horn proceeded to the building up of a homestead. The steadfast labor of years has been amply rewarded, the soil yielding bountifully to his thorough culture and excellent management. The first humble dwelling was replaced, in 1878, by a more substantial residence, and there is also a barn, granaries, corn cribs and all the other necessary out-buildings. Mr. Horn subsequently invested a portion of his surplus capital in another quarter-section of land, which is now also improved, and he has about 200 acres of pasture. His farms consist of 500 acres.

The career of our subject has been that essentially of a self-made man. He came to the United States poor in purse, and his possessions are the result of his own perseverance, aided by an industrious and sensible wife. They are the parents of four children, the eldest of whom, a daughter, Mary, is the wife of Theodore Starkjohn, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere in this work; Maggie, Mrs. Fred Kehne, is a resident of this precinct; Katie is the wife of Henry Hirz, who is written of elsewhere in this work; Lizzie, Mrs. John Kaffenberger, resides with her husband on the home farm, with her parents, and has one child, a daughter, Anna. Mrs. Horn is the daughter of Jacob and Caroline Schwabel, who were natives of Germany, and are now deceased.

BENJAMIN F. RUBY. The spring of 1879 found the subject of this sketch journeying on his road from Ohio to this county, accompanied by his wife and four children. He first settled upon a tract of land in the vicinity of Eight Mile Grove post-office, upon which he operated four years with such good results that in the spring of 1883 he took possession of a farm which he could call his own. Upon this he has since resided, and it is pleasantly located on section 9, Mt. Pleasant Precinct. Eighty acres of good land are comprised within its boundaries, which under careful cultivation have become productive and valuable. In addition to general farming, stock-raising forms a prominent feature of the operations connected therewith.

Monroe County, Ohio, was the boyhood home of our subject, and where his birth took place Sept. 19, 1843. Edward R. and Rosetta (Haines) Ruby, his parents, were also natives of the Buckeye State, and are now residents of this county. Ten children completed the sum of the parental household, eight of whom survive: John W. lives in Red Willow County, this State; Mary died when about thirty-nine years old; Benjamin F., our subject, was the third child; Hiram H. is in Colorado; Hester lives in this county; Robert lives in Gage County; Jesse resides in this county; Harriet died when about twenty-five years old; Edward R. is engaged in farming in this county, and William is numbered among the well-to-do farmers of Hitchcock, Neb.

Mr. Ruby continued a resident of his native county until a young man of twenty years, and then the whole family changed their residence to Morgan County, in the same State. Later he was married there, March 4, 1868, to Miss Mary C. Sanders, who was born in Morgan County, Dec. 22, 1844. Mrs. Ruby is the daughter of Hezekiah and Ann (Rose) Sanders, the father a native of Massachusetts and the mother of Virginia. It is known that Grandfather Rose was a Captain in the War of 1812, and it is believed that Grandfather Sanders distinguished himself in a like manner. The parental family included four children, three of whom are living, namely: Stillman, a resident of Morgan County, Ohio; Mrs. Ruby and Hannah A., the wife of Abraham Long, a resident of this county. Hiram died in Ohio when about twenty-eight years old.

The parents of Mrs. Ruby were numbered among the pioneer settlers of Morgan County, Ohio, of which they were residents for many years, and recognized as among the best element of its people. The mother died at the homestead there March 9, 1878. Mr. Sanders survived his wife for over ten years, dying in Ohio, Nov. 29, 1888. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ruby, only two of whom survive: Mary E. came to the household Dec. 5, 1868, and passed away when a little over seventeen years of age, Dec. 26, 1885; Jesse F. was born March 29, 1871, and died June 15, 1881; Edward M. was born June 5, 1873, and Rosetta A. March 12, 1876. These two bright young people, as may be supposed, are the joy and pride of their parents' hearts. They are being carefully trained and educated as the representatives of a prominent and highly respected family.

Mr. Ruby acknowledges that a large portion of his success is due to the helpful efforts of his worthy and excellent wife, who with him has borne the heat and burden of the day, and contributed her share toward the accumulation of their property. Mr. Ruby, politically, votes the straight Republican ticket, and before leaving his native State had distinguished himself as a public-spirited citizen, frequently serving on the School Board of his district, and often occupying other positions requiring good judgment and integrity. Socially, he belongs to the G. A. R. Post at Weeping Water. During the late Civil War he was a member for ninety days of the Ohio National Guards, ready to shoulder his musket and prevent the Confederates desecrating the soil of his native State. Fortunately a more arduous service was not required, and the Guards in due time disbanded, and resumed the peaceful vocations of civil life.

JOSHUA P. BURDICK. The farmers in the southwestern part of Cass County, in and around Tipton Precinct, are men fully as capable and enterprising as their neighbors further east, and among the most prominent of these is the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this sketch. One of the heaviest stock-feeders of that section, he utilizes largely in this industry the 640 acres of land which constitutes one of the finest farms in Cass County. He ships usually 250 head of cattle per annum, besides horses and swine, and realizes, it is hardly necessary to say, a handsome income.

Mr. Burdick is the offspring of an excellent old family, his great-grandfather having been one of seven brothers, who emigrated from Scotland over a century ago and purchased a whole township of land in New York State. From them sprang the Burdicks of America. Abel, the grandfather of our subject, a native of New York, after reaching manhood served as a soldier in the War of 1812. He later followed agricultural pursuits, and spent his last years in New York State. His son, Abel Jr., the father of our subject, was born in Allegany County, N. Y., Sept. 30, 1799, and married Miss Lucy Hadsell, a native of the same place and born March 9, 1806.

Grandfather Hadsell was of English descent and one of the early pioneers of New York State. He was a lumberman, also owned a farm in Cattaraugus County, and later he operated a saw-mill on the Alleghany River, rafting his lumber down the Ohio to Cincinnati, and was thus engaged until about ten years before his death, then removing into Alleghany City he retired from active labor. His death took place Aug. 29, 1866. The mother survived until March 10, 1879, when she too died in Alleghany City. Both were members of the Baptist Church. The parental family consisted of nine children, two of whom died in infancy. One daughter, Barbara, died when about fifty-seven years old. Those living to mature years were: Abel R., Joshua P., our subject, Euphemia, Hanford D., Albertus P., who died when twenty-one years old, and Sarah. Abel, during the late Civil War enlisted in the 99th Illinois Infantry, in which he served until the close, being neither wounded or captured, and safely returned, settling in Pike County, Ill., where he is now living. Albertus enlisted in a New York regiment, served under Gen. McClellan, and died near Richmond, Va., of fever, in August, 1862. His remains were laid to rest near the old home in Allegany City, N. Y. The other children are living.

The subject of this sketch was born near Alford, Allegany Co., N. Y., Sept. 30, 1832. He was reared to manhood in the lumber districts of the Empire State, and after attending the subscription school completed his studies in the High School at Moline. When a youth of eighteen years he repaired to Pike County, Ill., on a visit, and was so well pleased with the country in that region that he never returned. Upon leaving Pike County he journeyed by rail to Detroit, thence to Chicago by canal, and down the Illinois River to Griggsville. Here he was employed by the month on a farm and whatever else he could find to do until the spring of 1852.

Young Burdick, not yet satisfied with his explorations, migrated to Minnesota and assisted in the survey of the old State wagon road, and later crossed the lake to St. Peters River, and finally engaged in rafting lumber down the Wisconsin. We next find him back in Pike County, Ill., there having been an unusual attraction in that locality which was more fully explained on the 3d of April, 1853, when he was united in marriage with Miss Deborah Gray, the wedding taking place at her father's, in Pike County.

Mrs. Burdick was born near Barry, Pike Co., Ill., Oct. 21, 1835, and is the daughter of Anson and Jane (Harris) Gray, the father a native of Onondaga County, N. Y., and the mother of Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather, John Gray, was also a native of New York and of Welsh ancestry. Grandfather

Harris, whose Christian name was William, was born in New York State, and followed the trade of gunsmith. In due time he migrated to Ohio, settling near Tiffin, where it is supposed he spent the remainder of his life. His father, the maternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Burdick, was of Irish descent, and was the founder of the present flourishing city of Harrisburg, the capital of Pennsylvania.

Abel Burdick when a youth of eighteen years enlisted in a New York regiment as a soldier in the War of 1812. Later he emigrated to Seneca County, Ohio, and employed himself as a farmer and traveler, being a hunter of no mean skill. Leaving the Buckeye State in 1833 he migrated to Pike County, Ill., and was one of the first men to settle there upon a tract of Government land. Here as before he prosecuted farming and hunting combined, became wealthy, and died Feb. 15, 1870, at the age of seventy-four years. The wife passed away twenty-three years prior to the decease of her husband, her death taking place at their home in Pike County, Aug. 10, 1847, when she was in the forty-first year of her age.

To Anson and Jane (Harris) Gray there were born eleven children, namely: Mary, who died when thirty years old; John; William; Jerome, deceased at the age of thirty; Adelia, Deborah, Angelina, Benjamin, Sylvia A., Jane and Harriet. Benjamin, during the late Civil War enlisted in the 99th Illinois Infantry and served until the close. Deborah, the wife of our subject, was born near Barry, Pike Co., Ill., Oct. 21, 1835. Mr. Burdick after his marriage purchased land to the extent of 200 acres in Pike County, where he commenced farming, but later sold out and purchased another farm of 100 acres. Upon this he operated until the spring of 1858, then, seized with a desire for still further adventure, disposed of his property interests in the Prairie State and set out with teams for Brown County, Kan.

Our subject operated upon the soil of Kansas a period of three years, and in the fall of 1862 came to Nebraska, and pitched his tent in Nemaha County. He was engaged in teaming that year and in the fall, the Civil War being in progress, enlisted as a Union soldier in Company E, 2d Nebraska Cavalry, the boys furnishing their own horses.

He was mustered in at Omaha as First Sergeant and the regiment was detailed to operate against the Indians on the frontier. They met the enemy in a pitched battle on the White Stone River, and in many other lively engagements and skirmishes. After a service of thirteen months Mr. Burdick received his honorable discharge at Brownville, Neb., in the fall of 1863.

Returning now to Nemaha County, Neb., Mr. Burdick engaged in general merchandising at Peru, but a year later sold out and began freighting to Denver, which occupied him two years. Then returning to mercantile pursuits in Peru he busied himself at this for a time, and finally drifted into the grain trade, which he prosecuted six years and until the spring of 1875, in connection with merchandising. Thereafter he turned his whole attention to the buying and shipping of grain, until 1882. Then, having purchased land in Tipton Precinct, he moved upon it, and commenced the farming operations which have resulted so successfully. He began at first principles, turning the first furrow upon it, planting groves and an orchard of 400 trees, besides the smaller fruits, erecting a good house and barn and gradually adding the other structures necessary to the complete homestead.

The farm of Mr. Burdick is finely located and receives the necessary moisture from a branch of the Nemaha River, from which a windmill conveys it to tanks, both around the farm and in the house. Eighty acres of land lies on section 28, and the remaining 160 on sections 33 and 34, the residence being on section 33. In his stock operations Mr. Burdick ships annually about eleven cars of cattle and swine, and keeps about thirty head of graded Percheron horses.

Ten children came to bless the union of Mr. and Mrs. Burdick, the record of whom is as follows: James, the eldest son, is married, and farming in Dakota; Lucy W. married W. J. Miller, a farmer of Garfield Precinct, in Lincoln County, Neb.; they have two children—Frank and George. Rebecca is the wife of M. D. Zinkon, and they reside in Callaway County, Mo.; Anson is married and farming in Lincoln County; Ida M. is the wife of George Tappen, editor of a paper in Broken Bow; Jerome is unmarried and following the profession of a teacher in Palmyra Precinct, Otoe County; Edward P. is farming in Lincoln County; William H., Sylvia L. and Iven are at home with their parents. They are a group of very interesting and intelligent children, comprising a family of which the parents have reason to be proud. They have been well educated and carefully trained, and are thus prepared to bear worthily in later years the mantle of their honored parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Burdick are members in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which our subject officiates as a Trustee, and politically, he uniformly votes the Republican ticket. He has been quite prominent in local politics, and for a period of twenty-five years, with the exception of one or two instances, has represented his party in the various State and County Conventions. He has had considerable experience as a juror, and has uniformly signalized himself as a liberal and public-spirited citizen, encouraging all enterprises calculated for the best good of the people. He believes in education, and was instrumental in organizing Peru College, while he has been a member of the School Board since attaining manhood. In 1887 he was elected Justice of the Peace, and still holds the office. Mrs. Burdick, like her husband, is held in high esteem in her community, being a lady looking well to the ways of her household, kind, hospitable and generous, ever ready to do a favor to those about her, while her cultivated and intelligent mind has had its influence, not only in her own household, but in the circle in which she has moved for so many years. No family stands higher among the intelligent people of Cass County.

OLIVER WARD occupies a prominent place among the pioneers and early settlers of the county and State, and now lives on a highly improved farm of eighty acres, on section 20, Eight Mile Grove Precinct. He took possession of his present home farm in the spring of 1863. He is a native of Union County, Ind., where he was born Dec. 25, 1825. He attained to years of manhood in Putnam County, Ind., amid the scenes of pioneer life, and he did much of the hard labor incident to opening new farms in a heavily timbered country. His educational advantages were extremely limited, as his time was fully occupied in farming, however, by closely observing the actions of men, and noting events as they transpired he is now fully informed on all matters of general interest.

Our subject is the son of Isaac and Beulah (Bradway) Ward. The mother was born in New Jersey. His father was born in the same State, and is the descendant of an old English family that emigrated to America previous to the War for Independence. Grandfather Ward was a soldier during the Revolutionary War, and the father of our subject was a boy at the time. The parents removed with their family, when Oliver was ten years old, to Putnam County, Ind., where they were also among the earliest settlers. Here there was no cessation to the labor of the farm they proceeding to clear a farm in the midst of the heavy timber, and our subject remembers when in Indiana he "rolled logs" for twenty-three days in succession. Log rolling in those days was made a neighborhood affair, when all the male members of the community gathered by appointment on the farm of some one of their number, and proceeded, with the aid of numerous ox-teams, much whisky, many dogs and loud shouting, to roll into immense heaps the trunks of the trees that had been felled by the owner of the land, after which they were burned. These gatherings served as opportunities for the widely scattered settlers to form the acquaintance of new-comers, for the dissemination of work, and devising plans for the better protection of their interests.

This gentleman is one of a family of eight children, three of whom survive, namely: Jonathan, who now lives in Taylor County, Iowa; Josiah, who now resides in Indiana, and our subject. The five deceased were named: Jefferson, Thomas, Abigail, Joseph and William. Mr. Ward was married to Sarah A. Jenkins, Sept. 22, 1846. This lady was born Sept. 1, 1828, in Putnam County, Ind. She is a daughter of Benjamin and Catherine Jenkins. Her father was born in Montgomery County, Ky., Nov. 15, 1811, and was of German origin. Her mother was born in Indiana and was of English descent. A large number of her ancestors took an active and honorable part in the War for Independence. Her parents settled in Putnam County at a very early day, and reared a family of seven children, five of whom are living. They were named: Sarah, the wife of our subject; Elizabeth, Emily, Elijah and Columbus. Elizabeth is the wife of William Jenkins, and resides in Charleston, Ill.; Emily is the wife of Marion Buis, and now resides in Andrew County, Mo.; Elijah lives in Greenwood, Neb., and Columbus lives in Logan County, Iowa. The two deceased were Jessie and Renia.

Our subject and his wife have become the parents of eleven children, eight of whom are living: Benjamin, Marion, Emily E., Margaret, Henderson, David A., John O. and Charles. Benjamin resides in Washington County, Col.; Marion lives in Cass County, Neb.; Emily is the wife of John Sayles, and resides in Greenwood, Neb.; and Margaret is the wife of Jesse Livingston, and resides in Louisville Precinct; Henderson also lives in Louisville Precinct; David, John O. and Charles are at home with their parents.

Mr. Ward and family removed to Andrew County, Mo., in the spring of 1850, where they lived until the spring of 1855, when they removed to Mills County, Iowa, where they lived until the family came to Nebraska in the spring of 1860 and located near Plattsmouth, where he lived until the spring of 1863, when he settled on his present farm. The improvements at that time consisted of an 18x24 feet square, rudely built board house, and thirty acres of land had been plowed. He has devoted all his time and energy to the improvement and cultivation of his farm, in which he has been very prosperous. He has added to his original purchase at different times until he is now the owner of 170 acres, and a house and two lots in Louisville.

The residence of our subject occupies a very prominent location, and is surrounded by a large number of ornamental trees, a fine orchard is growing, and presents a very thrifty appearance. His barn is well arranged for the purposes for which it was intended, he has numerous cattle sheds, corn cribs and granaries. The farm is divided into fields of convenient size by substantial fences, and, taken altogether, the entire property reflects great credit on the owner and shows the result of intelligently directed labor, by a man thoroughly well informed in all the details of his business.

During the late Civil War Mr. Ward was in military service for about fourteen months; he was stationed on the Upper Missouri River among the Sioux Indians. He was attacked by a very serious illness, and was confined in the hospital at Ft. Pierre, Dak., for a long time. After his recovery he did not enter the active service again, but was honorably discharged with the remainder of his command, when he returned home. Both himself and wife are among the leading and representative families of the precinct, are members of the Christian Church, and take a leading part in all charitable and church matters. The wife has ably seconded her husband's efforts in accumulating the splendid property which they now own, and richly deserves the life of contentment and comparative ease which they are now enable to enjoy. They are important factors in the social life of the precinct. In politics he is a straight Republican. He has never sought or held any public office, preferring to devote his entire time to his own affairs, which has rendered him and his good wife so favorably and widely known throughout the locality in which they live.

CHARLES M. HOLMES, a Cass County pioneer, is proprietor of a livery stable in Platts-mouth, and is numbered among the substantial and well-to-do citizens of that city. He is a man of wide and varied experience, keen, prompt and trusty in his dealings, and he is well known and well liked by an extensive acquaintance. He was born in Gilboa, Schoharie Co., N. Y., May 21, 1835. He comes of an old Scottish family of that name, and his father, John Holmes, was born in Paisley, Scotland, of which country his parents were life-long residents, as were his ancestry, for the most part, as far back as known. The father of our subject, with his brother Walter and sister Jane, were the only members of the family that ever crossed the water to this country. The father of our subject learned the trade of a weaver in his native town, and he served seven years as a soldier. He came to America about 1818, and locating in Delaware County, N. Y., worked there a few years at his trade. He subsequently moved from there to Schoharie County, where he bought a farm, on which he lived until 1840, when he sold that and bought a farm five miles from Delhi. During the winter seasons he did weaving for the neighbors, and the rest of the year he farmed. He died on his homestead in Delhi in 1854. The maiden name of his wife, mother of our subject, was Jane Mayer, and she was also a native of Paisley, Scotland. She died at the home of a daughter in Pennsylvania some years after her husband's death. They were very worthy people, and from them our subject inherited the characteristic Scotch traits of thrift, energy and foresight. They were the parents of twelve children, eleven of whom grew up, namely: Ann, John, Rebecca, William, Jane, James, Elizabeth, Margaret, Lovisa, Charles and Walter. William served in the Mexican War, and died in the military hospital at Pueblo, Mex.

The subject of this sketch was the next to the youngest child in that large family of children. He was a bright, quick little lad, more than ordinarily gifted with independence of spirit, and at the extremely youthful age of seven years was ambitious to earn his own living, and started out into the world for that purpose. His parents found him and took him home again, and he lived with them until he was fourteen years old. He then made another start, and from that time forth took care of himself. He first went to Pennsylvania, and there began to learn the trade of a blacksmith with his brother-in-law, working at it for a year and a half. After that he was employed at various kinds of work for a year, and at the end of that time, having prudently saved all the money that he could, he bought a small stock of groceries with his little capital, taking a part of them on credit, and opened a store at Clarksville, Mercer Co., Pa. In March, 1857, he sold out his business there, and started for the Territory of Nebraska on the 3d day of March, going by wagon to Newcastle, Pa., from there by rail to Pittsburg, and thence down the Ohio, and up the Mississippi and Missouri rivers to St. Joseph, Mo. When he arrived there he found himself somewhat short of funds, and so took his grip in his hand and started on foot for Nebraska. He arrived at his destination, Rock Bluff, Cass County, with $2.60 in his pocket. He did not allow the low state of his finances to discourage him, however, but sought the means of replenishing his funds. There was a small village at Rock Bluff, with about 150 inhabitants, and with bright prospects of rapid growth. The surrounding country was sparsely settled, and nearly all the land was owned by the Government. Mr. Holmes soon found employment quarrying rock at $2 a day. He worked at that twelve days, and then turned his attention to the lumber business. He bought standing cottonwood trees, cut and drew them to the mill, and then used them in the construction of two houses at Rock Bluff. In April, 1859, our subject and two companions started for Pike's Peak, with two pair of oxen, one pair of cows, and six months' provisions. They arrived at Denver early in June, and after spending two days there passed on to Gregory's diggings in the mountains. They engaged in prospecting, and while doing so Mr. Holmes used, or generously gave way to needy companions, all of his outfit. After remaining in the Rockies two months he retraced his steps to Denver, and there engaged to work in a shingle mill for fifty cents a day. Five days later, with characteristic boldness, he conceived the idea of buying the machine, and did so on credit for $200. He ran the machine for four weeks, and with such success that he was able to pay for it, and he then traded it for five yoke of oxen and a wagon. With them he went to teaming lumber from a point on Cherry Creek to Denver, twenty miles distant, receiving $20 a thousand for drawing the lumber. He teamed three weeks only, and then bought fifty yoke of cattle and ten wagons from D. C. Oakes, for which he was to pay in lumber. In less than four months he had cancelled the whole amount of his indebtedness. He continued teaming for a year, at the expiration of which time he returned to Rock Bluff and invested some of his money in a gristmill, buying a third interest therein. He operated that six months, then sold it, and soon bought a farm in Rock Bluff Precinct. While actively engaged in farming there he dealt in cattle and horses, making his residence in Rock Bluff village and precinct until 1872. His next venture was to come to Plattsburgh and engage in shipping cattle and hogs for some years. In 1877 he opened a livery stable, and since that time has been conducting that business. He has a fine outfit of good driving horses, and neat and stylish vehicles of various descriptions, and he is well patronized.

Mr. Holmes was married, in 1860, to Marietta Kauble, and of their pleasant wedded life five children have been born, namely: William H., who died at the age of twenty months; Walter, Pearl, Ivan and Bertie. Mrs. Holmes was born in Shelbyville, Shelby Co., Ind., March 15, 1843. Her father, David Kauble, was a native of Indiana, and his father, Jacob Kauble, was a pioneer of that State, and later of Page County, Iowa, where he passed his last years, dying at the remarkably old age of one hundred and three years. Mrs. Holmes' father was reared and married in Indiana, and from there moved to Missouri about 1843, and became a pioneer of Andrew County. He bought a tract of wild land on which he built a log house, and continued to reside there until his death. The maiden name of his wife was Mary Cratzier. She was a native of Indiana, and a daughter of John Cratzier. She spent her last days in Andrew County, dying three years after her husband's death. Mrs. Holmes was thus left an orphan at an early age. Mrs. Holmes has for twenty-four years been a member of the Presbyterian Church. Politically, Mr. Holmes is a staunch Republican.

h C. HINNERS. The general merchandising interests of Avoca acknowledge the subject of this sketch as a leader of the trade, being senior member of the firm of Hinners & Lindemann. They carry a general stock of the articles required both in the village and country household, and from a business established by Mr. H. in the spring of 1883, have built up a good patronage. Mr. Lindemann was admitted as a partner in August, 1884. Mr. Hinners is a man interested in every way in the prosperity of Avoca, being the owner of good property in the village and otherwise intimately associated with its concerns. He is recognized as a reliable business man and a valuable citizen.

Our subject was born across the water in what was then the Kingdom of Hanover, Germany, near the city of Bremerhaven, Sept. 24, 1860. He is the offspring of an excellent family, his father being Nicholas Hinners, also a native of Hanover, and of pure German ancestry. Nicholas Hinners upon attaining manhood, carried on farming, to which he had been accustomed since his earliest youth, and was married to Miss Anna Eden. Both had been thoroughly educated in the manner common to the children of the Fatherland. They lived there and became the parents of seven children, and there also closed their eyes upon earthly scenes, each passing away when a little over fifty years of age. They were members in good standing of the German Lutheran Church, and people of more than ordinary intelligence.

Our subject at an early age gave indications of more than ordinary activity and enterprise and soon began to lay his plans for the future. As soon as old enough to reflect he nourished a desire of coming to America, and when a lad of twelve there was presented the opportunity. He embarked with John Harms on a vessel at Bremerhaven, and fourteen days later set foot upon the soil of the United States, in the city of New York. Our subject completed his education in the Badger State, attending the High School at Plattville, and later the Normal School at the same place.

The business career of our subject began as clerk in a store at Plattville, which he entered when a youth of fifteen years. He was thus engaged until coming to Nebraska, and in the meantime was married, April 4, 1883, to Miss Mary Loofborow. She received a good education and taught school some time before her marriage. Of her union with our subject there are two children living—Charles C. and Harry E., at home with their parents.

Our subject, politically, is an uncompromising Democrat. He has occupied some of the local offices, having been a member of the Village Board, and is generally interested in the matters pertaining to the well-being and progress of the people around him. Socially, he belongs to Lodge No. 29, I. O. O. F., of Avoca; a man prompt to meet his obligations, and one whose opinions are generally held in respect, he worthily fills his niche in a very intelligent community.

hON. THEO. NEWTON BOBBITT. The subject of this biography, a resident of Tipton Precinct, deserves more than a passing mention, as he has been for a period of twenty years closely identified with the growth and prosperity of Cass County.

He first arrived upon the soil of Nebraska in the fall of 1869 in company with his family, they having made the journey overland with teams from Mahaska County, Iowa. They crossed the Missouri at Plattsmouth on a steam ferry, and our subject, making his way to Tipton Precinct, homesteaded eighty acres of land, of which he still retains possession. Later he journeyed into Seward County, where he remained over winter, in the meantime suffering two months from a disabled foot, but in the spring of 1870 moved with his young wife upon the present homestead. He had just completed a temporary shelter, hauling lumber for this purpose from Plattsmouth, and put up the structure with his own hands.

The present surroundings of Mr. Bobbitt are widely different from those of twenty years ago. He now has a well developed farm, with fruit and forest trees of his own planting and his fields neatly enclosed by hedge and wire fencing. In due time he added to his first purchase and has now a well-regulated farm of 160 acres with good buildings, a fair assortment of livestock, the requisite farm machinery and the general appurtenances of the modern country estate. Of late years Mr. Bobbitt has made a specialty of cattle and swine, and also keeps a number of good horses.

While the cultivation of the soil has absorbed much of his time and attention, Mr. Bobbitt has in nowise neglected the culture of his mental capacities, and is a gentleman of rare intelligence and good education, refined and gentlemanly, one with whom it is pleasant and profitable to converse. He has for his life companion a lady his equal in every respect, intelligent and amiable in disposition, and one who has made home for her family the pleasantest spot on earth. Mrs. Bobbitt has been in delicate health for a number of years, but is no less dear to her family and friends. The domestic life of this household presents a picture rarely met with amid the vicissitudes and sorrows of a changeful world.

A native of Morgan County, Ill., our subject was born near the town of Bethel, Feb. 23, 1843, and was reared amid the quiet pursuits of country life. He has an ancestry of which he may well be proud. His father, Everett H. Bobbitt, was born in Madison County, Mo., in 1816, and married Mary A. Newton, who was born in Hancock County, Ill. William Bobbitt, the paternal grandfather, was a native of South Carolina, born near Columbia, and traced his forefathers to Wales. He was farmer and miller combined, and spent his last years in Morgan County, Ill.

The paternal great-grandfather of our subject carried a musket in the Revolutionary War, and did good service at the battle of Guilford Courthouse, and in a number of other engagements. At the close of the struggle he settled in South Carolina and engaged in farming and milling. Later he moved to Kentucky, and from there to Morgan County, Ill., where he died at a ripe old age. Grandfather Henry Newton was a native of Ireland, whence he emigrated to America early in life, and settling on a farm in the vicinity of Bloomington, Ill., there spent his last days.

The father of our subject was reared to the age of fourteen years on a farm in Missouri, whence he removed to Morgan County, Ill., during its pioneer days. He assisted his father in the milling operations of the latter during his lifetime, then began farming on his own account and also occupied himself considerably as a teacher, mostly during the winter season. He remained a resident of Morgan County until the fall of 1848, then crossed the Mississippi into Mahaska County, Iowa, where he operated still as teacher and farmer combined. He is still living and a resident of the Hawkeye State, where he owns a good farm of 140 acres. The mother died at the homestead a year after their removal there, in the spring of 1849, when a young woman only twenty-six years old.

To E. H. and Mary A. Bobbitt there were born four children, of whom our subject was the eldest. The next younger, David F., is operating a farm in Washington County, Kan.; Lizzie J., (Mrs. Hillery), resides in Washington Territory; one child died unnamed in infancy; Theo. N. was a little lad six years of age when his parents removed to Iowa and he lived there on the farm until a young man of twenty years. He launched out as a teacher when a youth of nineteen, and later entered a printing office, but soon found that office work had an unfavorable effect upon his health and abandoned it. In the spring of 1864 he journeyed to Montana and occupied himself in mining in the vicinity of Virginia City and Helena. During his sojourn in the farther West he also engaged in freighting for a period of six months, after which he returned to the Hawkeye State.

In 1861, after the outbreak of the Civil War, Mr. Bobbitt proffered his services as a Union soldier at Fremont, Iowa, but being considered too young was rejected.

Upon his return from the mountains, in 1866, Mr. Bobbitt located in Iowa and commenced farming on rented land, at which he continued until his marriage. This interesting event in his life was celebrated in Wapello County, Iowa, Nov. 5, 1868, the maiden of his choice being Miss Amelia Phillips, daughter of John S. and Sarah (Moss) Phillips, of Iowa. Shortly afterward the young people started for the young State of Nebraska, making their way overland with teams to this county, crossing the Missouri River at Plattsmouth on a steam ferry. Not long after his settlement here Mr. Bobbitt was invited to participate in the various enterprises calculated to advance the interests of Tipton Precinct, socially and financially. He was discovered to be a man worthy of the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens, and after creditably filling various positions of trust, was elected to represent Cass County in the State Legislature, serving from Jan. 1, 1877, to 1879. This was the first session after the adoption of the present Constitution, which had been remodeled and more fully adapted to the growing needs of the people. During his term also occurred the election of the Hon. Alvin Saunders, in which Mr. Bobbitt bore a prominent part. He was also a member of three of the most important committees, namely: Federal Relations, County Seat and Boundaries, Mines and Minerals.

Although reared a Democrat, Mr. Bobbitt upon attaining years of discretion, felt that the principles of the Republican party more nearly coincided with his progressive ideas. With it he accordingly identified himself, and has been one of the most active workers in its ranks in Southern Nebraska. His services in that Legislature received much favorable comment by the leading journals of this part of the State. He has been a member of the Republican Central Committee; and has given of his time and means for the furtherance of the enterprises generally calculated to advance the interests of its people. Socially, he belongs to the K. of P., No. 104, at Eagle. He is a member of the Congregational Church at that place, and contributed generously toward the erection of the church edifice. He thoroughly believes in the religious education of the young, and has carried out his sentiments in this respect by officiating as Superintendent of the Sunday-School and studying to make this important subject a matter of interest to the rising generation.

The parents of Mrs. Bobbitt were of English and German descent, the father a native of Ohio, and the mother of Van Buren County, Iowa. The paternal grandfather, a native of Germany, possessed more than ordinary musical talent, being a musician of considerable note, while he also prosecuted farming pursuits. On the mother's side, Grandfather Moss traced his ancestors to England, was one of the earliest settlers of Van Buren County, Iowa, and became the owner of a large tract of land both in that and Wapello County. John S. Phillips, the father of Mrs. B., was a well educated man, and while conducting his farm occupied himself considerably as a teacher. He was one of the pioneers of Iowa, purchasing land from the Government and built up a good homestead in Wapello County, where he still holds property. His present home, however, is at Agency. He is sixty years old and his estimable wife is fifty-eight. They are the parents of twelve children, of whom Mrs. B. was the second born.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bobbitt there have been born six children, namely: Charles E., John F., who died in infancy, Lewis E., William M., George D., and an infant son who died unnamed. The eldest son, Charles, is attending the academy at Weeping Water; The other children are at home with their parents. They are being carefully reared and will be given the education suitable to their station in life as the offspring of one of the leading citizens of Southern Nebraska.

GEOERGE W. BARRETT. The ordinary observer must admit that the life of a farmer, though attended with much arduous labor, surely has its compensations. Most forcibly is this suggestion illustrated in viewing the homestead of the subject of this sketch, which is finely located on section 29, in Mt. Pleasant Precinct. The buildings are neat and substantial, and the land, embracing an area of 110 acres, is mostly under a high state of cultivation, yielding under favorable circumstances the richest of crops of Southern Nebraska. The proprietor, a gentleman in the prime of life, bears the reputation of an industrious and persevering citizen, who has been the architect of his own fortune, and indebted to no man for his present position in life. From a worthy ancestry he inherited those qualities which have enabled him to labor to good advantage with his hands while his mind is a storehouse of useful information, and experience has been his safe guide through life's devious ways.

Our subject, a product of the Empire State, was born in Jefferson County, Jan. 12, 1848, and is the son of Nial and Ruth (Coon) Barrett, who located in that county during the early years of their married life. Their household included five children, but three now living, namely: Laura A., Mrs. Henry Strouts, of Berrien County, Mich.; Charles a resident of Jo Daviess County, Ill., and George W., our subject. The family is of English-Irish descent, and farther than this Mr. Barrett knows comparatively little of his ancestors.

When a youth of fifteen years our subject removed with his parents from his native State to Berrien County, Mich., where they have since resided. They are both now quite aged, the father having been born in 1806, and the mother two years later, in 1808. Their lives have been distinguished by honest industry, and now in their declining years they are surrounded by hosts of friends, and are living in the enjoyment of all needful comforts. Young Barrett attained to manhood in the Wolverine State, and was educated in the district schools of Berrien County, being deprived, however, of many of the advantages enjoyed by the rising generation. In the fall of 1867 he began an apprenticeship at the trade of plasterer and stone-mason, which he followed much of the time since until within a few years. His preference, however, is for farming pursuits, and to these he has devoted himself mainly since coming to this country.

Mr. Barrett was first married in Michigan, Feb., 13, 1869, to Miss Inez Pearl, daughter of Lewis and Julia E. Pearl, of Berrien County, Mich. Of this union there was born one child, a daughter, Ethel, who is now in Berrien County, Mich., and eighteen years old. Mrs. Inez Barrett departed this life at her home, in Michigan, Jan. 8, 1870, less than a year after her marriage. Our subject contracted a second matrimonial alliance, Dec. 25, 1873, with Miss Olive C. Wolcott, in Jo Daviess County, Ill. This lady was born in Jo Daviess County, Ill., Aug. 27, 1853, and is the daughter of Henry O. and Eliza A. (Williams) Wolcott, who were natives of Ohio. Mr. Wolcott was a wagon maker and farmer by occupation, and died at their home in Illinois about 1857; the mother is still living and a resident of Jo Daviess County, Ill.

Mr. Barrett and his present wife are the parents of five children, namely: Lynn W., born Sept. 12, 1874; Laura M., Oct. 14, 1875; Loren A., May 5, 1877; Ralph L., Sept. 6, 1878, and Tina I., March 28, 1881. Mr. Barrett resided in Jo Daviess County, Ill., a period of six years, then came directly to this county, and settled upon the farm which he now occupies. Aside from casting his vote with the Republican party, he meddles very little with politics, having an abundance of business in the management of his farming interests. His excellent wife is a member in good standing of the Christian Church, and Mr. Barrett believing in life insurance, is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

HARRY G. RACE, editor and proprietor of the Cass County Eagle, is a gentleman of English birth and ancestry, having first opened his eyes to the light in Yorkshire, England, Dec. 28, 1845. He lived there until a youth of fourteen years, acquiring the rudiments of a practical education. Later he came to America and completed his studies in the High School of Eldora, Iowa. Subsequently he engaged with his father in farming until the spring of 1872. We next find him in the vicinity of Salt Lake City engaged in the search for silver and gold in the Bingham and Echo Canyons. Upon leaving the mines he engaged as a shipping agent for the firm of Reed & Benson, at Big Cottonwood Canyon. Finally, returning to Iowa, and sojourned there a brief season, and from the Hawkeye State made his way to this county, arriving at Weeping Water on the 9th of September, 1879. The present flourishing city at that time could scarcely be dignified by the name of a hamlet, there being but a few clumsily-built houses upon the spot now occupied by handsome brick blocks and other structures adapted for residence and business purposes. Mr. Race at once engaged in mercantile business, purchasing first the interest of Mr. Kimball, in the firm of Fleming & Kimball, and later the firm became Fleming & Race, operating thus until Sept. 10, 1874. They continued successfully in business for a period of ten years. They were preceded in this line of trade by the firm of Reed Bros., only, the latter having been the pioneer merchants of Weeping Water.

Mr. Race was soon recognized as a valuable addition to the community, and it was not long before he was solicited to take a part in the official deliberations of the young town. He fully identified himself with its interests, investing his capital in real estate, and in due time Weeping Water was enlarged by Fleming & Race's addition, being the finest in the city, the lots sold quite readily, although Mr. Race still holds some of them. In the fall of 1888 he completed an elegant residence on Eldora Avenue, the avenue being named after Eldora, Iowa, the place of his former residence, and which he still holds in much affection. He also has a good residence on I Street, and is still considerably engaged in real-estate transactions.

Soon after disposing of his interest in the firm of Fleming & Race, our subject, who had always been interested in newspapers, purchased the Cass County Eagle, which he has conducted with rare ability, making of it an assured success. Under his management the Eagle was the first paper to put forward the name of John M. Thayer for Governor of Nebraska, and its influence bore no unimportant part in securing his election. Mr. Race has never sought office, but as a conscientious Republican is an ardent advocate of the principles which appeal most effectively to his good sense and judgment.

Our subject is the son of Joseph Race, who was born in Milnthorpe, England, Oct. 11, 1817, and lived there until about 1859. He was there married to Miss Mary Bell, and there were born to them upon their native soil seven children, who were named respectively: Joseph, William, Harry G., Anne A., Eliza, Mary Jane and Walter. They all came to America with their parents about 1859, the latter settling in Eldora, Iowa, at a time when it was little more than a hamlet. They lived in that town five years, then moved to a farm two miles east, where the mother died April 10, 1883. She was born in 1815, in Yorkshire, England, and was the daughter of Joseph and Mary Bell, who were also of English birth and ancestry, and who spent their entire lives upon their native soil. Mr. Race and his wife were reared in the doctrines of the Church of England, in which faith the mother died, and of which denomination Joseph Race is still a member. The latter lived on the farm until the fall of 1888, when retiring from active labor he came to Weeping Water, and now makes his home with his son Harry G. During the years of his active life, he was engaged quite extensively in agriculture and stock-raising, and became owner of a fine large farm of 250 acres, which he built up from the primitive soil and which he still owns. He has been a reader all his life and keeps himself well posted upon current events. A genial, pleasant and companionable old gentleman, he numbers hosts of friends among the people of Cass County, where he is regarded as one of its most honored citizens.

John Race, the paternal grandfather of our subject, spent his entire life in his native town, Milnthorpe, Yorkshire, on the old battle-ground of Wakefield, which was made memorable by the scenes of 1460. The house of Grandfather Race was constructed from ruins of the old castle, and under that historic roof-tree the father of the subject of this sketch was born.

The marriage of H. G. Race and Miss Carrie C. Selleck, of Hastings, Mich., took place at the home of the bride in Weeping Water, Jan. 5, 1875. Mrs. Race is the daughter of William S. and Jennie Selleck, the former one of the prominent business men of Plymouth, this State. About 1882 he came to Weeping Water, where he now lives. Mrs. Selleck died when her daughter Carrie was only two years old. She was in her girlhood Miss Outhwaite. Mrs. Race is a highly esteemed lady and a member in good standing of the M. E. Church.

—❦—

JAMES DYSART. Cass County owes its prominence and prosperity not alone to its vast natural resources, its genial climate and other advantages, but in part to its early pioneers, who devoted themselves earnestly to its development and improvement. And among those who are still identified with its agricultural interests, is the subject of this sketch. In the month of June, 1856, he, then a stalwart, active young man, in the pride and strength of early manhood, crossed the Missouri River and making his way to the part of Cass County now known as Liberty Precinct, pre-empted 160 acres of land on section 34, and became the very first settler in this neighborhood. The land that he thus obtained was in a wild, unbroken state, and his was the pioneer task to develop it by the aid of strong muscle and well-directed toil into a productive farm. That he has succeeded in this attempt is manifested even to the casual observer, who sees its neat farm buildings and various other improvements, and looks over its carefully tilled fields, each acre of which, by wise cultivation, is made to yield to the uttermost, and season after season affords rich harvests to reward his persistent labors.

Mr. Dysart is of Scottish birth and ancestry, having been born in Forfarshire, Scotland, Jan. 9, 1834. His father, James Dysart, a native of Cooper, Angushire, was the son of William Dysart, a Scotch cloth manufacturer of some prominence in his native shire. He lived and died in his native land, attaining an advanced age. His wife, also of Scottish birth and ancestry, died in her native shire before she had passed middle life. They belonged to one of the old Presbyterian families of the Lowlands of Scotland. James Dysart was reared in his native shire, and married a Scotch lady, Anna Sutt by name, also born and bred in the same shire. Their family of eight children, all sons, was born in Scotland, of whom only four lived to come to the United States. While he remained a resident of that country, Mr. Dysart followed the occupation of drover. In 1844, with his wife and children, he emigrated to the United States, and located in Carroll County, Ohio. Shortly afterward he began to farm there, and in his new home in that county his wife died, Feb. 1, 1847, when only forty years of age. This was a sad blow to her husband and children, to whom she was greatly devoted. Mr. Dysart afterward moved to Columbiana County, in the same State, and there he married for his second wife, Miss Ann Everett, who was born in Maryland, was reared in Ohio, and also died in Columbiana County, before her husband, her death occurring in the prime of life. James Dysart, Sr., was a third time married, and this wife also died there, but not till after her husband had passed away. He departed this life Aug. 24, 1870, thus rounding out seventy-six years, which had been usefully spent. He was a good man and a steady, hard-working farmer. He was a life-long Presbyterian, the faith of his forefathers for many generations, and left a name to be held in respect and reverence by his descendants.

Our subject spent five years of his early life in his father's home in Columbiana County, and then at the age of twenty-one set forth in the world to begin life in earnest, at first finding work as a farm laborer in Ohio. But he soon afterward made his way westward, and going to Jones County, Iowa, found work there at the same occupation. Eighteen months later, with the sum of money that he had prudently saved up for some time, he crossed the Missouri River into the then wild territory of Nebraska, having determined to build up a home here, as with the prescience and foresight of the genuine Scot, he shrewdly realized that this was one day destined to be a rich farming country. We have seen the results of his venture, and that his hard labors have placed him among the prosperous and solid men of Cass County.

Mr. Dysart is blessed with a good wife, who, by her thrift and good management of household affairs, has co-operated with him and encouraged him in his work. She is a devout Christian, and with two of her children, is a member of the Baptist Church. Her marriage with our subject was solemnized in Liberty Precinct, Sept. 13, 1860. Mrs. Dysart's maiden name was Nancy J. Hoback, and she was born in Nodaway County, Mo., Aug. 17, 1843. She came of German-Scotch-Irish ancestry, and was a daughter of Robert and Louisa (Clark) Hoback, natives of West Virginia. After the birth of one child, her parents moved to Missouri, and settling on a farm not far from Maryville, in Nodaway County, there lived until 1855, when the family all moved to Nebraska, and began to farm near Nebraska City in Otoe County. Some few years later they came to Cass County and Mr. Hoback pre-empted land on section 34, and there the family lived for some time. The mother died there in 1883, the 22d day of May, aged sixty-two years. She was an earnest Methodist in her religious faith. After the death of his wife, Mr. Hoback sold his property in this precinct and removed to Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and there lives with his daughter Mrs. Rebecca Alford, he being now sixty-eight years of age. He has been a devoted Methodist nearly all his life. Mrs. Dysart was one of a large family of eleven children, four sons and seven daughters. She was yet a child when her parents came to Nebraska, and she lived with them until her marriage. Eleven children have been born to her and her husband, of whom three are deceased; an infant, John T. and LeRoy. Those living are Anna E., wife of Jacob Gruber, a farmer in this precinct; Mary E., wife of Rudolph Kreiger, a farmer in Nelson County, Dak.; Louisa, wife of A. M. Bay, a farmer of Washington County, Neb.; Ida J., James A., Thomas B., Jesse R. and Charles H. are at home with their parents.

Mr. Dysart early displayed characteristics of foresight and great prudence, combined with energy and a capacity, not to say genuine liking for labor, and his life in Nebraska has thus been made successful from a financial as well as other standpoints, and he and his wife have one of the neatest cottages in the precinct and are living in comfortable circumstances. In his politics Mr. Dysart takes his stand with the Republicans, and earnestly supports all measures of his party.

JOHN RICHARDSON. The subject of this biography, late a resident of the city of Plattsmouth, nearly crossed a continent for permanent settlement, as he first opened his eyes to the light on the rugged Atlantic Coast in the little town of Mt. Desert, Me., on the 10th of May, 1818. His father, Benjamin Richardson, a sturdy New Englander, and the scion of a hardy race, spent, it is supposed, the greater part of his life at that place, being a resident of Mt. Desert at the time of his decease, which took place when his son John was but a lad.

Young Richardson was a resident of his native town until a youth of fifteen years, when he migrated to Massachusetts and learned the trade of tailor. Upon reaching manhood he was married and located at Jamaica Plains, a suburb of Boston, where he opened a merchant tailor shop and carried on business until 1856. Now desirous of seeing something of the great West, he left New England and emigrated to Henry County, Ill., settling in the town of Geneseo, where he sojourned two years. In the meantime he became possessor of 160 acres of land adjacent, and also a home in the town.

In 1858 Mr. Richardson, disposing of his possessions in the Prairie State, started with his family for the Territory of Nebraska. His outfit would at this day be a subject probably of considerable amusement, as it consisted of four yoke of oxen, two horses, two wagons and a family carriage. In the latter were stowed away the fair ones of the household, while the wagons carried their personal effects. The entire journey was thus made overland, and after three weeks' travel they landed safely in this county. Plattsmouth was then a small village, containing two stores and a few log houses and frame shanties. The surrounding country was very thinly settled and a few miles west deer and other wild animals were plentiful.

Mr. Richardson took up a tract of Government land eight miles west of the "corporation," entering it at the nearest land office, Omaha. He commenced in earnest the improvement of his property, breaking a few acres, and putting up a shelter for his family. A year later, however, he sold out and purchased land in the vicinity of the present township, Eight Mile Grove Precinct. Upon this there was a log cabin, and a few acres had been brought to a state of cultivation by a settler who had become discouraged and abandoned his enterprise.

The Richardson family resided a few months in this log cabin, then moved into a frame house, which they occupied until the year 1885. In the meantime many and great had been the changes passing like a panorama before their eyes, and during which period Mr. Richardson and his estimable wife had contributed their full share toward building up the county, in the development of one of its most desirable homesteads. They now felt that they were entitled to rest, and accordingly rented the farm and removed into the city, where the death of Mr. Richardson occurred April 25th, 1888.

The marriage of our subject with Miss Mercy Maria Ames occurred Nov. 23, 1846, at the home of the bride in Belfast, Me. Mrs. Richardson was also a native of the Pine Tree State, born in the town of Belfast, Jan. 30, 1830. Her father, Jacob Ames, was a native of Vinalhaven, that State, and her paternal grandfather, Jacob Ames, was of English birth and ancestry, and was one of the pioneers of that region. He engaged in farming all his life and spent his last years at Brockville, Me.

The father of Mrs. Richardson followed the sea during his early manhood and later engaged in ship-building in Belfast, of which he remained a resident the balance of his life. He was a man prominent in his community, one of the pillars of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he officiated as Class-leader many years, and contributed liberally to its support. His wife, Mrs. Eunice (Verrill) Ames, the mother of Mrs. Richardson, was also a native of Vinalhaven, and the daughter of Samuel and Eunice (Carr) Verrill. She also died in Belfast.

To Mr. and Mrs. Richardson there were born four children, namely: Maria A., died at age of thirteen months in Mass.; John H. is engaged at farming near Arraphoe, this State; Anna May is the wife of O. P. Austin, a journalist of Washington, D. C.; Florence married W. C. Showalter, who is now District Clerk, and a resident of this county. Mr. and Mrs. R. identified themselves with the Methodist Episcopal Church about 1869, and Mr. R. politically was a staunch adherent of the Republican party. Mrs. Richardson was left a comfortable property by her husband. She is a lady held in high regard by the people of her community, and is possessor of a ripe experience of pioneer life in all its phases.

JOHAN ALBERT. Cass County was first looked upon by the subject of this sketch in the spring of 1872, when he established himself in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, on a tract of rented land, which he operated a period of three years. Having now gathered together some means, and feeling justified in establishing the domestic fireside, he was united in marriage with Miss Maggie Hartmann, the wedding taking place at the home of the bride in this Precinct, Sept. 26, 1875. The newly wedded pair commenced the journey of life together on a tract of new land purchased by Mr. Albert, comprising eighty acres, on section 11.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert set up housekeeping in a style suitable to their circumstances and surroundings, and began battling with the elements of a new soil and the construction of a homestead. They labored with one mutual purpose in view, and in due time found themselves on a solid footing and in the possession of a cultivated farm. They lived there until the fall of 1886, then Mr. Albert, selling out, moved to his present premises on section 4. He is numbered among the leading land-owners of this part of the county, having the warrantee deed to 240 broad acres, upon which have been erected neat and suitable buildings. He is now enabled to rest upon his oars, and looking around him cannot do otherwise than contemplate with satisfaction the result of years of industry. Among his fellow-citizens he is a man held in high regard, is a staunch member of the Republican party, and interests himself in those enterprises calculated for the general good of the people around him. He believes in the establishment of schools and churches, and is the Treasurer of his school district, No. 31. Both he and his estimable wife belong the church of their forefathers, the German Lutheran.

Our subject, the son of John and Catherine (Vetter) Albert, was born in the Province of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, Feb. 28, 1851. His father is a farmer by occupation, and both parents continue to reside upon their native soil, being now well advanced in years. John was the second son of the family, and in common with his brothers and sisters was placed in school when a little lad, pursuing his studies quite steadily for a number of years. At the age of fourteen he began learning the trade of stone-mason, which he followed three years, and then decided to seek his fortunes in the United States. Bidding adieu to the friends and associations of his childhood, he took passage on a steamer at the port of Bremen, which after a voyage of ten days deposited him safely in the city of New York. Thence he made his way directly to Tazewell County, Ill., and soon secured employment on a farm, remaining in that vicinity three years and receiving for his services $225 per year and his board. In the spring of 1872 he decided to push further westward, and soon found himself on the other side of the Mississippi. His subsequent course we have already indicated. He is a man of more than ordinary intelligence, and although having little time to give to books since coming to America has picked up a good fund of general knowledge, which serves him admirably among the practical affairs of life.

Mrs. Maggie (Hartmann) Albert was born in Germany, June 20, 1856, and is the daughter of Henry and Anne E. (Misinger) Hartmann, the former of whom is deceased, and the latter still living in Germany. In February, 1872, when a young lady of sixteen years Miss Maggie, accompanied by her sister Catherine, emigrated to America, making the voyage on an ocean steamer, and landing after fifteen days in New York City. She also, like her husband, located in Tazewell County, Ill., where she lived until 1875, coming then to this county, where she was married to our subject. This union has resulted in the birth of six children: John H., born July 2, 1876; Anne, March 3, 1878; George, Aug. 17, 1881; Lizzie, March 8, 1883; Philip, Aug. 21, 1885, and Henry, Sept. 12, 1888.

The precinct of Eight Mile Grove has been particularly fortunate in being settled by a set of sturdy, industrious German citizens, among whom Mr. Albert is a leading spirit. He came to America a stranger in a strange land without means, and has worked his way upward by his own honesty and industry, and is deserving of the highest praise. It is such men as he who have been selected as the representatives of the intelligence and solidity of Cass County, whose names are worthy of being perpetuated in a work of this kind.

HON. JONATHAN N. WISE, Postmaster of Plattsmouth, is an early pioneer of Cass County, landing in this city the 21st day of May, 1856, and most of the time since that date he has been closely identified with both the business and public life of this part of Nebraska.

He was born in Washington County, Pa., Nov. 27, 1832, and his father, Andrew Wise, was born in the same State. The father of our subject was reared and married in his native State Hannah, daughter of Daniel Leatherman, and a native of Washington County, Pa. And a true and helpful companion she proved to be, and actively assisted him in building up a home. She died in Washington County, Pa., leaving many warm friends to mourn the loss of a good woman. Mr. Wise continued to reside in his native State for many years after marriage, engaging in farming until near middle age, and then turning his attention to the mercantile business in Cannonsburg, Washington County, conducting it with great success for a number of years. In 1838 he sold out, and moved to Adams County, Ind., going with a team to Pittsburg, thence down the Ohio River to Cincinnati, from there on a canal to Piqua, and from there by team to his destination in Adams County. He bought a tract of heavily timbered land sixteen miles from Ft. Wayne, and first built a hewed log house on the place, which a few years later he replaced by a more commodious frame structure. There were no railways in that part of the county, and Ft. Wayne was the nearest market place. Mr. Wise cleared a farm of about 100 acres, and made his home thereon until a few years before his death. He then rented his farm and removed to Ft. Wayne to engage in boating on the Wabash Canal. He died there in 1846, leaving the precious legacy of a good name and an upright life.

Jonathan N. Wise was in his sixth year when the family moved to Indiana, and amid the pioneer environments of his new home he grew to a self-reliant and manly manhood. He received his education in the primitive schools of that day, the first one that he went to being taught in a log house, heated by a fire in an open fireplace, and the benches made of slabs with wooden pins for legs and a plain board desk. After his father's removal to Ft. Wayne he completed his education in the schools of that city.

Our subject was, however, imbued with the desire to try life in another part of the country, and in October, 1855, he started for the Northwest, going via stage to White Pigeon, Mich., thence by rail to Galena, and from there by steamer to St. Paul, Minn. He made but a short stop there, and then returned to Adams County. In January, 1856, he again set out on his travels, and went to Princeton, Ill., where he stayed until May, and he then continued his westward journey, going by rail to Iowa City, Iowa, then the western terminus of the railway, and the only railway in Iowa. From there he proceeded by stage to Plattsmouth. Iowa was at that time but very sparsely settled, and the roads being bad they made but slow progress, finally arriving at the Missouri River, which they crossed on a flatboat, and on the 21st day of May, 1856, were in the embryonic city of Plattsmouth. There were but about fifty inhabitants here at that time and but one store, kept by Slaughter & Vallery.

Mr. Wise found employment at his trade the first year, and also assisted in erecting a number of houses. But he was soon drawn into public life, and in the fall of 1857 was elected County Clerk, being the second man to hold that position in Cass County. He served two years with great credit, and then retired to private life and turned his attention to the real estate and loan business, continuing thus engaged until 1863. He then spent the winter in St. Joseph as a clerk in a commission house. In the spring of 1864 he returned to Plattsmouth and entered the general store of Tootle & Hanna as bookkeeper, holding that position for one year. At the expiration of that time he went into business as an insurance and real estate agent, continuing thus for some years. In 1871 he gave up his business to accept a position as bookkeeper in the general store of Vallery & Ruffner, and was in their employ for three years. In January, 1874, he was offered the position of assistant County Treasurer and bookkeeper, and concluding to accept it he remained an incumbent of that office seven years, and for one year afterward worked on the County books. He then engaged as bookkeeper for Morrissey Bros., grain dealers, and was with them in that capacity for two and one-half years. In May, 1885, he was appointed to his present position as Postmaster of Plattsmouth. He is a very popular official, as he is courteous, pleasant and obliging under all circumstances, and in him the public finds one of its most capable servants, who is careful and painstaking in the discharge of his duties.

The rare stability and highly honorable character of our subject have gained him the confidence of his fellow-citizens to a marked degree, and they have often expressed it by calling him to responsible public positions. In the fall of 1862 they elected him to the Territorial Legislature. He has been a member of the City Council, and at one time held the office of Mayor by appointment. He has always affiliated with the Democratic party, and has many times been delegate to County and State Conventions. He is prominently identified with the following societies: Capital Lodge No. 3, A. F. & A. M.; Nebraska Chapter No. 3, R. A. M.; Mount Zion Commandery No. 5, K. T. He was Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Nebraska from 1865 to 1868; and also Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter of Nebraska for some years.

Mr. Wise was united in marriage with Miss Frances E. Wright, youngest daughter of the Rev. Alpha and Arabella Wright, of whom see sketch. They have one of the most comfortable and attractive homes in the city, and four children have been born of their happy wedded life, namely: Evelyn W., Willard B., Bertha C. and J. King. Mr. and Mrs. Wise are valued members of the Presbyterian Church, generously contributing to its support and heartily encouraging its good work.

WILLIS P. PERKINS, manager and grain buyer for the Nebraska City Elevator Company of Union, is a man of large experience and a fine capacity for business. He has been a resident of this point since the establishment of the elevator here in November, 1887, and he has been connected with the company for twelve years, and has never lost a day in their service, and for his intelligent management of their interests and his fidelity, the company trust him implicitly, and consider him one of their most valuable employes. The elevator, of which he has control, has a capacity of 8,000 bushels, and is kept well filled all of the time. Mr. Perkins is well and favorably known by the citizens of this community, and by the grain raisers throughout the county. He was one of the pioneers of 1856, settling then in Nebraska City, and has made his home there a great deal of the time since until coming here. He has been variously engaged as a farmer, freighter, grain dealer, etc., and has had a rich and varied experience of life on the frontier and on the plains, and is perfectly familiar with the history of those early days when the country was new, when Indians were numerous, white settlements few and scattering; and there being no railways, goods were carried on the water courses from point to point, or, where rivers were not available, a long and weary distance across the seemingly endless plains, that were then looked upon as for the most part, barren and fruitless. It has been the privilege of our subject to watch the great change that has been wrought by the energetic hand of man in turning this part of the so-called "Great American Desert" into a fruitful land, teeming with wealth and busy life, and he may be proud to think that he, too, assisted in its development.

He first began life here as a business man, and in the fall of 1859 had his first experience as a freighter, crossing the plains with the first load of apples ever shipped to Denver. To the little band of settlers on the banks of Cherry Creek, famishing for the good things that they had left behind them in their old homes, the sight of those apples was as welcome as if they had been plucked from the Gardens of the Hesperides, and they readily gave $2.50 to $3.00 a dozen for the luscious fruit. Mr. Perkins followed that trip up by many others, making forty trips in all, the longest one to Salt Lake City, and the last one was made in August, 1865. His journeyings to and fro were made when the Indians were on the rampage, but he fortunately eluded their clutches and met with but little loss from their hands, save a few oxen or cattle. During the five years that he was engaged as a freighter across the great plains he became as familiar with the various trails and routes as with the streets of his own town, and made an extensive acquaintance among the large number of people who were journeying in search of gold.

Mr. Perkins' next venture was to engage in the lumber and wood business on the Missouri River, and in that he met with a good degree of success. After that he spent some time in Lancaster County as a farmer, but he lost his crops, which were destroyed by grasshoppers, and his experiment in that direction was a decided failure. Notwithstanding his misfortune, he did not lose his ambition or his courage, but tried something else. He later turned his attention again to freighting, and made two trips to the Black Hills from Sioux City, Iowa. He made considerable money in that way, and thus righted his financial condition. On the occasion of his last trip to the hills, he met the renowned Gen. Custer, who advised him to leave the hills, as he did not consider it safe for civilians, on account of the Indians of that region, and our subject wisely took his counsel and returned to his old home in Nebraska City, and at that time became connected with the company that he now represents.

We will now give a brief resume of the early life of our subject. He was born in Xenia, Ohio, Sept. 16, 1839, to Thomas M. and Mary J. (Parkenson) Perkins. His parents are now dead, having died in Nebraska City, where they had settled in 1856, the father dying at the age of fifty, in the latter part of the fifties, and his wife one year later, at the age of forty-nine. They were old-time Methodists in religion, and the father was a Whig in politics. They were natives of Greene County, Ohio, and were there reared and married, and Mr. Perkins was quite extensively engaged in the mercantile business for many years. He visited California twice, and was there engaged in mining to some extent.

He of whom we write was the first son and child of the five children, two sons and three daughters, born to his parents. In his boyhood he went to Iowa with his parents, and was one of the clerks in the establishments which were managed by his father and others, his headquarters being at Eldora, Harding Co., and also at Oskaloosa, in Mahaska Co., Iowa. He finished his education in Mt. Pleasant, Henry Co., Iowa. After leaving his father's employ he engaged in business on his own account for some time in Plum Hollow, Fremont Co., Iowa, ere he came to Nebraska.

The marriage of our subject to Miss Gertrude W. Wood took place in Nebraska City. Mrs. Perkins was born in Roy, N. J., in 1843, and was the daughter of Daniel and Mary (Rich) Wood, natives of the Eastern States. They were married in New York City, where Mr. Wood was engaged extensively for some years in shipping flour. In 1856 he came with his family to Nebraska, and was engaged in the manufacture of lumber in Nebraska

City for some time. About 1866 he and his family went to Lancaster County, and there he farmed it the rest of his days, twelve miles from Lincoln, his death occurring in 1875, at the age of sixty-eight. In his time he had been an active business man of much acuteness and capacity. His wife survived him until December, 1888, when she too, passed beyond, at her home in Nebraska City, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. They were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mrs. Perkins was carefully trained by good parents in all that goes to make a true woman. She received her education in Nebraska City, having accompanied her parents to that place in her girlhood. To her and her husband have been born eleven children, one of whom, Emery, died at the age of three years. Those living are: Minnie E., Horace M. and Edith are at home; Ida, the wife of Harry Hugo, of Shenandoah, Iowa; Elizabeth, Thomas, Lulu, Ella, Bessie and Roy are all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins are people of high merit, and are held in consideration by their many friends. Mr. Perkins is a sound Democrat, and never hesitates to express his views on proper occasions.

THOMAS E. WILLIAMS is an old settler and a very prominent farmer of Stove Creek Precinct, where he owns and cultivates, on section 32, 240 acres of as fine farming land as is to be found in the whole State of Nebraska.

Our subject is the son of a Welsh sea-captain, William Williams, and his wife, Ann Reynolds, a native of Waterford, Ireland. His father was a sailor from boyhood, often sailing from English ports to America. He was sometimes engaged as a coaster, and was captain of an English vessel that coasted along the shores of Nova Scotia, and he also made trips to other countries. He was married in New York, and his wife used to go on voyages with him. In the year 1845 he was shipwrecked off the coast of Nova Scotia, and escaped drowning, but took a severe cold, from the effects of which he died four days later. The mother of our subject continued living in the suburbs of New York City until her death in 1851, at the age of thirty-eight years. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was a truly good woman in every respect. She was the mother of four children, of whom three are dead, two (who were twins) and William. The latter was apprenticed to learn the shipbuilder's trade. During the war he went on a whaler for a four years' cruise. The vessel was destroyed by the rebels, and he was never heard of afterward.

Thomas Williams was born in Morenci, Westchester Co., N. Y., Dec. 10, 1843. At the age of eight years he was left an orphan, and an English lady, Sarah McGrath, of Harlem, N. Y., took him to her home, and he lived with her until he was ten years of age, acting in the meantime as a news boy. He then became self-supporting, going into the city of New York, where he sold papers for a living, until he was twelve years old. After that he went to Danbury, Conn., to serve as an apprentice at the hatter's trade. He continued at that until the war broke out, and he left his apprenticeship at the call for troops. He enlisted, but could not get into a regiment on account of his youthful appearance. He was attached to the musical corps as drummer, and went on the expedition to Port Royal under Admiral Dupont. After that battle he and his comrades were sent ashore and mounted as Infantry to scout the island. Our subject's Company continued scouting through Florida, Georgia and Louisiana, and was not consolidated with any regular corps. In the fall of 1863 there was a call for recruits for the navy, and our subject was among the volunteers, and was attached to the vessel Pawnee for the ensuing year. He acted under orders, carrying messages to different places for some time. In 1864 his company was landed at Indianola, Tex., and consolidated with a regiment of mounted infantry, and was engaged in scouting in Texas to protect the borders. The regiment of which our subject was a member was kept busy in continual skirmishes with the enemy until the close of the war, and then was ordered back to New Orleans, where our subject was honorably discharged with his fellow-soldiers.

After leaving the army our subject returned to New York City, but did not stay long before his return to view Southern battlefields on which he had fought, revisiting Jacksonville, Fort Royal, etc. On his return to New York he was not satisfied with his prospects in that city, and decided to try the West. In February, 1866, he went to Fort Scott, where he hired out as a freighter on a train bound for Montana. When the train arrived in Denver he let it proceed to its destination without him, he staying in that city to form a partnership with William H. Hutton for the purpose of prospecting at the Sweet Water mines. That enterprise proved a failure, and our subject was glad enough to obtain employment in hauling baled hay on the Laramie stage ranche, continuing to work at that until Jan. 1869, when he once more revisited the scenes of his boyhood in the metropolis of the Empire State, going by the Union Pacific to Omaha, and thence on another railway to New York, going on an excursion. Dissatisfied with his situation there, the same spring finds him in Nebraska, he having traveled the last stage of his journey from Fort Leavenworth on foot, at times, and then on horseback, until he arrived in Plattsmouth, in 1869, in the month of March. He then went to work for Captain Palmer of Plattsmouth, and was engaged in buying grain, remaining with him until the 20th of April, when he went with Col. Peck to assist in surveying the route for the Burlington and Missouri River Railway, from Plattsmouth to Lincoln, and while with the colonel he took up his present homestead, then comprising eighty acres of unbroken prairie land. May 14, 1869, he went to Nebraska City, and after working there two or three months, came back to try and dispose of his land, but could not get rid of it, except at a sacrifice, so concluded to improve it. He set out a grove of four or five acres of forest trees, an orchard of 300 choice fruit trees, and made many other improvements. He drew lumber from Plattsmouth, and himself erected a house, one of the first built in the precinct. In common with other pioneers, he experienced many trials before prosperity smiled on him, suffering much from grasshopper raids, drouths, etc. But amid all these discouragements he was cheerful and hopeful, and kept steadily at work, and as a result no man in his neighborhood can boast of a more productive or desirable farm than he. He has done so well financially that he has been able to buy 160 acres of land adjoining his homestead, and now has 240 acres of land, well fenced, well cultivated, and in every way well improved, with ample buildings. On his land is a fine spring, a fountain spring, the head waters of the middle fork of the Nehama, bubbling above the ground. Mr. Williams pays special attention to raising stock, and has a fine little herd of Polled Angus cattle, and twelve head of well graded horses.

Our subject has been twice married. His first marriage, which took place in Leon, Iowa, Jan. 7, 1875, was with Miss Delilah E., daughter of Jacob and Jane E. (Beavers) Lentz. Her father was born in Hardy County, Va., July 14, 1829; and her mother was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, Sept. 3, 1833. Her father was of German descent. He moved to Ohio in 1840, and was married in Pickaway County in 1850, he having been a farmer and pioneer settler of that part of Ohio. In 1853 he moved to Leon, Decatur Co., Iowa, becoming one of the first settlers. He purchased 160 acres of government land, and has been farming there ever since, with such success that he now owns 700 acres of well improved land, with good buildings, and everything for carrying on agriculture to the best advantage, he superintending the whole thing himself. He is a Democrat, dyed in the wool, cannot fade. To him and his wife have been born eleven children, namely: Delilah E. and Lewis C., deceased; Oolita I., Caroline C., Mary N., Josephine E., James E., Ellen J., Adelia D., Ophia F., Clara C. Mrs. Williams was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, March 20, 1852, and died Jan. 31, 1880. She left three children, all of whom are at home: William J., Axia J., Delilah A. Mr. Williams' second marriage, which occurred Feb. 7, 1884, was to Miss Laura E. Cane, who was born in Dubuque, Iowa, Feb., 1858. August 9, 1887, our subject was a second time bereaved of a devoted wife.

Our subject is a veteran of the late Civil War, giving the best years of his youth and early manhood to the service of his imperilled country, and as the citizen then proved a good soldier, so has the soldier since proved a good citizen. He is a man of wide and varied experience, as from the time he was a little newsboy in the streets of a great city until he settled down on his present homestead, to the peaceful pursuit of agriculture, he has seen much of life, and with keen perceptive qualities and a quick mind has profited by what he has seen. Early becoming self-reliant, self-helpful, active and enterprising, to those characteristics his success is largely attributed. Socially, he is identified with the A. O. U. W. of Elmwood. Politically, he is a republican, earnestly believing that in his support of that party he is promoting the best interests of our country.

MARTIN W. WALTZ, farmer, is pleasantly located on the northeast quarter of section 13, Stove Creek Precinct, is a man of genuine worth, highly esteemed for his many sterling qualities, having the entire trust and confidence of his neighbors and a large circle of friends and acquaintances. He was born in Lebanon Township, Lebanon Co., Pa., Nov. 17, 1845. Martin Waltz, paternal grandfather of our subject, was of German descent, though American born, and followed the occupations of farmer and carpenter through life. David Waltz, father of our subject, was born in 1816, in Lebanon County, Pa., and married Miss Elizabeth Shreckengost, a native of the same place, born in 1818. After their marriage they settled on a small farm in the place of their nativity, and remained there until 1859, when they removed to Randolph County, Ind. There Mr. Waltz established himself in the carpenters' trade, at which he had formerly worked with his father, who is still there engaged in the same business. Both he and his wife are members of the Evangelical Church, and are leading consistent, Christian lives. To them have been born ten children, namely: Caroline, deceased, Mary deceased, Kate, Martin W., Leah, Samuel, Adam, deceased, Lizzie, Rebecca and Sallie.

Martin, of whom we write, was educated in the public schools of Pennsylvania, remaining in the town of his birth until 1859, when he moved with his parents to Indiana. From then until eighteen years of age he worked at anything that he found to do. But in 1863, when only eighteen years old, he enlisted in Company G. 124th Indiana Infantry, and was mustered into service at Winchester; his regiment forming a part of the division under Generals Harvey and Cox, his division being known as "Harvey's Babies." Our subject was with the Army of the Cumberland, and during the siege of Atlanta took part in the following battles: Dalton, Resaca, Allatoona Mountain, Kenesaw Mountain, Chattahoochee Run, Peach Tree Creek and Atlanta, Ga. He subsequently formed one of the number who went back with Thomas to assist him in his unsuccessful attempt to capture Hood, taking part in the battles of Columbia, Franklin and Nashville, Tenn. The command to which Mr. Waltz belonged was ordered to Newbern, N. C., to meet Sherman, and there take charge of the officer's baggage. Two weeks later they rejoined their regiment. But as a package of books had been left at Kingston, N. C., while moving the baggage, he and a comrade were sent back to get them. While returning they were met by six guerillas, who stopped them and ordered them to dismount. They then burned the books and took Mr. Waltz and his comrade toward Richmond on foot. Twenty-one days later they were paroled at Halifax, N. C., and at the close of the war were turned loose. They immediately started for Petersburg, thence for Columbus, Ohio, where they were mustered out of service and honorably discharged, having been in the army twenty-two months. Our subject then returned to Indiana and began working for himself, first renting land, then bought a small farm and continued farming and milling for some years. In 1878 Mr. Waltz determined to come to Nebraska and establish a permanent home for himself and family under its clear and sunny skies. He came by rail to South Bend, thence to Stove Creek Precinct, where he worked on a farm for one year. He then purchased an improved farm in Syracuse Precinct, Otoe County, and operated it three years. Disposing of that property, Mr. Waltz bought his present homestead of 160 acres, twenty-three of which had been broken, but no improvements made. He has labored unceasingly and now has it all under a high state of culture, with beautiful groves of trees, a fine bearing orchard, fields well fenced, a wind-mill and water tank, and all other necessary improvements. He has erected a neat and pleasant dwelling, 24x28 feet, and built a comfortable barn for his cattle. He has a large herd of cattle of the Polled-Angus breed, eight or ten horses of fine grade, and keeps a large number of Poland-China hogs.

On Aug. 3, 1871, our subject was united in marriage to Margaret Mendenhall, in Ridgeville, Randolph Co., Ind. She is a native of that place, born April 15, 1850, being a daughter of Pennel and Mariah (West) Mendenhall. (For further parental history see sketch of D. G. Mendenhall.)

In the household of our subject and his wife have been born five children, namely: Albert H., Lizzie B., Charlie W., Myrtle B. and Thomas H.

Mr. Waltz is an ambitious, energetic man, and an influential citizen, always aiding to the full extent of his power all beneficial schemes for the advancement of his town's interests, and is now a member of the School Board and has served as Road Supervisor. He is a member of the G. A. R., Kenesaw Post, No. 123, at Elmwood, also a leading member of the Farmers' Alliance, being President of that society. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has been delegate to County Conventions. Mrs. Waltz, a woman of lovely character, gentle and unassuming in her manner, shares equally with her husband the esteem of the neighbors, who appreciate her fine qualities of heart and intellect. She is a member of the Baptist Church.

WILBURN L. BARRETT is prominently identified with the stock and dairy interests of Cass County, owning as he does a valuable farm, finely located one and three-fourths miles from the city of Weeping Water, and comprising 200 acres, a quarter of section 25, and forty acres on section 36.

Our subject was born in Illinois in 1854 to Lockhart and Nancy J. (Carter) Barrett, natives of Jefferson County, N. Y. and Illinois respectively. His father grew to manhood in his native State, and when twenty-one years of age went to Michigan. After living there awhile he took up his residence in Illinois, becoming one of the early settlers of the State, and living to see it developed into an important and wealthy commonwealth. He was a farmer, and took an active part in developing the rich agricultural resources of the Prairie State. He married there, and to him and his wife were born eight children, five of whom grew to maturity. He was a man who was highly respected for his sterling worth, and his death in 1862 was a blow to the material interests of the community where he had spent so many of his years. His widow, a woman of great worth, survived him until June, 1876. Mr. Barrett was much interested in politics, and all his days was a strong advocate of the Democratic party.

Our subject resided in Jo Daviess County, Ill., until he came here, and on his father's farm gained a good, practical knowledge of agriculture. While there he was united in marriage to Miss Lizzie McGrath, Dec. 22, 1875, being the date of that auspicious occasion. To them have come six children, all of whom are living, namely: Elmer E., Leroy A., Haney F., Jesse D., Jay L., Bulah M. These children are being carefully trained, and will be given every advantage for obtaining an education. Mrs. Barrett was born in the same county as her husband, her birth occurring there in 1856, and she lived with her parents until her marriage.

Dr. D. D. and Elizabeth J. McGrath, the parents of Mrs. Barrett, were natives of Pennsylvania and Illinois respectively. Her father came to Illinois when a small child, and grew to manhood there. He served as a soldier during the late war, having enlisted Sept. 14, 1861. He held the office of Lieutenant, and was mustered out Oct. 29, 1864. He moved to Kansas, where he practiced medicine for several years. His health failing he went to Florida, and died at Pensacola in 1873. In October, 1875, the mother went to American Falls, Utah, for her health, and in June, 1876, died and was buried there.

Mr. Barrett came to Nebraska with his family in 1880, and bought his present farm. It was then only slightly improved, and he immediately set about the work that lay before him, to transform it into the valuable estate that it now is. He has put up all the buildings, and has a good and substantial set for all requisite purposes, and has the farm neatly fenced, and keeps it well stocked with all the cattle that it will keep. He has a grove, apple orchard, and also small fruits of all kinds. He has a windmill that he erected himself, also large hay scales, and all other needed conveniences for carrying on farming profitably. Everything about his place is neat and well kept, and it compares favorably with others in the neighborhood.

Mr. Barrett is a practical, skillful farmer, as is shown by the high state of cultivation to which he has brought his farm, and the success he has had in raising grain and stock. His neighbors speak highly of him as to his manly, upright conduct in every department of life. He devotes his whole time to his work, and cares not to hold office. He is a true Republican in his politics, and never fails to support his party by voice and vote.

FREDERIC GOOS, proprietor and manager of the City Hotel of Plattsmouth, is well known throughout Cass County in the capacity of "mine host," and he is quite popular, as he is always pleasant and obliging, and looks carefully after the comfort of his guests. His hotel is a handsome and substantial brick structure, three stories in height, 44x70 feet in dimensions, with a good basement under the whole; it is supplied with modern conveniences, is neatly and comfortably furnished, and is, in fact, a first-class hotel in all its appointments.

Mr. Goos was born in Sleswick-Holstein, Germany, Sept. 16, 1829. His father, George Goos, was a native of the same place, where he followed farming, and spent his entire life. His wife, whose maiden name was Celia Gosch, was also born in Sleswick-Holstein. They had three sons who came to America—Peter, George and Frederick. Peter keeps a hotel in Omaha, and George has a farm two miles south of Plattsmouth. Another son, named Franz, married and reared a family in the old country. After his death four of his sons came to America—Peter, Franz, Hans and Fred.

Our subject passed his youth and early manhood in the Fatherland. He gained a substantial education, attending school quite steadily until he was sixteen years of age, and he then commenced life for himself, finding employment in a gristmill, where he worked four years. Then, in accordance with the customs of his country, he had to enter the military service. He was a soldier for four years, and he then retired from the service, and resumed milling at his old home, continuing in that business a short time, and then engaged in farming until 1871. He then resolved to try life in the United States, the Mecca of so many of his countrymen, and see if he could not improve his financial condition by a change. After coming here he was profitably engaged at his old trade of milling the following eight years. He accumulated a goodly amount of property by his industry and prudence, and he then turned his attention to his present business. He bought the City Hotel, which was then a frame building, and was doing very well in his enterprise when, on the 2d day of January, 1882, it was destroyed by fire. Not at all disheartened by such a serious loss, he at once set about the erection of his present building, which he has managed with great financial success since its completion. It is well patronized by a good class of people, and its guests are made to feel at home in comfortable rooms, with their appetites appeased by good and well-cooked food.

Mr. Goos was married, in 1860, to Miss Mary Tams, a native of Sleswick-Holstein, and to her energetic and able assistance in his undertaking he is greatly indebted for his success. Six children have been born to them, namely: Celia, Mary, Katherina, Henry F. and Alvena, George, the third child, died at the age of twenty-two years.

HON. H. C. WOLPH. The subject of this sketch, one of the oldest settlers of this county, arrived here May 27, 1854, and from the first distinguished himself as a man of more than ordinary ability. He has been in every respect a most useful citizen, and one who from the start evinced a warm interest in the growth and development of the county which he had adopted as his future home. He now occupies an enviable position among his fellow citizens by whom he is held in the highest esteem as one who has been instrumental in the maintenance and establishment of schools, and the encourager of the various other enterprises calculated to advance the general welfare of the people.

Struggling up through his youth under many disadvantages, Mr. Wolph by his own persevering efforts secured an excellent education, while his natural love of reading and study resulted in the acquirement of a large fund of useful information. He is in fact considered one of the most learned men of Cass County. The bent of his thoughts may be guessed from the fact that as soon as its population and means justified the step, Mr. Wolph began to agitate the question of establishing a permanent institution of learning, the result of which is the well-known Doane College, located at Crete. Over this college he has exercised his fostering care from the beginning, finally renting his farm and moving to that vicinity in order to oversee its management and push the enterprise to a successful issue. He not only gave his time and influence but donated liberally of money, and takes a pardonable pride in its success.

The people of this county were not slow to recognize in Mr. Wolph those qualities which would be of service to them in public places. He was at an early day called to various positions of trust, serving as County Commissioner and in other offices, and in due time was elected to represent the county in the Territorial Legislature, serving in this capacity also after Nebraska had become a State. In the meantime he invested a large proportion of his capital in land, and is now the owner of a 400 acre farm finely situated on sections ten and fifteen in Tipton Precinct. Here he has effected all the improvements which are beheld with admiration by the passer-by, and which comprise a neat and commodious residence, large and substantial barns and other out-houses, with windmill, water tanks and all the machinery required for the successful prosecution of agriculture. He makes a specialty of live stock, feeding large numbers of cattle and swine, and keeping a number of fine horses. He has ten acres planted to forest and fruit trees and the whole premises comprises one of the most complete country estates in the county.

Mr. Wolph was born in Richland County, Ohio,

March 7, 1823, and is the son of John and Mary (Crum) Wolph who were both natives of Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather, Sebastian Wolph, was a substantial Pennsylvania farmer during the early days of the Keystone State. The family suffered severely during the progress of the Revolutionary War and became almost extinct, Sebastian being the only one left to perpetuate the name. He lived to be a very old man and spent his last years in Ohio. Grandfather Henry Crum was of German descent and spent his last years on a farm in Tuscarawas County, Ohio.

The father of our subject, when a youth of sixteen years, left his native State, removing with his parents in 1814, to Ohio. The latter was then a wilderness. The elder Wolph took up a tract of Government land for which he paid $1.25 per acre and felling the trees prepared the soil for cultivation. Prior to the removal to Ohio he had preferred his services as a soldier in the War of 1812, but the conflict terminated before he was mustered in. Afterward he occupied his farm in Ohio until the most of his children were grown and had moved to Nebraska. In the fall of 1859, coming to the Territory on a visit, he died at the home of our subject, in Wyoming Precinct, Otoe County, and his remains were laid to rest in the cemetery of Nebraska City. Both parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the father was prominent in its councils. He officiated as Class Leader and contributed liberally to its support. The old homestead in Ohio was familiarly known as "The M. E. Home." The mother about 1859 left the Buckeye State and thereafter made her home with her children in the West, dying in Nebraska City in 1875, at the advanced age of eighty-years.

The parental household of our subject included ten children namely: Eliza who died when about seventy years old; Esther a resident of Nebraska City; Catherine deceased; Henry Clay our subject; Christina and Sebastian both deceased; Sarah and Mary, residents of Iowa; Lucretia of Montana and Hulda of Washington Ty. Henry C., of our sketch, remained at the home farm with his father until twenty-seven years old, his education in the meantime being conducted in the district school about six weeks in the year. He was seventeen years old when he learned to write his name. During the administration of President Van Buren he worked at all kinds of labor for twenty-five cents per day. It took him two years to save $5, and with his capital in hand he entered Norwalk Seminary, Ohio, through which he worked his way laboriously, but successfully, improving every opportunity to gain useful information and in the meantime, in addition to his school studies, reading the books which would be of the most value to his mental training. Such good headway did he make that he developed into a very efficient teacher, which profession he followed during the winter season, a period of seven years, and in the meantime continued his uses of candle light and books. His summers were employed working for his father on the farm.

In the spring of 1850 Mr. Wolph was seized with the California fever, and in company with a number of his young associates started for the Pacific slope. They made their way by water to Independence, Mo., then purchased an outfit of thirteen wagons, and between thirty and forty yoke of oxen, and proceeded on their journey. They had several narrow escapes from the Indians and at the end of 100 days arrived in Sacramento City. Mr. Wolph spent a few days mining and then purchased the necessary implements and began prospecting in the vicinity of Hangtown. The year following he engaged in butchering and also built a dam to drain the North American River. The meat business, at which he operated with a partner extensively, finally proved a total failure and he lost everything. In addition he was taken ill and unable to do anything for several months. He finally recovered, however, enough to resume mining at which time he made some headway again, but in 1853, resolved to return home. There was more than one reason which drew him Eastward which as he was still a single man, may easily be guessed.

Mr. Wolph made his trip homeward by water from San Francisco to New York City and thence by rail to Ohio. That summer he provided himself with a wife and helpmate and in the fall started out once more Westward overland for Glenwood, Iowa. He spent the winter in that vicinity, but in the spring of 1854 crossed the Missouri into this county. Prior to this he had intended to settle in Oregon, but the outlook in Nebraska Territory appearing favorable, he finally resolved to locate in this county. He arrived within its limits on the 27th of May, and settled first upon the land now owned by Stephen Hobson, of Liberty Precinct. Here he took a claim of 320 acres, but in the summer of 1856 sold out and purchased 520 acres of land, a part of which lay in Otoe County. He put up a residence on the banks of the Weeping Water and gradually gathered about him the comforts and conveniences of modern life. His land was mostly prairie, although there was considerable timber in places.

Mr. Wolph in the meantime had interested himself in the welfare of the rapidly developing country in this section and was welcomed by its people as a man worthy of their confidence and esteem. After serving in various other positions of trust, he was, in 1856, elected to the Territorial Legislature, serving his term with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. In his farm operations he found that the feeding of live stock yielded the quickest returns, and accordingly to this gave his principal attention. He lived on his farm until 1872, then rented his land and moved to Crete, being in the meantime a Trustee and one of the builders of Doane College. He purchased a modest home and lived there until the spring of 1873. We must not omit to state that after his term in the Legislature, he served as Judge of the Probate Court. Upon leaving Crete in the spring of 1875 he took up his abode in Tipton Precinct, this county, where he had purchased eighty acres of land. In the meantime he had left his children in Crete, resolving that they should receive the advantages of a thorough education and not be subjected to the difficulties which he had experienced in his youth.

The marriage of Henry Clay Wolph and Miss Esther Bevier was celebrated at the home of the bride in Bucyrus, Crawford Co., Ohio, Aug. 14, 1853. This lady, the fourth child of her parents, was born in Broome County, N. Y., April 8, 1822, and received a good education occupying herself thereafter as a teacher for a period of eight years. She is the daughter of Elisha and Rachel (Johnson) Bevier, who are both natives of the Empire State. The Bevier family is of French descent while the Johnsons trace their ancestry to England. The maternal grandfather served as a soldier in the Revolutionary War and after it was over settled on a farm in New York State, where his death took place in 1868, at the age of seventy-three years. His wife is still living, making her home with her son William J. in Ohio, and has now arrived at the advanced age of ninety-three. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church and is able to tell many an interesting tale of pioneer life. The parental family included twelve children, seven of whom are living.

To Mr. and Mrs. Wolph there were born three children, the eldest of whom, a son, Bucephalus, operates the old homestead both in Otoe and Cass Counties. Bucephalia is the wife of Prof. A. B. Shaw of Doane College. They reside in Crete and have two children, Stewart B. and Esther W. Shasta is the wife of Rev. G. W. Mitchell of Arborville, York Co., Neb., and they have one child, a son, Glendennin W.

In the fall of 1882 Mr. Wolph was elected to the State Legislature on the Republican ticket, serving a term of two years and introducing various measures calculated to benefit the State at large. Whatever has been his position he has characterized himself as a man of industry and probity, and has labored conscientiously to encourage the enterprises calculated to do the greatest good to the largest number. He assisted in the organization of the Congregational Church at Eagle, being a charter member and for many years was actively engaged in Sunday School work, only withdrawing when the accumulation of years compelled him. Politically, he is a sound Republican and during the war assisted in the organization of the Union League in Otoe County, the object of which was to oppose the workings of the Golden Circle in Nebraska City. He is justly proud of his labors at this period of his life and especially of the occasion when less than twenty men, himself among the number, held at bay several hundred of the members of the Golden Circle. He was frequently chosen as delegate to represent his party in the State and County conventions and was ever a cheerful worker in behalf of the principles which he espoused at an early period in his life. In Otoe County he was likewise prominent in public affairs, serving as Commissioner and in the various minor offices. His career has been one eminently deserving of record, and one to which his children will revert with pride in years to come.

GEORGE P. HORN. This gentleman, one of the leading farmers of Eight Mile Grove Precinct, crossed the Mississippi from Tazewell County, Ill., in the spring of 1881, and coming to this county purchased 320 acres of land lying on sections 15 and 22 in this precinct, for which he was to pay at the rate of $10.50 per acre. He did not tarry long in Nebraska, however, at this time, considering that he had made a good investment which would naturally increase in value as time passed on. In the course of some seven years, re-visiting it, he began making arrangements for its improvement and cultivation, renting it thereafter to other parties a number of years.

Finally, noting the fact that Nebraska was becoming a State rapidly developing in rich resources and likely to be a desirable place of residence, Mr. Horn left his old home in Illinois and took up his abode here in the spring of 1885. He had the year prior to this erected a substantial residence with other necessary structures, and now took possession. His standing in the community to-day is that of a self-made man, whose thrift and industry have been richly rewarded. He set out in life a young man without means and no resources but his strong hands and courageous heart. Of substantial German ancestry, he was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Feb. 6, 1831, and is the son of Peter and Catherine (Kumph) Horn who were natives of the same Province as their son, and who spent their lives on their native soil. Their family consisted of nine children, six of whom are living and located mostly in Illinois and Nebraska.

Mr. Horn in common with the youth of Germany was placed in school when a lad probably of six years and received a practical education in his native tongue. His father was a farmer by occupation and George at an early date was trained to habits of industry, making himself useful around their modest home. Upon obtaining his majority, however, he became ambitious for something more than he believed he could attain in the Fatherland, and decided to emigrate to America. Bidding adieu to his early friends and the associations of his boyhood he repaired to Antwerp and secured passage on a sailing vessel which after encountering some storms, finally landed him safely in New York City, after an ocean voyage of forty-seven days. Proceeding directly westward he took up his abode in Tazewell County, Ill., where he was somewhat of a pioneer. Not long afterward he purchased a tract of land in Tazewell County and bent his energies to its improvement. In the meantime he made his home with a neighbor, but having formed the acquaintance of a very estimable young lady, finally persuaded her to share his home and fortunes. With Miss Eva Volk he was united in marriage Oct. 9, 1856. Mrs. Horn was a native of the same country as her husband and born Sept. 30, 1836. Her parents, John and Catherine (Meisenger) Volk had emigrated to the United States and settled in Tazewell County at an early day, where she was reared to womanhood.

Mr. and Mrs. Horn began their wedded life together on the new farm and their mutual labors in the course of years resulted in the establishment of one of the most comfortable homesteads in that region. This most estimable lady became the mother of nine children and departed this life at her home in Illinois, Nov. 11, 1875. She was greatly mourned by her family and friends and her death left a void in the home circle which can never be filled. Of the offspring of this union the record is as follows: the eldest daughter, Catherine, is the wife of George Nickel and lives at Plattsmouth, where also the eldest son, George, makes his home; Henry married Miss Emeline Hild and lives with our subject; Mary, Philip, Jacob, Isaac N. and Conrad continue at the homestead with their father.

Our subject, while a resident of Tazewell County, Ill., was quite prominent in local affairs, holding the various offices of his township and being closely identified with its agricultural and business interests. In his removal Tazewell County lost one of her best citizens and Cass County has been so much the gainer. Each year adds something to the value and beauty of the Horn homestead, which stretches over a goodly portion of the landscape and with its substantial buildings, its livestock, its groves of forest and orchard of fruit trees presents a picture goodly to the eye. Mr. Horn after becoming a naturalized citizen identified himself with the Democratic party, to which he has since given his support. His has been a large and ripe experience, in which he has made the most of his opportunities and he deserves a position in the front ranks among the solid men of Cass County. About 1870 he identified himself with the I. O. O. F.

HARRY D. REED. The Reed family have for many years been prominently identified with the mercantile interests of Weeping Water and vicinity. The subject of this sketch, a member of the firm of Reed Bros. & Co., is a young man of fine business capacities, and is contributing his full share in keeping up the reputation of the house. He is only a little over twenty-five years of age, having been born Aug. 31, 1863, within the precincts of the town where he now lives, and where he has spent his life thus far with the exception of the two years in school at St. Johnsbury, Vt. Mr. Reed upon leaving school commenced his mercantile career in the store of his brother, in Weeping Water, where he acquitted himself creditably two years, and was then admitted to the firm as a partner. He was married, Oct. 5, 1887, to Miss Antoinette Bierce, who came to this place as a teacher of vocal music about 1886, and followed this profession until her marriage.

Mrs. Reed was born June 26, 1862, in Tallmadge, Ohio, and is a daughter of the well-known Lucius V. Bierce, of Summit County, Ohio, now residing on a farm near Tallmadge. Mr. Bierce is one of the prominent citizens of that locality, a man of high standing in his community. He is a native of Ohio, and married Miss Hattie Kemp. Their family consisted of six children, all of whom are living, mostly in Summit County. Mr. and Mrs. Reed occupy a snug home in the southern part of town, and enjoy the friendship of a large circle of acquaintances. Our subject, politically, is a Republican, and from present appearances is destined to become a leading citizen.

William H. Reed, the father of our subject, and also at one time a member of the firm of Reed Bros., in company with his brother, E. L. Reed, whose biography appears elsewhere in this work, assisted in building the first mill on the Weeping Water, and put up several structures of the same kind on Blue River and other places. They were the pioneer merchants of Weeping Water Precinct, and prominent in its early growth and settlement. William H. after first settling here removed to Milford, where he enjoyed a period of seven years with his family, then returned, and has since made his home in Weeping Water. The mother, Mrs. Nancy (Watson) Reed, was born in Brighton, Iowa, and is still living. She is a lady highly respected, and a member in good standing of the First Congregational Church. The parental family includes three children, two sons and one daughter, of whom Henry D. is the eldest of the third marriage.

JOHAN CHALFANT, a prominent and skillful agriculturist of Cass County, occupies a leading position among the intelligent and respected citizens of Liberty Precinct, where he owns a fine, well tilled farm of ninety acres on Section 1, Township 10, range 13, on which he has lived since 1867.

He is a native of Pennsylvania, born in Greene County, Oct. 9, 1838. James M. Chalfant, father of our subject, was born in Monongahela County, Virginia, where he was reared and educated. When a young man he left the State of his nativity and established himself in business in Pennsylvania. He was twice married. The maiden name of his first wife, to whom he was united in Pennsylvania, was Barbara Galloghly. She died in that State, leaving her husband with two children. Mr. Chalfant again married, taking for a wife Miss Nancy Ketchum, a native of the Keystone State, who bore him four sons and four daughters, all of whom lived to be married, but one has since died. In 1857, taking advantage of the Pre-emption law, they came to Nebraska and took up a claim near the Missouri River, in what is now Rock Bluff Precinct, where Mr. Chalfant improved a farm and is still living. His wife, mother of our subject, died on the homestead in 1879, having lived a useful and honored life of more than three score years. She was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which Mr. Chalfant has been an officer for more than half a century.

John Chalfant, of whom we write, was the eldest of the children born of his father's second marriage. He was reared in his native State, and there received a good education in its public schools, and a sound moral training from his parents, who endeavored to instil into the minds of their children those principles which would make them true and honored citizens of this great Republic. He was eighteen years of age when he came with his parents to Nebraska, and for a few years thereafter remained under the parental roof assisting his father in the work of improving a farm. When desiring to establish himself in life, our subject purchased his present farm, consisting of ninety acres of wild land, and at once commenced the work of improvement. He has labored hard, oftentimes under difficulties, but all obstacles have been overcome, and he has now a homestead that compares favorably with any in the vicinity, and shows to the observing eye the ability and judicious skill with which he manages it. Besides farming our subject carries on an extensive business in stock-feeding and raising, finding that both a pleasant and profitable occupation.

Mr. Chalfant was united in marriage in Omaha, April 19, 1868, to Miss Lena M., daughter of the late Chief Justice Gantt, of Nebraska. She was born in New Bloomfield, Perry Co., Pa., June 1, 1848. Her parents, Daniel and Agnes (Fulton) Gantt, were both natives of Perry County, Pa., being of Pennsylvania Dutch-English origin and Scotch-Irish origin, respectively. Judge Gantt was a descendant of a prominent Pennsylvania family, and a man of superior intellect. After acquiring his education, he entered upon the practice of law in his native State. He subsequently removed to Nebraska in territorial days and located in Douglas County, where he identified himself with its interests, and took such an active part in all matters pertaining to its government that he was elected to represent his county in the territorial legislature in the winter of 1863-64, and while a member of that body he assisted in forming the State Constitution. In 1864 he was appointed by President Lincoln United States Attorney for the territory, an office which he filled for several years. In 1857, soon after his settlement in Douglas County near Omaha, he had the misfortune to lose his wife, who was then only thirty-six years of age. She was a most estimable woman, of a kind and amiable disposition, and was a devoted wife and faithful mother. In 1868 Judge Gantt removed to Nebraska City, and three years later was elected District Judge, a position requiring arduous toil, and, doubtless, the extensive traveling and work connected with his circuit was the primary cause of his failure in health. In 1875 he became a member of the Supreme Court, where he distinguished himself as a lawyer and jurist, and at the time of his death he was ably serving as the Chief Justice of the State. He was born in Perry County, Pa., June 29, 1814, and died in Nebraska City, May 30, 1878. The brief limits of a biographical sketch forbids our mentioning all of the high tributes paid to his revered memory by the press of Omaha, Lincoln and neighboring cities, but we insert the following preamble and resolutions adopted by the Lancaster County Bar, which were spread upon the journals of the district court, which was in session at the time of his death: "Chief Justice Daniel Gantt, a friend, a brother, has been suddenly smitten by the stroke of death, to our great affliction and bereavment.

"For nearly a quarter of a century he has been with us; all this time commanding the respect of the community, and the affection of a large circle of friends by a blameless, useful and honorable life.

"Having gone through a professional career of success, both as a lawyer and judge, at the zenith of his fame and in full possession of ripened intellectual power, he has passed away.

"In memory of him we make this record of our sense of his merit and of our loss; therefore,

"Resolved, That we deeply deplore the removal from his sphere of usefulness of our beloved brother, Daniel Gantt, by the hand of death, and regard the event as a calamity to his profession, to the interests, social and public, of the community in which he lives, to the State, and to the country.

"Resolved, That we entertain great satisfaction and pride in the memory of his attainments as a legal scholar and thorough lawyer, the laborious hours he gave voluntarily to the service of the State in the discharge of his duty as a legislator and judge.

"Resolved, That we recognize among the traits which ennobled his character, his rectitude of purpose, his severity of conscience, and, above all, his truth as a man, all tempered with courtesy and illumined by the light of Christianity.

"Resolved, That we sympathize most profoundly with the family of the deceased, in this, their great bereavment and affliction, and offer our condolence and earnest prayers and wishes, conscious still that their highest consolation in the greatness of their loss is the history of a life well spent, a reputation without a spot or blemish, and the celestial hopes which spring from the grave of an upright man."

Judge Gantt's name will ever be connected with the history of Nebraska, he having taken an active part in all its early law-making, and to him, as much as to any one individual, is the State indebted for its advancement and present prosperity. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and an earnest worker in that denomination.

His daughter, Mrs. Chalfant, was quite young when she came with her parents to Nebraska, and in 1857, after her mother's death, returned to Pennsylvania to take up the higher branches of education, where she remained six years. She subsequently became a student at Brownell Hall, Saratoga, Douglas Co., Neb., an Episcopalian College, and the first sectarian school established in this State. She is a woman of rare intelligence and much force of character, and previous to her marriage with our subject taught school very successfully for several terms. To her and her husband have been born six children, namely: Alice, Nellie, Daniel G., Harriet, Hugh, John, Jr. They are a bright, interesting family, and are receiving exceptional educational advantages. Our subject and his wife occupy a high social position in their community, where they command universal respect and esteem. Mrs. Chalfant is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Chalfant is a staunch Republican, working with that party for the highest interests of the country.

ANDREW E. HESS, a well-to-do farmer of Tipton Precinct, has been a resident of Nebraska since 1869. His experience of twenty years on this side of the Missouri has been one of many vicissitudes and changes, and during the first years of his residence here he endured more than ordinary hardships and difficulties. He proved himself, however, a man of stern stuff, and as long as he could put one foot before the other never for a moment admitted the possibility of any such word as "fail."

The present surroundings of Mr. Hess are sufficiently indicative of the manner in which his perseverance and industry have been rewarded. We find him the occupant of one of the finest farms along the southern line of the county, improved with neat and substantial buildings, the residence one of the best in the precinct, and the farm machinery and live-stock first-class in every particular. Mr. Hess has kept his eyes opened to the various improvements of the day, having the requisite machinery operated by hydraulic pressure which conveys water to whatever point needed, into the house as well as to the tanks for watering the cattle. A living spring furnishes this indispensable element and the land is amply watered by a branch of the Nemaha. The cattle yards are all supplied with tanks and Mr. Hess feeds and ships a carload of cattle each year. He also makes a specialty of Poland-China swine, in which industry he has been more than ordinarily successful, having never lost any even at the cholera season. He has a few very fine Short horns, while his horses are of graded stock and will bear comparison with anything of the kind in this part of the country. Two of these are full-blooded, famous for their speed and endurance, and have made a good record on the tracks of the State and County fairs. His stables contain in all about thirteen valuable specimens of the equine race.

The subject of this sketch first opened his eyes to the light at the homestead of his parents in Oldtown Township, Clearfield Co., Pa., May 25, 1851. Twelve months later his parents, leaving the Keystone State, took up their residence in the vicinity of Freeport, Illinois, where they resided seven years or there about, then moved to a farm on the Pecatonica River, where they sojourned until Andrew E. was a youth of seventeen years. He had up to this time been the assistant of his father in the various enterprises of the latter, but now started out for himself. Crossing the Father of Waters in the spring of 1868 he came to this county, driving a team through with his father. They crossed the Missouri River at Plattsmouth and made their way to Tipton Precinct, Andrew remaining with his father until the latter went to Texas. In the spring of 1872 our subject settled on his present farm, which was then an uncultivated tract of prairie land, and began breaking sod with a team of oxen. In the meantime he was sheltered in a sod house and was otherwise subjected to the discomforts of pioneer life.

In the fall of 1873 occurred the death of his father, and our subject went to Kansas and brought back with him to this county his mother and her family. Then followed a season of misfortune, accompanied by the grasshopper plague, in which the farmers of Southern Nebraska suffered the loss of their crops, and Mr. Hess, in common with his neighbors, had nothing to sell, no money with which to buy, and could get scarcely any work. There was no hay, corn, flour or meat in this section of the country. Mr. Hess finally went over into Iowa in search of work and secured a job of husking corn, at which he worked all winter, and earned enough to keep the family.

The year of 1875 proved more prosperous, crops being good, and Mr. Hess was enabled to proceed with the improvement of his property. He put up a few of the necessary buildings and set out forest and fruit trees, continuing to live there until 1878. He then leased the farm. Later he purchased eighty acres adjoining. In 1883 he bought 120 acres additional and thus has now 280 acres of good land, which has been brought to a high state of cultivation. Twelve acres of this is devoted to an orchard of 450 trees; a fine grove forms an ample wind-brake and the fields are neatly enclosed with board fencing, separated by wire cross-fencing. Mr. Hess, in the spring of 1888 completed a very handsome modern residence, the largest in the precinct, covering an area of 28x36 feet. This dwelling forms a most attractive and inviting homestead. Water is conveyed to the house by means of 11,000 feet of pipe.

Our subject found his bride in Tipton Precinct, being married March 30, 1874, to Miss Ida, daughter of Darius and Abigail (Bromley) Whitney. Mrs. Hess was born near Dresden, Iowa Co., Iowa, April 25, 1861. Her parents were natives of Indiana, and the mother died in 1866 at the homestead in Iowa when a young woman only thirty-five years old. The father later sold out and removed to Rawlins County, Kansas, where he now lives. He owns a large tract of land, and although sixty years of age is looking after his important interests with much of his old time energy. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Hess spent his last years in Ohio. When in his prime he operated extensively as a lumberman and owned a sawmill in partnership with a Mr. Hobbs. He accumulated a good property, but through the rascality of Mr. Hobbs finally lost the whole of it. His son Darius also engaged in the lumber business in his early manhood. Upon removing to Iowa he purchased a tract of Government land and settled among the earliest pioneers of Iowa County. He effected good improvements, but in 1867 sold out and came to Otoe County, this State, settling in Nebraska City. He was not as well pleased with the country as the majority of the people who came here and only staid one week, coming then to Cass. In the spring of 1868 he came to Tipton Precinct, this county, and homesteaded eighty acres of land from which he built up a good farm, then selling out removed to Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Whitney were the parents of seven children, who were named respectively: Emma, who is now married and lives in Dundy County, Nebraska; Ella, Albert and Adele, all three deceased. Ida A. (Mrs. Hess), William living in Kansas, and Dell, living in this county.

To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born six children, namely; Alexander, John, Abbie, Early, Eva and Cleveland A. The eldest is eleven years old the youngest two years. They are all at home with their parents, receiving careful training and a practical education in the common school. Mr. Hess votes the straight Democratic ticket, and is usually a member of the School Board of his district. Mrs. Hess is a very estimable lady, conscientious and careful in the performance of her duties as a wife and mother, and believes in making home the most attractive spot on earth for the husband and the children. She furnishes a fine illustration of the influence which a woman may exert within the household circle—an influence in her case which has been good and only good.

Alex. Hess, the father of our subject, was like our subject, also a native of Cleveland County, Pa., and married Miss Nancy J. Kephart, who was born in the same locality. The paternal grandfather, Abraham Hess, a native of Germany, crossed the Atlantic at an early day and settled in Clearfield County, Pa., where he carried on farming and lumbering combined. He was the first man to put a raft on the Susquehanna River, and in connection with his lumber business operated a sawmill on his own land which stood convenient to the river. He was one of the pioneers of Clearfield County, a man of strong character, of splendid physique, robust and handsome, and came to be one of the richest men in the county. He died at the age of sixty years. Grandfather Kephart was of German descent, and was also rated among the well-to-do farmers of Clearfield County.

The father of our subject was reared to manhood on the banks of the Susquehanna River and assisted his father in lumbering and rafting. In due time he became owner of a half-section of land which he cleared and upon which he effected first-class improvements. In 1852, however, he disposed of his interests in the Keystone State and started overland for Illinois. He made settlement in Stephenson County and resumed lumbering, at the same time clearing up a farm.

The elder Hess, however, possessed of a consider able spirit of adventure, sold out once more, in 1868, and again set out on an overland journey westward, coming this time to this county and settling on a disputed claim in Tipton Precinct. He lived upon it for four years and in 1872 emigrated to Texas and commenced lumbering on the Red River. He stayed there less than a year, then proceeded to Joplin, Jasper Co., Mo., and finally to Cherokee County, Kan. There he was seized with malaria and died Feb. 3, 1873, when fifty-one years old. He was a Democrat, politically, a man of decided views and one who generally commanded respect. The mother is still living, and is a resident of Garfield County, Nebraska, and is sixty years of age. She is a good woman and an active member of the M. E. Church.

In 1858 the father of our subject crossed the plains to California with a cattle train. He operated in the mines near Sacramento about two years with indifferent results, and being dissatisfied returned to Kansas.

HENRY WOLFE, a well-known citizen of Cass County, is numbered among its successful farmers, and his homestead on section 2, Liberty Precinct, with its many valuable improvements, is, in many of its appointments, a first-class farm, and there is none more productive in the neighborhood. It comprises 140 acres of well cultivated land and four acres of timber land in another part of the precinct. Mr. Wolfe has lived in this county and precinct since 1867, and has lived on his farm since 1870, having purchased it, however, in 1868. It was then unbroken prairie land, and in the pioneer task of improving it he has also done his share towards developing this part of Cass County.

Mr. Wolfe came to Nebraska from Des Moines County, Iowa, having lived six miles west of Burlington, Iowa, thirty-two years and six months previous to his arrival here. When he was a boy of eleven years he had accompanied his father, Jacob Wolfe, from Morgan County, Ill., crossing the Mississippi River in a flatboat May 12, 1835, and thus going into Iowa in the days of its earliest settlement. His father pre-empted a farm at once near Burlington, when that place had but one store, kept by little Jerry Smith. Jacob Wolfe thus became an honored pioneer of Iowa, and from that time until his death, April 6, 1843, at the age of sixty-seven years, he took a keen interest in its advancement, and worked hard to promote it. He was born within five miles of York, Pa., the very year that the American colonists made the famous Declaration of Independence. When he was yet a child he accompanied his father, Henry Wolfe, to Greenbrier County, Va., and there lived for some time. Later the family all moved to Ross County, Ohio, and there Jacob Wolfe became of age, and there his father died at an advanced age. His mother died in Morgan County, Ill. Her maiden name was Louisa Miller. Jacob Wolfe was married in Ross County, Ohio, to Miss Mary Cleber. She was born of German parentage in Yorktown, Pa., and moved with her parents, John and Elizabeth (Schriver) Cleber, to Ross County, Ohio, when she was young. Her parents both died in Ohio, having previously moved to Fayette County. After their marriage Jacob Wolfe and wife settled on a farm in Ross County and had three children born to them there. In the fall of 1828 they took up their abode in Morgan County, Ill., and after the birth of three more children moved from there to Des Moines County, Iowa, where they spent the remainder of their lives, the mother dying in August, 1863, aged sixty-three, she having been born Jan. 1, 1800. Mr. Wolfe was a man of marked force of character, and he was strong in his religious beliefs, being a Methodist, and in his political views held equally strong opinions, being a staunch Whig.

His son, of whom we write, was born in Ross County, Ohio, Oct. 29, 1824, and was but a boy when his parents moved to Iowa, where he was reared to manhood. He was married in Des Moines County, that State, to Elizabeth Bridges. She was born April 30, 1831, in Indiana, and is the daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Cure) Bridges. Her parents emigrated to Oregon Territory in 1852, and were among its earliest pioneers. The father died there in 1867, rounding out an unusually long life of nearly a hundred years. The mother died there in 1866 at the advanced age of eighty. Mrs Wolfe was reared in Indiana, and subsequently moved to Missouri with her parents, and later went with them to Des Moines County, Iowa, where she was married to our subject. Of this marriage twelve children have been born, four of whom are deceased. The following is the record of those living: Milton, married to Lucy Chalfant, and living in Liberty; Thomas, a farmer in Bradshaw, York Co., Neb., is married to Mary Baum; Madison is at present at Fort Morgan, Col.; Laura is the wife of Simon Gruber, a farmer in Liberty; Henry, a farmer in Liberty, married Sarah Rakes; William W., a blacksmith in Union, is married to Lavinia Frans; Jennie and Charles W. live at home with their parents.

Mr. Wolfe, during his residence of many years in Cass County, has proved an invaluable citizen, and his counsel and assistance have been solicited in the direction of county affairs, and as County Commissioner, County Assessor and Justice of the Peace, he has done good service and won warm encomiums from his fellow-citizens. He and his wife are among the most prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in our subject the Republican party finds an earnest supporter.

GEORGE H. WOODS, one of the substantial citizens of Weeping Water Precinct, was born near Sterling, Whiteside Co., Ill., Jan. 13, 1844, where he lived, helping his father on the farm until he attained the age of twenty years. He attended the public schools of his neighborhood. At the age of twenty-four he enlisted in Company A, 140th Illinois Infantry, was mustered into service at Camp Butler, near Springfield, Ill., in June, 1864. The regiment of which he was a member went South and joined the Army of the Cumberland, then under the command of Gen. A. J. Smith. He took part in the expedition sent against the rebel General, Price, at St. Louis; he served in the army until November, 1864, when he was honorably discharged. He returned to Whiteside County, Ill., where he worked for himself until the spring of 1866. He then went by rail to Des Moines, Iowa, thence across the country by stage to Nebraska City, where he remained about one year. When he came to this county he took up a homestead of 160 acres on section 32 of Weeping Water Precinct, and devoted himself to the improvement of his land and making a home. He set out groves, an orchard and vineyard, and made other necessary and valuable improvements.

Our subject did not prove up his claim to the homestead until 1874, and when the grasshoppers destroyed his crops for three years in succession thereafter, the prospect was very discouraging, but with the indomitable Yankee pluck with which he is endowed he continued farming, with very successful results. In 1876 he bought another quarter on section 7, Weeping Water Precinct. He retained the old farm, but moved to the new place, where he made large and valuable improvements, set out a grove of fifteen acres and a large orchard. The first two houses he built there he had to haul the lumber by teams from Nebraska City, which was no slight task, as there were no bridges over any of the streams he had to cross, he having to ford them. He hauled his first grain crop to Nebraska City with ox teams, and the breaking of land on the first two places was done with oxen. He continued to reside on section 7 until the spring of 1886. As he prospered in his business he extended his possessions by the purchase of other lands in the neighborhood, until he now owns over 500 acres on sections 7, 18 and 32, of Weeping Water Precinct. The most of this is rented.

In the fall of 1885 Mr. Woods bought his present place, which is on section 12 and contains 400 acres, in partnership with his brother-in-law, T. K. Clark. He moved onto it in the spring of 1886, and built the most elegant dwelling in Weeping Water Precinct, outside the town. The main part is 2830 feet, and the wing 16x16 feet. It is complete in all its appointments, both inside and out, for a comfortable home. The farm has all the other buildings necessary for the protection and comfort of the stock, and the care of the crops he raises. A windmill with a large tank supplies the premises with water.

While Mr. Woods takes great pride in everything pertaining to his home and farming in general, his chief delight is in fine horses, of which he has forty-eight on the farm. This stock he raises for the general market. He also gives considerable attention to cattle, raising from fifty to seventy-five head annually. A large herd of Short-horn and Durham cattle, and 100 head of thoroughbred Poland-China hogs, attract the attention and challenge the admiration of all visitors to the farm. The Cascade Creek, a branch of the Weeping Water, supplies an abundance of water for all purposes.

The father of our subject was James W., who was born in Greene County, Pa. His mother, who was Henrietta Thummel, was born near Bremen, in Germany. Grandfather Woods came from Ireland. The father, James W., was a carpenter by trade, and when twenty-five years of age he migrated from Pennsylvania to Whiteside County, Ill., and there followed his occupation. He bought a farm of 120 acres in this county, which he retained but a short time, when he disposed of it and removed to Otoe County, Neb., where he purchased another farm, which he sold, and moved to near Syracuse, where he had purchased other property, and where he died in 1870, at the age of sixty-four. The mother is still living in Berlin, Neb., sixty-six years of age. George H. is the eldest child in a family of eight: Alida, the next in order, resides in Indian Territory; the other children, Adela, Evaline, Augusta, Laura and Fred, are in Nebraska. Frank is dead.

Our subject was married in Weeping Water Precinct, Aug. 29, 1872, to Miss Edetha Clark. This lady was born near Pekin, Ill. The couple have six children born to them: Grace, Elmer, Elkin, Annette, Myrtle and Harlan, who are all at home with their parents. This gentleman is the most extensive land-owner in Weeping Water Precinct, and is an example of what pluck, perseverance and economy can accomplish. His present holdings are the result of his own efforts, as he has accumulated his entire property during the last fifteen years, overcoming many difficulties, not the least of which was the destruction of his crops by the grasshoppers, which left him, like many others, with nothing but their land. But by the good management of himself and wife they now find themselves comfortably situated, possessing the most elegant and conspicuous residence outside of Weeping Water City. The home is surrounded by a large, beautiful, well-kept lawn, watered in seasons of drought by water from the farm tank.

Mr. Wood is one of the most prominent men in Weeping Water Precinct; he is highly esteemed and trusted by all who know him. He is a member of LaFayette Post No. 61, G. A. R., at Weeping Water, was Supervisor for two years, and was a member of the School Board for six years. In politics he is unswervingly Republican, and he is also a consistent member of the Congregational Church.

EDWIN DAVIS, a gentleman who is numbered among the older residents of the city of Plattsmouth, possesses a family history of more than usual interest. His birthplace was Watervliet, Albany Co., N. Y., and the date thereof Jan. 23, 1812. His father, Stephen Davis, was born in Merrimack County, N. H., and the paternal grandfather, Jonathan Davis, a native of the same State, carried on agriculture successfully and operated a sawmill on his farm, which was driven by a fine water power. He spent his entire life in the Old Granite State and from his farming and milling operations acquired a competence. He married a Miss Geddes, of New Hampshire.

Stephen Davis, the father of our subject, was reared among the hills of New Hampshire, and when a young man left New England on foot, before the days of railroads, making his way to Albany County, N. Y., being assisted in the latter part of his journey by getting a stage-ride. He was already master of the trade of cabinet-maker, but there being little call for the exercise of his skill in this direction in the new country to which he had come, he employed himself as a carpenter a number of years. Finally he purchased a farm in the vicinity of Niskayuna, in Schenectady County, the cultivation of which he carried on continuously, and also worked at his trade, remaining a resident of that locality until about 1837. At this time, leaving his son in charge of the farm, he removed to Coshocton County, Ohio, where he lived retired from active labor until his death a few years later. He had married in Albany County, N. Y., Miss Catherine Shafer, who was born there and is the daughter of Peter Shafer. The latter was of German parentage and was born on the ocean during the passage of her parents to this country. The mother of our subject died in Albany County, N. Y., about 1820. The parental household included four children, namely: Hannah, John, Edwin and Maria, all of whom grew to mature years.

Edwin Davis was a lad eight years of age when he was deprived of the affectionate care of his mother by death. He was then sent to his paternal grandparents in New Hampshire, with whom he remained until approaching manhood. In the meantime he commenced when fifteen years old to learn the trade of brick and plaster mason at Great Falls. When past eighteen years old he set out for the Empire State and was occupied at his trade thereafter in Albany and Schenectady Counties until 1838, then joining his father in Ohio.

In making the journey from New York to the Buckeye State our subject was accompanied by his family and he purchased a tract of land ten miles from Coshocton. Sixty acres of this had been cleared and there was upon it two log cabins. The family took possession of one of these, occupying it until able to build a frame house, and in the course of time this latter structure was supplanted by a handsome brick residence which at that time was considered something very fine. Mr. Davis also put up good barns and all the other outbuildings necessary for the carrying on of agriculture in a successful and profitable manner.

Our subject, however, was desirous of going into the more western country, and accordingly in the spring of 1851, sold his Ohio farm, and accompanied by his wife and nine children started overland for Iowa. They traveled in true pioneer style, cooking and camping by the wayside wherever night overtook them. After twenty-eight days' travel they landed in Oskaloosa, then a place of about 1,000 souls. They sojourned there from July until April following, when Mr. Davis purchased land one mile from Knoxville, Iowa, and repeated the experiment of life in a new settlement. Upon this land also a few acres had been broken and there was a double log cabin. After a two years' residence on this farm he removed with his family to Knoxville. In the spring of 1856 Mr. Davis started overland for Pike's Peak, where he remained during the summer following, and in the fall returning to Knoxville, resumed his trade of mason and bricklayer and employed himself at this until after the outbreak of the Civil War.

In August, 1862, Mr. Davis proffered his services as a Union soldier, enlisting in the 15th Iowa Infantry, being mustered in as a private. He assisted in recruiting the regiment, taking forty-four recruits with him to enlist. Not long afterward he was promoted to Second Lieutenant, but on account of ill-health was obliged to resign his commission in 1863 and return home. Upon his recovery, after about three months, he raised part of a company which was designated as Company E, and assigned to the 37th Iowa Infantry. Mr. Davis again entered the ranks as a private, was again promoted to the rank of Second Lieutenant, and remained in the service until the close of the war.

After being mustered out and receiving an honorable discharge Lieut. Davis returned to his old haunts in Iowa, but in the fall following decided to change his residence to Nebraska, and removing to Plattsmouth with his family has since been a resident of that city. He had been married in June, 1832, to Miss Ann Maria Richardson, who was born in Albany, N. Y., July 18, 1816. Her father, David Richardson, was a native of Vermont, where he was reared and married, and emigrated to New York State, settling in Albany County. He followed the trade of carpenter a number of years, then removed to Coshocton, Ohio, about 1839, where his death took place, Feb. 20, 1866. The mother of Mrs. Davis was in her girlhood Miss Lucy Stowell, also a native of Vermont. She accompanied her husband in this removal to New York and Ohio, and died in the latter State Dec. 5, 1859. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Davis there were born twelve children, nine of whom lived to mature years. These were Joshua, Euseba C., Rebecca P.; Lucy C., now deceased; Lamira J., deceased; Rosetta; Jerome, deceased, Lora and Laura, twins; and three who died in infancy unnamed. Joshua, the eldest son, during the Civil War enlisted in Company G, 15th Iowa Infantry, and was killed on the battlefield before Atlanta. Jerome enlisted the year following in the same regiment as his brother, and both started from Chattanooga with Sherman's command. Jerome was mortally wounded in the battle of Kenesaw Mountain and died four days later. Rebecca married William Kennedy, who served as a Union soldier in the 1st Nebraska Infantry and died in the service. Euseba C. married George W. Colvin and is a resident of Arrapahoe, Neb. Rosetta married Joseph Keeney and lives in Central City, Neb. Laura is the wife of Rasmus Petersen, of Plattsmouth. Mr. Davis and wife have both been members for over fifty-five years of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically he is a Prohibitionist and is usually recognized as an upright man and good citizen.

HON. LAWSON SHELDON, whose name stands at the head of this sketch, is numbered among the largest land-holders of Cass County, owning 3,000 acres of land, lying mostly in this county, and divided up into ten farms. Mr. Sheldon had at the beginning little aside from the substantial elements of character inherited from his sturdy New England ancestry, and these have, in his case, proved amply sufficient for success.

Our subject first opened his eyes to the light on the mountain side in Ludlow Township, Windsor Co., Vt., Sept. 28, 1827. He received the education common to the youth of that day, and remained a member of the parental household until a young man of twenty-four years. He had, however, for some time nourished a desire to see something of the country beyond the Mississippi, and, accordingly, in September, 1851, set out in company with two of his acquaintances, Perry Walker and Isaac Pollard, for California. They made the journey from New York City by the water route, across the Isthmus of Panama. They staked a claim in the Placer mines, where they operated four winters, mining also around Mormon Island on the American River. They met with fair success, and after a sojourn of a little over four and a half years on the Pacific Slope, returned to New England in the same manner in which they had departed from it, landing at home in May, 1855.

Mr. Sheldon sojourned at the old homestead that winter, but the year following he and Mr. Pollard set out to repeat their migrations, but after crossing the Missouri at Omaha, made their way to this county, landing in what is now Liberty Precinct on the 7th of June. Mr. S. at once located a homestead claim in close proximity to the Weeping Water, and on section 20 in Liberty Precinct. This comprised 160 acres of land, of which he took possession in June, 1856. Soon thereafter, however, he changed his abode to section 19 as a more desirable spot, and here he proceeded to build up a home. To this spot he has persistently clung, enjoying here his roof tree, while in the meantime he has been gradually gathering together the possessions mentioned, and which lie mostly in this county, although he has a half section in Wyoming Precinct, Otoe County. Mr. Sheldon has made it a point from the beginning to live within his income and avoid mortgages.

Nebraska remained a Territory eleven years after the settlement of Mr. Sheldon within its precincts. A large acreage of the land around him was unoccupied, and most of the figures upon the landscape were Indians and wild animals. Possessed of the genuine pioneer spirit, however, Mr. Sheldon was not to be dismayed by this condition of affairs, but having abundant faith in the future of this region, determined to stay and "grow up with the country." It is hardly necessary to say that the improvement of the vast area of land owned by Mr. Sheldon has been effected only by the most incessant industry, and it has employed a large part of his time merely to superintend the operations carried on. Most of it is under cultivation, and stock-raising forms an important feature in connection therewith.

Our subject assisted in the building of one of the first sawmills in the county, and a mill for grinding corn, which was constructed on the banks of the Weeping Water, in the spring of 1857. To this there came for miles around the people, who hailed it as a real blessing. The first dwelling of Mr. Sheldon was a log house, and the first set of buildings was in keeping with the means and requirements of the pioneer farmer. In 1857 he erected his present residence—sawed the frame and most of the wood-work from lumber on the farm; the pine lumber he hauled from Nebraska City. The passage of years has effected a marvelous change, and the home farm, which is now transformed to one of the finest estates along the southern line of the county, is embellished with comfortable buildings, fruit and shade trees in abundance, convenient barns and outhouses, and everything which fulfills the modern idea of the well-regulated homestead. He has kept his eyes open to what is going on around him in the world, and is close and correct in his business transactions, one giving and requiring what is due, aiming to do unto his neighbor as he would be done by. He labored most earnestly for the passage of the Missouri Pacific Railroad through his region, foreseeing that it would be the making of it. He put up the first store building in Nehawka. His son Frank P. opened it with a stock of general merchandise, and it is the only store of the kind in the place today.

Joel Sheldon, the father of our subject, was also a native of the Green Mountain State, and was born in Andover, Feb. 2, 1801, and was reared to manhood among the New England hills; he died March 19, 1875. The paternal grandfather, Jacob Sheldon, was a native of Massachusetts, and, when reaching manhood, was married in Wilton, that State, to a Miss Lovejoy. They removed to Vermont afterward, and located on a farm which continued their home the remainder of their lives. The wife and mother died when in middle life, but Jacob Sheldon attained to the ripe old age of eighty-seven years.

Joel Sheldon was only a child at the time of his mother's death, and continued on the farm with his father until reaching manhood. He was then married to Miss Fidelia Pettigrew, a lady of Scotch and German ancestry. They settled in Ludlow, Windsor Co., Vt., where they lived until about 1869, becoming in the meantime the parents of six children. In the year mentioned, at the solicitations of their son Lawson, they joined him in Nebraska, and the father died March 19, 1875, when seventy-four years of age. He was a member of the Baptist Church, a man of decided ideas and one whose opinions were generally held in respect in the community where he spent the years of his active life. Originally a member of the old Whig party, he later identified himself with the Republicans, whose principles he supported to the end. The wife and mother is still living, making her home with our subject, and has now arrived to the advanced age of eighty-three years. She is still stout and hearty, retaining a large portion of her natural activity. She, like her husband, identified herself with the Baptist Church long years ago.

The subject of this sketch was the eldest of a family of five sons and one daughter born to his parents, and with his younger brother, Amsdel, forms one of the three survivors of the family. He was early in life taught to make himself useful, becoming at an early age acquainted with hard work, and grew up imbued with those principles of honesty and integrity which have made him a man among men. He was married March 19, 1857, after his first visit to the West, in Plymouth Township, Windsor Co., Vt., to Miss Julia Pollard, who was born there Nov. 20, 1827. Her parents, Isaac and Sally (Conant) Pollard, were natives of Vermont. The mother died about 1880. Mr. Pollard is still living, making his home in Ludlow, Vt., and has now attained the ripe age of eighty-nine years. The Pollards are of substantial English ancestry, the first representatives in this country crossing the Atlantic as early as 1692. They have been for generations widely and favorably known in Massachusetts and Vermont.

Mrs. Sheldon was carefully reared and educated, being a student at the Seminary at Townsend, Mass., and taught school for some time before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. S. made their bridal tour to their new home in the West, journeying from New England to St. Louis, Mo., by rail, and thence up the Missouri River to Nebraska City, bringing with them their worldly possessions. Mr. Pollard had given his daughter $100 in cash to set herself up in housekeeping. Their first dwelling was built of logs, and covered an area of twelve square feet. The only place within it in which our subject could stand up straight was in the middle. In the furnishing of this there was only required an outlay of $20, and thus Mrs. Sheldon was enabled to place her remaining $80 at interest at forty per cent. Money at that time was very scarce in this region. Mrs. Sheldon labored equally with her husband in the building up of their homestead, and he acknowledges that he owns a large measure of his success to her wise counsels and efficient household management. In due time they became the parents of six children, two of whom are now deceased, an infant unnamed, and Florence, who lived to womanhood, and became the wife of Louis Todd, of Mt. Pleasant Precinct. Mrs. Todd died at her home in Mt. Pleasant Precinct, April 9, 1888, leaving one child, a daughter, Florence. Another daughter, Gertrude S., is the wife of Bucephalus Wolph, and they live on a farm in Berlin Precinct, Otoe County. Frank P. is the successful manager of the institution familiarly known as the "Sheldon Store" of Nehawka. He makes his home with his parents. George L. is a student of the State University at Lincoln. Vilas P. is also at home.

After holding the various local offices Mr. Sheldon was chosen by the Republicans of his county to represent them in the Legislature, and twice thereafter was made a State Senator. He was reared, as it were, under the wing of the Republican party, and, like his honored father, is a staunch supporter of its principles.

J E. LEESLEY. The subject of this biography, a man of more than ordinary intelligence, distinguished himself at an early day as possessed of the qualities most needed in the settlement of a new section of country, and occupies a position in the front ranks among the pioneers of this county. He comes of substantial English stock and was born on the other side of the Atlantic, in Lincolnshire, where he first opened his eyes to the light Sept. 12, 1850. His father, Joseph Leesley, was a native of the same county, and the paternal grandfather was probably a native also of Lincolnshire.

Grandfather Leesley emigrated to America in 1851, and settled on a tract of land now included in the city of Chicago, Ill. He operated as a renter for a time and remained in that locality the "balance" of his life, spending his last years in Ravenswood. His remains were laid to rest in Rose Hill Cemetery. His son Joseph, the father of our subject, learned the trade of plasterer and stonemason in his native shire, and emigrated to America the same year as his father, but located at St. Catharine's, Canada. During his residence of two years in the Dominion he assisted in the construction of the first bridge across the Welland Canal and was also employed upon other important works. He then joined his father in Chicago, living there and at Ravenswood until 1859, when those places bore little resemblance to their present condition.

During the year above mentioned the father of our subject made his way to Nebraska Territory and located at Oreopolis, one and one-half miles above the now flourishing city of Plattsmouth, which forty-nine years ago gave little evidence of its present growth and prosperity. The two towns started up together, and Oreopolis at that time began to push ahead of its sister hamlet, having already quite a number of good buildings, a bank, stores and seminary. In a few years, however, all these passed away, and Oreopolis is a thing of the past.

Upon coming to this section Joseph Leesley purchased a lot and erected a house near the latter-named town, where he lived four years engaged at his trade, then changed his residence to the city, which gave evidence of undoubted progress and prosperity. Again purchasing a lot he erected another house, in which he lived until his death, which occurred in Nov., 1881, when he was sixty-three years old. He had lived to witness the wonderful development of Eastern Nebraska, and contributed as he was able to the encouragement of the enterprises tending to this end. He was a man of decided ideas and in all respects a worthy citizen.

The mother of our subject was in her girlhood Miss Caroline Allis and was also born in Lincolnshire, England. She accompanied her family to America and died at the home in Plattsmouth in 1881, three months prior to the decease of her husband. The parental household included eight children. The eldest son, Albert, is a resident of Greenwood, as is also the second son, William; J. E., our subject, was the third in order of birth; Sarah is the wife of John Devore, also of Greenwood; Lottie became the wife of J. P. McPherson and died in Nebraska City in 1887; Hattie, widow of C. W. King and lives in Hastings, Neb.; Robert in Kansas; Lizzie, wife of C. E. Harris of Nebraska City.

Our subject was the youngest child of the family born in England, and was an infant of a few months when his parents came to America. He was a lad of eight years when they emigrated to Nebraska Territory, and secured his education in the imperfect schools of Oreopolis and Plattsmouth, winding up with an attendance of several terms in the State University at Lincoln. When a youth of sixteen he began working with his father as a mason during the school vacations and upon reaching manhood turned his attention to the nursery, which had been established at the homestead adjoining the corporation. At this business he is still occupied, having twenty acres of land in a highly cultivated condition. His stock obtains a ready sale throughout this and other counties.

Mr. Leesley was married, May 30, 1882, at the home of the bride in Plattsmouth, to Miss Lulu Shannon, who came to Nebraska with her parents in 1866. Mrs. Leesley was born Aug., 19, 1859, in Paulding County, Ohio. Of her union with our subject there are two children, Earl and Irene. Mrs. L. is a very estimable lady and a member in good standing of the Methodist-Episcopal Church. Mr. Leesley, politically, gives his support to the Republican party.

ROBERT SHERWOOD, who is the leading shoe dealer in the city of Plattsmouth, with a large and well appointed store on the corner of Fifth and Main streets, is a man whose enterprise and marked aptitude for business have placed him among the most substantial and wealthy citizens of this community. His personal integrity is of a high order, and he is justly accorded the respect of his fellow-citizens.

His father, John Sherwood, was born in Kensington, London, as was also his grandfather, who was likewise named John. The latter held the position of Quay Captain, or Superintendent of the West India docks in London, and was a lifelong resident of that city. The father of our subject was reared and married in his native city, Sarah Adams, who is supposed to have been born in London also, becoming his wife. When he was a young man he entered the English army, and fought in the Spanish War. He served four years and a half, and then returned to London to engage in the shoe business, which he is still carrying on there. His wife, a most estimable lady, died in 1870. Seven children had been born of their marriage, namely: William, John, James and Charles are deceased; Robert, Samuel and Elizabeth.

The subject of whom we write was the only member of the family to come to the United States. He was reared and educated in his native city, and at the age of thirteen began learning the trade of shoemaker in his father's shop, becoming a thorough master of his trade. He continued to live in London until 1871, and then, ambitious to see something of the world and to better his fortunes, he crossed the Atlantic to take up his residence in this country. After landing he made his way to Plattsmouth, and commenced life here as a journeyman in a shoe store, and was thus engaged for four months, when he was promoted to the position of foreman in the shop. He looked after his employer's interests for four years very faithfully, and then by wise economy had saved up a sufficient sum of money to establish himself in business, and he bought a frame building on Main street, and commenced the manufacture of shoes, employing a number of hands. This enterprise met with marked success, and he carried on his business in the same building for some years, until it was burnt Feb. 17, 1883. During that time he had bought a lot, and with characteristic energy he immediately set about erecting his present building upon it. It is two stories in height, and is commodious and well built; it is located on the corner of Fifth and Main streets, fronting on the former street, its dimensions being 22x130 feet in depth. He keeps a large and fine stock of boots and shoes, and does custom work.

Mr. Sherwood was married Dec. 25, 1867, to Amelia Hitchcock. She was a native of London, and a daughter of Herbert and Mary (Lunt) Hitchcock. Eight children complete the family circle of our subject and his wife, namely: Robert, Thomas, Herbert, George, Amelia, John, Nellie and Victor.

Our subject was reared to believe in the doctrines of the Episcopal Church, and is an active member of the Plattsmouth church of that denomination. He is generous and charitable to a degree, quietly and unostentatiously contributing of his wealth to the support of any worthy object. He is also public-spirited, and all schemes that he believes will in any way benefit the city, meet his cordial approval and substantial support. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity, and is a prominent member of Lodge No. 6, at Plattsmouth. He and his family move in the highest social circles of this community, and they entertain their numerous friends in a delightful manner in their attractive home.

JOHN G. HAYS, a venerable and honorable citizen of Plattsmouth, was one of its earliest pioneers. When he located here in the days of '56 even a man of his discernment could scarcely have foreseen the busy and thriving city of to-day with upwards of 10,000 inhabitants, in the little hamlet that he then found here, consisting of perhaps a half-a-dozen board shanties and log buildings on the bluffs overlooking the Missouri River on the one hand, and the wild, lonely prairies, rolling away to the distant horizon on the other. The squatter's claim that he bought from the original owner, and entered at the land office when the Government threw the land on the market, is now included in the city and is very valuable property.

Mr. Hays was born in Dauphin County, Pa., July 15, 1806. Patrick Hays, his father, was, it is thought, a native of the same county, and it appears, from the best information at hand, that his father, David Hays, was born in Ireland and came from there with two brothers to make his home in this country. He settled in Pennsylvania, and was there married to Miss Martha Wilson. He subsequently moved from Dauphin County to Franklin County, in the same State, and bought a farm there, on which he spent the remainder of his life. The father of our subject was reared and married in his native county, and in 1807 moved with his family to Cumberland County, Pa. He bought a farm there and until his death carried on agriculture. The maiden name of his wife was Miss Elizabeth Galbraith. She was also a native of Dauphin County, and a daughter of John and Mary (McCulla) Galbraith. She spent her last years on the home farm in Cumberland County. She and her husband had nine children, all of whom grew up, and the following are their names: Mary M., David S., John G., James W., Robert, Martha, Elizabeth, Jane, William. Of this family our subject and his brother Robert are the only ones living.

The former was the third child in order of birth and the second son of his parents. He grew to a sturdy manhood in Cumberland County, whither his parents removed when he was about a year old. There were no free schools in his youth and he was educated in schools taught on the subscription plan, his attendance being limited to the winter sessions, as at other times of the year he had to assist in the farm work as soon as large enough. He remained an inmate of the parental household until he was nineteen years old, and was then apprenticed for three years to learn the trade of tanner at a place now known as Orrstown. After the expiration of his term of apprenticeship he did journeywork for six months, and then went to Ohio and established a tannery near Dayton, which he operated for two years. He next owned and managed a tannery in Springfield, buying hides of the butchers in that neighborhood, and then selling the leather at Cincinnati. That city was a distance of eighty miles from his home, and the leather was transported by teams. He carried on the business there until 1853, and then located in Greenfield, Highland Co., and conducted the same business there, having bought a tannery. In 1856 he sold his property in Ohio and came to the Territory of Nebraska, coming by stage across Indiana, Illinois and Iowa to Fort Des Moines, where he had an opportunity to finish the journey in a wagon with other parties that resided there and were bound for Plattsmouth. On his arrival he took in at a glance the insignificant little town by the Missouri, with its two log buildings, half-a-dozen or so plank shanties, and one store, kept by Messrs. Slaughter & Vallery, pioneer merchants of Cass County. On the land that he purchased of a squatter he erected a temporary shelter in the shape of a small plank house, in which he lived for a time. He soon platted a part of his land, as it was in a desirable residential quarter of the embryo city, and he disposed of it at good prices.

Mr. Hays has been twice married, the first time in Montgomery County, Ohio, to Amanda Weakley, a native of Pennsylvania and a daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Alexander) Weakley. This wife of his early manhood died while yet in the prime of life in Springfield, Ohio, in 1848, and her death was lamented by many who esteemed her for her worth. There were four children: Annie, widow of James Gibson, lives in Springfield, Ohio. He was born in Clarke County, Ohio, and had been married to Miss Ladiska Marshall. He had started the Fremont Tribune. He had a good military record as a gallant soldier in the 1st Ohio Infantry, in which he served three years and one month. Mrs. Gibson has one child living, Horace. Her eldest son, George, died at the age of twenty-one years. Thomas W. married Mary White, and lives in Pittsburgh, Pa.; Thomas has two children, James W. and Nettie. Mary J., the widow of William Mathison, lives in Dayton, Ohio; John Newton died at Fremont, Nebraska, leaving a widow and one daughter. Mrs. Mathison has one son, named Hays. Mr. Hays was married a second time in 1850, in Dayton, Ohio, to Miss Lydia Fields. She died at Greenfield, Ohio, in 1853, after a brief but happy married life.

It will be seen that Mr. Hays has been a resident of this State since early territorial days, and has been a witness of its wonderful progress. He has assisted in promoting the material prosperity of Plattsmouth, and also its moral elevation by the influence of a manly, honest, sober, Christian life. He has witnessed its growth from its infancy, when it did not number more than fifty or a hundred inhabitants at the most, to its present size and importance, with a population of upwards of ten thousand people. In his political views our subject, who was in early life a Whig, has been a Republican since the formation of that party, and is still a staunch supporter of its policy. Mr. Hays has for more than fifty years been a member of the Presbyterian Church and has served since 1835 as Elder, and has always been a worker in the Sunday School. He is a man of deep religious faith, and is calmly awaiting life's great end in the sincere belief of a happy future in a world without end.

— — — — —

ZACHARIAH W. SHRADER. Among the men who have most worthily filled their appointed niche in the world's great temple, the subject of this sketch deserves more than a passing mention. He settled on section 25, Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and since that time has given his attention mainly to the construction of a home-stead, and the development of his land, but at the same time has contributed, as opportunity offered, to the various enterprises arising from and closely connected with the well-being of the people around him. He is a man well spoken of by his neighbors, and one who has made for himself a worthy record.

The Old Dominion is accredited with the birth of our subject, which took place in Tazewell County, Dec. 26, 1848. Henry and Edith Shrader, his parents, were also born there, but traced their ancestry to Germany. It is believed that the first representatives of both families in this country crossed the Atlantic during the colonial days, and were among the first people to till the soil of Virginia. They prospered and multiplied, and were people notable as being of more than ordinary industry and honesty, good citizens in the highest sense of the term. As far as can be learned their record is eminently worthy of preservation.

To the parents of our subject there were born eleven children, only one of whom has been called from the household circle. The remaining ten are located as follows: George W. is now carrying on farming in Rock Bluff Precinct, this county; Gilly A. is the wife of William Yost, and they reside in Virginia, as do also Christina, the wife of James Holbrook, and Tirittia (Mrs. Jacob Absheer). Andrew J. migrated some years ago to the Indian Territory; Zachariah W., of our sketch, is next in order of birth; Joseph L., in this county; Marion F., Joshua V, and Naomi (Mrs. James Day), continue upon their native soil in Virginia; Melinda is deceased. The mother died at the old homestead in the spring of 1887, and the father in the fall of that same year.

Mr. Shrader remained a resident of his native State until a young man of twenty years, and in 1868 turned his steps westward toward the young State of Nebraska. In this venture he was accompanied by his brothers George and Andrew J., and for a number of years thereafter he farmed on rented land. In 1870 he returned on a visit to Virginia, remaining there about four months, and then resumed operations on this side of the Mississippi. He made his first purchase of land in 1882, where he settled soon afterward and began the construction of a homestead. His diligence and industry were amply rewarded, and in due time he added eighty acres to his first purchase, having now a fine estate of 240 acres, with good buildings, livestock and machinery. Although in the main he has been prosperous he has met with some losses, especially in 1874, when about $700 worth of property was destroyed by fire, including a valuable span of mares, and other things which could not be replaced.

The 2d of February, 1871, witnessed the marriage of our subject with Miss Rachel Murray, who was born April 10, 1853, in Jackson County, Mo., and is the daughter of Jonathan and Elizabeth Murray, the former deceased, and the latter now living in Smith County, Kan. The family left Missouri about 1854, taking up their residence in Mills County, Iowa. After a two years' sojourn in that region they came to this county and settled in Rock Bluff Precinct at a time when it was thinly settled, and Indians still roamed over this part of the country. The parental household numbered thirteen children, of whom the following survive, namely: Alvers, of Smith County, Kan.; Joshua, of this county; Mary (Mrs. Thomas Sullivan), of Rock Bluff Precinct; Adeline, the wife of Andrew Taylor, of Plattsmouth Precinct; William, also living there; Maggie (Mrs. Leonidas Quinn), of Smith County, Kan.; Leonard, a resident of Eight Mile Grove Precinct; Nancy, the wife of William Barnes, of Smith County, Kan., and Mrs. Shrader. The deceased are James P., Lovina, Mitchell and Sarah.

To our subject and his estimable wife there were born the following children: Olio, Edith, Jonathan (deceased), Capitola, William R., Robert M., Josephine and Grace. Mr. Shrader has been a uniform supporter of Democratic doctrines. Although by no means an office-seeker, he has held various positions of trust and responsibility, serving as Judge of Elections and on the School Board. He, with his wife and their two eldest children, are members in good standing of the United Brethren Church. To this Mr. Shrader has given his cordial support, and officiates as a Trustee. A man decided in his views, and fearless in upholding what he believes to be the right, he is one of those who form the bone and sinew of all well-regulated society, one whose career has been praiseworthy in the extreme.

MRS. AMELIA BEIN, a very estimable lady, lives at her farm on section 29, in Plattsmouth Precinct. She was born in Germany, Aug. 6, 1843, and is the daughter of Frederick and Amelia (Wehrbein) Bein, who were also of German birth and parentage, and emigrated to the United States in 1855.

The subject of this sketch was a girl of twelve years when she crossed the Atlantic with her parents, and remembers many of the incidents of her childhood in the Fatherland. She attended the common schools, and was taught habits of industry at home, and before reaching her nineteenth year was united in marriage with Mr. August Bein, who was also a native of Germany, and emigrated to the United States with his brother Henry in 1860, locating at once in Jefferson County, Wis., where they were married.

Mr. and Mrs. Bein remained residents of the Badger State about six years after their marriage, coming to this county in 1868. Mr. B. purchased 140 acres of land, embracing a portion of sections 29 and 32, in Plattsmouth Precinct, from which he improved a good farm, and where his family still live. At the time of taking possession there was a small house, but little attempt had been made at other improvement, Mr. Bein having put up the present residence. This is a neat and substantial structure, and adjacent is a good barn and all other necessary out-buildings, together with a flourishing orchard and the smaller fruit trees.

August Bein departed this life at the homestead in Plattsmouth Precinct, March 11, 1881, when in the prime of life, being forty-four years old. He was the son of Henry and Kate (Sprute) Bein, who were also natives of Germany, born and reared not far from the early home of the Wehrbein family. They spent their entire lives in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Bein identified themselves with the Presbyterian Church many years ago, and of this Mr. B. was a consistent member until his death. Mrs. Bein and her children still adhere to this faith. Of these latter there are eight living, namely: August, Ida (Mrs. William Hull), Anna, Minnie, Henry, Mollie, Frederick and Edward.

The Wehrbein family in coming to this country made the voyage on a sailing-vessel, landing at New Orleans after having been on the ocean seven weeks. Thence they went up the Mississippi River to St. Louis, Mo., and from there by rail to Watertown, Wis.

ROZZEL MORROW, of Rock Bluff Precinct, was born in Jackson County, Ohio, April 9, 1847, and is the son of Andrew and Sarah (Dill) Morrow, also natives of that State. The paternal grandfather, James Morrow, was born in County Down, Ireland, whence he emigrated to the United States when a young man, and was married; it is believed, in Virginia, of which his wife, Jane Ludinton, was a native, probably of Greenbrier County.

To the parents of our subject there were born fifteen children, of whom Rozzel was the seventh in order of birth. Nine of these are still living, located mostly in Iowa and Nebraska. The parents left Ohio in 1857, turning their faces toward the Far West, and located in Page County, Iowa, where they lived until 1860. Thence they removed to Mills County, that State, and from there came to Nebraska, settling in this county in the spring of 1868, where they lived until the spring of 1873. Then, returning to Iowa, they took up their abode in Harrison County, where they still live. The father has been a lifelong farmer, but in 1883 retired from active labor, and is now engaged as a land speculator and in the loaning of money.

Our subject came to Nebraska with his parents, locating with them in Rock Bluff Precinct, of which he has since been a resident. He was married, March 25, 1874, to Miss Adela, daughter of Alexander and Anna (McNurlin) Frizzell. The father of Mrs. Morrow was a native of Vermont, and the mother of Pennsylvania. The maternal grandfather, James McNurlin, was born in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Frizzell are now living in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Morrow commenced their wedded life in this county, taking possession of their present farm in the spring of 1876. This comprises 227 acres of well improved land on section 6, where Mr. M. has erected substantial buildings, planted fruit and shade trees, and gathered around him all the comforts of life. He has been prominent in local affairs, and is well posted upon current events. He was elected Justice of the Peace in 1879, which position he still holds, and, politically, votes the straight Republican ticket. Mrs. Morrow is a member in good standing of the United Brethren Church. They are the parents of seven interesting children, namely: Viola, Edmund, Hallie, Catherine A., Rozzel, who died in January, 1888, aged eight years; Wrenn and Lilly.

Mr. Morrow and six of his brothers enlisted as Union soldiers during the late Civil War. Mr. M. was first a member of the Iowa State Militia, in the fall of 1862; later he enlisted in Company I, 15th Iowa Infantry, served with his regiment until May, 1864, and was then transferred to the United States Patrol Guards, with whom he operated until the close of the war. His brother George was in Company G, 15th Iowa Infantry, as a fifer, serving thus three years, and afterward shouldering a musket, served in the ranks until the close. His brother Allen was in the same company and regiment as Rozzel. His twin brothers, John and Thomas, were members of Company A, 29th Ohio Infantry; John died near Shell Mound, Miss., in 1863; Thomas returned home in safety, and is now dead; Amos was in the 4th Iowa Battery, serving two and a half years, and is also now dead.

Mr. Morrow is a member of the G. A. R., belonging to McConnahie Post No. 45, of Plattsmouth, being the fifer, and was also connected with the Good Templars' Lodge at Mt. Pleasant during its existence. He is one of the solid men of his precinct, prompt in his business transactions and a thorough and skillful farmer, and had some experience as a pioneer in early days, when the scalp lifters were plentiful.

JOSEPH V. WECKBACH. Cass County numbers among her citizens many men of great executive ability and business talent, by whose force and enterprise her commercial interests have become very extensive, and her various resources have been developed to a wonderful degree. One of these gentlemen (he whose name stands at the head of this sketch) is one of the leading citizens of Plattsmouth, of which he has been a resident many years, coming here in 1865, when the city was but a small village, and with the exception of two years elsewhere, has lived here ever since. He is a prominent figure in business circles, being one of the most prosperous merchants in the city, and an active member of the Board of Trade, and he has also added another to the various industries of this city in the establishment of the Plattsmouth Brickyard, where he is extensively engaged in the manufacture of a fine quality of brick, thus giving work to a number of men. He has also been prominently identified with the civic life of this city, and has held the most important offices connected with the management of its affairs. He was Mayor of the city one term, and has been a member of the City Council over twelve years.

Our subject was born in the village of Wauldhausen, a few miles from Buchen, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, June 5, 1844. His father, Michael Weckbach, was a native of the same place, and there he worked at his trade of blacksmith until 1866. His wife, the mother of the subject of our sketch, was Elizabeth Wiedemann. She was also born near Wauldhausen, in a neighboring village. She now makes her home with her children, mostly in Omaha. In 1866 Michael Weckbach came to America and located in Plattsmouth, and from there went to Omaha and spent his declining years. He had a family of five children who grew to maturity—Joseph, William, Henry, Gustave and Isadore, all of whom came to America. William and Gustave live in Omaha, and Henry in Plattsmouth. Isadore died in this city.

Joseph V., of whom we write, acquired a good education in the Fatherland, attending school quite regularly until he was fourteen years old. He then went into the shop with his father and gained a practical knowledge of the blacksmith's trade, and he continued to work at that trade in his native land until 1865. He was then a wide-awake, energetic young man of twenty-one years, and he desired to see something more of life than was possible in the village where his days thus far had been spent, and he was also ambitious to become a rich and prosperous man. Thinking that the United States of America held out more inducements than any other country, he emigrated to these shores with his parents, landing in New York, and came directly to Plattsmouth. His only capital was good health and willing hands, but a youth of his capabilities was not long finding employment, and he worked in a blacksmith-shop for a time. He then set up a smithy and did business on his own account until 1870. He then sold out and interested himself in agriculture, buying a farm in Eight Mile Grove Precinct. He carried it on successfully for two years, and then traded his farm for a stock of groceries, and since that time has conducted mercantile business in Plattsmouth. Two years after his first establishment in the business he added dry-goods to his stock. Oct. 1, 1887, he sold his grocery department to his brother Henry.

Mr. Weckbach and Miss Mary Katarina Guthmann were united in marriage July 9, 1865, and of their wedded life eleven children have been born, namely: Anna E., Charles W., Mary R., Lydia J., Edward, Eugene H., Lewis G., Matilda L., Katie F., Joseph V. and Agnes. Mr. Weckbach erected his present residence, one of the finest in the city, in 1884, and in their beautiful home he and his estimable wife dispense a charming hospitality to numerous friends. Our subject is a fine specimen of the "self-made man," as he has acquired his fortune with no other capital than a sound mind in a sound body, and his example should stimulate others in like circumstances. He has ever been active in promoting the best interests of his adopted home, and has been among the foremost in securing the establishment of institutions for the furtherance of its material prosperity, such as the Board of Trade for example, of which he was a charter member. He is also a stockholder and director in the canning factory. He is one of the leaders of the Democratic party, and enthusiastically supports its measures. Mr. and Mrs. Weckbach and family are members of the Catholic Church.

JAMES O'NEILL, deceased. This name will be held in reverence as long as Plattsmouth shall stand, as that of one of the gentlemen to whom belonged the honor of having been its founders. And perhaps we may justly assign to his wife the honor of suggesting this attractive spot as a fine place to locate a town.

While Nebraska, then considered a part of the "Great American Desert," was still the home of the Indian, shared by the buffalo, the deer, the antelope and other wild animals, with scarcely a white settlement within its borders, there came the cry, heard around the world, of the discovery of gold in California (that event which was, perhaps, one of the means of bringing about a change here, "the old order yielding place to the new,") and soon the sound of the tramp of thousands echoed across these vast, lonely prairies, as they hurried on, eager to reach the goal of wealth. While thus passing through the country they could not fail to note what a goodly heritage lay in this fair land, with its sunny skies, genial clime, and fertile, well-watered soil, although they little dreamed that the wealth they were seeking was obtainable here. Taking advantage of the rush of emigration across the border, James O'Neill, a pioneer of Mills County,

Iowa, where he owned a large tract of land, moved to the east bank of the Missouri River to a point called Platteville, for the purpose of establishing a ferry to convey the emigrants across the stream; he had three flatboats, and made that his principal business. One day, while looking across the river to the opposite bank, Mrs. O'Neill remarked to her husband that it would be a good place for a town. He replied that as soon as the Indian treaties were ratified and the land thrown on the market, he would cross the stream and lay out a town. Early in the spring of 1855 he put his plan into execution, he and his friend Mr. Martin, with whom he carried on a mercantile business in Platteville, crossing the Missouri on the ice and making a claim to the land on which Plattsmouth now stands. They built a log house on the hill, southeast from the present site of the depot, the house being a rude structure, with an earth and stick chimney at one end on the outside. That spring Mr. O'Neill's family came over and occupied the house, and immediately planned a village, and commenced to sell lots, and during the summer there were probably a dozen houses erected here. Thus originated the thriving city of Plattsmouth. But while it is flourishing, and every day extending its interests and increasing its wealth and prosperity, the brave old pioneer of whom we write is numbered among the dead. Long may his memory be cherished, and his name be handed down from generation to generation for his share in laying the foundation of this city.

Mr. O'Neill was born in Hocking County, Ohio, Sept. 24, 1815. His father, James O'Neill, was a native of Ireland, who came to America when a young man, and settled in Ohio, being an early pioneer of Hocking County. He became the proprietor of quite a large tract of land there, and there was extensively engaged in farming the remainder of his life. His wife was born in Scotland. She came to Nebraska with her son, and died at his home in Plattsmouth. She was the mother of ten children, nine of whom grew to maturity. The father was reared in the Presbyterian Church, and was ever a faithful member.

The subject of this sketch passed his early life in his native county. He was reared to the life of a farmer, and though he never learned a trade, he was very proficient in the use of tools and did the most of his own carpenter work. He married in his native county, and continued to reside there until about 1848, when he sold his farm and moved to Iowa in the month of August, with a wagon and three horses, accompanied by his wife and four children. They had their cooking utensils with them, and when the shades of evening fell, or the sun marked the hour of noon, they camped and cooked their meals, and obtained needed rest. At length they reached their destination in Mills County, and there our subject took up a large tract of land. The country was sparsely settled, and but few improvements had been made in any direction. There were no railways, and all travel was done with wagons. We have spoken of the removal of our subject to Platteville not long after, and of his connection with the foundation of Plattsmouth. Besides attending to the ferry, which he established in the former place, and looking after his mercantile business, which he carried on in partnership with Mr. Martin, our subject was also associated with his brother William in raising stock, of which they owned a large herd. In the fall of 1855 Mr. O'Neill returned to his Iowa farm, and lived there for a year. He then came back to Cass County, and was a resident here the remainder of his days. He and his family settled west of the city, and he improved a valuable farm, on which he made his home until 1879. He then came to Plattsmouth, where he lived retired from the active duties of life until his death in 1880.

Our subject undoubtedly was greatly indebted for his prosperous circumstances to the fact that he was blessed with a good wife, whose judicious counsels strengthened and encouraged him, while her helping hand was never withheld when he needed her assistance. Mrs. O'Neill's maiden name was Rachel Avery, and she was born in Belmont County, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1824. Her father, Hugh Avery, was, it is thought, born in Virginia, and he was a pioneer of Belmont County, where he died in 1826. The maiden name of his wife was Rachel Gillen. She was a native of Belmont County, Ohio, but spent her last years in Hocking County, that State. Mrs. O'Neill's pleasant wedded life with our subject was blessed by the birth of eight children, as follows: Elizabeth (now the wife of William Herold, of whom see sketch), John H., William Albert, Lafayette, George, Lydia (now the wife of Theodore Bodine), Frank and Lewis.

Mrs. O'Neill is one of the few first settlers of Nebraska now living, and her lively reminiscences of pioneer days are well worth listening to. She has witnessed the development of this great and prosperous State from a few struggling settlements on the wild, uncultivated prairie, sometimes threatened with extinction by hostile Indians, or from other causes. And the entire growth of the city of Plattsmouth, from one rude log cabin to hundreds of dwellings, some of them elegant and costly, and numerous fine business buildings that would do credit to many an older city, has all gone on under her eyes. She is well known, and is deservedly held in respect, not only as a pioneer, but for her own sake, as a woman of great sense and goodness.

—•••••

SAMUEL M. HOLDEN is an energetic farmer and stock-raiser, and operates a splendid farm of 160 acres on section 9 of Elmwood Precinct. He was born in Casco, Maine, March 27, 1840, where he resided with his father, attending the common schools of the town and three terms in the Academy. His earliest experiences in life were in the mercantile business, which his father pursued successfully in Casco. At the age of twenty-one, in answer to the first call for 75,000 troops, made in 1861 by President Lincoln, for the suppression of the Rebellion, he enlisted in the Union service December, 1861, and was assigned to duty in Company B, 1st Maine Cavalry, as farrier. He joined the regiment in camp at Augusta, where they remained three or four months, and in 1862 they started for the South and were attached to the Army of the Potomac. It is a historical fact that the 1st Maine Cavalry took part in more battles than any other cavalry regiment in the Army of the Potomac, participating in thirty-six engagements, being nearly all in which that army was engaged. His first term of service expiring, he re-enlisted for three years. At the end of two years he again re-enlisted as a veteran in the same regiment. In July, 1863, he was transferred into the Navy, where he served until the close of the war. His duty in the latter service was in the Revenue Marine, and confined principally to the Delaware River.

After the assassination of our beloved President, Lincoln, the Commander of the Navy at Philadelphia was advised that Booth, the murderer, would attempt to make his escape by the way of that port, from the country on a British vessel. Our subject was one of the men who were detailed to capture him. They succeeded in capturing the boat, but Booth was not there. At the close of the war our subject was mustered out of the service and honorably discharged, when he returned to his home in Casco, where he remained about six months, when he determined to try his fortunes in the West. He went to Iowa County, Iowa, and engaged in farming. His first venture in Iowa was not a success, for there he lost $700, all he had in the world. Believing that Nebraska offered greater advantages than Iowa he had decided to make one more venture, and in December, 1868, he unloaded his wife, for he had married during the sojourn in Iowa, and worldly effects, which were few enough, on section 4, Elmwood Precinct, where he had homesteaded eighty acres of land in the spring of that year. After they located on their new home they suffered many hardships and endured many privations.

While living in Iowa our subject met a young lady of eighteen, Miss Harriett E. Swyer, who became his wife in 1867, and removed with him to Nebraska. The union has proven an exceptionally happy one, and five children have been born to them: Abbie Eldora, Willie M., Helen, Ernest Lee and Frank. The daughter Abbie is now teaching school in Buell District; Willie attends the Academy at Weeping Water. The father of our subject, Samuel M., Sr., was born in Otisfield, Cumberland County, Maine. He was engaged in the mercantile business in Casco, Me., until 1888, when he retired from the business and still resides in Casco. The mother was Abigail Hayden, and was born at Gray, Cumberland Co., Me. She died in 1887, aged seventy-nine years. A family of four children were born to his parents, named: Clara; Harriet, who died at the age of thirty-nine years, Samuel M. our subject, and Helen. Clara is now the wife of Frank Cook, Esq., and resides in Casco, Me.; Helen is a widow of a soldier who was killed in the late Rebellion and resides in Portland, Me. The ancestors of Mr. Holden were from England and originally settled in Massachusetts, from which State they removed to Maine.

During the first year of his residence in Nebraska our subject, in common with a large number of other pioneers of the State, found many difficulties in his path, and he remembers particularly and refers with a grateful feeling to the favors and assistance extended him at that time by Mr. Horton, a citizen of Weeping Water who had preceded Mr. Holden to that locality. Owing to his losses in Iowa our subject did not have the means to pay cash for all his supplies, and had it not been for the kindness of Mr. Horton, who let him have necessary provisions on credit, he thinks he would have died from starvation. The payment for the supplies received was made afterward.

Our subject takes a deep interest in the educational, religious and political advancement of the precinct and county. Every proposition that has for its purpose the prosperity and well-being of the people finds in him an earnest and hearty supporter. His farm with all its improvements is the legitimate result of his intelligence and industry. He is an excellent judge of stock, and in addition to his general farming he pays especial attention to raising thoroughbred cattle and hogs, and he is becoming well and widely known throughout the State as a breeder of Hereford cattle, of which he has a fine herd, at the head of which is the celebrated bull Gen. Terry. He usually ships to market one carload of hogs per year. He claims to own the finest herd of hogs in the precinct, and it must be admitted that he bases his claim on good ground.

The good wife of our subject is a most excellent housekeeper and she ably seconds her husband in all his undertakings. Herself and husband are earnest and consistent members of the Congregational Church at Mainland. The gentleman is an active member of the School Board of district 65 and was active in the organization of that district as well as

No. 46. He has discharged in an acceptable manner the duties pertaining to the office of Justice of the Peace. He is widely known for his devoted support of the interests of the Democratic party. His record as a soldier is above reproach, and is a source of pride which is pardonable in him.

JAMES W. BROOKS. As the village of Avoca moves on in the process of development there are inaugurated, one after another, the various interests which are calculated to insure its future. The subject of this sketch established himself as a grain dealer at this point in the fall of 1884, buying mostly for O. T. Hubbard, of Hiawatha, Kan., and handling usually on an average 150,000 bushels per annum. Mr. Brooks is a stirring business man, possessing the qualities required in the building up of a new farm.

Prior to settling in Avoca our subject had operated as a lumber dealer at Allerton and Clio, Iowa, two years. He became a resident of the Hawkeye State with his father, in 1844, the latter taking up a tract of new land in the wilderness of Mahaska County while Iowa was still a Territory. To this point they had migrated from Orleans County, N. Y., where James W. was born Feb. 5, 1838, and was consequently but a child of six years when his parents emigrated to Iowa Territory. Thomas Brooks, the father, was a native of Virginia, born of parents who were also natives of the Old Dominion, and had been familiar with farming from his youth up. Upon leaving Virginia he settled in Adams County, Ill., and was there married to Miss Mary McMurray, a native of Kentucky. Her parents had left the Blue Grass regions when she was quite young, locating in Adams County, Ill., where later Mr. and Mrs. Brooks began the journey of life together on a farm.

To the parents of our subject there were born five children, of whom he was the youngest. After the removal to Iowa they lived in Mahaska County until 1853, then changed their residence to Wayne County, where our subject attained his majority. The parents there spent the remainder of their days, both dying at the age of sixty-seven years. They were Methodists in religious belief, and most excellent and worthy people, respected by their neighbors, and conscientious in their lives. There were born to them in Illinois two children, while the other three were natives of the Hawkeye State.

James W. Brooks received a good practical education in the public schools of his native county, and upon the outbreak of the Rebellion, with his two brothers entered the ranks of the soldiery, himself and his brother John in the Union Army, and the other brother, Joseph, in the service of the lost cause. James W. was a member of Company M, 3d Iowa Cavalry, under Capt. Warner and Gen. Curtis, and fought with his comrades at the battle of Pea Ridge. At the expiration of his term of enlistment he was discharged, in November, 1862, from the cavalry, and at once re-enlisted in the 46th Iowa Infantry. After 100 days he received his second honorable discharge by special order, and returned home. Although experiencing many hairbreadth escapes, he was neither wounded nor captured. His brother John F. was a member of the 2d Illinois Cavalry, and in one engagement was wounded and suffered amputation of his leg twice thereafter, which proved such a shock to his system that he finally died from the effects of it in the hospital at Memphis, Tenn. He was brought home, and now fills a soldier's grave with many of his comrades in Corydon Cemetery, Wayne County, Iowa.

After leaving the army Mr. Brooks, returning to Wayne County, Iowa, taught school during the winter season, and farmed in summer until 1880. He then embarked in the lumber trade, and has been associated with lumber and grain since that time. He was married in Wayne County to Miss Eleanor Weagley. Mrs. Brooks was born in 1842, in Pennsylvania, where she was nearly reared to womanhood, and then went with her parents to Iowa. The latter were of German ancestry, and the father a farmer by occupation. Upon their removal to the Hawkeye State they located upon a tract of land in Benton Township, Wayne County, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Brooks was a lady of many estimable qualities, and had received careful home training. After being the devoted and faithful companion of her husband a period of twelve years, she departed this life at their home in Benton Township, Iowa, in the winter of 1875. Of this union there had been born six children, two of whom are deceased—an infant who died unnamed and Nellie. Of the survivors the record is as follows: George A., a baker by trade, is located in Central City, this State; Jessie is the wife of D. D. Callew, a farmer, of Clio, Iowa; Harry and Otto make their home with their father, the latter officiating as clerk for the firm of Graham & Wilkison, hardware dealers of Avoca.

Our subject in 1877 contracted a second matrimonial alliance in Washington County, Iowa, with Mrs. Sarah (Guinn) Sanders. The present wife of our subject was born in East Tennessee, in 1849. When she was quite young her parents, leaving the South, crossed the Mississippi and took up their abode in Washington, Iowa, where the father carried on farming, but later removed to Louisa County. He is now, with his estimable wife, living at Columbus Junction. Of this union there were born two children, one of whom, Roy D., died in infancy; Hattie makes her home with her father. Mrs. Sarah Brooks died at the residence of her father in Washington County, Iowa, Aug. 16, 1887.

Mr. Brooks, without making any claim to be a politician, keeps himself informed upon State and National affairs, and uniformly votes the straight Republican ticket. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., Avoca Lodge No 29, and is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

ORSEMUS M. ANDRUS, Postmaster of the new town of Andrusville, is a man of note in the southwestern part of this county, and one who has entered largely into its growth and development. He owns and operates 320 acres of valuable land, and also conducts a country store, carrying a stock of probably $1,000 worth of miscellaneous goods suited to the wants of both town and country people. He has figured largely in local affairs, discharging the duties of the various offices, and has gained a reputation for energy and enterprise possessed by few. Politically, he is a sound Republican, and in the earlier years, during the progress of the Civil War, enunciated his principles in a substantial manner by enlisting in the ranks and assisting in fighting the battles of the Union. He has, in short, made for himself a record which his descendants may look upon in after years with pride.

Of New England ancestry, our subject is the son of Darwin and Elizabeth (Andrus) Andrus, who were both natives of Rutland County, Vt., the father born in 1811. The family traces its ancestry to three brothers who crossed over from England during the colonial days, and from which sprang all the people of this name in America.

The father of our subject when quite young left the Green Mountain State and settled with his father in the vicinity of Horsheads, Chemung County, N. Y. There he was reared to manhood on a farm, and after reaching his majority started out for Bradford County, Pa., where he decided to settle. He took up a tract of Government land, upon which he labored successfully, opening up a good farm, which he sold in the spring of 1869, anxious now to see something of the farther west.

Darwin Andrus upon leaving Pennsylvania migrated to Iowa County, Iowa, but only sojourned there three years, engaging in the meantime in agricultural pursuits. In 1871 he joined his children in Nebraska, where he spent the remainder of his days, passing away in March, 1883. The wife and mother had died in 1852 in Bradford County, Pa. The six children of the parental family were named respectively: Jerome H., who died when forty-five years old; Huldah L., now living in this county; Mary L., deceased; Orsemus M., our subject; John E., of this precinct, and Sarah M., also deceased.

Bradford County, Pa., was the early tramping-ground of our subject, where his birth took place March 3, 1844. He was but a lad of eight years at the time of his mother's death, and two years later he was taken into the home of his sister in the same county. With her he remained until twenty years of age. In the meantime the Civil War had been in progress three years with little prospect of a cessation of hostilities, and in the fall of 1864, before he was twenty-one years old, young Andrus enlisted as a Union soldier in Company H, 45th Pennsylvania Infantry, which was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, under command of Gen. Grant.

Our subject first saw the smoke of battle at Petersburg, and later, while assisting to hold the fort at that place was wounded in the shoulder by a minie ball, April 2, 1865, and laid up in the hospital until the 23d of June. The conflict being now ended he received an honorable discharge and returned to the old home in Pennsylvania. Not long afterward he purchased fifty-four acres of forest in his native county, cleared off some of the timber and carried on farming in a small way, while at the same time he also occupied himself at carpenter work. He retained possession of this land for some years. In the spring of 1868 Mr. Andrus was seized with a desire to cross the Mississippi and consequently migrated to Iowa. His sojourn, however, was but short, six months or so, and returning to Pennsylvania he occupied himself at farm work in his native county until February, 1869. Then returning to Iowa he operated on a farm a couple of years, in the meantime returning once more to Pennsylvania and selling his property there.

Mr. Andrus first set foot upon the soil of Nebraska in the fall of 1871, journeying hither from Iowa with an ox team. He crossed the Missouri at Plattsmouth, and proceeding directly southward to Tipton Precinct, this county, commenced farming on rented land. In the fall of 1872 he purchased the land included in his present homestead, 160 acres, of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company. Upon this a furrow had not been turned and there was no sign of a habitation, and he came here alone.

The first business of our subject was to break his land. As time passed on he began planting forest and fruit trees, and the result is a flourishing grove of five acres, with an orchard of three acres. The present residence was completed in 1877. Two years later a post-office was located on section 35, and Mr. Andrus was appointed the officiating agent. His labors as a tiller of the soil were abundantly prosperous, and in 1880 he added to his real estate by the purchase of eighty acres adjoining his first land. In 1886 he became owner of an additional eighth section, and now owns the whole north half of section 35. This land is very fertile and amply watered by a branch of the Nemaha. The fields are neatly enclosed with hedge and wire fencing. The buildings adjacent to the residence comprise a good barn and the other structures necessary for the shelter of stock and the storing of grain. The whole is indicative of the industry and energy which must have been exercised in the construction of so valuable an estate.

In 1883 Mr. Andrus established a store of general merchandise in connection with the post-office, putting in at first a very modest stock of goods. The increased demand for these by the people around has compelled him to enlarge his facilities for trade, and he is now in the enjoyment of a good patronage. In his farming operations he makes a specialty of live-stock, usually buying and feeding annually two cars of swine and breeding high-grade Durham cattle. He utilizes three teams of horses for his own travel and farm purposes.

Miss Mary A. Fuller, at that time a resident of Iowa County, Iowa, became the wife of our subject Nov. 15, 1877, the wedding taking place at her home in Genoa Bluff. Mrs. Andrus was born Oct. 24, 1852, in Tuckerton, N. J., and is the daughter of James and Hannah (Mathis) Fuller, who were natives of Vermont and New Jersey, respectively, and are now living in Iowa. Of this union there are four children living, namely: James D., George E., Flora L. and Harrison W. One son, Horace, died when one year old. Both our subject and his estimable wife are interested in religious matters, Mr. A. being a member of the Christian Church and Mrs. A. identified with the Congregational at Eagle. The Sunday-School has found in Mr. Andrus an industrious worker, he officiating as Superintendent and Secretary and otherwise laboring for the pious training of the rising generation. He is also one of the Sons of Temperance and belongs to Mansfield Post No. 54, G. A. R., at Palmyra. He has served as Assessor of Tipton Precinct two years, and represented it in the County Board of Supervisors three years. He has been a member of the School Board of his district for fifteen years. In the spring of 1886 he was appointed a Notary Public for a term of six years. It would thus seem that he has few idle hours in looking after the various interests, both public and private, which have been assigned him. His career has certainly been that of a most useful and praiseworthy citizen, one who will leave his ineffable mark upon a community who have learned to esteem him at his true value. His home is shown in a view on another page.

ASHFORD H. MAGEE, President of the Village Board of Greenwood, is a man prominent in the affairs of his community, and one who has signalized himself as a public-spirited citizen, interested in the various enterprises calculated for the highest good of the people. He has been instrumental in the establishment and maintenance of schools, officiating as a member of the Board of Education, and there are few projects of this nature to which he has not given his cordial support. In the business world he operates as manager of the South Platte Lumber Company.

We glance back at the family history of our subject and find that his parents, George and Delilah (Hardy) Magee, were natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Ohio. The father was a farmer by occupation and upon leaving the Buckeye State settled in Peoria County, Ill. There the mother died in 1852, at the early age of thirty-six years, leaving a family of five children, namely: William H.; Ashford H., our subject; James E., Noah T. and Harriet J. J. E. is a resident of Ashland, this State; Noah is farming in Elmwood Precinct, this county; Harriet J. is the wife of S. W. Foster, of Weeping Water.

The subject of this sketch was born Sept. 6, 1844, at Smithville, Peoria Co., Ill., during the pioneer days of that section. His educational advantages were such as the common schools of that day afforded, and to the rude temple of learning he journeyed quite a distance from his home in the woods. His education was completed when he was a youth of sixteen years, and a year later the outbreak of the Civil War turned his thoughts in an entirely new direction. He had been imbued with patriotic principles from his birth, and it was not long until he made up his mind to assist in the impending struggle for the preservation of the Union. On the 9th of August, 1862, in response to the call of President Lincoln for 600,000 men, young Magee enlisted in Company E, 77th Illinois Infantry, under command of Capt. Edmund Stevens. They drilled at the camp in Peoria for a short time, and then went to Covington, Ky., departing Oct. 2, and reaching there four days later. Thence they marched to Louisville, where they embarked on a boat from Memphis and from there proceeded on down the river on boats to Vicksburg. Mr. Magee participated in the siege and capture of that city, and served under the command of Gen. Sherman, but being repulsed by the rebels were obliged to abandon the attack at that time. They then journeyed up the White River to Arkansas Post, until this division of the army could be reinforced by the troops of Gen. Grant, when they reopened the siege which resulted in the capture of the city.

From Vicksburg our subject and his comrades moved upon Jackson, Miss., and after its capture returned to Vicksburg, proceeding thence in August to New Orleans. At this point the army was reorganized for the Red River expedition, and a part of it, our subject among the number, journeyed up the Red River to Brazos City and thence marched 400 miles, engaging along the way in numerous skirmishes with the enemy. At Vicksburg Mr. Magee distinguished himself for his bravery and was promoted to be a Corporal. In the battle at Mansfield he had a strange and dangerous experience. It had always been surmised that the regimental color bearer was a coward, and Mr. M. believed this to be true. Being himself one of the color guards, he foresaw that there would be hard fighting, in which his services might be needed. He was the only color guard of his regiment who served in this capacity during the battle of Mansfield and, strange to relate, he was the only appointed color guard that escaped capture or death.

This battle was waxing hot when a retreat was ordered. Our subject, waiting until the last moment, finally much against his inclinations was obliged to run, but in doing so his gun became entangled in a bramble and in turning around to extricate it he found that the regimental flag had been deserted. Quick as a flash he sprang back, seized the standard, and while thousands of rebel soldiers shouted, "drop it," and while the deadly missiles from their guns flew thick around him, he miraculously escaped and in a few moments was safely by the side of his comrades. After this engagement they retreated to Pleasant Hill and thence to the mouth of the Red River, where the expedition was abandoned.

Mr. Magee, soon after this affair, was promoted to Sergeant and at New Orleans was assigned to provost duty. Later on, after participating in the siege of Mobile and the capture of Spanish Fort, they journeyed up the Tombigbee River, where the news of Lee's surrender told them that the war was practically ended. Mr. Magee received his honorable discharge at Mobile, and soon afterward returned to his old haunts in Illinois. In all his army career he never missed a ration or a roll call. Being young, stout, careful and willing, he was enabled to bear up bravely under the most trying circumstances. On the march from Vicksburg to Jackson, July 5, 1861, he was one of the four men able to stack guns at the close of the day's engagement. He was promoted to First Sergeant in the spring of 1865.

The patriotism of our subject did not end with the close of the war. Coming home he had scarcely yet attained to a complete manhood and realized the advantage which a more thorough education would be to him. He accordingly resumed his studies in the district school a few months after his discharge. Among those in attendance was a rude and boisterous fellow, a rebel in his instincts and expressions, and who one day stood up and hurrahed for Jeff Davis. No sooner had the words left his lips than Mr. Magee laid him low with a "left-hander," and mounting his prostrate form administered to him a first-class thrashing. Later, Mr. M. pursued his studies in another school under the instruction of one of his former commanders, Lieut. Smith.

Mr. Magee entered upon the more serious business of life as a farmer in Peoria County, Ill., and when ready to establish a fireside of his own was united in marriage with Miss Mary Miller, in 1870. Mrs. Magee was born in Peoria County, Ill., and was the schoolmate and playmate of her husband during their childhood years. They made their home in Illinois for some time, then came to this county and settled on a tract of uncultivated land in Greenwood Precinct, from which was built up by their united efforts a good homestead, which they occupied until in 1884. Mr. M. had been for some time prior to this suffering from nervous prostration, the result of arduous and continued labor, and was advised by his physician to try a change of occupation. He then left the farm to engage in the lumber trade. In his dealings with his fellowmen he has gained their friendship and respect, and is to-day one of the most widely known and popular men of Greenwood.

Our subject and his estimable wife are the parents of two children, daughters, Lily and Henrietta. The family residence is pleasantly situated in the northwest part of town and is as attractive in its surroundings as it is pleasant and congenial within. Mr. and Mrs. M. are members in good standing of the Christian Church, in which our subject officiates as Steward and Trustee. He is prominently identified with the G. A. R. and it is hardly necessary to state that, politically, he is a solid Republican, "dyed in the wool." He represents a goodly amount of property and is a man whose career has been distinguished by the strictest honesty and integrity—one whose word is as good as his bond.

—♦—

SAMUEL CARTER, an intelligent and enterprising farmer of Elmwood Precinct, was born Oct. 29, 1824, in Maine, and among the younger members of a family of nine namely: Mary, Joseph, Shuah M., Ruth T., Eliza T., Martha S., Sarah A., Samuel, our subject, and Monroe. Of this number all are deceased excepting Ruth and our subject. Ruth is a widow, and living in Nebraska. In his early days he was favored with good educational advantages, which he improved to the fullest extent, attending the public school until at the age seventeen he entered the academy at Fryeburgh Village, where he continued a student for one term. After this he learned the trade of a painter, which he followed in his native State and in Massachusetts.

Mr. Carter was united in marriage, in 1855, to Miss Sarah Webster, the daughter of John S. and Hannah Webster. Her father was born in Brownfield, Me., and the mother was born in New Hampshire, near the Maine State line. Her maternal grandfather, John, was in the Revolutionary War, and was one of the pioneers in the settlement of New Hampshire. Her paternal grandfather, William Webster, was a distant relative of Hon. Daniel Webster, the renowned statesman. Her girlhood days were passed in Maine; she attended the same school and academy which Mr. Carter, her present husband, attended, so that their acquaintance and companionship have been lifelong. After their marriage Mr. Carter cultivated the old Carter homestead. Mrs. Carter is a member of a family of nine children, consisting of: Mary; Sarah, the wife of our subject; Carrie, Hannah E., Elvira C., James Edward, Mary A., John Alden and Josiah C. The children are scattered from Maine to Nebraska. Of the six surviving members of the family Mrs. Carter is the only one in Nebraska.

Mr. Carter came to Elmwood Precinct in 1869, when he settled on his present farm on section 8, where he has lived continuously from that date to the present, devoting his time exclusively to the cultivation of the broad acres under his ownership. An orchard of the choicest varieties of fruit yields its store of luscious fruits, and the various small fruits adapted to the climate contribute materially to the pleasure and profit of the owner. Shrubbery and ornamental trees lavishly planted lend a most inviting appearance to the homestead, which of itself is most eligibly located. Eight children have been born to this worthy couple, named respectively: Charles S., Mary E., John W., George, Wallace, Samuel F., Carrie W. and Frank T. Of this number Mary E. is dead. She, among many others, was attending the school of her neighborhood when one of those terrible scourges of the Western country, the cyclone, came and demolished the schoolhouse, and Mary rendered up her young life to its destructive power. The blow was indeed a sad one to her fond parents, and her memory is held sacred by the survivors of the family; Carrie and Frank are also dead; Charles S., the eldest, is living in Dawes County, Neb.; the sons John W. and George are residents of Custer County, Neb.; Wallace is teaching, and Samuel is at home.

The father of our subject, Samuel F., was born in Oxford County, Me. His mother, Mary (Thompson) Carter, was born in New Hampshire. The father served as a soldier in the War of 1812. He was a farmer, and was born and died in the same house. His death took place in 1866, when he was eighty-three years of age. The mother died in 1853, aged sixty-six years. The paternal grandfather, Solomon Thompson, came from England. Grandfather Ezra Carter settled in the State of Maine.

In his coming to and settling in Nebraska Mr. Carter did not escape any of the trials incident to the life of the pioneer. To build his home he drew the lumber with teams from Plattsmouth, his nearest market at that time, but with a strong determination native to the man he accepted no discouragements, but pushed the improvement of his farm as rapidly as time and circumstances would admit, until to-day his broad, well-tilled acres are a continuous comment on the energy and ability inherent in the man. Highly educated, possessing a spirit of rare refinement, he is especially sensitive to disappointments and crosses, yet his will does not allow him to surrender to them. He has not been as successful in a financial sense as some of his neighbors, yet he is in easy circumstances and in a fair way to realize his full complement of wealth. Generous and intelligent, he is one of the men who have made Elmwood Precinct what it is. He is always ready to assist the poor and relieve the needy, possessing a noble appearance and carrying the stamp of nature's true nobility, he has and deserves the friendship and esteem of all with whom he comes in contact. Living soberly and uprightly he carries his age remarkably well. He steps as lightly as a man of thirty. His noble wife is all that a wife should be, thoughtful, patient in all things, she has contributed no inconsiderable part to her husband's success in life. Educated and refined, she is an ornament in the social circles in which they move; she is a lady who is practical in her life, and it is her hand that supplies the cellar and pantry with many of the delicacies which are foreign and entirely unknown to the denizens of a large city. A few years since she made an exhibit of canned fruit at the Weeping Water Fair, including seventeen varieties, when she received all the highest premium. To her other many excellent qualities it may be said that she is an excellent cook.

Mr. Carter has served his fellow-townsmen as School Treasurer, Director, Moderator and Justice of the Peace, is a Deacon in the Congregational Church, of which himself and wife are members. In politics he is unquestionably Republican.

EDWIN DIMMITT is a progressive farmer of Elmwood Precinct, where he owns and operates a splendid farm of 360 acres of land. He was born in Clermont County, Ohio, where he lived with his parents until he was thirteen years old, when he came with them and settled in Tazewell County, Ill., working on the farm and attending the public schools of the neighborhood. His earliest recollections of life date back to the time he lived in the old Buckeye State, and he remembers distinctly when he attended the school at "Porter's Tavern," in that State.

Mr. Dimmitt is the eldest of a family of five children born to his parents: Sarah L., Beal Harvey, Ezra and Henry, all being younger. In 1862 our subject and Hannah M. Skinner were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. This lady was one of a family of eight children—John, Alfred, Sarah; Hannah M., the wife of our subject; Nora, Trumbull, Daniel and Harriet. Her parents removed to Peoria, County, Ill. A family of six interesting children have been born to our subject and his worthy wife. They are named Joseph Lincoln; Alfred who died in infancy; Anna L., Mary, Cora and Jessie. Those living are with their parents at home.

Mr. Dimmitt says that his coming to Nebraska was the turning point in his life, that ever since he has been a resident of the State he has been very successful in all his undertakings. It is true he has borne his portion of the hardships and toils experienced by every pioneer, but the result has amply recompensed him for all the trouble that has come to him. Possessing an extremely sanguine temperament he has always been able to meet reverses with a hopeful heart. This ability to look on the bright side of things has been a source of great comfort to him. His good wife has borne her share of the trials and discomforts of frontier life with a happy and cheerful heart. When the days were darkest and the outlook most dreary, then never a murmur of repining or regret passed her lips, and now that the angel of peace and plenty has settled herself down and taken up her abode in the midst of this happy family the wife and mother feels that her life has not been in vain. Their eldest daughter, Anna L., is one of the social leaders of the neighborhood and is a most estimable young lady. Possessing the genial feelings inherited from her father, she is the life of every social gathering.

The father of our subject was considered one of the pillars of the church of which he was a member, and took a lively and substantial interest in every institution for the advancement of knowledge and progress in Elmwood Precinct. Mr. Dimmitt has served the community in which he lives as Justice of the Peace, discharging his duties in a very efficient manner. In politics he is a Republican and is proud to say that he cast his first vote at the first election of Abraham Lincoln. For the genealogy of our subject's parents refer to the biography of Beal Harvey Dimmitt, upon another page of this work.

PETER ROLOFSZ was the first man to take up and improve a homestead in Tipton Precinct, which he did in the spring of 1868. He had been renting farms in Monona County, Iowa, and feeling that he could do better by making a home for himself he started overland with teams and wagons to Nebraska, crossed the Missouri River at Nebraska City, continuing on to Tipton, where he took up his present home, and immediately began improving the same. He built a small house, and spent the summer there, and in the fall he went back to Iowa for his family; he remained there until the winter came on, then moved to Glenwood, Iowa, where he obtained work. He returned to his homestead the following spring, and resumed the improvement of his claim by setting out groves and planting an orchard. At this time it was rather a lonely life, as it was four miles to the nearest neighbor.

When not engaged in improving his farm he followed freighting between Nebraska City and Lincoln. Under no circumstances could he be induced to part with his homestead, but continued to improve it in all directions, dividing it up into fields by well-kept fences of hedge and wire. In 1879 he built a new and comfortable residence. He devotes his attention to general farming and the raising of thoroughbred stock, graded Short-horn cattle and full-blooded Poland-China hogs. This gentleman's pride in his stock is certainly justifiable, and does him great credit. He is also an adept in the art of dehorning cattle. Seven horses are required to perform the labor of the farm.

The land selected for the homestead is very eligibly situated, and the broad expanse of cultivated fields, well-kept hedge and fence rows, and the neat and tastefully designed farm buildings, presents a very pleasing picture, and speaks highly of the genius and enterprise that have brought them into their present perfect form.

The subject of this sketch was born in Gallerland, Holland, Aug. 8, 1839. His early life was spent on the farm, and he attended one of the excellent schools of that country. At the age of fourteen he began to learn the weaver's trade, which he followed until he left Holland for America. When fifteen years of age, in the fall of 1854, he came to America with his parents, by the way of Havre, France, and Liverpool, England, thence by sailing-ship to New York, where they landed in Castle Garden after a voyage of twenty-three days. The whole family continued their journey to Iowa, where they settled on a tract of forty acres of raw land in Monona County.

Our subject remained there until he was twenty-one years old, when he began to engage in business for himself. In October, 1862, he enlisted in the 3d Missouri Cavalry, Company C. He was mustered into the service at Palmyra, Mo., and saw service under the command of Gen. Prentiss, Col. Glover and Capt. Black. The regiment was largely employed doing guard duty along the line of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad. When they were relieved from this service the regiment was ordered to Rolla, Mo., where our subject was taken sick, and was sent to the general hospital at St. Louis, Mo., where he remained until he recovered, and was honorably discharged at St. Louis on account of physical disability. The bulk of his army service was in chasing bushwhackers and squads of Gen. Price's men; he participated in the battle of Sturgeon, Mo. Returning home after his discharge he went to work on a farm in Linn County, Iowa, and drove an omnibus for a season in Cedar Rapids, which engaged his attention up to the time we find him located on his homestead at Tipton.

This gentleman is one of a family of ten children—Elizabeth, Henrietta, Chauncey, Corrina, Johannah, Josina, Joseph, Cora and Henry younger; all living except Chauncey and Corrina, who were drowned, and Joseph, deceased. The brother Joseph was a Captain in the Netherlands army, and was stationed in the East Indies. He was killed by the giving way of a veranda.

Peter Rolofsz, Sr., the father of our subject, was born in Amsterdam, Holland, and was clerk in a large wholesale establishment. After marriage he moved into Gallerland, and went into stock-raising, also operating a grist and oil mill until he became very wealthy. At one time he was worth more than $100,000, but going security a great deal for his friends he finally failed. In the fall of 1854 he came to America and settled in Monona County, Iowa, and began improving his home. At the same time he engaged in the mercantile business in Pella, Iowa. In this venture he did fairly well for awhile, but going security for his son-in-law he failed a second time. He then moved to St. Louis, and lived with one of his daughters until he died in September, 1880, at the ripe old age of seventy-nine years. The mother had died in Iowa in 1862, being then fifty-two years old. She was Miss Elizabeth G. Phillips, and was born in Germany.

Grandfather Rolofsz was a banker in Amsterdam and was very rich. Our subject was married in Linn County, Iowa, Oct. 9, 1863, to Miss Julia Hawks, daughter of James and Annette (Dunckler) Hawks. Grandfather Dunckler was a cooper. He went to Chicago when there were only two or three houses, and bought 900 acres of land, a few miles from the present site of the city. He built a residence in Chicago, and his decease occurred there in 1861, when he was sixty-nine years of age. The father of the wife of our subject was a farmer and also a merchant of Grand Rapids, Mich., and removed from there to Chicago. He owned a farm west of that city, and operated it until 1861, when he removed to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he purchased a farm and operated a hotel.

The family next moved to Kingston, again engaging in the hotel business. Leaving Kingston they went to Nebraska, where they took up a homestead in 1869. They operated this farm until 1881, when they sold the property and went to Howard City; he is now living with his daughter at Buffalo, Neb. The father is seventy years of age, and the mother sixty-seven. Julia A., the wife of the subject of this sketch, was one of a family of twelve children: Mary E., Laura A., and William B. are older; Alonzo A., Hiram, Vincent R., Chase M., Ebin, Frank, Jennie and Carrie E. Of this number Hiram, Ebin, Frank and Jennie are deceased. The brother William B. served three and a half years in the Rebellion, enlisting when only sixteen years of age.

Julia A., the wife of our subject, was born in Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 8, 1849. She was thirteen years of age when the family removed to Iowa. She received a good education, is a kind and considerate wife, and is a joy and comfort to her husband and family, and very hospitable, striving to make the stranger within her gates happy and contented. Twelve children have been born to this couple—Elizabeth A., Christma J., Anthony D., Peter, Jr., Josina, Maud, Arthur, Ralph, Blanche, Grace, Ray and Ethel. All are living except Elizabeth, Anthony, Peter, Jr., Maud and Arthur. Josina is at school in Weeping Water; the rest are at home.

Our subject has been in America so long, and has become so thoroughly identified with the country that he feels perfectly at home. He has never entered largely into public life, preferring to attend strictly to the improvement and care of his farm. He has been a member of the School Board for a year, Postmaster at Sunlight for two years, and Constable. Himself and wife are members of the United Brethren Church, and he has been Superintendent of the Sunday-school at Tipton Schoolhouse. In politics he is a strict Republican.

SPENCER S. BILLINGS, a worthy representative of the intelligent business men of Cass County, who have materially aided in its growth and development, is an honored resident of Plattsmouth, where he has lived since 1861. He is a native of New England, and was born Dec. 8, 1816, in the same house, in the town of Somers, Tolland Co., Conn., that his father, Samuel S. Billings, was born in. He is of English descent, his grandfather, Samuel Billings, having emigrated from England before the Revolutionary War, and settled in Somers, where he spent his remaining years. He built a fulling mill in the locality, known as Billings' Mills, it having been one of the first mills erected in New England. It has been enlarged, and there are large woolen mills on the site, which are now owned and operated by some of his descendants.

The father of our subject was reared and married in Somers. He, in company with his brother Elijah, succeeded their father in the ownership of the mill. After working them for some years he disposed of his interest to Elijah, and, removing to Cherry Valley, N. Y., engaged in the mercantile business. There were neither railways nor canals in those days, and his merchandise, which came by the Hudson River to Troy, was drawn by teams to Cherry Valley. He remained in business there several years, and then moved to Little Falls, and later to Batavia. While in that city he had the misfortune to lose his wife, and after her death he returned to Connecticut, and spent the remainder of his life at Billings' Mills. The maiden name of his wife, the mother of our subject, was Irene Spencer, and she also was a native of Somers, Conn.

Their union was blessed by the birth of nine children, eight of whom grew to maturity, and seven of them are still living.

The subject of this sketch was but three years of age when his parents removed to New York State, where he grew to manhood. He attended the district school as opportunity offered, and being studious and ambitious, made good progress in his studies. At the age of eighteen years he returned to his native town, and there studied medicine with Horatio Hamilton, M. D. When ready to establish himself as a physician, some newer country, where men of his profession were less plentiful, seemed preferable to New England; accordingly, accompanied by his brother, he traveled across the country to Illinois. The now thriving city of Peoria was then a small town, and there he located. He formed a partnership with Dr. Mossman, and practiced there for one year. He then removed to Knoxville, the same State, and there took a contract to manufacture the brick to be used in building the first court-house ever erected in Knox County. Very soon after the organization of the Territory of Iowa, our subject went there and located in Bonaparte, where he remained about five years. He then changed his place of residence to Keokuk, where he established himself in the mercantile business, being one of the first merchants of the place. Mr. Billings did not, however, confine himself to that business only, but bought many land warrants and entered large tracts of land. Subsequently he built a large hotel in the place, and bought other buildings, and was for some time the second largest real estate owner in the State. He met with great financial prosperity while there, but during the hard times of 1857 he lost a great deal of money by endorsing for friends. In 1859 our subject came to Nebraska, and established a store at Nebraska City, and during the same year opened another one at Plattsmouth, and a third one at the Indian Agency at Columbus, operating them all in 1867. During this time Mr. Billings entered quite a tract of land in Nebraska. In 1861 he moved with his family to Plattsmouth, where he has since resided. He owns much real estate here, having bought 100 acres of land adjoining the city, and, since disposing of his mercantile interests in 1867, his only business has been the improvement of this land, on which he has built more than a hundred houses, nearly all of which he still owns. Our subject has been a confirmed invalid for the past nine years, but, though physically weak, he is strong intellectually, and his brain is as active, his mind as clear, and his judgment as shrewd, as when he was in his prime. He was formerly a great reader, and kept himself well informed on all subjects of the day, and he is a most excellent counselor, an interesting companion and entertaining conversationalist. He has always been a temperate man, and an ardent advocate of temperance principles.

The marriage of our subject took place in Bonaparte, Iowa, in January, 1845, when he was united to Lucinda Johnston. She was born in Pennsylvania, and was the daughter of John and Rachel Johnston. She died at the homestead July 12, 1873, leaving a vacancy never to be filled. To her and her husband were born six children, of whom the following is the record: Elizabeth is the wife of Edward Murphy, of Arrapahoe, Furnas Co., Neb.; Clinton, at home; Ella married Allen C. Spencer, and she lives in her father's home; Harriet is the wife of James Hunter, of Plattsmouth; Grace married Grant W. Luper, of Horton, Kan.; George lives at home.

Mr. Billings has for over forty years been a member of the Presbyterian Church, and, politically, a Democrat up to the breaking out of the late war; since then he has been a staunch Republican. He has also been a member of the Masonic fraternity for nearly forty years.

REV. GEORGE R. MURRAY, pastor of the Fairview United Presbyterian Church, of Murray—the post-office and village are named in his honor and are situated in Rock Bluff Precinct—is very pleasantly located on section 2, Liberty Precinct, where he has a comfortable homestead, consisting of 120 acres of good land. He came to this State in 1880, and since that time has had charge of the Fairview Church, which has prospered well under his zealous care, and has prospects of a bright future before it. There are now thirty-four communicants in the church, and a flourishing Sunday-school is connected with it, which is under the supervision of the pastor. Its weekly sessions are well attended by interested groups of children, youth, and adults.

Mr. Murray is a native of Pennsylvania, born in Cannonsburg, Washington County, June 25, 1845. He has reason to be proud of his ancestry, which originated in Scotland many years ago, and were intelligent, thrifty, Christian people. One of the progenitors of our subject, John Murray, was sent from his native country to America as a missionary, and that he was not the only ordained divine in the Murray family is shown by the old tombs in Scotch churchyards. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a Scotchman of American birth, and T. J. Murray was a physician; the father of our subject was of Scotch-Irish antecedents, born in Cannonsburg, Pa., where he received a substantial foundation for his future education. When a young man he was graduated from the classical department of Jefferson College, and later from the School of Medicine at Philadelphia. He subsequently entered upon the practice of medicine and surgery in his native town, where he established an extensive practice, and in the few short years he lived won an enviable reputation as a skilled physician and surgeon. His early death at the age of thirty-three years was a loss to the community and to the profession. The maiden name of his wife, and mother of our subject, was Elizabeth Callahan, a native of Pennsylvania, who survived her husband but three years, dying when our subject was but nine years of age. She was an intelligent, Christian woman, of good old Presbyterian stock, and instilled into the minds of her young children those religious principles that have been their guides for life. After his mother's death Mr. Murray, with a younger sister, Anna K., now the wife of J. W. Thomas, of Thomas, Washington Co., Pa., remained in their native State and received good educations. When only seventeen years old Mr. Murray nobly responded to President Lincoln's call for 300,000 more men to defend the country in the time of her peril, and Aug. 13, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, 140th Pennsylvania Infantry, under the command of the regimental officers, Prof.

John R. Frasier and Col. R. P. Roberts. The regiment was assigned to the 1st Division of the 2d Corps of the Army of the Potomac under command of Gen. Hancock. Mr. Murray was with his regiment at Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mine Run, through the campaign of the Wilderness, on to Petersburg, and was present at Lee's surrender. He was on duty all the time, but escaped with only a slight wound, and was never taken prisoner. At the close of the war he was honorably discharged at Pittsburgh, Pa., and then returned home. He subsequently decided to study for the ministry, and with that end in view entered the Westminster College at New Wilmington, Lawrence Co., Pa., from which he was graduated in 1871. Two years later Mr. Murray further pursued his studies at the United Presbyterian Seminary of Newburg, N. Y., and later was graduated from the theological department of the college at Princeton, N. J. In the spring of 1874 he was licensed to preach, and for one year thereafter he was an itinerant in the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York and Pennsylvania. In 1876 Rev. Mr. Murray became the pastor of the United Presbyterian Church at Centerville, Appanoose Co., Iowa, which was his first charge. After four years of successful labor in that place, our subject accepted a call to his present church, where he is faithfully carrying on the work of his Master. He is a man of good intellectual ability, whose active mental powers have been developed by a thorough education, and he is well grounded in all doctrinal points, standing high among his ministerial brethren of this State for his record as a pure, whole-souled man. In politics he is a sound Republican, and takes some interest in local and general affairs.

The marriage of Mr. Murray with Miss Mary McClees was solemnized at Taylorstown, Pa., Oct. 7, 1875. She was born in Washington County, Pa., and is the daughter of A. E. and Matilda (Hodges) McClees, both natives of Pennsylvania, and of Scotch-Irish descent. Mr. McClees was for many years a general merchant of Taylorstown, where his death occurred Oct. 31, 1877, in the sixty-second year of his age. His first wife, mother of Mrs. Murray, died in 1859; both she and her husband were consistent members of the Presbyterian Church, and lived honest Christian lives. They were the parents of six children, three of whom are yet living, namely: James, a clerk in a book-store, at Spokane Falls, W. T.; Lizzie, wife of Rev. J. A. Donahey, pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Washington County, Pa., and Mrs. Murray. The latter was reared by her father and stepmother, receiving a good education, and previous to her marriage acted as clerk in her father's store. Of her union with our subject five children have been born, namely: Harry A.; George R. died when eight months old; T. J. Arthur, James M. and Lou B. Mrs. Murray is held in high esteem, and has proved herself a fitting helpmate for her gifted husband. She is a working member of the Presbyterian Church and earnestly interested in its welfare.

MARTIN RUBY is a fine representative of the sturdy young farmers of Nebraska, who, native-born citizens of the State, sons of the pioneers, are now taking an active part with their fathers in developing its resources and sustaining its many interests. He owns a farm on section 30, Plattsmouth Township, which ranks with the best in the vicinity,

Our subject was born in Plattsmouth Township, Cass Co., Neb., Dec. 13, 1859, a son of George S. Ruby, an early pioneer of Cass County, with whose agricultural interests he has ever since been identified. His father was born in Harrison County, Ohio, Dec. 28, 1828, to Isaac and Mary (Smith) Ruby. In 1835 his parents moved to Holmes County, in the same State, and settled among the pioneers. They were natives of Maryland and Pennsylvania respectively, the father of English ancestry and the mother of German descent, it is supposed. In 1852 they removed to Jackson County, Ind., where the father bought and improved a farm. About 1858 he sold his Indiana home, and with his family removed to Madison County, Iowa, where he still lives. His wife died in that State in April, 1877.

The father of our subject passed the most of his boyhood and youth on his father's farm in Holmes County, Ohio, and when his parents removed to Indiana he accompanied them. He subsequently went to Iowa, and from there came to Nebraska in the year 1857, and thus early identified himself with the pioneers of Cass County. He then located on the farm where he now lives, and commenced the task of improving it from the wild prairie. The country round about was then sparsely settled, with but few improvements, giving but little indication of its present high state of civilization. Indians were plentiful, and there were only a few white people in the neighborhood, and not a white family between here and Plattsmouth. Mr. Ruby and his family lived for a few years in a log house, and then he built a substantial frame house, which forms his present residence. He has his farm under good tillage, and it yields fine crops in repayment for the care and labor he has expended on it. He broke the prairie with cattle when he first came, and paid his help in harvest time at the rate of eight bushels of wheat for one day's cradling. His first crop of wheat he sold at fifty cents a bushel, but only after keeping it for two years, the price previously being thirty-five cents a bushel. Before he raised his first crop of wheat he paid $12 a barrel for flour, the nearest mill being, perhaps, at St. Louis, at all events the wheat was shipped down the river to that city, and thence to this place. Mr. Ruby has taken an active part in public affairs since becoming a citizen of this township, and has served with great satisfaction as Township Assessor, being first elected to that office in 1855, and continuing in that capacity for seven years.

Mr. Ruby has been three times married. The maiden name of his first wife, to whom he was married in Hancock County, Ind., May 2, 1855, was Caroline Black, a daughter of James Black, of that county. Mrs. Ruby departed this life Oct. 4, 1868, leaving six sons, namely: William H., of Fairmount, Neb.; Isaac M., of Kansas; Martin L.; George N., of Aurora, Ill.; Ulysses Grant, of Adams County, Neb.; and George M., of Washington Territory. Mr. Ruby's second marriage was May 30, 1869, to Miss Isabella Jones, daughter of Riley Jones, of this county. She passed from the scenes of earth Dec. 12, 1880, leaving two sons: Elmer V., who is attending school in Beatrice, and Charles W., who lives with his father. Mr. Ruby was married to his present wife, formerly Mrs. Catherine (Alhands) Skiles, Feb. 10, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Ruby are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which Mr. Ruby's other wives also belonged.

Martin L. Ruby, of whom we write, was reared on the paternal homestead, and received his education in the district schools of his native town. He continued to reside with his parents until his marriage, when he bought his present farm, comprising the northeast quarter of section 30, Platts-mouth Township. The land had been broken, but there were no buildings upon it. By incessant and well-directed energy Mr. Ruby has brought about many valuable improvements; having erected a substantial set of frame buildings, placed his land under excellent tillage, fenced it, and planted a good orchard of choice fruit trees.

Our subject was married, Feb. 14, 1883, to Miss Ella Fry, a daughter of Andrew and Clara (Davis) Fry, whose biographies appear in this volume. Three children were born of this marriage, namely: Thomas F., Lawrence R. and Nellie May. The latter died Oct. 2, 1888.

Mr. Ruby early in his career showed the requisite qualifications of practical skill, energy and judgment necessary to the complete success of an agriculturist, and it is predicted of him that he will one day be numbered among the solid and wealthy farmers of Cass County. He is a young man of sound habits and exemplary character. He takes an intelligent view of the political questions of the day, and fully sympathizes with the policy of the Republican party.

WILHELM JASPER, a worthy citizen of Platts-mouth Precinct, is identified with the agricultural interests of Nebraska. He is a native of Germany, born July 24, 1855, and a son of Frederic and Johanna (Bornemear) Jasper, likewise born in that great Empire across the sea. Our subject came to the United States in 1880, arriving in Platts-mouth March 1. He was married, Jan. 24, 1882, to Miss Anna Evers, a daughter of Henry and Marguerita (Alden) Evers, who came to the United States in May, 1884, from Germany, and located in their present home in Cass County. The parents of our subject came to this county in August, 1874, and settled near Kearney, in Buffalo County, Neb., where they are still living. Mr. Jasper owns 640 acres of valuable land in that vicinity, and is extensively and successfully engaged in farming.

The entire family are Presbyterian in religion, and solid Democrats in politics, in which they take great interest, eagerly reading all the literature that throws any light on the subject, keeping themselves well informed on the issues, and thus qualifying themselves to vote intelligently at the ballot box. The subject of this sketch is a man of more than ordinary keenness of intellect and strength of character; he is active and industrious, and through these traits has prospered much since coming to this country, and he is well regarded by his neighbors, and has proved an invaluable citizen of Platts-mouth. He and his wife have had born to them three sons—Martin, Fred and Otto.

WILLIAM M. TUCKER, one of the most practical and thrifty farmers of Liberty Precinct, owns and operates 153 acres of good land on section 6. A stirring, wide-awake man, he is skillful as an agriculturist, prompt in business matters and popular among his neighbors. Although not long a resident here, his proprietorship of this farm dating from February, 1883, he has made for himself a good record and is a leading light in his community.

The first recollections of our subject are of a modest homestead in Perry Township, Tippecanoe Co., Ind., twelve miles from the scene of the famous battle wherein the grandfather of President Benjamin Harrison achieved his national fame. Here the birth of Mr. Tucker took place July 20, 1837. Later in life he removed to Warren County, that State, where he sojourned for a period of seven years, and thence came to this county.

Moses and Louisa (Gerard) Tucker, the parents of our subject, were natives of Ohio, where they spent their early years, but removed before their marriage to Indiana and were married in that State. They settled on a farm in Tippecanoe County, and the mother died in Perry Township about 1863, at the age of forty-seven years. Her father, Elias Gerard, also a native of Ohio, migrated to Tippecanoe County, Ind., in 1829, and was married to Miss Hester Burns. Soon afterward they removed from the Buckeye State to Tippecanoe County, Ind., when the country was wild and new and their neighbors were few and far between. There the father spent the remainder of his days, dying when well advanced in years, aged sixty-nine. The mother later went to Illinois and died at the home of Thomas Virgin in LaSalle County, when about seventy-eight or seventy-nine years old. She came of a long-lived family, her mother having survived to be an extreme old age.

Moses Tucker, the father of our subject, after the death of his first wife was married to Miss Mary Hutchinson. They lived in Indiana until the year 1883, and then coming to this county located in Liberty Precinct on a farm of 120 acres, where they are still living in the enjoyment of good health. Mr. Tucker is now seventy-two years of age. He is the son of Ephraim Tucker, a native of Pennsylvania, of unusually strong and rugged frame, and who was all his life engaged in agricultural pursuits. The latter left the mining regions while a single man and going to Hamilton County, Ohio, was there married to Miss Sarah Master. About 1830 they moved to Indiana, settling among the pioneers of Tippecanoe County, where they spent the remainder of their days. Grandfather Tucker and his excellent wife were widely and favorably known throughout that section for their hospitality and kindness of heart. The record of their children is as follows: David C. is a resident of Nebraska; Nancy J. is the wife of James E. Ballis, a farmer of Lincoln Precinct, living about four miles south of the city in Lancaster County; Charlotte married Buel Virgin and is living on a farm in Perry Township, Tippecanoe Co., Ind.; William M. was reared to man's estate and married near the place of his birth, in 1859, Miss Sarah E. Staley. This lady was also born in Perry Township, Ind., Feb. 6, 1841, and is the daughter of Meredith and Mary (Sense) Staley, who are now both deceased, having spent their last years in Perry Township. They were natives of Ohio, and removed to Indiana in 1829, experiencing with the people around them the privations and hardships incident to pioneer life.

Mrs. Tucker was the elder of the two daughters born to her parents and is the only surviving member of the family. Her sister, Melinda J., became the wife of Thomas Collins of Tippecanoe County, Ind., and died in February, 1888, leaving four children. To our subject and his excellent wife there have been born six sons and three daughters, three of whom are deceased. Cephas and William C. died at the age of three years; Jessie died when an interesting little girl of seven years; their eldest son, Willis O., married Miss Minerva Schlestemyer and they live on a farm in Mt. Pleasant Precinct. Benjamin O., Alpha A., Mary L., Lilly J. and Arthur B. are at home with their parents.

Mr. Tucker has always maintained a warm interest in the temperance work and is now identified with the Prohibition party. Both he and his wife are members in good standing of the United Brethren Church, with which their families have been connected for some time back. Mr. Tucker in 1883 was nominated for County Commissioner for the Second District by the Prohibitionists and has been four times sent as a delegate to the State Conventions. He works as he votes, and forms no unimportant factor in the temperance cause of this region.

JOHAN GILMORE. This representative pioneer of Cass County is the owner of 640 acres of land, and his homestead on section 26 in Mount Pleasant Precinct. He was born in Highland County, Ohio, Nov. 12, 1824, and is the son of Andrew and Jane (Work) Gilmore, who were natives of Pennsylvania. The grandparents were natives of the North of Ireland, whence they emigrated to America in the latter part of 1700.

To the parents of our subject there were born seven children, of whom the following survive, namely: James, a resident of Mt. Pleasant Precinct, this county; Martha, Mrs. Wright, a widow and a resident of Jefferson County, this State; George, who continues in Highland County, Ohio; Alexander, of Jefferson County, Neb., and John, our subject. The parents settled in Highland County, Ohio, during its pioneer days, and there our subject was reared to manhood, receiving his education in the subscription schools. These were carried on in a log house with greased paper for window panes and the other furnishings popular at that time and locality. Mr. G., however, has gained the greater part of his education by reading.

Upon reaching man's estate Mr. Gilmore was married, in Ohio, in March, 1841, to Miss Rachel Anderson, a native of Highland County, and the daughter of James and Rachel Anderson, who were also early settlers of that region. Mr. A. served as a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and by his first wife was the father of three children—Rinehard, now a resident of Mt. Pleasant Precinct; Lafayette, in Highland County, Ohio, and Columbus, also in this county. The mother of these died in 1855. His second marriage in 1859 was with Miss Nancy Massey, daughter of Joseph Massey. The issue of this union is recorded as follows: Emma is the wife of Asa Davis, of this county; George, John E.; Ida and Thomas are attending the State Normal School at Peru.

About 1853 Mr. Gilmore came to this county and pre-empted 160 acres of land on section 32, Mt. Pleasant Precinct, and himself turned the first furrow. It had not then been surveyed. He lived there a number of years, effecting considerable improvement, but about 1868 changed his residence to his present location. All his property has been the accumulation of his own industry, as he started out in life without means. He votes the straight Democratic ticket.

—❦—

WA. FLOWER. In compiling the biographies of the prominent men of Cass County the volume would by no means be complete without mention of Elam L. Flower, who was the first settler at Weeping Water, and who is now deceased. In March, 1856, he located upon the present site of that now flourishing town, when there was not the remotest indication of its future importance, not even a building to designate the spot, and the nearest neighbor eight miles away, at or near Mt. Pleasant. This scion of a hardy race realized the fact that he had taken upon himself an almost herculean task, but he viewed undismayed the country around him and resolved to stay. The results of his life and labors are depicted, in connection with the career of one of his near descendants, in fact his son, the subject of this sketch.

Elam L. Flower was born in Clayton, Jefferson Co., N. Y., April 11, 1819, and came from a family which traced its ancestry back 800 years, to the year 1105, and to England. The first representative in America was Lamrock Flower, son of Capt. William Flower, third son of Sir William Flower, and who came to America in 1685, and settled in Hartford, Conn. From him descended in a direct line the subject of this record.

We find the Flower family for 600 years prior to their arrival in America prominent in war and the incumbents of public offices, from the borough to the English Parliament. Two of them received direct from their Sovereign titles of nobility for valiant services rendered the Government. One member of the family of that time married a daughter of the Fordhams, who were also people of note, both in peace and war. In "Fox's History of Martyrs" they are spoken of, especially one William Flower, as having been burned at the stake on account of his religious belief. After one hand had been cut off and the fire kindled he would not recant, and thus suffered an agonizing death for the sake of his principles. A descendant of the eldest son of Sir William Flower holds the title of Viscount and Baron; his name is Jeffry Flower, and he lives grandly in Castle Darrow, County Kilkenny, Ireland.

We find various branches of the descendants of Lamrock Flower prominent in the Revolutionary War, and in State, county and local offices. Three of them have been members of the United States Senate at different times. One, Roswell P. Flower, of New York State, aspired to the nomination for the Presidency in 1884.

Lamrock Flower settled in Hartford, Conn., in 1685, over 200 years ago, and was there married the following year. He became the father of eight children, the eighth of whom was a son, Joseph Flower. The latter was born at Hartford, July 24, 1706, and was married, Oct. 25, 1727, to Sarah, daughter of Brigadier Samuel Wright, of the same place. To them were born eleven children. Timothy, the ninth child and fourth son of Joseph Flower and Sarah Wright, was born at Hartford, Oct. 12, 1743, and married Anna Smith, of Lyons, Conn., Sept. 13, 1766. He died at Feeding Hills, Mass., in October, 1834, at the age of ninety-one years. He had been a farmer all his life. They became the parents of seven children, and the mother died. The second wife was Hannah Spencer, and they had three children. Joseph Warren Flower, the seventh child of the first marriage, was born May 10, 1778, at Feeding Hills, Mass., and married Lois Belden, of Weathersfield, Conn.; he was a Methodist minister and a farmer. He died at Clayton, N. Y., in 1834. His first wife, Lois, had died Nov. 28, 1826.

The children of Joseph Warren and Lois Flower were: Henrietta, born at Weathersfield, Conn., Jan. 25, 1799, and who died in infancy; Lorenzo Warren was born at Litchfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., July 25, 1800, and died at Lockport, N. Y., Aug. 10, 1822; Mahala D. was born at Litchfield, N. Y., in March, 1802, and died at Clayton, N. Y., in 1826; Henry and Henrietta Louise (twins), were born at Lockport, N. Y., in 1805; Henry died in infancy; Henrietta Louise married Rev. Elisha (Pratt) Cook, and died at Oswego, N. Y., Dec. 25, 1876; Timothy Smith was born in Lockport, N. Y., May 22, 1808, and died at Fredericksburg, Iowa, Oct. 13, 1863; Joseph Manley was born in Lorain, N. Y., Feb. 29, 1812, and died in Canada in 1853; Sarah Ann, also born in Lorain in 1814, died in Wisconsin; Elam Lagrand was born in Clayton, N. Y., April 11, 1819, and died at Weeping Water, this county, June 28, 1872.

Joseph Warren Flower married for his second wife Anna Stevens, and they had three children, two of whom died in infancy. The survivor, Stephen Warren, was born in Clayton, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1832, being the youngest half-brother of Elam Flower. He has been twice married, and there were born no children. He is living in Toledo, Ohio, and is the only one surviving of the children of Joseph Warren Flower. He represents the fifth generation of the family in America.

Elam Legrand Flower, the father of our subject, was married, to Sarah (Friend) Fisher, April 27, 1841, at Watertown, N. Y. This lady was the eldest child of Abijah Fisher and Sarah Friend, and was born June 28, 1818. Their first child, Gilbert Manley, was born at Orleans, Jefferson Co., N. Y., Aug. 30, 1842; the second, Louisa Berintha, July 28, 1844, at Orleans, N. Y.; the third, Warren Abijah, was born at Brighton, Iowa, Dec. 10, 1850; Clarence Pratt was also born at Brighton, Feb. 13, 1853; Perl Fisher was born May 6, 1855, in the same place; Florence May was born Nov. 11, 1859, at Millville, Fremont Co., Iowa; Charles Ernest was born May 6, 1862, in Weeping Water, this county. They are all married and residents of Nebraska, and six of the seven are living in Weeping Water Precinct.

The father of Elam L. Flower dying when he was a boy, Elam was left to the tender keeping of a guardian, who put him in a field filled with thistles and wheat, bare-footed, to rake bundles as fast as the guardian could bind them, and to add to his comfort would tramp on his heels if he did not keep out of his way. The youngster naturally rebelled against this treatment, and soon afterward, when a lad of thirteen years, ran away from his cruel taskmaster. At the age of sixteen he had acquired sufficient education to pass an examination for school teacher, at which he employed himself one term. He then enlisted in the army, during a small eruption between Canada and the United States, but peace was soon declared and he was honorably discharged. He received in compensation for his services a warrant for 160 acres of land, which he could not make available until 1859. Three years after he came to Nebraska.

After his discharge from the army Elam Flower attended the academy in Watertown, N. Y., then resumed teaching, which he followed afterward for a number of years. In the meantime he was married, and about 1848 removed to Illinois, where they lived until the spring of 1850. Their next residence was at Brighton, Iowa, where Mr. Flower followed farming and teaching combined. He became owner of forty acres of land near Brighton, but as it was nearly all timber and poor soil, he sold it for a fair price in gold, and with the proceeds started on a further quest for the land of milk and honey. He journeyed across the Hawkeye State with a team, in the month of February, and not finding anything to suit him within its limits, crossed the Missouri River at Kenosha about the 20th of March, 1856. This place was then a hamlet of five or six log houses.

From Kenosha Mr. Flower was accompanied on his journey by Durell Reed, then a lad sixteen years of age. They passed through the present town of Mt. Pleasant, where a few adventurous settlers had located, and which was ten miles west of Kenosha. No settlers had ventured beyond this point. They finally arrived at the falls of Weeping Water, known in the Indian language as "Keet-so-tee-te-cutt," the water which cries. This section of country greatly pleased the travelers, especially Mr. Flower, and he staked out a claim, resolving to settle there.

Cass County at this time had not been subjected to the Government survey. Mr. Flower commenced the building of a log house near the falls, and the site of that humble dwelling was four rods west of the west end of I street, north of the coal shutes of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, as it now stands. The house later was used for a dwelling, church, school and stable, and greatly to the regret of the present generation was torn down in 1880, by Dr. M. M. Butler, the present owner of the property.

Mr. Flower and his young companion had been but a week in their new quarters when the Indians made a raid upon them, stealing their horses and taking them to their camp near the present town of Waverly. Mr. Flower and a new comer, Mr. Milligan, followed in hot pursuit on foot. The prairie had recently been burned, and the ground was black and destitute of vegetation. The melted snow and recent rains had rendered the ground soft, so that they could easily track the marauders, and finally overtook them in the neighborhood of what is now Waverly.

The pursuers followed them down the stream of Callahan Creek in hopes of finding a sheltered nook wherein they could encamp for the night. Their surprise and joy may be imagined when they suddenly came upon a camp of Government land surveyors, about sixteen in number, who invited them to partake of their fare, and to whom they related the story of their wrongs.

In the morning the majority of these men volunteered to go with Mr. Flower and Mr. Milligan to the Indian village, about ten miles distant. The Indians had entered into a treaty with the Government, and considered the surveyors its emissaries. Not wishing to be caught in violation of their treaty, when they saw the company coming over the top of the ridge, they whipped Mr. Flower's horses out of their camp, so as not to be caught in possession of stolen horses. This ended the first Indian trouble. Mr. Flower returned to his claim, and went to work on his house, having it in comfortable condition when his wife and five children arrived with a small party of friends, about the 6th of May. He then began breaking the ground, and put in a small crop, from which he obtained a very good harvest, under the circumstances.

On the 1st of July, that year, there occurred an "Indian scare," and about 150 men repaired to Weeping Water, from Plattsmouth, Nebraska City and Omaha, to protect the settlers. They brought a cannon from Omaha, and in a reconnoitre one Indian was captured, and five men occupied themselves in guarding him in an uncompleted log house. During the evening the Indian made complaint of being "heap sick," and a number of them were sent out with him to walk him around in the fresh air. They halted near a small oak shrub, the Indian having a buffalo robe over his shoulder. Their surprise may be imagined when after watching the savage half an hour or more they went up to shake him, and give him to understand it was time for him to return to the house, they found no Indian, nothing but a buffalo robe over a scrub-oak bush. As they had treated him well, and there were no other Indians in the vicinity, the men disbanded and returned to their various places.

Under the claims law then extant Mr. Flower held two 160-acre tracts, one being a part of the western portion of the present city of Weeping Water, the other was subsequently known as the Hank Hubbard farm. Before the "scare" a party of men, five in number, adventurers, with Hiram Craney as leader, came to the settlement and sojourned a few weeks. Afterward, they coveting one of the claims of Mr. Flower, and others belonging to his friends, conceived the brilliant plan of inaugurating another Indian war, so that the settlers might be obliged to leave the valley and they could then "jump" the claims.

These parties gave the settlers to understand that they were going to leave the country, and it was supposed they were gone, but they returned shortly in the guise of Indians, and skulking around the stony cliffs at a distance, succeeded in making the settlers believe that hostilities were intended. The settlers, being poorly supplied with arms and ammunition, held a meeting, and Mr. F. volunteered to go after the necessary articles if they would gather the five families into one house, and stand guard until his return. In his absence these frontier ruffians tore down his pre-emption shanty, on the place now known as the Hank Hubbard Farm, and others with it, then going to the land office in Nebraska City, made oath, one for another, that Mr. Flower and others had abandoned their claims. These parties were then allowed to file upon them, and under the law there was no redress.

The parties committing this outrage were well armed, and the settlers did not dare to resent their actions. They got the land from the Government, but sold out the first opportunity, and before long the country was rid of them. Hiram Craney later went to Utah and joined the Mormons. In the fall of 1856 Elam Flower commenced building a mill near the site of the present Clinton Mills, digging races and getting out stone for a dam. He cut into logs the best walnut trees he could find, and hauled them to the mouth of the Weeping Water, about seven miles above Nebraska City, and ferried them across the river in a flatboat, where prior to this a sawmill had been started. He had lumber sawed to use in making an overshot water wheel, and other timbers for the mill.

Mr. Flower had come to this section of country with a reasonable amount of capital, but finally found that his expenses were exceeding his income. About this time two young men came into the settlement, one claiming to have money, and the other recommending himself as a fine mechanic. Their names were Fair and Nace. Mr. Flower took them into partnership, but after several months no money appearing, and one of the fellows becoming very abusive and overbearing, he sold his interest in the business, taking notes without security. There being no deed for the land, there was thus no opportunity for placing a mortgage. William Reed and his sons, coming in soon after, the firm of Fair & Nace sold the property to Reed for cash, and skipped for California without paying Mr. Flower.

William Reed & Sons got this mill in operation in 1861, but did not begin grinding wheat into flour until two years later. The principal parts of this structure were later removed to Millford by Mr. Reed. But to return to the winter of 1856-57, which was noted throughout the Northwest for its severity. On the 1st of December the storm commenced, and for ninety days there was continual frost, without warmth enough to thaw the snow on the south side of the most sheltered nooks, only one day in three months. "Lo! the poor Indian," who would steal horses and commit depredations in warmer weather, was now in a starving condition. It was then the forgiving nature of Mr. Flower asserted itself, and it was noticed by his neighbors that he frequently sheltered and fed straggling members of the tribe, until his winter provisions began to run short. In the beginning of winter a crust had formed on the snow, and new snow falling upon this, and drifting by the heavy winds and blizzards made it impossible to get a team through, and in many instances deer were caught and killed with axes or clubs, but as they were almost starved to death, the meat was nearly valueless.

Over these drifts one day Mr. Flower took his hand sled and started for Kenosha, twenty miles away, where had been started a store. He arrived at his destination after one day's travel, and the next morning started homeward, his sled loaded with flour, bacon, coffee, etc. He was obliged to face a Northwestern driving snow storm and thus tugged along all day without road or trail to guide him. By keeping due West, however, with the aid of his knowledge of the lay of the land, he found himself about four miles from home just as night was coming on. He did not dare to attempt crossing another ridge, as another blizzard was setting in. Mr. Flower had to pull his sled down Cedar Creek, a small stream that emptied into the Weeping Water, and after considerable trouble succeeded in finding a cabin that was located near Jim Sperry's brick kiln. He supposed it was empty, but what was his surprise on pushing the door open to find it was inhabited by a widow, whose husband had died late in the fall. She had living with her two children, aged three and five years, both girls, and a half-witted nephew nearly man grown. The widow and nephew had both frozen their hands trying to kindle a fire with powder and caps, and some cotton from a quilt had been tried, but they had failed on account of so much snow being in the house. Mr. Flower found the cabin dreary and cold, with two inches of snow all over inside the house. A few more hours and all would have been over with these wretched creatures. Mr. Flower, like all well regulated frontiersmen, had matches in his pocket and found plenty of wood close by in the snow, which he brought in and there was soon a glowing fire. He then shoveled the snow out of the house, brought in his provisions, and they had a royal frontier feast all around.

The next day, putting the children in the feather bed, with the blankets over them, and leaving part of the provisions in the cabin, he started out accompanied by the woman, Mrs. Carr, and her nephew, to the cabin of Mr. Flower. This structure, only 16x16 feet square, they found upon their arrival was already full of Indians and storm-bound white men, in all twenty-two persons. Mr. Flower and the other settlers got through with that terrible winter as best they could.

We find the following in regard to the town of Weeping Water, but Mr. Flower held other claims under the claim law. In the United States Land Office at Lincoln is the record of property in the City of Weeping Water, as follows:

Book A., Page 39—(Elam L. Flower, to the public.)—Claim Certificate, filed April 24, 1856.

This is to certify that I have located a claim in Cass County, Territory of Nebraska, for the use of six individuals for town site. Said site comprising the following, to wit: Northwest  $\frac{1}{4}$  of Northwest  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section I, town 10, range 11 East, with other lands, and containing in all 1,640 acres, more or less. File received the 24th day of April, A. D., 1856. By G. H. Brown, Deputy Recorder of Deeds.

This was a great scheme, and this 1,640 acres of land was platted into three towns, on paper, all adjoining and named respectively, Caledonia, Grand Rapids and Weeping Water—divided into shares. But as it was Government land and not yet in the market no deeds could be given, although some of the shares were sold for a trifle. A few members of the town company inaugurated a scheme to commence East and put the town shares of Caledonia on the market, which would have been a swindle; but Mr. Flower put a stop to this at once; and eventually the whole business was abandoned. There was no town known as Weeping Water until the year 1880, although the first store was started in 1867, when Eugene L. Reed, (of whom a sketch will be found elsewhere in this volume,) Frank Wolcott and others organized the village of Weeping Water.

Weeping Water was not formally organized as a city of the second class until the first of May, 1888, and it was then found there were enough inhabitants for it to become a city of the second class. Its growth and development has been detailed elsewhere in this work. In the fall of 1888 the inhabitants numbered 2,200, and by the various additions which have been made from time to time to its area, it now covers nearly as much ground as the "paper town" of 1856 did, with the difference in the number of population. There are now a score or so of frame store buildings, all occupied, several brick blocks, hundreds of fine residences, two main lines of railroad, grain elevators, mills, various industries and the other enterprises naturally belonging to a flourishing and rapidly growing city in the heart of a rich farming country.

Upon the coming of the spring of 1858 Mr. Flower finding difficulty in getting his mill started, and apprehending it would be a long time before it would pay, and in consideration of the dishonesty of his partners, sold out and moved across the river into Millville, Iowa, opposite Kenosha, which was then but a steamboat landing, although there were slight indications of a village being started. A saw-mill had been started by Sidney Treat, and there were about twenty families in the place. Mr. Flower was soon recognized as a substantial citizen and in due time was elected Justice of the Peace; he was also appointed Postmaster, and set up a grocery store. The postoffice was named Buchanan.

The place where this village once stood has long been the bed of the Missouri River. In 1860 Mr. Flower returned to this county, taking up his abode near Mt. Pleasant, where he staid two seasons, then moved to a point five miles west of Weeping Water. In the meantime he received a land warrant good for 160 acres, as the reward of service in the army when he was a boy about sixteen years of age. This was the southeast quarter of section 35, township 11, range 13, of Cass County. He laid his warrant, proved it up and battled with many difficulties for a number of years—drouth and far-away market included. Owing to the expense of fencing his land, which was required by law, and under the general impression of that day that there was no use of trying to farm on a piece of upland, he moved to the land now owned by his eldest son, G. M. Flower. This was then a ranch lying along the great overland Government wagon road to the Western forts and the emigrant road to Pike's Peak and California, and included the southwest quarter of section 31, township 11, range 11, of Cass County.

Here Elam Flower turned his attention to stock-raising, also keeping hay, grain and other supplies for travelers. In 1865 he began freighting with one team to Ft. Kearney. After making one trip he enlarged his facilities to four teams, and with his three eldest boys, Gilbery Manley, Warren A. and Clarence P., made several trips to the forts and Denver. In the spring of 1866, in addition to Denver he took in Salt Lake City, this enterprise occupying a period of eighteen months. He entered Salt Lake City too late in the fall to recross the mountains, and consequently was compelled with his boys to winter in that vicinity on the Severe River, southwest of Salt Lake City 150 miles, and forty miles from any settlement.

Mr. Flower, however, purchased a supply of school books before leaving the City of the Saints and busied himself instructing his boys and hearing their lessons during the winter in a small shanty on the banks of the Severe River. Upon the starting of the grass in the spring father and sons set out eastward with their teams across the mountains. Clarence and his father had an attack of the mountain fever, from which the son soon recovered, but not so with the father. Although he lived until June 28, 1872, he was never able to do any work. He suffered greatly thereafter, although his natural energy sufficed to keep him off his bed most of the time. He returned to Cass County in August, 1867, and lived on the ranch, which began to be settled all around by homesteaders.

The elder Flower took great interest in the Grange movement being agitated at that time, identifying himself with the order and being elected Master. He also occupied other local offices. Considering his career, as heretofore noted, it is hardly necessary to speak of the estimation in which he was held by the people of this county. He was an honest and upright man in all his dealings, and made for himself a record which his descendants may look upon with pride. It was generally conceded that "Uncle Elam," as every one called him, had no enemies, and after his death the last sad rites were attended by the largest gathering of people ever known in Weeping Water. Politically, he is a stanch Republican, and it is believed he was the first man in Nebraska to set about the formation of the Union Club, later known as the Union League. Of this William Reed was the commanding officer and Mr. Flower his lieutenant. Mr. Flower had an intense hatred of anything savoring of disloyalty to the Union, and on more than one occasion forced members of the Rebel element to withdraw their expressions of sympathy with the Confederacy.

As mentioned above, there were five sons and two daughters. These are all living, all residents of Nebraska, and with one exception residing in or near Weeping Water. One son, Clarence, is a resident of Frontier County. Warren A., the third child and second son, was born Dec. 10, 1850, in Brighton, Iowa; P. F., the fifth child and fourth son, was born May 6, 1855, and these two are among the prominent business men of Weeping Water.

Warren A. Flower was a little lad of five and one-half years when his parents came to Nebraska, and young as he was he had already attended school. After that he never saw the inside of a school-house for years and he only studied at home a very little until after he was fifteen years old. He then entered the school at Mt. Pleasant, where he was a pupil. After the trip to Utah he returned to school at Mt. Pleasant, attending three months; then at Weeping Water school a short time, but as his home was five miles from the village he abandoned his studies until a more favorable season. When nineteen years old he resumed his books, but was obliged to give them up soon on account of the illness of his father.

Warren Flower after becoming of age, not satisfied with his lack of education, repaired to Brighton, Iowa, and making his home with his uncle attended the graded school there two terms. He would have continued, but on account of failing health caused by the climate and close confinement was obliged to withdraw once more. He then began learning the photograph business, which he took up readily, and ere long set up a little gallery of his own at Richland, Iowa, where he sojourned a short time, then coming to Weeping Water operated a gallery one winter. We next find him in Syracuse a few months, but he finally abandoned photography for the time and going to Jasper County, Neb., took up a tract of land. Upon this he operated in summer and made pictures in winter at a town a few miles distant.

Like his father before him, Warren Flower, upon reaching manhood, was discovered to possess excellent qualities as a business man and a citizen. In 1873 he was appointed Sheriff, and the following year he was elected Surveyor of Jasper County, Neb., although he did not qualify, as the county was new and the settlers few, so there was little to do in this line. He was also on the Returning Board of Jasper County at the time of the election of Zediker, and the adoption of the State Constitution, when Harmon, a Democrat, tried to steal the ballots of Zediker, the Republican.

Warren A. Flower was married Jan. 21, 1876, at Plum Creek, Dawson Co., Neb., to Miss Mary Ann, daughter of Joseph Maycook, at that time Treasurer of Gosper County, Neb. Mrs. Flower was born June 14, 1858, at Buckingham, England. The children of this marriage are Albert Warren, who was born at Stowe, Frontier Co., Neb., May 2, 1880; and Lilly Antoinette, born in Weeping Water Feb. 18, 1884. Finding the same trouble in Western Nebraska that his honored father had met with when coming to Cass County, Mr. W. A. Flower after an absence of ten years returned to Weeping Water to find it a flourishing railroad town, the farmers raising fine crops, which they were able to convey to good markets, a prosperous artist operating a well-appointed gallery, and other concomitants of an enterprising and intelligent community.

PERL F. FLOWER, fifth child and fourth son of Elam L. Flower, was born at Brighton, Iowa, May 6, 1855, and came to Weeping Water, Neb., with his parents, when a child only one year old. He was left at home with his mother and two younger children when only a lad of nine years (while his father and three older brothers were freighting, on their two years' trip to the great Salt Lake City), looking after the small herd of cattle, doing chores summer and winter, and helping his mother all he could. He was known as "mother's boy" even after he had grown to be a man. His kindness toward his fellowmen, and his honest, upright dealing with all, gained for him warm friends in all who knew him, far and near. His schooling was very limited, as he either worked or herded cattle continually until a man grown. Nevertheless by a few weeks in school and plenty of home instruction he attained a good education, pressing onward and upward.

When our subject became of age he bought a farm near the home place of 160 acres, broke up the raw prairie, farmed and improved until he got it in a high state of cultivation, and owns the same at present date. A few years later we find him buying and shipping stock from Missouri to Nebraska. Perl F. has broken up over 1000 acres of wild land in this vicinity. Therefore he, like his father before him, has always taken an active part when he could do so, to help others, and has in the last few years induced many Eastern people to migrate to this new and beautiful country.

About the 1st of January, 1887, our subject and W. A. Flower, in company with Dr. Lang, started a drug store. The following August he bought out Dr. Lang, and Flower Bros. have since pursued that business together, and from their widespread acquaintance, winning ways and square dealing with all, they control a generous patronage throughout the surrounding country. He was married, Feb. 9, 1887, to Miss Cora Olive Bellinger, at Clinton, N. Y., eldest daughter of James C. and Arminda (Paige) Bellinger, of that place. She is a descendant of Adam Bellinger, Esq., Col. Christopher Bellinger, Col. Peter Bellinger, Capt. Peter Bellinger and Gen. Nicholas Hercomer, all of old Ft. Hercomer, now Herkimer City, Herkimer Co., N. Y., found in the history of the Bellinger and Hercomer families of that place, and traced back as far as the first settling of the beautiful Mohawk Valley, in 1725. Thus we find again the descendants of two noted families joined together. Cora O. Bellinger was born at Walesville, Oneida Co., N. Y., April 30, 1864. She attended select school at Oriskany Falls for a number of years, and finally finished her education with a four years' course at the Houghton Seminary, of Clinton. She came to Weeping Water with her husband, in March, 1887, and was so well pleased with this place that she induced her father to remove with his family, which he did in September, 1888, and soon after embarked in the business known as The New York Clothing Store, Bellinger & Sons, proprietors.

BEAL HARVEY DIMMITT is a prosperous farmer living in Elmwood Precinct. He was born in Clermont County, Ohio, Jan. 31, 1845. He has very faint recollections of that State, and of the journey by steamboat to Peoria, Ill. His educational advantages were those of the early schools of Illinois, before the admirable school system of that State was introduced. At the age of sixteen his name was enrolled as a volunteer among the defenders of his country, at the breaking out of the Civil War. Being too young he was rejected, but he is none the less deserving of the credit due any soldier, as it was not anything on his part that prevented him from taking an active part in the struggle that ensued.

Mr. Dimmitt and Miss Mary Caroline Robbins were married Oct. 7, 1869. The lady was a native of Tazewell County, Ill., and is a daughter of Jacob and Harriet (Walker) Robbins. In 1877 they removed to Nebraska, where they settled on 160 acres of land on section 29, and have made the improvements which now surround them. Beginning on the wild land, he has by hard work and diligent application secured a farm which, in fertility and productiveness, is excelled by few in the County. He planted groves, and set out an orchard of choice fruit, of the varieties best adapted to the climate, thus securing to himself many comforts, as well as a source of some profit, and he has projected other improvements, which, when completed, will make his farm one of the most complete in the county.

Eight children have been born to these worthy people—Wilson E., Edward A., Bertha L., Charles A., William A. (now deceased), James Roy, Claudius and Louis. They are at home with their parents, and each and every one take a lively interest in the success and well being of the entire family. The father of our subject was James S.; the mother was Sarah Walker. The father was born in West Virginia, near the Potomac River; the mother's birthplace was Ohio. Our subject represents Scotch descent, received from the father, and German descent, received from the mother's side. His father settled in Highland County, Ohio, then removed to Clermont County, where he was married. In 1852 he came from Ohio to Tazewell County, Ill., removing thence to Woodford County, in the same State, where he purchased land and lived until 1877, when he came to Cass County, Elmwood Precinct, and purchased 320 acres of land from the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, located on section 29, and 160 acres on section 30. He died, aged seventy years, in 1882. The mother is now seventy years old, and makes her home with our subject. A family of five children were born to the father and mother of our subject, namely: Edwin, Sarah L., Beal Harvey (our subject), Ezra and Henry.

Mr. D. is a genial, whole-souled farmer, very sociable, a good conversationalist, quick to see the humorous side of life, and enjoying to the fullest extent listening to a good story, and in turn can relate one with equal relish and inimitable style. His wife is an excellent lady, good looking and hospitable, having a smile and a good word for all. She is certainly entitled to a first place among the many good wives and mothers of Nebraska. In politics Mr. D. is strongly Republican. He is highly esteemed by all the members of the community in which he lives. Up to this time he has filled no public office except that of Constable, the duties of which he discharged in a very highly creditable manner.

C J. MARTIN. Among the many fine farms in Cass County, whose broad acres, yielding abundant harvests, affording evidence of skillful and careful cultivation, and with their commodious and substantial farm buildings and neat surroundings, forming a pleasant feature in the landscape, those of our subject, one in Plattsmouth Township, where he makes his home, and the other in Rock Bluff Township, are as valuable as any. Mr. Martin is numbered among the early pioneers of this county, and his fortunes have grown with its growth, as he has risen from poverty to affluence, by the exercise of a steady determination to succeed by thrifty and industrious habits.

The birthplace of our subject was in the north of France, Dec. 12, 1832. His father, Charles Martin, who was born in the same locality, was reared to agricultural pursuits. At the age of twenty-one he joined the army, and served four years, was with his regiment in the war with Spain, and fought in some of the most important battles. In one of these he was severely wounded and was discharged from the service on account of disability. He returned to his native France, and followed farming there for several years, employing his time in the winter season in a woodwork establishment. In 1842, with his wife and six children, he set sail from Havre on an American-bound vessel, and landed at New York twenty-four days later. He located in Stark County, Ohio, buying a tract of partly improved land there, and engaged in farming there for two years. He then sold and moved to Indiana, going by the lake and in wagons, as there were no railways in that part of the country in that day. He bought land in Allen County, seven miles north of Ft. Wayne, then a small village. He built a hewed log house of the most primitive style, there being no sawed lumber or nails used in its construction, split puncheon was used for floor, door and window casings, and the roof was made of shakes, held in place by the weight of poles. In the years of hard labor that followed he performed the pioneer task of clearing a farm, which remained his home until his death in 1862. The maiden name of his wife was Frances Misgny, and she was also a native of France. She now lives on the old homestead, at the venerable age of eighty-six years. They were the parents of nine children, seven of whom grew to maturity, as follows: August, C. J., Lizzie, Delphis, Jane, Mary, Christina. The two youngest were born in America.

Our subject was ten years of age when he left the home of his birth in France, and accompanied his parents to this country. He had attended school in his native land in the winter season, and as soon as large enough he had been set to herding cattle in summer. After coming to America he assisted his father in clearing a farm, continuing to live with his parents until he was twenty-one. He had, however, commenced working out at fourteen years of age, being thus employed the greater part of the year, receiving from $8 to $10 a month in payment for his services. When he attained his majority he commenced to run an engine in a furniture factory, his wages amounting to $7 a week, out of which he had to pay his board. He ran the engine for three years, when the company suspended. He was then engaged as an engineer in a round house at Ft. Wayne. In the fall of 1857 he started for the Territory of Nebraska, accompanied by his wife, coming by rail to St. Louis, and thence by steamer to Plattsmouth. This was then but a little hamlet, with a few habitations, four stores, and a saw and grist mill. The land around here was held by the claimants, who asked exorbitant sums for their claims, and as our subject's means were limited he could not afford to buy a claim and enter it at the land-office, as the men were all banded together to defend their property. As he could not get land he sought employment in a sawmill one winter, and then bought a pair of oxen and engaged at teaming. In 1859 he prepared to go to Pike's Peak, but before he started emigrants returning from there told such discouraging stories of their ill-luck that he concluded not to venture. He rented a farm three miles south of the city, and three years later he had been so prosperous since coming to the Territory that he was enabled to buy it. He continued to reside on that place until June, 1885. During that time he had been more than ordinarily successful in his work, had made money, and invested it in land, and had become the owner of 363 acres in Plattsmouth, all in one body. Besides he has thirty acres of valuable timber land in this township, and a fine farm of eighty acres in Rock Bluff Township. On his Plattsmouth farm he has erected a commodious, conveniently arranged brick house, and a stone barn, besides a good set of frame buildings.

Mr. Martin was married, March 3, 1857, to Miss Lucy Pagnard, and they have four children living; Charles L., May N., Lillie Rose and Ettie Belle. Mrs. Martin was born in the village of Moutier, the Canton of Berne, Switzerland. Her father, Luther Pagnard, was born in Renau, in the same canton, and his father, David Pagnard, was also a native of Moutier, his wife's name Augustine, born in Jocot Guillarnod, where he spent his entire life, working at his trade of watchmaker. Mrs. Martin's father, Luther Pagnard, was reared on a farm, and in early manhood married Jane Susan Frances Achpacker, also a native of the Canton of Bern. Her father, Jean Pierre Achpacker, was born in the same canton, of German parentage. In the spring of 1850 Mr. Pagnard set sail from Hayre, with his family, on board an American-bound vessel "Metoka," and in the month of May, twenty-six days later, landed at New York with his wife and four children. He located in Newville, thirty miles south of Ft. Wayne, and renting land there, began to carry on farming. But his health soon failed, and in August, 1851, he passed away from the scenes of earth. Mrs. Martin's mother died at the home of a daughter, Adelia Zemmermann, in St. Joseph, Mo. She had been twice married. By her first marriage she had four children, namely: Lucy, Adelia, Elizabeth and Luther. Lucy was born Jan. 12, 1839, and was eleven years old when she emigrated to America. By her first husband's death the mother had been left in poverty with four children, and as she had not the means to support them properly, she yielded them to the care of strangers, and Mrs. Martin went to Ft. Wayne, and there found good homes with strangers, and earned her own living, residing there until her marriage. She is a most estimable lady, an excellent housewife, who looks carefully after her household and the comfort of its inmates, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Martin is a valuable and useful member of this community, standing high as a man and a citizen. In his home he is all that a good husband and a kind father can be, and in his relations with his neighbors he is uniformly obliging and courteous.

GEORGE S. CONKLIN is an energetic farmer and stockman, living on a farm of 160 acres of finely located land on section 19, Salt Creek Precinct. He was born in Jasper County, Ind., forty miles north of Indianapolis, Sept. 7, 1853. In the fall of 1854 his parents removed with their entire family to Henry County, Iowa; from here the Conklins went to Des Moines County, the same State, taking our subject with them, where he lived with his parents until he was fourteen years old, when it was necessary for him to support himself, so he began working out by the month. The greater portion of the education which he obtained was, prior to this time, in the public schools near their home.

At the age of twenty-three our subject was married to Miss Ada E. Van Trump, the daughter of Isaiah and Jemima Van Trump. The lady's father was born in Virginia, and the mother was a native of Ohio. They removed to Eastern Iowa, where they were among the first settlers of that State. Seven children were born to her father by his first union, four sons and three daughters. His first wife died in Illinois, while on their way to Iowa. In course of time he returned to Ohio and married his second wife, to whom there were born eight children: William Harrison, Hiram E., Minerva J., Ada E., the wife of our subject, Frances M., Olive, Andrew Jackson and Charles E. The early home of the lady was in Henry County, Iowa, where she attended the common schools of her neighborhood.

She applied herself diligently to her studies, showing a marked precocity and an unusual ability, distinguishing herself among her classmates by the rapid progress she made. At the age of fourteen she entered the Academy at New London, which she attended for four years. She then engaged in teaching. She entered upon a course in the Wesleyan University at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, but the most of her time until the date of her marriage was spent in teaching. She devoted herself so assiduously to preparing herself to enter her chosen profession of teaching, for fourteen months out of sixteen, that she became the proud holder of a first grade certificate, to procure which she passed an unexcelled examination.

Two years after marriage our subject came with his wife to Nebraska. In 1880 he purchased eighty acres of land from the Burlington and Missouri River Railway Company. In 1885 he purchased another forty acres, and in 1888 he purchased his last forty acres. Previous to his removal to Iowa our subject suffered heavy losses among his cattle from disease and exposure. He regards his coming to Nebraska as the most important and providential act of his life; and he has, through his industry and ingenuity, assisted by the natural adaptability of the State for the successful prosecution of his favorite pursuit—raising cattle—became the owner of a large and valuable stock farm. It is supplied with water by the ever ready windmill, and has a commodious new frame barn, comfortable cattle sheds, convenient and roomy cornercribs, with other buildings designed to shelter and protect his new and latest improved farming implements. He has set out a young orchard of the choicest varieties of fruits, and groves for shelter and ornament. His dwelling house is new, one and one-half stories high, and is fitted with many of the conveniences adapted to make the home life happy and pleasant.

Three children have been born to our subject and his good wife; they are named: Ira Haskell, James Burton and Estella J. The two first are attending school. Mr. Conklin's father, James Conklin, was born in Pennsylvania. His mother, Lucinda, was born in North Carolina. She was a widow, Mrs. Scott, at the time of her marriage with our subject's father, and had a family of three children by her first union. A family of four children was born to her as the result of her second alliance, of whom George S., our subject, is the eldest; James L., Marcus, who died at the age of one year, and Herman. The two surviving brothers are residents of Greeley County, Neb. The father of our subject was married four times. His first marriage was to Frances Clemmens, by whom he had seven children, six boys and one girl. His second marriage was to Lina Stevens, to whom was born two children, both girls. The third marriage was with Miss Lucina Scott, the mother of our subject, who bore him four children, named above. The fourth marriage was to Mrs. (Rumsey) Fairchild, by whom he had five children.

In the person of the subject of this sketch we have a man of more than ordinary enterprise and ability. He, by hard work and close attention to his business, has caused for a verity the desert to blossom as the rose, and now we see fields of waving grain and herds of high grade cattle, and a cheerful, happy home, where a few short years ago was a profitless waste, which would have so continued had he not touched the virgin soil with the magic wand of his genius, resulting in abounding peace and plenty. It is a matter of congratulation to our subject that he can trace his ancestry back to the early years of our Nation; every name on the roll stands for purity and honor, no stigma of wrong or shadow of suspicion resting on any, but every one deserving and receiving the love and esteem of all with whom they came in contact.

The noble-hearted wife of our subject merits especial mention for the manner in which she has supported and seconded the efforts of her husband. Highly educated and refined, she had no hesitancy in leaving her home and friends, and sharing with him the many burdens, which are inevitable to the pioneers who seek to develop a new country. She is handsome and good natured, generous to a fault, while her intelligence and education place her among the leading ladies and most devoted wives and mothers of the great State of Nebraska. The home life is a perfect picture of happiness, where the father's strong right arm and the mother's tender, loving heart, and the gentle prattle of children's voices all unite to make it a perfectly happy American home. The children are particularly lovable, and their education and culture is the one subject that lies nearest the hearts of their parents, which will not be satisfied until each and every member has had every available advantage for fitting themselves to occupy with honor and credit the highest positions in the land.

Mr. Conklin is at present serving his fourth term as a member of the School Board, is an active member of the Knights of Pythias; his political allegiance is with the Democratic party.

WILLIAM B. REYNOLDS is an intelligent and thoroughly practical farmer, who is actively and prosperously prosecuting his vocation on one of the finest farms in Southern Nebraska; 120 acres of his land, that on which he makes his home, lies on sections 34 and 35, Liberty Precinct, and the remaining 120 acres in Otoe County, adjoining his homestead.

The subject of this sketch was born in Clay County, Mo., May 11, 1826. He is of Scotch origin, although his immediate ancestry were of Irish birth. The first of the family to make his appearance on American soil was Joseph Reynolds, great-grandfather of our subject, who was a native of the North of Ireland, and a descendant of the Scotch Presbyterians who had settled in that part of Ireland. He came directly from that country to Virginia when he was a young man, and spent the remainder of his life in the Old Dominion, dying there at a ripe old age. William Reynolds, his son, grandfather of our subject, was born in Virginia, and was reared to the occupation of farmer. He married Elizabeth Fugett, also a native of Virginia, and of German parentage. Soon after marriage they moved from Virginia to Kentucky, and became early pioneers of Garrard County, where most of their children were born. In 1810 Mr. Reynolds and his wife, with quite a large family, made another move toward the distant frontier in Missouri, and finally settled in Howard County on a piece of land now the town site of Fayette, it being a wild, unbroken country around there then. After he became quite an old man William Reynolds again took up his pilgrimage, accompanied by all of his family except some of the children who had died during their sojourn in Howard County, and in 1840 went into Andrew County, then a part of Buchanan County, Mo., and there he and his wife abode until their death, he dying in 1850, at the venerable age of eighty-four years, and his wife, who survived him until 1857, dying at the same age. They were stanch Methodists, and led blameless Christian lives. They had ten children, and their son Reuben R., the father of our subject, was their eldest child. He was born in Garrard County, Ky., in 1799, and was a boy of eleven years when his parents emigrated to Missouri. He attained his majority in Howard County, that State, and was there married to Fannie Monroe. She was born in Garrard County, Ky., in 1801, and was a daughter of William and Agnes (West) Monroe, natives of Virginia. Her father was a cousin of President Monroe. He was a farmer, and had gone to Garrard County in its pioneer days when a young man, and was there married. After their marriage and the birth of some of their children, they migrated to Missouri, and were there all through the troublous times with the Osage and Comanche Indians. They finally moved about 1820 to Clay County, in the same State, and were pioneers there, settling on wild, unbroken land. About 1840 William Monroe made another move with his family, and we next hear of him in Savannah, Andrew Co., Mo., and there he and his wife closed lengthy and useful lives. Mr. Monroe had been very successful in life and had accumulated a large fortune. He was a man of many peculiar habits, but of few words. He was indirectly related to Daniel Boone and Stephen Cooper, the famous pioneers and Indian warriors of Kentucky and Missouri. Reuben Reynolds and wife were married in Howard County, but began their wedded lives in Clay County, where Mr. Reynolds entered land from the Government and engaged in farming. Reuben Reynolds was appointed Colonel of Militia by Gov. John B. Clark, during the trouble with the Mormons in 1837 in Missouri. He took his regiment to the scene of trouble at "Far West," Caldwell County, Mo., where the Mormons were fortified. He ever after was known as Col. Reynolds. He was a man who in his time was prominent in all enterprises of a public nature. He made a number of improvements, and then moved with his family to within six miles of Savannah, in Andrew County; there he carried on farming and he and his wife passed their remaining days there, he dying in December, 1859, and she in August, 1875. They were both members of the old-school Baptist Church, and adhered quite strictly to their religious views. He was a large, strong man, with good mental as well as physical endowments. To him and his wife were born ten children, three sons and seven daughters.

He of whom we write was the first son and fourth child of the family, eight of whom lived to maturity, six of whom married, and three of whom are still living. He was reared by good parents, and grew to a noble manhood, of great strength, fine physical proportions, and a well-balanced intellect. He early selected the occupation to which he had been reared, that of farmer, for his life calling, and on his father's homestead was initiated into the mysteries of agriculture. He was married near Savannah, Andrew County, to Susan Kelly, a native of Pulaski County, Ky, her birth occurring there in 1826. She lost her father in Kentucky, and came to Missouri with her mother, who died in Andrew County. Mrs. Reynolds departed this life in 1854, leaving four children: Henry C., a farmer in California; Joseph, a farmer in Holt County, Mo., who married Miss Nannie Parish; Fanny, wife of G. S. Upton, of whom see biography; Reuben R., who is in the West. Mr. Reynolds was also married to his present wife in Andrew County. Her maiden name was Amanda A. Florence, and she was born in Richland County, Ohio, Feb. 14, 1835. Her parents, James and Emily (Fish) Florence, were natives of Virginia, and there they were both reared and married, and Mr. Florence began his life work as a farmer in that State. He was left an orphan in his babyhood, and nothing definite could be learned of his parentage by his daughter, Mrs. Reynolds. He and his wife, with a small family, ultimately moved from Virginia to Richland County, Ohio, about 1833, and were pioneers there. In 1843 they made another move still further westward, and crossing the Father of Waters settled on a farm in Andrew County, Mo., and there the father died in 1865, at the age of sixty-five, and the mother in 1846, in the prime of life. Mrs. Reynolds was the second child of the three daughters and one son born to her parents. Her brother Robert H. is now dead, as is also her sister Ora. Her sister Mary is the wife of William Thraikill, of Andrew County, Mo. Mrs. Reynolds made her home with her father after her mother's death until her marriage. She is the mother of four children, one of whom is dead, William H., a promising young man, of good education, who died of typhoid fever at the age of twenty-three years. The living children are: James T., who married Laura Mason, is engaged as postal clerk on the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, and has his residence at Lincoln; Elizabeth, the wife of Dr. C. W. Davis, a practicing physician of Bernard, Nodaway Co., Mo.; and Barnett L., at home with his parents.

In 1865 Mr. Reynolds and his family left their old Missouri home and came to Nebraska to reside. For nearly six years they lived in the vicinity of Nebraska City. In the fall of 1871 Mr. Reynolds purchased 160 acres of land in this vicinity, eighty acres of which are still included in his farm. He afterward had a good chance to dispose of eighty acres of his land at a great advance on the original price, and he hastened to do so. Since that he has bought 160 acres more land, and now has 240 acres of exceedingly arable and productive land, all under good improvements, with an excellent set of buildings, which he erected himself.

Mr. Reynolds is a man of sterling worth, whose good qualities render him one of the best citizens. He and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and all schemes for the advancement of the religious interests of the community find in them cordial and hearty support. Mr. Reynolds is identified with the Democratic party, his political views being well expressed in the party platform.

DR. WILLIAM WINTERSTEEN, a capitalist of Plattsburgh, where he owns an extensive and valuable property, has for more than twenty-four years been a resident of this city. When he came here in 1865 he found this place a straggling village, with little or no indications of ever being the metropolis of a rich and prosperous county. That it has become so is due to the sagacity and far-seeing enterprise of such men as our subject, who, when he cast his lot with the pioneers and men of business who were developing the resources of Cass County and extending her commerce, having strong faith in the future of his new home, invested his money in city property, and by careful and shrewd management has increased his original outlay many fold, and is now numbered among the wealthy and substantial citizens of this community.

Doctor Wintersteen was born in Lexington, Richland Co., Ohio, Jan. 31, 1824. His father, William Wintersteen, was, it is thought, a native of New Jersey, and his grandfather is believed to have been born in Germany. He was a resident of New Jersey for many years, and there closed his life. The father of our subject when a young man went to Pennsylvania, and was there married to Miss Lucy Everitt, a native of New Jersey. In 1821 they moved to Ohio, and became pioneers of Richland County. Mr. Wintersteen bought land in Lexington, of which ten acres were cleared and the remainder heavily timbered. There was a log cabin on the place in which the family lived for a time, and in that humble abode our subject first awoke to life. There were no nails used in the construction of the cabin; the roof was covered with clapboards, which were held in place by the weight of poles; the floor was of puncheon, and the rude door, with its wooden hinges, was supplied with a large wooden latch, lifted by a string which was always on the outside, in token of hospitality. The country around was sparsely settled, and where the city of Mansfield now stands there were but three or four log houses standing in small clearings, the rest of the town site being heavily timbered. The nearest market was for some years at Sandusky, seventy-five miles away, and seven to ten days were required to make the the trip over the rough roads cut through the depths of the primeval forest, the most of which was still standing. So far from the centres of civilization the luxuries of life were well nigh unattainable, and the pioneers were obliged to live in the most primitive manner. Thus it was that the mother of our subject had no stove for many years, and did all her cooking before the fire in the rude fireplace, and very delicious was the food prepared in that way to those who partook of it, whose appetites had been sharpened by the hard labor of felling trees and preparing the land for cultivation. The busy mother used to spin and weave all the cloth that the family wore. Mr. Wintersteen cleared a farm and bought additional land, and at the time of his death in 1843 had quite a valuable estate. He was a man of good parts, who led a useful and upright life, and was an honored and valued citizen of the community where he lived. His wife, who was held in equal estimation, survived him many years, her death on the old homestead not occurring until 1872. There were ten children born to them, as follows: Nancy, Fanny, Henry, Axeann, Mary, Jackson, Eliza, William, Hannah and Almira.

Our subject received his early education in the pioneer schools of Ohio, the first one that he attended being taught in a log house, in which there were no windows, the dim light penetrating the interior through greased paper, which covered an aperture where a log had been sawed out. Our subject subsequently attended a Seminary in Lexington, where he pursued a good course of studies that amply fitted him for the profession of teacher, which he adopted at the age of twenty-one, receiving as salary $10 a month. He taught several winter terms in his native State, and then went to Alabama in 1846, and engaged in teaching near Decatur for one year. He subsequently returned to Ohio to prepare himself for the medical profession. He studied with Doctors Abernatha and Damsell in Lexington, and afterward attended medical lectures at Starling College, Columbus. The college buildings were not then completed, and the course of lectures was given in a large log building built during the campaign of 1840, and known as the Harrison Cabin. Having received a thorough education in his chosen profession, all that he needed was practice to make him a first-class physician, and that he soon had. He opened an office in Lockport, Williams County, in the fall of 1850, and practiced there successfully until 1858. In that year he went to Iowa and established himself as a physician in Marietta, Marshall County. During the time that he resided there he built up a fine practice, and became one of the leading medical men of that locality. In 1865 he abandoned his profession, and coming to Nebraska, then a Territory, settled in Plattsmouth. He purchased city property here, and has since devoted the whole of his time to its improvement, and in looking after his monetary interests. He has built five houses here, and all excepting his residence are rented, and bring him in a good income.

To the amiable and gracious lady who presides over his pleasant home, our subject was united in marriage in 1854. She was formerly Elizabeth Miller, and Wayne County, Ohio, was her native place. Their wedded life has been blessed to them by the birth of a daughter, Olive A., wife of Frank L. Gayle, of Ft. Worth, Tex. Mrs. Wintersteen's father, Samuel K. Miller, was born in Allegheny County, Pa., and her grandfather was, so far as known, a native of the same State, and of German parentage. He removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio and spent his last years near New Lisbon. The father of Mrs. Wintersteen was reared and married in Pennsylvania, and subsequently removed to Ohio and settled in Wayne County. He was a wheelwright and carpenter by trade, and bought water power in that county and built mills which he operated for awhile. He subsequently became a pioneer of Williams County, buying land three miles from Bryan, the county seat. There was good water power there, and he built a saw-mill and engaged in the manufacture of lumber, thus clearing his land, which was heavily timbered. He managed the mill until about 1849, when he sold it and removed to Lockport, where he built woolen, saw and grist-mills, and operated them all until 1856. In that year he disposed of his property and started for Marshall County, Iowa, where he bought a tract of prairie land six miles from Marshalltown, and improved a large farm. In 1865 he came to Plattsmouth and made his home there for three years; then returning to Iowa, he bought and improved a mill site in Greene County, continuing in business there three or four years. His next move was to Guthrie County, where he turned his attention to farming. He also improved a water power on his land there, and at the same time improved a farm. His death occurred there in June, 1886. He was a man of great capability and energy, and his various enterprises always turned out profitably, so that he acquired considerable property. He was conscientious and upright in his dealings, and commanded the respect of those with whom he came in contact. In his wife he had a ready and able assistant, and she was in every way a most estimable woman. Her maiden name was Magdalena Smouse. She was born in Allegheny County, Pa., and died at the advanced age of seventy-eight years, in 1883. There were nine children born to her and her husband, eight of whom grew to maturity, as follows: Rosanna, John P., Rebecca, Sarah, Elizabeth, Catherine A., George C. and Samuel S.

Dr. Wintersteen is a man of fine mental gifts, that have been carefully cultivated; has strong opinions, is broad and liberal in his views, and his expression of them on any topic under discussion carries conviction to the minds of his hearers. He is prominently identified with the A. F. & A. M., having become a Mason in Williams County, Ohio, in 1852; he is now connected with Plattsmouth Lodge No. 6. We cannot close this biographical notice of the Doctor without some further allusion to his wife, who is a woman of infinite tact and kindness, and wields a good influence on all around her. In her the suffering and needy have a true friend, one who consoles them with her sympathy, and relieves them with her bounty. She and her husband occupy a prominent place in social circles, and whenever they choose to mingle in society their presence is always welcome. In politics the Doctor is a staunch Democrat.

NEWTON J. CALKINS. Prominent among the citizens of Cass County, who have been instrumental in developing her rich agricultural resources, is the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this sketch. He owns a large and beautiful farm on sections 9 and 16, Centre Precinct, with his residence on the northwest corner of the latter section, and there he is extensively engaged in raising grain and large herds of cattle, horses and hogs. He has developed his farm from the raw prairie, and when he first began its improvement there was no other settlement near, the house of Peter Coon, two miles distant, being the only visible habitation.

Our subject was born in Elizabethtown, N. Y., March 27, 1840, his early home being on the shores of beautiful Lake Champlain. His father, Elijah Calkins, was born in the same town, and there lived until our subject came West. He married Miss Mary Bancroft, of Connecticut, and to them were born ten children, five of whom are living. He carried on farming in New York for many years, and at last came to this State to spend his declining years in the home of his son Henry, in Rock Bluff Precinct, and there he passed away in 1880, at the age of seventy-eight years. His widow survived him about three years. They were respected members of the Baptist Church in New York, and Mr. Calkins, who was a man of strong character, with the courage of his opinions, was a firm Abolitionist, and always a Republican after the formation of the party.

Newton Calkins attended the common schools in his native town, and continued to reside there until February, 1887, and has made his home in this county ever since. He first settled two miles from Rock Creek, and a year later went to Weeping Water Precinct. Two years after that we find him in Mt. Pleasant, and in those various places he was carrying on farming on rented land. At the close of 1871 he came here and bought forty acres of the land he now owns, paying $7 an acre for it. It was in a complete state of nature, and he at once set about its development into a farm. He put out a grove of forest trees, also an orchard, and some small fruits. He built a small house first, and as his finances would permit added to it from time to time, until he now has a commodious dwelling. He continued to prosper, and in 1875 was enabled to buy the remainder of the quarter of section 9, which was partly improved, and he has purchased other land, until he owns 320 acres, forming one of the finest and best improved farms in this locality, and it is continually subject to improvements and under an admirable state of cultivation, well fenced, and amply supplied with the necessary buildings. He has built a fine horse barn, 48x60, with 18-foot posts, and all of the appurtenances, such as hay fork, etc., for handling hay. Mr. Calkins pays much attention to raising corn, but feeds a good share of it to his cattle, horses and hogs, of which he has quite large herds.

Mr. and Mrs. Calkins were united in marriage July 3, 1863, and of their union have come seven children, six of whom are living, and the following is their record: Howard was born in 1865; Viola, in 1871; Friend, in 1874; Lewis, in 1879; Lena, in 1881; Myrtle, in 1888. Mabel, the next to the youngest, died when two years old. Mrs. Calkins was formerly Miss Margaret McDougal, and was born in Lewistown, Essex Co., N. Y., in 1846, and she lived there until the time of her marriage. She is a daughter of Robert and Margaret (Kilmer) McDougal, natives of New York, where they were married, and there ten children were born to them. Seven years ago our subject visited New York, and on his return brought his father-in-law and mother-in-law with him to make their home with him, and the father is still a member of the household, at the venerable age of eighty-nine years. His wife died here in 1886.

No citizen of Cass County manifests a more genuine interest in its welfare than our subject, or is more liberal and public-spirited in encouraging schemes for its advancement. He has done much for the educational interests of his adopted precinct while serving on the School Board. He was School Director for nine years, or until he absolutely refused to hold the office any more. He and his family are influential members of the Baptist Church at Wabash. Mr. Calkins by his ability and energy, combined with forethought and prudent management, has made all he now has. He is a conscientious, self-respecting man, with a keen, resolute nature, and a good reputation for just and square dealing. Politically, he earnestly favors the Republican policy.

ELIJAH JENKINS, a prosperous merchant of Greenwood. He was born in La Porte County, Ind., in 1837, where he lived with his parents on a farm until 1852, when he came west to Missouri, where he remained for one winter. From Missouri he went to Glenwood, Iowa, where he conducted one of the first musical conventions ever held in that State. This was in the spring of 1853. While conducting a singing-school at Waughboncy Grove, Iowa, five miles south of Glenwood, he met Miss Amanda Cornes, to whom he was married by the Rev. Dr. Carter. The couple made their home at the above named grove for several years. In 1858 Mr. Jenkins purchased ninety acres of land. His business ventures at this time had proven very successful. He was very comfortably situated on his farm and enjoying the comforts of a good home when the War of the Rebellion broke out. Being actuated by patriotic motives, and feeling that every good man should aid in the defence of the Union, he in response to the call for 300,000 men in the fall of 1861, enlisted in Company A, 4th Iowa Infantry. During the winter of 1861 and 1862 they were in camp at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

While engaged in moving Government stores at that place our subject fell from a wagon and was severely injured by the load passing over him, in consequence of which he was honorably discharged on account of physical disability. Upon his recovery from the injuries received at this time he again tendered his services to his country, enlisting Aug. 11, 1862, in Company B, 29th Iowa Infantry. He was shortly transferred from Company B to Company K in the same regiment. They went into camp at Camp Dodge at Council Bluffs, Iowa, from whence they went south. Their first engagement with the enemy was at Duvall's Bluff, on the White River, in Arkansas, where they defeated the rebels. Their next engagement of importance was Yazoo Pass, Miss., where they were again the victors. Being transferred from here to Helena, Ark., where they again met the Confederates in bloody conflict, as well as at Little Rock; in this latter engagement they met the enemy five miles below the city, where the skirmishing began. It was continued without cessation until they reached the city, where they captured a large number of prisoners, with military stores and arms. In the spring of 1864 they engaged in the now noted Red River Expedition, the regiment being attached to the Seventh Army Corps, under the command of Gen. Steele. On the Little Missouri they engaged with the Confederate forces, who were 6,000 strong, and again at Cross Road they met them 4,000 strong. At Camden the Union soldiers took possession of the rifle pits and forts and heroically held the same against the assault of superior numbers, and in the face of great natural disadvantages.

On the banks of the Saline he with his regiment took an active and important part in the hardest-fought engagement of the expedition, meeting the Confederates, who were under the command of Generals Kirby Smith and Price. Here the loss to the Union forces numbered 2,000 in dead and wounded. The loss to the rebels, owing to the bravery and heroism of the Union troops, was double that number. They thought themselves beaten and gave the Union soldiers an opportunity of falling back across the river and begin their retreat to Little Rock, a distance of eighty miles. It is impossible for one who was not present with the Union soldiers to realize the suffering and hardships they endured. Having no food other than what they could collect from a country which had been traversed by both armies, their sufferings from this cause alone were intense, often having no food except the grain that was supplied for the horses. When six or eight miles distant from Little Rock they secured their first regular rations since leaving the Saline. After passing the winter of 1864-65 in this city, they started south on 9th of February, 1865, their destination being New Orleans, from where they went to take part in the siege of Mobile.

The 29th Iowa Regiment, of which our subject was a member, took part in the assault and capture of Spanish Fort on March 16, and in the various other engagements on that line, until the fall of Fort Blakeslee gave the Union forces complete possession of the field. Their work being done here they marched to Montgomery, Ala., the capital of the Confederacy, which they captured. From this city Mr. Jenkins was detailed to assist in the transferring of 260 sick and wounded soldiers to the hospital at New Orleans, going to Mobile for that purpose. It was while he was at the latter city the news of the assassination of President Lincoln reached him. His regiment at this time was in Texas and our subject asked to be relieved from detailed duty and assigned to his regiment for active duty, which application was refused. He then applied for a furlough of sixty days, which was granted, which gave him an opportunity of visiting his home and friends in the North.

At the expiration of his furlough our subject reported for duty at headquarters in St. Louis, Mo., when he again applied for a transfer to his regiment, which request was again refused, and he continued on detailed duty until he was honorably discharged at St. Louis, having served his country faithfully and well for three years, having met with many narrow escapes, marching thousands of miles and suffering all the privations and hardships of a soldier's life in time of war. Upon his return home he found that his wife had not been the careful, prudent, devoted woman that he had expected she would be, she having squandered and scattered his property during his absence, and he found himself a financially ruined man, which circumstance led to the divorce of the couple. Almost disheartened he went to Missouri and engaged in various occupations, where he met his present wife, a Mrs. Berry. She was born in Ohio.

After his marriage with this lady, Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins came to Nebraska for the purpose of procuring and making a home. In this venture they were indeed successful, and they look upon their coming to Nebraska as the turning point in his life. He has by close attention and a large amount of hard labor become the owner of a very valuable farm in Greenwood Precinct, an elegant and valuable residence and two lots at Louisville, in Cass County, as well as a handsome residence in Greenwood. His business career in Greenwood began in 1885, in which year he engaged in his present business, which he has pursued with untiring zeal and with most excellent results. Previous to locating in this village he was a resident of Louisville Precinct, where he was a successful farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins are the parents of seven children: Louis A., Ida M., wife of Mr. Foreman, agent of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, at Nora, Neb.; Emma M., wife of Samuel Lynch, of this county; Juniata and Elijah, both of whom are dead; and Thomas and Otoe.

The parents of our subject are of English descent, their ancestors coming to Virginia at a time when our country was in its infancy, and took an important part in the history of the colonial days of our present prosperous nation. The father of our subject is Benjamin Jenkins; his mother was Catherine Skelton. Grandmother McCarthy was a native of Scotland, an heiress to the old McCarthy estate in Scotland. Benjamin Jenkins, the father, now resides in Eight Mile Grove Precinct, Cass County, and is almost eighty years of age. The mother died in 1844, when but thirty-six years old. A family of seven children were born to the parents of our subject, named respectively: Sarah Elizabeth, Jessie, deceased, Emily, Elijah, our subject, Columbus and Cerina, now deceased. The parents removed at an early day from Virginia to Kentucky, thence to Indiana; from Indiana to Illinois; and when our subject was a lad of seven years of age the family returned to Indiana, where he lived until he reached the age of manhood.

Mr. Jenkins is a man of fine appearance and of excellent business capacities. The exercise of his judgment has enabled him to reach the position he now occupies. He possesses unequalled musical abilities, which in his early life proved to be a great source of profit to him when he devoted the time of his earlier years to teaching the art. His life has had all the changes which come to the early settlers of a new country, has been diversified with the sunshine and shadows which come to all, and to-day we find him in his bright and cheery home, in the midst of a family of worthy and dutiful children. His record as a soldier is unexceptionable and his career as a farmer and a business man is above reproach. His mother was a lady possessing great musical ability, and she was endowed with an inexhaustible store of motherly affection. She never lost an opportunity to give her children every advantage possible for acquiring knowledge that would prove of value to them in after life. The old home was often turned into a school, while its walls echoed with the happy songs and glees that in joyful chorus express harmony and happiness of hearts beating in unison, and made that home a veritable Heaven upon earth. Amid such surroundings as these, and with such a teacher, our subject naturally chose the musical profession, in which he became widely and favorably known at a very early period of his life.

Mr. Jenkins and his wife take a conspicuous part in the social life about them; they are both conscientious members of the Christian Church, endeavoring to live every day in accordance with the teachings of the Divine Master. Mr. Jenkins is a charter member of the Louisville Post, G. A. R., which he has served as Adjutant.

JAMES S. MATHEW, an able member of the legal profession of Plattsmouth, and a gentleman in the prime of life, was born in Allegany County, Md., Feb. 3, 1841, and is the son of Samuel Mathew, a native of Westmoreland County, Pa. His paternal grandfather, William Mathew, was born in the city of Dublin, Ireland, and crossed the Atlantic when a boy, settling in Pennsylvania, where he was reared and married.

William Mathew purchased a tract of land in Westmoreland County, where he erected a sawmill and gristmill on Tubwell Creek, and there spent the remainder of his life. He married a lady of his own country, and of their children ten grew to mature years, namely: William, Samuel, James, Archibald, Joseph, Mary, Elizabeth, Nancy, Margaret and Sarah. Of these Samuel, the father of our subject, was reared to man's estate in his native county, which he left about the time of reaching his majority, and going into Virginia was there married. Later he settled in Maryland, but after a time returned to his native county and engaged in farming.

In 1849 Samuel Mathew, disposing of his property interests in Pennsylvania, gathered together his family and personal effects and started for Iowa, via the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to Fairfield, and thence by team to Keokuk, sixty-five miles distant. He entered a tract of land four and one-half miles north of what was then but a village, and commenced to improve a farm from the wilderness. The only market for grain was at Keokuk, and as may be supposed, considering the small number of inhabitants, there was no very great demand for the products of the pioneer farmer. The live-stock was driven to the river, and thence shipped to various points north and south. Pork sold at one and one-half cents per pound. In those days the plows were home-made by the blacksmiths, and the grain was harvested by a cradle. Samuel Mathew resided in Keokuk County a period of twenty years, then selling out, came to Nebraska and located a homestead claim near Greenwood, this county, and repeated the experiment of building up a new farm. He acquired a comfortable property, and is still living, having now retired from active labor, and makes his home in Plattsmouth.

Mrs. Elizabeth (Spencer) Mathew, the mother of our subject, was born in Hampshire County, Va., and was the daughter of James Spencer. There were eight children in the parental family, namely: William L., James S., our subject, Susan J., Archibald, Margaret E., John S., Alexander and Samuel H., the latter of whom died Feb. 12, 1885. The other children are all living.

Our subject was the second child of his parents, and was a lad eight years of age when they made the journey from his native county in Maryland to the wilds of Keokuk, Iowa. There the rudiments of a district school education were completed, and later he attended one term at the State University in Fairfield. For a time before the outbreak of the Civil War he was engaged in teaching. In July, 1862, he proffered his services as a Union soldier, enlisting in Company D, 5th Iowa Infantry, serving until the 8th of August, 1864. He then veteranized, re-enlisting in Company A, 2d United States Infantry, known as Hancock's Corps, and continued in the service until March, 1866. A history of the 5th Iowa Regiment says that "during the service it marched and traveled in boats and cars a distance of 6,847 miles, an average of more than six miles each day. It assisted in opening up the Missouri River from Cairo to Bruinsburg, and took part in seven campaigns, driving the rebels from Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Northern Alabama and Northern Georgia. In the meantime it participated in the battles of Iuka, Corinth, Jackson, Champion Hill, Vicksburg and Mission Ridge, and was held as a reserve at the battles of Port Gibson, Raymond and Black River; and under fire at New Madrid and the siege of Corinth."

Mr. Mathew did not join the regiment until after the battle of Jackson, but participated in all the battles and marches in which his regiment was subsequently engaged. He had the good fortune to be with the troops which were uniformly victorious, and consequently never experienced the sensations incident to a retreat. It was while a veteran that his regiment was chosen to guard the quarters of Gen. Hancock.

After his return from the army Mr. Mathew entered Bryant & Stratton's Business College, at Burlington, Iowa, from which he was graduated, and then resumed teaching in Richland. In the spring of 1867 he came to the young State of Nebraska and homesteaded the west half of the southeast quarter of section 4, where he improved a farm, put up the necessary buildings and resided a period of ten years. In 1876, selling out, he took up his abode in Plattsmouth, and here has since remained, engaged in the practice of law. He commenced his legal studies under the instruction of Hon. S. M. Chapman, in September, 1876, and was admitted to the bar May 1, 1879. He continued in the office with Judge Chapman until 1881, and since then has been alone. He is a conscientious student, a close reader, and an attorney looking faithfully after the interests of his clients.

One of the most interesting events in the life of our subject, during a rather varied career, was his marriage with Miss Martha Rouse, which occurred Jan. 1, 1868. Mrs. Mathew was born in Ohio, and is the daughter of James and Elizabeth Rouse. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Mathew there have been born the following children: Olive, Luella, Susan, Tillie F. and Ernest. Nettie, the second child, died when about two years old, and Robert, the youngest, died in the third year of his age.

Our subject and his estimable wife are members in good standing of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Mathew cast his first Presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and has been since that time an ardent Republican. He has served as Justice of the Peace and Police Judge.

ROBERT W. BLACK is identified with the agricultural interests of Cass County as a prominent farmer of Plattsmouth Township, where he owns a good, well improved farm, pleasantly located on sections 4 and 9. He is a son of the well-known physician and financier, Doctor John Black, of Plattsmouth, and he was born in De Kalh County, Mo., Sept. 21, 1855. His father was a native of England, and came from that country to this when a very young man. He located in Ohio, and being of a studious, scholarly turn of mind, determined to enter the professions, and selecting that of physician, he became a pupil in the medical college at Cleveland. After pursuing the prescribed course with honor he received his diploma, and immediately established himself as a practitioner in Ohio. He was married in Knox County, that State, to Miss Martha Wiley, a native of that county. He continued to practice medicine in Ohio with great success, acquiring considerable local fame, until 1854, when he moved with his family to Missouri. He remained a resident of that State until 1863, building up an extensive practice. In that year the many advantages possessed by the Territory of Nebraska attracted him hither, and he came to Plattsmouth with his wife and children and opened an office here. He continued in his profession until 1875, becoming very popular, and placing himself among the leading doctors of Cass County. In that year he abandoned his practice to engage in the banking business, founding the Cass County bank, of which he was president for some time. Later he sold his interest in that institution and established the Citizens' Bank, which under his able management assumed an important place in the financial interests of this county. Subsequently he was obliged to give up business on account of failing health and is now living in strict retirement, not being able to have any responsibilities. He is a man of refined tastes and an extensive and varied information, and his talent for business is of a high order, so that he has contributed materially to the upbuilding of Plattsmouth. He and his estimable wife have a family of six children, all of whom are married and settled in life, and the most of them making their homes in Plattsmouth: E. W., James N., Agnes, now Mrs. P. E. Ruffner; Oella, now Mrs. E. A. Kirkpatrick, of this county; Robert W. and Martha C., now Mrs. H. H. Hunt.

Robert Black, of this sketch, was a boy of eight years when his parents brought him to Nebraska from the home of his birth in Missouri, and here he grew to manhood. He had a decided taste for agricultural pursuits, and adopted farming for his lifework. His success thus far has justified his choice of a calling, and he has shown marked skill in cultivating his land and getting the best results from the soil. He moved onto his present farm with another gentleman and boarded in his family until his own marriage, when he took possession of the house. The farm comprises 200 acres of very fertile land in the most productive regions of Cass County, and our subject is continually improving it. He has a fine orchard of sixty choice apple trees, the first ever planted on this farm.

Mr. Black was married Jan. 20, 1885, to Miss Sarah E. Ferguson, of St. Louis. She is a daughter of Hezekiah and Louisa (Wood) Ferguson, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and New York. Mrs. Ferguson departed this life in Warwick, N. Y.,

April 29, 1868, aged forty-two years, leaving six children to mourn the loss of a devoted mother, namely: Anna, now Mrs. Charles Thompson; Addie, now Mrs. John Miller; Oscar W., Nicholas, Mrs. Black, Alva S. Mrs. Black is a native of New York. She is a valued member of the Presbyterian Church. Of her marriage with our subject one child has been born, John B.

Mr. Black is a man of earnest, intelligent convictions, who uses his influence to promote the good of the community where the most of his life has been passed. He and his wife are important factors in the social life of the township, and the hospitality of their cozy home is well known. In politics he is a Democrat.

MILES W. MORGAN, a well-known citizen of Cass County, has been identified with the interests of Plattsmouth, and has been an important factor in its upbuilding. He has been connected with the city government at various times since he became a resident of the city, and at present holds the office of Street Commissioner.

He is a Virginian by birth, and a lineal descendant of the ancient Welsh family of Morgan, whose history in this country dates far back in pre-Revolutionary times, when his great-grandfather, David Morgan, came from his native Wales to America to cast in his lot with the Colonists of Virginia. He was a man of strong and vigorous nature, whose iron nerve and high courage eminently fitted him to cope with the dangers and hardships of those troublous times. Indians were plenty and hostile in the Old Dominion, and the settlers were obliged to live in forts for protection. The forts were built of the trunks of large white oak trees, which were stood on one end in the ground. At one time Mr. Morgan had lain down to take an afternoon nap, and he dreamed that his son and daughter, young children, who had gone to the cornfield, were in danger from the Indians. He persuaded himself, however, that as it was only a dream, he had better lie down again, but he dreamed the same dream again, and so vividly did it impress him that he immediately awoke and started for the field with his rifle. Sure enough, on arriving there, he saw three Indians entering the field from the other side, and stealthily approaching his children, who were unconscious of their danger. He called to the children to come to him and waited to cover their retreat. When the Indians came near enough he fired and killed one of them. The others dodged from tree to tree, getting nearer and nearer all the time. He watched his opportunity and shot another Indian, and as soon as his gun was discharged the remaining Indian jumped from behind the tree and threw his tomahawk, which severed two of Mr. Morgan's fingers. They then grappled and the Indian was thrown in the struggle, but managed to turn Mr. Morgan, and then reached for his dirk. An apron which he had stolen and tied about his waist, covered his weapon so that he could not get it readily, and his white foe succeeded in getting it and drove it into his side. Mr. Morgan then returned to the fort, and the men went out and found the savage, who had crawled away from the scene of the encounter and taken shelter in the top of a fallen tree, and they soon dispatched him to the happy hunting grounds. They then flayed his body, and the skin was tanned, and a member of the Morgan family now has a shot pouch made from a piece of the epidermis of the untutored denizen of the forest who had come so near terminating the existence of their hardy progenitor. That gentleman cleared a farm from the wilds of Monongahela County, Virginia, and there he spent the remainder of his life engaged in agriculture. His son, Morgan Morgan, the grandfather of subject, who was born in Wales, inherited the old homestead, and there passed the remainder of his life.

His son David P., father of our subject, was there born and reared, and after his marriage he bought a tract of land eight miles distant from his early home, and resided thereon until 1839. In 1830 he built a steamboat at Morgantown, Va., on the Monongahela River, designed for a passenger steamer to ply on that river and the Ohio. The boat was named the Osage, and he ran it on those rivers in 1831, and in 1832 went with it up the Mississippi to carry the wounded soldiers, who had taken part in the Black Hawk War, to St. Louis. In 1833 he sold his boat, and followed the river, flat boating, the ensuing seven years. He made many trips down the river, and at one time walked from New Orleans to Morgantown, Va., a distance of 1,000 miles. In 1839 Mr. Morgan moved with his family to Ohio, and lived amidst the pioneer scenes of that State for four years. He then returned to Virginia and settled in that part of Wood County now included in Wirt County, where he bought a farm. In 1850 he sold his property in his native State, and with his family, consisting of his wife, eleven children, and two sons-in-law, embarked on a flat-boat for a voyage to the West, purposing to make their future home in Iowa. They floated down the Kanawha and Ohio rivers to Cincinnati, and there embarked on the ill fated steamer Belle of the West. They started for Cincinnati at dark, and before midnight the boat was discovered to be on fire, Mrs. Morgan, the mother of our subject, being the first to see the flames and raise the alarm. The steamer was burned to the water's edge, and sixty of the three hundred passengers were lost. The Morgan family all escaped and camped on the river-bank at Florence until another boat came along, and they got on board and proceeded to Keokuk, Iowa. From that town they went with teams to Warren County, Iowa, one hundred and sixty miles distant, there being no railways at that time west of the Mississippi. They found the country in an exceedingly wild condition, sparsely settled, and deer, wild turkeys and other game abundant, so that the larder of the pioneers was kept well supplied. Mr. Morgan lived in Warren County four years, and then became a pioneer of Clarke County, where he bought a farm. Two years later he sold that place and moved to Madison County, where he died in the home of his son in 1868, at the venerable age of eighty-four years. The maiden name of his wife was Drucilla McLellan. She died in Madison County, Iowa, in 1859, having rounded out a useful life of sixty-five years. This worthy couple were the parents of thirteen children.

Their son, of whom we write, was seventeen years old when he went to Iowa with his parents. In 1857 he started out in life for himself as a merchant, opening a general store in Osceola. He con-and wealth have sprung up, where at the time and for some years later there were no traces of a habitation.

Jasper W. Conn was born in Indiana, Feb. 17, 1831. His father, John Conn, was, it is thought, a native of Steubenville, Ohio. He there grew to manhood, and learned the trade of millwright. He moved to Indiana when a young man, and followed his trade in that State until 1840. In that year he removed to the Territory of Iowa, and as a pioneer of North Bend, Johnson County, took his part in developing its interests, entering from the Government about the first land that was entered in that township. He had to travel to Dubuque on horseback to make the entry in the land-office there. There were no railways in that part of the country at that time, and Muscatine was the nearest market for grain, and stock. He improved a farm at North Bend, and then sold it and bought land two miles west of Iowa City, which he also developed into a fine farm, continuing to reside on it until his death in 1848. The maiden name of his wife was Elizabeth Chamber. She was a native of Baltimore, Md., and spent her last years in Johnson County, and died there in 1873. She was the mother of ten children, eight of whom grew to maturity, namely: Elizabeth, Frank, Ellen, Jasper, Emily, Mary, Helen and John. Mrs. Conn's grandfather, great-grandfather of our subject, was a native of Germany, who emigrated to this country in Colonial times, and during the Revolutionary War he cast in his fortune with the Continental Army, and did good service at his trade of blacksmith. He was paid in Continental scrip, and the subject now has one of the bills of the denomination of $60. The wife of the old gentleman was a native of England.

Our subject was in his ninth year when his parents moved to Iowa, and there he was reared to the life of a farmer. After his father's death he had charge of the home farm until he was twenty years of age. He then started in life for himself, and engaged in whatsoever his hand found to do, handling stock, breaking horses, threshing grain, breaking prairie land, etc. In 1852 he started with five yokes of oxen and drove to Kaneshville, now Council Bluffs, then a small village occupied by Mormons. He sold the cattle and returned home on horseback, and each year thereafter until 1854 he made a trip to Council Bluffs to sell cattle, and the rest of the year he engaged in threshing and farming. In 1853 he went to Page County, Iowa, and selected a tract of Government land one mile from where Clarinda now stands, and entered it at the land-office. In 1854 he erected the second or third house ever built in Clarinda, and became a pioneer merchant there. He resided there until 1857, and in that year came to the Territory of Nebraska, and settled in Cass County, entering a tract of Government land in Rock Bluff Precinct. He built a frame house on his claim. He resided in Rock Bluff Village the three ensuing years, having built a residence there, but in the spring of 1860 he removed to his land, which he continued to occupy and improve for five years. At the expiration of that time he bought two other farms near by in the same precinct, and lived on one of them for a year, and there the wife of his early manhood, who had for his sake cheerfully submitted to the unavoidable hardships of life in a pioneer country that she might assist him in building up a home, departed this life in 1865. She was a native of Indiana. Her maiden name was Mary E. Hutton, and she was a daughter of Baxter Hutton. She left four children to mourn the loss of a devoted mother, namely: Alpha, Ida, Frank and Maggie.

Mr. Conn was married to his present estimable wife May 18, 1876, and four children have been born to them—Harry, Willie, George and Johnnie. Mrs. Conn was formerly Miss Ellen Donnelly, and Ireland was her place of birth. Her parents were Dimmick and Jane (McDougal) Donnelly. The father was born in Ireland, of Scotch ancestry, and the mother in Scotland. They came to this country when Mrs. Conn was very young, so that she was reared in America, and has known no other home.

After the death of his first wife Mr. Conn returned to Iowa with his children, and found them a home with kind friends, and then returned to Rock Bluff, where he continued to reside until 1873. He then established himself in Plattsmouth, where he has most of the time been an active dealer in stock, buying and shipping to Chicago and Omaha markets. His experience in handling stock, his unerring judgment and shrewd dealings have won him a prominent position among the men of his business in Nebraska, and have secured him a competence. In the same year that he took up his residence in Plattsmouth he went to Saline County, and took a homestead claim, and spent a part of the year there. In 1884 he and his son Frank penetrated the wilds of Wyoming Territory, and his son took a claim 140 miles from Cheyenne, the nearest railway point, that section of the country then being wild and unsettled, and frequented by deer, antelopes, panthers and wildcats. Mr. Conn took up some valuable mining claims in that vicinity, and spent a part of two years there looking after his interests. He owes his success in life not more to his naturally energetic and enterprising disposition than to the fact that he pays strict attention to his business down to the most minute detail. He is a man of solid merit, and stands well with his fellow-citizens.

KNUD HANSON, a well-to-do farmer of Stove Creek Precinct, is a Norwegian by birth and left his native country for America in 1866. He has been a resident of Nebraska most of the time since 1867. He occupies himself in general farming and stock-raising, the latter comprising graded Short-horn and Durham cattle, and he owns a valuable Morgan stallion familiarly known as Billy. His land lies on section 5, occupying its southeast quarter, 160 acres.

The father of our subject was Hans Knudson and the mother before her marriage was Annie Dorothy Larson, both born in Norway, the former in 1801, and the latter in 1809. They spent their entire lives on their native soil, where the father carried on farming and died in 1878. The mother survived her husband until 1886. Both were members of the Lutheran Church. Their six children were named respectively: Knud, Lena, Theodore, Jensine, Ole J. and Laurits. The five elder were born in Norway and the youngest child in France.

Our subject was born near the city of Christiana, Nov. 12, 1832, attended the public school, and was confirmed in the church at the age of fourteen. On account of ill health he did not become a thorough scholar. Upon coming to America he landed at Quebec, Canada, thence proceeded by steamer to Chicago, and from there went to Jefferson, Iowa. He employed himself for a time on the Northwestern Railroad, and later went into Storey County. In 1867 he migrated to Omaha, Neb., and from there to Cass County, where he worked in various places. In the meantime he also traveled considerably through Wyoming, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Minnesota and Colorado.

In 1870 Mr. Hanson returned to Cass County and pre-empted 160 acres of land in Elmwood Precinct. He hauled lumber for his buildings, secured a clear title to the property, and remained upon it several years. He traded it for his present farm, May 1, 1872. This was raw prairie when he carried on its improvement, while also working around at different places to obtain money. He moved upon it in 1878, and has since set out groves, orchards and trees of the smaller fruits. He erected a house and barn, fenced his fields with hedge and wire, and then commenced the raising and feeding of cattle, swine and horses.

Mr. Hanson was married in Stove Creek Precinct May 14, 1887, to Miss Anna, daughter of Samuel and Ann Bredon, who were natives of England. Mrs. H. was born in Aurora, Canada, Jan. 19, 1866. The other three children of her parents were John H., Mary and Clara. Of her union with our subject there is one child, a son Carl. Mr. and Mrs. H. are members of the Lutheran Church, and our subject, politically, is a sound Republican.

JOHAN ROBBINS is a contractor and builder of much repute, who for some years has been an important factor in the upbuilding of the city of Plattsmouth and other places in Cass County. He was born at Mt. Arthur, in that part of Athens County now included in Vinton County, Ohio, Sept. 10, 1838. His father, James Robbins, was a native of the State of New York, as was also his father. The latter was a farmer, and moving from New York to Ohio he became an early settler of Athens County, where he bought a tract of timbered land and founded the village of Hamden.

He cleared the land in the midst of the primeval forest, and gave the village the name of Charlestown, by which name it was known for some years, before it was changed to Hamden. He remained an honored resident of the place until his death.

The father of our subject was reared there on the old homestead, and there married Miss Minerva Wyman, likewise a native of New York. He learned to make millstones, and worked at that some years. He then bought a farm a mile east of Mt. Arthur, and ever after that devoted his time to its management. He lived thereon until his death in August, 1869. He was well known in that locality, and by whomsoever known was thoroughly respected and trusted. His wife, who shared with him the esteem of their neighbors, is still living on the old homestead in Ohio. She is the mother of five children, namely: Phineta, Harvey, John, Leander and Elihu.

The subject of this sketch was the second son born to his parents. He lived on the home farm, which had been his birth-place, until he was sixteen, and he then went out to see something of the world, first becoming quite familiar with his own State, traversing that and Indiana for about a year. After that he took up his abode in Vermillion County, Ill., in the town of Higginville, where he learned the trade of carpenter. He worked at that very industriously summers, and in winters attended school, and he was very ambitious to secure a good education. He was so engaged three years, and he then returned to his old home in Ohio, arriving there on the day that John Brown was hanged. He attended school the following winter, and then was employed in building bridges on the Marietta and Cincinnati Railway.

He had watched with intense interest the course of public affairs until they culminated in war, and in August, 1861, he enlisted to assist in fighting his country's battles, becoming a member of the 11th Ohio Battery Light Artillery. He took part in several important battles, among which were those of New Madrid and the Island No. 10 campaign. He afterwards joined Halleck's army and took part in the siege of Corinth, and later in Iuka, where all of the officers of the battery were disabled and fifty-six men were killed or wounded. Twenty days after that his regiment engaged in the second battle of Corinth, and the soldiers of his company were in all the battles and marches, including the siege and capture of Vicksburg, in which the division of the army of which they formed a part were engaged. After the surrender of Vicksburg his company was sent to Helena, Ark., and from there to Little Rock, where they helped to take the city, it being captured Sept. 10, 1863, the anniversary of the birth of our subject. The battery was assigned to garrison duty for six months after that event, and were then ordered to Pine Bluff, Ark., where Mr. Robbins was engaged with his comrades in garrison duty until the expiration of his term in November, 1864, when he was honorably discharged from the service, having won golden opinions from his superiors for his bravery and efficiency, and he returned home in season to vote for Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Robbins resumed his trade in Vinton County, and soon established a home of his own with the assistance of Miss Phebe E. Shriner, to whom he was united in marriage Jan. 20, 1865. She was born in Vinton County, Ohio, a daughter of Peter Shriner, who was born in Greene Township, Ross Co., Ohio, April 18, 1807. His parents were natives of Pennsylvania and pioneers of Ross County. The father of Mrs. Robbins was there reared, and was married in Swan Township, Hocking County, the same State, Feb. 18, 1827, Leah Dunkle becoming his wife. She was born in the latter county April 3, 1810. Mr. Shriner was a tanner, and followed that trade in Hocking, Ross and Vinton Counties until about 1854. He then located on a farm near Hamden, Vinton County, and resided thereon until 1880. He then sold his property there and moved to Jackson County, where he died in June, 1882. Mrs. Shriner, the mother of our subject, died in 1854. Her father was twice married, and had four children by each marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Robbins have six children living, as follows: Bushrod W., Katie A., Fletcher A., John D., Euphemia A. and Emma W. Jessie and Bessie, twins, died in infancy.

Mr. Robbins was employed at his trade in Vinton County until 1878. when he came to Platts-mouth with his family, and has ever since been identified with the building interests of the city as contractor and builder, except for the first three years, when he was in the employ of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad. He is well patronized and does an extensive business. He erected his present residence in 1882. It is a commodious, well-built house, of a tasty style of architecture, and is pleasantly located on the corner of Eleventh and Main streets. Mr. Robbins is a man of sound common sense, well educated and of marked decision of character. In his business transactions he is prompt, careful and just, and his credit stands high in financial circles. As he was a good and patriotic soldier in the trying times of the late war, when he went forth from his home ready and willing to sacrifice all for his country's good, so in times of peace he has ever been a loyal citizen. He and his family stand well in society, and their attractive home is the seat of true hospitality.

DAVID HITE, a prominent farmer and citizen of Elmwood Precinct, was born July 31, 1830, two and a half miles northeast of Newark, Licking Co., Ohio. In the very early years of his life he was troubled with phthisic to such an extent that he did not enter any school until he was eleven years old. His father was a blacksmith, and our subject divided his time alternately between working in the shop with his father and farming. In 1848 his parents removed with the entire family to Illinois, settling on Indian Creek, near Dayton, LaSalle County. He drove an ox team, freighting between Chicago and Dayton. In 1851 he was married to Miss Mary Ann Curyea. This lady was a native of Staunton County, Va. Her father was born in Union County, Pa. Her mother was a native of Staunton County, Va., in which county the parents of the wife of our subject married. When she was seven years old her parents removed to Lurea, Licking Co., Ohio, where they lived until she was a girl of fifteen, when they removed to Illinois.

Our subject and his good wife are the parents of nine children, named respectively: John M., now dead; James Alva, Theodore J., Flora B., Charles F., Lydia E., Ella M., Laura M. and Alice M. The son James A. resides in Dundee County, Neb., and is married to Miss Jennie Webster; Theodore J. was married to Miss Ellen Downing, and they have two children—Lillie M. and Olive Eva; their home is now in Illinois; Flora B. is the wife of Mr. William Lewis; Charles is married to Miss Rebecca Huefish, and resides in Greenwood Precinct; they have two children—George M. and Lettie; Lydia E. is the wife of Albert E. Lewis, a prosperous and enterprising farmer of Elmwood Precinct (see his biography elsewhere in this book); Nellie married a Mr. Perry Ryan, and is the mother of three children—Cora M., Mary B. and Claude I., and resides in Kearney, Buffalo Co., Neb.; Alice M. is married to Mr. Charles Pinkham, and is the mother of one child, Luella Pearl.

The father of our subject, David Hite, was born in Staunton County, Va. His great-great-grandfather came from Germany, and his wife died during the voyage over, and she was given an ocean burial. The mother of our subject, Elizabeth Stickley, was a native of Virginia. Grandfather Stickley was born in Pennsylvania; Grandmother Stickley was born in Chainey, Germany. The parents of Mr. Hite were married in Licking County, Ohio, where his father farmed and worked at blacksmithing; the father was left an orphan at the age of fourteen, when he was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith trade. Our subject is one of nine children born to his parents: Alexander, Catherine and Benjamin are now dead; David, our subject; James and Isaac, twins, now deceased; Albert, Alcinda and Fidelia. Fidelia resides in Schuyler, Neb.; the remainder of the children are living in Illinois.

Mr. and Mrs. Hite came to Nebraska Nov. 11, 1881, and entered on the improvement of the eighty acres of land which is now their home, on which he has planted a good orchard, a thriving vineyard and a large quantity of shrubbery and ornamental trees. His residence is nicely situated and is very well arranged. The large family of children that have been born to him and his wife are nearly all married, and are husbands and wives in prominent homes in both Nebraska and Illinois. The gentleman is proverbially a good-natured, jovial man, possesses a large store of practical knowledge, accumulated not from books but from wide and varied actual experiences in life. He is an exceedingly useful member of society, ever ready to assist a neighbor in a practical way whenever called upon. He follows his trade of blacksmithing and manages his farm. His wife is a typical Virginian lady, exceedingly thoughtful, and much more reserved than her husband. They both feel that their coming to Nebraska was the stepping stone to their prosperity, which they duly appreciate and prize. They are both well liked by their neighbors, possessing the confidence and esteem of all who know them. Mr. Hite is a strong Republican in politics, and often recalls the memorable "hard cider" campaign that Gen. Harrison made in 1840. Prior to the late war he was a strong Abolitionist, and during the Rebellion opened he worked hard to raise a fund in LaSalle County with which to hire substitutes.

GEORGE S. UPTON, an energetic, enthusiastic and skillful farmer, stock raiser and feeder of Liberty Precinct, is a fine representative of the young agriculturists of Cass County who have expended time, money and brain power in improving and beautifying their own land, and making more attractive the general features of the landscape. His farm consists of 320 acres of arable land, one-half lying on section 9, and the other half on section 10, which in regard to improvement is second to none in the locality. He has a good set of farm buildings on both sections, both dwellings being finely located. The beautiful residence on section 10, occupied by himself and family, is situated on a rising piece of ground, commanding a fine view of the surrounding country, and the extensive lawns about it are ornamented with fine shrubbery. The farm is well-watered and heavily stocked, he making a specialty of fine cattle of the Holstein breed, and of roadsters of high grade. Mr. Upton carries on an extensive business in stock raising and breeding, and annually ships a car-load of stock, getting the highest market price for it. Besides his own productive farm our subject has an undivided interest in 120 acres of land in another part of Liberty Precinct. He has met with a remarkable degree of success in all his undertakings, and though a comparatively young man, he has made rapid strides in his chosen occupation, and now stands in the foremost rank among the prominent citizens of Cass County.

The subject of our sketch was born in Hardin County, Ky., July 29, 1850. He comes of English stock, one of his ancestors having emigrated to this country prior to the Revolution, and settled in Kentucky, where John Upton, the grandfather of our subject, was born. He was a farmer by occupation, and in early life married Rachel Spurrier, a member of a wealthy and prominent family in Kentucky, who owned a large plantation and many slaves. John Upton had been reared by a family that was large slave owners, and consequently when he and his wife started in life on a farm they were entirely unacquainted with the hardships and necessary deprivations of earning a livelihood by their own exertions, and did not meet with as much financial success as some of their posterity have since. They both spent their entire lives in their native State, Mr. Upton dying in middle life, and Mrs. Upton following him a few years later. They were kind-hearted people, and contributed generously to the support of the Baptist Church, of which both were members for a number of years.

J. S. Upton, father of our subject, was reared and educated in his native county, receiving from his parents a sound moral training. He chose farming for a life-occupation, and after arriving at man's estate, was united in marriage to Miss Eveline Brasher, a native of Maryland, born of pure Scotch ancestry. Her parents, Edward and Nancy (Dyson) Brasher, owned a large plantation in Hardin County, Ky., to which they had removed during some period of their married life. Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Upton settled on a farm and were dependent on their own resources. But they were industrious, enterprising people, who, by perseverance, thrift and economy, succeeded most admirably in placing themselves on an independent footing. After the birth of their two elder children they moved from Kentucky to Holt County, Mo., and located on a farm which, two years later they exchanged for another in the same county, on which they remained ten years. They cleared a good farm, and then disposed of it and moved to Nebraska, where they purchased land slightly improved in Liberty Precinct. Mr. Upton at once began its improvement, and gradually added by purchase to his original tract of land until he was the possessor of 500 acres. His death occurred Jan. 21, 1880, when fifty-six years of age. He was a valued citizen of the place, and had the universal respect of the community. His widow is still living, at the age of three score years, and owns 120 acres of land on section 10, where she now resides, surrounded by a large circle of friends, who esteem her for her geniality, kind heart and other worthy qualities.

George S. Upton, of whom we write, is the eldest of the eleven children born to his parents, of whom three daughters and three sons are yet living. He received a part of his education in Missouri, which was further supplemented by a few years of instruction after coming to this State. While at home he assisted his father in the improvement of his land, and in 1865 became owner of the farm which he now occupies, and has since then paid especial attention to its cultivation. After arriving at manhood he was united in marriage, in Cass County, to Miss Fanny J. Reynolds, who was born in Andrew County, Mo., Sept. 25, 1852, being the first daughter and third child of her parents. William B. Reynolds, her father, was twice married. The maiden name of his first wife, mother of Mrs. Upton, was Susan Kelly, who died in early life, leaving four small children. Her father, John Kelly, a native of Maryland, was of Scotch-Irish descent. He married and subsequently moved with his family to Missouri, where both he and his wife died, leaving four children, of whom Susan was the youngest. William B. Reynolds, father of Mrs. Upton, was the son of Col. Reuben R. Reynolds, who was born in Kentucky, and served as colonel during the Revolutionary War. He married Frances Monroe of Maryland, and they moved to Missouri, and were pioneers of Buchanan County, where they lived for some time, moving from there to Andrew County later in life, where they both died at an advanced age. They were active members of the Baptist Church, where Col. Reynolds served many years as a valued officer. Mrs. Upton's father married for his second wife Amanda Florence, in Andrew County, Mo., and in 1865 they removed to this State, where they are still living on a farm in Liberty Precinct. For further sketch see biography of William B. Reynolds.

The wife of our subject was educated in the public schools of Missouri, and later attended the Baptist College in Nebraska City. She is an accomplished, talented woman, and has proved a true helpmate to her husband. To them have been born three very bright, interesting children, namely: LaRoy, now thirteen years of age; Exmoore W., who died at the age of ten years; and F. Earl, aged four years.

Mr. and Mrs. Upton have an assured position in the highest social circles of their community, and are unusually pleasant, genial people, winning friends among all classes. Both are active members of and generous contributors to the support of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Mr. Upton being an Elder, Clerk of the Sessions, and one of the Church Board. In his political views our subject is a Democrat, and though no office-seeker he was nominated by his friends as representative for the Legislature for this county in 1882, and was defeated by only eleven votes, he having run more than 490 votes ahead of his ticket.

THOMAS W. SHORT, a pioneer of this county, is located on section 6 in Mount Pleasant Precinct. He was born in Lincolnshire, England, Sept. 27, 1849, and is the son of Edward and Mary (Booth) Short, being the only boy of their family. When he was about a year old his parents emigrated to America, locating first in Newark, N. J., where the father followed merchant tailoring and where they lived two years. Their next removal was to Pontiac, Mich., where they sojourned eight years, the father still pursuing his business as a merchant tailor. Later they removed to Ann Arbor.

The subject of this sketch started out for himself in life when nine years old and occupied himself at whatever he could find to do until 1868. He then began lumbering in the pineries of Northern Michigan. In 1871 he turned his attention to railroading, was first a breakman then a baggage-master, then later a conductor on the extra freights of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company, making his headquarters in Plattsmouth, this State. He left railroading in 1879, settling on a farm in Centre Precinct, which he followed mostly until 1887, when he took possession of his present property. This is improved with good buildings and fences, and he has brought the land to a thorough state of cultivation. Besides this property he also has land near the present site of Manly.

Mr. Short himself conceived the idea of laying out the village, which he accomplished in 1884. He established a store and grain warehouse in company with Charles Talmage and John Breckenridge, which they conducted about six months, when the firm was merged into the style of Breckenridge & Co., continuing thus until Mr. Short withdrew. He soon disposed of his entire interests in Manly village and confines his attention now to his farm. He was for one year located in Cheyenne County, Neb., and interested in real estate. He ran the first train into Sutton, Neb.

Mr. Short, politically, is a Republican. He still remains a jolly bachelor.

ALBERT ERNST. As is well-known, the soldier element has been a conspicuous feature in the settlement of these Western States; and as one of its representatives, we take pleasure in presenting to the patrons of this work a brief review of the life of the subject of this sketch, who, as a veteran of the army that so successfully fought and conquered in the late Rebellion, has reason to be proud of his military record. He was an early settler of Stove Creek Precinct, where he is still living on his homestead on section 20, where he is engaged in general farming and stock-raising.

Our subject is a native of Prussia, Germany, where his birth occurred Oct. 14, 1825. His parents, Christian and Louisa (Putzseo), were born in the same place. His father was a charcoal burner, and dealt in wood and coal, and he was also a farmer, owning and managing a small farm. He served in the German Artillery also. He died in May, 1841, in the prime of life, aged forty-one years.

His wife preceded him in death, dying in 1836, at the age of thirty-six. They were people of true Christian worth, and devoted members of the Lutheran Church. Six children were born of their marriage, namely: Albert, Louisa, Fredericka, August, Mathilda, Augusta, the three last are now dead. Albert Ernst grew to manhood in the town of Zehdswick, attending school the first fourteen years of his life, in accordance with the strict regulations of his native land, thereby obtaining an excellent practical education. At that age he was confirmed in the Lutheran Church. He was set to learn the baker's trade after leaving school, and worked at that until he was nineteen. Then, in compliance with the laws of his country, he entered the infantry department of the German army, and served four years, taking part in the Revolution of 1848. After the expiration of his term of enlistment he retired from the service and resumed the baker's trade, at which he worked until 1856, when he sailed from Hamburg on the good ship Havard, and forty-nine days later landed in New York. He proceeded to Cincinnati, Ohio, and found work on a farm near that city. He subsequently found his way to New Orleans, La., and was there working when the war broke out. The Southerners were going to press him into the Confederate service much against his will, so he managed to get on board of an emigrant boat and concealing his identity by an emigrant outfit, got through to Cairo, Ill., without detection. He was employed in a bakery in that city until 1862, when he enlisted in support of the Union cause, becoming a member of Company B, 12th Illinois Cavalry, and was mustered in at Camp Butler, and was despatched to Virginia under Col. Foss. While in the Shenandoah Valley he was out reconnoitering with his regiment, and was captured by the rebels and sent to Lynchburg and thence to Belle Isle prison, where he was kept for two months. At the end of that time he was parolled and soon exchanged, and rejoined the Union troops at Camp Alexandria. From there he went to Camp Douglas, and was sent back to his regiment in the spring of 1863. He took an active part in Stoneman's raid, and was at Chester Point, and in the latter engagement his horse was shot under him. He was afterward despatched to Washington with others, to get horses for the service. He entered into the fight at Beatrice Station and then went to Chicago to recruit. From there he went with his regiment to Baton Rouge on a raid. Then he and his comrades went to the Pinerias to take part in an engagement there, and thence were despatched by boat to New Orleans. The troops were landed and camped out at Greenwood. Fort Donelson was the next important battle in which the regiment took a part, and from there it proceeded to Memphis, and there our subject was mustered out, having done good service as a brave and fearless soldier for over three years. He stayed in St. Louis for two years after that, clerking and working in a factory. In the spring of the year 1868 he left that city, and coming to Nebraska took up a homestead claim, comprising his present 80-acre farm in Stove Creek Precinct. He was among the the early settlers here, and his land was in a primitive condition, and his was the pioneer task to break the soil and prepare it for culture, to set out groves and orchard, erect suitable buildings, dwellings, barns, etc., to fence his land, and other things too numerous to mention. All of this he has accomplished by dint of hard labor and prudent management. His farm is in a satisfactory condition, and produces fine crops, and he has it stocked with good stock. It has not all been smooth sailing for our subject, however, as he has met with losses by drouth, grasshopper raids, etc.

To the devoted wife, who has shared his pioneer life with him, our subject was married in their old home in Prussia, Dec. 17, 1854. She is likewise a native of Germany, as were her parents, Carl and Fredericka (Styriko) Ernst. Her father owned a mill and a farm, both of which he managed until his death in 1845. His widow survived him until 1865. They had nine children, of whom Mrs. Ernst was the eighth in order of birth, and she was born April 2, 1833.

Two children have been born of this marriage, Johanna and Pauline. The former is an invalid, and lives at home with her parents. Pauline is the wife of a grocer in Lincoln, and they have two children, Catherine and Lawrence.

Mr. Ernst is a man upon whom his neighbors can rely, as his honest integrity and industry are undisputed, and he is ever ready to do another a good turn. He and his wife are valued members of the German Lutheran Evangelical Church in Louisville, and in his political faith he is strong Republican.

HENRY HIRZ is identified with the industrial interests of Plattsmouth Township, where he has a cozy, comfortable home. He is a native of Germany, his birth occurring in that country, Feb. 10, 1854. His parents were William and Sophia (Betz) Hirz, born, reared, married in Germany, and there died. They had a family of seven children, as follows: Rose, who died Sept. 23, 1888, in Knox County, Neb.; Winnie, who is in Baltimore, Md.; Henry, of whom we write; William and Kate, in the Black Hills; John, in Nebraska; and Philip, also in the Black Hills.

Our subject was reared in the Fatherland, and there received a substantial education. His worthy parents carefully trained him in all that goes to make a useful and honest man, and from them he inherited industrious and thrifty habits. At an early age he was sent to learn the butcher's trade, and in 1872, ambitious to better his condition financially, he embarked in the month of October for the United States, and landed at New York after a voyage of seventeen days. For awhile he was engaged in butchering in Philadelphia, and from there he went to New Jersey. We afterward hear of him in Ohio, in the town of Dayton, where he worked at his trade about a month. Pekin, Ill., was his next stopping place as he gradually drifted westward. He worked there on a farm and at butchering for about a year. He next made St. Louis his home for the space of five months. After that Burlington and Grand Junction, Iowa, claimed him in succession as a resident. In September, 1875, he paid his first visit to Plattsmouth, where he joined a surveying party and went to the western part of Nebraska. He assisted in surveying there for two months, and then retraced his steps to Plattsmouth, where he has ever since resided. His active, energetic nature would not long permit him to be idle, and he soon found employment on the farm of Mr. Philip Horn. He staid with him awhile, and then went to work for Mr. Jacob Vallery, Sr.

Our subject had been so prosperous since coming to America that in 1880 he was enabled to establish a home of his own, and on the 28th of October he was united in marriage to Miss Catherine, daughter of Philip Horn. Their pleasant household is completed by the one son, Philip, that has been born of their marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Hirz stand well in this community, and they are in every way worthy of the respect and esteem accorded to them.

JAMES W. SPERRY. Among the inventions of the age that of pressed brick as a building material has become one of the most popular and useful, and the subject of this sketch, finding himself unexpectedly in possession of the wherewithal for its manufacture, was not slow in perceiving that it would not be amiss to locate an establishment for this purpose within the precinct of Avoca. His idea was perfected in the spring of 1888, when a company was organized and Mr. Sperry selected as Superintendent of the yards. The intended capacity is 30,000 to 40,000 bricks per day. As if nature had provided especially for this enterprise in his locality, there is existing upon the land of Mr. Sperry a hill or mound of sand and clay adjacent to the works in the northwestern part of the precinct, isolated in its character as it were from the soil around it. It is believed to be the only body of soil of its kind in the State. It contains equal proportions of clay and sand, there being a vein of the latter seven to seventeen feet thick. The clay vein is about forty feet in depth, and the two combined furnish a product scarcely equaled and surely not excelled anywhere. The red clay predominates, which gives weight and color to the manufactured product.

This valuable material was discovered by Mr. Sperry in 1882, and has been a source of considerable revenue to him. The manufactured product is particularly fine and solid and almost indestructible. The theory of geologists in regard to this deposit is that it was conveyed here on an iceberg and deposited in the flats on the Weeping Water, during the glacial period. This idea is verified by the fact that there are imbedded in the deposit the bones of large animals and various kinds of fossil formations, pieces of lava, and indications of volcanic substances, the whole forming a very interesting subject for speculation.

This mound is on the land of which Mr. Sperry became the purchaser in June, 1880. Two years later he discovered the bonanza, and in order to experiment he obtained a small hand-made kiln, and commenced operations. In this he was assisted by Mr. E. L. Reed, one of the pioneers and a leading man in many of the enterprises which set Weeping Water upon its feet. It was up-hill work at first, but after a few years of struggle they began to obtain results. Neither had a practical knowledge of the business, and there was consequently much money expended in experimenting and for other purposes.

The Weeping Water Pressed Brick Company is now under organization on a solid basis, and the builders of the vicinity are beginning to recognize its importance. Mr. Sperry came to this county in 1871, poor, he expresses it, "as a church mouse," walking into Weeping Water Precinct with a capital of fifty cents in his pocket, and began to work at his trade of mason and brick-layer. He was prudent and economical, and in the course of a few years had amassed a small capital. In 1880 he purchased twenty acres of land, paying therefor the sum of $200. This was located about two miles from the town of Weeping Water, on section 6, and at the time appeared to the ordinary observer as a worthless rise of ground, none suspecting the treasures lying beneath. The works lie adjacent to the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which furnishes convenient shipping facilities, the company having put in side tracks for this purpose, and the product is now conveyed to many points in this and adjacent counties.

The subject of this sketch was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, Sept. 10, 1845, and is the son of Reuben and Elizabeth (Whitten) Sperry, who were also natives of the Buckeye State, born, reared and married in St. Lawrence County. The father was a mason and stone-cutter by trade, and during early manhood carried a musket in the Mexican War, as a member of an Ohio Regiment. After this conflict was ended he settled down to his trade again, until the outbreak of the Rebellion, when he again hastened to the rescue of his country, serving five years in Company H, 4th Iowa Infantry, and Company D, 7th Iowa Cavalry, as a non-commissioned officer, and operating mostly on the frontier, among the Indians of the Northwest. He received his honorable discharge at Leavenworth, Kan., in July, 1866, and returned to private life in Van Buren County, Iowa, where he remained with his family until the fall of 1875, when he changed his residence to this county, settling in Weeping Water, where his death took place three weeks later, on the 9th of November, when he was fifty-three years old. Reuben Sperry was a good man in the broadest sense of the term, kind in his family and toward his neighbors, making it the rule of his life to do unto others as he would they should do to him, and in his whole career exhibiting the example of the conscientious man and law-abiding citizen. In religious belief he was a Universalist. The family included nine children, five sons and four daughters, seven of whom are living and located mostly in Nebraska and Iowa. The mother is still living in Iowa, and is now the wife of James Hunt, of Davis. Her age is about sixty-one years.

Our subject, in common with his brothers and sisters, was educated in the common schools, and at an early age was taught those habits of thrift and industry which have been the secret of his success. He was but a year old when his parents removed from his native State to Iowa, where he was reared to manhood and served his apprenticeship at the trade of mason under the instruction of his father. Imbued with the patriotism of his sire, he, upon the outbreak of the Civil War, enlisted, when but a youth of seventeen, in Company H, 3d Iowa Cavalry, the regiment being assigned to the command of Gen. Wilson. Young Sperry, with his comrades, participated in most of the important engagements of that campaign, being in the fights at Selma, Ala., and Columbus, Ga., and on the track of the rebel Gen. Price during his raid through Missouri, a campaign of ninety-six days, the most of which time he was in the saddle. He was later on the steamer "Maria" when she exploded near St. Louis, and had a portion of his hair burned off, besides being severely injured in his spine and scalded on his leg. Otherwise he came out of the army uninjured, after a service of nineteen months, and received his honorable discharge at Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 9, 1865. He was content to serve his country as a private all the way through, the consciousness of having done his duty being ample reward for his hardships and privations.

After the war Mr. Sperry returned to his parents in Iowa, and later migrated to this country. He lost his heart in Avoca Precinct, and was married at the home of the bride, Miss Margaret J. McDermed, Nov. 29, 1874. Mrs. Sperry was born near Peoria, Ill., Nov. 17, 1852, and is the daughter of Alfred and Elizabeth (McFarland) McDermed, who were natives of Kentucky and Ireland, and came to Nebraska in the fall of 1866, settling in Avoca Precinct, this county, where the father carried on farming, and where the parents still live. Mrs. Sperry is a very intelligent and amiable lady, and enjoys the friendship and respect of a large circle of friends. Our subject and his estimable wife began their wedded life together at the home which they still occupy, and which they have together built up with industrious care, gathering about them the many little comforts and conveniences indispensable to those who live properly and well. They have no children. Mr. Sperry, politically, is a sound Republican. It is hardly necessary to state he forms but another example of the self-made man who has not labored in vain, and is held in due respect among his fellow-citizens.

CHARLES SPOHN, Avoca Precinct has been particularly fortunate in the men who sought her borders during the pioneer days, selected their homesteads here and have been content to remain. The subject of this sketch, one of her most highly esteemed citizens, is pleasantly located on section 5, where he had formerly 140 acres of good land, but has parted with six acres on account of the construction of the Missouri Pacific Railroad across it. He dates his residence here from 1861, although he secured the land two years prior to that time.

The farm of Mr. Spohn was but slightly improved when he took possession of it, but by a course of improvement and thorough cultivation it has been made valuable, having upon it good buildings and receiving the requisite moisture from a branch of the Weeping Water. A notable feature in the farm is three or four acres underlaid with stone suitable for building purposes, which not only furnishes the owner with this material, but his neighbors around. Mr. Spohn is a child of the Fatherland, having been born in the Grand Duchy of Baden, Aug. 30, 1836, and is of pure German ancestry for generations back.

Upon emigrating to the United States our subject settled with his parents first in Pike County, Ohio, where he lived from 1843 to 1859. He emigrated to America in 1843, with his parents and their four other children to the United States, and they made the voyage on a sailing-vessel, occupying forty-five days in the passage across the Atlantic. After landing in New York City they proceeded directly to Pike County, Ohio, where the father began farming, and was thus occupied on the soil of the Buckeye State until the death of the wife and mother, which occurred in the spring of 1859. In the meantime the family had been enlarged by the birth of one child. After the mother's death the father and children came to Nebraska, and the elder Spohn occupied himself in farming as before. He lived to be ripe in years, having passed his eighty-third birthday at the time of his death, which took place in the fall of 1877.

The parents of our subject were active, industrious and hard-working people, careful and conscientious in their lives, and to the last remained faithful adherents of the Lutheran Church, in the doctrines of which they had been trained from childhood. Charles, our subject, was the youngest but one of the family, and attained his majority in Pike County, Ohio. He was there educated in the public schools and came West a single man. He assisted his father in the development of the new farm in Avoca Precinct after their arrival in Nebraska, and remained single until July 2, 1869, when he was married to Miss Sophia L. Dow. This lady was born in Illinois, May 14, 1854, and is the daughter of Frederick Dow, of Otoe County, a sketch of whose life is given elsewhere in this volume.

Mrs. Spohn was a child four years of age when her parents came in 1858 to this country. Her mother died eight years later, and she remained a member of her father's household until her marriage. She was a lady of many excellent qualities, and after becoming the mother of five children departed this life at the homestead in Avoca Precinct, April 25, 1887. Two of her children are since deceased, namely: Albert and an infant unnamed. The survivors are Tilda A., Charles, Jr., and George, all of whom are at home with their father. Mr. Spohn, politically, is a sound Republican, as was his father before him, after becoming a naturalized citizen. The latter, Mathias Spohn, was a cabinet-maker by trade, which he pursued in his native country during his early manhood, and was there also married to Miss Lena Winters. After their marriage the parents of our subject located in the town of Haagen, Baden, where the father followed his trade until deciding to emigrate to America.

JACOB STULL is a native-born citizen of Plattsmouth, and is still an honored resident of the city. He is a son of John Frederick and Agatha Stull, well-known pioneers of this township and county, whose biography appears elsewhere in this volume. Our subject was born Aug. 26, 1858, on the paternal homestead. He early commenced attendance at the local schools, receiving a substantial education in all common branches. He grew to a strong and self-reliant manhood amid the pioneer scenes that surrounded his early home on every hand. He obtained a sound, practical knowledge of agriculture in all its departments, while assisting his father in the care of his extensive farming and stock-raising interests, and continued to be an inmate of the parental household until he was twenty-four years old. He then established a home of his own, marrying, Sept. 29, 1883, Miss Ella, daughter of P. S. and Olive Wheeler. Two children have blessed their wedded life, Olive and John F. The latter died in infancy, Aug. 21, 1888, and his death has been the sorrow of an otherwise happy married life.

'Tis a weary world, at best,
This world that he will not know,
Would we waken him out of such perfect rest.
For its sorrow and strife? Ah! no.

Escaped are its thorns and harms;
The only path he has trod
Is that which leads from his mother's arms
Into the arms of God.

Mr. Stull was born when Nebraska was under Territorial government, and nearly the whole of its wonderful development has taken place within his remembrance. He is now numbered among the young men who of recent years have identified themselves with the pioneers and later comers of their native State in sustaining its various interests and in advancing its prosperity. He owns a good residence and house lot, pleasantly located in a desirable quarter of Plattsmouth. He is an energetic, enterprising young man, of sound habits and excellent business talents, so that his success in life is assured. He and his wife are esteemed members of the Presbyterian Church, and in their daily lives they endeavor to carry out the precepts of their religion. Mr. Stull is an emphatic believer in the policy pursued by the Democratic party.

JOHAN C. KNABE, of Avoca Precinct, bears the distinction of being one of its oldest and most prominent German settlers. He has reason to be proud of his nationality, for his brethren of the Fatherland have borne no unimportant part in the development of the great West. Mr. Knabe is a farmer in good circumstances and makes a specialty of stock-raising.

The property of our subject, which he pre-empted from Uncle Sam in the winter of 1858, while Nebraska was a Territory, is located on section 12. He first secured 160 acres, but has gradually added to his possessions until he is now the owner of 504 broad acres. He arrived in Cass County on the 1st day of January, 1855, when there were no settlers in the neighborhood and when it required no little determination to make up his mind to begin the construction of a home on what was then a barren waste, with the exception of prairie grass. He did not, however, take up land until three years later, in the meantime employing himself at farming. He came to this locality poor in purse, having nothing to depend upon but his own exertions, and at a time when there was not even a road to be seen and no neighbors but Indians. These, however, could not be called neighbors, as they only went strolling through the country, keeping an eye out for what they could carry off. Mr. Knabe, however, had no trouble with them—in fact the newly-arrived white man and his Indian neighbors seemed to regard each other with a sort of friendly curiosity.

Mr. Knabe worked among the farmers in another part of the County until he could get a little money ahead so as to purchase farm implements and begin the cultivation of his land. It has taken years of labor and thousands of dollars to bring his land to its present state, the whole being now in productive condition. Upon it he has erected a set of substantial buildings and added one improvement after another until the homestead has become an object of admiration to all the country around. The fat cattle and the well-fed horses always associated with the well-to-do German farmer, the sheds, corn cribs and pens and the comfortable dwelling, altogether form a goodly sight to the eye. Mr. Knabe improved his first quarter section before he attempted to add to his real estate. He has wisely invested his surplus capital in a manner which cannot be carried off by the defaulting bank cashier.

The Duchy of Holstein, Germany, was the early home of our subject, and where his birth took place Oct. 1, 1824. He was the youngest of five children, two sons and three daughters, the offspring of Henry and Margaret (Grofe) Knabe, who were natives of the same province, good, honest people, but poor in purse, the father making a living for his family by hard labor. In early manhood Henry Knabe served in the Danish standing army and spent his entire life upon his native soil, passing away after he had reached his threescore years and more. The wife and mother died along in the fifties. The parents in religion were German Lutherans, and trained their children carefully and conscientiously in their own religious faith.

Our subject remained a member of the parental household until reaching his majority, and for eight years thereafter employed himself at farming. He was not satisfied with his surroundings or his prospects, and finally decided to seek his fortunes on another continent. He accordingly gathered together his personal effects, and in March, 1852, set sail from the Port of Hamburg, and after a voyage of seven weeks and two days landed in the city of New Orleans. Thence he made his way up the Mississippi River to Davenport, Iowa, arriving there June 20 of that same year. He began working as a farm laborer and was thus occupied until coming to Nebraska. Up to this time he had been a single man, but he met his fate in Avoca Precinct, being married Nov. 22, 1857, to Miss Anna Lohse. The parents of Mrs. Knabe, Henry and Catherine (Hamsheldt) Lohse, natives of Holstein, came to America with their family in the spring of 1858, and took up their home in Avoca Precinct, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The father, however, only lived a short time thereafter, passing away Sept. 21, 1859, at the age of fifty-nine years. The mother survived her husband nearly nine years, her death taking place Feb. 4, 1868, she being of the same age as her husband at his death—fifty-nine. They also, like the Knabe family, were excellent Christian people, and Lutherans in religion.

The wife of our subject was born in Holstein, Feb. 4, 1836, and was the youngest of the two children comprising the parental family. Her sister Lena is now the wife of Conrad Mullis, a sketch of whom is found in the history of Otoe County, in this volume, and of which they are residents. Mrs. Knabe was a young lady of twenty-one years when coming to America, making the journey alone, but was soon afterward joined by her parents. She has proved the true and efficient helpmate of her husband in his labors and struggles, working bravely by his side in the accumulation of their property and the building up of their homestead. They are the parents of four children, all living. The eldest daughter, Margaret C., is the wife of John Buhrns and they live on a farm in Avoca Precinct; Henry J. married Miss Louisa Heepner, who is also farming in this precinct; Helena, Mrs. Charles Brandt, lives with her husband on a farm in Liberty Precinct; John C. remains at home with his parents and assists his father in the management of the farm. Mr. Knabe, politically, votes the straight Republican ticket and takes an interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of his adopted county. Both he and his excellent wife are members in good standing of the Lutheran Church, attending services at St. John's, in Avoca Precinct.

PHILLIP F. HARRISON, one of the self-made men of Plattsmouth, is a native of the Old Dominion, having been born in Upshur County, now West Virginia, June 17, 1854. His father, Selden Payton Harrison, was a native of France, whence he emigrated to America early in life. He was a brother of President William Henry Harrison. His parents, the paternal grandparents of our subject, crossed the Atlantic prior to the beginning of the nineteenth century, and settled in Loudoun County, Va., where they spent the remainder of their lives.

The father of our subject was reared in his native province, and learned the trade of cabinet-maker. After coming to the United States he enlisted as a soldier in the War of 1812, and at the close of the struggle lived with his parents in Loudoun County, Va., for a number of years. He then removed to Upshur County, following his trade in the village of Buchanan, where he spent the remainder of his days, his death taking place in August, 1854.

The maiden name of the mother of our subject was Mary B. Roberts, who was born in Loudoun County, Va., and was the daughter of John Roberts, supposed to have been also born in Virginia. He spent his entire life in the Old Dominion. Our subject at the time of his father's death was an infant of a few weeks old. There were six other children in the family, namely: Elizabeth, William, Francis, Sarah, George and Robert. The mother kept the family together until they were enabled to look out for themselves, and in May, 1871, left Virginia, coming to Nebraska, and is now living with her daughter in Plattsmouth, and is sixty-eight years old. Her husband received a land warrant for his services as a soldier, and Mrs. H. draws a pension from the Government.

In March, 1871, young Harrison, then seventeen years of age, came to Plattsmouth, and for awhile was engaged in teaming. Later he secured a position as clerk in a general store, where he remained two years, then entered the employ of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company, being for a time in the shops at this place, and finally was promoted to a position in the office of the Master Mechanic. Upon leaving this position, three years later, he began buying and shipping grain.

In August, 1877, Mr. Harrison established a dray line, and in time built up an extensive business in general teaming, which he has continued until the present time. That year also he became interested in blooded chickens, Black Cochins and Light Bramahs being his favorite breeds. At the county fairs he has exhibited some of the finest specimens of the feathered race to be found in the West, invariably carrying off the blue ribbons.

The marriage of our subject was celebrated at the home of the bride in Plattsmouth, on the 3d of May, 1876, the maiden of his choice being Miss Elmira Hollister. Mrs. Harrison was born in Walworth County, Wis., on the 10th of June, 1860, and was the daughter of Herbert H. and Nancy (Bush) Hollister, the former a native of New York State, and the latter of Germany. Mr. Hollister was reared to manhood in his native State, whence he migrated to Wisconsin and settled among the pioneers of Walworth County. He purchased a tract of prairie land about sixteen miles west of the present site of Delevan, from which he improved a good farm, and where he lived until about 1869. Then coming to Nebraska, he settled in Plattsmouth and entered the employ of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company, with which he has been connected since that time. Mrs. Hollister emigrated to America with her parents when quite young. She died in Walworth County, Wis., in the year 1854. The parental family included two children only—Albert and the wife of our subject. Mr. Harrison is a staunch Republican in politics.

REV. ALPHA WRIGHT, who died Nov. 30, 1888, better known as "Chaplain Wright," was an honored citizen of Plattsmouth, where he formerly lived in the enjoyment of an ample income and in one of the pleasantest homes in the city. He was chaplain of a Missouri regiment during the late Civil War, and during the contest was promoted to places of honor and trust, at one time serving on the staff of Gen. Ewing. After peace was declared he became a chaplain in the Regular Army, and acted in that capacity on the frontier for several years, and subsequently was stationed at Fort Omaha, finally retiring on three-fourths pay, with the rank of Captain.

Our subject was born in the town of Wilmington, Windham Co., Vt., April 16, 1814. His great-grandfather, Silas Wright, was, so far as known, a native of New England, and his grandfather, Martin Wright, likewise a native of that part of the country, is thought to have been born in Rhode Island. He served in the Revolutionary War, and his widow, who survived him a number of years, was a pensioner. He was an early settler of Windham County, Vt., where he spent his last years. The father of our subject, Erastus Wright, was reared on the old homestead in Vermont, and resided in Windham County until 1814, when, with a colony, he started for the wilds of Central New York, the removal across the mountains and through the wilderness being made with ox teams. The colony located in that part of New York now included in Steuben County, being among the earliest settlers there. The father of our subject bought a tract of timbered land, on which he erected a round log house with a slab roof. Having no stove the mother of our subject used to cook the meals before the fireplace. The father kept sheep and raised flax, and the mother used to spin and weave for many years, and her children were all clothed in garments of which the material was the skillful product of her own hands, the woolen cloth being colored with butternut bark. There were no railways or canals in that section of the country, and Baltimore was the most convenient market for grain. The settlers used to raft lumber down the Coshocton and Chemung Rivers, thence to the Susquehanna, and thence to the seaboard. They used to build boats that they called arks, each boat holding 1,000 bushels of wheat, which sold for thirty cents a bushel in Steuben County and would bring $1.00 a bushel in Baltimore. After they had sold their wheat in that city they would sell the boats for lumber and return on foot to their homes in Steuben County. Mr. Wright cleared three farms in that vicinity and erected good frame buildings, continuing to live there until feeble health compelled him to retire, and he spent his last years in the home of our subject, where he died in 1858. The maiden name of his wife was Lydia Wheeler, and she was born in Connecticut. She was a daughter of Jeremiah and Mary (Joselyn) Wheeler, natives of Rhode Island. She died at the home of a daughter in Steuben County. There were ten children born to her and her husband, seven of whom grew to maturity.

"Chaplain" Wright received the preliminaries of his education in the pioneer schools of Steuben County, generally attending in the winter season, and the remainder of the year helping on the farm or in the timber. When he was nineteen years of age his father gave him his time, and he started out on foot with a small bundle of clothing and some food and made his way to Lima, N. Y., where he entered the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary. He studied there one year and then returned to Steuben County to teach school, receiving as compensation $12 a month and board, boarding around at the homes of his pupils, as was customary in early times. He taught in Steuben and Wayne Counties until 1836, when he joined the Methodist Episcopal Conference and was ordained as a preacher in that denomination at Angelica, Allegany Co., N.

Y., by Bishop Morris. He became well known in that part of the country, and held several pastorates in different parts of the State, including one of four years at Rochester, and another of the same length of time in Buffalo. In 1856 he was called to Cleveland, Ohio, and from there he went to Sandusky to preach, and thence to Milwaukee. In 1861 he went to St. Joseph, Mo., where he received the appointment of chaplain of the 25th Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and was stationed a short time in New Madrid. In December, 1863, he was detached from that regiment and sent to Pilot Knob to take charge of the refugees and contrabands. His administration of affairs there was so satisfactory in every way that in May, 1864, he was promoted to the staff of Gen. Ewing, and was given charge of all refugees and contrabands in the department of Missouri, his office then being in St. Louis, Mo. His duties in that responsible office were to furnish provisions, clothing, transportation, etc., to those requiring them, and to see that the sick were cared for. He remained at his post of duty until the close of the war, having his headquarters at St. Louis. He proved to be the right man in the right place, looking after his charges with the uttermost care and tenderness, and doing all that his large heart prompted for their comfort, and many a poor, forlorn being had reason to bless him. After the cessation of hostilities he was appointed chaplain in the regular Army, and was stationed at Fort Laramie for four years. He was next sent to Fort D. A. Russell, Wyoming Ter., where he remained two and one-half years. After that he was stationed at Fort Omaha seven years, and at his own request was then retired on three-fourths pay, with the rank of Captain, and since that time lived in retirement here until his death. In 1868 he severed his connection with the Methodist Church, joined the Presbyterians, and from 1879 until 1882 he preached with great acceptance in the Presbyterian Church at Bellevue. In 1865 he bought a fine building site in this city and erected the home in which the remainder of his life was passed. He subsequently purchased an entire block of land, on which he afterward built six houses, which he rented at a good advantage.

Chaplain Wright was married Sept. 15, 1835, to

A. Juliette Langley, and four daughters have been born to them, namely: Amelia, wife of W. F. Morrison, who resides in Rochester, N. Y.; J. Amanda, wife of Willard N. Buell, deceased; his widow resides in Plattsburgh; May E., wife of R. D. Gallagher, of Chicago; Frances E., wife of J. N. Wise, Postmaster of Plattsburgh.

Mrs. Wright was born in Huron, Wayne Co., N. Y., Aug. 31, 1818. Her father, Charles Langley, was a native of Canada. His father was born, reared and married in France. He came to America with his wife and children and settled in Montreal, Canada, where he was engaged as a wholesale merchant. From there he moved to Boston, where he carried on the same business. Mrs. Wright's father went to Utica, N. Y., when he was a young man, and was there married to Bethany Parker. She was a native of that city, and was a daughter of Jared and Temperance (Honestie) Parker. She died in Newark, Wayne Co., N. Y., in 1838. Her parents were among the early pioneers of Utica, and her grandparents died there at the age of ninety-seven and ninety-three years respectively. After marriage Mrs. Wright's father settled in Wayne County, and was busy looking after his shipping interests, as he owned vessels that plied on the lakes. In 1824 he removed with his family from the town of Huron to Newark, where he engaged in the wholesale drug business until his death in 1845. "Chaplain" Wright was buried in Oak Hill cemetery, at Plattsburgh.

WL. BROWN, well-known in the city of Plattsburgh as a stirring and efficient business man, associated himself in the fall of 1888 in partnership with Otis H. Ballou, and they are now conducting a very successful general law practice, while making a specialty of real-estate and collections.

Mr. Brown is essentially a western man, with western interests, being a native of Grant County, Ind., and his birth taking place Oct. 15, 1881. His father, John R. Brown, was a native also of Grant County, and his paternal grandfather a native of Scotland, emigrated to America in the company of his seven brothers, at an early period in his life. Making their way to what was then the far West they took up their abode about 1830 among the earliest pioneers of Randolph County, Ind. Grandfather Brown took up a tract of heavily timbered land, cleared a farm in the wilderness and there spent the remainder of his life, dying at the advanced age of eighty-seven years.

Mrs. Sarah (Rogers) Brown, the paternal grandmother of our subject, also died at the old homestead in the eighty-sixth year of her age. Their son, John R., the father of our subject, was converted in his youth and became a member of the United Brethren Church. Of a thoughtful and serious turn of mind always, he commenced preaching at the age of nineteen years, being one of the first to assist in spreading the Gospel in Grant County and vicinity. He was for many years very active in the ministry, and organized many societies of the United Brethren denomination, officiating also as presiding Elder, and otherwise laboring faithfully in the Master's vineyard; at the same time he combined farming with preaching, becoming possessed of a tract of land in Huntington County, about four miles from the town of that name, and where he is now living, retired from active labor.

John R. Brown married Miss Rebecca Daly, who was born in Pennsylvania, and was the daughter of Dennis Daly, who moved from the Keystone State to Grant County, Ind., during the days of its early settlement. He also, like Mr. Brown, improved a farm from the wilderness, and there spent the remainder of his life. The parental family of our subject included four children, viz: W. L., Letitia A., May A. and Frances J.

Our subject, the eldest child of his parents, pursued his early studies in the district schools of his native township, mostly in the winter season, until a youth of eighteen years. He then began teaching, which he followed ten terms successfully in the fall and winter, being variously employed the remainder of the year. In 1877 he commenced the study of law in the office of M. D. Call at Huntington, Ind., and the year following was admitted to the bar. In 1879 he turned his face toward the far West, establishing himself at Plattsburgh, and inaugurating the practice which he has since carried on so successfully. In 1886 he accepted a position with the Lombard Investment Company of Lincoln, as Examiner of Titles, but in November, 1887, withdrew and returning to Plattsmouth resumed his regular practice. Mr. Lombard, in answering Mr. Brown's letter of resignation, complimented him highly upon the correctness and efficiency of his work, and the manner in which he had in all respects discharged his duties in connection with the firm.

One of the most interesting events in the life of our subject took place on the 18th of December, 1884, when he was united in marriage with Miss Matilda Peterson, at the home of the bride. This lady was born in Sweden, and was brought by her parents to America when a girl ten years of age. Of this union there have been born two children.

CAPT. JONATHAN HATT and his partner, J. W. Marthis, are proprietors of one of the best managed and most extensively patronized meat markets in Plattsmouth. He was born near Leamington, Canada, Dec. 12, 1848. His father, Anthony George Hatt, was a native of England, as was also his father, who was of German ancestry. The latter came to America previous to the Crimean War and joined his children in the Province of Ontario, Canada. He subsequently went from there to Wayne County, Mich., where he died in the home of a daughter, six miles from Detroit. Three of his children came to America: James settled near Leamington, Canada, and there died; Sarah married Joseph Batisbill, and died near Detroit, Mich., and the father of our subject is living in Plattsmouth.

The latter was reared in his native county, that of Essex, England, and in his youth he there learned the trades of wheelwright and carpentry. At nineteen years of age he came to America and located in Buffalo, where he worked at his trade, opening a wagon shop in company with his brother-in-law. They carried on business there a few years, and then our subject bought a tract of timbered land in Mercy Township, near Leamington, Canada, and there improved a farm. He afterward sold it in 1856 and bought another in Colchester, on which he lived until 1861. He then disposed of this property at a good advance on the original cost price, and went to Amberstburg to open a hotel, which he managed for two years. At the end of that time he sold his hotel and moved to Windsor, where he engaged in business as carpenter and builder until 1864. He then went to Detroit, and was employed in building in that city about a year. His next move took him to Dayton, Ohio, and he there assisted in building the Soldiers' Home. From there he went to Cincinnati, where he erected several buildings. From that city he went to Chicago and operated there nearly a year. Council Bluffs was his next destination, and after that Omaha, and in both places he was engaged at his trade. He came to Plattsmouth from the latter city to assist in building a hotel here (that building has since been burned). He had been here a short time when he seized a good opportunity to establish a meat-market. He carried on that business with good financial success until 1883, when he sold out to his son Jonathan and partner. Since then he has lived in retirement, having an ample income, and is spending the winter in California. The maiden name of his first wife, mother of our subject, was Ann Batisbill, and she was a native of England, coming to America with her parents. She died in 1856, leaving eight children, namely: Emily A., Sarah J., Elizabeth, William, George, Jonathan, Mary and Charlotte. Mr. Hatt married a second time, Emeline Maples becoming his wife.

The subject of this sketch is the youngest son of his parents. He was reared on a farm, and remained at home in his native county until he was about sixteen years old. He had an eager desire to become a sailor, and at that age shipped on board a lake vessel. He sailed on the lakes for several years and gained a good practical knowledge of navigation, so that when he was offered the captaincy of a steam-tug plying on Lakes Erie and Huron he was well fitted for the position and accepted it. He was master of that tug until 1876, when he engaged as mate on the steamer "Fred Kelley," which voyaged up and down Lakes Erie and Huron. He retained his position on board that steamer four years, and then signed as mate of the Mary Jerecki, and occupied that position for one year. He then succeeded Capt. Shepard as commanding officer on board of a boat that ran on Lake Michigan. In 1883 he abandoned life on the lakes to make his home under Nebraska's sunny skies. In January of that year he came to Plattsmouth, and forming a partnership with J. W. Marthis bought his father's market, and they have ever since carried on the business with signal success.

Our subject was married, in February, 1885, to Miss Elvira Sharping, a native of Milwaukee. They have one child, John Victor, who is a year old. Their daughter Lilian died in infancy.

Capt. Hatt's early experience as a sailor on the lakes has been of use to him in various ways; has rendered him independent and self-reliant, and he is keen and prompt in his dealings, yet he is frank and hearty in his manners, and no one is more ready than he to extend a helping hand to those who have been less fortunate than himself. He is eminently sociable and companionable, and these qualities find him favor among his fellow-members of Trio Lodge No. 84, A. O. U. W. Politically he a Republican.

Leonard C. W. Murray is a pioneer of Cass County of 1855. The pioneer element of Cass County has no more worthy factor than the subject of this biography, who, with his estimable wife, began housekeeping on an 80-acre farm four miles south of the present city of Plattsmouth in the spring of 1870. They lived there until 1882, then moved to a farm on section 30, in Plattsmouth Precinct, where they have since resided. This embraces 160 acres of good land, which, with the exception of having been plowed, was at the time of purchase destitute of improvement, there being no buildings. Mr. M. has put up a comfortable residence, a barn and other out-buildings, planted an orchard, fenced the fields, and by degrees added the other conveniences necessary for the successful prosecution of agriculture. Besides a large amount of labor involved he has expended over $4,000 in money, and has a homestead at once desirable and attractive.

Mr. Murray is essentially a Western man, having been born in Moniteau County, Mo., June 6, 1848.

His parents were Jonathan and Elizabeth (Berger) Murray (see sketch of his brother Joshua), and were among the very earliest settlers of that part of Missouri, going there with their parents from Tennessee when small children. They were reared and married in Moniteau County, where they lived until 1851, then removed to Mills County, Iowa, where they lived two years, and thence came to Nebraska Territory in 1855. The father selected a tract of land north of the present city of Rock Bluff, where the family lived a number of years, and where their thirteen children were reared to maturity.

The father of our subject died at the home farm in this precinct. He had been a pioneer of three Territories, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska, in fact his entire life was spent on the frontier. The mother is still living, making her home with her son Alvars, in Smith County, Kan. Leonard was the tenth child of the family, and was a little lad of five years when he came with his parents to Nebraska. There were then many Indians in the vicinity of the present site of Rock Bluff, and probably about six white families. Our subject labored with his father in the development of the Nebraska homestead, and early in life began to form his own plans for the future. A few months after reaching his majority he was married, Sept. 2, 1869, to Miss Rebecca A., daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth Wiles, of Plattsmouth Precinct. This lady was born Feb. 1, 1857, in Missouri, and of their union there are eleven children living: Charles A., Clarence, John, Isabella, Laura J., Ida May, Leonard C. W., Jr., David, Florence, Eddie and Christopher C. Cordelia, the second child, died at the age of eighteen months.

When the father of our subject began life in Nebraska he was without means, and got his first cow and their limited stock of household furniture with money earned by mauling rails at fifty cents per hundred. The mother added to the family income by weaving and spinning. Thus commenced the married life of the young people, in wide contrast to the condition of most of the newly wedded people of to-day, who would consider themselves greatly abused by fate or Providence were they compelled to make the shifts and turns which pioneers cheerfully underwent together. Mr. and Mrs. Murray have gathered around them scores of friends during their long residence in this county. They are both members in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. M., politically, is a staunch Republican.

SAMUEL McCLINTIC. This farmer, grain-buyer and public-spirited citizen of Eagle, was born near Fostoria, Hancock Co., Ohio, Jan. 19, 1839, where he lived with his parents until he was thirteen years old, when the family removed to Michigan, where he lived with his father until reaching the age of twenty-eight. One year prior to this time he married, and with his wife lived with his parents for one year, working on the farm. He then went to Black Hawk County, Iowa, in 1867, and rented 400 acres of land, which he cultivated for two years. In the spring of 1869 he concluded renting was not what he wanted, and in search of a better location and better opportunities he went to Arkansas, Kansas and Texas, but in all his journeyings he found nothing that satisfied him. He then came to Lincoln, Neb., where he had a half brother; from that city he came to Tipton Precinct, Cass County, and discovered the land that seemed to meet his requirements, and he filed a homestead claim of 160 acres on section 20. He then went back to Iowa for his family. He came back to Elkhorn in the spring, by rail and stage to Lincoln, and rented a farm near the latter place, for the first season, and began plowing and otherwise improving it. In the fall he homesteaded eighty acres of it, and let eighty acres go. In the spring of 1870 he built his house, which was 14x22 feet; when completed it was the largest house at that time in the Precinct. He hauled the lumber for it from Oak Grove.

The nearest markets to the home of our subject were Lincoln and Ashland. Neighbors were scarce, trials and hardships many, but our subject stuck right to it, and made a grand success of his venture. Not a hill or a tree were to be seen, to break the monotony of the view, so he set out his trees in groves, which after these years of growth present a fine appearance, and add great value to his homestead, on which he still lives. Himself and brother, in partnership, bought and shipped stock, and in 1873 they shipped to the Chicago market. They purchased land at various times, as opportunity offered, until they owned one entire section of 640 acres, described as the south one-half of section 21, southeast quarter of section 20, and the northeast quarter of section 29. This land they owned and operated in partnership until 1884, when our subject bought his brother's interest, and became the sole proprietor. In 1886 he sold to the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company the quarter-section of section 20, his original homestead, on which to locate the town site. He was very instrumental in getting the road through the Grove, donating the right of way for a mile through his property.

Mr. McClintic has his farm fenced and cross-fenced in convenient sized fields for the purposes for which they are intended, with substantial wire fences. A large orchard yields a large supply of excellent fruit, and ten acres of cedars, and a number of groves, afford abundant shelter to the large number of cattle which he handles annually. He raises and ships to market from five to six car-loads of hogs, and the same number of car-loads of cattle. He has eighteen head of one-half to three-quarter blood Norman horses, all of which he uses in the cultivation and operation of his farm.

When twenty-seven years old our subject was married to Miss Harriet McConnell, the daughter of Thomas and Mary (Ford) McConnell, Jan. 1, 1866, in Charlotte, Mich. This lady was the youngest of a family of eleven children—William, Eleanora, James, Phœbe, Rebecca, Thomas, John, Mary, Oliver and Elizabeth. William, John, Phœbe, Rebecca and Elizabeth are deceased. Harriet was born in Orange, Ashland Co., Ohio, Oct. 24, 1844. Her brothers Oliver and John served in the Union Army from the beginning of the Rebellion to its close. They enlisted from Michigan, and were honorably discharged. Her father and mother were natives of Pennsylvania; her fathers' family moved to Ashland County, Ohio., where he bought land and improved it. In 1852 he moved to Eaton County, Mich. He was a veteran soldier, serving in the American Army in the War of 1812, having enlisted when he was only sixteen years old. He died in Michigan in the fall of 1860. Her mother died in 1849, in Ohio. Both were earnest Christians, and were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Her grandfather McConnell was of Scotch-Irish descent, and was a soldier in the War of 1812. Her grandfather Ford was a farmer near Mansfield, Ohio; one of his sons, Thomas, was Governor of the State and a Colonel in the army. The father of our subject was George W. McClintic, born in Bradford County, Pa., Feb. 15, 1806. His mother was Elizabeth Daly, born in Guernsey County, Ohio. The father was of Irish descent, and moved to Ohio when a boy, and was one of the very first settlers in Morgan County, in that State. He bought land in the heart of the forest and cleared up a rich farm. He was married there, Miss Mary Lupone becoming his first wife; she died about one year after their marriage. On the 18th of February, 1836, he married Miss Elizabeth Dailey, and then removed first to Hancock County, Ohio, where he was one of the pioneers of that county. There he bought Government land and cleared two farms. In 1854 he removed to Eaton Township, Eaton Co., Mich., where he purchased land and improved it until he had a farm of 240 acres, planting a fine orchard and various other fruits. He was highly respected and honored by all who knew him, hale and hearty until he died. Eight days before his death he was digging ditches; he died Oct. 10, 1884. The mother died in 1885 aged sixty years.

Our subject's grandfather McClintic was a veteran soldier, he having served in the War of 1812. He was one of the pioneer settlers of Morgan County, Ohio, where he bought and improved land. He was of Irish descent, his father having come from Ireland. Grandfather Dailey was also a veteran soldier, having served in the War of 1812; he was of English descent and his home was in Ohio.

The parents of our subject had a family of eight children, of whom Samuel was the second oldest. One sister, Margaret, deceased, being the eldest. Mary, Joseph, George, Katharine, Elizabeth and Ida A. being younger. All these children were born in Ohio except Ida A. The home circle of our subject and his estimable wife has been graced with five children—Maud, Newton, Estella, Grace and Nellie; the two daughters, Grace and Maud, and a son, Newton, have passed away, leaving Estella and Nellie to cheer by their presence the declining years of their affectionate parents. Gentle and loving in their natures, they give great promise of being a source of joy and comfort and of lasting sunshine in their home.

When a name was sought for a new town it was proposed to name it McClintic, in honor of our subject, but with the modesty born of true merit he declined the compliment, suggesting that it be called by the name of the old post-office, which was accordingly done. The land now occupied by the town of Eagle is his original homestead. He owns a large amount of property in the town, as well as 480 acres adjoining the town. Mrs. McClintic is one of those ladies without whom the world could not well prosper; quiet and unassuming in her manner and hospitable to the fullest extent, she is a source of comfort to all who know and are brought into contact with her. Our subject has been Postmaster at Eagle for four years, has been on the School Board of the town, and aside from this he has filled no public office. In politics he is classed with the Democrats, but does not always vote with them, the man, not party, claiming his suffrage. He voted for Abraham Lincoln, and has been a delegate to State and County Conventions.

WILLIAM T. JOHNSON, a lifelong farmer in good circumstances and one of the prominent men of Rock Bluff Precinct, has recently sold his homestead on section 16, and proposes to retire from active labor. The rest which he proposes to enter upon he has most justly earned by years of industry, during which he has obtained a competency sufficient to keep him in comfort during his declining years.

Our subject is a Western man both by birth and in all his sympathies, his native place being Montgomery County, Mo., where he began life Oct. 27, 1845, when they all came to this county, and William T., on the 13th of January, 1870, was united in marriage with Miss Mary J. McNurlin. The young people began the journey of life together in Cass County, and Mr. Johnson occupied himself as before in farming pursuits, which he prosecuted thereafter for a period of nineteen years and until deciding to lay aside its labors and responsibilities.

Mr. Johnson made his first purchase of land in this township. This comprised 160 acres in extent and was located on section 16, in Rock Bluff Precinct. He battled successfully with the elements of the new soil and after a few years, finding the live-stock business remunerative, gave much of his attention to the raising and feeding of cattle. John and Jemima Johnson, the parents of our subject (see sketch on another page) also reside in this township.

Mrs. Johnson was born Jan. 27, 1855, in Ohio, and is the daughter of Marshall and Martha (Smith) McNurlin, the former of whom was a native of Huntingdon County, Pa., but reared in Ohio. The parents were married in Indiana in 1848, and remained residents of that State until the year 1865, when they came to this State, settling in Rock Creek Precinct, where the father engaged in farming. His death took place Feb. 11, 1884. Mrs. McNurlin is still living, making her home with her children. Grandfather James McNurlin was also a native of Pennsylvania, where he was reared to manhood and married Miss Rachel Jefferson, of that State. The paternal great-grandfather was a native of Ireland.

To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born seven children, namely: Lelia, John A., Lily, Edna, Artie, William M. and Charles C. John died in infancy, March 3, 1872, aged five months and twenty-three days. Mr. Johnson, politically, is an uncompromising Democrat, and his esteemed lady is a member in good standing of the United Presbyterian Church.

---

WILLIAM J. BALDWIN, a prosperous farmer and thorough lover of horses, is a resident of Ashland Precinct in Saunders County, on the "cut off." His home is situated on the southeast quarter of sections 7, 12 and 9, which was cut off from Cass and annexed to Saunders County, in 1866, when Ashland was made the capital of Saunders County. He was born in Essex County, N. J., seven miles from the Atlantic coast, Dec. 4, 1837. He remained there on the home farm until 1856, when at the age of nineteen he came West and settled in Mills County, Iowa, where he was a pioneer, and for many years was acquainted with and personally knew every inhabitant of the county. When he went there it was with the intention of making it his permanent home, which idea was brought about apparently by his youthful marriage, which took place when he was only eighteen years old, in 1855, when he was united in holy matrimony with Miss Mary E. Van Dorn. She was born in Morris County, N. J., and grew up there. See sketch of Aaron L. Van Dorn elsewhere in this work.

When our subject came to Iowa his wife accompanied him and bore her share of the cares and hardships of pioneer life, and she has the honor of being among the first white mothers in Mills County. Five children have been born to this worthy couple who are named: Frank, born in New Jersey; W. Roscoe, Anna, Charley and Willie. The son Frank resides in Cass County, where he owns and operates a farm and is married to Miss Adale Wilburn; W. Roscoe married Miss Samantha Corey, and also resides in Cass County; they have two children, Claudia and Cora; Anna is the wife of W. C. Gordon, Esq., an enterprising grain dealer, residing in Ashland; Charley is attending the High School at Ashland, and is in the class of '91; Willie is at home with his parents. Mr. Baldwin came with his family to Nebraska in February, 1880, where he settled on his present farm.

Mr. Baldwin has been in partnership with his wife's brother, Aaron Van Dorn, since the close of the war, and of late years they have been giving their attention almost exclusively to raising fine thorough bred horses. They have imported and now own the English Shire Stallion "Logan," and the imported Cleveland Bay Stallion, "Sporting Times." Each animal is worth a fortune. The firm have large and comfortable stables in both Cass and Saunders County. They are the first to engage in the business in this part of the State and success has been theirs. In the early years of their venture they met with many discouragements, and were thought by their neighbors to be entering into a business which would result in ultimate loss, but they knew that the venture could be made to pay a handsome profit on the investment necessary, and their present flourishing business is full proof of the correctness of their ideas.

The father of our subject, Horatio A., was born in New Jersey in 1802, was of Scotch and French origin, deriving the French blood from his mother's side. He is still living in Mills County, Iowa, having come there from New Jersey in 1859. The grandfather Baldwin held a commission as Major in the American Army during the War of 1812, having had a previous experience in army life, having been in the service when a boy under Gen. Washington during the Revolutionary War. His mother, Mary E., was born in England: she died in June, 1882, aged eighty-one years. Two children, Mary and William J., our subject, were born to the parents. Mary is the widow of A. H. Sherman, and she now resides in Malvern, Iowa.

Mr. Baldwin, our subject, is popular, and well and favorably known as a horseman throughout the Southeastern part of the State. His love for the equine tribe is inherited, and aside from the profits he realizes, his horses afford him an unbounded degree of pleasure, and the animals, exhibiting a degree of intelligence approaching human knowledge, seem to realize that he is their friend, and reciprocate the feeling in a touching manner; by gentleness he has won their confidence, and when he is among them the happy feelings are mutual. He traces his ancestry back to the early American families, many of his people having fought valiantly in both the Wars of the Revolution and of 1812, to secure and hold the absolute freedom and liberty of their country. The Baldwin people as a family are like our subject—large, handsome, heavily bearded, broad-shouldered, deep-chested and base-voiced, possessing a remarkable strength and wonderful degree of vitality. Mrs. Baldwin, although past the meridian of life, is hale and hearty, and is very active in body and mind, and a study of her face and bearing shows that in her youth she was an exceedingly handsome woman, which she has not yet outgrown. Always cheerful and happy, kind and considerate of the comfort and pleasure of her family and friends, she holds and fills to perfection a prominent place in the first rank of the wives and mothers of our State. Her home gives evidence throughout of a rare taste and skillful management.

The home of these excellent people is a neat one and one-half story frame house, equipped with all the available conveniences, and is surrounded by fruitful orchards and shady groves. The farm yards are large and laid off regularly so as to accommodate to the best advantage the stock for which they are provided, and their arrangement indicates the action of a mind able to grasp all the details of the business. The barns and sheds are good and admirably adapted for sheltering the herds, and are supplied with water by a system of iron piping from a tank which is filled by a windmill pump.

Our subject is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, being Master of Finance to that Order. He has never sought nor held any public office, preferring to devote his time exclusively to the pursuit of his private affairs.

PETER ROELOFSZ was the first man to take up and improve a homestead in Tipton Precinct, which he did in the spring of 1868. He had been renting farms in Monona County, Iowa, and feeling that he could do better by making a home for himself, he started overland with teams and wagons to Nebraska, crossed the Missouri River at Nebraska City, continuing on to Tipton, where he took up his present home and immediately began improving the same. He built a small house and spent the summer there, and in the fall he went back to Iowa for his family. He remained there until the winter came on, then moved to Glenwood, Iowa, where he obtained work. He returned to his homestead the following spring, and resumed the improvement of his claim by setting out groves and planting an orchard. At this time it was rather a lonely life, as it was four miles to the nearest neighbor.

When not engaged in improving his farm he followed freighting between Nebraska City and Lincoln. Under no circumstances could he be induced to part with his homestead, but continued to improve it in all directions, dividing it up into fields by well-kept fences of hedge and wire. In 1879 he built a new and comfortable residence. He devotes his attention to general farming and the raising of thoroughbred stock, graded Short-horn cattle and full-blooded Poland China hogs.

The subject of this sketch was born in Gallerland, Holland, Aug. 8, 1839. His early life was spent on the farm, and he attended one of the excellent schools of that country. At the age of fourteen he began to learn the weaver's trade, which he followed until he left Holland for America. When fifteen years of age, in the fall of 1854, he came to America with his parents, by the way of Havre, France, and Liverpool, England; thence by sailing-ship to New York, where they landed in Castle Garden, after a voyage of twenty-three days. The whole family continued their journey to Iowa, where they settled on a tract of forty acres of raw land in Monona County.

Our subject remained here until he was twenty-one years old, when he began to engage in business for himself. In October, 1862, he enlisted in the 3d Missouri Cavalry, Company C. He was mustered into the service at Palmyra, Mo., and saw service under command of Gen. Prentiss, Col. Glover and Capt. Black. The regiment was largely employed doing guard duty along the line of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad. When they were relieved from this service the regiment was ordered to Rolla, Mo., where our subject was taken sick, and was sent to the general hospital at St. Louis, Mo., where he remained until he recovered. He was then mustered out, and honorably discharged at St. Louis on account of physical disability. The bulk of his army service was in chasing bushwhackers and squads of Gen. Price's men; he participated in the battle of Sturgeon, Mo. Returning home after his discharge, he went to work on a farm in Lynn County, Iowa, drove an omnibus for a season in Cedar Rapids, which engaged his attention up to the time we find him located on his homestead at Tipton.

This gentleman is one of a family of ten children—Elizabeth, Henrietta, Chauncey, Corrina, Hannah, Joseph, Josina, and Cora and Henry, younger; all living except Chauncey and Corrina, who were drowned, and Joseph, deceased. The brother Joseph was a Captain in the Netherlands army, and was stationed in the East Indies. He was killed by the giving way of a veranda.

Peter Roelofsz, Sr., the father of our subject, was born in Amsterdam, Holland, and was a clerk in a large wholesale establishment. After marriage he moved into Gallerland, and went into stock-raising, also operating a grist and oil mill, until he became very wealthy. At one time he was worth more than $100,000, but, going security a great deal for his friends, he finally failed. In the fall of 1864 he came to America, and settled in Monona County, Iowa, and he began improving his home. At the same time he engaged in the mercantile business in Pella, Iowa. In this venture he did fairly well for a while, but, going security for his son-in-law, he failed a second time. He then moved to St. Louis, and lived with one of his daughters until he died, in September, 1880, at the ripe old age of seventy-nine years. The mother had died in Iowa in 1862, being then fifty-two years old. She was Miss Elizabeth G. Phillips, and was born in Germany.

Grandfather Roelofsz was a banker in Amsterdam, and was very rich. Our subject was married in Lynn County, Iowa, Oct. 9, 1863, to Miss Julia Hawks, daughter of James and Annette (Dunckler) Hawks. Grandfather Dunckler was a cooper. He went to Chicago when there were only two or three houses, and bought 900 acres of land a few miles from the present site of the city. He built a residence in Chicago, and his decease occurred there in 1861, when he was sixty-nine years of age. The father of the wife of our subject was a farmer, and also a merchant of Grand Rapids, Mich., and removed from there to Chicago. He owned a farm west of that city, and operated it until 1861, when he removed to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he purchased a farm and operated a hotel.

The family next moved to Kingston, again engaging in the hotel business. Leaving Kingston they went to Nebraska, where they took up a homestead in 1869. They operated this farm until 1881, when they sold the property and went to Howard City; he is now living with his daughter at Buffalo, Neb. The father is seventy years of age, and the mother sixty-seven. Julia A., the wife of the subject of this sketch, was one of a family of twelve children—Mary E., Laura A. and William are older; Alonzo A., Hiram, Vincent R., Chase M., Eben, Frank, Jennie and Carrie E. Of this number Hiram, Ebin, Frank and Jennie are deceased. The brother William served three and a half years in the War of the Rebellion, enlisting when only sixteen years of age.

The lady was born in Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 8, 1849, and was thirteen years of age when the family removed to Iowa. She received a good education, is a kind and considerate wife, and is a joy and comfort to her husband and family—very hospitable, striving to make the stranger within her gates happy and content. Twelve children have been born to this couple—Elizabeth A., Christma I., Anthony D., Peter, Jr., Josina, Maud, Arthur, Ralph, Blanche, Grace, Ray and Ethel. All are living except Elizabeth, Anthony, Peter, Jr., Maud and Arthur. Josina is at school in Weeping Water; the rest are at home.

Our subject has been in America so long and has become so thoroughly identified with the country that he feels perfectly at home. He has never entered largely into public life, preferring to attend strictly to the improvement and care of his farm. He has been a member of the School Board for a year, Postmaster at Sunlight for two years, and Constable. Himself and wife are members of the United Brethren Church, and he has been Superintendent of Sunday-school at Tipton school-house. In politics he is a strict Republican.

PHILIP TRITSCH, one of the early pioneers of Eight Mile Grove Precinct, owns and occupies a good farm on section 12. He was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, May 9, 1846, and is the son of Philip and Maggie Tritsch, who were also natives of the Fatherland, and the former is now deceased. The father died when Philip, Jr., was a lad nine years of age, and two years later our subject emigrated with his mother, one brother and one sister, to the United States, making the voyage from Havre to New York City on an ocean steamer, in fourteen days.

The Tritsch family proceeded directly westward from the metropolis to Tazewell County, this State, where they located, and where the mother was subsequently married to Philip Horn, now a resident of Plattsmouth Precinct, this county. Of her first marriage there have been born three children: Elizabeth, now the wife of Adam Fornoff, of Eight Mile Grove Precinct; Philip and Jacob. Of her marriage with Mr. Horn there were born four children: Mary, the wife of Theodore Starkjohann; Maggie, Mrs. Frederick Kahne; and Catherine, Mrs. Henry Hirtz; all of whom live in Plattsmouth Precinct. Lizzie is the wife of John Koffenberger.

Our subject was reared to man's estate in Tazewell County, Ill., where he attained his majority, and a good education in both German and English, largely through his own efforts. He at the same time became familiar with farming pursuits. In 1866 he came to this county, where he sojourned one year, then returned to Illinois, but in 1869 came back to Nebraska, and has since been contented to remain. He was married, in December of the latter year, to Miss Charlotte Vellery, a native of Ohio, who bore him three children—John P., Philip H., and Henry, deceased. Mrs. Charlotte Tritsch died April 4, 1874.

Our subject contracted a second marriage, April 26, 1876, with Miss Mary, daughter of Theas and Magdalena (Timm) Starkjohann; she was born Nov. 26, 1854. Her parents were natives of Germany, and emigrated to America in 1867. The father is now deceased. Mrs. T. was thirteen years old when her parents came to this country, and made permanent settlement in Plattsmouth Precinct, where the death of her father took place Feb. 20, 1874; the mother is still living on the old farm, and is now nearly seventy years old. Their family consisted of six children, only three of whom are living, namely: Theodore; Mary, the wife of our subject, and William, all residents of this county. The deceased are Henry, Emile and August.

To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born six children, namely: Helen, deceased;

William, Edward, Anna, and Mary and Maggie, twins, both deceased. For a number of years before settling upon his present farm Mr. Tritsch operated as a renter; he came to this place in 1874. He has 240 acres well improved and very fertile, and one of the handsomest residences in the county, erected in 1884. The other buildings correspond with the dwelling, and the whole premises reflect great credit upon the proprietor. Mr. and Mrs. T. are identified with the Lutheran Church, and our subject, politically, votes the Democratic ticket. Although frequently solicited to accept office he invariably declines.

The traveler in passing through this section of Cass County seldom sees a more desirable estate than that built up by Philip Tritsch. He inherited from his excellent German ancestry the qualities most needed in the pioneer citizen, those qualities which led him to persevere amid difficulties and hardships, and have placed him in the front rank among his fellow-citizens. A man prompt to meet his obligations, his word is considered as good as his bond, and his name is eminently worthy to be placed among those of the representative citizens of Southern Nebraska.

HON. S. M. KIRKPATRICK, late a member of the State Legislature, and one of the most prominent men of Cass County, has for years been intimately connected with the most important interests of Southern Nebraska. He came within its precincts when it was but a Territory, making a claim on the 18th of June, 1855, the land pre-empted being on section 18, in Liberty Precinct, and he was the very first settler in the valley of the Weeping Water at this point. He came here when around him was an unbroken waste, before the county could boast of but one log house and a cabin, of sufficient importance to be designated as a village, and when the flourishing city of Plattsmouth was the site of a few little huts, put up by adventurous but impecunious people, who were struggling to delve from the soil enough to keep soul and body together. Indians still roamed over the country, and wild animals also. The outlook was anything but promising, but the subject of this sketch was a man of more than ordinary determination. He had come to stay, and was not to be driven from his purpose by any ordinary circumstances. He clung steadfastly to his resolution to continue and "grow up with the country," at a time when white settlers were frequently making a stampede from the depredations of the Indians, although to tell the truth Mr. Kirkpatrick says that there was a great deal more smoke than fire during those times, and many of the people were unnecessarily alarmed.

Our subject secured his land before the Government survey had been completed. It included one of the finest mill sites along the Weeping Water, which he utilized as soon as possible, erecting a sawmill, from which he began dressing lumber in September, the same year of his arrival. It is hardly necessary to state that the equipments of that mill were somewhat inferior to those of the present time. The year following, however, Mr. K. introduced some new improvements, including a set of burrs, with which he intended to grind wheat, but afterward transferred the property to other parties, before beginning operations as a flour miller. This was the first mill building erected on the Weeping Water, in fact the first mill of any kind built in the county. For some years it accommodated the people for miles around.

At the time of the settlement of Mr. Kirkpatrick there were only about 180 voters in the county. He was readily recognized as a man of more than ordinary ability, and was soon selected to represent the county in the Territorial Legislature at Omaha, being a member of the Senate, and re-elected three times by the Republicans of his district. He was in the Constitutional Conventions of 1871 and 1875, in the latter of which were adopted the existing laws of Nebraska. Prior to this he had represented the people of Cass County in the Territorial Legislature, and afterward was Speaker of the House. Since 1874 he has withdrawn from politics, although often being solicited to return to the field. During his public life it was conceded, even by his enemies, that in his day he was one of the most able parliamentarians of the State.

The public duties of Mr. Kirkpatrick brought him into contact with many eminent men, while his own habit of observation resulted in yielding him a large fund of useful information. He is intimately acquainted, not only with the history of Nebraska, but the general development of the Great West, which has been a subject uppermost in his mind for a long period. A close student and an extensive reader, and a man of decided views, he is one also whose opinions are generally respected, and who has borne no unimportant part in the building up of Cass County, and introducing those measures best calculated for its advancement. The village of Nehawka was platted on his land, and to it he has extended his fostering care. It is evidently destined in the near future to be a business point of no small importance.

The farm of Mr. Kirkpatrick embraces about 300 acres of finely improved land, and upon it are the buildings naturally suggested by the means and requirements of its proprietor—a substantial dwelling with pleasant surroundings, an abundance of fruit and shade trees, which, together with the live stock and farm machinery, fulfill the modern idea of the well-regulated rural estate.

A native of Adams County, Ohio, Mr. Kirkpatrick was born Aug. 31, 1815, and is the scion of an excellent family, being the son of Absalom Kirkpatrick, who was the son of Andrew, the son of William. The latter was the first representative of the family in the United States, crossing from Londonderry, in the North of Ireland, probably during the Colonial days, and settling in Maryland. They were of Scotch ancestry, and like the forefathers of hundreds of other people in this country, were driven from their native land during the religious wars of three centuries ago. William Kirkpatrick must have made his home in Maryland the remainder of his life. His son Andrew enlisted in the Revolutionary War, and participated in the battle of Brandywine, at which he had a brother killed, and also in other important engagements. He married a lady of Welsh descent, Miss Elizabeth Bowen, who was born on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. They subsequently moved to Virginia, and later to Ohio, locating a few miles east of the present city of Cincinnati, where they spent the remainder of their lives, dying when quite aged.

Absalom Kirkpatrick, the father of our subject, was one of the seven sons of Andrew and Elizabeth Kirkpatrick, which completed their family, they having no daughters. The sons all lived to man's estate, were married and became the fathers of families. Absalom, with four other brothers, was subjected to the general call for soldiers in the War of 1812, in which, however, they were not called upon to engage in any active battles, probably being held in the Reserve Corps. Absalom must have attained his majority in the Old Dominion, as he was not married until the removal to Ohio. He was there wedded to Miss Elizabeth Van Pelt, who was born in St. John's, Nova Scotia, where her father had settled about the time of the beginning of the Revolutionary War. Prior to this he had lived on Staten Island. Upon removing from Nova Scotia to the States they settled first on the Nolachucky, a branch of the Tennessee River, in Tennessee, whence they removed to Ohio, where the father, Tunis Van Pelt, died soon afterward.

Absalom Kirkpatrick and his wife began their wedded life together on a farm in Ohio, where they lived until after the birth of all their children. They then changed their residence to Montgomery County, Ind., where they spent the remainder of their days, not far from the town of Crawfordsville. The father died in 1855, at the age of sixty-eight years. He was a man of strong character and fine intelligence, and was prominent in public affairs. The mother, after the death of her husband, made her home with her son A. F., at the old homestead, and passed away in 1863, at the advanced age of eighty years. She was in all respects the suitable companion of her husband, being a lady of more than ordinary intelligence, high minded, with cultivated tastes, and was a beautiful singer.

The subject of this sketch was the fourth child and second son of his parents, whose family included five sons and three daughters. Of this large family only two sons are surviving, S. M. and his brother C. Q., of Lafayette, Ind. Our subject lived in Ohio until a lad of fourteen years, where he began the rudiments of a practical education. He removed with his parents to Indiana, and from his youth up has been a lover of books, and by this means added to his store of knowledge when he could no longer attend school. He has always entertained an especial interest in matters of history, and there are few men of the present day possessing a more complete store of general information.

The marriage of Hon. S. M. Kirkpatrick and Miss Elizabeth C. McMillin was celebrated at the home of the bride in Crawfordsville, Ind., Oct. 11, 1836. Mrs. K. was born in 1816, in Campbell County, Tenn., and brought up in Tazewell County, Va., and accompanied her mother to Indiana when fifteen years old, in the fall of 1830. Later she spent one and one-half years in Louisa County, Iowa, where Mr. K. was engaged in merchandising, and where Mrs. Kirkpatrick died, together with their only child, in September, 1839.

Mr. Kirkpatrick contracted a second marriage, in Thornton, Ind., April 1, 1841, with Miss Elizabeth Craig. This lady was born in Adams County, Ohio,

May 6, 1823, and is the daughter of Robert Craig, a native of County Down, Ireland. Robert Craig, the father of Mrs. K., was of Scotch ancestry, and her mother, Sarah Kerr, the daughter of Paul Kerr and Jane Weir, who were married on the Atlantic Ocean while coming to America. Many of their descendants became prominent people, and are now scattered in various parts of the Union. One cousin has for forty years been a resident of Canton, China, belonging to the American Foreign Mission.

Mr. Craig emigrated to the United States when a child, and was reared by an uncle in Pennsylvania. There also he was married, later moved to Ohio, and thence to Indiana. He died in Boone County, that State, when a very old man, aged ninety-three years. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was well reared and educated, and is a very intelligent lady, possessing all the womanly virtues. Of her union with our subject there have been born ten children, two of whom are deceased: Sarah V., who died when three years old, and Julia F., who died in infancy. The survivors are recorded as follows: Edwin A. married Miss Oella D. Black, daughter of Dr. John Black, of Plattsmouth, and is engaged in the grain trade at Nebawka; John M. married Miss Cornelia F. Goodyrich, and is carrying in farming extensively in Wheeler County, this State, where he owns a large amount of land; Elizzie H. is the wife of Orlando Tefft, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume; Lee C. is residing at the home of his parents; William W. married Miss Maggie Gaffney, and is farming in Wheeler County; Robert C., Mary S. and Kate L. are at home with their parents. Mary is a student of Lincoln University.

HON. NICHOLAS SATCHELL, the present Representative to the State Legislature from the Cass County District, is pursuing a career in the assembly which is creditable to himself and satisfactory to his constituents. He conveys the impression of a man studious of the best interests of his community and conscientious in the discharge of his duties. His homestead comprises a fine farm located on the southeast quarter of section 18 in Weeping Water Precinct, and with its improvements forms one of the most attractive features of that part of the country. His domestic affairs are presided over by a very amiable and intelligent lady, who has the welfare of her husband and children at heart.

Mr. Satchell is the offspring of an excellent family, the son of Daniel and Atha (Moore) Satchell, the former a native of Dorchester County, Md., and the latter born in Ohio. The paternal grandfather, Joseph Satchell, was of English descent, while grandfather Nicholas Moore traced his ancestry to Germany. Daniel Satchell removed with his parents, when a child of six years, to Ross County, Ohio, and some years later to Illinois, and engaged in farming in both Clinton and DeWitt Counties. His next removal was to Poweshiek County, Iowa, where he purchased 300 acres of Government land, which he improved and sold, then removed to Mahaska County, where he lived during the war. Next he changed his residence to Marion County, where he spent his last days, dying in 1875, at the age of sixty-nine years. He was in early life a Whig, then a Republican, and in religious matters belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church. The mother of our subject passed away prior to the decease of her husband, dying in 1856, at the age of thirty-five years. Their five children were named respectively, Nicholas M., Joseph, Daniel, Jr., William M. and Sarah C. Joseph, during the Civil War, enlisted in Company C, 28th Iowa Infantry, and served until the close.

The subject of this sketch was born in Clinton, DeWitt Co., Ill, Jan. 2, 1842, and remained under the parental roof until a young man of nineteen years. He assisted in the labors of the farm and attended the district school. Soon after the outbreak of the Rebellion he enlisted in Company F., 10th Iowa Infantry, under the first call for the three year's men, this being the first Company which left Poweshiek County. He was mustered into service at Iowa City, Aug. 7, 1861. His regiment was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, 15th Corps, under command of Gen. Logan, and going South at once participated in many of the important battles of the war.

Our subject in the spring of 1863 joined the Yazoo River expedition under Grant's command, and later was in the siege of Vicksburg, and fought in other important battles. He was slightly wounded across the head at Champion Hill. Later he was with Gen. Sherman and witnessed the famous fight of Hooker above the clouds. At the expiration of his first term of service he re-enlisted, and later participated in the famous march to the sea, after which the troops journeyed up through the Carolinas to Washington, and Mr. Satchell was present at the Grand Review. He was in Little Rock, Ark., until August, 1865, and from this point was sent to Davenport, Iowa, where he was mustered out and received his honorable discharge on the 1st of September.

Our subject on retiring from the army spent one year in farming, then became a student in Oskaloosa College, remaining there also a year. After this he resumed farming, which he prosecuted in Iowa until 1872. That year he came overland with teams to Nebraska and took up a homestead claim five miles south of Aurora, in Hamilton County. Two years later he rented a farm in Cass County, located in what was then Elmwood, but now Mt. Pleasant Precinct. In 1880 he sold his Hamilton County farm and purchased that which he now owns. The improvements have been made mostly by himself, and in connection with general agriculture he engages considerably in raising and feeding cattle and full-blooded Poland-China swine.

In Oskaloosa, Iowa, Jan. 4, 1881, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Minerva White. This lady was born in Oskaloosa, Iowa, Jan. 4, 1848, and is the daughter of William and Jane (Huskey) White, the father born in North Carolina in 1785, and the mother in Indiana in 1820. Mr. White served as a soldier in the War of 1812, after which he settled in Indiana, where he was married. He carried on farming there until his removal to Iowa. He purchased land in the latter State in 1845, 160 acres near Oskaloosa, where he lived until passing away, in 1864. The mother is still living at the old homestead, and is now sixty-eight years old. Their eight children were named respectively: Martha, Rebecca, Minerva, Ella, Emma, William, Isaac and George. Mr. and Mrs. Satchell have three children: Raymond V., Jessie B. and Gail L.

Mr. Satchell in the fall of 1886 was elected to the Nebraska Legislature on the Republican ticket, and re-elected in 1888. He has held the various school offices of his district. He uniformly votes the straight Republican ticket, and has frequently served as a delegate to the County and State Conventions of his party. Socially he belongs to Euclid Lodge No. 97, A. F. & A. M., of Weeping Water. He is a K. of P., Crescent Lodge No. 91, Elmwood, and belongs to LaFayette Post No. 61, G. A. R., at Weeping Water.

A A. BARDEN, a resident of Avoca village, was the first man to erect a business house within its limits, in 1882, and is engaged quite extensively in handling pumps and windmills, operating over a large territory throughout this and Otoe Counties. In former years he engaged considerably in boring wells. He owns considerable property in Avoca and vicinity, including six lots within the town limits.

Mr. Barden removed to this point from Weeping Water Precinct. He has been a resident of this county most of the time since 1866. He carried on farming a number of years up to 1877, then began well-boring, which he prosecuted a period of ten years, more or less. Some of his wells were twenty feet deep and some ninety. He came to Nebraska from Illinois, in which State he had settled with his parents in the spring of 1855, remaining there eleven years, and there was reared and educated.

A native of Bennington County, Vt., Mr. Barden was born Sept. 28, 1850. His father, J. T. Barden, was a Vermont farmer in fair circumstances and the son of Alden Barden, a patriot during the Revolutionary War who lived and died in New England. Alden Barden departed this life when comparatively a young man, and the father of our subject was reared by his maternal grandparents, whose names were Baily. Upon reaching manhood he was married in his native State to Miss Mary McCall, who was also born in Vermont, of Scotch ancestry. Her father, Hugh McCall, was a farmer by occupation and served as a commissioned officer in the War of 1812. He was born on the Isle of Lesmore in Argyleshire, Scotland, and was the son of John and Isabelle (Campbell) McCall, who came to America when Hugh was a lad of seven years, settling in the Green Mountain State, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Hugh McCall lived to be over ninety-two years old.

The parents of our subject spent the first years of their wedded life on a farm in Vermont, where their three eldest children were born. They came to the West in March, 1855, locating in Cook County, Ill., and from there some years later removed to Ridgefield, McHenry County, settling on a farm, where they still live. The father, however, is in failing health. He is sixty-three years old, and the mother one year younger.

Our subject was yet a minor when he landed in Nebraska. He spent some time as a teacher in this county. Upon the event of his marriage he returned to Cook County, Ill., where he was married to Miss Fannie G. Hawks. This lady was born at Schuyler's Lake, near Otsego, N. Y., June 4, 1852, and is the daughter of Charles and Fannie (Leighton) Hawks, who are still living there, and occupy a prominent position in their community. They are each approaching their fourscore years, and were also natives of the Empire State. Mrs. Barden was reared under the home roof, and educated in the common schools. She removed to Illinois with a sister, and lived there several years before her marriage. This union resulted in the birth of six children: One infant, born July 3, 1882, died July 10 following; Alton F., was born March 19, 1877, and died March 31, following. The living are: Robert M., who was born July 9, 1874; Alden A., Aug. 21, 1878; Blanche M., Aug. 5, 1885; and M. Ethel, April 1, 1888. Mr. Barden, politically, is a sound Republican, and has held the local offices.

INDEX.

BIOGRAPHICAL

A

|                           |      |
|---------------------------|------|
| Abbott, M. D. ....        | 938  |
| Adams, George.....        | 573  |
| Adams, G. W.....          | 1046 |
| Adams, Himenus.....       | 785  |
| Adams, John.....          | 23   |
| Adams, J. Q.....          | 39   |
| Adams, William T.....     | 1177 |
| Adams, W. W.....          | 482  |
| Akeson, Mattes.....       | 937  |
| Albert, John.....         | 1210 |
| Albright, Adolph.....     | 353  |
| Alexander, George S.....  | 323  |
| Andersen, Lars.....       | 271  |
| Anderson, Capt. D. M..... | 470  |
| Anderson, James N.....    | 576  |
| Andrews, Edwin.....       | 598  |
| Andrews, Thomas.....      | 267  |
| Andrus, D. D.....         | 877  |
| Andrus, C. R.....         | 1101 |
| Andrus, J. E.....         | 832  |
| Andrus, O. M.....         | 1244 |
| Applegate, L. N.....      | 1100 |
| Arends, John Hermann..... | 736  |
| Arends, J. H.....         | 540  |
| Armstrong, W. J.....      | 478  |
| Arthur, Chester A.....    | 99   |
| Jackson, Andrew.....      | 42   |
| Ashley, W. D.....         | 480  |
| Ashmun, R. A.....         | 880  |
| Ashmun, Henry.....        | 889  |
| Ashton, Dr. T. H.....     | 197  |
| Ashton, T. H.....         | 233  |
| Atkinson, Albert G.....   | 626  |
| Austin, Thomas L.....     | 174  |

B

|                    |      |
|--------------------|------|
| Babcock, P. D..... | 346  |
| Bahr, J. J.....    | 832  |
| Bailey, W. P.....  | 1121 |
| Baird, John R..... | 978  |
| Baker, R. F.....   | 793  |
| Baldwin, E. H..... | 385  |
| Baldwin, W. J..... | 1300 |

|                             |      |
|-----------------------------|------|
| Balfour, William.....       | 252  |
| Ball, Franklin.....         | 629  |
| Ballarman, Joseph.....      | 499  |
| Ballou, Otis H.....         | 791  |
| Barden, A. A.....           | 1304 |
| Barnum, E. W.....           | 915  |
| Barr, H. D.....             | 927  |
| Barrett, George W.....      | 1205 |
| Barrett, W. L.....          | 1217 |
| Bassett, Cyrus N.....       | 562  |
| Bartling, H. H.....         | 522  |
| Baumgarten, Marius.....     | 334  |
| Beasley, David.....         | 281  |
| Becker, John H.....         | 1004 |
| Beckman, William.....       | 209  |
| Beetem, Joseph.....         | 732  |
| Beetem, J. T.....           | 617  |
| Beetem, R. G.....           | 737  |
| Behrends, J. H.....         | 191  |
| Behrns, Henry.....          | 807  |
| Ein, Amelia.....            | 1237 |
| Bell, R. H.....             | 479  |
| Bell, Thomas.....           | 305  |
| Beodeker, C. H.....         | 1187 |
| Berger, E.....              | 776  |
| Berger, George L.....       | 989  |
| Berger, James W.....        | 776  |
| Berlet, Peter.....          | 481  |
| Besch, August.....          | 620  |
| Beutler, Jacob.....         | 346  |
| Bey, John.....              | 333  |
| Bickal, C. B.....           | 396  |
| Bickert, Ambrose.....       | 1080 |
| Biggs, Allen.....           | 242  |
| Billings, S. S.....         | 1231 |
| Birchfield, Hon. W. P.....  | 475  |
| Bird, Lewis.....            | 935  |
| Bischoff, Christian.....    | 652  |
| Bischof, William.....       | 669  |
| Black, John, M. D.....      | 801  |
| Black, R. W.....            | 1276 |
| Blum, Christian.....        | 292  |
| Bobbit, Hon. T. N.....      | 1203 |
| Borcherding, Frederick..... | 197  |
| Bord, Henry.....            | 547  |
| Botsford, George S.....     | 500  |
| Bottcher, George K.....     | 498  |
| Boyd, Hon. J. C.....        | 283  |
| Boyer, George W.....        | 364  |
| Braddock, David.....        | 514  |
| Brady, Barnard.....         | 642  |

|                             |      |
|-----------------------------|------|
| Bradley, T. K.....          | 227  |
| Brauer, F. H.....           | 521  |
| Brehm, Charles.....         | 661  |
| Brinker, Dr. G. M.....      | 1148 |
| Brinkmann, Henry.....       | 497  |
| Broking, C. H.....          | 534  |
| Brooks, J. W.....           | 1248 |
| Brown, Bros.....            | 395  |
| Brown, Hon. David.....      | 283  |
| Brown, E. A.....            | 539  |
| Brown, F. E.....            | 747  |
| Brown, G. W.....            | 182  |
| Brown, James E.....         | 512  |
| Brown, John P.....          | 563  |
| Brown, Martin.....          | 424  |
| Brown, O. K.....            | 698  |
| Brown, W. L.....            | 1295 |
| Brownlee, George.....       | 254  |
| Brunner, F. H.....          | 521  |
| Bruns, Brune.....           | 264  |
| Buchanan, James.....        | 75   |
| Buchanan, Hon. William..... | 609  |
| Buck, Hon. J. F.....        | 935  |
| Bullis, J. W.....           | 797  |
| Bumford, O. H.....          | 208  |
| Burdick, J. P.....          | 1197 |
| Burget, G. H.....           | 246  |
| Butler, David.....          | 101  |
| Butler, Dr. M. M.....       | 1017 |
| Butt, Henry A.....          | 473  |
| Buxton, William B.....      | 695  |

C

|                             |      |
|-----------------------------|------|
| Calhoun, S. H.....          | 749  |
| Calkins, N. J.....          | 1272 |
| Campbell, E. T.....         | 653  |
| Campbell, Hon. J. C.....    | 659  |
| Campbell, Jesse.....        | 421  |
| Campbell, M. D.....         | 549  |
| Campbell, M. S.....         | 545  |
| Campbell, Hon. William..... | 541  |
| Campbell, Paul M.....       | 632  |
| Carey, M. F.....            | 335  |
| Carlin, James.....          | 726  |
| Carmichael, J. D.....       | 607  |
| Carney, Rev. T. J.....      | 925  |
| Carter, Samuel.....         | 1247 |

|                           |      |
|---------------------------|------|
| Case, Sackett C.....      | 435  |
| Caspers, John J.....      | 742  |
| Cassel, H. G.....         | 405  |
| Cassel, William H. H..... | 1060 |
| Cassell, J. W.....        | 275  |
| Castelman, J. E.....      | 243  |
| Castleman, C. B.....      | 313  |
| Castleman, F. T.....      | 291  |
| Chadduck, J. W.....       | 704  |
| Chalfant, John.....       | 1293 |
| Chapin, R. A.....         | 950  |
| Chapman, Calvin.....      | 568  |
| Chapman, C. B.....        | 615  |
| Chapman, Samuel M.....    | 981  |
| Chatfield, Ira D.....     | 224  |
| Childs, Capt. H. H.....   | 423  |
| Christenson, James.....   | 858  |
| Church, Reuben.....       | 745  |
| Clair, A.....             | 752  |
| Clary, W. C.....          | 748  |
| Clayton, Edgar.....       | 361  |
| Clements, John.....       | 1152 |
| Clemmons, Noah.....       | 995  |
| Clemmons, S. E.....       | 825  |
| Cleveland, S. Grover..... | 103  |
| Coe, Gen. Isaac.....      | 696  |
| Colbert, James.....       | 1194 |
| Cole, Hon. Braud.....     | 1013 |
| Cole, W. T.....           | 997  |
| Coleman, E. C.....        | 946  |
| Colman, Asa.....          | 1075 |
| Compton, E. M.....        | 919  |
| Conger, Ira P.....        | 410  |
| Conkel, Frank J.....      | 596  |
| Copklin, George.....      | 150  |
| Copklin, George S.....    | 1266 |
| Cohn, J. W.....           | 1279 |
| Cook, Lawson.....         | 623  |
| Cooley, A. S.....         | 1148 |
| Coon, Peter.....          | 767  |
| Corbet, John.....         | 1171 |
| Cornutt, L. F.....        | 533  |
| Cotton, C. E.....         | 587  |
| Covell, M. J.....         | 602  |
| Cowles, C. C.....         | 181  |
| Cowden, Dr. A. M.....     | 552  |
| Cowles, Hon. C. H.....    | 624  |
| Cox, J. W.....            | 828  |
| Crabtree, Abel.....       | 1190 |
| Crabtree, Allen.....      | 1140 |
| Cramer, Francis A.....    | 840  |

INDEX.

Cremer, J. M. .... 803
 Critchfield, W. P. C. .... 1128
 Critchfield, Mrs. Harriet. .... 1175
 Cummins, James. .... 147
 Curry, Mrs. Jennie B. .... 558
 Curry, Robert. .... 555
 Cufforth, Walter. .... 566
 Cutler, George T. .... 957
 Cutler, Henry C. .... 920

D

Dakan, N. P. .... 546
 Damma, Fred ..... 341
 Damma, Henry ..... 639
 Damma, J. H. .... 145
 Damma, Louis. .... 632
 Dann, Charles. .... 494
 Davenport, Mrs. Carrie. .... 507
 Davidson, J. H. .... 601
 Davis, A. L. .... 636
 Davis, Edwin. .... 1229
 Davis, H. J. .... 1087
 Davis, Joseph. .... 163
 Davis, O. J. .... 456
 Davis, Wesley A. .... 1027
 Davis, W. W. .... 1132
 Dawes, James W. .... 126
 Day, E. E. .... 1037
 Deutsch, Frederick. .... 161
 Dewey, Thomas. .... 232
 Diener, Jacob. .... 686
 Dimmit, B. H. .... 1264
 Dimmitt, Edwin. .... 1249
 Doane, G. W. .... 154
 Dohney, Frank. .... 811
 Domingo, Jacob. .... 1167
 Domingo, John. .... 1128
 Donovan, Edward. .... 1089
 Dorman, Burton. .... 463
 Dougall, W. J. .... 716
 Dow, Frederick. .... 388
 Duerschner, F. .... 153
 Duff, M. E. .... 513
 Duff, N. A. .... 425
 Dunbar, John. .... 394
 Dunlap, Robert. .... 322
 Dysart, James. .... 1207

E

Edgar, William. .... 1056
 Egenberger, John V. .... 786
 Eiben, Henry. .... 543
 Eickhoff, L. C. .... 982
 Eikenbery, William. .... 817
 Eis, J. D. .... 146
 Eis, W. S. .... 168
 Eiser, G. W. .... 747
 Elliott, J. T. .... 595
 Ellis, Egbert L. .... 594
 Ellis, Lathrop. .... 285
 Elvin, R. C., M. D. .... 365
 Embree, Noah. .... 238

Emens, Robert. .... 1096
 Engelkemeier, Henry. .... 1040
 Engell, Philip C. .... 999
 Enyart, Logan. .... 706
 Ernst, Albert. .... 1286
 Eveland, Peter. .... 1143

F

Farley, Isaac. .... 188
 Farmer, John O. .... 684
 Farnsworth, H. P. .... 251
 Fass, Folkert. .... 172
 Fass, H. H. .... 345
 Ferguson, Hon. George. .... 184
 Ferguson, Col. H. C. .... 537
 Ferguson, R. C. .... 408
 Fetzer, Frank. .... 1083
 Fillmore, Millard. .... 67
 Fischer, Charles G. .... 683
 Fitchie, Hon. James. .... 724
 Flodin, P. A. .... 397
 Flower, Perl F. .... 1263
 Flower, W. A. .... 1257
 Foltz, Louis. .... 885
 Forsyth, Jacob. .... 1159
 Foster, D. W. .... 1151
 Foster, N. D. .... 237
 Fountain, T. J. .... 1186
 Fowler, J. M. .... 881
 France, C. L. .... 469
 Frans, R. H. .... 1061
 Frans, William. .... 1061
 Frenzel, F. W. .... 378
 Frerichs, M. Herman. .... 532
 Frerichs, John. .... 398
 Frerichs, Theodore R. .... 161
 Fry, A. C. .... 1084
 Furnas, Robert W. .... 1115

G

Gahrka, John. .... 529
 Gant, S. L., M. D. .... 561
 Garber, Silas. .... 119
 Garfield, James A. .... 95
 Garrison, H. G. .... 1054
 Garrow, E. D. .... 373
 Gilbert, E. S. .... 1182
 Giles, G. W. .... 188
 Gilman, G. W. .... 273
 Gilman, J. C. .... 381
 Gilmore, John. .... 1256
 Gilmore, Thomas A. .... 325
 Girardet, S. F. .... 1042
 Gleason, H. W. .... 850
 Godding, Asa. .... 713
 Goodier, Thomas. .... 1052
 Goos, Frederic. .... 1218
 Gorder, Frederic. .... 1935
 Gordon, Ira. .... 1053
 Graham, W. R. .... 493
 Grant, Ulysses S. .... 87
 Gray, J. S. .... 214
 Gregg, J. H. .... 581
 Gregory, S. C. .... 637

Grimes, G. W. .... 1059
 Gullion, W. W. .... 1170
 Guthmann, F. R. .... 1161
 Guenzel, Ernst. .... 338

H

Hail, S. A. .... 461
 Hail, Hon. William B. .... 492
 Hain, George. .... 1016
 Hall, Dr. J. E. .... 1092
 Hall, James. .... 244
 Halmes, Nicholas. .... 1095
 Halverstadt, D. S. .... 891
 Handy, H. G. .... 493
 Hanks, Cannon. .... 444
 Hansen, John G. .... 1113
 Hanson, Knud. .... 1281
 Harp, D. M. .... 216
 Hartman, George. .... 502
 Harris, John L. .... 219
 Harrison, Benjamin. .... 107
 Harrison, W. H. .... 51
 Harrison, Phillip F. .... 1292
 Hasemeier, John H. .... 951
 Hathaway, Abram. .... 1039
 Hatt, J. .... 1296
 Hauptmann, Albert. .... 393
 Hawke, George W. .... 427
 Hawkins, Alfred. .... 1118
 Hawley, E. S. .... 646
 Hawley, Hiram G. .... 1002
 Hay, Valentine. .... 822
 Hayes, Rutherford B. .... 91
 Hays, J. G. .... 1235
 Hayward, B. F. .... 367
 Hayward, Hon. M. L. .... 475
 Hazelton, F. P. .... 199
 Heil, Adam. .... 965
 Heil, George. .... 992
 Heil, Wendel. .... 988
 Heise, Charles. .... 325
 Helmers, H. F. .... 735
 Hendricks, George B. .... 198
 Hendricks, Hiram. .... 622
 Hendricks, Joseph. .... 146
 Heng, Michael. .... 457
 Hennings, Charles C. .... 977
 Hennings, John A. .... 961
 Herold, William. .... 1154
 Hershey, D. W., M. D. .... 315
 Hess, A. E. .... 1225
 Hess, John. .... 979
 Heye, Henry. .... 327
 Higgins, Hon. J. M. .... 1164
 Hild, Adam. .... 928
 Hill, D. T. .... 488
 Hill, J. P. .... 550
 Hinners, H. C. .... 1202
 Hite, David. .... 1283
 Hirz, Henry. .... 1287
 Hoagland, J. W. .... 518
 Hobbs, Dr. N. R. .... 851
 Hochstetler, J. J. .... 523
 Hoebel, Hon. Louis. .... 265
 Holden, S. M. .... 1241
 Holmes, Charles M. .... 1201

Holmes, J. B. .... 882
 Holschuh, John. .... 1174
 Hoover, J. T. A. .... 1051
 Hopp, Jacob. .... 610
 Horn, George P. .... 1221
 Horn, P. .... 1195
 Horne, Othniel. .... 229
 Horrum, L. .... 235
 Hostetter, John B. .... 202
 Hostetter, S. A. .... 297
 Howland, Henry. .... 1082
 Hubner, Charles M. .... 751
 Huckins, Henry. .... 619
 Hulfish, Stephen. .... 971
 Hunt, James. .... 795
 Hunt, William. .... 477
 Hunter, Charles F. .... 520
 Hurst, Rev. Hiram. .... 257
 Husted, Christian. .... 595

I

Ingalls, W. E. .... 149
 Ingram, James. .... 1041
 Ireland, Frank P. .... 434

J

Jackson, Andrew. .... 43
 Jacobs, Oliver. .... 1043
 James, A. A. .... 459
 James, Charles. .... 753
 James, John W. .... 669
 James, William. .... 813
 Jarrett, J. M. .... 574
 Jasper, Wilhelm. .... 1255
 Jefferson, Thomas. .... 27
 Jenkins, Aaron. .... 774
 Jenkins, E. .... 1273
 Jessen, Mrs. Margaret. .... 487
 Johnson, Andrew. .... 83
 Johnson, Mathias. .... 1147
 Johnson, James. .... 902
 Johnson, John. .... 788
 Johnson, Magnus Taylor. .... 740
 Johnson, W. A. .... 1073
 Johnson, W. H. .... 437
 Johnson, W. T. .... 1299
 John, Theodore. .... 786
 Jones, R. D. .... 1127
 Jones, T. S. .... 527
 Judkins, S. B. .... 866

K

Kasbohm, John. .... 455
 Keithley, J. K. .... 976
 Kendall, F. G. .... 1129
 Kennicott, W. E. .... 314
 King, C. H. .... 906
 King, E. G. .... 171
 Kirkham, R. M. .... 275
 Kirkpatrick, Hon. S. M. .... 1304

INDEX.

Klepser, A. J. .... 336
 Knabe, John C. .... 1291
 Knotts, A. B. .... 1183
 Koontz, William ..... 387
 Korff, C. H. .... 476
 Kraeger, Adam ..... 998
 Kraeger, John ..... 1074
 Kramer, Jurgen F. .... 200
 Kreifels, Herman ..... 460
 Kressen, C. H. .... 615
 Kropp, William ..... 667
 Kuhn, William ..... 407
 Kunzmann, Jacob ..... 929

L

Lambing, G. W. .... 935
 Lane, Benjamin F., M. D. .... 879
 Lathrop, Jerome ..... 599
 Latta, W. E. .... 830
 Laughlin, E. G. .... 1005
 Laughlin, B. F. .... 896
 Laughlin, W. J. .... 1023
 Lee, George F. .... 1157
 Leesley, J. E. .... 1833
 Lehnhoff, F. D. .... 910
 Leis, John M. .... 918
 Lewis, A. E. .... 1094
 Lewis, James ..... 597
 Lewis, Lewis ..... 638
 Lewis, Richard ..... 926
 Lewis, William R. .... 912
 Leyda, Reuben K. .... 905
 Lincoln, Abraham ..... 77
 Littlefield, R. A. .... 752
 Livingston, R. R. .... 763
 Livingston, Nehemiah ..... 900
 Livingston, Theodore P. .... 764
 Lloyd, J. M. .... 1072
 Lockie, George ..... 447
 Long, Simeon I. .... 967
 Lorensen, Chris. .... 1178
 Lowe, William H. .... 254
 Luff, Elijah ..... 657

M

Madison, James ..... 31
 Magee, A. H. .... 1246
 Magney, John ..... 808
 Mallar, John ..... 218
 Mapes, J. S. .... 459
 Marcellus, P. W. .... 891
 Marnell, E. D. .... 440
 Martin, C. J. .... 1265
 Martin, Mrs. Ann ..... 903
 Martin, J. F. .... 472
 Marshall, John T. .... 765
 Marshall, William ..... 1094
 Martine, Capt. John ..... 630
 Mason, S. H. .... 442
 Massey, Talton ..... 173
 Masters, Hon. J. H. .... 371
 Mathew, James S. .... 1275
 Mathews, Mrs. Louisa ..... 1076

Mattes, John ..... 447
 Maxam, H. W. .... 225
 Mayfield, A. U. .... 888
 Mayfield, G. W. .... 956
 McAleer, Thomas F. .... 187
 McCart, H. O. .... 287
 McCarthy, John ..... 441
 McCartney, Frank ..... 614
 McCartney, A. S. .... 751
 McClain, James O. .... 857
 McClintic, Samuel ..... 1298
 McConnaha, John ..... 843
 McConnell, Wilson ..... 308
 McCormick, J. W. .... 484
 McDermed, J. W. .... 815
 McFall, Archibald ..... 1036
 McGill, Robert ..... 1077
 McGinley, John ..... 201
 McGuire, Patrick ..... 446
 McIntyre, Alexander ..... 454
 McLennan, Hon. William ..... 341
 McKee, Hon. George W. .... 217
 McKee, J. R. .... 343
 McKee, W. I. .... 618
 McMechan, J. H. .... 177
 McPherson, J. P. .... 986
 McPherson, R. T. .... 719
 McReynolds, Nelson ..... 898
 McVay, J. R. .... 1015
 Meek, M. F. .... 256
 Mendenhall, D. G. .... 1057
 Messner, Henry L. .... 886
 Meyer, Christoff. .... 1091
 Meyer, Frank ..... 328
 Meyer, G. H. .... 207
 Michael, John ..... 295
 Miller, A. A. .... 1169
 Milliken, John A. .... 404
 Mills, J. T. .... 1108
 Misegadis, Diedrich ..... 723
 Mitzner, Edward ..... 470
 Mitchell, Thomas ..... 378
 Mohrman, J. H. .... 418
 Monroe, James ..... 35
 Monroe, William J. .... 1120
 Morgan, M. W. .... 1277
 Morgan, T. P. .... 591
 Moore, Edwin ..... 363
 Moore, Hon. J. O. .... 438
 Moore, W. H. .... 511
 Morrow, Rozzel ..... 1238
 Morrison, S. H. .... 351
 Morton, J. Sterling ..... 750
 Mothersead, B. S. .... 510
 Mullis, Conrad ..... 392
 Munn, Wallace ..... 169
 Murdoch, John ..... 1168
 Murphy, Ezra ..... 1078
 Murphy, William ..... 839
 Murray, Joshua ..... 968
 Murray, L. C. W. .... 1297
 Murray, Rev. George R. .... 1252
 Mutz, Walter ..... 693

N

Nance, Albinus ..... 122
 Neeley, J. M., M. D. .... 871

Neemann, D. A. .... 326
 Neemann, Herman ..... 426
 Neff, Hon. Dauverse ..... 773
 Nelson, J. W. .... 640
 Nelson, O. N. .... 616
 Neu, Fred. .... 244
 Newton, E. E. .... 274
 Nicholson, W. T. .... 699
 Nickel, George P. .... 959
 Noeling, B. H. .... 257
 Nolting, Mrs. Wilhelmina ..... 947
 Normand, Julius ..... 449
 Norris, Dr. U. H. .... 921
 Northcutt, James B. .... 490
 Norton, G. W. .... 870
 Nutzmann, John ..... 461

O

Oberle, George ..... 1093
 Oelke, Christopher ..... 264
 Oelke, George ..... 393
 O'Neill, James ..... 1240
 Orton, S. W. .... 859
 Osborn, Phoebe ..... 694

P

Paap, Frederick ..... 671
 Pahde, Frederick ..... 158
 Paley, James ..... 216
 Parent, Martin ..... 567
 Parmels, E. K. .... 1114
 Patterson, Hon. J. M. .... 757
 Pendleton, Henry ..... 585
 Penn, Jacob ..... 220
 Perkins, W. P. .... 1212
 Peters, Peter ..... 1297
 Peterson, John ..... 231
 Philpot, Charles ..... 911
 Philpot, John, Jr. .... 992
 Philpot, John, Sr. .... 972
 Pickens, W. H. .... 1069
 Pierce, C. W. .... 641
 Pierce, Franklin ..... 71
 Pindar, Ben S. .... 189
 Pittman, J. W. .... 930
 Pittman, Andrew ..... 960
 Pittman, E. J. .... 862
 Plympton, D. A. .... 160
 Polk, James K. .... 59
 Post, Edward ..... 1136
 Pratt, Jerome B. .... 790
 Propst, Martin ..... 1181

Q

Quible, George ..... 358

R

Race, Harry G. .... 1206
 Ragoss, Julius F. .... 1188

Ramsey, B. S. .... 1193
 Rankin, Thomas ..... 775
 Rausch, Henry ..... 806
 Ray, William ..... 663
 Redfield, William ..... 602
 Redfield, W. P. .... 211
 Reed, E. Clarence ..... 674
 Reed, Harry D. .... 1222
 Reed, Hon. E. L. .... 908
 Reed, H. H. .... 494
 Reeves, Alexander ..... 569
 Reiber, Emil ..... 406
 Renken, John F. .... 170
 Reynolds, A. J. .... 652
 Reynolds, W. B. .... 1268
 Rexford, F. F. .... 759
 Rhoden, W. A. .... 1083
 Richard, L. B. .... 742
 Richards, Edwin F. .... 1003
 Richards, F. C. .... 681
 Richards, H. T. .... 985
 Richardson, Charles D. .... 413
 Richardson, John ..... 1209
 Richardson, Samuel ..... 1172
 Ritchey, Hon. F. M. .... 770
 Riegler, Daniel ..... 354
 Riley, James M. .... 690
 Ritchie, H. C. .... 802
 Ritter, Rev. Josiah ..... 282
 Robb, Hon. F. W. .... 645
 Robbins, John ..... 1281
 Roberts, Josiah ..... 748
 Rockwell, A. M. .... 792
 Roddy, John C. .... 6592
 Roddy, Capt. Patrick ..... 664
 Rodenbrock, F. W. .... 151
 Roelofs, Henry ..... 826
 Roelofs, Peter ..... 1301
 Rolfe, Hon. D. P. .... 143
 Rolfe, R. M. .... 384
 Romine, J. G. .... 837
 Root, Hon. Anderson ..... 1008
 Root, Dr. A. S. .... 846
 Root, Rev. Edward ..... 940
 Rose, Hon. A. M. .... 1163
 Rose, G. A. .... 1190
 Rose, William ..... 1131
 Ross, E. W. .... 194
 Rottmann, Mrs. Margaretha ..... 579
 Rottmann, W. F. .... 579
 Rowland, W. M. .... 841
 Raby, Benjamin F. .... 1196
 Ruby, Martin ..... 1254
 Ruby, Thomas ..... 1192
 Rummel, Christina ..... 922
 Rush, Nicholas ..... 673
 Russell, Lycurgus ..... 969
 Rusterholz, Jacob ..... 773

S

Sabin, T. D. .... 715
 Sackett, E. A. .... 1018
 Sacks, Julius ..... 816
 Sage, Elias ..... 768
 Samson, David ..... 1006
 Samson, Eli ..... 1189

INDEX.

Sand, Frank Joseph.....401
 Satchell, N. M.....1306
 Saunders, Joseph.....376
 Schacht, Louis.....277
 Schacht, William.....753
 Schafer, Philip J.....980
 Scharp, John.....272
 Scharp, Peter.....685
 Schildknecht, W. H., M. D.....855
 Schindler, Dietrich.....720
 Schlanke, Jacob.....1116
 Schminke, Hon. Paul.....697
 Schmitz, John.....164
 Schomaker, Fred.....1115
 Schrider, Emil.....798
 Schroeder, F. W.....683
 Scofield, R. H.....266
 Schomerus, D. J.....680
 Sears, James.....1066
 Severe, O. A.....453
 Seymour, Hon. Charles W.....391
 Shafer, William H.....1033
 Shannon, J. W.....1156
 Sharp, C. H.....603
 Sheffer, William.....948
 Sheldon, A. W.....876
 Sheldon, Hon. Lawson.....1231
 Sherfey, Charles W.....677
 Sherman, Charles W.....1178
 Sherwood, Robert.....1234
 Shoemaker, M. H.....714
 Shomaker, Henry.....1064
 Short, Thomas W.....1285
 Shrader, Fred.....183
 Shrader, Henry.....294
 Shrader, Z. W.....1236
 Shryder, G. F.....1000
 Shryock, William B.....842
 Sibert, Peter.....729
 Sidles, Charles Z.....699
 Sim, Hon. Francis.....261
 Simpson, J. D.....916
 Sinsabaugh, L. E.....689
 Skinner, Linwood E.....861
 Sloan, W. T.....342
 Smallfoot, C. F.....206
 Smith, C. A.....192
 Smith, George.....382
 Smith, Mrs. Frances Jane.....1142
 Smith, O. P.....1185
 Smoyer, L. B.....731
 Snyder, William.....962
 Snyder, William H.....574
 Sperry, J. W.....1288
 Spicknall, L. T.....663
 Spink, Maynard.....907
 Spohn, C.....1289
 Springman, Adam.....375
 Spurlock, Burwell.....1025
 Spurlock, Wesley.....347
 Sroat, G. W.....429
 Stafford, Robert.....226
 Stahlhut, C. W.....493
 Stahlhut, Frederick.....332
 Stall, David.....357
 Stander, Frank.....1001
 Stanford, Hiram.....1045
 Starkjohann, Theodore.....990
 Stedman, C. R.....223
 Stedman, H. E.....582
 Steele, John R.....738
 Stevenson, Hon. Thomas B.....321
 Stevenson, Wallace.....403
 Stewart, Col. S. N.....9741
 Stewart, George A.....681
 Stillwell, Herbert G.....298
 Stine, John.....975
 St. John, H. F.....593
 Stoehr, Christ.....891
 Stone, Isaac.....970
 Stooker, F. J.....614
 Stopher, E. A.....766
 Stout, Andrew.....691
 Strong, G. A.....709
 Stukenholtz, Frederick A.....262
 Stull, Jacob.....1290
 Stull, J. F.....1125
 Stutti, J. D.....211
 Sugden, Jonas.....679
 Swalley, J. R.....421
 Swank, Samuel.....236

T

Taber, C. G.....945
 Tait, Benjamin D.....311
 Talbot, Hon. J. W.....508
 Tangeman, H. H.....648
 Tangeman, J. W.....433
 Taylor, H. F.....1008
 Taylor, Zachary.....63
 Tefft, Hon. Orlando.....868
 Teten, Herman.....575
 Teten, John H.....422
 Thaler, W. M.....687
 Theis, Albert.....489
 Theis, Nicholas.....1010
 Thomas, Hon. J. W., M. D.....847
 Thomas, Thomas.....230
 Thomas, Thomas.....899
 Thompson, Thomas E.....544
 Thorp, E. F.....203
 Tighe, William.....1020
 Timm, H. H.....1125
 Tipton, Absalom.....355
 Todd, A. E.....1122

Todd, William O.....819
 Torrence, Sylvester.....849
 Traver, George.....855
 Treat, Garry.....772
 Tritsch, Jacob.....995
 Tritsch, Philip.....1303
 Troop, Robert.....783
 Tucker, W. M.....1255
 Turner, John.....887
 Tyler, John.....55
 Tyson, A.....795

U

Upton, G. S.....1284
 Umland, H.....814

V

Vallery, C. H.....831
 Vallery, Jacob, Jr.....824
 Vallery, Jacob, Sr.....823
 Vallery, Peter.....805
 Van Buren, Martin.....47
 Van Doren, A. L.....1028
 Van Horn, Hezekiah.....1054
 Vantine, A. D.....530
 Vaughan, C. E.....248
 Vaughan, R. J.....204
 Volk, Peter.....1145
 Vollmann, Henry.....276
 Vosburgh, C.....784
 Vosburgh, Z. S.....777

W

Wachendorf, Herman.....271
 Wade, C. S.....307
 Wait, Dwight.....693
 Walbridge, Martin R.....436
 Waldsmith, J. W.....317
 Walker, J. C.....580
 Waltz, M. W.....1216
 Ward, Israel.....1088
 Ward, Oliver.....1199
 Ware, J. A.....1210
 Warner, Charles H.....1097
 Warrick, W. J.....1195
 Washington, George.....19
 Wathen, Henry.....483
 Weatherhogg, Charles.....368
 Weatherhogg, Thomas.....719
 Webb, Joseph L.....735
 Weber, John.....213
 Webster, C. A.....1063
 Weckbach, J. V.....1239
 Wehrbein, Fred.....1030

Welch, J. F.....402
 Wells, Gilbert.....304
 Wells, G. W.....551
 Wells, Luzerne.....591
 West, Richard.....588
 Westlake, William.....796
 Weston, A. P.....895
 Wetenkamp, William.....1065
 White, J. C.....474
 White, R. A.....531
 Whittaker, Reuben.....594
 Whittaker, T. R.....668
 Wieckhorst, Hinrich.....651
 Wiggin, O. C.....451
 Wilbern, J. W.....1138
 Wilbern, Mrs. Sina.....1130
 Wiles, M. H.....718
 Wilhelm, Euzenius.....162
 Wilhelmy, Wilhelm.....710
 Wil, A. S.....1107
 Williams, E. E.....844
 Williams, Edward.....793
 Williams, Francis H.....1139
 Williams, Thomas E.....1214
 Wilson, James.....356
 Wintersteen, William.....1270
 Winkelhake, Henry.....613
 Wise, J. N.....1211
 Wolf, I. N.....1071
 Wolf, John.....519
 Wolf, W. C.....458
 Wolfe, H.....1227
 Wiedeman, Gustus H.....1079
 Wood, H. L.....287
 Woodard, David.....1117
 Woods, G. H.....1298
 Woolsey, Edmund E.....431
 Wolpert, John.....1112
 Wolph, Bucephalus.....430
 Wolph, Hon. H. C.....1218
 Worrall, J. A.....542
 Wright, Alpha.....1293
 Wright, George.....234
 Wunderlich, John G.....1048

Y

Yont, John.....167
 Yong, A. L.....654
 Young, George W.....942
 Young, L. H.....1146
 Young, Nicholas.....1158
 Young, T. T.....1157

Z

Zuck, Frederick.....726
 Zimmerer, Hon. Anton.....517

INDEX.

PORTRAITS

|                                 |                                |                                |                                |
|---------------------------------|--------------------------------|--------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| Adams, John.....22              | Curry, Mrs. Jennie B.....559   | Lennan, William.....330        | Roddy, John C.....596          |
| Adams, John Q.....38            | Curry, Robert.....554          | Lewis, Lewis.....634           | Rolfe, Hon. D. P.....142       |
| Arthur, Chester A.....98        | Davenport, Mrs. Carrie.....505 | Lincoln, Abraham.....78        | Romine, J. G.....836           |
| Ashton, Dr. T. H.....196        | Davis, A. L.....634            | Livingston, Dr. R. R.....762   | Rottman, F. W.....578          |
| Baker, R. F.....702             | Davis, H. J.....1086           | Madison, James.....30          | Schildknecht, Dr. W. H.....854 |
| Baker, Mary E.....702           | Dawes, James W.....126         | Martine, Capt. John.....628    | Seymour, Hon. C. W.....390     |
| Ball, Franklin.....628          | Farnsworth, H. P.....250       | Masters, Hon. J. H.....370     | Shafer, W. H.....1032          |
| Ballou, O. H.....790            | Ferguson, H. C.....536         | McCarthy, John.....410         | Shafer, Mrs. W. H.....1032     |
| Barnum, E. W.....914            | Fillmore, Millard.....66       | McCarthy, Mrs. Emma.....410    | Sherfey, C. W.....676          |
| Beasley, David.....280          | Furnas, Robert W.....114       | McLennan, Hon. William.....330 | Stedman, C. R.....222          |
| Beasley, Mrs. Elizabeth.....280 | Garber, Silas.....118          | McMechan, John.....176         | Stevenson, Hon. T. B.....320   |
| Bird, Lewis W.....954           | Garfield, James A.....94       | McMechan, Matilda.....176      | Stine, John.....974            |
| Black, John, M. D.....800       | Gilman, J. C.....380           | Monroe, James.....34           | Stull, J. F.....1124           |
| Buchanan, James.....74          | Grant, Ulysses S.....86        | Morrison, Samuel H.....350     | Swalley, J. R.....420          |
| Buck, Hon. John F.....934       | Guthmann, F. R.....1160        | Nance, Albinus.....122         | Tait, James N.....310          |
| Butler, David.....110           | Harrison, Benjamin.....106     | Normand, Julius.....446        | Taylor, Zachary.....62         |
| Campbell, Jesse.....420         | Harrison, William H.....50     | Normand, Margaret.....447      | Thayer, John M.....130         |
| Carmichael, J. D.....606        | Hayes, Rutherford B.....90     | Parent, Mary Ann.....566       | Tyler, John.....54             |
| Carmichael, Mrs. J. D.....606   | Hoover, J. T. A.....1050       | Parent, Martin.....566         | Van Buren, Martin.....46       |
| Castleman, F. T.....290         | Jackson, Andrew.....42         | Patterson, J. M.....756        | Washington, George.....18      |
| Chapman, Samuel M.....780       | Jefferson, Thomas.....26       | Pendleton, Henry.....584       | Wells, Hon. Luzerne.....590    |
| Clemmons, Noah.....994          | Jessen, Andreas.....486        | Pendleton, Mrs. Henry.....584  | Weston, A. P.....804           |
| Cleveland, S. Grover.....102    | Jessen, Margaret.....485       | Piercks, W. H.....1068         | Weston, Mrs. A. P.....805      |
| Cole, Hon. Braud.....1012       | Johnson, Andrew.....82         | Pierce, Franklin.....70        | Will, A. S.....1104            |
| Cook, Lawson.....622            | Jones, T. S.....526            | Polk, James K.....58           | Will, Mrs. A. S.....1105       |
| Cowles, Hon. Charles H.....622  | Lee, George F.....156          | Robb, Hon. F. W.....644        | Zimmerer, Hon. Anton.....516   |

Views.

|                              |                         |                             |                                     |
|------------------------------|-------------------------|-----------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| Adams, George.....572        | Dobney, F.....809       | Magney, John.....809        | Stooker, F. J.....612               |
| Andersen, Lars.....370       | Eickhoff, L. C.....983  | McAleer, Catherine.....186  | St. John the Baptist Church.....924 |
| Andrus, J. E.....963         | Farley, Isaac.....186   | Misegadis, D.....721        | Taber, C. G.....943                 |
| Andrus, O. M.....1143        | Foltz, Louis.....883    | Massey, Talton.....239      | Tangeman & Sons.....649             |
| Arends, Hermann.....231      | Frerichs, John.....399  | Normand, Julius.....466-467 | Teten, Hermann.....299              |
| Ashley, William D.....239    | Godding, Asa.....712    | Peterson, John.....656      | Vallery, Peter.....863              |
| Behrends, J. H.....190       | Grimes, G. W.....1133   | Pittman, Andrew.....963     | Van Doren, A. L.....1143            |
| Bickert, Ambrose.....1133    | Guenzel, Ernst.....339  | Pittman, E. J.....805       | Wachendorf, Herman.....270          |
| Bischoff, Christian.....299  | Guthmann, F. R.....1161 | Quibla, George.....359      | Webb, Joseph L.....734              |
| Brown, G. W.....239          | Hawley, H. G.....1133   | Reed, Herbert H.....495     | Wieckhorst, Henry.....649           |
| Carlin, James.....727        | Helmers, H. F.....734   | Roddy, Patrick.....605      | Wiles, M. H.....231                 |
| Caspers, John.....231        | Holmes, J. B.....882    | Richards, E. F.....1143     | Will, A. S.....1022                 |
| Castleman, F. T.....291      | Hunt, James.....259     | Richards, H. T.....983      | Williams, E. E.....963              |
| Church, Reuben.....744       | Jarrett, J. M.....572   | Roddy, Patrick.....605      | Winkelhake, Henry.....612           |
| Clayton, Edgar.....359       | Johnson, James.....903  | Sand, F. J.....399          | Yont, John.....166                  |
| Carlin, James.....727        | Kropp, William.....665  | Schindler, D.....721        | Young, George W.....943             |
| Carney, Rev. Thos. J.....924 | Laughlin, W. J.....1022 | Schroeder, F. W.....259     | Zuck, Frederick.....727             |
| Damma, Fritz.....330         | Lewis, James.....290    | Sharp, C. H.....600         |                                     |
| Dann, Charles.....495        | Leyda, R. K.....903     | Shoemaker, M. H.....712     |                                     |
| Davidson, J. H.....600       | Luff, E.....656         | Smith, C. A.....190         |                                     |